 rendered excessus mentis in 4 Ezra xiii. 30. For the diction, cf. Jer.
 viii. 21.

4. At the end of the tribulation and torments of the inhabitants of the earth the time of the judgment has come (cf. xiii. 8). This leaves no room for the Messianic kingdom in xxix., which precedes the judgment.

XXVI. This chapter is an addition of the final editor in order to introduce xxvii.-xxx. 1. xxv. was originally followed by xiv.-xix.

XXVII.-XXX. 1. We have here a fragment of a Messiah Apocalypse which for convenience of reference we designate A¹. Its (1) chief

"Into twelve parts is that time divided, and each one of them is reserved for that which is appointed for it. 2. In the first part there will be the beginning of commotions. 3. And in the second part (there will be) slayings of the great ones. 4. And in the third part (there will be) the fall of many by death. 5. And in the fourth part the sending of desolation. 6.

characteristics, (2) its date, and (3) its points of divergence from B¹ and B² are as follows :—(1) After a terrible period of tribulation (i.e. the travel pains of the Messiah) (xxvii.-xxviii. 1) which should imperil the salvation even of the elect (xxviii. 3), and should prevail over all the earth (xxviii. 7-xxix. 1), a glorious kingdom, accompanied with every possible blessing, was to be established under the Messiah (xxix. 3-8), who after a reign of indefinite duration should return in glory into heaven (xxx. 1a). Thereupon the resurrection was to follow (xxx. 1b). The outlook is hopeful and thoroughly optimistic. (2) The later limit of composition is easy to determine. (a) Since the kingdom is to be established in Palestine, and only those Jews who are found there are to share in it, it is clear that there has been no dispersion of the Jews; for had there been, as it was in the case of B¹, we should here be told of a return from exile. Hence this fragment was written before 70 A.D. (b) Again, since Palestine is the scene of the kingdom, Jerusalem must still be standing; for in case it had fallen, we should here be told of its restoration, as in B¹, or of the setting up of the new Jerusalem, as in 4 Ezra xiii. 36. The Messianic kingdom could not be set up over the ruins of the holy city. Hence, again, we conclude that A¹ was written before 70 A.D. (3) Its points of divergence from B¹ and B² are obvious. In the latter, Jerusalem is destroyed and its people in exile; whereas in A¹ Jerusalem is standing and the Jews are in their own land. Again, whereas the law is the centre of interest and expectation in B², and in a somewhat less degree in B¹ (see xv. 5, note), it is the Messiah that is such in A¹. Further, whereas there is not a single allusion to the Messiah in B¹ and B², there is not a single allusion to the law in A¹. This, indeed, may be partly due to the shortness of this fragment.

XXVII. 1. In A³, i.e. liii.-lxxiv. and 4 Ezra xiv. 11, 12, there are similar twelvefold divisions; but in these it is the entire history of the world that is so divided, whereas in our text it is only the time of troubles preceding the advent of the Messiah. These troubles were popularly conceived as the travail pains of the Messiah חבלי המשיח. We find a list of such woes (ώδυνες, Matt. xxiv. 8) in xlviii. 31-37; lxx. 2-10; Matt. xxiv. 6-29, with synoptic parallels; 2 Tim. iii. 1; Jubilees xxiii. 13, 16-25; 4 Ezra v. 1-12; vi. 14-18, 20-24; Orac. Sibyl. iii. 796-807; see Weber, 336; Schürer, Div. II., vol. ii. 154-156. In the Gospels, however, these woes are to precede the second coming of Christ or the end of the world.

5. Cf. 4 Ezra v. 8; vi. 22. For desolation we might also render "the sword"; cf. 5 Ezra xv. 5.

And in the fifth part famine and the withholding of rain. 7. And in the sixth part earthquakes and terrors. 8. [Wanting.] 9. And in the eighth part a multitude of portents and incursions of the Shedim. 10. And in the ninth part the fall of fire. 11. And in the tenth part rapine and much oppression. 12. And in the eleventh part wickedness and unchastity. 13. And in the twelfth part confusion from the mingling together of all those things aforesaid. 14. For these parts of that time are reserved, and will be mixed one with another and will minister one to another. 15. For some will of themselves be of service, and they will receive from others, and from themselves and others they will be perfected, so that those may not understand who are upon the earth in those days of this consummation of the times.

XXVIII. "Nevertheless, whosoever shall understand will then be wise. 2. For the measure and reckoning of that time are two parts weeks of seven weeks." 3. And I answered and said: "It is good for a man

6. Famine. As a sign of the end, cf. lxx. 8; Matt. xxiv. 7; Mark xiii. 8; Luke xxi. 11.

7. Earthquakes. Cf. lxx. 8; Matt. xxiv. 7; Mark xiii. 8; Luke xxi. 11.

9. Portents. Cf. 4 Ezra vi. 21: "Et anniculi infantes loquentur vobis suis, et praegnantes immaturos parient infantes, etc." But owing to the next words it would perhaps be better to render $\text{למלאים} = \phi\alpha\nu\tau\alpha\sigma\tau\alpha\iota$ as "spectres."

The Shedim. See x. 8, note.

10. The fall of fire. Cf. lxx. 8; 4 Ezra v. 8. If with the reviser of the MS. we delete the ו before יִפֹּל we should render "the fire will fall."

15. These verses are obscure. They are possibly corrupt. For "of this . . . times" we can equally well render "that this is the consummation of the times."

XXVIII. 1. This verse recalls Dan. xii. 10: "the wise shall understand."

2. I cannot interpret this verse.

3. This verse expresses the difficulty of faithfulness in the times just described. Cf. 4 Ezra xiii. 16-20: "Vae qui derelicti fuerint in diebus illis, et multo plus vae his to come and behold, but it is better that he should not come lest he fall. 4. [But I will say this also. XXVIII. 4-5 = E.

 5. 'Will he who is incorruptible despise those things which are corruptible, and whatever befalls in the case of those things which are corruptible, so that he might look only to those things which are not corruptible?']
 6. But if, O Lord, those things shall assuredly come to pass which Thou hast foretold to me; if, moreover, I have found grace in Thy sight, show this also unto me. 7. Is it in one place or in one of the parts of the earth that those things are to come to pass, or will the whole earth experience (them)?"

XXIX. And He answered and said unto me:
 "Whatever will then befall will belong to the whole earth; therefore all who live will experience (them).
 2. For at that time I will protect only those who are found in those self-same days in this land. 3. And it qui non sunt derelicti! Qui enim non sunt derelicti, tristes erunt, intelligentes quae sunt reposita in novissimis diebus et non occurrentes eis . . . adtamen facilius est periclitantem venire in haec quam pertransire . . . et non videre quae contingent in novissimo." Only the righteous, the fittest survive. Cf. xli. 1; lxxv. 5; 4 Ezra vii. 46, 47; Matt. xxiv. 22; Mark xiii. 21. This verse looks forward to the blessings described in xxix. 4-8.

4, 5. I have bracketed these verses as an interpolation of the final editor. They break the connection of thought. Further, no account is taken of them either by Baruch to whom they are assigned, or by God to whom they are addressed. They are unreasonable and out of place in the presence of the sensuous picture of Messianic bliss which meets us in the next chapter. The real answer to Baruch's question here can be gathered from xliii. 2.

6. If I have found grace, etc. A familiar O.T. phrase (Gen. vi. 8; xix. 19, etc.; 4 Ezra v. 56; vii. 102; viii. 42; xii. 7).

XXIX. 2. I will protect, etc. Here God protects His people who are found in the Holy Land, whereas in A² it is the Messiah (xl. 2) in A³ the Holy Land itself (lxxi. 1). In B² it is the law that protects the faithful, irrespective of their place of habitation (xxxii. 1; cf. 6 Ezra vii. 122).

Found . . . in this land. Cf. xl. 2; lxxi. 1; 4 Ezra xiii. 48, 49. A special blessing attached to residence in Palestine. It alone was to escape the woes that should befall will come to pass when all is accomplished that was to come to pass in those parts, that the Messiah will then ✓ all the earth besides. But this thought is found only in the sections of this book written prior to 70 A.D. Such ideas as to the sacrosanct and inviolable character of Palestine seem to have disappeared for a time from Jewish speculation with the desecration and destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, unless where the Messiah was expected. Hence in B² it is the law that protects the faithful (xxxii. 1), and in 4 Ezra vii. 122 it is the glory of God; and this protection avails them irrespective of their place of dwelling. The special privileges attaching to the Holy Land reappear in the Talmud, but in another form. Thus three will inherit the world to come: he who dwells in the land of Israel, he who brings up his sons to the study of the law, and he who repeats the ritual blessing over the appointed cup of wine at the close of the Sabbath (Pesachim, fol. 113a). Again the merits of the fathers will not avail a man who leaves the land of Israel for an outside land (Baba bathra, fol. 91a). Further, those who died in the Holy Land should rise first in the resurrection (Weber, pp. 64, 352); hence it is called "the land of the living" (Beresh. rab. 74); if the righteous died in any other land their bodies would have to roll (מתגלגלים) through underground passages (מחילות) till they came to Palestine before they could be raised (Weber, 352; Eisenmenger, ii. 920, 921). It was for this reason that Jacob and Joseph (Eisenmenger, ii. 925) and the Rabbis, who were specially honoured (Weber, 64), were buried in Canaan. Nay more, residents in the land of Israel could procure the resurrection of their relatives who died among the Gentiles (Eisenmenger, ii. 900). That the righteous who were buried outside the limits of Palestine should rise is also stated (Weber, 352).

3. The rôle here assigned to the Messiah is a passive one like that in Eth. En. xc. 37, 38; 4 Ezra vii. 28, 29. In this respect it differs from that represented in A² and A³, i.e. xxxvi.-xl.; lii.-lxxiv.; and in Eth. En. xxxvii.-lxx.; Pss. Sol. xvii., xviii.; 4 Ezra xii. 32-34; xiii. 32-50, where the Messiah fights either with spiritual or material weapons on behalf of Israel, destroys its enemies, and sets up the Messianic kingdom.

The Messiah will then begin to be revealed. The phrase "begin to be revealed" seems corrupt. We should perhaps have "the principate of the Messiah will be revealed," as in xxxix. 7. We can get this by reading instead of

Cf. xli. 3. Or by simply reading instead of we have "Messiah the prince will be revealed." In this case the phraseology might be due to Dan. ix. 25. From a comparison of this verse and xxx. 1 the Messiah appears to be in heaven and is to be revealed from thence; but in other passages the implication of such language as "will be revealed" is merely that the Messiah may be already on earth and yet be unknown.

This emergence of the Messiah from concealment was a current view. Thus we find it in 4 Ezra vii. 28; xiii. 32; also in John vii. 27: "When the Christ cometh, no man knoweth whence he is." This concealment of the Messiah is mentioned also in Targum Jon. on Zech-begin to be revealed. 4. And Behemoth will be revealed from his place, and Leviathan will ascend from ariah iii. 8 ; vi. 12. In the Targum on Micah iv. 8 it is said to be due to the sins of the people. From Justin's Dial. c. Tryph. 8, it appears that though the Messiah may be already born, yet He may be unknown, and not even know His own calling till Elijah anoints and reveals Him. Χριστός δέ, εἰ καὶ γεγέννηται καὶ ἔστι πού, ἀγνωστός ἔστι καὶ οὐδὲ αὐτός πω ἑαυτὸν ἐπίσταται οὐδὲ ἔχει δυνάμιν τινα, μέχρις ἂν ἔλθῶν Ἡλίας χρίσῃ αὐτὸν καὶ φάνερον πᾶσι ποιήσῃ. Cf. also c. 110.

According to the Talmud, the Messiah was born at Bethlehem on the day of the destruction of the temple, was named Menahem, and afterwards suddenly carried away by a storm (Hieros. Berachoth, p. 5). His temporary abode, according to later writers, was to be Rome (Sanhedrin, 98a). On this subject see Lightfoot's Horæ on Matt. ii. 1 ; Oehler's Messias in Herzog's R.E. ix. 668 ; Drummond, The Jewish Messiah, 293, 294 ; Schürer's N.T. Times, Div. II., vol. ii. 163, 164 ; Weber, 342, 343 ; Wünsche, Die Leiden des Messias, 57-59.

4. And Behemoth will be revealed, etc. The full form of this myth is given in 4 Ezra vi. 49-52 : "Et tunc conservasti duo animalia, nomen uni vocasti Behemoth et nomen secundi vocasti Leviathan, Et separasti ea ab alterutro, non enim poterat septima pars ubi erat aqua congregata capere ea. Et dedisti Behemoth unam partem quæ siccata est tertio die, ut inhabitet in ea, ubi sunt montes mille ; Lēviathan autem dedisti septimam partem humidam : et servasti ea ut fiant in devorationem quibus vis et quando vis." From a comparison of verse 4 with the verses just cited, it is clear that the words "from his place" and "from the sea" imply the account in these verses of Ezra. This is confirmed by the fact that not only is the thought the same, but also almost word for word the diction in the Syriac Versions of the two clauses : "Servasti ea ut fiant in devorationem" (4 Ezra vi. 52) and "kept them until that time and then they will be for food." Thus so far 4 Ezra would seem to be the source of our text. But if in these respects Baruch presupposes 4 Ezra, 4 Ezra in turn presupposes Baruch in the clauses : "Quibus vis et quando vis" (4 Ezra vi. 52) over against "for all that are left" in verse 4—the words "those who are left" being a technical phrase to express those who should survive to participate in the Messianic kingdom. We are thus led to assume that a short hexaemeron, closely resembling that found in 4 Ezra vi. 38-54, existed at one time independently, and that the writers of Ezra vi. 30-vii. 25 and Bar. xxvii.-xxx. laid it under contribution for their own purposes. (For a probable additional fragment of this hexaemeron, see xv. 7, note.) This assumption gains confirmation from the facts (1) that this hexaemeron cannot originally have proceeded from the writer of the Salathiel Apocalypse (i.e. the groundwork of 4 Ezra) ; for the latter looked for no Messianic kingdom, whereas the writer of this hexaemeron did as is obvious from vi. 52 compared with xxix. 4 of our text ; and (2) that whereas A¹ of Baruch was written prior to the fall of Jerusalem, the Salathiel Apocalypse was written subsequently to it.

4. Behemoth . . . and Leviathan.

In addition to the references in the preceding note, see Eth. En. lx. 7-9, 24, notes ; Targ. Jon. on Gen.

the sea, those two great monsters which I created on the fifth day of creation, and I kept them until that time; and then they will be for food for all that are left. 5. The earth also will yield its fruit ten thousand-fold, and on one vine there will be a thousand branches,

i. 21: "And God created great beasts Leviathan and his wife which were prepared for the day of consolation;" see also the Targum on Ps. l. 10; Weber, 156, 195, 370, 384; Buxtorf, Lexicon Chald. rabb. Talmud, and Levy, Chaldäisches Wörterbuch and Neuhebräisches Wörterb. in loc.

All that are left. This is in fact "the remnant" that survives to share in the Messiah's kingdom. This remnant is frequently referred to in this sense (cf. xl. 2; 4 Ezra vi. 25; vii. 28; ix. 7; xii. 34; xiii. 48).

5. We have here another fragment of an old Apocalypse, of which we find a Latin version in Irenaeus, v. 33. This Apocalypse Papias, according to Irenaeus, assigned to our Lord. It is recounted in the fourth book of his Δογμάτων κυριακῶν ἐξηγήσεις. The passage in question is: "Venient dies, in quibus vineae nascentur, singulae decem millia palmitum habentes, et in uno palmite dena millia brachiorum, et in uno vero palmite dena millia flagellorum, et in unoquoque flagello dena millia botrum, et in unoquoque botro dena millia acinorum et unumquodque acinum expressum dabit vigintiquinque metretas vini. Et quum eorum apprehenderit aliquis sanctorum botrum, alius clamabit: Botrus ego melior sum, me sume, per me Dominum benedic." Scholars have taken our text to be the original of this passage. That this is unlikely, and that both may be derived from the same original source, I will now proceed to show. In the first place, the passage in Irenaeus contains two additional sentences: "Dena millia brachiorum . . . palmite," and "Et quum eorum . . . benedic." Hence a fuller text is presupposed than we have in Bar. xxix. 5. In the next place, immediately after the words just cited, the text in Irenaeus proceeds: "Similiter et granum tritici decem millia spicarum generaturum, et unamquamque spicam habituram decem millia granorum, et unumquodque granum quinque bilibres similae clarae mundae." With these words compare the Eth. En. x. 19, where, in an account of Messianic bliss, we find "The vine that is planted thereon will yield wine in abundance, and of all the seed which is sown thereon will each measure bear ten thousand." From this we conclude that for a long time prior to Christianity there existed either in tradition or in writing a sensuous description of Messianic felicity. In this description not only the fruitfulness of the vine was dwelt upon, but also of all seeds and fruit-bearing trees. Of this description the largest survival is in Irenaeus, v. 33, preserved through the agency of Papias; the fragmentary survivals in the Eth. En. x. 19 (see above) and in our text form complimentary portions of this tradition.

Finally, the text presents a syncretistic appearance. In xxix. 4 one description of food—a flesh diet—is provided for the members of the Messianic kingdom; and in the next verse quite another—a vegetable diet; and in xxix. 8 a heavenly food, i.e. manna. The second is a more ancient view than the first and and each branch will produce a thousand clusters, and each cluster will produce a thousand grapes, and each grape will produce a cor of wine. 6. And those who have hungered will rejoice: moreover, also, they will behold marvels every day. 7. For winds will go forth from before Me to bring every morning the fragrance of aromatic fruits, and at the close of the day clouds distilling the dew of health. 8. And it will come to pass at that self-same time that the treasury of manna will again descend from on high, and they will eat of it in those years, because these are they who have come to the consummation of time.

the most reasonable, being a return to the food of Adam in Paradise.

As to the origin of the 10,000-fold yield of the corn and wine, etc., Mr. Rendel Harris (Expositor, 1895, pp. 448, 449) offers a most ingenious and probable suggestion. He derives it from the blessing of Isaac (Gen. xxvii. 28), where he conjectures that in the statement רב רבן וְהָרֵשׁ = "plenty of corn and wine," the word רב was taken as רבני = 10,000. He points out that the context in Irenaeus (see above), in which the story of Papias and the elders is given, supports his contention; for that it follows a discussion of the blessing in question.

Each branch . . . each cluster . . . each grape. Instead of "each" the Syriac in all three cases gives "one." But the sense requires "each," and in the Latin Version of this passage preserved in Irenaeus (see above) "each" is found in the three phrases, i.e. "unoquoque flagello, unoquoque botro, unumquodque acinum." The explanation is not far to seek. The Hebrew אֶחָד which = εἷς, one, occasionally also = ἕκαστος, each. The former meaning was wrongly followed by the Greek translator. Hence the wrong turn in the Syriac.

A cor. This represents κόρος which in turn is a translation of כֹּר or חֶקֶר. The cor was equal to about 120 gallons. Cf. Joseph. Ant. xv. 9, 2 ὁ δὲ κόρος δύναται μεδίμνους ἄπτικὸς δέκα.

6. Rejoice. This is a characteristic of the members of the kingdom. Cf. 4 Ezra vii. 28; xii. 34.

Behold marvels. The belief that the Messiah would signalise His advent by marvels was general. Cf. 4 Ezra vii. 27; xiii. 50; Matt. xi. 4-6; Luke vii. 22, 23; John vii. 31.

8. The treasury of manna will again descend, etc. In Ps. lxxviii. 25 manna is called angels' food. In Or. Sibyl. vii. 149 it is to be the food of the members of the Messianic kingdom Μάννην τὴν δροσερὴν λευκοῖσιν ὀδοῦσι φάγονται, and in Rev. ii. 17 the idea is spiritualised: the faithful are to receive "hidden manna."

These are they, etc. These are "the remnant" of verse 4.

Consummation of time. This

XXX. "And it will come to pass after these things, when the time of the advent of the Messiah is fulfilled, and He will return in glory, then all who have fallen asleep in hope of Him shall rise again. 2. And it will come to pass at that time that the treasuries will be opened in which is preserved the number of the souls of the righteous, and they will come forth, and a multitude of souls will be seen together in one assemblage of one thought, and the first will rejoice and the last will not be grieved. 3.

XXX. 2-
XXXV.=B².

phrase is found in xxvii. 15. The Messianic age forms the "consummation of the time or times" = ἡ συντελεία τοῦ αἰῶνος or τῶν αἰώνων. We should observe that this phrase has a different meaning in xxx. 3; but there we have the work of B².

XXX. 1. When the time of the advent of the Messiah is fulfilled, etc. This can have only one meaning, and this is that, at the close of His reign, the Messiah will return in glory to heaven. The word translated "advent" is אָדָמְתִּי which in turn was an ordinary rendering of παρουσία. Now παρουσία can mean not only "coming" or "advent," but also "presence" (cf. 2 Cor. x. 10; 2 Macc. xv. 21, and probably 2 Cor. vii. 6, 7; 2 Thess. ii. 9). Hence we should render: "When the time of the presence of the Messiah is fulfilled."

Return in glory. These words imply that the Messiah pre-existed in heaven before His advent. He returns whither He had come. This is also the teaching of Eth. En. xlvi. 1, 2; xlviii. 3 (see note); lxii. 7; 4 Ezra xii. 32; xiii. 26 (?); xiv. 9. This seems also to be the legitimate interpretation of Pss. Sol. xviii. 6 eis hēmeran eklelogēs en ἀνάξει χριστοῦ αὐτοῦ. In 4 Ezra vii. 29, 30, the Messiah and the righteous die at the close of the Messianic kingdom.

Then all who have fallen asleep in hope of Him shall rise again. The resurrection follows immediately on the return of the Messiah into heaven; on his death in 4 Ezra vii. 29, 30. The words "of him" cannot be original. The text was probably "those who have fallen asleep in hope." Cf. LXX. of Ps. xvi. 9 ἡ σὰρξ μου κατασκηνώσει ἐπ' ἐλπίδι. The corruption could have arisen easily in the Syriac by a change of אָדָמְתִּי into אָדָמְתִּי.

Fallen asleep. Cf. xi. 4, note. As A¹ is fragmentary, we are not told what befalls the living righteous. In the following verses of B² only the destinies of souls are dealt with. The complementary half of this doctrine is given in l. 1i.

2. With this verse we return to B², resuming the text that ended with xxiv. 1. We have here an account of the general resurrection (cf. xlii. 8; l. 2).

Treasuries. See xxi. 23, note; xxiv. 1, note.

For he knows that the time has come of which it is said, that it is the consummation of the times. 4. But the souls of the wicked, when they behold all those things, shall then waste away the more. 5. ✓ For they will know that their torment has come and their perdition has arrived."

XXXI. And it came to pass after these things that I went to the people and said unto them: "Assemble unto me all your elders and I will speak

3. The consummation of the times. This phrase means here the final judgment; in A¹ it means the Messianic age (cf. xxvii. 15; xxix. 8).

4. Waste away. Cf. li. 5; 4 Ezra vii. 87.

5. This verse does not mean that the wicked souls have not hitherto suffered, but that their suffering hitherto is as nothing compared to the torments they shall now endure. Similarly, the righteous have in the treasures of souls had rest and peace, but they too (cf. ver. 3) know that their real blessedness has now come. See xxxvi. 10.

XXXI.-XXXV. Baruch assembles and addresses the elders of the people (xxx. 1-3); he exhorts them not to forget the anguish of Zion (xxx. 4), and announces the coming end of all that is corruptible (xxx. 5); and, in case they observe the law, their safety amid the convulsions which will accompany the renewal of the entire creation (xxxii. 1); they are not to grieve so much for the past as for the coming time; for then the strife and stress will exceed all that has been before when God renews creation (xxxii. 1, 5, 6). Thereupon, when Baruch seeks to dismiss the people (xxxii. 7), they remonstrate against his forsaking them (xxxii. 8-xxxiii.) Baruch rejoins that he is not forsaking them, but only going to the Holy Place to get light from God (xxxiv.) He then proceeds thither and laments over Zion (xxxv.) A fast of seven days should follow here.

The subject on which Baruch addresses the people is to be found in each instance in the previous divine revelation (see v. 5; x. 4); but it will be observed that this address (xxx. 3-xxxii. 6) is wholly out of relation to all that has gone before. There is therefore something wrong. The gist of this address is: (a) The end of all things corruptible is at hand; (b) if ye prepare your hearts to obey the law ye will then be safe in this time of crisis; (c) for the entire creation must be shaken, and give place to a new and incorruptible creation. Now these questions are discussed later in the dialogues between God and Baruch. Thus, for (a), see xlii. 6-8; for (b), see xlviii. 22-24, 38-41; for (c), see xlviii. 49; lii. 3, 8-9, 16. We therefore hold that xxxi.-xxxv. was read after lii. originally. Finally, xlv. 8-15 really forms the conclusion of Baruch's address in xxxi., xxxii.; it should be read immediately after xxxii. 6 (see p. 69).

XXXI. 1. All your elders. See xlv. 1, note.

words unto them." 2. And they all assembled in the valley of the Cedron. 3. And I answered and said unto them: "Hear, O Israel, and I will speak to thee, and give ear, O seed of Jacob, and I will instruct thee. 4. Forget not Zion, but hold in remembrance the anguish of Jerusalem. 5. For lo! the days come, when everything that exists will become the prey of corruption and be as though it had not been.

XXXII. "But ye, if ye prepare your hearts, so as to sow in them the fruits of the law, it will protect you in that time in which the Mighty One is to shake the whole creation. [2. Because after a little time the building of Zion will be shaken in order that it

2. Cedron. See v. 5, note.

3. Hear, O Israel . . . and give ear, O seed of Jacob. Cf. xvii. 4; xlv. 4; 4 Ezra ix. 30. For the combination "hear . . . and give ear," see Isa. i. 2.

5. Will become the prey of. Literally = "will be taken to corruption." See xxi. 19, note.

XXXII. 1. Prepare your hearts. An O.T. phrase (cf. 1 Sam. vii. 3; Job xi. 13; Ps. lxxviii. 8). It is a favourite expression in B¹ and B² of this book; cf. xlv. 5; lii. 7; lxxxiii. 8; lxxxv. 9, 11.

The fruits of the law. Cf. 4 Ezra iii. 20; ix. 32; see note on xv. 5.

It will protect. See xxix. 2, note. These words point back to xlviii. 22-24; cf. xlv. 13, 14; xlviii. 38-41.

Shake the whole creation. I.e. with a view to a new heavens and a new earth (see ver. 6). The thought comes originally from Haggai ii. 6; cf. Heb. xii. 26.

2-4. I have bracketed these verses as an interpolation; for in verse 2 it is announced that the temple will be destroyed after a little time; but, according to all B² as well as B¹, the temple has already been destroyed, and this is the presupposition of xxxi. 4. Again, verses 2-4 break the connection of thought in the text. Observe the awkwardness of "Because after a little time," etc., following on verse 1; and, on the other hand, how appropriately verse 5 follows on xxxi. 4-xxxii. 1. We should observe that there is nothing inconsistent in the idea of a heavenly Jerusalem being established on a new and incorruptible earth. Indeed, it is not impossible that iv. 2-7 originally followed xxxii. 6. We have a close parallel to xxxii. 2-4 in Beresh rab. 2, and Pesikta, 145a, where it is said that the temple was built in glory, destroyed, again rebuilt, but in mean fashion; finally, it should again be rebuilt in glory.

2. Zion will be shaken. I.e. in 588 by Nebuchadnezzar; but according to xxxi. 4; xxxii. 5; xxxiii. 2, 3; xxxv. 1, this is already in the past.

may again be built. 3. But that building will not remain, but will again after a time be rooted out, and will remain desolate until the time. 4. And afterwards it must be renewed in glory, and it will be perfected for evermore.] 5. Therefore we should not be distressed so much over the evil which has now come as over that which is still to be. 6. For there will be a greater trial than these two tribulations when the Mighty One will renew His creation. 7. And now do not draw near to me for a few days, nor seek me till I come to you." 8. And it came to pass when I had spoken to them all these words, that I, Baruch, went my way, and when the people saw me setting out, they lifted up their voice and lamented and said :

In order that it may again be built.
I.e. by Ezra and Nehemiah.

3. Again . . . be rooted out. I.e. by the Romans in 70 A.D.

4. On the heavenly Jerusalem.
See iv. 3, note.

5. We should . . . be distressed.
I have here followed Bensly's emendation of  into .

Otherwise, we should render with Ceriani, "Non ergo debet nos contristare hoc omne super malo quod supervenit," etc.

The evil which has now come. The fall of Jerusalem.

6. Two tribulations. I.e. those accompanying the destruction of Jerusalem and the renewal of creation. But the more natural rendering is : "For there will be a greater trial than the two tribulations when," etc. If we must accept this, the words "than the two tribulations" are an addition of E, and without them the text would run : "For the trial will be great when," etc.

Renew His creation. This signifies an incorruptible world which was to take the place of the corruptible (cf. xxxi. 5 ; xlv. 12 ; lvii. 2). It was a current expectation from the times of the captivity (cf. Isa. lxxv. 17 ; lxxvi. 22 ; Eth. En. xlv. 4, note ; lxxii. 1 ; xci. 15, 16 ; 4 Ezra vii. 75 ; Matt. xix. 28 ; 2 Pet. iii. 13 ; Rev. xxi. 1). This announcement of Baruch is the presupposition of li., lii., and the truth correlative to the renewal and transformation of the righteous in li.

7. Do not draw near, etc. 4 Ezra v. 19. This verse was preceded originally by xlv. 8-15 (see p. 69).

For a few days. These words refer to the interval in which the next fast of seven days should take place. The mention of this fast at the beginning or close of xxxv. has through some accident been omitted (see v. 7, note ; ix. 2, note).

9. "Whither departest thou from us, Baruch, and forsakest us as a father who forsakes his orphan children, and departs from them?"

XXXIII. "Are these the commands which thy companion, Jeremiah the prophet, commanded thee, and said unto thee: 2. 'Look to this people till I go and confirm the rest of the brethren in Babylon, against whom has gone forth the sentence that they should be led into captivity?' 3. And now if thou also forsakest us, it were good for us all to die before thee, and then that thou shouldst withdraw from us."

XXXIV. And I answered and said unto the people: "Far be it from me to forsake you or to withdraw from you, but I will only go unto the Holy of Holies to enquire of the Mighty One concerning you and concerning Zion, if in some respect I should receive more illumination: and after these things I will return to you."

XXXV. And I, Baruch, went to the holy place, and sat down upon the ruins and wept, and said: 2. "Become ye springs, O mine eyes, and ye, mine eyelids, a fount of tears. 3. For how shall I lament

9. Cf. 4 Ezra v. 18.

XXXIII. 1, 2. See x. 2, note, where I have shown that, according to B¹, Jeremiah does not seem to have gone to Babylon.

3. For another form of the same thought, cf. 4 Ezra xii. 44.

XXXIV. Far be it from me to forsake you. Cf. 4 Ezra xii. 48: "Si ergo tu nos dereliqueris, quanto erit nobis melius, si essemus succensi et nos in incendio Sion."

Holy of Holies. This is practically the same place as is mentioned in x. 5; in xxxv. 1 it is simply called the holy place. It is where the altar stood. See xxxv. 4.

XXXV. 1. The holy place, and sat down upon the ruins. See preceding note, and x. 5, note.

2. From Jer. ix. 1; cf. Eth. En. xcv. 1.

for Zion, and how shall I mourn for Jerusalem? 4. Because in that place where I am now prostrate, the high priest of old used to offer holy sacrifices, and to place thereon the smoke of the incense of fragrant odours. 5. But now our glorying has been made into dust, and the desire of our soul into sand."

XXXVI. And when I had said these things I fell XXXVI.-XL.
= A².

THE SIXTH SECTION

XXXVI.-XLVI. This in reality forms the sixth part of this book. For the symmetry of the book as constructed by the final editor requires, as we have already shown (see v. 7, note, introduction to the fifth section, p. 36, and xxxii. 7, note), the insertion of a seven days' fast after xxxv., or possibly even before it. The omission of this fast may have been an original oversight of the editor, or may have been due to a careless copyist. The structure of this part is as follows:—First, the omitted fast, then a Messiah vision and its interpretation (xxxvi.-xl.), with further disclosures regarding apostates and proselytes (xli. 2-xlii. 8), and the announcement of Baruch's coming death (xliii.) Finally, Baruch's address to the people (xliv.-xlvi.)

This section is of very composite origin. Thus xxxvi.-xl. is a Messiah Apocalypse written prior to 70 A.D.; xliii.-xliv. 8; xlv.-xlvi. 6 belongs to B¹; the rest of the section mainly to B².

XXXVI.-XL. We have here the second Messiah Apocalypse A². (a) Date of A² and its Relation to B¹ and B². A² is quite distinct in its world-view and date from B¹ and B². We shall first establish the difference of date. Now whereas we have seen that B¹ and B² were written subsequent to the fall of Jerusalem, it is clear that A² was written prior to that event. For whereas, in a short historical outline from the rise of Babylon to the reign of the Messiah (xxxix. 2-xl. 2), the first destruction of Jerusalem is mentioned (xxxix. 3), there is not even a hint given as to its destruction by Rome, although the Roman oppression of Palestine is clearly indicated (xxxix. 5, 6). Again the Messiah makes Zion His capital (xl. 1). If it were in ruins, its restoration would of necessity be mentioned. Finally, as there is no allusion in A² to the second destruction of Jerusalem, so there is none to the subsequent dispersion after that event, and none to a return of the exiles. Consequently, as we find, the remnant of Israel is still in Palestine (xl. 2). It is wholly otherwise in B¹ and B².

As regards their difference of world-view, it will be sufficient here to remark that whereas there is no Messiah in B¹ and B², the Messiah is the centre of expectation and the stay of Israel in A². And whereas B² is pessimistic as regards this world, A² is optimistic. And whereas in B², and in a less degree in B¹, the law is the centre and the end of life, in A² this place is occupied by the Messiah.

(b) Relation of A² to A¹. The two writings come from different authors. In A¹ the Messiah has only a passive rôle assigned to Him; He does not appear till the enemies asleep there, and I saw a vision in the night. 2. And lo! a forest of trees planted on the plain, and lofty mountains surrounded it and precipitous rocks, and that forest occupied much space. 3. And lo! over against it arose a vine, and from under it there went forth a fountain peacefully. 4. Now that fountain came to the forest and was (stirred) into great waves, and those waves submerged that forest, and suddenly they rooted out the multitude of (the trees) of that forest, and overthrew all the mountains which were round about it. 5. And the height of the forest began to be made low, and the top of the mountains was made low, and that fountain prevailed greatly, so that it left nothing of that great forest save one cedar only. 6. Also when it had cast it down and had destroyed and rooted out the multitude of (the trees of) that forest, so that nothing was left of it, nor could its place be recognised, then that vine began to come with the fountain in peace and great tranquillity, and it came to a place which was not far from the cedar, and they brought the cedar which had been cast down to it. 7. And I beheld and lo! that vine opened its mouth and spake and said to that cedar: "Art thou not that cedar which was left of the forest of wickedness, and by whose means wickedness persisted, and was wrought all those years, and goodness never. 8.

of Israel are destroyed. In A², on the other hand, the destruction of the wicked and the vindication of Israel is the sole work of the Messiah.

XXXVI. 1. It will be remarked that these visions are only found in A² and A³. Elsewhere we have direct revelations.

I fell asleep. Cf. lii. 8.

And thou didst keep conquering that which was not thine, and to that which was thine thou didst never show compassion, and thou didst keep extending thy power over those who were far from thee, and those who drew nigh thee thou didst hold fast in the toils of thy wickedness, and thou didst uplift thyself always as one that could not be rooted out! 9. But now thy time has sped and thy hour is come. 10. Do thou also therefore depart, O cedar, after the forest, which departed before thee, and become dust with it, and let your ashes be mingled together. 11. And now recline in anguish and rest in torment till thy last time come, in which thou wilt come again, and be tormented still more."

XXXVII. And after these things I saw that cedar burning, and the vine growing, itself and all around it, the plain full of unfading flowers. And I indeed awoke and arose.

XXXVIII. And I prayed and said: "O LORD, my Lord, Thou dost always enlighten those who are led by understanding. 2. Thy law is life, and Thy

8. Rooted out. This phrase is constantly used in the Talmud with reference to the future fate of Rome. The word is קָרַע.

11. In anguish, etc. See xxx. 5, where as here the intermediate state is one involving certain degrees of happiness or pain.

XXXVII. Unfading flowers. Cf. Apoc. Pet. τὴν γῆν αὐτὴν ἀνθοῦσαν ἀπαράντοις ἀνθεσι.

XXXVIII. 1. O LORD, my Lord. See note on iii. 1. It is God Himself who interprets this vision for Baruch, but Ramiel who does so in A³ (see lv. 3).

2. Thy law is life. Cf. xlv. 2; Ecclus. xlv. 5 νόμον ζωῆς καὶ ἐπιστήμης (also xvii. 11). With this sentiment cf. Hillel's words (Aboth. ii. 7): "The more law the more life . . . he who gains a knowledge of the law gains life in the world to come." As correlative expressions might be cited (John vii. 49), "This people, which knoweth not the law, is accursed," and Hillel's saying: "An unlearned man cannot be wisdom is right guidance. 3. Make known to me therefore the interpretation of this vision. 4. For Thou knowest that my soul hath always walked in Thy law, and from my (earliest) days I departed not from Thy wisdom."

XXXIX. And He answered and said unto me: "This is the interpretation of the vision which thou hast seen. 2. As thou hast seen a great forest which lofty and precipitous mountains surrounded, this is the word. 3. Behold! the days come, and this kingdom will be destroyed which once destroyed Zion, and it will be subjected to that which comes after it. 4. Moreover, that also again after a time will be destroyed, and another, a third, will arise, and that also will have dominion for its time, and will be destroyed. 5. And after these things a fourth kingdom will arise, whose power will be harsh and evil far beyond those which were before it, and it will rule many times as the forests on the plain, and it will hold fast the times, and will pious" (לא עם הארץ חסיר). He was even excluded from the resurrection (see Weber, 42-44). The words in the text, however, are far from being as strong as these statements. So we infer from the parallel, "Thy wisdom, etc."

Thy wisdom is right guidance. This is based upon the Massoretic text of Ecclesiastes x. 10, where the Versions take directions of their own. Thus the Heb. is יתרון הכשר, הכמה. The LXX. καὶ περισσεύει τὸ εὐδελου σοφία, and the Syr. = "et sapientia sollertibus emolumentum."

4. From my (earliest) days. This is the Hebrew idiom בְּיָמַי.

Cf. 1 Kings i. 6; 1 Sam. xxv. 28.

XXXIX. 3-5. Of the four world empires here mentioned there can be no doubt as to the first and fourth. The first is of course the Babylonian, for it is that which effected the first destruction of Jerusalem in 588 (see ver. 3). The fourth (in verses 5-7; cf. xxxvi. 5-10) is just as clearly Rome. The second and third empires are probably the Persian and the Græco-Egyptian and Syrian. The fourfold division of world empires in the text is due no doubt to Dan. vii. On these four empires, see Tan-chuma, Terumah, 7.

exalt itself more than the cedars of Lebanon. 6. And by it the truth will be hidden, and all those who are polluted with iniquity will flee to it, as evil beasts flee and creep into the forest. 7. And it will come to pass when the time of his consummation that he should fall has approached, then the principate of My Messiah will be revealed, which is like the fountain and the vine, and when it is revealed it will root out the multitude of his host. 8. And that which thou hast seen, the lofty cedar, which was left of that forest, and with regard to this fact, that the vine spoke those words with it which thou didst hear, this is the word.

XL. "The last leader of that time will be left alive, when the multitude of his hosts will be put to the sword and be bound, and they will take him up to Mount Zion, and My Messiah will convict him of all his impieties, and will gather and set before him all the works of his hosts. 2. And afterwards he will put

6. The truth will be hidden. Cf. 4 Ezra v. 1, where, in connection with Rome, the same statement is made: "abscondetur veritatis via."

7. The principate of My Messiah, etc. See xxix. 3, note.

XL. 1. Who this last leader is we cannot determine; it may be any emperor or general from 70 A.D. back till Pompey's time. Since the personal wrong-doings of this leader are dwelt upon, it is possible that it is actually Pompey that is here referred to. The words "his impieties" = אַסּוּרֵי אֱלֹהִים, might favour this view (cf. Pss. Sol. ii. 24-35).

According to the Talmud, a single leader was to "unite in himself all hatred and hostility" against God's people. He was to be called Armilus, and to be the אַרְמִילֵס אֱלֹהִים. See Weber, 348, 349.

My Messiah. As we have already remarked (pp. 52, 61), the Messiah here plays an active part as compared to the Messiah in A¹, i.e. xxvii.-xxx. 1. The protection of the remnant of Israel and the destruction of their enemies, which are here the work of the Messiah, are there assigned to God Himself, and the Messiah does not appear till these tasks are completed (see xxix. 3).

Will convict . . . of . . . impieties. So 4 Ezra xii. 32; xiii. 37.

him to death, and protect the rest of My people which shall be found in the place which I have chosen. 3. And his principate will stand for ever, until the world of corruption is at an end, and until the times aforesaid are fulfilled. 4. This is thy vision, and this is its interpretation."

XLII.-XLII. =
B².

XLII. And I answered and said: "To whom will these things be, and how many (will they be)? or who will be worthy to live at that time? 2. For I will speak before Thee everything that I think, and I will ask of Thee regarding those things which I meditate. 3. For lo! I see many of Thy people who have withdrawn from Thy covenant, and cast from them the yoke of Thy law. 4. But others again I

2. Protect the rest, etc. See xxix. 2, note.

3. Until the world of corruption is at an end. The Messianic kingdom is only of temporary duration; it belongs to the olam hazzech (see xxi. 19, note).

XLII., XLII. These two chapters appear to belong to B², and to have followed originally after xxx. The same world-view is presented as in B². Thus the times (xlii. 6) are hastened, as in xx., in order to usher in the end, when corruption will disappear and the life of incorruption set in through the resurrection (xlii. 7, 8).

The chief topics discussed in these chapters are two: First, the ultimate destiny of the apostates; and secondly, that of the proselytes.

Thus hitherto the portions of this book derived from B², and their original order, appear to have been ix. 2-xii. (?) ; xiii. 1-3a ; xx. ; xxiv. 2-4 ; xiii. 3b-12 ; xxv. ; xiv.-xix. ; xxi.-xxiv. 1 ; xxx. 2-5 ; xli.-xlii.

XLII. 1. Baruch's question goes back to xxx. 2-5, with which they originally stood in connection in B². For a similar question, cf. lxxv. 5.

To live. The life referred to here is the spiritual life subsequent to the resurrection (cf. xlix. 2 ; lxxvi. 5 ; 4 Ezra xiv. 22).

3. The apostates here dealt with may be Christians.

Yoke of Thy law. On the "law" see xv. 5, note. The term "yoke" as expressing "obligation" is common in Jewish writings (cf. Ecclus. li. 26), τὸν τράχηλον ὑμῶν ὑπόθετε ὑπὸ ξυγόν (Pss. Sol. vii. 8 ; xvii. 32 ; Acts xv. 10 ; Gal. v. 1). In later Judaism such expressions as "yoke of the law," "yoke of the precept," "yoke of the kingdom of heaven," are frequent. See Schöttgen, Hor. Hebr. i. 115-120. Contrast Matt. xi. 29, 30.

4. The proselytes, i.e. the גרים. Cf. 4 Ezra vii. 133: "Et miserator have seen who have forsaken their vanity, and fled for refuge beneath Thy wings. 5. What therefore will be to them? or how will the last time receive them? 6. Or perhaps the time of these will assuredly be weighed, and as the beam inclines will they be judged accordingly?"

XLII. And He answered and said unto me: "These things also I will show unto thee. 2. As for what thou didst say—'To whom will these things be, and how many (will they be)?'—to those who have believed there will be the good which was spoken of aforetime, and to those who despise there will be the contrary of these things. 3. And as for what thou didst say regarding those who have drawn near and those who have withdrawn, this is the word. 4. As for those who were before subject, and afterwards withdrew and mingled themselves with the seed of mingled peoples, in eo quod miseretur illis qui conversionem faciunt in lege ejus."

Their vanity. I.e. their idols (cf. Deut. xxxii. 21).

Fled for refuge beneath Thy wings. Exactly the sense of Ps. xxxvi. 8, בצל כנפֿיך יחֿסִין; and of lvii. 1, where in both cases the LXX. renders חסה by ἐλπίζειν and the Syr. by two different words meaning "to hide." This tends to show that the writer used the Hebrew text independently. For other instances of the same metaphor, cf. Ps. xvii. 8; lxiii. 8; Deut. xxxii. 11.

But in our text the above phrase is technically used of proselytes גֵּרִים. This technical sense is derived from Ruth ii. 12, where, in reference to Ruth, it is said: "The God of Israel under whose wings thou art come to take refuge" (לחסות תחת כנפֿי).

In the Aboda Sara, 13b, Shabbat, 31a, the proselyte is said to have come under the wings of the Shekinah; and in the Jer. Sanh. ii. 20c, it is stated that "Solomon loved many strange women in order to bring them under the wings of the Shekinah."

5. The last time. I.e. that described in xxx. 2-5.

XLII. 2. Those who believed. See liv. 5, note, also xxi. 9, on the doctrine of justification in Baruch.

4. The sense seems to be that the apostates have only this world.

Mingled peoples. This is a rendering of עֲרָב (cf. Jer. xxv. 20, 24).

The Greek translation of it is found in Pss. Sol. xvii. 17 ἐθνῶν συμμικταῶν.

the time of these is the former, and I am meditating deep things. 5. And as for those who before knew not but afterwards knew life, and mingled (only) with the seed of the people which had separated itself, the time of these (is) the former, I am meditating deep things. 6. And time will succeed to time and season to season, and one will receive from another, and then with a view to the consummation will everything be compared according to the measure of the times and the hours of the seasons. 7. For corruption will take those that belong to it, and life those that belong to it. 8. And the dust will be called, and there will be said to it: 'Give back that which is not thine, and raise up all that thou hast kept until its time.'

XLIII.-XLIV.
7=B.¹

XLIII. "Moreover, do thou, Baruch, strengthen thy

5. Of the people. The text אֶתְּחַיֵּי = "of the peoples" I have emended into אֶתְּחַיֵּי, for it would be strange to speak of Israel as "the peoples" or "the nations."

Which had separated itself. I.e. the legalistic Israel by means of the "fence" of the law (cf. xlviii. 23). The "separatists" are the Pharisees, the פרושין.

The former. This seems corrupt, and probably, as Kabisch proposes, we should have "the latter." This would admit the proselytes to all the blessings of the world to come. On the treatment of "proselytes" in the Talmud, see Weber, 55, 73 f., 98, 107, 183, 254, 257 f., 282 f., 368 f.

6. This verse is obscure. Cf. 4 Ezra iv. 37.

7. Cf. xxxi. 5. See note on xxi. 19.

8. Give back, etc. Cf. l. 2. The earth gives back the body; Sheol gives back the soul.

XLIII.-XLVI. Of these chapters xliii.-xlv. 7; xlv.-xlv. 6 belong to B¹. Not to B², for (1) in xliii. 2; xlv. 2, as in lxxviii. 5; lxxxiv. 1, Baruch is to die an ordinary death and go the way of all the earth and forget all the concerns of mortals, whereas in B² he is not to die an ordinary death, but to be taken up and preserved till the last day; he is not to forget human affairs, for he is in the last days to testify against the Gentile oppressors of Israel (xiii. 3, note; xxv. 1; xlviii. 30). (2) The people are assured of good tidings in store for them (xlv. 6) just as in lxxvii. 12; they are bidden to look for the consolation of Zion (i.e. its restoration), as we infer from lxxxi. 1, 4, taken together with i. 4; vi. 9, whereas in B² there is no consolation of any kind to be looked for in this world. (3) In heart for that which has been said to thee, and understand those things which have been shown to thee; for there are many eternal consolations for thee.

2. For thou wilt depart from this place, and thou wilt pass from the regions which are now seen by thee, and thou wilt forget whatever is corruptible, and wilt not again recall those things which happen among mortals.

3. Go therefore and command thy people, and come to this place, and afterwards fast seven days, and then I will come to thee and speak with thee."

XLIV. And I, Baruch, went from thence, and xliv. 7 and xlviii. 38 the same phrase, i.e. as to a "change of the times," is found; in the former with an optimistic, in the latter with a pessimistic reference. (4) xlv. 5 vividly recalls the scene depicted in vi.-viii. As all the intervening chapters deal with questions of the school, xliii.-xlvi. probably stood originally in close juxtaposition with vi.-viii.

*The fragment xlv. 8-15 belongs to B², for just as in B² expectation is fixed not on an earthly felicity but only on the world to come (xliv. 15), the inheritance of the promised time (xliv. 13), the time that passeth not away (xliv. 11), the new world which turneth not to corruption those who enter it (xliv. 12), (2) the whole present world, the entire olam hazzeḥ is hopeless; it is defiled with evil (xliv. 9), and with its corruption it will pass away (xliv. 8). (3) In xlv. 9 the present world is to be committed to oblivion. This is in flat contradiction to iv. 1.*

The original position of xlv. 8-15. This seems easy to determine. The main statements in this address of Baruch to the people really presuppose xlviii.-lii. as their background.

They express shortly some of the main conclusions of these chapters. It is not reasonable to suppose that Baruch makes known to the people the very truths which, according to the present order of the book, are revealed to him later by God. We have already seen that xxxi.-xxxv. were originally subsequent to xlviii.-lii. (see p. 57). Since therefore both these passages form the address or part of the address of Baruch that was based upon previous disclosures of God, it is obvious that xlv. 8-15 followed originally on xxxii. 6 and formed the natural sequel to the closing words of that verse.

XLIII. 1. These words have no reference to the preceding chapters. They refer probably to some lost passage of B¹.

2. Thou wilt depart. Both the context and the word "depart" point to an ordinary death here. See xiii. 3, note. The word rendered "depart" is . It is found also in xiv. 19; xv. 1; xlv. 2.

Whatever is corruptible. Cf. xxi. 19, note.

3. Parts of this verse relating to the fast, etc., are probably due to the final editor. See xlvii. 1, note.

came to my people, and I called my first-born son and the Gedaliahs my friends, and seven of the elders of the people, and I said unto them: 2. "Behold, I go unto my fathers according to the way of all the earth. 3. But withdraw ye not from the way of the law, but guard and admonish the people which remain, lest they withdraw from the commandments of the Mighty One. 4. For ye see that he whom we serve is just, and our Creator is no respecter of persons. 5. And see ye what hath befallen Zion, and what hath happened to Jerusalem. 6. For the judgment of the Mighty One will (thereby) be made known, and His ways, which, though past finding out, are right. 7. For if ye endure and persevere in His fear, and do not forget His law, the times will change over you for good, and ye will see the consolation of Zion. 8. Because whatever is now

XLIV. 8-15 =
B².

XLIV. 1. My first-born son.
Elsewhere mentioned only in xlv. 1.

The Gedaliahs—possibly a corruption for Gedaliah. Cf. v. 1. Gedaliah is mentioned only in B¹.

Seven of the elders of the people.
In v. 5 Baruch assembled all the elders or honourable amongst the people. This is natural, as it is prior to the destruction of the city. That seven should be summoned now that the bulk of the population is carried into exile is equally fitting. We must bear in mind that in xxxii. 1 we have the work of a different author, else the writer might seem to have been guilty of an inconsistency.

2. Cf. iii. 2. See xiii. 3, note. The text is drawn from Gen. xv. 15 and Joshua xxiii. 14; 1 Kings ii. 2.

3. Way of the law. See xv. 5, note.

Commandments of the Mighty One. Cf. xlviii. 38; lxxxiv. 7.

4. No respecter of persons. Cf. xiii. 8.

5. These words as we have observed above (p. 69) vividly recall vi.-viii., and seem to show that these chapters followed much more closely on vi.-viii. than they do now.

6. Which, though . . . right. The text=which are past finding out and right.

7. The times will change over you for good. Contrast the use of this phrase in xlviii. 38.

The consolation of Zion. I.e. its restoration; cf. lxxx. 1, 4; for the temple was to be rebuilt (i. 4; vi. 9) according to B¹. The announcement of this future in store for Zion is called good tidings in xlv. 6; lxxvii. 12; lxxx. 1.

is nothing, but that which will be is very great. 9. For everything that is corruptible will pass away, and everything that dies will depart, and all the present time will be forgotten, nor will there be any remembrance of the present time, which is defiled with evils. 10. For that which runs now runs unto vanity, and that which prospers will quickly fall and be humiliated. 11. For that which is to be will be the object of desire, and on that which will come afterwards do we place our hope; for it is a time that will not pass away. 12. And the hour comes which will abide for ever, and the new world which does not turn to corruption those who depart to its blessedness, and has no mercy on those who depart to torment, and will not

8-15. These verses should be read after xxxii. 6 (see p. 69).

8. In xxxii. 6 God has declared His purpose to renew creation; the reason is given here; for all things that now are are nothing.

9. Corruptible. Cf. xxi. 19, note; xxxi. 5.

All the present time will be forgotten. In iv. 1 this is denied, but iv. 1 is from B¹ (cf. Isa. lxv. 17).

11. A time that will not pass away. This is set over against xlvi. 50: "this world which passeth away."

12. The new world, etc., implied in the new creation (xxxii. 6). In li. 3 it is the world which dies not, nor ages those who come to it (lii. 9, 16).

Who depart to its blessedness. The text here בְּרֵאשִׁיתוֹ = "who depart on its beginning" is corrupt. This clause should describe the destination of the righteous, as the antithetical clause in the next line, "those who depart to torment," describes that of the wicked. The error thus lies in the words "in its beginning." In the next place, we can reason back to what should stand here instead of these words. For the corresponding phrase in the other clause, i.e. "to torment," requires as its antithesis, not the meaningless "on its beginning," but "to blessedness." That is, over against "those who depart to torment," the sense needs "those who depart to blessedness." This conclusion as to the original text is confirmed by the fact that the erroneous text can be explained by the transposition of a single letter in the Hebrew original. Thus "in its beginning" = בְּרֵאשִׁיתוֹ, but this arose from a false transcription of בְּאִשְׁרוֹ, i.e. by wrongly transposing the ר. Now בְּאִשְׁרוֹ = "to its blessedness," I have emended accordingly.

lead to perdition those who live in it. * 13. For these are they who shall inherit that time which has been spoken of, and theirs is the inheritance of the promised time. 14. These are they who have acquired for themselves treasures of wisdom, and with them are found stores of understanding, and from mercy have they not withdrawn, and the truth of the law have they preserved. 15. For to them will be given the world to come, but the dwelling of the rest who are many will be in the fire.

XLV.-XLVI.
6=B¹.

XLV. "Do ye therefore so far as ye are able instruct the people, for that labour is ours. 2. For if ye teach them, ye will quicken them."

XLVI. And my son and the elders of the people answered and said unto me: "Has the Mighty One humiliated us to such a degree as to take thee from us quickly? 2. And truly we shall be in darkness, and there will be no light to the people who are left. 3. For where again shall we seek the law, or who will distinguish for us between death and life?" 4. And I said unto them: "The throne of the Mighty One I cannot resist: nevertheless, there shall not be wanting to Israel

13. The inheritance . . . time = "the world to come" in verse 15.

14. This verse presupposes li. 3, 7. The "treasures" here mentioned differ from those in xxiv. 1.

15. Those described in the preceding verse are to receive the world to come, just as those who are similarly described in li. 3 are to receive the world that dies not. On the contrast of this world and the world to come, see xv. 8, note.

In the fire. Cf. xlviii. 39, 43; lix. 2; lxiv. 7; lxxxv. 13.

XLV. B¹ reappears here. The connection with xlv. 7 is all that could be desired. There it is said, "If ye keep faithful to the law ye will see the consolation of Zion"; "do ye therefore . . . instruct the people . . . for if ye teach them ye will quicken them."

2. If ye teach, etc. Cf. xxxviii. 2; Ps. cxix. 50, 93. This is the work of the true scribe. Pharisaism teaches obedience to the law, God will do the rest (cf. xlv. 7).

XLVI. 2. For similar diction, cf. lxxvii. 14; 4 Ezra xiv. 20.

a wise man nor a son of the law to the race of Jacob. 5. But only prepare ye your hearts, that ye may hear the law, and be subject to those who in fear are wise and understanding; and prepare your soul that ye may not depart from them. 6. For if ye do these things, good tidings will come unto you, which I before told you of; nor will ye fall into the torment, of which I testified to you before."

[7. But with regard to the word that I was to be taken, XLVI. 7=E. I did not make (it) known to them or to my son.]

XLVII. And when I had gone forth and dismissed them, I went thence and said unto them: "Behold! I go to Hebron: for thither the Mighty One hath sent me."

4. There shall not be wanting . . . a son of the law. This is really an answer to the question put in iii. 6. The expression "son of the law" seems to occur here first in existing literature. Its earliest occurrence elsewhere in the Talmud appears to be in Baba Mezia, 96a. See Levy, Neuhebräisches Wörterbuch, i. 258. The term בן כסוה was used in the Middle Ages as a designation of a full-grown Israelite. See Schürer, Div. II., vol. ii. 51 (note). For the parallelism Israel . . . Jacob, cf. xvii. 4; xxxi. 3.

5. Prepare ye your hearts. See xxxii. 1, note.

Obedience to the law and the Rabbis is here enforced.

6. Here the promise in xlv. 7 is enforced anew.

Good tidings. Cf. lxxvii. 12.

7. This verse is an addition of the final editor in order the better to adapt the fragment of B¹ just given to its new context. It belongs in spirit to B².

I was to be taken. Cf. xiii. 3, note; xlviii. 30. In lxxxv. 9 the phrase has a different meaning. נָסַח is a rendering of ἀναλαμβάνειν (also of μετατιθέναι in Gen. v. 24). The former is the usual word in the sense of the text. The idea of the ascension into heaven of great heroes in Jewish history was a familiar one. Thus it is told of Elijah in the LXX. of 2 Kings ii. 11, καὶ ἀνελήμφθη . . . εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν: Ecclus. xlviii. 9, ὁ ἀναλημφθεὶς ἐν λαίλαπι πυρός; also in Eth. En. lxxxix. 52; xciii. 8; 1 Macc. ii. 58; of Enoch in Ecclus. xlv. 16; Eth. En. lxx. 1; lxxxvii. 3, 4; Slav. En. lxvii. 2; Jubilees, iv. 24; of Moses, Assumpt. Mos. x. 12; of Baruch, Apoc. Bar. xiii. 3; xxv. 1; xlv. 7; xlviii. 30; lxxvi. 2; of Ezra, 4 Ezra viii. 20; xiv. 49; of many unnamed heroes, 4 Ezra vi. 26. ἀναλαμβάνειν is well-known in the N.T. in this sense (cf. Mark xvi. 19; Acts i. 2, 11, 22; 1 Tim. iii. 16). The substantive ἀνάληψις is rare. Ryle and James (Pss. Sol.) take iv. 20 of those Pss. to be the first known instance of its use; see also Luke ix. 51, and Test. Levi xviii. In the last passage it is a late Christian interpolation.

XLVII.-LII.=B².

2. And I came to that place where the word had been spoken to me, and I sat there, and fasted seven days.

PRAYER OF BARUCH

XLVIII. And it came to pass after the seventh day, that I prayed before the Mighty One and said: 2. "O my Lord, Thou summonest the advent of the times, and they stand before Thee; Thou causest the power of the ages to pass away, and they do not resist Thee; Thou arrangeest the method of the seasons, and they obey Thee. 3. Thou alone knowest the goal of the generations, and Thou revealest not Thy mysteries to many. 4. Thou makest known the multitude of the fire, and Thou weighest the lightness of the wind.

THE SEVENTH SECTION

XLVII.-LXXVII. First we have Baruch's fast of seven days (xlvi. 2), followed by his prayer (xlvi. 2-24). Then in the dialogue that ensues various revelations are made to Baruch touching the coming woes and the judgment (xlvi. 26-41), and the resurrection (l.-lii.) On these revelations follows a Messiah Apocalypse (lii.-lxxiv.=A³). In lxxvi. Baruch is told of his approaching translation, and in lxxvii. he calls the people together and addresses them.

This section is composite: xlvi.-lii. being derived from B²; lii.-lxxiv. from A³; lxxv., lxxvi. from B²; and lxxvii. from B¹.

XLVII. 1. The purposeless journey to Hebron spoken of here must be derived from an original source. According to the scheme of the final editor it has no business here. Further, no such command has been given to Baruch in the existing text.

Hence this entire verse must be regarded as drawn from B¹ or B², and the next verse, which conflicts with it, as due to the final editor, as also xliii. 3. It is noteworthy, too, that the words "and dismissed them" must be corrupt; for "and when I had gone forth and dismissed them, I went thence and said unto them" is absurd. Baruch goes forth from some place (here undefined) and dismisses the people; then he departs thence and speaks to them. It is possible then that "when I had gone forth" refers to "the cavern in the earth" in xxi. 1. It will be remembered that of chapters xxi.-xli., xxi.-xxiv. 1, xxx. 2-5, xli., xlii. belong to B². These form in some sense a whole, and the scene with which they are connected may be the "cavern" in xxi. 1. If this is so, xlvi. 1 belongs to B².

2. Cf. xliii. 3; v. 7, note; ix., note; xxi. 2, note.

XLVIII. 2. Method of the seasons. Cf. xiv. 1, note; xx. 6.

5. Thou explorest the limit of the heights, and Thou scrutinisest the depths of the darkness. 6. Thou carest for the number which pass away that they may be preserved, and Thou preparest an abode for those that are to be. 7. Thou rememberest the beginning which Thou hast made, and the destruction that is to be Thou forgettest not. 8. With nods of fear and indignation Thou givest commandment to the flames, and they change into spirits, and with a word Thou quickenest that which was not, and with mighty power Thou holdest that which has not yet come. 9. Thou instructest created things in the understanding of Thee, and Thou makest wise the spheres so as to minister in their orders. 10. Armies innumerable stand before Thee and minister in their orders quietly at Thy nod. 11. Hear Thy servant and give ear to my petition. 12. For in a little time are we born, and in a little time do we return. 13. But with Thee hours are as a time, and days as generations. 14. Be not therefore wroth with man; for he is nothing, and take not account of our works. 15. For what are we? for lo! by Thy gift do we come

6. See xxiii. 4, note.

Thou carest . . . preserved. The text which here = "Thou commandest the number which passes away and it is preserved" is nonsense as it stands, but, if retranslated into Hebrew, it supplies us at once with the true text. Retranslated it = אתה פָּקֵד אֶת־הַמִּסְפָּר הַעוֹבֵר וְיִשְׁכַּר. Here clearly the Greek translator followed the wrong meaning of פָּקֵד, and mistranslated the weak vav with the voluntative imperfect. The translation required by the context is given above.

8. With a word . . . which was not. Cf. xxi. 4, note; 4 Ezra iv.

37. Flames . . . spirits. Cf. Ps. civ. 4; Heb. i. 7.

9. The spheres . . . in their orders. Cf. Eth. En. ii. 1; Slav. En. xxx. 2, 3; Pss. Sol. xix. 2, 3.

10. Cf. Slav. En. xvii.; Test. Levi iii. In their orders. There were ten orders of angels according to the Jews; nine according to the Christians (see Slav. En. xx. 1, 3, note).

13. We should expect rather: "time is as a (few) hours, and generations as days."

into the world, and we depart not of our own will. 16. For we said not to our parents, 'Beget us,' nor did we send to Sheol and say, 'Receive us.' 17. What therefore is our strength that we should bear Thy wrath, or what are we that we should endure Thy judgment? 18. Protect us in Thy compassions, and in Thy mercy help us. 19. Behold the little ones that are subject unto Thee, and save all that draw nigh unto Thee, and destroy not the hope of our people, and cut not short the times of our aid. 20. For this is the nation which Thou hast chosen, and these are the people, to whom Thou findest no equal. 21. But I will speak now before Thee, and I will say as my heart thinketh. 22. In Thee do we trust, for lo! Thy law is with us, and we know that we shall not fall so far as we keep Thy statutes. 23. In this at least we are always blest that we have not mingled with the Gentiles. 24. For we are all named one people, who have received one law from One, and the law which is amongst us will aid us, and the surpassing wisdom which is in us will help us." 25.

15. Depart not, etc. In xiv. 11 men are said to "come not of their own will"; in 4 Ezra viii. 5 the two statements are combined.

16. Sheol. See xi. 6, note.

18. See lxxv. 6.

19. That are subject to Thee. Cf. xlii. 4.

All that draw nigh. Are these proselytes? (see xli. 4; xlii. 3).

20. Cf. xxi. 21; 4 Ezra v. 27. The nation. So I have emended by reading | אֱלֹהִים | for the unmeaning

| אֱלֹהִים |. This gives a good parallel to "people" (| אֱלֹהִים |). Ceriani proposes | אֱלֹהִים | = "servant."

21. Say as my heart thinketh. Cf. xli. 2.

22. See xv. 5, note.

23. Cf. xlii. 5.

24. One law from One. lxxv. 14. This is directed polemically against the Christians.

The law . . . will aid us. Cf. xxix. 2, note; xxxii. 1; xv. 5, note; cf. De singularitate cler. 15 (Cyprian, Ed. Hartel. ii. 190), "sicut Esaias ait, legem inquit in adiutorium dedit."

And when I had prayed and said these things, I was greatly weakened. 26. And He answered and said unto me: "Thou hast prayed simply, O Baruch, and all thy words have been heard. 27. But My judgment exacts its own and My law exacts its rights. 28. For from thy words I will answer thee, and from thy prayer I will speak to thee. 29. For this is as follows: he that is corrupted is not at all; he has both wrought iniquity so far as he could do anything, and has not remembered My goodness, nor been grateful for My long-suffering. 30. Therefore thou shalt surely be taken up, as I before told thee: and the time is coming of which I told thee. 31. For that time will arise which brings affliction; for it will come and pass by with quick vehemence, and it will be turbulent coming in the heat of indignation. 32. And it will come to pass in those days that all the inhabitants of the earth will be moved one against another, because they know not that My judgment has drawn nigh. 33. For there will not be found many wise at that time, and the intelligent will be but a few: moreover, 25. I was greatly weakened. Cf. xxi. 26. The same phenomenon accompanies the visions in Dan. vii. 28; viii. 27; x. 8, 16.

27. Cf. v. 2; lxxxv. 9.

29. For this . . . is not at all. The text which is unintelligible runs:

תב תב תב תב תב תב תב תב
תב תב תב תב תב תב תב תב

30. See xli. 7, note.

31-41. The last woes and the final judgment. Cf. xxvii.-xxix. 1; lxx. 2-10.

32. The inhabitants of the earth. See xxv. 1, note.

Will be moved one against another.

The text לשבת = "will rest" is meaningless. It seems corrupted from לשבת or לשבת , either of which can be rendered as above.

33. Cf. lxx. 5. This verse seems to be the source of the following words which Cyprian (Testim. iii. 29) quotes as from Baruch: "erit enim sapientia in paucis vigilantibus et taciturnis."

even those who know will most of all be silent. 34. And there will be many rumours and tidings not a few, and the works of portents will be shown, and promises not a few will be recounted, (and) some of them (will prove) idle, and some of them will be confirmed. 35. And honour will be turned into shame, and strength humiliated into contempt, and probity destroyed, and beauty will become a scorn. 36. And many will say to many at that time: 'Where hath the multitude of intelligence hidden itself, and whither hath the multitude of wisdom removed itself?' 37. And whilst they are meditating these things, then zeal will arise in those of whom they thought not, and passion will seize him who is peaceful, and many will be roused in anger to injure many, and they will rouse up armies in order to shed blood, and in the end they will perish together with them. 38. And it will come to pass at the self-same time, that a change of times will manifestly appear to every man, by reason of which in all those times they were polluted and practised oppression, and walked every man in his own works, and remembered

34. Joseph, Ant. xx. 5. 1; 8. 6, tells of many impostors who so deceived the people (cf. Matt. xxiv. 11, 24). This verse seems to be the source of Cyprian's (Testim. iii. 29) quotation from Baruch: "alii autem sapientes ad spiritum erroris et pronuntiantes sicut Altissimi et Fortis edicta."

35. Cf. lxx. 3. It is remarkable that if we retranslate this verse into Hebrew we have a series of paronomasiae. Thus "honour will be turned into shame" = כבוד יהפך

ללקלן, "strength humiliated into contempt" = עו יורר אל בוז, and "beauty will become a scorn" = יופי יהיה לרפי.

36. Cf. 4 Ezra v. 9-11. This seems the source of Cyprian's quotation from Baruch (Testim. iii. 29): "Quaeritis me et vos et qui post vos venerint audire verbum sapientiae et intellectus et non invenientis."

37. Cf. lxx. 6.

38. A change of times. Cf. xliv. 7.

Walked every man, etc. Cf. 4 Ezra iii. 8.

not the law of the Mighty One. 39. Therefore a fire will consume their thoughts, and in flame will the meditations of their reins be tried; for the Judge will come and will not tarry. 40. Because each of the inhabitants of the earth knew when he was committing iniquity, and they have not known My law by reason of their pride. 41. For many will then assuredly weep, yea, over the living more than over the dead." 42. And I answered and said: "O Adam, what hast thou done to all those who are born from thee?

Remembered not the law of the Mighty One. Cf. xlv. 3, 7; lxxxiv. 7.

39. A fire will consume, etc. Cf. verse 43; xlv. 15; lix. 2, note.

The Judge will come and will not tarry. Cf. xx. 6, note.

40. Knew when he was committing, etc. See xv. 6, note; lv. 2. Cf. Ep. Barn. v. 4 δικαίως ἀπολείται ἄνθρωπος ὃς ἔχων ὁδοῦ δικαιοσύνης γινώσκιν ἐαυτὸν εἰς ὁδὸν σκότους ἀποσυνέχει. In xv. 6 men are to be tormented because, though knowing the law, they transgressed it. In that passage the words, therefore, may be limited to Israel, but here they are obviously descriptive of the Gentiles: "the inhabitants of the earth" (see xxv. 2, note). The writer thus holds that all men alike possessed a conscience or faculty for moral judgment. We have, therefore, in this verse a statement in some degree parallel to Rom. ii. 14, 15: "For when Gentiles, which have no law, do by nature the things of the law, these, having no law, are a law unto themselves: in that they shew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience bearing witness therewith, etc."

Have not known My law by reason of their pride. These words seem to point to the rejection of the law by the Gentiles; for according to an oft-repeated statement in the Talmud (see Weber, 19, 56, 57, 65), the law was originally designed for all nations, but the Gentiles rejected it (see 4 Ezra vii. 72, 73).

41. Since the sin of the world is intensified towards its close, so naturally the sinners then surviving will meet with severer judgment than the less guilty of earlier times.

42-50. What havoc Adam and Eve have wrought by the spiritual death and torments which they have brought upon their posterity. Yet God knows all that is in man, for He created him; He knows likewise the number of men that are to be, and their sins (verses 42-46). But since the law will give all these their due in the judgment, let inquiry be made rather after the blessedness of the righteous; for though they have endured much weariness in this passing world, in the world to come they shall have abundant light.

42. Spiritual death is here traced to Adam and Eve, but in xvii. 3; xxiii. 4; liv. 15 it is only physical death. See notes on xxiii. 4; liv. 15-19. In 4 Ezra both spiritual and what will be said to the first Eve who hearkened to the serpent? 43. For all this multitude are going to corruption, nor is there any numbering of those whom the fire devours. 44. But again I will speak in Thy presence. 45. Thou, O LORD, my Lord, knowest what is in Thy creature. 46. For Thou didst of old command the dust to produce Adam, and Thou knowest the number of those who are born from him, and how far they have sinned before Thee, who have existed and not confessed Thee as their Creator. 47. And as regards all these their end will convict them, and Thy law which they have transgressed will requite them on Thy day. [48. But now let us dismiss the wicked and enquire about the righteous. 49. And I will recount their blessedness and not be silent in celebrating their death and physical are always traced to Adam (iii. 21, 22 ; iv. 30 ; vii. 118-121).

43. Fire devours. 'Cf. verse 39 ; xliv. 15 ; lxiv. 7.

46. Command the dust to produce Adam. 4 Ezra iii. 4, 5 ; vii. 116.

The number of those who are born. See xxiii. 5, note.

47. Thy law . . . will requite. See v. 2, note.

48-50. These verses were used originally in B² by Baruch in addressing the people, or by God in addressing Baruch, but not by Baruch in addressing God as the present text implies. That they could not have been addressed by Baruch to God is clear ; for Baruch could not say to God, "In this world . . . in which ye live" (ver. 50). Two facts are in favour of their being God's words to Baruch: (1) The very same contrast between the two worlds is found in God's reply to Baruch in xv. 7 ; and (2) the very same change of subject is enjoined and the same word "inquire" used in reference to the righteous in 4 Ezra ix. 13: "tu ergo adhuc noli curiosus esse quomodo impii cruciabuntur sed inquire quomodo justii salvabuntur." But the plural in verse 48 is against this view ; and secondly, the words "I will not be silent in celebrating, etc.," while hardly conceivable on the divine lips, are appropriate on Baruch's. Hence we must regard xlviii. 48-50 as a fragment of an address delivered by Baruch to the people. Another fragment of this same address which originally preceded xlviii. 48-50 is to be found in liv. 16-18, and yet another which followed it in liv. 16-18.

49. Will not be silent in celebrating. A Hebrew idiom = לא אחרל לשבח.

glory, which is reserved for them. 50. For assuredly as in a little time in this world which passeth away, in which ye live, ye have endured much labour, so in that world to which there is no end, ye shall receive great light.”]

XLIX. “Nevertheless, I will again ask from Thee, O Mighty One, yea, I will ask mercy from Him who made all things. 2. ‘In what shape will those live who live in Thy day? or how will the splendour of those who (are) after that time continue? 3. Will they then resume this form of the present, and put on these entrammeling members, which are now involved in evils, and in which evils are consummated, or wilt Thou perchance change these things which have been in the world as also the world?’”

L. And He answered and said unto me: “Hear,

50. Cf. xv. 8 for the same contrast and largely the same diction.

Light. This does not seem the right word.

XLIX. 2. In what shape, etc. Cf. 1 Cor. xv. 35: “How are the dead raised? and with what manner of body do they come?”

Live. See xli. 1, note.

The splendour of those who (are) after that time. For “splendour” we might perhaps render “appearance.” The text is אֵפְרוֹחַ

בְּלִי חַיִּים.

3. Entrammeling members, lit. members of bonds.

L.-LI. The nature of the resurrection body. The teaching here as to the nature of the resurrection proceeds on the line suggested in xlix. 1: “Wilt thou perchance change these things (i.e. man’s material body) which have been in the world as also the world?” The world was to be renewed (xxxii. 6), and in this renewal from being transitory and verging to its close (xlvi. 50; lxxxv. 10), it becomes undying (li. 3) and everlasting (xlvi. 50); from being a world of corruption (xl. 3; lxxiv. 2; xxi. 19; xxxi. 5, etc.) it becomes incorruptible (lxxiv. 2) and invisible (li. 8). As these conceptions are in germ and principle as old as Isa. lxv. 17-lxvi., the same doctrine of renewal and transformation that was taught touching the world was naturally applied in due course to those destined to live in it. This is done partially in Isa. lxv. 17-25, but the developed form appears in Dan. xii. 2, where the risen righteous are to shine as the stars for ever and ever; in Eth. En. they are to joy as the angels (civ. 4)

Baruch, this word, and write in the remembrance of thy heart all that thou shalt learn. 2. For the earth will then assuredly restore the dead, which it now receives, in order to preserve them, making no change in their form, but as it has received, so will it restore them, and as I delivered them unto it, so also shall it raise them. 3. For then it will be necessary to show to the living that the dead have come to life again, and that those who had departed have returned (again). 4. And it will come to pass, when they have severally and to become angels in heaven (li. 4) and companions of the heavenly hosts (civ. 6), and to be clad in garments of life (lxii. 15, 16) and in raiment of light (cviii. 12); see also xc. 38. We thus see that long before the time of the writers of Baruch the Pharisees were familiar with the idea of the spiritual transformation of the body after the resurrection; and that to some extent the Pauline teaching on the resurrection in 1 Cor. xv. 35-50 was not an innovation, but an able and developed exposition of ideas that were current in the Judaism of the time. 1 Cor. xv. 35-50 is in one of its aspects the logical sequel of Isa. lxv. 17.

Over against this spiritual view of the future life we must remember that a materialistic one prevailed not only popularly, but also in Rabbinic circles. According to the latter the blessed should beget children and eat the flesh of the Leviathan. See Weber, 383, 384.

L. 2. Cf. xi. 4, note; xlii. 8, note; Eth. En. li. 1, note. In the resurrection soul and body were to be united. On the scene of the resurrection see xxix. 2, note. The soul's abode was Sheol (see xxi. 23 note); the body rested in the earth (xlii. 8). According to the text the body was to be restored in exactly the same form in which it had been committed to the earth. The following speculations of later Judaism on this subject are instructive. According to the Othioth, 17c, of R. Akiba (Weber, 352, 353), God was to sound a trumpet seven times at the end of the world. At the first blast the whole world was to be moved, at the second the dust was to be separated, at the third the bones of the dead were to be gathered together, at the fourth their limbs were to be warmed, at the fifth they were to be covered with skin, at the sixth the souls and spirits were to enter their bodies, in the seventh they were to become living and stand upon their feet, clad in their clothes. According to another account (Beresh. rab. 28) the resurrection body was built up from a small fragment of the backbone which was in all cases indestructible. This was called נֶלֶם. See Levy, Neuhebräisches Wörterb. ii. 481; see verse 4, note.

L. 3. Those who are to be judged are the living righteous, and sinners, and the risen dead.

4. The object with which the dead are raised is for common recognition.

recognised those whom they now know, then judgment will grow strong, and those things which before were spoken of will come.

LI. "And it will come to pass, when that appointed day has gone by, that then shall the aspect of those who are condemned be afterwards changed, and the glory of those who are justified. 2. For the aspect of those who now act wickedly will become worse than is that of such as suffer torment. 3. Also (as for) the glory of those who have now been justified in My law, who have had understanding in their life, and who have planted in their heart the root of wisdom, then their splendour will be glorified in changes, and the form of their face will be turned into the light of their beauty, that they may be able to acquire and receive the world which does not die, which is then promised to them. 4. For

There is nothing corresponding to this in the N.T. In later Judaism the resemblance of the risen was to be so carefully preserved that they were to be raised in the same clothes in which they were buried. This was proved Sanhedrin, 90b (Weber, 353) by the analogy of a grain of corn which comes up from the earth, not naked but clothed. The Rabbis, therefore, on the approach of death, gave careful directions as to their grave-clothes. According to the Beresh. rab. 95 (Weber, 353), men were to be raised with all their bodily defects, such as blindness, lameness, etc., in order that their identity might be established. Thereupon, in the case of the righteous these infirmities were healed.

LI. 1. This transformation of the living is mentioned in 1 Cor. xv. 51.

Aspect. I have here followed

Ceriani's emendation of $\rho\sigma\tau\lambda\omicron\sigma\varsigma$ into $\rho\sigma\tau\lambda\omicron\sigma\varsigma$.

Condemned . . . justified. See xxi. 9, note. The word "justify" has here its ordinary meaning of "to declare righteous."

3. Justified in My law. See xv. 5, note; xxi. 9, note.

Root of wisdom. lix. 7; Ecclus. i. 6, 20, $\rho\lambda\iota\gamma\alpha$ σοφίας; Wisdom iii. 15.

Their splendour, etc. The righteous will undergo successive transformations till their bodies are assimilated to their new environment, or to use the words of the text, "that they may be able . . . to receive the world that does not die."

The world that does not die. Cf. xlviii. 50; li. 8; lxxiv. 2, for various characteristics of the olam habba or future world.

Then promised. See xiv. 13, note.

over this above all will those who come then lament, that they rejected My law, and stopped their ears that they might not hear wisdom or receive understanding. 5. When therefore they see those, over whom they are now exalted, (but) who will then be exalted and glorified more than they, they will respectively be transformed, the latter into the splendour of angels, and the former will mainly waste away in wonder at the visions and in the beholding of the forms. 6. For they will first behold and afterwards depart to be tormented. 7. But those who have been saved by their works, and to whom the law has been now a hope, and understanding an expectation, and wisdom a confidence, to them wonders will appear in their time. 8. For they will behold the world which is now invisible to them, and they will behold the time which is now hidden from them. 9. And again time will not age them. 10. For in the heights of that world shall they dwell, and they shall be made like unto the angels, and be made

4. The wicked here include not only the faithless Israelites, but also the Gentiles.

Stopped their ears that they might not hear. Zech. vii. 11. The LXX. renders differently: τὰ ὦτα αὐτῶν ἐβάρυναν κτλ.

5. The splendour. This word [αἰ] here, and in xlix. 2; li. 3, might also be rendered by "appearance."

Will waste away, or will be dissolved. Cf. xxx. 4; 4 Ezra vii. 87. The latter reference as well as our text show that the writer here was not thinking of annihilation, though this view is found later. Cf. Weber, 374, 375.

7. Saved by their works. See xiv. 7, note.

9. Cf. verse 3, note, and the phrase in verse 16: "The world which ages not those." After this verse we should probably read verses 13 and 14. Verse 12 would then form a fitting close and climax to li. 1-9, 13, 14, 10, 11.

10. The condition of the risen righteous is very spiritually conceived. Thus they have passed from a world of tribulation (li. 14) and enter a world that is everlasting (li. 3), invisible (li. 8); they live in the high places thereof (li. 10); they are made equal to the stars (li. 10), equal to the stars, and they shall be changed into every form they desire, from beauty into loveliness, and from light into the splendour of glory. 11. For there will be spread before them the extents of Paradise, and there will be shown to them the beauty of the majesty of the living creatures which are beneath the throne, and all the armies of the angels, who [are now held fast by My word, lest they should appear, and] are held fast by a command, that they may stand in their places till their advent comes. 12. Moreover, there will then be excellency in the righteous surpassing that in the angels. 13. For the first will receive the last, those whom they were expecting, and the last those of whom they used to hear that they had passed away. 14. For they have been delivered from this world of tribulation, and laid down the burthen of anguish. 15. For what then have men lost their life, and for what have those who were on the earth exchanged their soul? 16. For then they chose (not) for themselves that time, which, beyond the reach of and their glory is greater than that of the angels (x. 12).

Made equal to the stars. Cf. 4 Ezra vii. 97, 125.

11. Living creatures which are beneath the throne. Cf. Rev. iv. 6.

Armies of the angels who . . . are held fast, etc. These angels are probably the armed host mentioned in lxx. 7; Slav. En. xvii.; and in Test. Lev. 3: ἐν τῷ τρίτῳ εἰσὶν αἱ δυνάμεις τῶν παρεμβολῶν, οἱ ταχθέντες εἰς ἡμέραν κρίσεως, ποιῆσαι ἐκδίκησιν ἐν τοῖς πνεύμασι τῆς πλάνης καὶ τοῦ Βελιάρ. I have bracketed one of the clauses in this verse as a gloss.

13, 14. These two verses seem to be wrongly transposed from their place after verse 9.

13. Cf. 4 Ezra v. 42: "Coronae adsimilabo iudicium meum; sicut non novissimorum tarditas, sic nec priorum velocitas"; also Matt. xix. 30.

14. See xv. 8, note.

15. Cf. Matt. xvi. 26.

16. I have added a negative in the first clause as the sense requires it. In lvi. 14 there is a similar loss of the negative, as Ceriani has already observed. Which ages not, etc. (cf. ver. 9).

anguish, could not pass away, and they chose for themselves that time, whose issues are full of lamentations and evils, and they denied the world which ages not those who come to it, and they have rejected the time and the glory, so that they shall not come to the honour of which I told thee before."

LII. And I answered and said: "How do those forget for whom woe is then reserved? 2. And why therefore again do we mourn for those who die? or why do we weep for those who depart to Sheol? 3. Let lamentations be reserved for the beginning of that coming torment, and let tears be laid up for the advent of the destruction of that time. 4. But even in the face of these things I will speak. [5. And as for the righteous, what will they do now? 6. Rejoice ye in the suffering which ye now suffer: for why do ye look for the decline of your enemies? 7. Make ready your soul for that which is reserved for you, and prepare your souls for the reward which is laid up for you.]"

LIII. And when I had said these things I fell asleep there, and I saw a vision, and lo! a cloud was

LII. 1, 2. Considering the terrible destiny in store for the wicked after the resurrection, our grief should be reserved for those who shall suffer its torments, and not for those who depart to Sheol. And yet there is a certain degree of pain and torment in Sheol as we have seen (cf. xxx. 5; xxxvi. 10).

5-7. These verses cannot have been addressed by Baruch to God. Like xlviii. 48-50, they are part of his address to the people. They would form an appropriate sequel to xlviii. 48-50 (see note on liv. 16-18).

6. Cf. lxxviii. 6. These words recall James i. 2: "Count it all joy, my brethren, when ye fall into manifold temptations." The sentiment looks Christian.

7. Make ready . . . prepare your souls. See xxxii. 1, note. One half of this verse seems to be a gloss on the other.

8. Cf. xxxvi. 1.

LIII. - LXXIV. This constitutes ascending from a very great sea, and I kept gazing upon it, and lo! it was full of waters white and black, and there were many colours in those self-same waters, and as it were the likeness of great lightning was seen at its summit. 2. And I saw that cloud passing swiftly in quick courses, and it covered all the earth. 3. And it came to pass after these things the third Messiah Apocalypse = A³ embodied by the final editor in this book. It will be sufficient here to indicate (a) its date; (b) its relation to the other constituents of the book; and to touch on (c) the question of its integrity; (d) and of its author.

(a) Its date. It was written prior to 70 A.D. (see lxviii. 5, note), and subsequent to 50 A.D. (see lix. 5-11, note).

(b) Relations of A³ to B¹, B², A¹, A². It is distinct from B¹, and B² in date, as these were composed subsequently to the fall of the temple. It is distinct in character from B¹ and B²; for whereas in the latter there is no expectation of the Messiah, in A³ the Messiah is the centre of interest. Other points of difference will be dealt with in the notes. A³ is distinct from A¹. In the latter the Messiah does not appear till the enemies of Israel are destroyed; in A³, on the other hand, the Messiah is the agent of their destruction. A³ may be distinct from A²; contrast lxxi. 1 with xl. 2. If xl. 1, 2 refers to Pompey, it was written prior to his death, and A² would in that case be much earlier than A³, which was composed between 50 and 70 A.D.

(c) Integrity. A³ is handed down in tolerable preservation. liv. 17, 18 is an interpolation, and possibly lxx. 9. The text has been badly tampered with in lxxii. 1 and lxxiv. 4 by the final editor.

(d) The author. A³ is of extreme interest, as it is the oldest writing in which full justice is done alike to the claims of the Messiah and those of the law in moulding the world's history. The author belongs to the Rabbinical school, and assigns to certain elements of the law and tradition (cf. lvii., notes) the pre-Mosaic origin attributed to them in Jubilees. On the other hand, he recognises the popular aspiration for God's kingdom on earth as a legitimate outcome of prophecy, and gives it complete development in his forecast of history. Thus A³ is the oldest literary evidence of the fusion of early Rabbinism and popular Messianic expectation.

LIII. In this vision a cloud is seen coming up from the sea and covering the whole earth with its summit crowned with lightning. And soon it began to discharge black waters, and then clear, and again black waters, and then clear, and so on till this succession of black and bright waters had occurred six times. And at the end of these twelve showers there was yet another shower of black waters, blacker than had been all before. Thereupon the lightning on the summit of the cloud flashed forth and healed the earth, and twelve streams came up from the sea and were subject to that lightning.

1. A very great sea. Cf. Dan. vii. 2.

that that cloud began to pour upon the earth the waters that were in it. 4. And I saw that there was not one and the same likeness in the waters which descended from it. 5. For in the first beginning they were black exceedingly for a time, and afterwards I saw that the waters became bright, but they were not many, and after these things again I saw black (waters), and after these things again bright, and again black and again bright. 6. Now this was done twelve times, but the black were always more numerous than the bright. 7. And it came to pass at the end of the cloud, that lo! it rained black waters, and they were darker than had been all those waters that were before, and fire was mingled with them, and where those waters descended, they wrought devastation and destruction. 8. And I saw after these things that lightning which I had seen on the summit of the cloud, that it held it fast and made it descend to the earth. 9. Now that lightning shone exceedingly, so as to illuminate the whole earth, and it healed those regions where the last waters had descended and wrought devastation. 10. And it took hold of the

6. For the twelfefold division of history see 4 Ezra xiv. 11, 12: "XII enim partibus divisum est saeculum, et transierunt ejus X jam et dimidium Xmae partis, Superant autem ejus duae post medium decimae partis." Cf. Hilgenfeld, Mess. Jud. 104.

7. These black waters are interpreted in lxix., lxx. They symbolise the travail pains of the Messiah.

8. The lightning on the cloud symbolises the Messiah. The imagery is derived from Dan. vii. 13. It was from the last passage that the Messiah was named ענני = "the cloud-man," or בר נפלי = "the son of the cloud." See Levi, Neuhebräisch. Lex. iii. 271, 422.

9. Lightning shone . . . so as to illuminate the whole earth. Cf. Matt. xxiv. 27: "For as the lightning cometh forth from the east, and is seen even unto the west, so shall be the coming of the Son of man."

whole earth and had dominion over it. 11. And I saw after these things, and lo! twelve rivers were ascending from the sea, and they began to surround that lightning and to become subject to it. 12. And by reason of my fear I awoke.

[PRAYER OF BARUCH]

LIV. And I besought the Mighty One, and said: "Thou alone, O Lord, knowest of aforetime the deep things of the world, and the things which befall in their times Thou bringest about by Thy word, and against the works of the inhabitants of the earth Thou dost hasten the beginnings of the times, and the end of the seasons Thou alone knowest. 2. For whom nothing is too hard, but Thou doest everything easily by a nod. 3. To whom the depths as the heights are accessible, and the beginnings of the ages minister to Thy word. 4. Who revealeth to those who fear Him what is prepared for them, that He may thereby console them. 5. Thou showest great acts to those

10. We have here symbolised the Messiah's reign.

11. Do these twelve rivers symbolise the Gentile nations submitting themselves to the Messiah, or the twelve tribes of Israel?

LIV. 1. Against the works, etc. . . . hasten the beginnings of the times. See xx. 1, note.

The end of the seasons Thou alone knowest. Cf. xxi. 8.

2. For whom nothing is too hard. This is a rendering of the phrase found in Gen. xviii. 14; Jer. xxxii. 17, 27. By comparing the text with the Peshitto of Luke i. 37, we see that the Greek was here παρ' ᾧ ῥῆμα οὐκ ἄδυναται. This is the LXX. of Gen. xviii. 14 μὴ ἄδυναται παρὰ τῷ θεῷ ῥῆμα, but not of Jer. xxxii. 17, 27, where we find (xxxix. 17, 27 in LXX.) οὐ μὴ ἀποκρυβῇ ἀπὸ σοῦ οὐθέν. This is the rendering of the Peshitto also in Gen. xviii. 14 and Jer. xxxii. 17, 27. From this verse in itself, therefore, we cannot conclude for or against the influence of the LXX. on the writer.

5. Great acts or "wonders."

who know not; Thou breakest up the enclosure of those who are ignorant, and lightest up what is dark, and revealest what is hidden to the pure, who in faith have submitted themselves to Thee and Thy law. 6. Thou hast shown to Thy servant this vision; reveal to me also its interpretation. 7. For I know that as regards those things wherein I besought Thee, I have received a response, and as regards what I besought, Thou didst reveal to me, and didst show me with what voice I should praise Thee, or from what members I should cause praises and hallelujahs to ascend to Thee. 8. For if my members were mouths, and the hairs of my head voices, even so I could not give Thee the meed of praise, or laud Thee as is befitting, nor could I recount Thy praise, nor tell the glory of Thy beauty, 9. For what am I amongst men, or why am I reckoned amongst those who are more excellent than I, that I should have heard all those marvellous things from the Most High, and good tidings numberless from Him who created me? 10. Blessed be my mother amongst those that bear, and praised among women be she that bare me. 11. For I will not be silent in praising the Mighty One, and with the voice of praise I will recount His marvellous deeds. 12. For who doeth like unto Thy marvellous deeds, O God, or who comprehendeth Thy deep thought of

In faith. See note on liv. 21.

8. In the Shir ha-Shirim rabba, i. 3 we find the hyperbolic statements of this verse far outdone: "R. Eliezer said: 'if all the seas were ink, and all the reeds were pens, and heaven and earth were rolls, and all men were scribes, yet the law could not be written down which I have taught.'"

10. An interpolation? it breaks life? 13. For with Thy counsel Thou dost govern all the creatures which Thy right hand has created, and Thou hast established every fountain of light beside Thee, and the treasures of wisdom beneath Thy throne hast Thou prepared. 14. And justly do they perish who have not loved Thy law, and the torment of judgment will await those who have not submitted themselves to Thy power. 15. For though Adam the connection. Cf. Luke i. 42; xi. 27; Judges v. 24.

13. Thou dost govern. Cf. verse 22.

14. A deliberate rejection of the law of God is here implied as in xlviii. 40, see note.

15, 19. In xxiii. 4 the physical effects of sin are referred to; in xlviii. 42 the spiritual effects. The former consisted according to B² (see xxiii. 4, note) in man's subjection to physical death. According to A³ (see liv. 15; lvi. 6), however, man was already subject to physical death, and the penalty of sin consisted in premature death.

The main question, however, which concerns us here is that of predestination and free will. In order to understand the position of the writers of this book, it will be helpful to draw attention to the chief statements which appear on these subjects in Jewish non-canonical literature. In Ecclesiasticus these antinomies are stated unconditionally, not indeed in immediate contrast, but in distinct passages. Thus in xv. 11, 12, 14, 15, 17, 20, we have the freewill of man strongly affirmed: μη εἴπῃς ὅτι διὰ κύριον ἀπέστην . . . μη εἴπῃς ὅτι αὐτός με ἐπλάνησεν· οὐ γὰρ χρεῖαν ἔχει ἄνθρωπος ἁμαρτωλοῦ . . . αὐτὸς ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἐποίησεν ἄνθρωπον, καὶ ἀφήκεν αὐτὸν ἐν χειρὶ διαβούλου αὐτοῦ. ἂν θέλῃς, συντηρήσεις ἐντολὰς. . . ἐναντι ἀνθρώπων ἡ ζωὴ καὶ ὁ θάνατος καὶ ὃ ἐὰν εὐδοκήσῃ δοθήσεται αὐτῷ. . . καὶ οὐκ ἐνετείλατο οὐδενὶ ἀσεβεῖν. Cf. also xvii. 6. The doctrine of predestination is absolutely maintained in xxxvi. 10, 12, 13, καὶ ἀνθρώποι πάντες ἀπὸ ἐδάφους καὶ ἐκ γῆς ἐκτίσθη Ἀδάμ· ἐξ αὐτῶν εὐλόγησεν καὶ ἀνύψωσεν . . . ἀπ' αὐτῶν κατηράσατο καὶ ἐταπείνωσεν καὶ ἀνέστρεψεν αὐτοὺς ἀπὸ στάσεως αὐτῶν. ὡς πηλὸς κεραμέως ἐν χειρὶ αὐτοῦ, πᾶσαι αἱ ὁδοὶ αὐτοῦ κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν αὐτοῦ· οὕτως ἄνθρωποι ἐν χειρὶ τοῦ ποιήσαντος αὐτοὺς ἀποδοῦναι αὐτοῖς κατὰ τὴν κρίσιν αὐτοῦ. Cf. also xxiii. 20; xxxix. 20, 21. These two doctrines which are thus separately affirmed in Eccles., are given by Josephus as co-ordinate articles of the Pharisaic creed. Thus in Bell. Jud. ii. 8, 14, he says: Φαρισαῖοι . . . εἰμαρμένην τε καὶ θεῶν προσάπτουσι πάντα καὶ τὸ μὲν πράττειν τὰ δίκαια καὶ μὴ κατὰ τὸ πλεῖστον ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀνθρώποις κείσθαι, βοηθεῖν δὲ εἰς ἕκαστον καὶ τὴν εἰμαρμένην. Ant. xiii. 5, 9: οἱ μὲν οὖν Φαρισαῖοι τινὰ καὶ οὐ πάντα τῆς εἰμαρμένης εἶναι λέγουσιν ἔργον, τινὰ δ' ἐφ' ἑαυτοῖς ὑπάρχειν, συμβαίνειν τε καὶ μὴ γίνεσθαι (Ant. xviii. 1. 3) πράσσεσθαι τε εἰμαρμένην τὰ πάντα ἀξιοῦντες, οὐδὲ τοῦ ἀνθρωπείου τοῦ βουλόμενον τῆς ἐπ' αὐτοῖς ὁρμῆς ἀφαιροῦνται, δοκῆσαν τῷ θεῷ κράσιν γενέσθαι καὶ τῷ ἐκείνης βουλευτηρίῳ καὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων τῷ θελήσαντι προσ-

first sinned and brought untimely death upon all, yet of those who were born from him each one of them has χωρεῖν μετ' ἀρετῆς ἢ κακίας. The same paradoxical creed appears in the Pirke Aboth. iii. 24 (ed. Taylor p. 73): "Everything is foreseen; and freewill is given. And the world is judged by grace: and everything is according to work"; and possibly also in the Pss. Sol. ix. 7 τὰ ἔργα ἡμῶν ἐν ἐκλογῇ καὶ ἐξουσίᾳ τῆς ψυχῆς ἡμῶν τοῦ ποιῆσαι δικαιοσύνην καὶ ἀδικίαν (see Ryle and James's edition, pp. 95, 96).

This co-ordination of fate and freewill as articles of faith was nothing more or less than an attempt on the part of the Pharisees to embody in their creed the two O.T. doctrines of God's omnipotence and man's responsibility. That theoretically such a creed was current may reasonably be concluded from the passages just cited, as well as from the attestation it receives in Pauline teaching in Rom. ix.-xi. (see Sanday and Headlam's Romans, pp. 347-350). Its acceptance, too, would, no doubt, be furthered by the pressure of the rival creeds of the Sadducees and the Essenes, who were the champions, respectively, of freewill and of fate (Joseph. Bell. Jud. ii. 8. 14; Ant. xiii. 5. 9). With the disappearance of Sadduceism, however, the paradoxical character of Pharisaic belief seems to have disappeared also. Henceforth the Rabbinic schools teach mainly man's freedom of the will and limit God's predestinating action to his external lot.

The two doctrines of fate and freewill, though seen to be mutually exclusive, were, as we have already remarked, accepted theoretically as equally imperative by the Pharisees. The only instance where these two doctrines are developed into irreconcilable fulness and results and applied to religious questions in the first century is to be found in St. Paul's teaching (see above). In every other attempt to grapple with these problems a compromise is effected which results either in a vigorous or else in a very attenuated doctrine of freewill. Of this wavering attitude among the Pharisees in the first century we have sufficient evidence. Thus man's freewill is maintained in the Slav. En. xxx. 15: "And I gave him his will, and I showed him the two ways, the light and the darkness . . . that I should know whether he has love for Me or hate"; though in the next verse it is recognised that his freewill is hampered by his incorporation in the body, and his ignorance of its good and evil impulses. But the best evidence in this direction is furnished by the Apocalypse of Baruch and 4 Ezra. From our comparative study hitherto of these two works (see notes on xiv. 7; xxi. 9; xlvi. 42), we should expect that man's freewill and capacity for doing God's will, despite Adam's sin, would be emphasised in the former, and that man's helplessness and practical incapacity for righteousness in consequence of his original defects or Adam's sin would be conspicuous in the latter, and this we do find as a matter of fact. First as to 4 Ezra. In 4 Ezra the bulk of mankind was predestined to destruction (viii. 1-3); for from the beginning there was in man a wicked element (i.e. יצר הרע) called here granum seminis mali (4 Ezra iv. 30): "Quoniam granum seminis mali seminatum est in corde Adam ab initio, et quantum impietatis generavit usque nunc et prepared for his own soul torment to come, and again each one of them has chosen for himself glories to come.

generabit usque cum veniat area"; through Adam's yielding to this evil element a hereditary tendency to sin was created and the cor malignum developed (iii. 21, 22). Cor enim malignum baiolans primus Adam transgressus et victus est, sed et omnes qui ex eo nati sunt. Et facta est permanens infirmitas, et lex in corde populi cum malignitate radicis, et discessit quod bonum est, et mansit malignum. We should observe that baiolans in iii. 21 just cited represents φορέας: for both the Syriac and Ethiopic Versions=cum vestivit. Hence Adam "clothed himself" with a wicked heart by yielding to the evil impulse which was in him when created. Adam was created with two impulses: "the good impulse" (יצר הטוב) implied in the words discessit quod bonum est (iii. 22), and "the evil impulse" already referred to. This subject is further pursued in iii. 25, 26: "Et deliquerunt qui habitabant civitatem, In omnibus facientes sicut fecit Adam et omnes generationes ejus, utebantur enim et ipsi cor malignum." As a result of Adam's transgression, the evil impulse having been developed into the cor malignum, and having thus obtained the mastery over man, the writer of vii. 118 naturally charges Adam with being the cause of the final perdition of mankind: "O tu quid fecisti Adam? si enim tu peccasti, non est factum solius tuus casus sed et nostrum qui ex te advenimus." Naturally in the face of such a hopeless view of man's condition no real doctrine of freewill could be maintained. In fact, in 4 Ezra only sufficient freewill is accorded to man to justify his final condemnation. Cf. 4 Ezra viii. 56, 58-60, "Nam et ipsi accipientes libertatem spreverunt Altissimum et legem ejus contempserunt. . . . Et dixerunt in corde suo non esse deum, et quidem scientes sciunt quoniam moriuntur. . . . Non enim Altissimus voluit hominem disperdi; Sed ipsi qui creati sunt coinquinaverunt nomen ejus qui fecit eos." vii. 72, "Qui ergo commorantes sunt in terra hinc cruciabuntur, quoniam sensum habentes iniquitatem fecerunt et mandata accipientes non servaverunt ea et legem consecuti fraudaverunt eam quam acceperunt." ix. 11, Fastidierunt legem meam cum adhuc erant habentes libertatem.

Turning now to the present Apocalypse, we find in all its sections, even in the gloomiest, B², a view of man's present capacities and future destiny that is optimistic when set side by side with 4 Ezra. Whereas in A³, according to liv. 15, 19, the effects of Adam's sin are limited to physical results; his descendants must die prematurely. On the nature of these physical results in other sections see xxiii. 4, note. As to spiritual results, each man is the Adam of his own soul, and can choose for himself either bliss or torment; he can work out his own salvation and even make God his debtor (see xiv. 7, note). Only in xlviii. 42 is spiritual death traced to Adam.

The view set forth in the text as to man's condition is exactly that which prevails in the Talmud. In fact, Weber's summing up on this question would serve admirably for an exposition of the text: "Der freie Wille auch in Bezug auf das Verhalten gegen Gott ist dem Menschen auch nach dem Fall geblieben. Es

LIV. 16-
18=B².

[16. For assuredly he who believeth will receive reward. 17. But now, as for you, ye wicked that now are, turn ye to destruction, because ye will speedily be visited, in that from time to time ye have rejected the understanding of the Most High. 18. For His works have not taught you, nor has the skill of His creation which is at all times persuaded you.] 19. Adam is gibt eine Erbschuld, aber keine Erbsünde: der Fall Adam's hat dem ganzen Geschlecht den Tod, nicht aber die Sündigkeit im Sinne einer Nothwendigkeit zu sündigen verursacht; die Sünde ist das Ergebnis der Entscheidung jedes Einzelnen, erfahrungsgemäss allgemein, aber an sich auch nach dem Fall nicht schlechthin nothwendig" (Lehren d. Talmud, p. 217).

Only one statement in this citation seems untrustworthy, i.e. Es gibt eine Erbschuld. I can see nothing in Weber's learned work to justify this statement, but everything to show that there was neither hereditary sin nor hereditary guilt. Moreover, on p. 240 this statement is actually made: "Wenn die Sünde und Schuld nicht erblich ist, kann dann die Strafe erblich sein? . . . Diese Antinomie hat die jüdische Theologie durch drei Sätze auszugleichen versucht."

15. Untimely. See note on xxiii. 4. The phrase rendered "untimely" is בְּכֹחַ. It recurs in lvi. 6 and lxxiii. 3.

16-18. These verses are clearly an interpolation for the same reasons as xlviii. 48-50 and lii. 5-7. These three passages seem to have been addressed by Baruch to the people, and to have formed part of one and the same discourse. The original order appears to have been: first, liv. 17, 18, where the wicked are menaced with the final judgment; then xlviii. 48-50, in which the destiny of the wicked is dismissed and that of the righteous described; next, lii. 5-7, where a line of conduct is prescribed to the righteous on the ground of that destiny, and a preparation of their souls for the reward laid up for them; and finally, liv. 16, where the faithful are assured of that reward.

It will be observed (1) that these verses break the sense of the context; (2) that a direct address to the wicked could not occur in a prayer to God.

18. In liv. 14 it is implied that the wicked there described knew the law. This is intelligible from the standpoint of the Jewish belief that the Gentiles were offered the law but refused it. But in this verse no such view is implied. Their knowledge of God could only arise from reflection on His works in nature. The same argument is found in Rom. i. 20. This argument "is as old as the Psalter, Job, and Isaiah (Pss. xix. 1; xciv. 9; cxliii. 5; Isa. xlii. 5; xlv. 18; Job xii. 9; xxvi. 14; xxxvi. 24; Wisdom ii. 23; xiii. 1, 5). It is common to Greek thought as well as Jewish (Arist. De Mundo, 6; Philo, De Praem. et Poen. 7" (Sanday and Headlam, Rom. p. 43).

19. See note on verse 15. The real force of this verse is that a man's guilt and sin are not derived therefore not the cause, save only of his own soul, but each one of us has been the Adam of his own soul. 20. But do Thou, O Lord, expound to me regarding those things which Thou hast revealed to me, and inform me regarding that which I besought Thee. 21. For at the consummation of the world there will be vengeance taken upon those who have done wickedness according to their wickedness, and Thou wilt glorify the faithful according to their faithfulness. 22. For those who are amongst Thine own Thou rulest, and those who sin Thou blottest out from amongst Thine own."

LV. And it came to pass when I had finished speaking the words of this prayer, that I sat there under a tree, that I might rest in the shade of the branches. 2. And I wondered and was astonished, and pondered in my thoughts regarding the multitude of goodness which sinners who are upon the earth from Adam, but are due to his own action. The evil impulse (עַר הָרַע) does not constitute guilt or sin unless man obeys it. As the Talmudists say, it was placed in man to be overcome (Weber, 210).

21. The faithful according to their faith. Faith in this passage is contrasted with unrighteousness (עָוֹן = ἀνομία). Hence we should take it here as equivalent either to "righteousness" or "fidelity to the law." In liv. 16 the verb "believe" may mean "to be faithful." But the context is doubtful. Elsewhere in Baruch faith = "belief." Thus in lix. 2 those who "believe" are opposed to those who "deny"; in xlii. 2 to those who "despise." This is the meaning also in liv. 5; lvii. 2; lxxxiii. 8. In 4 Ezra vi. 5 faith seems to mean "righteousness," the result of fidelity to the law (as in Apoc. Bar. liv. 21); for the righteous are those qui fidem thesaurizaverunt; possibly also in v. 1; vi. 28; it means fidelity to the law in vii. 34, as incredulitas in vii. 114 = "disloyalty." In ix. 7, 8; xiii. 23, faith and works are combined and appear nearly synonymous. For a most instructive note on the various meanings of "faith," see Sanday and Headlam's Romans, pp. 31-34.

Faith in the Talmud is in one of its aspects regarded as a work which as the fulfilment of the law produces merit. In the Beresh. rabba, lxxiv. the merit arising from faith and the merit arising from the law are co-ordinated. See Weber, pp. 292, 295, 298.

have rejected, and regarding the great torment which they have despised, though they knew that they should be tormented because of the sin they had committed. 3. And when I was pondering on these things and the like, lo ! the angel Ramiel who presides over true visions was sent to me, and he said unto me : 4. " Why does thy heart trouble thee, Baruch, and why does thy thought disturb thee ? 5. For if by the hear-say which thou hast only heard of judgment thou art so moved, what (wilt thou be) when thou shalt see it manifestly with thine eyes ? 6. And if with the expectation wherewith thou dost expect the day of the Mighty One thou art so overcome, what (wilt thou be) when thou shalt come to its advent ? 7. And, if at the word of the announcement of the torment of those who have done foolishly thou art so wholly distraught, how much more when the event will reveal marvellous things ? 8. And if thou hast heard tidings of the good and evil things which are then coming and art grieved, what (wilt thou be) when thou shalt behold what the majesty will reveal, which will convict these and cause those to rejoice ?

LV. 2. Despised, though they knew. See xv. 6, note ; xlviii. 40, note.

3. Ramiel. Cf. lxiii. 6 ; this angel is mentioned in the Eth. En. xx. 7 (Greek) 'Ρεμειήλ ὁ εἰς τῶν ἀγίων ἀγγέλων δὲ ἔταξεν ὁ Θεὸς ἐπὶ τῶν ἀνισταμένων : also in 4 Ezra iv. 36, where the Syriac Version = " And the angel Ramiel answered and said unto them " (i.e. the righteous souls in the soul-treasuries) ; for " Ramiel " the Latin gives Hieremihel. Finally, in Or. Sibyl. ii. 215-217, Ramiel is one of the five angels appointed by God to bring the souls of men to judgment : 'Αρακιήλ 'Ραμυήλ Οὐριήλ Σαμυήλ 'Αζαήλ τε . . . ἀνθρώπων ψυχὰς . . . ἐς κελσιν ἀξουσιν πάσας. The function of Ramiel in the text agrees to some extent with that assigned to him in 4 Ezra.

5. And art so moved. I have followed Ceriani's suggestion here in supplying ο before ׀כס.

LVI. "Nevertheless, because thou hast besought the Most High to reveal to thee the interpretation of the vision which thou hast seen, I have been sent to say to thee. 2. And the Mighty One hath assuredly made known to thee the methods of the times that have passed, and of those that are destined to pass in His world from the beginning of its creations even unto its consummation, of those things which (are) deceit and of those which (are) in truth. 3. For as thou didst see a great cloud which ascended from the sea, and went and covered the earth, this is the duration of the world (= al'ōv) which the Mighty One made when He took counsel to make the world. 4. And it came to pass when the word had gone forth from His presence, that the duration of the world had come into being in a small degree, and was established according to the multitude of the intelligence of Him who sent it. 5. And as thou didst previously see on the summit of the cloud black waters which descended previously on the earth, this is the transgression wherewith Adam the first man transgressed. 6. For owing to his transgression untimely death came into being, and grief was named LVI. 2. And the Mighty. We should expect That the Mighty.

3. A great cloud . . . this is the duration of the world. This cloud is divided into thirteen parts; the first twelve parts of alternate black and bright waters (see liii. 5, 6), and the thirteenth of the blackest waters of all (see liii. 7). These symbolise the thirteen periods into which the history of the world is divided prior to the Messiah's kingdom. This kingdom is foreshadowed by the lightning that shone on the extremity or summit of the cloud.

4. Was established. I have followed Ceriani here in reading $\text{עזלל} \text{ז}$ instead of $\text{עזל} \text{ז}$.

6. Owing to his transgression. The text literally = "when he transgressed."

Untimely. See liv. 15, note.

and anguish was prepared, and pain was created, and trouble perfected, and boasting began to be established, and Sheol to demand that it should be renewed in blood, and the begetting of children was brought about, and the passion of parents produced, and the greatness of humanity was humiliated, and goodness languished. 7. What therefore can be blacker or darker than these things? 8. This is the beginning of the black waters which thou hast seen. 9. And from these black (waters) again were black derived, and the darkness of darkness produced. 10. For he was a danger to his own soul: even to the angels was he a danger. 11. For, moreover, at that time when he was created, they enjoyed liberty. 12. And some of them descended, and mingled with women. 13. And then those who did so were tormented in chains. 14. But the rest of the multitude of the angels, of which there is no number, restrained themselves. 15. And those who dwelt on the earth perished together (with them) through the waters of the deluge. 16. These are the black first waters.

Sheol to demand, etc. For this hunger of Sheol, cf. Prov. xxvii. 20; Isa. v. 14. On Sheol, see note on xi. 6.

10. He was a danger, etc. This must mean that man's physical nature was a danger to his spiritual; for it was the physical side of man that proved a danger to the angels who fell through lust. Man's physical nature was dangerous; for in it resided the "evil impulse" (see note on liv. 15, 19).

11-13. They enjoyed liberty, i.e. the angels. This liberty, according to the ancient myth, they abused by taking to themselves wives of the daughters of men (see Eth. En. vi. 2, note; Slav. En. xviii. 4-6; Jubilees v. 1-11; x. 1-13).

14. No number. The MS. omits the negative, but wrongly, as Ceriani has already observed (cf. xxi. 6; lix. 11). For a still more obvious loss of the negative see li. 16, though strangely enough it has not hitherto been remarked.

LVII. "And after these (waters) thou didst see bright waters: this is the fount of Abraham, also his generations and advent of his son, and of his son's son, and of those like them. 2. Because at that time the unwritten law was named amongst them, and the works of the commandments were then fulfilled, and belief in the coming judgment was then generated, and hope of the world that was to be renewed was then built up, and the promise of the life that should come hereafter was implanted. 3. These are the bright waters, which thou hast seen.

LVIII. "And the black third waters which thou

LVII. 1. The first bright period embraces human history from the time of Abraham to that of the twelve sons of Jacob and their righteous contemporaries or immediate successors.

2. The unwritten law. This statement proceeds from the same spirit which animates the entire Book of Jubilees, and which seeks to trace traditionalism and its observances to the times of the patriarchs. In later Judaism there were manifold attempts of this nature. Thus in the Avoda-sara, 36b, according to Gen. xxxviii. 24, impurity was forbidden by the Rabbinic tribunal of Shem; in the Beresh. rabba, xciv., Shem and Eber are said to have handed on certain traditions to Jacob; in the Joma, 28b, Abraham is said to have observed the whole Torah and the traditional or unwritten law. To Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob the three daily times of prayer are traced back in the Berachoth, 26b. The above statements are drawn from Herzfeld, Geschichte Israels, p. 226. For a detailed description of the traditional law from the earliest times down to Hillel, see op. cit. iii. 226-263; Weber, 255.

Works of the commandments were then fulfilled. See preceding note.

Belief. See note on liv. 21.

Hope of the world to be renewed. See note on xxxii. 6. In the earlier Messiah-Apocalypses in this book, i.e. in A¹ and A², the renewal of the world is to take place at the close of the Messianic kingdom, for in these writings this kingdom belongs to this world $\acute{o} \alpha\lambda\acute{\omega}\nu \omicron\upsilon\tau\omicron\varsigma$ (Matt. xii. 32) = הָעוֹלָם הַזֶּה ; whereas in A³ with which we are at present dealing it is said (lxxiv. 2) to form the close of the present world and the beginning of the next (i.e. $\acute{o} \alpha\lambda\acute{\omega}\nu \acute{o} \mu\acute{\epsilon}\lambda\lambda\omega\upsilon\varsigma$ or $\acute{o} \epsilon\rho\chi\acute{o}\mu\epsilon\nu\omicron\varsigma$ = $\text{סָבִיב הָעוֹלָם הַבָּא}$). If we are to take (lxxiv. 2) literally, then the renewal of the world is to take place during the Messiah's reign. But this is unlikely. In 4 Ezra vii. 28-30; xii. 32-34, the Messiah's kingdom belongs to this world. In xiii. 32-50 to the next, if xiii. 36 is genuine. In the older literature the Messianic kingdom belongs to the next world (cf. Eth. En. xxxvii.-lxx.)

hast seen, these are the mingling of all sins, which the nations afterwards wrought after the death of those righteous men, and the wickedness of the land of Egypt, wherein they did wickedly in the service wherewith they made their sons to serve. 2. Nevertheless, these also perished at last.

LIX. "And the bright fourth waters which thou hast seen are the advent of Moses and Aaron and Miriam and Joshua the son of Nun and Caleb and of all those like them. 2. For at that time the lamp of the eternal law shone on all those who sat in darkness, which announced to them that believe the promise of their reward, and to them that deny, the torment of fire which is reserved for them. 3. But also the heavens at that time were shaken from their place, and those who were under the throne of the Mighty One were perturbed, when He was taking Moses unto Himself. 4. For He showed him many admonitions together with the principles of the laws and the consummation of time, as also to thee, and likewise the pattern of Zion and its measures, which was to be LVIII. 1. The service where-with they made their sons to serve.

Exod. i. 14 is here closely followed :

כל-עבדתם אשר-עבדו בהם. As the LXX. has here πάντα τὰ ἔργα ὧν καταδουλοῦντο αὐτούς, it is clear that the original writer had the Hebrew text and not the LXX. before him.

LIX. 2. The eternal law. Cf. xvii. 6. See xv. 5, note.

The lamp . . . darkness—a Rabbinic application of Isa. ix. 2. Isa. ix. 2 was a favourite passage in N.T. times (cf. Matt. iv. 16 ; Luke i. 79).

That believe. See liv. 21, note.

Torment of fire. Cf. xlv. 15 ; xlviii. 39 ; lxxxv. 13. It will be observed that these passages suggest a material fire in which the wicked are to be tormented after the resurrection, i.e. after they have resumed their bodies.

4. The pattern of Zion and its measures. Cf. Exod. xxv. 40 ; xxvi. 30 ; Heb. viii. 5.

Which was to be made, etc. A very slight change in the Syriac would give a good text : "In the made in the pattern of the sanctuary of the present time. 5. But then also He showed to him the measures of the fire, also the depths of the abyss, and the weight of the winds, and the number of the drops of rain. 6. And the suppression of anger, and the multitude of long-suffering, and the truth of judgment. 7. And the root of wisdom, and the riches of understanding, and the fount of knowledge. 8. And the height of the air, and the greatness of Paradise, and pattern of which the sanctuary of the present time was to be made."

5-11. It is of importance to observe, with a view to determining the date of A³, that in these verses we have a transference of Enoch's functions to Moses, and that the revelations hitherto attributed to Enoch are here for the first time assigned to Moses. It is noteworthy that another of Enoch's chief functions is ascribed to Ezra in 4 Ezra xiv. 50. This opposition to Enoch is unswervingly pursued in the Talmud. Thus, whereas in pre-Christian Judaism, Enoch, and Enoch only, is described as the scribe of the deeds of men (Jub. iv. 23; x. 17; Slav. En. xl. 13; liii. 2; lxiv. 5), this office is assigned to various Jewish heroes in later Judaism. Thus according to Ruth rabba, 33a, it is Elijah; according to Esther rabba, 86d, it is the angels; according to Talkut Shim., Beresh. 141, it was formerly the prophets, but now it is only Elijah and the Messiah (Weber, 272). We have already drawn attention to this phenomenon in the note on xiii. 3, and have there pointed out that this hostility to Enoch is the outcome of Jewish hostility to Christianity as a whole; for as we know from manifold evidence the writings of Enoch enjoyed a singular influence on early Christianity. This aggressive attitude of Judaism could hardly have originated before the open rupture of Christianity with the Synagogue and the Pauline controversy. Hence this writing was not earlier than A.D. 50. From lxviii. 5 it is clear that it is prior to A.D. 70. Therefore the limits of its composition are A.D. 50-70.

5. The depths of the abyss. A frequent subject in both books of Enoch: Eth. En. xviii. 11; xxi. 7-10, etc.; Slav. En. xxviii. 3.

The weight of the winds. The weighing of the winds is described in the Slav. En. xl. 11; cf. also Eth. xli. 4.

The number of the drops of rain. Slav. En. xlvii. 5; Ecclus. i. 2.

7. Root of wisdom. See li. 3, note.

Riches of understanding. lxi. 4.

The fount of knowledge. Bar. iii. 12; 4 Ezra xiv. 47.

8. The height of the air. Slav. En. xl. 12: "I have written down the height from the earth to the seventh heaven."

The greatness of Paradise. The measures of Paradise are taken by the angels for Enoch. Cf. Eth. En. lxi. 1-4; lxx. 3, 4.

the consummation of the ages, and the beginning of the day of judgment. 9. And the number of the offerings, and the earths which have not yet come. 10. And the mouth of Gehenna, and the station of vengeance, and the place of faith, and the region of hope. 11. And the likeness of future torment, and the multitude of innumerable angels, and the powers of the flames, and the splendour of the lightnings, and the voice of the thunders, and the orders of the chiefs of the angels, and the treasures of light, and the changes of the times, and the investigations of the law. 12. These are the bright fourth waters which thou hast seen.

LX. "And the black fifth waters which thou hast

The consummation of the ages. This subject is discussed in every section of the Enochic literature.

The beginning of the day of judgment. This date is fixed according to a definite reckoning in the Slav. En. xxxii. 2-xxxiii. 2; lxv. 7-10; according to certain indefinite measures in Eth. En. lxxxiii.-xc.; xci.-civ.

10. The mouth of Gehenna. Eth. En. xxvii. 2, 3; liv.; lxii. 12; xc. 26, 27.

The station of vengeance. Many places of vengeance are described in the two books of Enoch: Eth. En. xviii. 12-16; xix.; xxi.; xxii. 10-13; liv. 1-6; xc. 24-27; Slav. En. x.; xl. 12.

The place of faith, and the region of hope. These seem to be the places of intermediate bliss. Cf. Eth. En. xxii. 5-9.

11. The likeness of future torment. Slav. xl. 12.

The multitude of innumerable angels. See lvi. 14, note. Of early Jewish literature, it is only in Enoch that the angels are described at length.

The splendour of the lightnings, and the voice of the thunders. Eth. En. xli. 3; xliii. 1, 2; xlv.; lix.; lx. 13-15; Slav. En. xl. 9.

The orders of the chiefs of the angels. I have here read the plural  instead of the singular . Ceriani renders the text: "ordines principatus angelorum." The Jews believed in ten orders of angels, the Christians in nine. These orders are mentioned and in part enumerated in the Slav. En. xx. 1, 3 (see note); cf. also Eth. lxi. 10; lxxi. 7-9.

The treasures of light. This expression is unexampled.

The changes of the times, i.e. the seasons. Slav. En. xiii. 5; xl. 6; Eth. En. lxxxii. 11-20.

seen raining are the works which the Amorites wrought, and the spells of their incantations which they wrought, and the wickedness of their mysteries, and the mingling of their pollution. 2. But even Israel was then polluted by sins in the days of the judges, though they saw many signs which were from Him who made them.

LXI. "And the bright sixth waters which thou didst see, this is the time in which David and Solomon were born. 2. And there was at that time the building of Zion, and the dedication of the sanctuary, and the shedding of much blood of the nations that sinned then, and many offerings which were offered then in the dedication of the sanctuary. 3. And peace and tranquillity existed at that time. 4. And wisdom was heard in the assembly, and the riches of understanding were magnified in the congregations. 5. And the holy festivals were fulfilled in goodness and in much joy. 6. And the judgment of the rulers was then seen to be without guile, and the righteousness of the precepts of the Mighty One was accomplished with truth. 7. And because the land was then beloved at that time, and because its inhabitants sinned not, it was glorified beyond all lands, and the city Zion ruled then over all lands and regions. 8. These are the bright waters which thou hast seen.

LX. 1. Mingling of their pollution. Cf. Pss. Sol. ii. 14, ἐν φυρμῶ ἀναμύξεως.

Ceriani in correcting וְיִשְׁמַח (= "of judgment") into וְיִשְׁמַח.

LXI. 4. Riches of understanding. I here follow lix. 7.

perish, for the multitude also of the nations which were with him. 3. When, moreover, Hezekiah the king heard those things which the king of Assyria was devising, (i.e.) to come and seize him and destroy his people, the two and a half tribes which remained: nay, more he wished to overthrow Zion also: then Hezekiah trusted in his works, and had hope in his righteousness, and spake with the Mighty One and said: 4. 'Behold, for lo! Sennacherib is prepared to destroy us, and he will be boastful and uplifted when he has destroyed Zion.' 5. And the Mighty One heard him, for Hezekiah was wise, and He had respect unto his prayer, because he was righteous. 6. And thereupon the Mighty One commanded Ramiel His angel who speaks with thee. 7. And I went forth and destroyed their multitude, the number of whose chiefs only was a hundred and eighty-five

3. Hezekiah trusted in his works. See xiv. 7, note. Observe the play on Hezekiah's name in these words when retranslated into Hebrew, חוקיה התחוק על. There appears to have been one also in Ecclus. xlviii. 22, ἐποίησεν γὰρ Ἐξεκίας . . . καὶ ἐνίσχυσεν. This conjecture as to the probable text in Ecclus. was made in March. It is now (June 20) confirmed by Dr. Neubauer's discovery last week in the Bodley of the Hebrew text of Ecclus. xl. 1. To his kindness and that of Mr. Cowley I owe the following passages where this play on the name occurs twice:—Ecclus. xlviii. 17, יחוקיהו חוק עירו = Ἐξεκίας ὡχύρωσεν τὴν πόλιν αὐτοῦ, and xlviii. 22, (כי עשה יחוקיהו את הטוב (וי)תחוק

רוך = ἐποίησεν γὰρ Ἐξεκίας τὸ ἄρεστον κυρίῳ, καὶ ἐνίσχυσεν ἐν ὁδοῖς Δαυὶδ.

4. Lo, Sennacherib is prepared to destroy us. There was a play here on the name Sennacherib in the Hebrew, והנה סנחריב עתיד להחריב אותנו.

5. In Sifre, 12b, and Jalkut Shim., Beresh. 27, it is taught that men are heard by God on the ground either of their own merit or on that of others (Weber, 284, 285).

7. In 2 Kings xix. 35; Isa. xxxvii. 36, 185,000 is the complete number of the slain. In 2 Chron. xxxii. 21, only the slaughter of the chiefs is mentioned. From these two accounts the writer has worked up the present.

thousand, and each one of them had an equal number (at his command). 8. And at that time I burned their bodies within, but their raiment and arms I preserved outwardly, in order that the still more wonderful deeds of the Mighty One might appear, and that thereby His name might be spoken of throughout the whole earth. 9. Moreover, Zion was saved and Jerusalem delivered: Israel also was freed from tribulation. 10. And all those who were in the holy land rejoiced, and the name of the Mighty One was glorified so that it was spoken of. 11. These are the bright waters which thou hast seen.

LXIV. "And the black ninth waters which thou hast seen, this is all the wickedness which was in the days of Manasseh the son of Hezekiah. 2. For he wrought much impiety, and he slew the righteous, and he wrested judgment, and he shed the blood of the innocent, and wedded women he violently polluted, and he overturned the altars, and destroyed their offerings, and drove forth the priests lest they should minister in the sanctuary. 3. And he made an image with five faces: four of them looked to the LXIV. 3. He made an image with five faces: four of, etc. This is a very peculiar version of 2 Chron. xxxiii. 7. וַיַּעַשׂ אֱתֹנֶסֶת הַסֵּמֶל—"he set the graven image of the idol." The LXX. implies the Hebrew just given. The Syriac, however, exhibits an early gloss which prepares the way for our text. Thus it gives מַסַּבִּים דְּאַרְבַּע; וְאֶחָד

אַרְבַּע = "and he set the four-fronted image." The Arabic goes still further; it="and he set a statue having four heads with four faces." But the form of the tradition nearest to the text is found in the Talmud, Sanh. 103b: "At first he made for it (the idol) one face and in the end he made for it four faces, that the Shechinah might see and be provoked."

four winds, and the fifth on the summit of the image as an adversary of the zeal of the Mighty One. 4. And then wrath went forth from the presence of the Mighty One to the intent that Zion should be rooted out, as also it befell in your days. 5. But also against the two tribes and a half went forth a decree that they should also be led away captive, as thou hast now seen. 6. And to such a degree did the impiety of Manasseh increase, that it removed the praise of the Most High from the sanctuary. 7. On this account Manasseh was at that time named 'the impious,' and finally his abode was in the fire. 8. For though his prayer was heard with the Most High, finally, when he was cast into the brazen horse and the brazen horse was melted, it served as a sign unto him

6. Removed the praise of the Most High from the sanctuary. This may be explained by the statement in Sanh. 103b, that Manasseh erased the divine name and overturned the altar.

7. This verse runs counter to 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11-19, where it is clearly implied that Manasseh was really forgiven on his repentance. This writer declares, on the other hand, that Manasseh's experience in the brazen horse was only a foretaste of his future sufferings in hell.

In the fire. See xliv. 15, note.

8. His prayer. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 19; The Prayer of Manasseh in the Apocrypha.

Cast into the brazen horse and the brazen horse was melted. This tradition appears in the Targum of Chronicles after 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11: "And the Chaldeans made a copper mule and pierced it all over with little holes, and shut him up therein and kindled fire all around him. . . .

And he turned and prayed before the Lord his God. . . . And He shook the world with His word, and the mule burst asunder and he went forth therefrom." Traces of this tradition are also found in the Apostolic Constitutions ii. 22: καὶ ἐπήκουσε τῆς φωνῆς αὐτοῦ κύριος . . . καὶ ἐγένετο περὶ αὐτὸν φλόξ πυρὸς καὶ ἐτάκhsαν πάντα τὰ περὶ αὐτὸν σίδηρα. Also in Anastasius on Ps. vi. (Canisius, Thesaur. Monum. iii. 112) φασὶ οἱ ἀρχαῖοι τῶν ιστοριογράφων, ὅτι ἀπενεχθεὶς Μανασσῆς κατεκλείσθη εἰς ῥώδιον χαλκοῦν ἀπὸ βασιλέως Περσῶν καὶ ἔσω ὢν ἐν τοιοῦτῳ ζωδίῳ προσηύξατο μετὰ δακρύων. In Suidas (see Μανασσῆς): αἰχμάλωτος ἀπήχθη καὶ ἐς τὸ χαλκοῦν ἄγαλμα καθείρχθη . . . ἐδεήθη τοῦ κυρίου . . . καὶ τὸ μὲν ἄγαλμα θεία δυνάμει διεβράγη.

Served as a sign. See note on ver. 7.

at the time. 9. For he did not live perfectly, for he was not worthy—but that thenceforward he might know by whom finally he should be tormented. 10. For he who is able to benefit is also able to torment.

LXV. "Thus, moreover, did Manasseh act impiously, and thought that in his time the Mighty One would not inquire into these things. 2. These are the black ninth waters which thou hast seen.

LXVI. "And the bright tenth waters which thou hast seen: this is the purity of the generations of Josiah king of Judah, who was the only one at that time who submitted himself to the Mighty One with all his heart and with all his soul. 2. And he cleansed the land from idols, and hallowed all the vessels which had been polluted, and restored the offerings to the altar, and raised the horn of the holy, and exalted the righteous, and glorified all that were wise in understanding, and brought back the priests to their ministry, and destroyed and removed the magicians and enchanters and fortune-tellers from the land. 3. And not only did he slay the impious that were living, but they also took from the sepulchres 9. Text is corrupt.

LXVI. 1. The writer thus appears to have believed that though Manasseh prayed, yet he did not really repent. This view is found in Sanh. 101: "Our Rabbis have taught: there are three who came with cunning (before God): they are Cain, Esau, and Manasseh. . . . Manasseh at first called upon many gods, and at last upon the God of his fathers" [Rashi: "He said:

'If Thou save me not, what doth it profit me that I have called on Thee, more than the other gods?'] (quoted by Ball in his Comm. on The Prayer of Manasses). In Sanh. x. three kings are said to have no part in the future life, i.e. Jeroboam, Ahab, and Manasseh. Yet in the Debarim rabba, ii., salvation is ultimately said to be in store for Manasseh (Weber, 328).

the bones of the dead and burned them with fire. 4. [And the festivals and the sabbaths he established in their sanctity], and their polluted ones he burnt in the fire, and the lying prophets which deceived the people, these also he burnt in the fire, and the people who listened to them when they were living, he cast them into the brook Cedron, and heaped stones upon them. 5. And he was zealous with the zeal of the Mighty One with all his soul, and he alone was firm in the law at that time, so that he left none that was uncircumcised, or that wrought impiety in all the land, all the days of his life. 6. This, moreover, is he that shall receive an eternal reward, and he shall be glorified with the Mighty One beyond many at a later time. 7. For on his account and on account of those who are like him were the inestimable glories, of which thou wast told before, created and prepared. 8. These are the bright waters which thou hast seen.

LXVII. "And the black eleventh waters which thou hast seen: this is the calamity which is now befalling Zion. 2. Dost thou think that there is no anguish to the angels in the presence of the Mighty One, that Zion was so delivered up, and that lo! the Gentiles boast in their hearts, and assemble before their idols and say: 'She is trodden

4. The words which I have bracketed are either interpolated or misplaced. It would perhaps be best to read them after "to their ministry" in verse 2. In that case for "festival" we should read "festivals."

7. See note on xiv. 18.
LXVII. 2. Boast. Cf. v. 1; vii. 1; lxxx. 3. Assemble. The text 𐤁𐤏𐤓 = "crowds" is corrupt. I have emended it into 𐤁𐤏𐤓𐤕 = "assemble."

down who oftentimes trod down, and she has been reduced to servitude who reduced (others)?' 3. Dost thou think that in these things the Most High rejoices, or that His name is glorified? 4. But how will it serve towards His righteous judgment? 5. Yet after these things shall those that are dispersed among the Gentiles be taken hold of by tribulation, and in shame shall they dwell in every place. 6. Because so far as Zion is delivered up and Jerusalem laid waste, and idols prosper in the cities of the Gentiles, and the vapour of the smoke of the incense of righteousness which is by the law is extinguished in Zion and in the region of Zion, lo! in every place there is the smoke of impiety. 7. But the king of Babylon will arise who has now destroyed Zion, and he will boast over the people, and he will speak great things in his heart in the presence of the Most High. 8. But

5. "The dispersed" here seem to be the nine and a half tribes.

6-7. With the destruction of Jerusalem, godlessness is triumphant everywhere. In all the references in A³ to this destruction of Jerusalem, i.e. in lxiv. 4; lxvii. 2, 6, 7, there is no trace of consciousness in the mind of the writer that there was any divine interposition to save the sacred vessels of the temple and to destroy Zion by the agency of angels after the manner described in B¹, i.e. in vi. 4-10; lxxx. 1-3. If, further, we remark that the declared object of this interposition was to prevent the enemies of Zion boasting before their idols that they had laid it waste and burnt the temple (vii. 1; cf. v. 1; lxxx. 3), and if at the same time we observe that the writer of A³ represents the angel Ramiel as admitting that the Gentiles are boasting before their idols of their destruction of Zion (lxvii. 2), and that the king of Babylon makes the same vaunt (lxvii. 7), we can with tolerable certainty conclude that the ideas in B¹, i.e. in v. 1; vi. 4-vii. 1; lxxx. 1-3, were either unknown to him or else unacknowledged. These ideas seem foreign to B² also. This writer would have sympathised with the remonstrance in 4 Ezra v. 30: "Et si odiens odisti populum tuum, tuis manibus debet castigari." In the Assumpt. Mosis (iii. 2) the capture of the sacred vessels by Nebuchadnezzar is acknowledged.

Righteousness which is by the law. See xv. 5, note.

he also shall fall at last. 9. These are the black waters.

LXVIII. "And the bright twelfth waters which thou hast seen: this is the word. 2. For after these things a time will come when thy people shall fall into distress, so that they shall all run the risk of perishing together. 3. Nevertheless, they will be saved, and their enemies will fall in their presence. 4. And they will have in (due) time much joy. 5. And at that time after a little interval Zion will again be builded, and its offerings will again be restored, and the priests will return to their ministry, and again the Gentiles will come to glorify it. 6. Nevertheless, not fully as in the beginning. 7. But it will come to pass after these things that there will be the fall of many nations. 8. These are the bright waters which thou hast seen.

LXIX. "For the last waters which thou hast seen which were darker than all that were before them, those which were after the twelfth number, which were collected together, belong to the whole world. 2. For the Most High made division from the beginning, because He alone knows what will befall. 3.

LXVIII. 2, 3. The danger the Jews encountered according to the book of Esther, and their subsequent triumph over their enemies. We have here the second earliest allusion to this O. T. book. The earliest is in 2 Macc. xv. 36.

5. The rebuilding of the temple (535-515).

6. On the lower estimation in which the second temple was held see Mal. i.-ii.; Eth. Eu. lxxxix. 73, 74; Assumpt. Mos. iv. 8. This temple, therefore, was standing when chapters liii.-lxxiv. were written.

LXIX. 1. Last. I have here adopted Ceriani's suggestion and read [𐤋𐤕𐤍] instead of [𐤋𐤕𐤍] = "other."

The last waters, etc. See liii. 7.

For as to the enormities of the impieties which should be wrought before Him, He foresaw six kinds of them. 4. And of the good works of the righteous which should be accomplished before Him, He foresaw six kinds of them, beyond those which He should work at the consummation of the age. 5. On this account there were not black waters with black, nor bright with bright; for it is the consummation.

LXX. "Hear therefore the interpretation of the last black waters which are to come [after the black]: this is the word. 2. Behold! the days come, and it will be when the time of the age has ripened, and the harvest of its evil and good seeds has come, that the Mighty One will bring upon the earth and its inhabitants and upon its rulers perturbation of spirit and stupor of heart. 3. And they will hate one another, and provoke one another to fight, and the mean will rule over the honourable, and those of low degree will be extolled above the famous. 4. And the many will be delivered into the hands of the few, and those who are nothing will rule over the strong, and the poor will have abundance beyond the rich, and the impious

3, 4. This division of the periods of the world into six good and six evil recalls Ecclus. xlii. 24 πάντα διςσά ἐν κατέναντι τοῦ ἐνός (cf. also xxxiii. 15).

4. Foresaw. So Ceriani rightly emends from "foresees"—merely a change of pointing.

Beyond those which, etc. These woes—the travail pains of the Messiah—are developed at length in lxx.-lxxii. (see liii. 7; lxix. 1).

LXX. 1. I have bracketed the words "after the black" as interpolated. They misrepresent the scheme of the writer; for the "last black waters" come after the bright twelfth waters in lxviii.

2. Its inhabitants. See xxv. 2, note. Stupor of heart. Cf. xxv. 2.

3-10. With this notable description of the last woes, cf. xxv. 2-4; xxvii.; xlviii. 31-39; 4 Ezra v. 1-12; vi. 20-24; ix. 1-9; xiii. 29-31 (see xxvii. 1, note).

3. Cf. xlviii. 37; Jubilees xxiii. 19; 4 Ezra vi. 24.

will exalt themselves above the heroic. 5. And the wise will be silent, and the foolish will speak, neither will the thought of men be then confirmed, nor the counsel of the mighty, nor will the hope of those who hope be confirmed. 6. Moreover, it will be when those things which were predicted have come to pass, that confusion will fall upon all men, and some of them will fall in battle, and some of them will perish in anguish, and some of them will be destroyed by their own. 7. Then the Most High will reveal to those peoples whom He has prepared before, and they will come and make war with the leaders that shall then be left. 8. And it will come to pass that whosoever gets safe out of the war will die in the earthquake, and whosoever gets safe out of the earthquake will be burned by the fire, and whosoever gets safe out of the fire will be destroyed by famine. [9. And it will come to pass that whosoever of the victors and

5. Cf. xlvi. 33, 36; 4 Ezra v. 9-11.

The mighty. The text which here reads לְאֵלִים = "the Mighty One," is wrong. We must read the plural לְאֵלִים = "the mighty." In lxxiv. 1 we must change the plural into the singular.

The hope of those who hope, etc. Cf. 4 Ezra v. 12.

6. Destroyed, etc. Cf. Mic. vii. 6; Matt. x. 35, 36; Luke xii. 53. The Syriac text = "will be hindered" is corrupt; for the context requires a strong expression. The corruption is traceable to the Hebrew. Thus "will be hindered" = כָּלְלוּ, which would be the usual LXX. rendering of כָּלְלוּ. That כָּלְלוּ is a corruption of כָּלְלוּ = "will be destroyed" is clear from the fact that these two verbs are often confused in Hebrew, combined with the further fact that כָּלְלוּ = "will be destroyed" gives the exact sense we require.

7. Whom He has prepared before. Are these the hosts of Gog and Magog? if text in verse 9 is genuine.

8. In the earthquake. Cf. xxvii. 7; 4 Ezra ix. 3.

The fire. Cf. xxvii. 10; 4 Ezra, v. 8.

Will be destroyed. I have here followed Ceriani's emendation of וְיִבְנוּ = "he will add," into וְיִבְנוּ.

Famine. Cf. xxvii. 6.

9. I have with some doubt bracketed this verse as an inter-the vanquished gets safe out of and escapes all these things aforesaid will be delivered into the hands of My servant Messiah.] 10. For all the earth will devour its inhabitants.

LXXI. "And the holy land will have mercy on its own, and it will protect its inhabitants at that time. 2. This is the vision which thou hast seen, and this is the interpretation. 3. For I have come to tell thee these things, because thy prayer has been heard with the Most High.

LXXII. "Hear now also regarding the bright lighting which is to come at the consummation after these black (waters): this is the word. 2. After the signs have come, of which thou wast told before, when the polation. The appearance of the Messiah is premature. His advent does not really take place till lxxii. 2. Again verse 10 is the natural sequel to verse 8. Further, the extermination of the Gentiles is here implied, but only their partial destruction in lxxii. 4-6. Finally, since the Messiah is the defender of the righteous, lxxi. 1 is rather inappropriate. But lxxi. 1 is fitting if the Messiah has not yet come.

LXXI. See notes on xxix. 2. Observe that whereas God protects the inhabitants of Palestine in xxix. 2, and the Messiah protects them in xl. 2, it is the land that protects them here.

2. These words which should not occur till the end of the interpretation show that the text is dislocated. This will be obvious on other grounds as we proceed.

3. Cf. liv. 1.

LXXII. 1. The bright lightning = כִּי־נֹרָא. So I have emended by means of liii. 8 the impossible text כִּי־נֹרָא = "the bright waters." It will be remembered that in the vision in liii. the last blackest waters (liii. 7) were not succeeded by bright waters, but by the lightning which illuminated and healed the earth and ruled over it (liii. 8-11). The lightning thus symbolised the Messiah. But in the interpretation of the close of the vision, the lightning is not even mentioned according to the present text, but in its place bright waters are spoken of, though in the vision in liii. none such are seen and none such contemplated throughout the entire interpretation up to the present chapter. The scheme of the writer of A³ was as we have seen above: twelve periods evil and good alternately, symbolised by black and bright waters respectively, followed by a period of woes—the blackest waters; and finally, the Messiah's kingdom which was prefigured by the lightning. The same emendation must be made in lxxiv. 4.

nations become turbulent, and the time of My Messiah is come, He will both summon all the nations, and some of them He will spare, and some of them He will slay. 3. These things therefore will come upon the nations which are to be spared by Him. 4. Every nation which knows not Israel, and has not trodden down the seed of Jacob, shall indeed be spared. 5. And this because some out of every nation will be subjected to thy people. 6. But all those who have ruled over you, or have known you, shall be given up to the sword.

LXXIII. "And it will come to pass, when He has brought low everything that is in the world, and has sat down in peace for the age on the throne of His kingdom, that joy will then be revealed, and rest appear. 2. And then healing will descend in dew, and disease will withdraw, and anxiety and anguish

Throughout lxxii. 1 the plurals are changed into the singular to agree with the singular subject.

4-6. The Messiah was to extend His dominion over the Gentiles (Ps. lxxii. 11, 17; Isa. xiv. 2; lxi. 12, 19-21; Zech. xiv.; Eth. En. xc. 30; Pss. Sol. xvii. 32 καὶ ἔξει λαοὺς ἐθνῶν δουλεύειν αὐτῷ). But in the first century B.C. to which the Pss. Sol. belong, a harsher view of the destiny of the Gentiles began to prevail. In Eth. En. xxxvii.-lxx. and Assumpt. Mos. x. it seems to be that of annihilation; it is undoubtedly so in 4 Ezra xiii. 37, 38, 49, and all but universally in later Judaism; cf. Weber, 364-369, 376. A middle line is pursued in the text.

The Messiah here, as in xxxix. 7-11.; 4 Ezra xii. 32, is a warrior who slays the enemies of Israel with His own hand. This view appears in the Targum of Jon. on Isa. x. 27, and of the pseudo-Jon. on Gen. xlix. 11. In Eth. En. lxii. 2; Pss. Sol. xvii. 27; 4 Ezra xiii. 38; as in Isa. xi. 4, He destroys them by the word of His mouth. But in the Eth. En. xc. 37; Ap. Bar. xxix. 2; 4 Ezra vii. 28, the conception of the Messiah is weak; he does not appear till evil has run its course; he has no active rôle; he reigns but does not rule.

LXXIII. 1. Cf. 1 Cor. xv. 24, 25.

Joy will be revealed. The text reads "will be revealed in joy," but this destroys the parallelism with "rest will appear." I have omitted the preposition before "joy."

2. Healing will descend in dew. Cf. xxix. 7.

and lamentation will pass from amongst men, and gladness will proceed through the whole earth. 3. And no one shall again die untimely, nor shall any adversity suddenly befall. 4. And judgments, and revilings, and contentions, and revenges, and blood, and passions, and envy, and hatred, and whatsoever things are like these shall go into condemnation when they are removed. 5. For it is these very things which have filled this world with evils, and on account of these the life of man has been greatly troubled. 6. And wild beasts will come from the forest and minister unto men, and asps and dragons will come forth from their holes to submit themselves to a little child. 7. And women will no longer then have pain when they bear, nor will they suffer torment when they yield the fruit of the womb.

LXXIV. "And it will come to pass in those days that the reapers will not grow weary, nor those that build be toilworn; for the works will of themselves speedily advance with those who do them in much tranquillity. 2. For that time is the consummation of that which is corruptible, and the beginning of that which is not corruptible. 3. Therefore those things which were predicted will belong to it: therefore it is far away from evils, and near to those things which die not. 4. This is the bright lightning which came after the last dark waters."

3. Untimely. See liv. 15.

4. Cf. Or. Sibyl. iii. 376-380, 751-755.

6. Cf. Isa. xi. 6-9; lxxv. 25; Or. Sibyl. iii. 620-623, 743-750.

LXXIV. 2. Cf. xl. 2.

4. This is the bright lightning. Emended from "these are the last bright waters." See lxxii. 1, note.

LXXV. And I answered and said: "Who can understand, O Lord, Thy goodness? for it is incomprehensible. 2. Or who can search into Thy compassions, which are infinite? 3. Or who can comprehend Thy intelligence? 4. Or who is able to recount the thoughts of Thy mind? 5. Or who of those that are born can hope to come to those things, unless he is one to whom Thou art merciful and gracious? 6. Because, if assuredly Thou didst not have compassion on man, those who are under Thy right hand, they could not come to those things, but those who are in the numbers named can be called. 7. But if, indeed, we who exist know wherefore we have come, and submit ourselves to Him who brought us out of Egypt, we shall come again and remember those things which have passed, and shall rejoice regarding that which has

LXXV.-
LXXVI. = B².

LXXV. - LXXVI. With these chapters we return again to B². We should observe that according to lxxv. 1 Baruch replies to the last speaker who has interpreted the vision in liii. for him. This speaker Baruch addresses as God. But the last speaker was not God but the angel Ramiel from whom is derived lv. 4-lxxiv. Thus we see that lxxv. does not belong to liii.-lxxiv.

LXXV. 1. Can understand. I have emended 𐤕𐤕𐤁𐤏𐤁 = "can be likened to" into 𐤕𐤕𐤁𐤏𐤁 = "can understand," and omitted the 𐤁 in 𐤕𐤕𐤁𐤏𐤁𐤁.

2. The mercies of God are not dwelt upon much in this book. The righteous are fully conscious of their worth (cf. xiv. 7, note). We have, however, a prayer for God's mercy in xlvi. 18, and an acknowledgment of God's long-suffering in xxiv. 2, but this is shown alike to the righteous and the wicked. God is merciful (lxxvii. 7) and His compassions are infinite (lxxv. 2); He has dealt with Baruch according to the multitude of the tender mercies (lxxxi. 4); if God had not compassion on man, he could not attain to the world to come (lxxv. 5, 6). For references to mercy in 4 Ezra, see vii. 132-134; viii. 31, 32, 36, 45; xii. 48.

5, 6. Those things. Probably the blessed immortality described in li.

6. Who are under Thy right hand. Cf. Ps. lxxx. 17.

7. We shall come again, i.e. in the resurrection described in l. This verse deals with the destiny of the obedient and the righteous; the next with that of the disobedient.

been. 8. But if now we know not wherefore we have come, and recognise not the principate of Him who brought us up out of Egypt, we shall come again and seek after those things which were now, and be grieved with pain because of those things which have befallen."

LXXVI. And He answered and said unto me: ["Inasmuch as the revelation of this vision has been interpreted to thee as thou besoughtest], hear the word of the Most High that thou mayest know what is to befall thee after these things. 2. For thou shalt surely depart from this earth, nevertheless not unto death but thou shalt be preserved unto the consummation of the times. 3. Go up therefore to the top of that mountain, and there will pass before thee all the regions of that land, and the figure of the inhabited world, and the top of the mountains, and the depth of the valleys, and the depths of the seas, and the number of the rivers, that thou mayest see what thou art leaving, and whither thou art going. 4. Now this will befall after forty days. 5. Go now therefore during LXXVI. 1. The earlier half of this verse is probably due to the final editor.

Hear the word of the Most High. This same mode of speech in which God speaks of Himself in the third person is found in xiii. 2: "Hear the word of the Mighty God," and also in xxv. 1, where the same statements are made in each case.

2. See note on xiii. 3.

Thou shalt be preserved until the consummation of the times. The Syr. here ܕܠܗܝܠܐ ܕܩܝܡܐ = "unto the observance of the times." If we compare the parallel passage, xxv. 1, we see that the above must be emended into ܕܠܗܝܠܐ ܕܩܝܡܐ, "thou shalt be preserved unto the times," or else into the fuller form we find in xvii. 3. I have done the latter in the text.

3. Cf. Deut. xxxiv. 1-3; Matt. iv. 8. Is the mountain here Nebo as in Deuteronomy?

4. Forty days. Cf. Exod. xxiv. 18; xxxiv. 28; Deut. ix. 9, 18. Analogous to this forty days to be these days and instruct the people so far as thou art able, that they may learn so as not to die at the last time, but may learn in order that they may live at the last times."

LXXVII. And I, Baruch, went thence and came to the people, and assembled them together from the greatest to the least, and said unto them: 2. "Hear, ye children of Israel, behold how many ye are who remain of the twelve tribes of Israel. 3. For to you and to your fathers the Lord gave a law beyond all peoples. 4. And because your brethren transgressed the commandments of the Most High, He brought vengeance upon you and upon them, and He spared not spent by Baruch in teaching the people are the forty days assigned to Ezra, in which he was to restore the O.T. Scriptures (cf. 4 Ezra xiv. 23, 42, 44, 45).

LXXVII.-
LXXXII. = B¹.

5. Live. See xli. 1, note.

In LXXXVIII. - LXXXVII. we have the conclusion of B¹. But of these chapters two are from other sources; LXXXIII. is from B², and LXXXV. from B³. For the grounds for these conclusions, see the notes in loc. For a comprehensive treatment of the two sources, B¹ and B², the reader must consult the Introduction. The chief differences between B¹ and B² are: In the former an earthly felicity is looked for, in the latter not; in the former the dispersion is to return, in the latter not; in the former the earthly Jerusalem is to be rebuilt, in the latter not; in the former Baruch is to die, in the latter to be translated; in the former Jeremiah is not sent to Babylon, in the latter he is. Thus the portions derived respectively from B¹ and B² are as follows:—

From B¹ i.-iv. 1; v.-ix. 1; xliii.-xliv. 7; xlv.-xlvi. 6; lxxvii.-lxxxii.; lxxxiv., lxxxvi., lxxxvii. From B² ix. 2-xii. (?); xiii. 1-3a; xx.; xxiv. 2-4; xiii. 3b-12; xxv., xiv.-xix.; xxi.-xxiv. 1; xxx. 2-5; xli., xlii.; xlviii. 1-47; xlix.-lii. 3; lxxv.; xxxi.-xxxii. 6; liv. 17, 18; xlviii. 48-50; lii. 5-7; liv. 16; xlv. 8-15; lxxxiii.; xxxii. 7-xxxv.; lxxvi. The portions derived from B² are restored to what seems to have been their original order in that source.

LXXVII. 1. From the greatest to the least. A favourite expression in Jeremiah (cf. vi. 13; viii. 10; xxxi. 34; xlii. 1, 8; xlv. 12; 4 Ezra xii. 40). Only in these it runs: "From the least to the greatest."

2. The twelve tribes which are here mentioned are treated of in their two main divisions in verse 4. Cf. lxxviii. 4; lxxxiv. 3.

3. A law. See xv. 5, note.

4. Upon you. I.e. the 2½ tribes = "the former" in the next line.

Upon them. The 9½ tribes = "the latter" in the next line.

the former, and the latter also He gave into captivity, and left not a residue of them. 5. And behold! ye are here with me. 6. If therefore ye direct your ways aright, ye also will not depart as your brethren departed, but they will come to you. 7. For He is merciful whom ye worship, and He is gracious in whom ye hope, and He is true, so that He shall do (you) good and not evil. 8. Lo! have ye not seen what has befallen Zion? 9. Or do ye perchance think that the place had sinned, and that on this account it was overthrown, or that the land had wrought foolishness, and that therefore it was delivered up? 10. And know ye not that on account of you who did sin, that which sinned not was overthrown, and, on account of those who wrought wickedly, that which wrought not foolishness was delivered up to (its) enemies." 11. And the whole people answered and said unto me: "So

Hath not left a residue of them. I.e. of the 9½ tribes. This denies the Samaritan claim.

5. Cf. lxxx. 5; 4 Ezra xiv. 33. 4 Ezra xiv. 30-33 seems to be dependent on lxxvii. 3-6. Those who are left with Baruch are a remnant of the 2½ tribes.

6. As your brethren departed. "The brethren" here embrace the 2½ tribes, and so we interpret the subsequent words, "and they will come to you." On the return of the 9½ tribes see note on lxxviii. 7.

7. Do (you) good and not evil. Cf. Jer. xxi. 10; Amos ix. 4.

8. =xliv. 5. Cf. x. 7; xiii. 3; lxxix. 1.

9. It was not the place that sinned. Hence it was destroyed by the hands of angels before it was delivered over to the king of Babylon, lest he should glory over it. Cf. v.-viii., lxxx.; see note on lxvii. 6.

10. Observe that the fall of Jerusalem is here attributed not only to the sins of the 2½ tribes but also of the 9½. This view appears first in Jer. xi. 17: "For the Lord of hosts that planted thee hath pronounced evil against thee, because of the evil of the house of Israel and of the house of Judah." Cf. Bar. ii. 26 καὶ ἔθγκας τὸν οἶκον οὗ ἐπεκλήθη τὸ ὄνομα σου ἐπ' αὐτῷ, ὡς ἡ ἡμέρα αὐτῇ, διὰ πονηρίαν οἰκοῦ Ἰσραὴλ καὶ οἰκοῦ Ἰούδα. Assumpt. Moyseos, iii. 5, where the two tribes say to the ten: "justus et sanctus Dominus, quia enim vos peccastis, et nos pariter abducti sumus vobiscum." Cf. also Targ. Jon. on Isa. liii. 5.

far as we can recall the good things which the Mighty One has done unto us, we do recall them; and those things which we do not remember He in His mercy knows. 12. Nevertheless, do this for us thy people: write also to our brethren in Babylon an epistle of doctrine and a scroll of good tidings, that thou mayest confirm them also before thou dost depart from us. 13. For the shepherds of Israel have perished, and the lamps which gave light are extinguished, and the fountains have withheld their stream whence we used to drink. 14. And we are left in the darkness, and amid the briers of the forest, and the thirst of the wilderness." 15. And I answered and said unto them: "Shepherds and lamps and fountains came (to us) from the law: and though we depart, yet the law abideth. 16. If therefore ye have respect to the law, and are intent upon wisdom, a lamp will not be wanting, and a shepherd will not fail, and a fountain will not dry up. 17. Nevertheless, as ye said unto me, I will write also unto your brethren in Babylon, 12. To our brethren in Babylon, i.e. the 2½ tribes. Cf. verse 19; lxxxv.

6. Observe that the writer does not conceive here of Jeremiah being at Babylon. If he had, he would have directed the letter to him. In the Rest of the Words of Baruch, on the other hand, the writer, conceiving Jeremiah to be in Babylon, directs to him the letter intended for the exiles there. This letter (cf. lxxvii. 17, 19; lxxxv. 6) to the 2½ tribes is lost.

Good tidings. Cf. xlvi. 6.

Depart. This refers to an ordinary death (cf. xliii. 2, note; see also xiii. 3, note; lxxviii. 5; lxxxiv. 1).

14. We are left in darkness. xlvi. 2; cf. 4 Ezra xiv. 20.

Briers. The text is $\text{בְּרִי$ = בְּרִי , which is the LXX. rendering of שֶׁמֶר in Isa. x. 17. I have supposed a similar rendering here. Or בְּרִי may be a rendering of עֵץ = "trees," and this a corruption of עֵץ = "thorns." Something is wrong.

15. The law. See xv. 5, note.

16. Shepherd. The text reads דָּמַן = "mind," which Ceriani has rightly emended into דָּמַן = "shepherd."

and I will send by means of men, and I will write in like manner to the nine tribes and a half, and send by means of a bird." 18. And it came to pass on the one and twentieth day in the eighth month that I, Baruch, came and sat down under the oak under the shadow of the branches, and no man was with me, but I was alone. 19. And I wrote these two epistles: one I sent by an eagle to the nine and a half tribes; and the other I sent to those that were at Babylon by means of three men. 20. And I called the eagle, and spake these words unto it: 21. "The Most High hath made thee that thou shouldst be higher than all birds. 22. And now go and tarry not in (any) place, nor enter a nest, nor settle upon any tree, till thou hast passed over the breadth of the many waters of the river Euphrates, and hast gone to the people that dwell there, and cast down to them this epistle. 23. Remember, moreover, that, at the time of the deluge, Noah received from a dove the fruit of the olive, when he sent it forth from the ark. 24. Yea, also the ravens ministered to Elijah, bearing him food, as they had been commanded. 25. Solomon also, in the time

17. A bird. This is an eagle (cf. ver. 20). It is worth observing that whereas an eagle carries this letter to the $9\frac{1}{2}$ tribes here, in the Rest of the Words of Baruch vii. it is an eagle that carries Baruch's letter to Jeremiah in Babylon.

18. The oak. See vi. 1, note; cf. 4 Ezra xiv. 1.

21. Cf. Rest of Words of Baruch vii. 3: "Elect above all the birds of heaven."

22. The $9\frac{1}{2}$ tribes were carried away to Assyria and placed in Halah, and in Habor, on the river of Gozan (2 Kings xvii. 6). Their abode, according to 4 Ezra xiii. 40, 45, was Arzareth, i.e. ארץ אחרת Deut. xxix. 28; Joseph. Ant. xi. 5, 2.

23. Cf. Gen. viii. 11; Rest of Words of Baruch vii. 10: "Be like the dove which three times brought back word to Noah."

24. Cf. 1 Kings xvii. 6.

of his kingdom, whithersoever he wished to send or seek for anything, commanded a bird (to go thither), and it obeyed him as he commanded it. 26. And now let it not weary thee, and turn not to the right hand nor to the left, but fly and go by a direct way, that thou mayest preserve the command of the Mighty One, according as I said unto thee."

26. Cf. Rest of Words vii. 12.

THE EPISTLE OF BARUCH WHICH HE WROTE TO THE NINE AND A HALF TRIBES

LXXVIII. These are the words of that epistle which Baruch the son of Neriah sent to the nine and a half tribes, which were across the river Euphrates, in which these things were written. 2. Thus saith Baruch the son of Neriah to the brethren carried into captivity: "Mercy and peace." 3. I bear in mind, my brethren, the love of Him who created us, who loved LXXVIII. 1. The nine and a half tribes. In this book the tribes of Israel carried away by the king of Assyria are, except in i. 2, always so designated (cf. lxii. 5; lxxvii. 19). In 4 Ezra xiii. 40 they are called "the ten tribes" only in the Latin Version, but "the nine and a half tribes" in the Syriac and Arabic Versions; in Asc. Isa. iii. 2 and in the Ethiopic Version of 4 Ezra xiii. 40 they are called the "nine tribes."

2. Mercy and peace. 1 Tim. i. 2.

3. It is noteworthy that in the genuine parts of B¹ in chaps. lxxvii.-lxxxvii. Baruch speaks frequently in the first person sing. (see lxxvii. 1, 5, 11, 15, 17-20, 26; lxxviii. 3, of Baruch the scribe'; kP, 'the Epistle of Baruch'; mn, 'the first Epistle of Baruch.'

LXXVIII. 1. לנאם תלמ' 'these are,' c; וסלמ' 'and these,' abdegghiWP; f, תלמ. תל' 'of that Epistle,' c; wrongly om. by abdegghiWP. תלמ' abdegghiWP; defWP, כנב. זפ 'Euphrates,' abdegghiWP. c om.

2. וסלמ' c; abdegghiWP, וסלמ' g, וסלמ. וסלמ' 'and peace,' abdegghiWP; c. reads וסלמ' 'and peace be unto you.'

3. זכנ' 'who created us,' abdegghiWP; c wrongly זכנ'

כִּי הָיָה כְּהִנְיָ לXXVIII.
 נִי . הַחֹדֶשׁ הַזֶּה עָבָר

1 הַפֶּלֶא . תִּלְמֵ אֵל

פֶּלֶא : אֵלֶּיךָ

תִּי בְּיָמֶיךָ כִּי נִי

לֵאלֹהֵי אֲבֹתֵינוּ .

תִּלְמֵ : אֲמַלְמֵלֵנוּ

כְּדָבָר שֶׁנִּשְׁאָל . לֵךְ בְּאֵמֶנֶת

2 אֲמַלְמֵלֵנוּ . תִּלְמֵ . תִּלְמֵ

אֲמַלְמֵלֵנוּ כִּי נִי .

לֵאלֹהֵי אֲבֹתֵינוּ . תִּלְמֵ

מִלְמֵלֵנוּ .

3 חֲסִי : אֵלֶּיךָ אֲמַלְמֵלֵנוּ

בְּיָמֶיךָ : אֲמַלְמֵלֵנוּ

For some account of the MSS. abcdefghijklmn see the General Introduction.

TITLE.—I have here given c, though what the title was is uncertain. a reads אֲמַלְמֵלֵנוּ בְּיָמֶיךָ חֲסִי ; so g, but that it om. אֲמַלְמֵלֵנוּ and b, but that it om. אֲמַלְמֵלֵנוּ and אֲמַלְמֵלֵנוּ . di give אֲמַלְמֵלֵנוּ בְּיָמֶיךָ חֲסִי ; so w, but that it om. אֲמַלְמֵלֵנוּ and בְּיָמֶיךָ before אֲמַלְמֵלֵנוּ , and ef, but that they om. אֲמַלְמֵלֵנוּ and אֲמַלְמֵלֵנוּ . l, אֲמַלְמֵלֵנוּ בְּיָמֶיךָ חֲסִי ; h, ‘the Epistle us from of old, and never hated us, but above all educated us. 4. And truly I know that behold all we the twelve tribes are bound by one chain, inasmuch as we are born from one father. 5. Wherefore I have been the more careful to leave you the words of this epistle before I die, that ye may be comforted regarding the evils which have come upon you, and that ye may be grieved also regarding the evil that has befallen your brethren: and again, also, that ye may justify His judgment which He has decreed against you that ye should be carried away captive—for what ye have suffered is disproportioned to what ye have done—in order that, at the last times, ye may be found

4, 5; lxxx. 7; lxxxi. 2, 4; lxxxii. 1; lxxxiv. 1, 6, 7; lxxxvi. 3; lxxxvii.) In the interpolated portions this is not so.

4. Twelve tribes. lxxvii. 2; lxxxiv. 3.

5. Before I die. See xiii. 3, note.

Justify. See xxi. 9, note. Cf. Ps. li. 4; Dan. ix. 14; Baruch ii. 9.

For what ye . . . done is parenthetical. Cf. lxxix. 2.

That in the last times, etc. These words refer to the return of the 9½ tribes (see note on ver. 7).

4. |ת; 'that behold,' abdefghiWP; c wrongly םש; 'that not.'
 כַּחַם כְּבִיבִי beg; adefghiWP, כְּבִיבִי.

5. |ת |לְכִי abdefghiWP; c trs. םש defiWP om. כַּחַם abdefghilWP; c, כַּחַם. אַחַבְּבִי |אֶבֶב 'evil that has befallen,' abdefghiWP; c, אַחַבְּבִי |אֶבֶב 'evils that have befallen.'
 א | כַּחַם כְּבִיבִי abdefghilWP; c, כַּחַם כְּבִיבִי. םש אַחַבְּבִי, a by a clerical error gives םש אַחַבְּבִי. םש אַחַבְּבִי acd h; befgi, םש אַחַבְּבִי. םש c; abdefghiWP, אַחַבְּבִי. אַחַבְּבִי ch; b, אַחַבְּבִי.

מִי־מִי . וְהָיָה מִי־מִי

הָיָה . אֵלֶּיךָ מִי־מִי זָרָה

4 וְהָיָה מִי־מִי . וְהָיָה מִי־מִי

אֵלֶּיךָ מִי־מִי זָרָה

וְהָיָה מִי־מִי זָרָה

אֵלֶּיךָ מִי־מִי זָרָה

מִי־מִי אֵלֶּיךָ מִי־מִי

5 מִי־מִי מִי־מִי מִי־מִי

אֵלֶּיךָ מִי־מִי זָרָה

זָרָה . וְהָיָה מִי־מִי זָרָה

מִי־מִי . וְהָיָה מִי־מִי

וְהָיָה מִי־מִי . וְהָיָה מִי־מִי

זָרָה . וְהָיָה מִי־מִי זָרָה

וְהָיָה מִי־מִי זָרָה

זָרָה . וְהָיָה מִי־מִי זָרָה

זָרָה . וְהָיָה מִי־מִי זָרָה

זָרָה . וְהָיָה מִי־מִי זָרָה

זָרָה . וְהָיָה מִי־מִי זָרָה

זָרָה . וְהָיָה מִי־מִי זָרָה

זָרָה . וְהָיָה מִי־מִי זָרָה

זָרָה . וְהָיָה מִי־מִי זָרָה

who created me.' אֵלֶּיךָ מִי־מִי 'above all,' abcgh; defiwp om.

זָרָה acdefi; bh, זָרָה.

worthy of your fathers. 6. Therefore if ye consider those things which ye have now suffered for your good, that ye may not finally be condemned and tormented, then ye will receive eternal hope; if above all ye destroy from your heart vain error, on account of which ye departed hence. 7. For if ye so do these things, He will continually remember you, He who alway promised on our behalf to those who were more excellent than we, that He will never forget or forsake us, but with much mercy will gather together again those who were dispersed.

6. Departed hence. I.e. from Palestine.

7. Those who were more excellent. The patriarchs.

With much mercy. In 4 Ezra xiv. 34, 35 the righteous are to obtain mercy after death. Here God's mercy will be shown to Israel by causing them to return from their captivity.

Gather together . . . those who were dispersed. Cf. lxxvii. 6; lxxxiv. 2, 8, 10. The promise that God would turn again the captivity of Israel is frequently made in the O. T. (cf. Deut. xxx. 3; Amos ix. 11-15; Isa. xi. 12; Jer. xxiii. 3; xxix. 14; xxxi. 10; xxxii. 37; Ezek. xxxvii. 21-28; Zeph. iii. 19, 20; also in Bar. iv. 36, 37; v. 5-7; Pss. Sol. xi.; 2 Macc. ii. 18). The prediction of the return of the exiles is found also in Tob. xiii. 13; Eth. En. lvii. 1, 2; xc. 33; Or. Sibyl. ii. 170-173; 4 Ezra xiii. 12, 39-47. Either as in the preceding passages God was to procure their return directly; or else indirectly (a) through the agency of the nations who should carry back to Jerusalem the dispersed as offerings (cf. Isa. xlix. 22; lx. 4, 9; lxvi. 20; Pss. Sol. xvii. 34); (b) by means of the Messiah (cf. Pss. Sol. xvii. 28, 30, 50; Targ. Jon. on Jer. xxxiii. 13); (c) by means of Elijah (cf. Ecclus. xlviii. 10). These different methods are not mutually exclusive. In the presence of this strongly attested hope of the restoration of the dispersed it is strange to find it positively denied by R. Akiba (Sanh. x. 3): "The ten tribes will nevermore return; for it is said of them (Deut. xxix. 28): 'He will cast them into another land, as this day.' Hence as this day passes away and does not return, so shall they pass away and not return. So R. Akiba."

The return of the exiles in B¹ accords well with the rebuilding of Jerusalem which is elsewhere expected in B¹. See i. 4; vi. 9, notes.

6 בַּחֲמֵשׁ . מִלֵּוּת

אֶל מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת

וְכִלְיָהוּ מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת .

בַּחֲמֵשׁ בַּחֲמֵשׁ

מִלֵּוּת . מִלֵּוּת

מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת . מִלֵּוּת

מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת

מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת

מִלֵּוּת . מִלֵּוּת

7 אֶל מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת . אֶל

מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת .

מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת

מִלֵּוּת . מִלֵּוּת

מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת

מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת . מִלֵּוּת

מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת .

מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת

מִלֵּוּת

6. בַּחֲמֵשׁ; c; bdefgilwp, מִלֵּוּת; ah give conflate reading, מִלֵּוּת .

7. מִלֵּוּת, c adds מִלֵּוּת. 'will not forget or forsake us,' abdefghimwp; c, מִלֵּוּת מִלֵּוּת, 'will not forget or forsake our seed.' 'those,' abdefghwp; מִלֵּוּת, 'all those.'

LXXIX. Now, my brethren, learn first what befell Zion: how that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up against us. 2. For we have sinned against Him who made us, and we have not kept the commandments which He commanded us, yet He hath not chastened us as we deserved. 3. For what befell you we also suffered in a pre-eminent degree, for it befell us also.

LXXX. And now, my brethren, I make known unto you that when the enemy had surrounded the city, the angels of the Most High were sent, and they overthrew the fortifications of the strong wall, and they LXXIX. 1. What befell Zion.

See lxxvii. 8, note.

2. We have sinned, etc. Cf. Baruch i. 17, 18.

Chastened. Cf. i. 5; xiii. 10.

As we deserved. Cf. lxxviii. 5.

LXXX. This chapter closely resembles and implies vi.-viii., but lxvii. proceeds upon different pre-suppositions. See lxvii. 6, note.

1. Fortifications of the strong wall.
Cf. vii. 1.

bdefghiWP. bdefghiWP read  'but likewise that which has befallen you has overtaken us: in a pre-eminent degree have we suffered also'; so also a, but that it inserts ? before , a conflate reading as in lxxviii. 6: all readings seem corrupt.  ce; bh, ; fi, .  abg; cdh, ; fi, ; WP,  'our calamity.'

LXXX. 1.  'I make known unto you that,' abdefghiWP; c wrongly om.  abcdfghilm; ewp om. o 'and.'  'fortifications,' abdefghilmWP; c,

LXXIX. 1 לַמֶּלֶךְ וְלַדָּוִד . — . מַלְכִּי

אֲנִי מִלְכִּי

לְמִלְכִּי וְלַדָּוִד

לְמִלְכִּי . וְלַדָּוִד

וְלַדָּוִד וְלַדָּוִד .

2 בְּלִי לְמִלְכִּי וְלַדָּוִד .

וְלַדָּוִד

וְלַדָּוִד

וְלַדָּוִד .

3 עַל־מִלְכִּי וְלַדָּוִד

וְלַדָּוִד .

.. אֲנִי לְמִלְכִּי וְלַדָּוִד

LXXX. 1 אֲנִי מִלְכִּי וְלַדָּוִד .

וְלַדָּוִד

וְלַדָּוִד

וְלַדָּוִד

LXXIX. 1. abdefghiWP; c, מַלְכִּי. abcegh; defiWP, מַלְכִּי. efhi; bg, וְלַדָּוִד.

2. bdfghiWP; ac, בְּלִי. b(ad?)efghiWP; c, וְלַדָּוִד. 'commandments,' chWP; abdefgil, וְלַדָּוִד 'commandment.'

2—3. מַלְכִּי לְ 'yet He hath not chastened . . . degree'; so c, save that I have om. וְ before מַלְכִּי, with destroyed the firm iron corners, which could not be rooted out. 2. Nevertheless, they hid all the vessels of the sanctuary, lest the enemy should get possession of them. 3. And when they had done these things, they delivered thereupon to the enemy the overthrown wall, and the plundered house, and the burnt temple, and the people who were overcome because they were delivered up, lest the enemy should boast and say: "Thus by force have we been able to lay waste even the house of the Most High in war." 4. Your brethren

Its . . . corners. Cf. vi. 4; viii. 1.

2. Hide all the vessels. Cf. vi. 7, 8. The ultimate motive for hiding the holy vessels can only be that given in vi. 9.

All the vessels of the sanctuary. The Syriac gives the impossible text, "the vessels of the vessels." The corruption becomes obvious when we retranslate into Hebrew. Thus the words = כלים מכלי הקדש corrupted from כל-כלי הקדש. I have emended accordingly.

Lest the enemy should get possession of them. The Syriac = "lest they should be polluted by the enemies." But the parallel passage in vi. 8, "So that strangers may not get possession of them," expresses the idea we should find here; for the object with which the vessels are hidden is their preservation for use in the restored temple (vi. 7-10). Further, we find that the corrupt text which = פן יהיו מאויבים becomes by the addition of a single letter פן יחלום אויבים = "lest the enemy should get possession of them."

3. Plundered house, and the burnt temple. Cf. v. 3; vi. 6, 7.

Should boast. Cf. vii. 1. Contrast lxvii. 2, 7.

4. Cf. viii. 5. Observe that there is no mention here of Jeremiah

'who were overcome,' abdefgiwP; so h, but that it gives the plural; c, ܩܘܠܝܢ. ܕ. 'because,' abchg; defiWP, ܕܥܝܢܝܢ. 'when,' ܕܥܝܢܝܢ, b reads ܕܥܝܢܝܢ. b; adefghiWP, ܕܥܝܢܝܢ; c, ܕܥܝܢܝܢ. ܕܥܝܢܝܢ. 'by force,' abdefghiWP; c wrongly om. ܕܥܝܢܝܢ bdefghiWP; a, ܕܥܝܢܝܢ.

2
 3
 4
 5
 6
 7
 8
 9
 10
 11
 12
 13
 14
 15
 16
 17
 18 19 20 21
 22
 23
 24
 25
 26
 27
 28
 29
 30
 31
 32
 33
 34
 35
 36
 37
 38
 39
 40
 41
 42
 43
 44
 45
 46
 47
 48
 49
 50
 51
 52
 53
 54
 55
 56
 57
 58
 59
 60
 61
 62
 63
 64
 65
 66
 67
 68
 69
 70
 71
 72
 73
 74
 75
 76
 77
 78
 79
 80
 81
 82
 83
 84
 85
 86
 87
 88
 89
 90
 91
 92
 93
 94
 95
 96
 97
 98
 99
 100
 101
 102
 103
 104
 105
 106
 107
 108
 109
 110
 111
 112
 113
 114
 115
 116
 117
 118
 119
 120
 121
 122
 123
 124
 125
 126
 127
 128
 129
 130
 131
 132
 133
 134
 135
 136
 137
 138
 139
 140
 141
 142
 143
 144
 145
 146
 147
 148
 149
 150
 151
 152
 153
 154
 155
 156
 157
 158
 159
 160
 161
 162
 163
 164
 165
 166
 167
 168
 169
 170
 171
 172
 173
 174
 175
 176
 177
 178
 179
 180
 181
 182
 183
 184
 185
 186
 187
 188
 189
 190
 191
 192
 193
 194
 195
 196
 197
 198
 199
 200
 201
 202
 203
 204
 205
 206
 207
 208
 209
 210
 211
 212
 213
 214
 215
 216
 217
 218
 219
 220
 221
 222
 223
 224
 225
 226
 227
 228
 229
 230
 231
 232
 233
 234
 235
 236
 237
 238
 239
 240
 241
 242
 243
 244
 245
 246
 247
 248
 249
 250
 251
 252
 253
 254
 255
 256
 257
 258
 259
 260
 261
 262
 263
 264
 265
 266
 267
 268
 269
 270
 271
 272
 273
 274
 275
 276
 277
 278
 279
 280
 281
 282
 283
 284
 285
 286
 287
 288
 289
 290
 291
 292
 293
 294
 295
 296
 297
 298
 299
 300
 301
 302
 303
 304
 305
 306
 307
 308
 309
 310
 311
 312
 313
 314
 315
 316
 317
 318
 319
 320
 321
 322
 323
 324
 325
 326
 327
 328
 329
 330
 331
 332
 333
 334
 335
 336
 337
 338
 339
 340
 341
 342
 343
 344
 345
 346
 347
 348
 349
 350
 351
 352
 353
 354
 355
 356
 357
 358
 359
 360
 361
 362
 363
 364 365
 366
 367
 368
 369
 370
 371
 372
 373
 374
 375
 376
 377
 378
 379
 380
 381
 382
 383
 384
 385
 386
 387
 388
 389
 390
 391
 392
 393
 394
 395
 396
 397
 398
 399
 400
 401
 402
 403
 404
 405
 406
 407
 408
 409
 410
 411
 412
 413
 414
 415
 416
 417
 418
 419
 420
 421
 422
 423
 424
 425
 426
 427
 428
 429
 430
 431
 432
 433
 434
 435
 436
 437
 438
 439
 440
 441
 442
 443
 444
 445
 446
 447
 448
 449
 450
 451
 452
 453
 454
 455
 456
 457
 458
 459
 460
 461
 462
 463
 464
 465
 466
 467
 468
 469
 470
 471
 472
 473
 474
 475
 476
 477
 478
 479
 480
 481
 482
 483
 484
 485
 486
 487
 488
 489
 490
 491
 492
 493
 494
 495
 496
 497
 498
 499
 500
 501 502
 503
 504
 505
 506
 507
 508
 509
 510
 511
 512
 513
 514
 515
 516
 517
 518
 519
 520
 521
 522
 523
 524
 525
 526

𐎧𐎠𐎢𐎡𐎧 'fortification.' 𐎠𐎡𐎹𐎢𐎺 *abdefghi*_{WP}; c, 𐎧𐎠𐎢𐎺.
 𐎠𐎡𐎹𐎢𐎺 *abdefgi*_{WP}; c, 𐎧𐎠𐎢𐎺. 𐎠𐎡𐎹𐎢𐎺 abcegh; *defgi*_{WP}, 𐎠𐎡𐎹𐎢𐎺.

2. ታታታታታታታ 'some vessels of the vessels,' *abcdefghi*_{WP};
 c, ታታታታ. ታታታታ 'should be polluted,' abcd fghi; d, ታታታታ; *e*_{WP}, ታታታታ.

3. f om. חבגל חב through hmt. חבג
*abc'deghi*_{WP}; c, חבג. חבג *abdegghi*_{WP}; c om. חבג also have they bound and led away to Babylon, and have caused them to dwell there. 5. But we have been left here, being very few. 6. This is the tribulation about which I wrote to you. 7. For assuredly I know that the habitation of Zion gave you consolation: so far as ye knew that it was prospered (your consolation) was greater than the tribulation which ye endured in having departed from it.

LXXXI. But regarding consolation, hear ye the word. 2. For I was mourning regarding Zion, and I prayed for mercy from the Most High, and I said:

though, according to x. 5, he went with the captivity to Babylon. See x. 2, note.

5. From Jer. xlii. 2, where the words are spoken of the remnant in Jerusalem (cf. Deut. iv. 27; Baruch ii. 13). The two latter passages deal with the remnant among the Gentiles.

LXXXI. As in lxxx. 7 the 9½ tribes had consolation in the fact that Jerusalem prospered and were proportionately grieved on its overthrow, Baruch has now a word of consolation for them touching Zion (lxxx. 1); for, when in his grief over it (lxxx. 2), he asked God how long should this desolation last (lxxx. 3), God, to give him consolation, vouchsafed a revelation as to the mysteries of the times and removed his anguish (lxxx. 4).

1. Regarding consolation. This word refers to the restoration of Zion. Cf. xliv. 7; lxxx. 4; lxxxii. 1.

*bdefghilw*_P; ac, חֲבִיתוֹת 'habitations.' חֲבִיתוֹת (your consolation) was greater than,' abcdeghi; fwp, חֲבִיתוֹת, which requires the following rendering: 'the more assured ye were that it prospered, the greater was the tribulation.'

LXXXI. 1. חֲבִיתוֹת *abcefg*_{hi}; dwp, חֲבִיתוֹת.

2. חֲבִיתוֹת c; *abdefghi*_w_P, חֲבִיתוֹת.

- 4 אֵל לְנִמְכֵּהּ בְּדִּי־ו
 וְלִכְלֵכֵּהּ לְבָבִי . וְלִדְחִי־ו
 5 אֵלֶּה לְעַלְּ . וְלִמְלִי־ו
 מִלְּךָ שֶׁנֶּחֱלָה . מִלְּמִי וְחֵטֶּא .
 6 שֶׁנֶּחֱלָה מִלְּמִי
 וְלִכְלֵכֵּהּ לְבָבִי .
 7 מִלְּמִי לְעַלְּ מִלְּמִי .
 וְלִכְלֵכֵּהּ לְבָבִי
 דִּשְׁמֵרָה שֶׁנֶּחֱלָה . דִּשְׁמֵרָה
 בְּנִי־דִמְּהָ וְלִכְלֵכֵּהּ לְבָבִי
 לְעַלְּ מִלְּמִי . דִּשְׁמֵרָה
 וְלִכְלֵכֵּהּ לְבָבִי
 וְלִכְלֵכֵּהּ לְבָבִי . וְלִכְלֵכֵּהּ לְבָבִי .
 1 LXXXI. אֵל דִּלְ כִּמְלִי
 2 מִלְּמִי לְעַלְּ . אֵל דִּלְ כִּמְלִי
 מִלְּמִי לְעַלְּ
 וְלִכְלֵכֵּהּ לְבָבִי . וְלִכְלֵכֵּהּ לְבָבִי

4. acdefghiWP; bg, אֵל. bcdefghilWP; a, לְנִמְכֵּהּ. For לִכְלֵכֵּהּ l reads 'לִכְלֵכֵּהּ'. abc;
defgiWP, 'לִכְלֵכֵּהּ'; h, 'לִכְלֵכֵּהּ'.

5. abeg; defhWP, לְעַלְּ. bc; adfhWP om.

6. cefg hi; b, לִכְלֵכֵּהּ.

7. abcd fghi; lWP, לְעַלְּ. 'habitation,'

3. "How long will these things endure for us? and will these evils come upon us always?" 4. And the Mighty One did according to the multitude of His mercies, and the Most High according to the greatness of His compassion, and He revealed unto me the word, that I might receive consolation, and He showed me visions that I should not again endure anguish, and He made known to me the mystery of the times, and the advent of the hours He showed me.

LXXXII. Therefore, my brethren, I have written to you, that ye may comfort yourselves regarding the multitude of your tribulations. 2. For know ye that our Maker will assuredly avenge us on all our enemies, according to all that they have done to us, also that

4. The multitude . . . compassion.
Cf. Dan. ix. 18; Bar. ii. 27; cf. lxxvi. 6.

Consolation. See verse 1.

Mystery of the times. Cf. lxxxv. 8.

LXXXII. I am doubtful as to whether lxxxii. 2-9 belongs to B¹ or B². I am inclined to believe the latter. But the evidence is not decisive either way.

4. וַיַּעַל 'and . . . did,' c; abdefghiWP, וַיַּעַל 'who did.' וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ 'of His mercies,' abcegh; defiWP, וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ 'of mercies.' וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ abgh; cdefilWP, וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ. וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ 'mystery,' abdefgiWP; ch, וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ 'mysteries.'

LXXXII. 1. וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ 'of your tribulations,' abgh; defiWP, וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ 'of your tribulation'; c, וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ 'of tribulations.'

2. וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ abdfghWP; c, וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ. וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ c; abefghlmWP, וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ; di om. point. וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ 'us,' abdefghilmWP; c om. וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ c; abdefghiWP, וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ. וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ 'to us'; c adds וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ 'and in us,' against abdefghiWP. וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ abdefghiWP; c, וְיִסְמְכֵהוּ.

- 3 עֲדָהּ אֵלֶּיךָ לְעוֹלָם . וְחַיְהֵא
 לְעוֹלָם אֵלֶּיךָ מִתְּנֵה
 לֵךְ . וְכִדְבָרְךָ אֶלַּי דָּבָר
 4 בְּיָדְךָ אֵלֶּיךָ . וְחַיְהֵא
 מִלְּפָנֶיךָ אִמְרֵי הַיָּד
 וְעַתָּה עֲשֵׂה . וְחַיְהֵא
 אִמְרֵי דְבָרְךָ לְעוֹלָם .
 וְחַיְהֵא לֵב עוֹלָם אִמְרֵי
 דְבָרְךָ . וְחַיְהֵא
 מִלְּפָנֶיךָ אִמְרֵי דְבָרְךָ
 וְחַיְהֵא . וְחַיְהֵא
 דְבָרְךָ . וְחַיְהֵא
 לְעוֹלָם . וְחַיְהֵא
 לְעוֹלָם . וְחַיְהֵא
 LXXXII. 1 .. דְבָרְךָ מִלְּפָנֶיךָ . וְחַיְהֵא
 תִּן אֵת דְבָרְךָ לְעוֹלָם
 וְחַיְהֵא לְעוֹלָם . וְחַיְהֵא
 2 וְחַיְהֵא דְבָרְךָ . וְחַיְהֵא
 דְבָרְךָ . וְחַיְהֵא
 דְבָרְךָ . וְחַיְהֵא
 דְבָרְךָ . וְחַיְהֵא
 דְבָרְךָ . וְחַיְהֵא

3. עֲדָהּ אֵלֶּיךָ לְעוֹלָם 'how long ... these things?'
abdefghilmwp; c, אֵלֶּיךָ לְעוֹלָם ' (will) these things
 ... to the end ?' לֵךְ 'upon us,' acdefhiwp; bg, לֵב 'upon me.'

3
 4
 5
 6

$acgh_{WP}$; $bdefi$, 108. אֶבְרָהָם ; $abcdefghi_{WP}$; bg , בְּגֵד .
 עֶבְרִית c ; $abdefhil_{WP}$, עִבְרִית .

3. གྲླ 'lo!' abdefghiWP; c, གྲླ 'now.' acdfhWP;

on the beauty of their gracefulness, though they have to do with pollutions, but as grass that withers will they fade away. 8. And we consider the strength of their cruelty, though they remember not the end (thereof), but as a wave that passes will they be broken. 9. And we remark the boastfulness of their might, though they deny the beneficence of God, who gave (it) to them, but they will pass away as a passing cloud.

LXXXIII. = B².

[LXXXIII. For the Most High will assuredly hasten His times, and He will assuredly bring on His hours. 2. And He will assuredly judge those who are in His

7. As grass, etc. Isa. xl. 6, 7.

LXXXIII. This chapter seems to belong to B². Thus the times will be cut short (lxxxiii. 1, 6), and everything brought into judgment (lxxxiii. 2, 3, 7); let not, therefore, earthly interests engage them (lxxxiii. 4), but let them fix their thoughts on the promised consummation (lxxxiii. 4, 5), and devote themselves to their faith of aforesaid, lest to their captivity in this world there should be added torment in the next (lxxxiii. 8); for the world passeth away with its strength and its weakness, its virtues, and its lusts (lxxxiii. 9-23).

The connection between lxxxiii. and xx. is close. Cf. lxxxiii. 1, 6; xx. 1; lxxxiii. 2; xx. 2; lxxxiii. 7; xx. 4. This chapter seems to have formed originally part of Baruch's address to the people (xxxi. 3-xxxii. 6; xliv. 8-15), and to have followed immediately on xliv. 8-15.

1. This and verse 6 are related to xx. 1. Cf. liv. 1; Ep. Barn. iv. 3.

8.  c; abdefghiwp, .
 cdefhi; abg,  wp give plural.

9.  cdfghi; ab, ; ewp,
.  'the boastfulness,' c; abdefghiwp,
 'the beauty.'  'of God—Him,' c; abdefghiwp,
 'of Him.'

LXXXIII. 2.  'will assuredly judge,' acdefhiwp;

1. וְהָיָה כִּי יִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת הַקּוֹל
 2. וְהָיָה כִּי יִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת הַקּוֹל
 3. וְהָיָה כִּי יִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת הַקּוֹל
 4. וְהָיָה כִּי יִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת הַקּוֹל
 5. וְהָיָה כִּי יִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת הַקּוֹל
 6. וְהָיָה כִּי יִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת הַקּוֹל
 7. וְהָיָה כִּי יִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת הַקּוֹל
 8. וְהָיָה כִּי יִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת הַקּוֹל
 9. וְהָיָה כִּי יִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת הַקּוֹל
 10. וְהָיָה כִּי יִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת הַקּוֹל

bg, ܠܗܝܠܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ 'our Lord will judge.' ܡܠܟܐ 'hidden,' abdefghiwp; c, ܡܠܟܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ 'which were sins.'

3. 𐎲𐎠𐎢𐎡𐎴, 𐎡𐎠𐎢𐎡𐎴, 'which in the secret chambers of all,' c; abfghl, 𐎲𐎠𐎢𐎡𐎴, 𐎡𐎠𐎢𐎡𐎴, 'which in the secret chamber by. 7. The consummation, moreover, of the age will then show the great might of its ruler, when all things come to judgment. 8. Do ye therefore prepare your hearts for that which before ye believed, lest ye come to be in bondage in both worlds, so that ye be led away captive here and be tormented there. 9. For that which exists now or which has passed away, or which is to come in all these things, neither is the evil fully evil, nor again the good fully good. 10. For all healthinesses of this time are turning into diseases. 11. And all might of this time is turning into weakness,

7. Cf. xx. 4.

Come to be in bondage, etc. Cf.

8. Prepare your hearts. See xxxii. lxxxv. 9.

1, note.

10. Contrast xxix. 7.

That which ye before believed.

11. All might of this time, etc.

This seems to refer to apostates, i.e. Cf. xxi. 14.

Christians who had left Judaism.

Cf. xli. 3; xlii. 4.

כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ תִּזְכָּן (כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ) 'that ye be led away captive and ... there,' c; abdefghikWP, כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ (כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ) יִשְׁתָּ. e om. כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ.

9. At the beginning of this verse ef insert כ in red, w inserts כ סַלְוָה, as also di, but that they add ; before כ. כ. ch; bg, כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ; efi, כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ; k, כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ. כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ; cefh; b, כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ; adgikWP, כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ. כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ; abdefgikWP, כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ; h, כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ. כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ.

10. כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ 'diseases,' abcdeghk; d'fiWP, כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ 'disease.'

11. כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ 'to misery,' bg: so also a, כַּלְדָּאֵלֹוֹ and defhi,

- 7 השכלות ב הכלל
הנפח השכל הכלל
הנפח השכל הכלל
8 הכלל הכלל הכלל
הכלל הכלל הכלל
הכלל הכלל הכלל
הכלל הכלל הכלל
הכלל הכלל הכלל
9 הכלל הכלל הכלל
הכלל הכלל הכלל
הכלל הכלל הכלל
הכלל הכלל הכלל
הכלל הכלל הכלל
10 הכלל הכלל הכלל
הכלל הכלל הכלל
11 הכלל הכלל הכלל
הכלל הכלל הכלל

7. השכלות 'the consummation,' c; e, השכלות; abdfghikwp, השכלות 'in the consummation.'

8. הכלל 'worlds,' abdfghikwp; e, הכלל 'world.'

and all force of this time is turning into misery. 12. And every energy of youth is turning into old age and consummation, and every beauty of gracefulness of this time is turning faded and hateful. 13. And every proud dominion of the present is turning into humiliation and shame. 14. And every praise of the glory of this time is turning into the shame of silence, and every splendour and insolence of this time is turning into voiceless ruin. 15. And every delight and joy of this time is turning to worms and corruption. 16. And every clamour of the pride of this time is turning into dust and stillness. 17. And every possession of riches of this time is being turned into Sheol alone.

12. Every beauty, etc. Cf. xxi. 13. Cf. xlviii. 35.
14 ; xlviii. 35.

so also i, but defectively ; c reads corruptly ‏לְזִמְּוּתָא בְּגִבְרִיתָא 'swelling of pride': we must emend ‏לְזִמְּוּתָא בְּגִבְרִיתָא into ‏לְזִמְּוּתָא בְּגִבְרִיתָא.

14. ewp om. ‏לְזִמְּוּתָא . . . ‏וְכֹחַ through hmt.

15. ‏לְזִמְּוּתָא בְּגִבְרִיתָא 'delight and joy,' bdefghiwp ; ack, ‏לְזִמְּוּתָא בְּגִבְרִיתָא 'delights and joys.' ‏לְזִמְּוּתָא בְּגִבְרִיתָא 'to worms,' abdefghikwp ; c, ‏לְזִמְּוּתָא בְּגִבְרִיתָא 'to rejection.' For ‏לְזִמְּוּתָא בְּגִבְרִיתָא f reads ‏לְזִמְּוּתָא בְּגִבְרִיתָא.

16. ‏לְזִמְּוּתָא בְּגִבְרִיתָא 'of the pride of this time,' abdefghikwp ; c, ‏לְזִמְּוּתָא בְּגִבְרִיתָא 'of the proud.' ‏לְזִמְּוּתָא בְּגִבְרִיתָא 'to dust and stillness,' abdefghikmwp ; c, ‏לְזִמְּוּתָא בְּגִבְרִיתָא 'to the still dust.'

17. ‏לְזִמְּוּתָא בְּגִבְרִיתָא 'of riches,' cdefiwp ; abghk, ‏לְזִמְּוּתָא בְּגִבְרִיתָא 'and riches.'

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ . ḥmṣ ḥmṣ

. ḥmṣ ḥmṣ . ḥmṣ ḥmṣ

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ 12

. ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ 13

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ 14

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ

. ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ 15

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ 16

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ 17

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ

ḥmṣ ḥmṣ; c, ḥmṣ ḥmṣ 'to miseries.' k om. . . ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ through hmt.

12. ḥmṣ ḥmṣ c; abfghikwp, ḥmṣ ḥmṣ.

13. ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ ḥmṣ 'proud dominion,' abdefghkwp;

18. And all the rapine of passion of this time is turning into involuntary death, and every passion of the lusts of this time is turning into a judgment of torment. 19. And every artifice and craftiness of this time is turning into a proof of the truth. 20. And every sweetness of unguents of this time is turning into judgment and condemnation. 21. And every love of lying is turning to shame through truth. 22. Since therefore all these things are done now, does any one think that they will not be avenged? 23. But the consummation of all things will come to the truth.]

LXXXIV = B¹.

LXXXIV. Behold! I have therefore made known unto you (these things) whilst I live: for I said that

19. |אגג c; abdefghiklwp, |אגג. |אגג 'and craftiness,' abdefghiklnwp; c, |אגג; 'of craftiness.' f om. |אגג |אגג; ... |אגג through hmt.

20. |אגג c; h, |אגג.

21. |אגג; 'of lying,' abdefghikwp; c wrongly om. |אגג c; abdefghikwp, |אגג. |אגג 'through truth,' abdefghikwp; c, |אגג 'in silence.'

22. אגג אגג c; abhk trs.; di, אגג אגג; efglwp, אגג. For אגג efilw read אגג. אגג 'does anyone think?' abdefghiklwp; c, אגג 'dost thou think?'

23. אגג; 'of all,' abdefghik; wp, אגג 'all.'

LXXXIV. 1. |אגג abdefghikwp; c om. אגג אגג אגג;

18 වැනි වගුව . 18

ਮੁਕਤ, ਮੁਕਤ, ਮੁਕਤ

မှ၊ နေ့စဉ် မှတ်တမ်း

12. 11. 1900 . 10. 11. 1900

•

[illegible]

புது லெட்சுமி

பெரியவன் பதின்

20 2000 . 12000

பெருந்தகை, பெருந்தகை,

21 תשרי ה'תשנ"א . י"א

பெரும்புலியும், பெரும்புலியும்;

كتبت في حمام . ح

പഠനം പൂർത്തിയാക്കിയ ശേഷം 22

ਸਮਾਜ . ਸੁਖ : ਅਸਾ ਅਸਾ

23 מצאנו . ומה נמצא ?

.. 121 ..

ලංකාවේ 18 වන වසර 1 LXXXIV.

حکم سے ادا . افغان

18. 𐌲𐌳𐌹𐌳𐌰 abcwp; defghi, 𐌲𐌳𐌹𐌳𐌰. 𐌲𐌳𐌹𐌳𐌰, 'of the lusts,' abcegh; dfiwp, 𐌲𐌳𐌹𐌳𐌰, 'of the lust.' 𐌲𐌳𐌹𐌳𐌰, 'of this time,' abdefghikwp; c wrongly om. k om. 𐌲𐌳𐌹𐌳𐌰 . . . 𐌲𐌳𐌹𐌳𐌰 through hmt., and for 𐌲𐌳𐌹𐌳𐌰 𐌲𐌳𐌹𐌳𐌰 reads 𐌲𐌳𐌹𐌳𐌰 𐌲𐌳𐌹𐌳𐌰.

ye should above all things learn the commandments of the Mighty One, wherein I shall instruct you: and I will set before you some of the commandments of His judgment before I die. 2. Remember that formerly Moses assuredly called heaven and earth to witness against you, and said: "if ye transgress the law ye shall be dispersed, but if ye keep it ye shall be kept." 3. And other things also he used to say unto you when ye the twelve tribes were together in the desert. 4. And after his death ye cast them away from you: on this account there came

LXXXIV. 1. Before I die. See the play on the two senses of שָׁמַר : lxxviii. 5. "if ye keep it, ye shall be kept" =

The commandments of the Mighty One (cf. ver. 7; xlv. 3).

2. See xix. 2, 3, note. In this verse there are several traces of the Hebrew original. First the Syr. for "assuredly called . . . to witness" = διαμαρτυρούμενος διεμαρτύρατο = העיד העיד. Next we have אם השמרו השמרו. Finally, there seems to be a paronomasia intended in "if ye transgress the law, ye shall be dispersed" = אם חסורו מתורה = חסורו.

3. Twelve tribes. Cf. lxxviii. 4; James i. 1.

בִּשְׁמִי, e save in reading בִּשְׁמִי, f save in reading בִּשְׁמִי, and k save in reading בִּשְׁמִי (for בִּשְׁמִי). בִּשְׁמִי ce; dfgiwp, בִּשְׁמִי; k, בִּשְׁמִי.

2. בִּשְׁמִי abcefgihlwp; b, בִּשְׁמִי. בִּשְׁמִי abdefghiwp; c om. בִּשְׁמִי 'ye shall be kept,' abdefghiwp; c, בִּשְׁמִי 'ye shall be planted.'

3. בִּשְׁמִי abdefghiwp; c, בִּשְׁמִי. בִּשְׁמִי ach; bdefgiwp, בִּשְׁמִי. בִּשְׁמִי c; abdefghiwp, בִּשְׁמִי.

4. בִּשְׁמִי 'therefore,' abdefgiwp; ch, בִּשְׁמִי 'and וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּמַתְּ אֱלֹהִים

עֲשֵׂתֶנּוּ מִלְּמַתְּ

וְאֵלֶיךָ . וְהִנֵּה

מִלְּמַתְּ מִלְּמַתְּ עַל עֲשֵׂתֶנּוּ

וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּמַתְּ .

2 אֵלֶיךָ וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּמַתְּ

מִלְּמַתְּ

מִלְּמַתְּ וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּמַתְּ .

וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּמַתְּ

וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּמַתְּ .

וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּמַתְּ .

3 אֵלֶיךָ וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּמַתְּ

מִלְּמַתְּ

מִלְּמַתְּ וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּמַתְּ

4 מִלְּמַתְּ .

מִלְּמַתְּ

אֵלֶיךָ .

וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּמַתְּ אֱלֹהִים 'that ye should above all things learn the commandments of the Mighty One wherein I shall instruct you'; so c, save that I have with Ceriani emended מִלְּמַתְּ into מִלְּמַתְּ; bdghilw read וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּמַתְּ אֱלֹהִים 'that ye should learn the things that are excellent; for the Mighty One hath commanded me to instruct you'; a agrees with bdghi save in reading upon you what had been predicted. 5. And now Moses used to tell you before they befell you, and lo! they have befallen you: for you have forsaken the law. 6. Lo! I also say unto you after ye have suffered, that if ye obey those things which have been said unto you, ye will receive from the Mighty One whatever has been laid up and reserved for you. 7. Moreover, let this epistle be for a testimony between me and you, that ye may remember the commandments of the Mighty One, and that also there may be to me a defence in the presence of Him who sent me. 8. And remember ye the law and Zion, and the holy

4. Cf. xix. 3.

6. The $9\frac{1}{2}$ tribes must endure chastisement before they could attain unto the promised happiness. This chastisement was for their well-being (lxxviii. 6); it was less than they deserved (lxxix. 2); and its aim was to make them worthy of their fathers in the last days (lxxviii. 5, see note).

8. They were to remember Zion and the Holy Land; for they were one day to return thither (cf. ver. 10 and lxxviii. 7, note).

5. $\text{אֶלְכֶּם} c$; $abdefghi_{WP}$, אֶלְכֶּם .

6. $\text{אֶלְכֶּם} ac$; $bdefghi_{WP}$, אֶלְכֶּם . אֶלְכֶּם ; d , אֶלְכֶּם ; efi_{WP} , אֶלְכֶּם . אֶלְכֶּם , def add אֶלְכֶּם .

7. $\text{אֶלְכֶּם} c$; $abdefghi_{WP}$, אֶלְכֶּם . $\text{אֶלְכֶּם} abcegh$; $defi_{WP}$, אֶלְכֶּם . $\text{אֶלְכֶּם} abdefghi_{WP}$; c , אֶלְכֶּם . $\text{אֶלְכֶּם} c$; $abdefghil_{WP}$, אֶלְכֶּם . $\text{אֶלְכֶּם} c$; $abdfghi_{WP}$, אֶלְכֶּם .

8. אֶלְכֶּם 'the law and Zion,' $abefghil_{WP}$; land and your brethren, and the covenant of your fathers, and forget not the festivals and the sabbaths. 9. And deliver ye this epistle and the traditions of the law to your sons after you, as also your fathers delivered (them) to you. 10. And at all times make request perseveringly and pray diligently with your whole heart that the Mighty One may be reconciled to you, and that He may not reckon the multitude of your sins, but remember the rectitude of your fathers. 11. For if He judge us not according to the multitude of His mercies, woe unto all us who are born.

LXXXV. = B³.

[LXXXV. Know ye, moreover, that in former

9. The traditions of the law, i.e. the unwritten law.

10. That the Mighty One may be reconciled to you. Cf. 4 Ezra x. 24: "ut tibi repropitiatur Fortis." Here this reconciliation is to lead up to their return to Palestine; for in lxxviii. 7 it is declared that He that promised their fathers that He would not fail their posterity, would gather them together from their dispersion, should they become faithful.

The rectitude of your fathers. On the merit of the fathers see xiv. 7, note.

11. His mercies. See lxxv. 2, note.

Woe unto all, etc. See x. 6, note.

LXXXV. This chapter is certainly an interpolation. I shall designate it B³ It belongs neither to B¹ nor traditions,' c; *abcdefghi*WP, סגלסגלסגל 'the tradition.'

 לבנתבד *bcdefghi*WP; a, לבנתבד. אב c; *abcdefghi*WP, אבבא.

10. אבבבבב 'perseveringly,' *abdeg*hiWP; c om. בנשגמבד
 'of your sins,' *abdefghi*WP; c, בנשגמבד 'of your sinners.'
 אבבב abcgh; *defi*WP, אבבבבב.

11. לבנתבד *abdefghilm*WP; c, לבנתבד. אבבבבב *cdefghilm*WP; ab, אבבבבב.

9. abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp .
abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp .
abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp .
 9. abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp .
abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp .
abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp .
abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp .
 10. abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp .
abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp .
abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp .
abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp .
abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp .
 11. abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp .
abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp .
 LXXXV. 1 . . abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp .
abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp .

d, abdefghiwp ; c trs. wrongly. abdefghiwp ;
c, abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp 'of your fathers,' abdefghiwp ;
c, abdefghiwp 'and your fathers.' abdefghiwp ; abdefghiwp , abdefghiwp .

9. abdefghiwp ; a, abdefghiwp . abdefghiwp 'the times and in the generations of old those our fathers had helpers, righteous men and holy prophets. 2. Nay more, we were in our own land, and they helped us when we sinned, and they prayed for us to Him who made us, because they trusted in their works, and the Mighty One heard their prayer and was gracious unto us. 3. But now the righteous have been gathered and the prophets have fallen asleep, and we also have gone forth from the land, and Zion has been taken

B². In B¹ there is a strong national hope which embraces a restored Jerusalem and the return of the dispersion. This hope is here implicitly denied. Although B³ and B² differ in important respects, they agree in despairing of any national restoration. They regard this world as lost, and look only for spiritual blessedness in the world of incorruption (lxxxv. 4, 5). On the other hand, there is a deeper strain of individualism in B³ than in B²; the writer's interest centres mainly in the destiny of the individual; let each see that he is ready when the end comes (lxxxv. 11), and that end is at hand for all (lxxxv. 10). Again, whereas B² seems to have been written in Jerusalem, B³ was written in Babylon or some other land of the Dispersion. Thus in lxxxv. 3 the writer says: "We also have gone forth from our own land, and Zion has been taken from us"; and in lxxxv. 2: "Nay more, we were in our own land, and they (the righteous) helped us when we sinned." Again, whereas according to B² Jeremiah was with the exiles in Babylon (see x. 2, note), it is here definitely stated that the righteous and the prophets are dead and the exiles have none to intercede for them (lxxxv. 2).

B³ and S (x. 6-xii. 4) are the most pessimistic parts of this book.

1. The generation of Jeremiah seems to be in the far past.

2. This verse conflicts with lxxvii. 5 and lxxx. 5. The writer implies that he is one of the exiles in Babylon or elsewhere. This is still more evident from the next verse.

They helped us when we sinned, and they prayed for us, etc. This thought reappears in the Rest of the Words of Baruch ii. 3: "For when the people transgressed, Jeremiah . . . prayed on behalf of the people until the transgressions of the people were forgiven them."

Trusted in their works. See xiv. 7, note; lxiii. 3. Observe that whereas in lxxxiv. 10 the merits of the patriarchs are regarded as a stay of Israel, no such belief appears here. According to this verse and the next it is implied that only the intercessions of the living righteous avail, and now there are none such. Yet it is shown that there were many such in ii. Hence this seems a later production.

3. We also have gone forth, etc. See verse 2.

מִבְּחֵל וּבְחֵלָה
 מִבְּחֵל וּבְחֵלָה
 לְבָרְכָהּ וּבְחֵלָה .
 2 וּבְחֵלָה מִבְּחֵל . אֵל
 בְּחֵלָה וּבְחֵלָה . וּבְחֵלָה
 מִבְּחֵל וּבְחֵלָה
 וּבְחֵלָה וּבְחֵלָה . וּבְחֵלָה
 וּבְחֵלָה וּבְחֵלָה . וּבְחֵלָה
 וּבְחֵלָה וּבְחֵלָה . וּבְחֵלָה
 וּבְחֵלָה וּבְחֵלָה . וּבְחֵלָה
 3 וּבְחֵלָה וּבְחֵלָה . וּבְחֵלָה
 וּבְחֵלָה וּבְחֵלָה . וּבְחֵלָה
 וּבְחֵלָה וּבְחֵלָה . וּבְחֵלָה

LXXXV. 1. וּבְחֵלָה c; abdefghiwp, וּבְחֵלָה .
cg; adefghiwp insert the punctuation between these words; b has no punctuation. וּבְחֵלָה 'holy prophets,' abdefghiwp; c, וּבְחֵלָה 'prophets and holy (men).'

2. אֵל 'nay, more,' abdefghiwp; c, וּבְחֵלָה 'moreover.'
 וּבְחֵלָה 'their prayer,' abdefghiwp; c, וּבְחֵלָה 'them.'
 וּבְחֵלָה c; abdefghiwp om. For וּבְחֵלָה h reads וּבְחֵלָה.

3. וּבְחֵלָה 'and also,' abdefghiwp; c om. 'and.' וּבְחֵלָה 'our land,' c; abdefghiwp, וּבְחֵלָה 'the land.' וּבְחֵלָה, a trs.

from us, and we have nothing now save the Mighty One and His law. 4. If therefore we direct and dispose our hearts, we shall receive everything that we lost, and much better things than we lost (yea, better) by many times. 5. For what we have lost was subject to corruption, and what we shall receive will not be corruptible. [6. Moreover, also, I have written thus to our brethren to Babylon, that to them also I may attest these very things.] 7. And let all those things aforesaid be always before your eyes, because we are still in the spirit and the power of

We have nothing now save the Mighty One and His law. The law was Israel's everlasting possession. This sentiment appears also in Josephus, Apion, ii. 38: κἀν πλοῦτου καὶ πόλεως καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀγαθῶν στερηθῶμεν, ὁ γοῦν νόμος ἡμῖν ἀθάνατος διαμένει. In the Talmud, further, we find (Mechilta, 68b) that whereas the land, the sanctuary, and the kingdom of David, were given conditionally to Israel, the law was given unconditionally. Hence Israel could exist without the former, but not without the latter. This thought combined with that in xlviii. 22 that, so far as Israel observed the law, it could not fall, became the inspiration of Rabbinic Judaism and the safeguard of the race through the storms of later times. On the law see xiv. 7, note.

5. See xxi. 19, note.

6. This verse is due to the final editor.

7. The power of our liberty, i.e. enjoy freewill. Cf. 4 Ezra ix. 11: "Qui fastidierunt legem meam, cum adhuc erant habentes libertatem" (also viii. 56). For the diction compare 1 Cor. vii. 37 ἐξουσίαν δὲ ἔχει περὶ τοῦ ἰδίου θελήματος: Acts i. 7; v. 4; Pss. Sol. ix. 7: τὰ ἔργα ἡμῶν ἐν . . . ἐξουσίᾳ τῆς ψυχῆς ἡμῶν. On the doctrine see liv. 15, note.

6. לְבָבִי; לְבָבִי 'to Babylon that also,' abeg; h, לְבָבִי; לְבָבִי; defiwr, לְבָבִי 'to Babylon and also.'

7. וְהָיָה כְּכֹחַ c; abdfghiwr, וְהָיָה כְּכֹחַ
וְהָיָה כְּכֹחַ. וְהָיָה כְּכֹחַ 'and the power,' abdefghiwr;
c, וְהָיָה כְּכֹחַ 'of the power.'

נחמ . וְשִׁמְךָ אֱלֹהֵינוּ
 ענין . וְכִמְךָ לֵב עֲבֹד
 שְׁמִי אֱלֹהֵי אֱמֶת
 4 וְנִשְׁמָהוּ . אֱלֹהֵי שְׁמִי
 וְנִשְׁמָהוּ אֱלֹהֵי חַבְדָּה
 נִשְׁמָהוּ דְכַעֲבֹר : וְאֵבֶר
 וְנִשְׁמָהוּ שְׁמִי מִן אֱמֶת : וְאֵבֶר
 5 כִּדְבָרִי שְׁמִי . עֲבֹד
 וְנִשְׁמָהוּ : וְאֵבֶר : וְנִשְׁמָהוּ
 וְנִשְׁמָהוּ . עֲבֹד : וְנִשְׁמָהוּ
 6 מִלְּפָנֶיךָ . אֱלֹהֵי אֱמֶת
 וְנִשְׁמָהוּ אֱלֹהֵי חַבְדָּה .
 וְאֵבֶר : וְנִשְׁמָהוּ אֱמֶת
 7 וְנִשְׁמָהוּ . עֲבֹד : וְנִשְׁמָהוּ
 וְנִשְׁמָהוּ אֱמֶת : וְנִשְׁמָהוּ
 וְנִשְׁמָהוּ אֱמֶת : וְנִשְׁמָהוּ
 וְנִשְׁמָהוּ אֱמֶת : וְנִשְׁמָהוּ

4. נחמ . וְשִׁמְךָ אֱלֹהֵינוּ acdefghiwp; b, נחמ . ענין . abdefghiwp om. 'and much better things than we lost,' abdefghiwp; c ענין omitting by hmt.

5. כִּדְבָרִי שְׁמִי abfdghwp; c, וְנִשְׁמָהוּ ; c om. acdef; bgh, וְנִשְׁמָהוּ ; wp, כִּדְבָרִי . עֲבֹד ; c; abdefghiwp, וְנִשְׁמָהוּ . c; abdefghiwp, מִלְּפָנֶיךָ .

our liberty. 8. Again, moreover, the Most High also is long-suffering towards us here, and He hath shown to us that which is to be, and hath not concealed from us what will befall in the end. 9. Before therefore judgment exact its own, and truth that which is its due, let us prepare our soul that we may enter into possession of, and not be taken possession of, and that we may hope and not be put to shame, and that we may rest with our fathers and not be tormented with our enemies. 10. (For the youth of the world is past, and the strength of the creation is already exhausted, and the advent of the times is very short, yea, they have

8. Hath shown to us . . . and hath not concealed from us. In B¹ Baruch does not use the plural in this connection (cf. lxxxi. 4; see lxxviii. 3, note).

9. Judgment . . . its due. Cf. v. 2; xlviii. 27.

Let us prepare our soul. xxxii. 1, note.

That we may enter into possession of, and not be taken possession of = וְנִשְׁמַח בְּיָמֵינוּ. These words are obscure, probably corrupt.

That we may rest with our fathers. Cf. xi. 4; also lxxxv. 11.

Tormented. Cf. lxxxiii. 8.

10. The youth of the world is past. Cf. 4 Ezra xiv. 10: "saeculum perdidit iuventutem suam et tempora appropinquant senescere;" also xiv. 16; v. 50-56.

parallel expressions in v. 2 and xlviii. 27; bdefghilwp are wrong here, as they give וְיָדָה 'the Judge.' Next, for וְעַל כֵּן 'of anything,' of ac, I follow bdefghiwp in reading וְעַל כֵּן, for וְעַל כֵּן is clearly the subject and not the object of the verb. The text of bdefgiwp = 'before therefore the Judge exact His own and truth that which is its due.' וְעַל כֵּן וְיָדָה c; abdefghiwp, וְעַל כֵּן וְיָדָה. וְעַל כֵּן וְיָדָה c; b^fh, וְעַל כֵּן וְיָדָה. וְעַל כֵּן וְיָדָה abcdefgh; wp, וְעַל כֵּן וְיָדָה; h, וְעַל כֵּן וְיָדָה.

10. וְעַל כֵּן וְיָדָה 'and the advent,' abcdefghil; wp, passed by; and the pitcher is near to the cistern, and the ship to the port, and the course of the journey to the city, and life to consummation. 11. And again prepare your souls, so that when ye sail and ascend from the ship ye may have rest and not be condemned when ye depart. 12. For lo! when the Most High will bring to pass all these things, there will not there be again an opportunity for returning, nor a limit to the times, nor adjournment to the hours, nor change of ways, nor place for prayer, nor sending of petitions, nor receiving of knowledge, nor giving of love, nor place

12. An opportunity for returning. The Syr. here = "place" or "opportunity for repentance." But as this idea is found again in this verse, and obviously in its right context, it cannot be right here. The difficulty can be resolved as follows:—In early post-classical Hebrew חֲשׁוּבָה meant both "return" and "repentance." The Greek translator followed the latter meaning when he ought to have followed the former.

Place of repentance. Cf. 4 Ezra ix. 12: "cum adhuc esset eis apertus poenitentiae locus, non intellexerunt." This is the universal teaching in the Books of Enoch and 4 Ezra.

11. אַבְעֵגְחִי־וֹפְּ d, אֲבָגְחִי. אֲבָגְחִי c; abdegghiWP, אֲבָגְחִי. אֲבָגְחִי 'be condemned,' abcgħ; efWP, אֲבָגְחִי may have rest'; di, אֲבָגְחִי.

12. כִּי 'when,' abdefghiWP; c om. אֲבָגְחִי c; abdefghiWP, אֲבָגְחִי. אֲבָגְחִי abcefgghiWP; d, אֲבָגְחִי. אֲבָגְחִי 'of ways,' bgWP; dei, אֲבָגְחִי 'of way'; acfl, אֲבָגְחִי; h, אֲבָגְחִי. אֲבָגְחִי bdefghiWP; a, אֲבָגְחִי. אֲבָגְחִי 'giving of love,' cd; abcefgghiWP, אֲבָגְחִי 'giving of love,' or 'pardoner of guilt,' accord-

11
 12

ῥοσσῶν 'the space.' σ c; abdefghiwp om. σῶν c; abdefghiwp, ῶν.

of repentance, nor supplication for offences, nor intercession of the fathers, nor prayer of the prophets, nor help of the righteous. 13. There there is the sentence of corruption, the way of fire, and the path which bringeth to Gehenna. 14. On this account there is one law by one, one age and an end for all who are in it. 15. Then He will preserve those to whom He finds He may be gracious, and at the same time destroy those who are polluted with sins.]

LXXXVI. When therefore ye receive this my epistle, read it in your congregations with care. 2.

Intercession of the fathers. Cf. 4 Ezra vii. 102-115; Slav. En. liii. 1.

13. Way of fire. Cf. xlv. 15, note.

In the Ass. Moyseos, iii. 12, Moses is called the mediator of the law.

14. One law by one. Moses seems to be here referred to. The remark seems directed against the Christians (cf. xiviii. 24). This verse seems either to be interpolated or in its wrong place.

ܡܕܒܠ 'of corruption,' abdefghiwp; c, ܡܕܒܠ 'to corruption.'
 ܡܕܒܠ 'the way,' abdefghiwp; c, ܡܕܒܠ 'of the way.' ܡܕܒܠ
 'to gehenna,' abefghi; so dwp, ܡܕܒܠ; c, ܡܕܒܠ 'to coals.'

14. ܡܕܒܠ cg; defhwp, ܡܕܒܠ . ܡܕܒܠ

15. ܡܕܒܠ 'then,' bcgh; adefilwp, ܡܕܒܠ 'and then.'
 ܡܕܒܠ acdefiwp; bgh, ܡܕܒܠ 'those,' c; adefghiwp,
 ܡܕܒܠ 'and those.' ܡܕܒܠ abdefghwp; c, ܡܕܒܠ.
 ܡܕܒܠ c; abdefghiwp trs.

LXXXVI. 1. ܡܕܒܠ c; abdefghiwp trs. ܡܕܒܠ
 'this,' abdefghiwp; c om. ܡܕܒܠ abdefghiwp; c, ܡܕܒܠ.

በጋራ ለሚገኙት ሁሉም ጋራ ሆኖ ማግኘት ይቻላል፡፡

. יִשְׂרָאֵל, יִזְעַב מִן

٥٠ . ١٤٥٣ . ٥٠

13 حەزرىتى مۇھەممەد ئەلەيھىسسالام

[illegible]

אזני, וזני, וזני

၁၄။ နေ့စဉ် ၁၄

၂၈ မှ ၂၂ မှ

பெரிய நகரம்.

○●●●● ●●●●●

15 ရာဇဝတ် . စာအုပ်

لَا إِلَهَ إِلَّا اللَّهُ

ՀԱՅ ԻՍԽԱՆ ԸՄԽԱՆ

لِلْمَدَى وَمَا كُنْتُمْ حَسِبْتُمْ .

1 LXXXVI. 1000

சென்னை 14.11.2018

צוהנא צוהנא .

ing as we vocalise the phrase. |م ع 'supplication,' *abdeghil*_{WP}; c, |م ع 'supplications'; f om. |م ع ... |; |ل. |ل ع م, d repeats; e reads singular. |ل ع م 'intercession,' *bdefghi*_{WP}; ac, |ل ع م 'intercessions.'

13. $\curvearrowright$, c adds above the line in first hand $\curvearrowright$ against $abdefgiw_F$; h adds $\curvearrowright$ $abdefghi w_F$; c , $\curvearrowright$ $\curvearrowright$.

And meditate thereon, above all on the days of your fasts. 3. And bear me in mind by means of this epistle, as I also bear you in mind in it, and always fare ye well.

LXXXVII. And it came to pass when I had ended all the words of this epistle, and had written it sedulously to its close, that I folded it, and sealed it carefully, and bound it to the neck of the eagle, and dismissed and sent it.

HERE ENDS THE BOOK OF BARUCH THE SON OF NERIAH.

LXXXVII. Bound it to the neck of the eagle. These words reappear in the Rest of the Words of Baruch vii. 8, τὴν ἐπιστολὴν . . . ἔδρασε vii. 30). εἰς τὸν τράχηλον τοῦ αἰετοῦ (cf.

the first epistle'; in WP, 𐤀𐤁𐤁𐤁 𐤁𐤁𐤁𐤁 ' (here) ends the epistle of Baruch'; f om. subscription.

LXXXVII. Found only in c, but undoubtedly a part of the original work, as is clear from a comparison of lxxvii. 17, 20—26. As all the other MSS. began with lxxviii., and gave only a fragment of the book for ecclesiastical reading, they naturally omitted this chapter, since it would have been unintelligible without lxxvii., and simply closed the section with the words 𐤁𐤁𐤁𐤁 𐤁𐤁𐤁𐤁.

2. နှစ် နှစ်လုံး နှစ်လုံး 2

ممنوع حق علم

ရဝဏ္ဏဝေ . ရသေ့ဝေ့ * 3

مسند احمد بن حنبل

၂၃၈ . အမှတ် ၁၁၂

ಮುಖ್ಯ: ಇದು ಒಂದು ಸಾಧನ.

1 LXXXVII. .. 1000 ÷ 10000

فندمى دى قىلما

တံလံလံဝံ ပဲတံ ပဲလဲလဲ?

[illegible]

சுந்தரம் சுந்தரம்

தங்குத ஂழிஒம௦ . ஒஒிஒதி

. ॐ नमो भगवते वासुदेवाय . ।

על דאס קלדא וואס

✧ ✧ ✧ . ❧ ✧ ✧ ✧

2. $\Lambda_1 | \vdash \Lambda_2$, c adds $\vdash$ against $abcdefghiwp$.

3. א c; abdfghwפ, ן-ב-ב. ן bcd fghwפ; a om.
כ-כ-כ-כ כס 'in it and always,' c; abdefg h i w פ, . ח כ-כ-כ-כ סלמססכ-כ-כ 'in it, and always fare ye well': with these words all MSS. but c close. The subscription in bgh is כ-כ-כ-כ : כ-כ-כ-כ : כ-כ-כ-כ (here) ends the first epistle of Baruch the scribe'; so a, but that it writes כ-כ-כ-כ for כ-כ-כ-כ; in dei, כ-כ-כ-כ : כ-כ-כ-כ (here) ends

APPENDIX ON VI. 7-10

In 2 Macc. ii. 4-8 there is a tradition closely related to the account in vi. 7-10. Here Jeremiah is warned of God to hide, in a cave-like dwelling in the mountain where Moses climbed up, "the tabernacle and the ark and the altar of incense" (τὴν σκηνὴν καὶ τὴν κιβωτὸν καὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον τοῦ θυμιάματος). This place was to remain unknown till God should gather His people again together (ἄγνωστος ὁ τόπος ἔσται ἕως ἂν συναγάγῃ ὁ Θεὸς ἐπισυναγωγὴν τοῦ λαοῦ).

The mention here of the "altar of incense" supports the rendering I have given of ܐܠܬܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ in vi. 7. This word implies θυμιατήριον in the Greek. In the LXX. this word means "censer," but in Philo, Josephus, Clem. Alex., and Origen it is the ordinary appellation of the "altar of incense." Now as regards the first meaning, there is no mention of any particular censer in the Old Testament, not even in Lev. xvi. 12. The only mention of the golden censer is found in the Mishna, Joma, v. 1, vii. 4 (quoted by Lünemann on Heb. ix. 4), which the High Priest took with him into the Holy of Holies on the Day of Atonement. Since, however, in the frequent earlier and contemporary enumerations of the holy vessels in 2 Macc. ii. 5; Philo, Quis rerum divin. haer. i. 504; de Vita Mos. ii. 149; Heb. ix. 1-5 (?); Joseph. Ant. iii. 6, 8; Bell. Jud. v. 5. 5, this censer is nowhere given, but the altar of incense always, it seems right to conclude that θυμιατήριον should be taken here in its meaning of "altar of incense," and not in that of "censer," as it was by the Syriac translator.

INDEX I

PASSAGES FROM THE SCRIPTURES AND OTHER ANCIENT BOOKS DIRECTLY CONNECTED OR CLOSELY PARALLEL WITH THE TEXT.

Only the more important are given except in the case of 4 Ezra, and the two books of Enoch.

THE OLD TESTAMENT.

Exodus i. 14
Psalms xxxvi. 8
,, civ. 4.
Ecclesiastes x. 10
Isaiah xl. 15
,, xlix. 16
Jeremiah ix. 1
,, xxii. 29
Zechariah vii. 11

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

lviii. 1
xli. 4
xlviii. 8 xxxviii. 2 lxxxii. 5
iv. 2 xxxv. 2
vi. 8
li. 4

THE NEW TESTAMENT.

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

See pp. lxxvi.-lxxix.

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

x. 6
,, 8
xi. 4
xxi. 23
xxiii. 4
xxv. 1
xxix. 4 xxxii. 6
xlviii. 9
l. 2
lv. 3
lvi. 11-13
lix. 5
,, 5
,, 5
,, 8
,, 10

ETHIOPIC ENOCH.

xxxviii. 2
xix. 2 (Greek Version)
li. 1
c. 5
lix. 11
xxxvii. 5
lx. 7
xlv. 4.
ii. 1
li. 1
xx. 7 (Greek Version)
vi. 2
xviii. 11 ; xxi. 7-10
xl. 11
xlvii. 5
xl. 12
xxvii. 2, 3 ; xc. 26, 27

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

lix. 10
 „ 10
 lxviii. 6

ETHIOPIC ENOCH.

xxii. 5-9
 xli. 3 ; xliii. 1, 2, etc.
 lxxxix. 73, 74

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

x. 6
 xviii. 2
 xxi. 4
 „ 6
 „ 7 xxiii. 4
 xlviii. 10
 li. 11
 liv. 15, 19
 lvi. 11-13
 lix. 5
 „ 5
 „ 8
 „ 10
 „ 10
 „ 11

SLAVONIC ENOCH.

xli. 2
 xxx. 15, 16
 xxiv. 2
 xxix. 1
 xlvii. 5
 xlix. 2 (lviii. 5)
 xvii.
 „
 xxx. 15
 xviii. 4-6
 xxviii. 3
 xli. 4
 lxi. 1-4 ; lxx. 3, 4
 x. ; xc. 12
 xx. 1, 3
 xi. 9

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

APOCRYPHAL BOOK OF BARUCH.

See pp. xiv.-xv. ; lxv.-lxvii.

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

4 EZRA.

ii. 1
 iii. 1
 „ 1
 „ 2 (xxviii. 6)
 „ 7
 iv. 3
 v. 1
 „ 1
 ix. 2
 x. 6 (xi. 6, 7)
 xi. 3
 xiii. 8
 xiv. 7
 „ 11 (xlviii. 15)
 „ 17
 „ 18 „ 18
 xv. 6
 xvii. 4
 xix. 1, 2
 xx. 1 (liv. 1)
 xxi. 6
 „ 19
 „ 21

iv. 36 ; viii. 51, 62 ; xiv. 9, 49
 „ 38 ; v. 23, 38 ; vi. 11, 38 ; vii.
 17, 58, 75 ; xii. 7 ; xiii. 51
 x. 7
 v. 56 ; vii. 102 ; viii. 42 ; xii. 7
 vii. 30
 „ 26 ; xiii. 36
 iv. 23
 „ 25
 v. 20 ; vi. 35 ; ix. 26, 27 ; xii. 51
 iv. 12 ; vii. 66, 116, 117
 iii. 30
 iv. 34
 vii. 77 ; viii. 33
 viii. 5
 vi. 38
 „ 54
 „ 55, 59 ; vii. 11 ; viii. 44 ; ix. 13
 vii. 72
 iii. 19
 vii. 121-130
 iv. 26 ; vi. 18
 viii. 21
 vii. 113 (iv. 11 ; vii. 111)
 v. 27

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

xxi. 26
xxiii. 4
" 4, 5
xxiv. 1
xxv. 1
" 3
xxvii. 10
xxviii. 3
xxix. 4
" 4

" 6
" 6
xxx. 1
xxxi. 3
xxxii. 1
" 6
" 7
" 9
xxxiii. 3
xxxix. 6 xlvi. 2
xlvii. 15
xlviii. 36
" 38
" 42
" 46
li. 5
" 10
lv. 3
lix. 7
lxx. 3
" 5
" 5
lxxvi. 4 lxxvii. 1
lxxxii. 3
" 4
" 6 lxxxiv. 10
lxxxv. 7
" 10
" 12

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

See pp. xviii.-xix.

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

See p. xx.

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

See pp. xx.-xxii.

4 EZRA.

v. 14
vii. 85, 95
iv. 33-43
vi. 20
iii. 34, 35
xiii. 30
v. 8
xiii. 16-20
vi. 49-52
" 2, 25; vii. 28; ix. 7; xii. 34;
xiii. 48
vii. 28; xii. 34
xiii. 50.
xii. 32; xiii. 26
ix. 30
" 32 (iii. 20)
vii. 75
v. 19
" 18
xii. 44
v. 1
xiv. 20
viii. 5
v. 9-11
iii. 8
vii. 118-121
iii. 4, 5; vii. 116
vii. 87
" 97, 125
iv. 36
xiv. 47
vi. 24
v. 9-11
" 12
xiv. 23, 42, 44, 45
xii. 40
vii. 61
vi. 56
vii. 61
x. 24
ix. 11 (viii. 56)
xiv. 10
ix. 12

REST OF THE WORDS OF BARUCH.

5 EZRA.

APOCALYPHIS BARUCH TERTIA.

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

ix. 1
xx. 3 xlii. 4 xlviii. 9
lx. 1 lxxviii. 7
lxxxv. 7

PSALMS OF SOLOMON.

xvii. 41
xiv. 5
xvii. 17
xix. 2, 3
ii. 15
viii. 34
ix. 7

INDEX II

NAMES AND SUBJECTS

- AARON, lix. 1
 Abraham, iv. 4 ; lvii. 1
 Abyss, the, lix. 5
 Adam, iv. 3 ; xvii. 2 ; xviii. 2 ; xxiii. 4 ; xlviii. 42 ; liv. 15, 19 ; lvi. 5 brought in physical death, xxiii. 4, note brought in premature death, xxiii. 4, note ; liv. 15, note brought in spiritual death, xlviii. 42, note
 Adu, v. 5
 Altar of incense, vi. 7 ; p. 168
 Angel of death, xxi. 23, note
 Angels created on the first day, xxi. 6, note armies of, xlviii. 10 ; li. 11, note ; lix. 10 fall of the, lvi. 11-13, note
 Apostates, i.e. Christians, xli. 3, note ; xlii. 4
 Assumption of Baruch, the, xiii. 3, note ; xlv. 7, note
- BABYLON, viii. 5 ; x. 2 ; lxxvii. 12, 17, 19 ; lxxix. 1
 = Rome, xi. 1
 Baldensperger, p. xxxix.
 Baruch, the Assumption of, in B², xiii. 3, note ; xxv. 1 ; xlv. 7, note ; xlviii. 30 ; lxxvi. 2 the death of, an ordinary one in B¹, xiii. 3, note ; xliii. 2, note ; lxxviii. 5 ; lxxxiv. 1 the Apocalypse of ; its different elements, with their characteristics and dates, pp. xlix.-lxi.
 the Apocalypse of, B¹=i.-ix. 1 ; xliii. - xlv. 7 ; xlv. - xlv. 6 ; lxxvii.-lxxxii. ; lxxxiv. ; lxxxvi.-lxxxvii. ; pp. lv.-lvii. ; lx. ; 68-69, 119, 140
 Baruch, the Apocalypse of, B²=xiii. 1-3a ; xx. ; xxiv. 2-4 ; xxii. 3b-12 ; xxv. ; xiv.-xix. ; xxi.-xxiv. 1 ; xxx. 2-5 ; xli.-xlii. ; xlviii. 1-47 ; xlix.-lii. 3 ; lxxv. ; xxxi.-xxxii. 6 ; liv. 17, 18 ; xlviii. 48-50 ; lii. 5-7 ; liv. 16 ; xlv. 8-15 ; lxxxiii. ; xxxii. 7-xxxv. ; lxxvi. ; pp. lv.-lx. ; 20-21, 57-58, 66, 68, 69, 74, 80, 94, 117, 140
 the Apocalypse of, B³=lxxxv. ; pp. liv.-lv. ; 154, 156 the Apocalypse of, S=x. 6-xii. 4 ; pp. lix.-lx. ; 14-20 the Apocalypse of, A¹=xxvii.-xxx. 1 ; pp. li.-liii. ; 48-49, 61-62, 87 the Apocalypse of, A²=xxxvi.-xl. ; pp. li.-liii. ; 61-62, 87
 the Apocalypse of, A³=liii.-lxxiv. ; pp. li.-liv. ; 87
 the Apocalypse of, the Syriac Version of, pp. xxii.-xxx.
 the Apocalypse of, the Syriac Version—a translation from the Greek, pp. xliii.-xlv.
 the Apocalypse of, the Greek—a translation from a Hebrew original, pp. xlv.-liii.
 the Apocalypse of, modern Latin Version by Ceriani, pp. xxx.-xxxiii.
 the Apocalypse of, its relations with 4 Ezra, pp. lxxvii.-lxxvi.
 the Apocalypse of, its relations with the New Testament, pp. lxxvi.-lxxxix.
 the Apocalypse of, its relations

- with other books of Baruch, pp. xvi.-xxii.
- Baruch, the Lost Epistle of, pp. lxv.-lxvii.
- the Lost Epistle of, modern Latin Version by Ceriani, pp. xxx.-xxxiii.
- the Apocryphal Book of, pp. xvii.-xviii.
- the Gnostic Book of, p. xix.
- a Latin Book of, pp. xix.-xx.
- the Rest of the Words of, pp. xviii.-xix.
- Bath-qôl, the, xxii. 1, note
- Behemoth, xxix. 4, note
- Boasting of the Gentiles, v. 1 ; vii. 1 ; lxvii. 2, 6-7, note ; lxxx. 3
- Body, the, to be restored by the earth, xlii. 8, note
- CALEB, lix. 1
- Cedron, the valley of, v. 5, note ; xxi. 1 ; xxxi. 2
- Chaldees, the army of, viii. 4
- Christians referred to, xli. 3, note ; xlii. 4 ; xlviii. 24 ; lxxxv. 14
- Consciousness of right and wrong in all men, xlviii. 40, note
- Corruption, the present world, its sphere, xxi. 19, note ; xl. 3
- Created, a definite number, xxiii. 4-5, notes
- Creation ex nihilo, xxi. 4, note
- the new, xxxii. 6, note
- DAVID, lxi. 1
- Death, physical, traced to Adam, xxiii. 4, note
- premature, traced to Adam, xxiii. 4, note ; liv. 15, note
- spiritual, traced to Adam, p. lxxx., footnote ; xlviii. 42, note
- Deluge, the, lvi. 15
- Dillmann, pp. xviii., xxxv.
- Dispersion, the return from the, lxxvii. 6 ; lxxviii. 7, note
- Dragons, x. 6, note
- Drummond, p. xxxv.
- EDERSHEIM, p. xxxv.
- Elijah, lxxvii. 24
- Emendations of the Syriac by Bensly, xxxii. 5
- of the Syriac by Ceriani, x. 18 ; xiv. 6 ; li. 1 ; lvi. 4, 14 ; lx. 2 ; lxix. 1, 4 ; lxx. 8 ; lxxvii. 16
- of the Syriac by the Editor, vii. 2 ; xiv. 5 ; xxiv. 4 ; xlii. 5 ; xlviii. 32 ; li. 16 ; lix. 11 ; lxvii. 2 ; lxx. 5 ; lxxii. 1 ; lxxiv. 4 ; lxxv. 1 ; lxxvi. 2
- of the text through retranslation into Hebrew, pp. li.-liii. ; x. 13 ; xxi. 9, 11, 12 ; xxiv. 2 ; xxix. 5 ; xliv. 12 ; lxii. 7 ; lxx. 6 ; lxxx. 2 ; lxxxv. 12
- of the text through retranslation into Greek, iii. 7 ; xxi. 9, 11, 12 ; xxiv. 1, 2 ; lxii. 7
- Enoch's functions transferred to Moses, xiii. 3, note ; lix. 5-11, note
- Euphrates, lxxvii. 22 ; lxxviii. 1
- Ewald, p. xxxiii.
- Ezra, Fourth—its relations to our Apocalypse, pp. lxvii.-lxxvi.
- composite, pp. lxvii.-lxix.
- conflicts in doctrine with Apocalypse of Baruch, pp. lxix.-lxxi.
- from Hebrew sources, p. lxxi.
- relations of its constituents to those of the Apocalypse of Baruch, pp. lxxii.-lxxvi.
- Ezra, Fifth, p. xx.
- FAITH, liv. 21, note
- Fasts, v. 7, note ; ix. 2, note
- Fire—the final abode of the wicked, xliv. 15, note ; xlviii. 39, 43 ; lix. 2, note
- Forgiveness, pp. lxxxi.-lxxxiv.
- Forty days of instruction, lxxvi. 4-5
- Freewill in the Apocalypse of Baruch and 4 Ezra, pp. lxx.-lxxi. ; lxxx.-lxxxi. ; xviii. 2, note ; liv. 15, note
- Fritzsche, pp. xvii., xxiii., xxxii., xxxiv.
- GEDALIAH, v. 5 ; xliv. 1
- Gehenna, lix. 10
- Gentiles, the boasting of the, v. 1 ;

- vii. 1; lxvii. 2, 6-7, note; lxxx. 3
the destiny of the, lxxii. 4-6, note
- HARRIS, RENDEL, pp. xviii, 55
Hausrath, p. xxxiv.
Hebraisms surviving in the Syriac text, pp. xlvii.-li.
Hebrew original of the Apocalypse of Baruch, pp. xlv.-liii.
Hebron, xlvii. 1
Herodotus quoted on, xix. 6-8
Hexaemeron, fragment of an, xxix.
4, note
Hezekiah, lxiii. 1, 3, 5
Hilgenfeld, p. xxxiv.
- INHABITANTS of the earth, xxv. 1,
note
Intermediate place of happiness,
xxi. 23, note; lix. 10, note of torment, xxx. 5; xxxvi. 11; lii.
1, 2, note
Israel chastened, i. 5, note
- JABISH, v. 5
Jacob, seed of, xvii. 4; xxxi. 3
James, pp. xx.-xxi.; xxvii.-xxviii.
Jecooniah, i. 1
Jeremiah, ii. 1; v. 5; ix.; x. 2, 4; xxxiii. 1
accompanies the captivity to Babylon in B², x. 2, note;
xxxiii. 2
does not accompany the captivity in B¹, x. 2, note; lxxvii. 12, note
Jeroboam, lxii. 1
Jerusalem removed for a time, i. 4, note; vi. 9; xxxii.
to be restored in B¹, i. 4, note;
cf. also lxxviii. 7, note not to be restored in B², i. 4, note the heavenly, iv. 3, note called "mother," iii. 1, note its fall due to the sins of both Judah and Israel, lxxvii. 10, note
Jezebel, lxii. 3
Josephus quoted on, i. 3; xlviii. 34;
liv. 15, 19; lxxxv. 3
Joshua, lix. 1
Josiah, lxvi. 1
Judgment, the final, xlviii. 39; lix. 8
- Justification, doctrine of, in Baruch and 4 Ezra, pp. lxx., lxxxi.;
xxi. 9, note
Justify—its various meanings, xxi.
9, note
Justin Martyr quoted on, xxix. 3
- KABISCH, pp. xxxix. - xlii.; lxvii.-
lxviii.
Kneucker, pp. xvii., xxxv.
- LAGARDE, pp. xxiv., xxx.
Land, the Holy; its peculiarsanctity, xxix. 2, note
Law, the, in Baruch and 4 Ezra,
p. lxix.; xv. 5, note; xxxviii.
2, note
glorified in proportion as the Messianic and national hopes fail, xv. 5, note the unwritten, lvii. 2, note
Lelioto, x. 8, note
Leviathan, xxix. 4, note
Living creatures, the, li. 11
- MANASSEH, lxiv. 1, 6, 7; lxv. 1
Many to be saved according to Baruch, but not according to 4 Ezra, xxi. 11, note
Marshall, p. xvii.
Marvels—a sign of the Messiah's
Advent, xxix. 6, note
Mercy-seat, vi. 7
Merit of the Fathers, xiv. 7, note
Messiah, xxix. 3; xxx. 1; xli. 1 the, and the Law, xv. 5, note in A¹ has a passive rôle, xxix. 3,
note
in A² and A³ has an active rôle, xxix. 3, note; xl. 1, note;
lxxii. 4-6, note
Messianic woes, xxvii. 1, note
Millenarian fancies, xxix. 5
Miriam, lix. 1
Moses, iii. 9; iv. 5; xvii. 4; lix.
1; lxxxiv. 2, 5
- NEBUCHADNEZZAR, lxxix. 1
- OAK, the, vi. 1, note; lxxvii. 18
Obedience to the law and the Rabbis enforced, xlvi. 5

- Ophir, x. 19
 Original sin in Baruch, 4 Ezra, the New Testament, pp. lxx.-lxxi., lxxx.-lxxxii.; xviii. 2, note; xxiii. 4, note; liv. 15, note
- PARADISE, iv. 3, 6; lix. 8
 Paronomasiae in the Hebrew original, p. liii.
 Pharisees, the, referred to, xlii. 5, note
 Philo quoted on, xxi. 4
 Polyglot Syriac text of the Epistle of Baruch, pp. xxvii.-xxviii.
 Predestination and freewill in Judaism, liv. 15, 19, note
 Proselytes, xli. 4, note; xlii. 5; xlviii. 19
- QUOTATIONS from the Old Testament, pp. xlv.-xlvi.
- RABBINISM, fusion of the popular Messianic views and early, p. 87
 Ramiel, lv. 3, note; lxiii. 6
 Recognition after death, l. 3, 4, note
 Renan, pp. xxxiv.-xxxv.
 Resurrection, the, p. lxxx.; xxx. 1; l.-li., notes
 Righteous, the risen, li. 10, note
 Righteousness variously conceived, xxiv. 1, note
 Rosenthal, pp. xxxvi.-xxxvii.
 Ryle, p. xliii.
- SALMANASAR, lxii. 6
 Sanday and Headlam's Romans quoted on, xxi. 9; liv. 15, 18, 19, 21
 Saved, many to be, xxi. 11
 Schürer, pp. xvii., xxxvii.-xxxix.
 Sennacherib, lxiii. 2, 4
 Serial, v. 5
 Shedim, x. 8, note
 Sheol, xi. 6, note; lii. 1, 2, note; lvi. 6, note; lxxxiii. 17
 Sirens, x. 8, note
 Solomon, lxi. 1; lxxvii. 25
- Son of the law, xlv. 4, note
 Sophocles quoted on, x. 6
 Spheres, the, xlviii. 9
 Stähelin, p. xxxiv.
 Stanton, p. xxxvii.
- TACITUS quoted on, viii. 2
 Temple, the second, its low repute, lxviii. 6, note
 Theognis quoted, x. 6, note
 Thomson, p. xxxv.
 Titles of God—the Lord, i. 1, note; O LORD, my Lord, iii. 1, note; Mighty God, vi. 8, note; God, x. 1, note; the Lofty One, xiii. 8, note; Most High, xvii. 1, note; the Mighty One, xxi. 3; note
 Treasury of manna, xxix. 8
 Treasuries of good deeds, xxiv. 1, note of souls, xxi. 23, note; xxiii. 4
 Tribes, the nine and a half, lxii. 5; lxxvii. 19; lxxviii. 1 the two and a half, lxiv. 5 the ten, i. 2
- VISION of the cedar and the vine, i.e. A², xxxvi.-xl.
 of the cloud and the lightning, i.e. A³, liii.-lxxxiv.
- Visiting the earth, God's, xx. 2, note
- WEBER, passim
 Wieseler, p. xxxiv.
 Works, the doctrine of, pp. lxix.-lxx., lxxx.; ii. 1, 2, notes; xiv. 7, note
 World, the, made for man, xiv. 18, 19, note; xv. 7; xxi. 24 the, of corruption, xxi. 19, note the, of incorruption, xxi. 19, note; lvii. 2, note
- YOKE of the law, xli. 3, note
- ZEDEKIAH, viii. 5
 Zion, v. 1, 3; vii. 1; x. 7, 10, 12; xi. 1, etc.

In Crown 8vo, Cloth. Price 7s. 6d. net

STUDIES IN HEBREW PROPER NAMES

BY

G. BUCHANAN GRAY, M.A.

Lecturer in Hebrew and Old Testament Theology in Mansfield College late Senior Kennicott Scholar in the University of Oxford

A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON

In Demy 8vo, Cloth. Price 24s.

INTRODUCTION
TO THE BOOK OF ISAIAH
WITH AN APPENDIX CONTAINING THE UNDOUBTED PORTIONS OF THE TWO CHIEF PROPHETIC WRITERS IN A TRANSLATION

BY

The Rev. T. K. CHEYNE, M.A., D.D.

ORIEL PROFESSOR OF THE INTERPRETATION OF HOLY SCRIPTURE AT OXFORD AND FORMERLY FELLOW OF BALLIOL COLLEGE; CANON OF ROCHESTER

“This elaborate and scholarly work. . . . We must leave to professed scholars the detailed appreciation of Professor Cheyne’s work. His own learning and reputation suffice to attest its importance.”—The Times.

“Full of learning, and forms a perfect mine of critical research.”—National Observer.

“This truly great and monumental work.”—Critical Review.

“We heartily congratulate the author on the completion of a long projected work, which will at once take its place among the most important on its subject.”—Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review.

“A further and notable contribution to the study of the interesting and difficult problems presented by the Book of Isaiah.”—Baptist Magazine.

“This monument of patient scholarship, wide reading, and indefatigable research.”—The Speaker.

“Ein ausgezeichnetes Werk! Des Verfassers kritische Kraft, seine Umsicht in der Untersuchung und die besonnene Ruhe seines Urtheils, insbesondere aber auch die ungewöhnliche Klarheit seiner Darstellung, die auch die verwickeltsten Fragen in angenehmster Form darzubieten vermag, haben längst schon seinen Namen bei den Fachgenossen hochangesehen gemacht.”—Deutsche Litteratur Zeitung.

A & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON.

WORKS BY THE LATE W. ROBERTSON SMITH, M.A., LL.D.
Professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge

Demy 8vo. Price 15s. net.

LECTURES ON THE RELIGION OF THE SEMITES

THE FUNDAMENTAL INSTITUTIONS

New Edition. Revised throughout by the Author

Demy 8vo. Price 10s. 6d.

THE OLD TESTAMENT IN THE JEWISH CHURCH

A COURSE OF LECTURES ON BIBLICAL CRITICISM

Second Edition. Revised and much Enlarged

Post 8vo. Price 10s. 6d.

THE PROPHETS OF ISRAEL AND THEIR PLACE IN HISTORY

To the Close of the Eighth Century B.C.

New Edition

WITH INTRODUCTION AND ADDITIONAL NOTES

BY

The Rev. T. K. CHEYNE, M.A., D.D.

ORIEL PROFESSOR OF THE INTERPRETATION OF HOLY SCRIPTURE AT OXFORD
CANON OF ROCHESTER

A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON

A SHORT HISTORY OF SYRIAC LITERATURE

BY

The Late WILLIAM WRIGHT, LL.D.

PROFESSOR OF ARABIC IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE

Crown 8vo. Price 6s. net.

SKETCH OF THE HISTORY OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH

BY

J. WELLHAUSEN

PROFESSOR AT MARBURG

Third Edition

Crown 8vo. Price 5s.

SKETCHES FROM EASTERN HISTORY

BY

THEODOR NÖLDEKE,

PROFESSOR OF ORIENTAL LANGUAGES IN THE UNIVERSITY OF STRASSBURG

TRANSLATED BY

JOHN SUTHERLAND BLACK, M.A., LL.D.

And Revised by the Author

Demy 8vo. Price 10s. 6d.

A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON

W.C. 29.7.44
UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO
LIBRARY

Do not remove the card from this Pocket.

Acme Library Card Pocket
Under Pat. "Ref. Index File."
Made by LIBRARY BUREAU, Boston

ITHAMAR GRUENWALD

APOCALYPTIC AND MERKAVAH MYSTICISM

THE UNIVERSITY OF TULSA

000
100
100
100

DATE DUE

Book Returned
 JUN 12 2007

ILL DUE 8/13/82
 Interlibrary loan
 To: Dallas Texas Jan 1978
 Due: 8/29/84

NOV 13 1990

DECLARED
 FEB 19 1991
 RETURNED

NOV 12 1991

JAN 02 1992

RETURNED

Interlibrary Loan
 To: Memphis P.L. (Jn)
 Due: 2/3/96

GAYLORD

PRINTED IN U.S.A

APOCALYPTIC AND
MERKAVAH MYSTICISM

INSTITUTUM IUDAICUM, TÜBINGEN
OTTO MICHEL, MARTIN HENGEL, PETER SCHÄFER

ARBEITEN ZUR GESCHICHTE
DES ANTIKEN JUDENTUMS
UND DES URCHRISTENTUMS

BAND XIV

APOCALYPTIC AND MERKAVAH MYSTICISM

LEIDEN/KÖLN
E. J. BRILL
1980

BRITISH MUSEUM
LIBRARY
1980

APOCALYPTIC AND MERKAVAH MYSTICISM

BY

ITHAMAR GRUENWALD

LEIDEN/KÖLN

E. J. BRILL

1980

University of Tulsa
McFarlin Library
Tulsa, Oklahoma

ISBN 90 04 05959 8

Copyright 1980 by E. J. Brill, Leiden, The Netherlands

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced or translated in any form, by print, photoprint, microfilm, microfiche or any other means without written permission from the publisher

PRINTED IN THE NETHERLANDS

University of Tulsa
McFarlin Library
Tulsa, Oklahoma

578
980

CONTENTS

Introduction	VII
Abbreviations & Transcriptions	XII

PART ONE

I. Two Essential Qualities of Jewish Apocalyptic	3
II. The Mystical Elements in Apocalyptic	29
III. The Attitude Towards the Merkavah Speculations in the Literature of the Tannaim and Amoraim	73
IV. The Hekhalot Literature	98

PART TWO

Introduction	127
Re'uyot Yehezkel	134
Hekhalot Zutreti	142
Hekhalot Rabbati	150
Merkavah Rabbah	174
Ma'aseh Merkavah	181
"Hekhalot" Fragments	188
Sefer Hekhalot (3 Enoch)	191
Masekhet Hekhalot	209
Shi'ur Qomah	213
Physiognomy, Chiromancy and Metoposcopy	218
Sefer Ha-Razim	225

Appendices by Saul Lieberman

1. Metatron, the Meaning of His Name and His Functions	235
2. The Knowledge of Halakha by the Author (or Authors) of the Heikhaloth	241
Indices	245

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2022 with funding from Kahle/Austin Foundation

INTRODUCTION

This book is a description of Jewish Merkavah ("Divine Chariot") mysticism, its history, structure and main thematic features. Merkavah mysticism developed from visions like those described in Isaiah vi and Ezekiel i, viii and x, though when Merkavah mysticism appeared on the literary scene, it did so in a more complex manner than its historical forefathers. The earliest post-biblical traces of Merkavah mysticism are found in apocalyptic literature and in some of the texts discovered at Qumran. However, the literature that first gives a full-scale presentation of Merkavah mysticism is called the Hekhalot ("Divine Palaces") literature, mainly composed in Eretz-Yisrael at the time of the Talmud and the beginning of the Ge'onic period (circa 200-700 C.E.). Other traces of such mysticism are found in the rabbinic writings.

As a creative literary stream the Merkavah tradition ended some time in the Ge'onic period, but references to that tradition are also made in the writings of Jewish medieval mysticism, the Kabbalah. We know, too, that the German Ḥasidim (a movement of Jewish piety that flourished in twelfth- and thirteenth-century Germany) engaged in some forms of Merkavah mysticism and contributed in an important way to the preservation of the Hekhalot literature in manuscripts. The term Merkavah mysticism derives from the Hebrew term Ma'aseh Merkavah ("The Works of the Divine Chariot"), which usually means the mystical explication of the first chapter of Ezekiel. It appears that the mystical speculations about the Merkavah were first developed in the circle of Rabbi Yoḥanan ben Zakkai and his pupils (second half of the first century C.E.), though, as has been said, traces of Merkavah mysticism are already present in the apocalyptic corpus of writings and in the Qumran literature. In rabbinic writings, the Ma'aseh Merkavah go hand in hand with the Ma'aseh Bereshit ("The Works of the Creation of the World"), that is, Jewish cosmology, and together they form the two branches of the esoteric teachings of ancient Judaism. Interestingly, for Maimonides Ma'aseh Merkavah and Ma'aseh Bereshit stood, metaphorically, for Aristotelian metaphysics and physics respectively.

The prophet Ezekiel supplied the Merkavah tradition with some of its key notions and visual concepts, and his influence prevailed in the literary history of Jewish mysticism till Sefer Yetzirah ("The Book of Creation/Formation") provided a new imagery and symbolic language. Still, Ezekiel was for a very long time the model for visionaries to follow and imitate. All manner of practices were adapted and invented in order to bring about the realization of mystical experiences like those Ezekiel was thought to have had. Of course, as time passed the Merkavah tradition underwent substantial changes: new modes of mystical experiences were discovered, new ideas and concepts were introduced and new points of emphasis reshaped the material.

The present book is divided into two parts. The first contains an analysis of the major features of the Merkavah tradition. In the second a detailed description is given of all the known Hekhalot writings. As for the first part, it begins with a general characterization of some of the qualities of Jewish apocalyptic which were hitherto either wrongly or insufficiently presented by scholars. This prepares the way for the second chapter, which analyses the Merkavah material incorporated in some of the early Jewish and Christian apocalyptic writings. The third chapter contains a discussion of the Merkavah material incorporated in the rabbinic writings. The fourth chapter gives a general characterization of the Hekhalot literature. Both parts of the book contain also several notes on the Merkavah material incorporated in the gnostic writings found at Nag Hammadi.

Some readers will probably think that this book could have gained had the writer applied to his study the methods of form criticism. Now an accepted methodology, form criticism could have really helped scholars in orienting themselves to the problems raised by this subject. However, it appears that in spite of the study already carried out in the field of Merkavah mysticism the way is not yet open there for the application of any of the higher forms of criticism. The main reason for this is that we still lack critical editions and commentaries for almost all the texts under discussion. Before such editions and commentaries are at hand, final judgement based on serious textual criticism has to be postponed. Consequently, we have limited ourselves to presenting a comprehensive survey of the Merkavah tradition, and it is hoped that what the book does will outweigh what it cannot yet do.

On the whole, Merkavah mysticism has stimulated most controversial attitudes and utterances. To begin with, The Mishnah Hagigah ii, 1 forbids the study of the Ma'aseh Merkavah in public, to say nothing of the many dangers allegedly involved in the study and realization of Merkavah mysticism as described in the Rabbinic writings and Hekhalot literature. In one of his letters to his kabbalistic colleagues in Europe, Shlomo Dresnitz, who came from Strassnitz in Moravia to Safed in the year 1602, wrote that Rabbi Yitzḥaq Luria Ashkenazi, The Holy 'Ari as he is called, regarded the Hekhalot literature as being full of errors. However, Shlomo Dresnitz reports, the founder of Lurianic Kabbalah believed these errors were purposely introduced to prevent misuse of the writings for magical purposes. Of course, as the writer of the letter says, the Holy 'Ari could have removed all these errors, but for obvious reasons he did not do so. The evidence contained in that letter, as later incorporated in the small book Shivḥei Ha-'Ari ("The Sacred Deeds of the 'Ari") is only one testimony to the fact that the kind of literature we are discussing in this book persisted to be a controversial issue in the history of Jewish literature for a very long time.

In yet another context we find Maimonides attacking certain books which belong to the Hekhalot literature. In the introduction to his commentary to Mishnah Sanhedrin, Pereq Heleq, Maimonides writes in connection with Rabbi 'Akiva's view quoted in the Mishnah to the effect that "he who reads in the Sefarim Hitzonim (Apocrypha?) has no share in the world to come": "And Sefarim Hitzonim—it is said (cf. Bavli Sanhedrin 100/b) that they are books written by heretics; and also the book written by Ben Sira (actually Pseudo Ben Sira), who wrote books which contained inter alia the subject of physiognomy—all these are worthless books and their study is a waste of time". Now, as we shall see in the second part of our book, the subject of physiognomy is one of the oldest subjects in Jewish esoteric literature, and the attitude shown by Maimonides towards its study is reminiscent of his derogatory attitude towards the Shi'ur Qomah tractate. In one of his Halakhic Responsa Maimonides attacked the Shi'ur Qomah as a book composed by a non-Jew, and recommended its destruction.

These are only three out of many views expressed in connection with the Hekhalot literature. To these one can add the views expressed by modern scholars, to the effect that Merkavah mysticism "constitutes an inner Jewish concomitant to Gnosis" (Scholem), or that in comparison to later developments of Merkavah mysticism, the mysticism of the early Tannaim, among them Rabbi Yoḥanan ben Zakkai and the four sages who entered the Pardes, was "an ascetic type of mysticism" (Urbach). Under the circumstances I have found it necessary to try to give as balanced a picture of the subject matter as possible. And if I have been successful in that undertaking, I owe a lot to many people.

First to my wife, Rachel. She followed me in my studies with love and devotion. Fortunately for her, she did not stray too far along the path where my studies lead, but where she stayed I always saw a beacon directing me to safety.

This book also owes a lot to Professor Gershom Scholem and to his writings. I had the honour of being invited by him to spend the academic year 1975/76 at the Institute for Advanced Studies of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. The stimulating hours and days we spent together there have left their traces in this book.

It is at the Institute for Advanced Studies that I first met Professor Saul Lieberman. The interest he took in my studies is clearly seen in the two appendices which he offered to write for this book. In addition, his great erudition has helped me by clarifying a number of questions and prevented me from falling into pitfalls of ignorance.

In mentioning the Institute for Advanced Studies, it is with great satisfaction that I recall my colleagues there: Professors Daniel Sperber, Shama Friedman and David Winston, with whom I discussed several issues, particularly of the first part of the book.

A word of gratitude is also due to the staff of the Institute for Advanced Studies and its secretaries who typed most of the manuscript. Professor Arie Devotzki, the Head of the Institute, encouraged us all in our studies and did everything in his power to further its success.

There are many other colleagues who deserve more than mere words can express. First, Professor Morton Smith of Columbia University, who read great parts of the typewritten manuscript, corrected its style and made many useful suggestions. Professor John Strugnell of Harvard University read parts of the manuscript, and he, too, made several useful suggestions. Professor Bentley Layton of Yale University helped me greatly in matters relating to gnosticism.

The editors of the Series "Arbeiten zur Geschichte des antiken Judentums und des Urchristentums", Professor Dr. Martin Hengel of Tübingen, and Professor Dr. Peter Schäfer of Cologne, read the manuscript chapter by chapter and encouraged my work as it was progressing.

Mrs. Shifrah Danai checked the references and compiled the Index.

All these nice people, and others too, helped me in achieving what I have. If, however, the book contains any shortcomings, I alone am to blame.

Last but not least, I would like to mention my parents and children. They were so eager to see this book in print. Here it is dedicated to them, and to my wife, in love and gratitude.

Jerusalem, June 22, 1977

ABBREVIATIONS

OGIS = Orientis Graeci Inscriptiones Selectae
TB = Talmud Babylonicum
TP = Talmud Palaestinense

TRANSCRIPTIONS

א = 'a ע = 'a
ב = v
ו = w
ה = h
ט = ʔ (sometimes: t)
כ = k
ח = kh
צ = z (sometimes: tz)
ק = q (sometimes: c or k)
ש = sh (sometimes: sch)
ת = t

PART ONE

CHAPTER ONE

TWO ESSENTIAL QUALITIES OF JEWISH APOCALYPTIC

A

In spite of a century of intensive studies, the rise of Jewish apocalyptic still seems to be a riddle. Nothing can better illustrate the uncertainty of modern scholarship with regard to the various problems involved in the study of apocalypticism than the title of Klaus Koch's book: Ratlos vor der Apokalypitik.¹ Admittedly, there are many studies which have considerably contributed to our understanding of the phenomenon,² but Jewish apocalypticism is still, by and large, a riddle, particularly so if we consider its rather vague origin. No attempt will be made here to lift the mists that overhang its pre-history, though the writer inclines to the view, that Jewish apocalyptic had a considerably long history before it entered the literary stage, which it did about the Hasmonaeon period. This chapter will attempt to discuss briefly the place Jewish apocalyptic occupies in the history of Jewish religious thought and literature. We shall focus our attention on two literary genres of Jewish literature—Prophecy and Wisdom—and in their light examine some of the particular qualities of Jewish apocalyptic. Naturally, our discussion of biblical prophetic and wisdom literature does not strive to be exhaustive. We shall touch these two fields only inasmuch as they can help us in outlining what is new and original in apocalypticism.

We shall examine Jewish apocalyptic in the light of its relationship to Scripture.³ It is natural that whenever the proponents of some

¹ Klaus Koch, Ratlos vor der Apokalypitik, Gütersloh, Gütersloher Verlag Gerd Mohn, 1970. The German title of the book expresses the idea of perplexity better than that of the English translation, The Rediscovery of Apocalyptic, London, SCM Press, 1972. [See now P. D. Hanson, "Prolegomena to the Study of Jewish Apocalyptic", in: Magnalia Dei: The Mighty Acts of God, ed. F. M. Cross, et al., New York, Doubleday & Co., 1976, pp. 389-413.]

² See particularly, H. H. Rowley, The Relevance of Apocalyptic, London, Lutterworth Press, 1963; J. M. Schmidt, Die Jüdische Apokalypitik, Neukirchen-Vluyn, Neukirchener Verlag, 1969; idem, "Forschung zur jüdischen Apokalypitik", Beihefte zur Evangelische Theologie Verkündigung und Forschung I (1969): Altes Testament, S. 44-69.

³ The problem of Scriptural apocalyptic, which has been variously discussed new ideas in Jewish religious thought sought to introduce them, they found themselves obliged to do so in the frame of some kind of relationship to the Holy Scriptures. This is the essence of Jewish tradition: people look for the authority of Scripture even in cases where their ideas do not explicitly concur with what Scripture plainly says. In this respect it seems safe to argue that midrashic ways of thinking—whether they involved explicating, or widening and even rewriting Scripture—were much older and more widely spread than is sometimes assumed. This relationship which Jewish religious thought seeks to bear to Scripture does not limit its own relative independence. Quite daring and new modes of thinking could well be introduced on the assumption that they really were the hidden sense of Scripture. Medieval Jewish Kabbalah is a famous example of how completely novel ways of expression and thought could be introduced as the symbolic content of Scripture.⁴ But long before that, chiefly during the last two hundred and fifty years of the Second Temple, a kind of literature developed which, in the framework of peculiar religious experiences, brought forward a series of ideas and concepts which, if viewed in their relationship to Scripture, were quite revolutionary.

Revolutionary they were, since they purported to disclose, at least to a select group of believers, things which Scripture did not explicitly say or declared to be beyond the reach of the human intellect. Of course, not everything contained in apocalyptic literature belonged to these two categories, but the material that does belong to them, is from the point of view of Scripture, absolutely rule-breaking. To illustrate our argument we shall first pick up certain features of the Book of Job and examine them in the light of what happened to them later on in apocalyptic literature. Whenever the Book of Job was composed,⁵ it clearly expresses a basic mood found in Scripture, and particularly in the so-called wisdom parts, namely that man cannot understand everything and hence is not justified in questioning the ways of God. According to the Book of in recent years, can be left out of consideration in the present context. See further, below n. 42. [See now P. D. Hanson, The Dawn of Apocalyptic, Philadelphia, Fortress Press, 1975.]

⁴ See G. Scholem, Zur Kabbala und ihrer Symbolik, Zürich, Rhein-Verlag, 1960, pp. 49-116, 159-207.

⁵ For a brief and recent summary of the views concerning the date and the authorship of the Book of Job see M. H. Pope, The Anchor Bible: Job, Garden City, New York, Doubleday & Company, 1965, pp. xxx-xxxviii.

Job there is a correlation between man's inability to understand the basic laws of Nature and his inability to understand the principles of God's justice. Time and again, Job's friends draw his attention to the wondrous ways in which Nature operates.⁶ When they do so, they mean to imply the conclusion that the human intellect—as is so drastically illustrated by its confrontation with Nature—is incapable of grasping the relation between man's just behaviour and the amount of suffering which befalls him. This is also the conclusion which God wants Job to draw, when He reveals Himself in the storm at the end of the book. In fact, God endorses what has previously been implied by Job's friends.

Briefly, the line of these arguments in the Book of Job goes as follows: First, in answer to Job's curse on the day of his birth, Eliphaz says: "...to God would I commit my cause; who does great things and unsearchable, marvelous things without number: He gives rain upon the earth and sends water upon the fields; He sets on high those who are lowly, and those who mourn are lifted to safety" (v,8-11; RSV). God's omnipotence is here illustrated by His wondrous works in Nature and by His care for those who are most in need of it. When Job stresses again that he still expects God to repay accordingly those who trust in Him, and when he expresses his dissatisfaction with what the second of the friends, Bildad the Shuhite, suggests, Zophar comes and, in line with what Eliphaz has already implied, says: "Can you find out the deep things of God? Can you find out the limit of the Almighty? The heights of heaven . . . Deeper than Sheol—what can you know?" (xi,7-8). It is impossible to grasp God's wisdom, and so what one has to do is to trust in Him and hope. These and some other arguments are repeatedly brought forward till we reach the turning point of the book. In the speech which begins in chapter xxvii Job once again concludes: "As God lives, who has taken away my right, and the Almighty, who has made my soul bitter" (xxvii,2). That is, Job is absolutely convinced of his integrity. But he is now also ready to accept the fact, that only in God is wisdom to be found and that only He knows what wisdom really is. The conclusion for man is: "...the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding" (xxviii,28). This conclusion, common in biblical wisdom-literature,⁷ could be here interpreted to mean, that since man cannot attain wisdom, he must content himself with the fear of God. The inaccessibility of divine wisdom should not lead to rebellion but to respectful submission.

⁶ G. von Rad, Weisheit in Israel, Neukirchen-Vluyn, Neukirchener Verlag, 1970, pp. 267 ff.; idem, Gesammelte Studien zum Alten Testament, München, Chr. Kaiser Verlag, 1965, pp. 262-271.

Since Elihu's discourses do not add anything substantial from our point of view, we may directly turn to God's answer from the storm. Actually, God's "answer" is a long series of questions to which Job is unable to find any answer. Hence he is driven to the conclusion, that there is no point in arguing against God. What Job could find in God's questions is an extensive list of His activities in Nature, activities which man can neither directly experience nor reasonably explain. This long list of activities is in fact a catalogue of deeds or subjects which are supposed to be beyond the reach of the human mind. Under such discouraging conditions man has to give in, as Job actually does: his relative ignorance is a conditio sine qua non in any moral argument with the Deity.⁸ The solution which the Book of Job, thus, suggests for the problem of human suffering is, in this respect, a "negative" one: no satisfactory explanation can be given from the point of view of the suffering human being. Man has to concede that his intellect allows only a partial, and hence insufficient, understanding of the ways of God. The "happy ending" in the case of Job, if it really belongs to the main body of the book, has an obvious mitigating effect; but it is an indirect way of approaching the painful problem of human suffering. The restoration of happiness and wealth to Job and his family is no answer in principle: it only bids us view Job's case in a broader perspective. In the terms of the "happy ending" the period of suffering becomes an unpleasant interlude, and is no real challenge to the justice of God. Yet, as we are going to see, the Jewish tradition did not see in the suggestions made in the Book of Job a conclusive solution to the problem of the lack of any explainable coordination between moral integrity and human suffering. Time and again the same questions were forced on the minds of the people, and in the framework of different historical circumstances and novel intellectual climates new solutions were approached.

As we have already seen, God challenges Job's competence to argue against Him by asking him a long series of questions about the wondrous ways of Nature. These questions include references to the creation of the world (xxxviii,4 ff.), the structure of the universe (xxxviii,15 ff.), meteorological phenomena (xxxviii,22 ff.), astronomical laws (xxxviii,31 ff.), animal life and feeding (xxxix,1 ff.), Behemoth (xl,15 ff.), Leviathan (xl,25 ff.), and ancient mythology (xli,5 ff.). All these items of knowledge are riddles to the mind of man. They reflect the contents of God's wisdom, as it was outlined by Job himself in chapter xxviii. And indeed it is in Job's way of putting the idea that we get a deeper view of how God manifests His wisdom in the performances of Nature: "When He gave to the wind its weight, and meted out the waters by measure; when He made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder" (xxviii,25/6). God, and only He, knows the right proportions of everything, and only He is able to regulate natural phenomena.⁹ A similar idea is expressed by the prophet Isaiah when he refers to the creation of the world: "Who has measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and marked off the heavens with a span, enclosed the dust of the earth in a measure, and weighed the mountains in scales and the hills in a balance?"¹⁰ The idea that order depends on correct measurement and right proportion is in itself neither unique nor new: it may be found implied in the writings of the Greek philosophers and it still holds true in modern science. What is, nevertheless, noteworthy in biblical thought is the fact, that God is there believed to know, and to be responsible for, these right quantities and proportions, and that they are beyond understanding. It is here that Job sees the essential difference between the capabilities of the human intellect and the wisdom of the Deity. Since scientific research and knowledge begin with the attempt to find out what these quantities and proportions are, it may be inferred, that the view expressed in the Book of Job runs counter to the scientifically oriented mind.

⁷ See J. Maier & J. Schreiner (eds.) Literatur und Religion des Frühjudentums, Würzburg, Echter Verlag, 1973, p. 44/5, n. 6; W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, Vol. II, London, SCM Press, 1967, p. 92.

⁸ See I. Gruenwald, "'Knowledge' and 'Vision'", Israel Oriental Studies III (1973), p. 69 ff.

⁹ See art. cit. (previous note), p. 70, n. 29. To the references cited there one may add The Wisdom of Solomon xi,20: "But by measure and number and weight thou didst order all things." As for the weight of the wind see further, Beresbit Rabbā (ed. Theodor-Albeck), p. 232: "Rav Huna said: Because of three winds which came out (= from their treasure houses into the world) without weight there came destruction on the world". See also 4 Ezra iv,5: "Or measure me the measure of the wind".

¹⁰ For the idea of the measurement of the seawater see further Tal. Bav. Horayot 10a (end) where two sages who lived in the days of Rabbi Aqiva are mentioned as being able to calculate the number of the drops in the sea, but who nevertheless had nothing to eat and to wear. Cf. also notes 14 and 22 below. See also A. Wasserstein, "Astronomy and Geometry as Propaedeutic Studies in Rabbinic Literature", (in Hebrew), Tarbiz XLIII (1973), p. 54.

The limits put here before the inquisitive faculties of the human intellect should not, however, be interpreted in terms of the suppression of all scientific activity and knowledge. The particular position taken by the Book of Job means that since man is limited in his ability to understand the wisdom of God in the various operations of Nature, he should withhold any criticism of God's wisdom in His attitude towards man. This is no direct prohibition of scientific inquiry, but a rather skeptical view of what the human intellect may expect from and attain in such an inquiry. In this light one should view the innovation in the lists of revealed knowledge concerning natural phenomena as found in some of the apocalyptic books, and mainly in the so-called Enoch literature. Once man is to receive information about the principles of divine retribution, there is no reason anymore to withhold from him the secrets of nature. The two go hand in hand: where there is no possibility of knowing the secrets of nature it is assumed that there is no possibility of grasping the ways of God with man; where a revelation of the ways of God with man is given it is simultaneous with a revelation of the secrets of nature. In this respect, apocalyptic revelations claim to effect a substantial expansion of the capabilities of the human intellect not only in matters that pertain to man's understanding of the operation of natural phenomena, but also in his understanding of history and divine retribution.

B

References to items of revealed knowledge concerning natural phenomena can be found in 1 Enoch (Ethiopic Enoch) xvii-xviii; xxii; xxxiii-xxxvi; xli,1; xli,3 ff.; xliii-xliv; lii; lix; lx,11 ff.; lxix; lxxi; lxxii-lxxx; xciii,11-14.¹¹ In 2 Enoch (Slavonic Enoch)¹² v-vi; xi-xvi; xxiv-xxx; xl; xlvii-xlviii. In 3 Enoch (Hebrew Enoch)¹³ xi; xiii; xiv; xvii; xli-xlii; xlviii(d). Similar references may be found also in 2 Baruch (Syriac Baruch) xlviii,2-14; lix,5-11; and also in some of the other apocalyptic writings which will be discussed later on. All these references to the revelation of secrets concerning the operation of the various parts of Nature go hand in hand with revelations concerning the angelic world and the divinity. But our interest for the moment lies in the revelations concerning natural phenomena only, and what is implied by them for our understanding of Jewish apocalyptic in relation to the idea of the inaccessibility of divine wisdom as asserted in the Book of Job.

¹¹ To these one has to add the revelations of secrets by the evil angels in vii, lix and lxv. For a recent discussion of the various traditions concerning the evil angels and the secrets which they revealed see, D. Dimant, The Fallen Angels in the Dead Sea Scrolls and in the Apocryphal and Pseudepigraphic Books Related to Them, Diss., Jerusalem, 1974.

¹² The chapter numbering here is according to the one found in R. H. Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, and it holds true for the long recension (A). A. Vaillant, Le Livre des Secrets d'Hénoch, Paris, Institut d'Études Slaves, 1952, has a different chapter numbering.

Reading through the various parts which compose the Ethiopic Book of Enoch (1 Enoch) one easily observes, that the revelations of all kinds of cosmological secrets occupy a prominent part in the apocalyptic experiences of the writers. The apocalyptic visionaries are said to ascend to heaven and there, with the guidance of different interpreting angels, to see and learn about the operations of a number of natural phenomena. Thus, for instance, the apocalypticist says that he has been taken to see "the places of the luminaries, and the treasures of the stars and of the thunder . . . and all the lightnings" (xvii,3). In addition, the apocalypticist says that he saw "the mouths of all the rivers of the earth and the mouth of the deep" (ibid., 8). In chapter xviii even more important things are shown to him and, all in all, it may be said that the apocalypticist receives a pretty comprehensive view of the cosmos. In another vision the apocalypticist sees "how the stars of heaven come forth, and I counted the portals out of which they proceed, and wrote down all their outlets, of each individual star by itself, according to their number and their names, their courses and their positions, and their times and their months, as Uriel the holy angel who was with me showed me" (xxxiii,3). What is particularly noteworthy in these revelations of cosmological secrets is that the visionary learns the laws and rules by which all these phenomena operate: "And I saw the chambers of the sun and moon, whence they proceed and whither they come again, and their glorious return, and how one is superior to the other, and their stately orbit, and how they do not leave their orbit, and they add nothing to their orbit and they take nothing from it, and they keep faith with each other, in accordance with the oath by which they are bound together" (xli,5).¹⁴ Although this passage belongs to a different part of the Book of Enoch (and possibly the latest part of the Book),¹⁵ it still records an essential mood in the whole corpus of the Enoch literature. The visionary is translated to heaven and there is instructed about the rules and laws of Nature. Basically, these rules and laws of Nature are referred to in terms of measurement, weight, quantity and proportion. And apart from the fact that in some instances (as for example in 1 Enoch lxxii-lxxx: "The Book of the Heavenly Luminaries") the revelation of astronomical secrets comes to further the idea of the sectarian solar calendar, the whole idea is meant to induce the impression of order and regularity in Nature. Where there is disorder there is either wickedness—as the introduction to 1 Enoch (ch. i-v) so clearly implies—or else the coming of the Day of God (ch. lxxx).

¹³ Ed. H. Odeberg, 3 Enoch, with a Prolegomenon by J. C. Greenfield, New York, Ktav Publishing House, 1973.

This order and regularity in Nature is sometimes conceived as being bound to a secret oath. We have already seen that in 1 Enoch xli,5 astronomical order is preserved "in accordance with the oath by which they are bound together". An oath, probably the same one, is later on mentioned in connection with the creation of the world (ch. lxix). Though not everything said there is really as lucid as one could wish, it clearly appears that Michael is in possession of a secret oath, and possibly also of a secret name—the two are not necessarily identical—which sustains the whole work of creation. That there was such a secret element which the ancients believed to be operative in the creation of the world and in its subsequent government is neither new nor unique to the Book of Similitudes (1 Enoch xxxvi-lxxi). At any rate, the idea and its parallels are amply documented in post-biblical Jewish literature. Thus, for instance, the main Hekhalot text, Hekhalot Rabbati ix,5, contains a brief reference to the "...wondrous and strange and great secret; the name through which the heaven and the earth were created, and all the orders of the creation of the world (Hebrew: sidrei bereshit)...were sealed by it".¹⁶ Interestingly, both in the Ethiopic Book of Enoch and in Hekhalot Rabbati the "secret name" is put in apposition to the "oath" or the "great secret". And indeed, the secret name, or names, of God played a great role in some of the ancient Jewish concepts of creation. Thus we find in the Book of Jubilees xxxvi,7 that Isaac makes his sons swear "a great oath—for there is no oath which is greater than it—by the name glorious and honoured and great and splendid and wonderful and mighty, which created the heavens and the earth and all things together...". Later on, in the third century C.E., we hear from Rav Yehudah in the name of Rav that "Bezalel (Exodus xxxi,2) knew how to form the combinations (Hebrew: leẓaref) of the letters (of the Alphabet) through which the heaven and the earth had been created".¹⁷ Again, in the Hebrew Book of Enoch xli, reference is made to the letters by which the heaven and the earth were created. It is not said what these letters are and how they were combined. In fact, one may find in Jewish writings of the Talmudic times a number of theories with regard to the question: Which were the letters of the Alphabet used by God in the creation of the world? We cannot enter here a full-scale description and analysis of these theories, the most noteworthy of which is that in Sefer Yezirah.¹⁸ All these theories lie on the borderline between magic and mysticism,¹⁹ and they might be connected with certain speculations concerning the uttering of the tetragrammaton during the temple service,²⁰ and also with hellenistic logos-speculations.

¹⁴ The regularity in the movements of the planets, and the catastrophes that might occur if that regularity is broken, are also often mentioned in rabbinic literature. See the references given in L. Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews, vol. V, Philadelphia, The Jewish Publication Society of America, 1955, p. 34-36, n. 100. For the ideas of order and regularity in Nature as described in Wisdom literature see P. von der Osten-Sacken, Die Apokalypstik in ihrem Verhältnis zu Prophetie und Weisheit, München, Ch. Kaiser Verlag, 1969, pp. 53 ff.

¹⁵ Chapter xxxvii-lxxi, generally referred to as the Book of the Similitudes (or Parables), are not represented in the finds from Qumran. Hence the conclusion, that they probably belong to a post-Qumranic period (Qumran was most certainly destroyed in 68 C.E.). See J. T. Milik, Ten Years of Discovery in the Wilderness of Judea, London, SCM Press, 1959, p. 33. More recently M. Black, "The Fragments of the Aramaic Enoch from Qumran", in: La Littérature Juive etc. ed. W. C. van Unnik, Leiden, E. J. Brill, 1974, p. 19, argued for a post-Christian & Jewish origin of these chapters.

¹⁶ See G. Scholem, "Der Name Gottes und die Sprachtheorie der Kabbala", Judaica III: Studien zur jüdischen Mystik, Frankfurt am Main, Suhrkamp Verlag, 1970, pp. 7 ff.

¹⁷ Tal. Bav. Berakhot 55a. The gemarā continues with quotations of verses in which divine wisdom and knowledge are mentioned in connection with the creation of the world. See further G. Quispel, "The Jung Codex and its Significance", in: Gnostic Studies I, Istanbul, Nederlands Historisch-Archeologisch Instituut, 1974, pp. 21 ff.

¹⁸ See I. Gruenwald, "Some Critical Notes on the First Part of Sefer Yezira", Revue des Études Juives CXXXII (1973), pp. 475 ff.

¹⁹ Cf. N. Séd, "Le Sefer Ha-Razim et le Méthode de 'Combinaison des Lettres'", Revue des Études Juives CXXX (1971), pp. 295 ff.

²⁰ See G. Alon, Studies in Jewish History (in Hebrew), vol. I, Tel Aviv, 1957, pp. 194 ff.

All in all, when these secrets and oaths used in the creation of the world and which are operative in sustaining it are mentioned in Jewish post-biblical writings, they reflect a significant change in the religious attitude. Not only do the apocalyptists believe in the possibility that such secrets are accessible to man—at least on certain conditions which will be discussed later on—but the knowledge of these secrets opens the way for man's understanding of divine justice. The restrictions and limitations maintained in such books as Job are thus removed and, consequently, man is ready to receive the hitherto wanting explanations for the existence of evil and suffering in a world ruled by a benevolent God. The apocalyptists, who lived in the deep conviction that the days of the eschatological fulfilment were close at hand, believed that whatever had been concealed from man, because of the injustice that reigned in the world, could now be released for the knowledge and benefit of the just. It must be remembered that the apocalyptic writers believed that these secrets had been disclosed long before they were withdrawn from the knowledge of such people as Job. This belief belongs to the heart of apocalypticism as a pseudonymous literary genre. The secrets had been disclosed to the legendary sages of antiquity who in turn put them into books which were sealed away, and in that condition they were preserved till the eschatological time came to open them.²¹

It must be noted that the disclosure of cosmological secrets is not found in all apocalyptic writings. In 4 Ezra we find the angel Uriel asking the apocalyptist a series of questions concerning natural phenomena, the purpose of which was to induce in Ezra, the apocalyptist, the same conclusion which Job had been induced to reach.²² Similarly, 1 Enoch xciii,11-14 contains a list of questions, such as "who is there that can behold all the works of heaven . . . and who is there of all men that could know what is the breadth and the length of the earth". These questions obviously originated from a different spiritual climate than did many of the experiences described in the other parts of the book. In a different context we meet yet another list of questions. In what in all likelihood is the oldest Hekhalot text we know of, Hekhalot Zutreti,²³ there is a list of questions such as "who is there who is able . . . to explore the world . . . to combine the letters, to say the names . . . and to know the lightning". If taken together, these last question-lists can lead to the conclusion that, parallel to the general concept found in apocalyptic literature and according to which there is a strong relationship between man's ability to comprehend the secrets of nature and his ability to understand the ways of God with man, there was a trend within the apocalyptic tradition itself which still stuck to the more Scriptural point of view. Yet, generally speaking, in contradistinction to the view held in Scripture according to which neither Nature nor human suffering is open to the understanding of man, the dominant tone in the apocalyptic tradition was that an understanding of nature and of human suffering is possible in an eschatological context. In this respect one may even consider such questions as in 1 Enoch xciii,14—"Or is there anyone who could discern . . . how great is the number of the stars, and where all the luminaries rest"—as merely rhetorical questions that are explicitly, and affirmatively so, answered in the other parts of the book. If so, no real polemic can be found in apocalyptic circles with regard to the possibility of deciphering the secrets of Nature by apocalyptic methods. In addition, if one compares the questions, "And who is there that can behold the works of heaven? And should there be one who could behold the heaven, and who is there that could understand the things of heaven and see a soul or a spirit and could tell thereof, or ascend and see all their ends and think them or do like them" (1 Enoch xciii,11-12) with the ones of Hekhalot Zutreti, "And who is there who is able to ascend on high, to descend below . . . to behold what is on high, and to behold what is below", then the conclusion would appear to follow that—whatever their tone and purpose—certain apocalyptic modes of expression and thought were adapted by the Merkavah mystics.²⁴

²¹ See, for instance, 1 Enoch lxxxii; 4 Ezra xii,36-38; xiv,24 ff.; all these in comparison to Daniel xii, on the one hand, and Revelation x and xxii,10, on the other.

²² The Armenian text has even a more extensive list of such "impossible" subjects. See J. Issaverdens, The Uncanonical Writings of the Old Testament Found in the Armenian MSS. of the Library of St. Lazarus, Venice, Armenian Monastery of St. Lazarus, 1934, pp. 388-391. See the extensive discussion of the nature of such lists by M. Stone, "Lists of Revealed Things in the Apocalyptic Literature", in: Magnalia Dei (see above n. 1), pp. 414-454.

Yet again, one has to consider that, according to a tradition preserved in 1 Enoch viii-xi and lxix,1-12, the rebellious angels taught mankind all kinds of secrets, some of which were also shown to the apocalyptists.²⁵ On the other hand, it is stated in 2 Enoch xxiv,3²⁶ that God did not tell the secrets of the creation to His angels. Thus we may once again surmise, that a number of parallel, sometimes even conflicting, traditions with regard to the revelation of cosmological secrets were circulating among the apocalyptists, and one can only speculate as to what made each of them adopt this or that attitude. We know that heavenly ascensions, or descents to the underworld, were practised in many religions in the ancient world. We know, too, that in the intellectual world influenced by Greek thought a deep interest in Nature motivated and directed an intensive philosophical, or scientific, activity. The alleged resentment expressed by some of the apocalyptists with regard to the revelation of cosmological secrets could well have been motivated by a deeply-felt opposition to these kinds of non-Jewish activities. This resentment of all kinds of foreign influence may at least partly be attributed to the fact that some of the apocalyptists were driven by strong nationalistic emotions: those who had a bitter battle to fight for their true national identity were obviously zealous in their preservation of the genuine Jewish spirit.²⁷ However, what in every case remained was the new understanding which apocalypticism suggested for the problems of evil and human suffering.²⁸ Seen in a broader, eschatological, context both evil and suffering received different proportions. Their meaning and function was not to be decided anymore in relation to temporary pain and grief, but within the framework of history as a totality regulated by God from creation to salvation.

²³ See G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism, Merkavah Mysticism, and Talmudic Tradition, Second, Improved Edition, New York, The Jewish Theological Seminary of America, 1965, p. 78.

²⁴ Cf. I. Gruenwald, art. cit., above n. 8, p. 75/6.

Thus, we may summarize, within the wisdom tradition of ancient Judaism apocalypticism introduced a number of new ideas and notions. We have followed one of them in detail, namely the revelation

²⁵ See above n. 11.

²⁶ Both recensions, the long and the short ones (A and B), testify to the same tradition.

²⁷ See M. Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism, London, SCM Press, 1974, pp. 58 ff. Hengel is inclined to discuss apocalypticism within the framework of Hasidism, and it is indeed in such pietistic circles that one has to look for the documentary traces of anti-hellenistic opposition. On the other hand, apocalypticism as such could be a much more widely spread literary phenomenon than is sometimes maintained. For a priestly orientation in the interpretation of apocalypticism see K. Schubert, "Das Zeitalter der Apokalypitik", in F. Leist (ed.), Seine Rede Geschah zu Mir, München, Manz-Verlag, 1965, pp. 265-285.

²⁸ It must be left for further consideration whether there were any differences among the apocalyptists with regard to the inclusion of mythical material. At any rate, there are some apocalyptic books, such as 4 Ezra, which are more reserved in their references to material that came from mythical sources.

of cosmological secrets and its relation to the problem of theodicy. While such books as 2 & 4 Maccabees already contain an eschatological solution to the problems of evil and suffering,²⁹ the apocalyptic books which we have reviewed here relate the eschatological solution to the possibilities of enlarging and deepening man's knowledge of the world.³⁰ This knowledge does not come as a direct result of the inquisitive curiosity and efforts of man, but as a special supernatural revelation. The contents of these supernatural revelations were often seen as an anticipation of what the just ones are to experience in the world to come. Thus, in the so-called Apocalypse of Weeks, 1 Enoch xci-xciii, it is said that, at the end of the seventh "week" (i.e., unit of seven years), the righteous shall be elected "for true witnesses of the eternal plant of righteousness, to whom shall be given sevenfold wisdom and knowledge".³¹ And in another place Enoch summons his family to give them his spiritual testament, and among his prophecies for the eschatological future he mentions the fact that "the righteous shall arise from their sleep, and wisdom shall arise and be given to them".³² If the wisdom granted to the apocalyptists corresponds to that promised to the righteous in the days to come, then apocalyptic revelation is one of the first, and necessary, stages in the process of salvation. No wonder, then, that the Qumran-psalmist quite often repeats his thanks for the revelation of secrets

²⁹ Scholars rightly debate over the question, whether 4 Maccabees really contains the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. At least, the doctrine of the immortality of the soul is not as straightforwardly expressed there as it is in 2 Maccabees. See, G. W. Buchanan, "Introduction" to R. H. Charles, Eschatology, New York, Schocken Books, 1963, p. xviii.

³⁰ In an interesting passage in The Wisdom of Solomon vii,15-21, the author, who hides behind the name of King Solomon, speaks of his great knowledge, and says, among other things: "For He has given me an unerring knowledge of the things that are, to know the constitution of the world, and the operation of the elements." This indeed, comes very close to the apocalyptic concept of revealed knowledge, and that in the context of wisdom literature!

³¹ 1 Enoch xciii,10. The translation here is that of the Aramaic text which has been found at Qumran. See, M. Black, "The Fragments of the Aramaic Enoch from Qumran", in: La Littérature Juive entre Tenach et Mishna, ed. W. C. van Unnik, Leiden, E. J. Brill, 1974, p. 24. Charles's translation of the Ethiopic text reads: "And at its close shall be elected the elect righteous of the eternal plant of righteousness, to receive sevenfold instruction concerning all His creation". Notice the difference between the Aramaic and the Ethiopic texts: While the Aramaic refers to "sevenfold wisdom and knowledge" in general, the Ethiopic text specifies and says: "sevenfold instruction concerning all His creation".

³² Ibid., xci,10. As has been variously observed, the Ethiopic text here preserves a corrupt order of chapter and verses.

granted to him by God.³³ This assumption of a relation between the revelation of secrets to the apocalyptists and the future revelation of knowledge to the righteous approaches the conclusion maintained by the early gnostics, that knowledge is a conditio sine qua non for salvation. Although the gnostic concept of knowledge is much more complex and developed than the one we find in apocalypticism, it still seems that the relation between knowledge and salvation was one of the major elements which Jewish apocalyptic contributed to the development of gnosticism.³⁴

C

We have begun our discussion of Jewish apocalyptic with some remarks concerning the place it holds within the framework of Jewish wisdom literature. Before we go on with our discussion, it seems fitting to quote yet another source which significantly bears on the problems raised in the previous section. The Testament of Job, which is based on the story of the Biblical Book of Job,³⁵ mentions at one point the following conversation between Baldas (= Bildad) and Job:³⁶

Baldas: ... But if you are really in a stable condition, I shall ask you about something, and if you answer me sensibly at first, I will question you a second time... Or who can ever comprehend the deep things of the Lord and His wisdom so that someone dares to ascribe to the Lord an injustice?... And again I say to you... why do we see the sun rising in the east and setting in the west, and again when we get up early we find the same sun rising in the east?...

Job: ... For who are we to be busying ourselves with heavenly matters, seeing that we are fleshly and have our lot in dust and ashes? Therefore... listen to what I ask you: Food through the mouth, and then water through the mouth is swallowed in the same throat. But when the two fall into the latrine, they are then separated from each other. Who then divides them?

³³ See, for instance, The Psalms Scroll (Hodayot; 1 QH), IV, 27-29; XI, 15-17. Cf. W. D. Davies, "Knowledge in the Dead Sea Scrolls and in Matthew xi, 25-30", Harvard Theological Review XLVI (1953), pp. 113-139.

³⁴ See I. Gruenwald, in: Israel Oriental Studies III (1973), pp. 75 ff.

³⁵ For an "Annotated Chronological Bibliography" of the various problems involved in the study of The Testament of Job, cf. R. Spittler, in: The Testament of Job according to the SV Text, Greek Text and English Translation, edited by Robert A. Kraft, Society of Biblical Literature & Scholars' Press, 1974, pp. 17-20.

³⁶ The Testament of Job (see previous note), xxxvi, 8-xxxviii, 8 (5). The dramatized form is mine.

Baldas: I do not know.

Job: If you do not understand the function of the body, how will you understand the heavenly matters.

Although parts of the arguments, the nature of which we have discussed in the previous section, are here put into the mouth of Job, the passage still goes in line with the basic idea which the Book of Job advocates.

The Testament of Job was written most probably at a time when Jewish apocalyptic flourished, and it may be asked whether the tones struck by the writer are not in their own way a kind of reaction against the higher kinds of knowledge which some of the apocalyptists claimed to have received. Of course, one may see in the above quoted conversation between Baldad and Job a mere and innocent reflection of the mood which prevails in the Book of Job. But if one holds this conversation against the light thrown by one of the most famous passages from Ben-Sira, then a different way of looking at the conversation becomes plausible. In Ben-Sira iii, 18-25 we find the following statements:

...Humble thyself in all greatness of the world
And thou wilt find mercy in the sight of God.
For many are the mercies of God,
And to the humble He revealeth His secret.
Seek not (to understand) what is too wonderful for thee,
And search not out that which is hid from thee.
Meditate upon that which thou must grasp
And be not occupied with that which is hid.
Have naught to do with that which is beyond thee,
For more hath been shown to thee than thou canst understand.
For many are the conceits of the sons of men,
And evil imaginations lead astray.
Where there is no apple of the eye, light is lacking,
And where there is no knowledge wisdom is wanting.³⁷

Basically, two contrasting interpretations have been suggested for these verses. According to the one, Ben Sira here simply intends to discourage people from engaging in matters and problems that are beyond their physical or spiritual reach.³⁸ According to the other interpretation, which is supported by the contexts in which verses 21 and 22 (seek not . . . is hid) are quoted in talmudic and midrashic sources,³⁹ these verses are a straightforward call to refrain from exploring the secrets of nature and of the Deity. Both interpretations are in a way justified, and indeed there is no decisive proof in favour of either. It may, however, be argued, that from the way in which Ben Sira refers to the heavenly translation of Enoch⁴⁰ and to the vision of Ezekiel⁴¹ one may well infer, that Ben Sira was familiar with some early kinds of apocalyptic or mystical traditions, and that the above quoted verses from chapter iii were therefore an exhortation directed to the general public to refrain from all kinds of speculations which involved apocalyptic experiences.

³⁷ The English translation is that of Box and Oesterley in R. H. Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, vol. I, p. 325/6. For the textual problems involved in these verses see, H. P. Rüger, Text und Textform im Hebräischen Sirach, Beiheft CXII zur Zeitschrift für die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft, 1970, pp. 30 ff.

If so, two conflicting views may be detected in the ancient Jewish Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha with regard to the question of the revelation of cosmological secrets. According to one view, represented chiefly in the Enoch corpus of writings, man may receive such supernatural revelations concerning natural phenomena. According to the other view, no such revelations are possible, or at least they should not be desired and trusted. Even if they come to men, they have no relevance to the basic problems of man's existence. And, finally, although we do lack clear literary evidence, there are good reasons to believe that the above mentioned conflicting views were much older and more widely spread in Jewish thought than their documented evidence. As we know, the literary prehistory of apocalypticism is rather vague and the attempts to reconstruct it are highly speculative. It is therefore difficult to tell whether the above mentioned conflict began with the rise of apocalypticism itself or whether it is older, in spite of the fact that the literary evidence for it is no more ³⁸ See Y. Gutman, The Beginnings of Jewish-Hellenistic Literature (in Hebrew), Jerusalem, Bialik Institute, 1958, vol. I, p. 173.

³⁹ See M. Z. Segal, Sefer Ben Sira Ha-Shalem, Jerusalem, Bialik Institute, 1958, p. 17/8.

⁴⁰ Ben Sira xliv,16; xlv,14. For the textual problems see Y. Yadin, The Ben Sira Scroll from Masada, Jerusalem, The Israel Exploration Society, 1965, p. 38. See further, J. C. Greenfield, "Prolegomenon" to op. cit. (above n. 13), p. xlvi, n. 27; D. Lührmann, "Enoch und die Metanoia", Zeitschrift für die Neutestamentliche Wissenschaft LXVI (1975), pp. 103 ff.

⁴¹ Ben Sira xlix,8. See I. Gruenwald, "Jewish Mysticism in the Time of the Mishnah and Talmud", in: Compendia Rerum Judaicarum ad Novum Testamentum. Forthcoming.

in our hands. Furthermore, what in modern scholarship is rather loosely called "biblical apocalyptic"⁴² can only be considered with due reservation as the forerunner of post-biblical, pseudonymous, apocalyptic, and in any case it does not contain any descriptions of heavenly ascensions and the secret cosmological knowledge gained in the course of such alleged ascensions. In addition, although it may seem an overstatement, it still does not fall short of the truth to say that some of the basic attitudes maintained in apocalyptic were formed by some degree of confrontation with some of the prevailing ideas found in Scripture. This particularly holds true, as we are going to see immediately, when one examines some of the utterances found in apocalyptic with regard to biblical prophecy. Thus one may look at the apocalyptic ascensions as a kind of challenge to basic beliefs postulated in Scripture. When we read Psalms cxv,16—"The heavens are the Lord's heavens, but the earth he has given to the sons of men"—in combination with Proverbs xxx,4—"Who has ascended to heaven and come down"—then it clearly appears that these biblical writers were, so-to-speak, geocentrically minded. And indeed the wisdom of Israel was the Torah—"for that will be your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the peoples" (Deuteronomy iv,6)⁴³—and the Torah clearly is on earth: "For this commandment... is not in heaven..." (ibid. xxx,11-12). Yet, some of the apocalyptists thought otherwise, and as we are going to see later on, the debate over the question whether heavenly ascensions were possible or not was still carried on in tannaitic circles.

D

The attitude of the apocalyptic writers towards biblical prophecy is somewhat provocatively stated in some of the apocalyptic writings, and particularly so in those of the Qumran community. The Qumranites were justifiably called an apocalyptic community,⁴⁴ and although, as far as we know, their apocalyptic experiences were of a more literary character, the contents of their revelations were in many respects similar to those received by the other apocalyptists.

⁴² See J. Lindblom, Die Jesaja-Apokalypse: Jes. 24-27, Lund Universitets Arsskrift, N.F. I, 34, 3, Lund und Leipzig, 1938; J. Schreiner, Alttestamentliche-jüdische Apokalyptik, München, Kassel Verlag, 1969.

⁴³ Cf. M. Weinfeld, Deuteronomy and the deuteronomistic School, Oxford, Clarendon Press, p. 244 ff.

⁴⁴ See chiefly, F. M. Cross Jr., The Ancient Library of Qumran, Garden City, New York, Doubleday & Company, 1961, pp. 76-78.

Basically, they claimed that among the revelations given them were the correct explications of Scripture.⁴⁵ Some of their writings in fact were eschatological commentaries to Scripture, and in them they believed to have uncovered the exclusive inner meaning and terms of reference of the biblical text.⁴⁶ The Qumran people devoted much of their time to the study of the Torah,⁴⁷ and if we may generalize certain of their rulings, they were so organized as to ensure that in every group of people there should be at least one priest whose duty it was to study the Law and to lay its explication before the members of the group.⁴⁸ The Word of God, they appear to have believed, was given in at least two principle stages of revelation: before and after the formation of the New Covenant in the "Desert of Damascus".⁴⁹ The New Covenant did not mean the giving of new Scriptures, but the revelation of special methods of discovering the inner and true sense of the old ones. In fact, the Qumran sectarians believed in a series of additional stages in which this inner sense of Scripture came to the fore. Nothing specific is said about the number of these additional stages and when they would be initiated, but the idea is several times stressed in their writings,⁵⁰ and it is juxtaposed to the complementary idea about the various individual degrees in knowledge of Scripture.⁵¹

⁴⁵ See H. Braun, Spätjüdisch-bäretischer und frühchristlicher Radikalismus, Tübingen, J. C. B. Mohr (Paul Siebeck), 1957, vol. I; F. F. Bruce, Biblical Exegesis in the Qumran Texts, Grand Rapids, Michigan, 1959; O. Betz, Offenbarung und Schriftforschung in der Qumransekte, Tübingen, J. C. B. Mohr (Paul Siebeck), 1960.

⁴⁶ See I. Gruenwald, "The Jewish Esoteric Literature in the Time of the Mishnah and Talmud", Immanuel IV (1974), pp. 37 ff.

⁴⁷ According to 1 QS (= The Manual of Discipline) VI,7 each member of the community had to spend at least one third of the nights of the year in the reading of the Book, in the study of the Law and in the communal meals or gatherings.

⁴⁸ 1 QS VI,3; CD (= The Damascus Covenant) XIII,2 ff. In both cases the number of the members of the group is ten; but in 1 QS VIII,1 a group consisting of twelve laymen and three priests is mentioned, while CD X,4-6 mentions six laymen and four priests. The age of the officiating priests should be between thirty and sixty (CD XIV,7).

⁴⁹ See mainly the first four pages of CD. For a recent discussion of the various theories with regard to the history of the sect cf., J. Murphy-O'Connor, O.P., "The Essenes and their History", Revue Biblique LXXXI (1974), pp. 215 ff.

⁵⁰ See, for instance, 1 QS VIII,15/6; IX,12-14,20.

⁵¹ See particularly, 1 QS V,23; VI,14,18. It seems that, at least among some of the sectarians, additional means of gradation were applied. Thus in 4Q 186 astrological, physiognomic and similar techniques are applied in defining the qualities of those who desired to become members of the sect. See I. Gruenwald, "Further Jewish Physiognomic and Chiromantic Fragments", Tarbiz XL (1971),

At its face value the attitude of the Qumranites to Scripture can be viewed as a process of bringing Scripture up-to-date. In their Pesharim (= commentaries) they interpreted the biblical verses mainly in the light of events happening in their lifetime or of events which they believed were imminent in the near future. Much of what is found in those Pesharim is in the form of what was later on called Midrash. But in contradistinction to the material found in the rabbinical midrashic literature many of the Qumran Pesharim proclaim themselves to be exclusive revelations of secrets. We shall illustrate the Qumranic Pesharim-method by referring to a passage from the Pesher Habakkuk (1 QpHab) vii,1-13. The passage has been quoted before by various scholars in order to illustrate the Pesharim-method, yet its radical qualities have not always been adequately stressed. Briefly, what the passage says is, that the Moreh Ha-Zedek ("the Teacher of Righteousness"), the spiritual leader of the Qumran sect, received information about the true meaning of the prophecy which Habakkuk, the prophet, had received. Referring to Habakkuk ii,1-3 the Qumran-commentator says:

And God told Habakkuk to write down that which would happen to the final generation, but He did not make known to him when time would come to an end. And as for that which He said, That he who reads it may read speedily, interpreted this concerns the Teacher of Righteousness, to whom God made known all the mysteries of the words of His servants the prophets... the final age shall be prolonged, and shall exceed all that the prophets have said; for the mysteries of God are astounding... For all the ages of God reach their appointed end as He determines for them in the mysteries of His wisdom.⁵²

As a careful reading of the passage shows, it is not only the true meaning of Habakkuk's prophecy that the Teacher of Righteousness received, but also some additional information concerning the prolongation of the eschatological end. The words uttered by the prophet contained secrets the revelation of which was reserved for the Teacher of Righteousness. Whether Habakkuk himself was aware of the fact that he was actually talking in riddles or in a code that had to be deciphered, or whether he was quite ignorant of the inner layers of meaning which had to be attached to his prophecy, it is clear that the revelation of that secret meaning had to wait for pp. 301 ff. See also the thoroughgoing discussion of J. Licht in Tarbiz XXXV (1966), pp. 18-26.

⁵² English translation: G. Vermes, The Dead Sea Scrolls in English, Harmondsworth, Penguin Books, 1962, p. 236/7.

the spiritual leader of the sect. All this, the passage repeatedly says, was according to the wondrous secrets of the Deity. What practically made God reveal to the Teacher the inner mysteries of the Habakkuk-prophecies was the approaching time of fulfilment. In the age to which Habakkuk had assumably referred to in his prophecy, the time was ripe for making the necessary exegetical connections between the words of the prophecy and the events to which they were thought to refer.

The prophetic utterances had to await an apocalyptic revelation for their inner truth to be made explicit. For the first time we hear that Scripture cannot, and should not, be read only for its external meaning. This awareness of the existence of an inner truth was complemented by the revelation of that very truth. If there was any crisis with regard to prophecy because people saw that a lot of what was the prophetic word of God remained unfulfilled, then the apocalyptic process of updating prophecy was to remove the scepticism of the people.⁵³ But to see in the written word of God a vessel containing some inner truth apart from the obvious external meaning — is the essence of the esoteric approach to Scripture. Apocalypticism was often described as being esoteric in nature⁵⁴ mainly because it pertained to be an exclusive revelation of secrets.⁵⁵ Added to this was the pseudepigraphic way of writing, which was sometimes interpreted as the result of the desire to enhance the element of secrecy. Of course, one cannot altogether dismiss the exclusiveness and the secrecy of the revelation, or even the pseudepigraphic way of writing; they are weighty factors in shaping the special qualities of apocalypticism.⁵⁶ But what makes some of the apocalyptic books esoteric as they are, is the special attitude maintained in them regarding their relationship to the previous revelation in Scripture.

"Esotericism", thus, is here taken to mean a special attitude towards Scripture and the explication of its content. The passage from Pesher Habakkuk makes it sufficiently clear that Scripture is considered as a code, the indications for the decipherment of which are given in a special revelation. As such, it is a classic example of an esoteric text.

⁵³ See P. von der Osten-Sacken, op. cit. (above n. 14), p. 33.

⁵⁴ See D. S. Russell, The Method and Message of Jewish Apocalyptic, London, SCM Press, 1964, pp. 107 ff.

⁵⁵ See A. Böhlig, Mysterion und Wahrheit, Leiden, E. J. Brill, 1968, pp. 3-40.

⁵⁶ See M. Hengel, "Anonymität, Pseudepigraphie und 'Literarische Fälschung' in der jüdisch-hellenistischen Literatur", Entretiens sur l'Antiquité Classique XVIII (1972), pp. 191 ff.

The degree to which the apocalyptic revelation finds itself disentangled from and independent of the biblical text on which it leans varies from one apocalyptic text to the other. In the Qumran Pesharim eschatological and messianic meanings are read into the biblical text. In other words, historical references are attributed to texts which seem to lack precise historical specifications. Comparatively speaking, however, the Pesharim do not entail too drastic changes or additions to the biblical text. They are the product of a group which believed it lived in an age of the fulfilment of Scripture, and of the desire to view the events of that age as the fulfilment of Scripture.

However, the esoteric element of the Pesharim is not as radical as the one we encounter in other, pseudepigraphic, apocalyptic books.⁵⁷ A typical example of a pseudepigraphic book in which esotericism receives noteworthy radical dimensions is the Book of Jubilees.⁵⁸ The book pretends to be the revelation given by the Angel of the Divine Presence to Moses on Mount Sinai. It tells the story of the world from the days of the creation till the theophany on Mount Sinai, and in many respects it poses as a rival version to the one found in Scripture. It is exactly here that the esoteric qualities of the Book of Jubilees come to the fore. Reading the book, one gets the clear impression that the author wants to convince his readers of the existence of two parallel versions of the biblical story: the one, the exoteric revelation given by God himself and recorded in Scripture, and the other, the esoteric one given by the angel and recorded in the Book of Jubilees. The very fact of the revelation of the Book of Jubilees can be interpreted to mean that there are so-to-speak two complementary versions of the truth: the one given exoterically to the whole of the People of Israel, and the other given esoterically to the initiate alone.

The essential difference between the exoteric revelation of Scripture and the esoteric one in Jubilees lies in a variety of details. In the eyes of the author of Jubilees, the story found in Genesis and in Exodus seemed to lack essential details which pointed to a recognizable guiding idea. Hence, it was the task of the Book of Jubilees to disclose those details and inner ideological patterns that were believed to underlie everything that is told in these two books in Scripture. We need not enter here a detailed discussion of these ideological patterns, but it may be safely assumed that the eschatological idea of the purpose and the direction in the history of the world and that of the People of Israel is one of the guiding ideas of the book.⁵⁹ Only with the disclosure of those patterns and ideas the scriptural story was believed to receive its true meaning and perspective. This is the theory that underlies the Book of Jubilees. No event in the history of the world and of the People of Israel could be properly understood and evaluated unless it conceptually and practically became part of the underlying scheme the details of which are revealed in the book. A particular sense of direction and purpose which among other things was revealed in the Book of Jubilees was believed to add extra dimensions to the scriptural story. These dimensions were withheld or else not explicitly and manifestly expressed in Scripture. They were revealed in a special way to Moses on Mount Sinai, and henceforth their revelation was restricted to a limited number of those who were to be guided by them in their daily life, beliefs and practices.

⁵⁷ The esoteric qualities of the Qumran writings have been discussed also by H. Braun, op. cit. (above n. 45). But Braun limits his understanding of esotericism to the exclusiveness of the revelation.

⁵⁸ In spite of a considerable number of studies concerned with the dating and the evaluation of the book, many of the more essential problems which the book raises for the scholar are still unsolved.

Thus, what really gives the Book of Jubilees its unique esoteric character is neither the secrecy of its revelation nor its exclusiveness. Even the pseudepigraphic attribution of the book to the Angel of the Countenance cannot epitomize the esoteric quality of the book. All these factors should be viewed only as formal aspects in qualifying esotericism. Where the real qualities of esotericism come in this case to the fore is in the contents of the new revelations and their relation to the previous revelation in Scripture. The discovery of the underlying structures is the basic component in the new revelation as we find it in Jubilees, and it is imposed therein on the biblical story in various forms, such as the periodization into jubilees of history and in the manner of practising the religious Law.⁶⁰ In addition, and this certainly is the most crucial point of all, the Book of Jubilees explicitly advocates a solar calendar as opposed to the lunar calendar that was believed to be implied in Scripture and officially practised in its time.⁶¹ What all this amounts to is a process of rewriting Scripture. And since this rewritten version of the biblical story is revealed to Moses himself, the problems that arise are as sharp and bewildering as one can imagine.

⁵⁹ See G. L. Davenport, The Eschatology of the Book of Jubilees, Leiden, E. J. Brill, 1971.

⁶⁰ The subject of the Halakhah in the Book of Jubilees was treated in Ch. Albeck, Das Buch Jubiläen und die Halacha, Berlin, 1930, see further, G. Vermes, "Sectarian Matrimonial Halakhah in the Damascus Rule", Journal of Jewish Studies XXV (1974), pp. 197-202.

As Professor Scholem has rightly observed,⁶² it was only natural for Jewish groups who propagated dissident views to base their views and ideas on Scripture. This was generally done by claiming an exclusive revelation of the true meaning of Scripture. Whether this so-called true meaning of Scripture was presented to the public in the form of a running commentary or in a rewritten version of Scripture makes no real difference, particularly so if both are attributed to some kind of supernatural revelation. Thus it may be concluded that esotericism should be qualified more by virtue of the content of the revelation than by the formal, and mainly literary, modes of presentation. The content of the revelation is mostly connected with Scripture, and claims to expose the latent, inner and exclusive sense of Scripture. The authority of an angel is in this case an almost inevitable ingredient, all the more so when to it is added the authority of one of the illustrious sages of antiquity to whom the angel presented the revelation.

E

It must, however, be noted that not all the pseudepigraphic books are necessarily of an esoteric nature in our sense of the term. A notable example of an apocalyptic book which has no full esoteric qualities is 4 Ezra. Although the book is pseudepigraphically attributed to Ezra the Scribe, and contains angelic revelations, it nevertheless does not pretend to uncover systematically hidden layers of any specific scriptural passages. In addition, the book contains a well-defined eschatological scheme, but, as it does not always bear a direct relation to Scripture, it cannot be called esoteric in the sense in which we have defined esotericism in Pesher Habakkuk and in Jubilees.

Apocalyptic, as we saw, could, but did not necessarily, mean the re-writing of Scripture. Jubilees certainly rewrites Scripture but so does also Pseudo-Philo Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum,⁶³ which tells its own version of what happened from the days of the creation of the world till the days of King Saul. But, while the Book of Jubilees poses as an angelic revelation, it presses some kind of additional ideological pattern on history and on religious practice, and this by making manifest alleged hidden meanings of Scripture, the Book of the Antiquities is more in the manner of a running midrash, which adds or subtracts from the biblical account of events, but adds no ideological schemes to the manifest content of Scripture. Above all, it does not claim angelic authority for itself. Yet, there are several passages in the Book of Antiquities which freely rewrite Biblical stories,⁶⁴ and hence its partial resemblance at least to Jubilees. Admittedly, the process of rewriting Scripture was widely spread and applied, and what characterizes the esoteric apocalyptic way of re-writing Scripture therefore is its claim to be an exclusive supernatural revelation regarding the secret meaning and significance of the scriptural text. As a matter of fact, traces of rewriting Scripture can already be detected in Scripture itself: the Deuteronomist and the Chronicler are two famous examples of that. In a wider sense one can regard the writings of Philo as drastic examples of rewriting Scripture, though his allegorical method of exegesis involved additional and complicated ways of interpretation.⁶⁵ Even Josephus Flavius, who wanted to reconstruct the ancient history of the People of Israel in his Jewish Antiquities, applied to a considerable extent the method of rewriting Scripture. And, finally, the rabbinical midrash-literature contains passages which, de facto at least, render Scripture in a rewritten form.⁶⁶ But in none of these does the re-written product claim to be a secret, angelic, revelation of the ultimate meaning of Scripture.

⁶¹ See most recently, S. Zeitlin, Studies in the Early History of Judaism, New York, Ktav Publishing House, vol. I (1973), pp. 183-211; and further vol. II (1974), pp. 116-164.

⁶² See above n. 4.

⁶³ See lately, D. J. Harrington, "The Original Language of Pseudo Philo's Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum", Harvard Theological Review LXIII (1970), pp. 503 ff.;

The process of rewriting Scripture thus turns out to be a widespread and acknowledged method in biblical exegesis, and is not restricted to esoteric writings. From Judaism the method was trans-idem, The Hebrew Fragments of Pseudo-Philo's Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum Preserved in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, Missoula, Montana, Society of Biblical Literature, 1974. A. Zeron, "Einige Bemerkungen zu M. F. Collins 'The Hidden Vessels in Samaritan Traditions'", Journal for the Study of Judaism IV (1974), pp. 165-168, repeats the theory that one can trace antisamaritan polemic in the book.

⁶⁴ Such as the Prayer of Moses in xii,8-9, and more emphatically even in the story of Bilam's blessings in xviii,10 ff.

⁶⁵ For a good description of Philo's method of biblical exegesis see, R. Williamson, Philo and the Epistle to the Hebrews, Leiden, E. J. Brill, 1970.

⁶⁶ This aspect in rabbinical midrash has not yet been studied.

ferred to Christian writers, and especially to the writers of Gnosticism.⁶⁷ Several of the major texts of Gnosticism, some of which have been found at Nag Hammadi, based their subject matter on biblical stories, notably those found in the first chapters of Genesis, and presented them in a rewritten form.⁶⁸ What is more, most of these gnostic texts are in one way or another attributed to supernatural revelations, and at least in one of them we find the angel saying that the new revelation is not as Moses said.⁶⁹ It is here that the delicate borderline between esotericism and heresy has been crossed. By attributing the revelation to an angel who pertains to disclose the innermost secrets implied in the scriptural text almost everything that a writer wanted to propagate could be said. Since everything bore the trademark of an exclusive secret there was neither limit nor criterion as to what should or could be said. Thus, to come back to Jewish apocalyptic, a considerable amount of mythical material could find its way into that literature. Generally, as we know, Scripture maintained a reserved and hesitant attitude towards mythological material. At least, very little of ancient mythology found its way into Scripture.⁷⁰ Apocalypticism, however, could digest almost everything, particularly so if it contributed to furthering the ideological purposes of the writer, and had the authority of an angel and of antiquity.

Thus, some of the apocalyptists preached the existence of dualistic forces in the world.⁷¹ We find in apocalypticism a well developed angelology which, most likely, derived a good deal of its characteristic features from foreign sources. These sources, whatever their nature and quality, reached the apocalyptists in a variety of ways, most of which are no more recognizable. Yet, the place they succeeded in occupying in apocalyptic is so dominant as to give the whole of this literature some of its idiosyncratic character. What is ⁶⁷ See R. M. Grant, Gnosticism and Early Christianity, New York, Columbia University Press, 1959, pp. 32 ff.

⁶⁸ Two important examples are, The Hypostasis of the Archons, ed. R. A. Bullard, Berlin, Walter de Gruyter & Co., 1970; and Die koptisch-gnostische Schrift ohne Titel aus Codex II von Nag Hammadi, ed. A. Böhlig and P. Labib, Berlin, Akademie Verlag, 1962. See further, below Chapter Four, n. 62.

⁶⁹ See Apocryphon Johannis, ed. S. Giversen, Copenhagen, Prostant Apud Munksgaard, 1963, plates 61,20; 70,22; 71,3; 77,6.

⁷⁰ For a recent discussion of the mythological elements that found their way into Scripture see F. M. Cross, Canaanite Myth and Hebrew Epic, Cambridge, Massachusetts, Harvard University Press, 1973.

⁷¹ For a detailed discussion of the dualism of the Qumran sect see, I. Gruenwald in: Israel Oriental Studies III (1973), pp. 77 ff.

so outstanding in this mythological material in general and in the angelology in particular is once again the fact that it poses as the real, true and inner meaning of Scripture. Scripture is rewritten in such a way as to include the whole lot of these foreign elements. The legitimation of this material comes, as we saw, from the fact that it has the authority of the angelic revelation, and partly also from the fact that the revelation is—fictitiously so—given to one of the sages of scriptural times.⁷²

The conclusion that can be reached from the previous discussion is, that apocalypticism transcended the world of Scripture not only in supplying information which is not explicitly contained therein, but also in attempting to open to man, at least to a chosen elite of the People of Israel, a wider range of emotional and intellectual experience. Whatever purposes apocalypticism consciously served in the eyes of those who cultivated its ideas and forms of expression, it also paved the way for the experiences and literature of the mystical circles from the time of the Tannaim onwards. But before we turn to the Jewish mysticism of the time of the Tannaim and Amoraim, we shall look at the mystical passages found in some of the apocalyptic books.

⁷² Unfortunately L. Hartman, Prophecy Interpreted, Lund, C. W. K. Gleerup, 1966, softens the theological radicalism of apocalyptic, and this mainly because he does not pay full attention to the esoteric qualities of that literature.

CHAPTER TWO

THE MYSTICAL ELEMENTS IN APOCALYPTIC

A

In the previous chapter we discussed several elements of Jewish apocalyptic in the light of some characteristic notions found in biblical Prophecy and Wisdom. It could be noticed that the writer subscribed to the view, that apocalyptic cannot be adequately explained in the light of either Prophecy or Wisdom.¹ Apocalyptic is much too complex a phenomenon to be explained by an either/or-theory. Nor can justice be done to the phenomenon if only one central quality is selected as its more characteristic feature, and the one that best explains it. Prophecy and Wisdom both had their respective share in the formation of apocalyptic, but there were also other factors which contributed in their own ways to endow apocalyptic with its idiosyncratic shape and content. Hence, the present chapter will be devoted to a discussion of the mystical elements in apocalyptic. Particular attention will be given to those apocalyptic books which describe heavenly ascensions and contain relatively detailed accounts of visions in which the God and His hosts of angels appear to the apocalyptists.

These mystical visions too had their antecedents in biblical literature, yet the way these visions are described in apocalyptic, and also the place they occupy there, make it clear that a new religious mood and interest are pervasive in these books. It would be difficult to assess with certainty the role and place that these mystical visions occupied within the general apocalyptic experience. What, in any event, seems safe to say is, that in comparison to the parallel material in Scripture, the mystical visions found in apocalyptic literature are much more intense and elaborate in the embellishment of the description. The passages in Scripture which contain such visions are: 1 Kings xxii, 19;

¹ In recent years it was G. von Rad, Theologie des Alten Testaments, München, Ch. Kaiser Verlag, 1966, Band II, p. 327, who advocated the Wisdom-origin of apocalyptic: "die apokalyptischen Schriften . . . in der Überlieferung der Weisheit wurzeln".

Isaiah vi, 1 ff.; and Ezekiel i; iii, 22-24; viii, 1 ff.; x.² In a broader sense one can include here the theophany at Mount Sinai (Exodus xix, 16-18; xx, 15-18; xxiv, 16-18; Deuteronomy v, 19-24), and the prologue to Job. Finally, we find the vision of Daniel vii, 9-10, which evidently is in line with the visions described in Isaiah and Ezekiel, but because of its date of composition is already considered as apocalyptic literature. Summing up certain features in the theophany-tradition in the early history of the People of Israel, F. M. Cross says that "It is not coincidental that the language of theophany and the imagery of revelation derived from the mythology of the storm-God largely fell out of use, beginning in the ninth century, and including the two centuries to follow, in prophetic Yahwism. The prophets chose another language, other imagery with which to describe their intercourse with Yahweh, drawn as we have seen from the concept of the messenger of the Council of 'El. . . Nevertheless, they used a refined or purged language of revelation, because Yahweh, so to say, no longer used the storm as a mode of self-manifestation".³ Professor Cross obviously has in mind the difference in the language and the imagery between such theophanies as those described in 2 Samuel xxii, 8-16, on the one hand, and those described in Isaiah and Ezekiel, on the other. But schematizations whenever they are made should be applied with caution, and it seems that Ezekiel i, 4, for instance, has still something in common with the storm-God theophanies. And although God is described in the theophany of 2 Samuel xxii as riding the stormy clouds, He still occupies there a Palace (Hekhal; ibid., v. 7) as He does in Isaiah vi, 1.⁴

There is a vast literature in which the various types of biblical theophany are extensively discussed.⁵ We may, therefore, immediately

² A similar vision is referred to in xliii, 3-4; but the vision in viii, 2 is most probably that of an angel. Compare also Daniel x, 5-6.

³ F. M. Cross, Canaanite Myth and Hebrew Epic, Cambridge, Mass., Harvard University Press, 1973, p. 191.

⁴ It is useless to enter here the discussion whether Isaiah saw the Hekhal in heaven or on earth in the temple in Jerusalem. A rather fantastic view on the subject is expressed by A. Aptowitzer in Tarbiz II (1931), p. 144/5. According to Aptowitzer, Isaiah actually saw the Hekhal in the Jerusalem-Temple but in the course of the vision Isaiah himself translated the whole scenery unto heaven!

⁵ Some of the more recent extensive studies of the subject of biblical theophanies are: J. Lindblom, "Theophanies in Holy Places in Hebrew Religion", Hebrew Union College Annual XXXII (1961), pp. 91-106; J. Jeremias, Theophanie: Die Geschichte einer alttestamentlichen Gattung, Neukirchen-Vluyn, Neukirchener Verlag, 1965; F. M. Cross, op. cit., pp. 147 ff.

turn to those visions in Scripture which are more mystically oriented, that is, visions in which God appears to man in a man-like form and seated upon a throne. The relevant visions in this respect are those in 2 Kings, in Isaiah, in Ezekiel and in Daniel. Taken together these visions display the following characteristic features:

- a. God is sitting on a throne;
- b. He has the appearance of a man (Ezekiel), and particularly that of an old, white-haired man (Daniel);
- c. God is sitting in a palace (2 Kings, Isaiah, and Daniel);⁶
- d. Fire occupies an important position in the vision (Ezekiel, Daniel and indirectly also in Isaiah);⁷
- e. God is accompanied by angels who minister to Him (2 Kings, Isaiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel);
- f. The angels recite hymns (Isaiah and Ezekiel).

All these elements became major components in the mystical visions found in apocalyptic and later on in the Merkavah visions of the Heikhalot literature (= the mystical writings of the time of the Talmud). If one can speak of a Jewish mystical tradition that had more or less unified qualities, then, it seems, the above enumerated features are the more characteristic ones in that tradition. This is not to say that these elements are all simultaneously found and equally stressed in all the visions we know of. Although later visionaries allowed themselves freedom of imagination, it may be said that they followed some kind of standard, the nature of which was basically modelled on these features.

We shall now turn to an analysis of the various mystical visions in apocalyptic literature. Our attention will be given chiefly to those elements in the visions which were dominant in later developments of Jewish mysticism.

⁶ As for Isaiah see above n. 4. The visions in 2 Kings and in Daniel do not explicitly mention a palace, but there is nothing in them that contradicts the assumption that a divine palace is actually presupposed there. In Ezekiel, however, it is clear that God is moving about in the cosmos. The visions in Amos vii,7 and ix,1 seem to belong to a different type of theophany: the allegorical elements in them is predominant.

⁷ Decisive in this respect was the theophany on Mount Sinai where God revealed Himself in the Great Fire (Deuteronomy iv,7). See E. E. Urbach, "The Traditions about Merkavah Mysticism in the Tannaitic Period", Studies in Mysticism and Religion Presented to Gershom G. Scholem, Jerusalem, Magnes Press, 1967, Hebrew Section, pp. 7 ff. — It should be noted that from Ezekiel onwards crystal and sapphire play a major role in mystical visions. We shall come back to this point soon.

B

First, we will deal with the two visions contained in the Ethiopic Enoch xiv and lxxi. These two visions do not belong to the same literary stratum, and it is generally believed that the second one belongs to the latest part of the book. What, however, they have in common is, that in contradistinction to the mystical visions in Scripture, they maintain that the visions were granted in the course of heavenly ascensions.⁸ It has been noted in the previous chapter that according to Scripture nothing attainable to man is to be searched for in heaven. Everything that man should know can be revealed in such a manner that people need not search for extraordinary and supernatural experiences. Unfortunately, lack of literary evidence makes it difficult for us to state with certainty when heavenly ascensions were first systematically practised in Judaism. But, what can be said is, that at least at the time of the composition of the Book of Enoch, the practice was already seriously considered by the people to whom the book was addressed.

The vision of 1 Enoch xiv comes in the middle of the scene where Enoch is described as having ascended unto heaven to intercede on behalf of the fallen angels. It is introduced in xiv,8 where Enoch says that in his dream-vision he saw himself uplifted to heaven by clouds.⁹ The first thing which Enoch says he saw in heaven is "a wall which is built of crystals and surrounded by tongues of fire" (xiv,9). As it turned out to be, the wall surrounded a house. The house, no doubt, is identical with the heavenly divine palace,¹⁰ yet the way it is described requires some comment. The house, its walls, its floor and its groundwork, was built of crystal.¹¹ Now, this description of the crystal-like appearance of the walls most probably derives from Ezekiel i,22, where the prophet says that "Over the heads of the living creatures there was the likeness of a firmament, shining like crystal".¹² This description of what the walls of the house looked like is quite rare, and actually its main parallel is to be found in two places connected with the visions of the Hekhalot mystics.¹³ What equally strikes the eye in the sight of the walls is the fact, that they are surrounded by fiery flames. Twelve times is the fire mentioned in this vision, and this naturally enhances the numinous quality of the vision.¹⁴ The fact that Enoch went into the tongues of fire without being burned could be reminiscent of Isaiah xliii,2—"when you walk through fire you shall not be burned etc."—with all its eschatological connotations. But it also bears resemblance to 2 Enoch xxii, where it is told of Enoch that he was divested of his earthly garments and clad in heavenly ones so as to protect him against the various ¹¹ The Greek fragments of 1 Enoch here use two separate terms: of the wall surrounding the house (verse 9) it is said that it was built ἐν λίθοις χαλάζης (= of hailstones; cf. Isaiah xxx,30), while of the walls mentioned in verse 10 it is said that they were in the likeness of snow (Telag is the Aramaic term used in the text published by Milik). The existence of hailstones in heaven could well be inferred from Josua x,11 and Job xxxviii,22; see also 1 Enoch lxix,23, to say nothing of the fact that hail comes from the sky! See further Ezekiel xxxviii,22; Revelation xvi,21. Cf. also Mechilta d'Rabbi Ismael, ed. Horovitz-Rabin, p. 111. Job xxxviii,22 likewise mentions the heavenly origin of snow. In Bavli Hagigah 12b, the treasures of snow and hail are said to be found in the sixth heaven, Maqon, while 2 Enoch v,1 locates the treasures of hail in the first heaven! Rivers of hail and treasures of snow are also mentioned in Ma'aseh Merkavah (ed. G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism, Merkavah Mysticism, and Talmudic Tradition: Appendix C, pp. 103 ff.) paragraphs 3 (p. 103) and 10 (p. 108; rivers of hail only). See further Tanḥumā, "Terumah", Parag. 11. The heavenly snow is actually considered as the material out of which the earth was created: Pirke de-Rabbi Eliezer, ch. iii; Rabbi Yoḥannan in Beresbit Rabbā, ed. Theodor-Albeck, p. 75. Cf. H. F. Weiss, Untersuchungen zur Kosmologie des hellenistischen und palästinischen Judentum, Berlin, Akademie Verlag, 1966, pp. 96-97. The material collected in L. I. J. Stadelmann, The Hebrew Conception of the World, Rome, Biblical Institute Press, 1970, pp. 118-119, by no means does justice to the wealth of material available.

⁸ Aramaic fragments of this vision as they were found in Cave 4 at Qumran are now published by J. T. Milik, The Books of Enoch: Aramaic Fragments of Qumran Cave 4, Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1976, pp. 348-351. Unfortunately, the texts are too fragmentary to draw any conclusions from them, and Milik's attempts to reconstruct the text cannot be discussed here. According to J. Daniélou, Théologie du Judéo-Christianisme, Tournai, Desclée & Co., 1958, pp. 131 ff., heavenly ascensions are the trade mark of Jewish-Christian apocalyptic. Yet, this view has its obvious tendentious shortcomings.

⁹ The details of the ascent are not sufficiently clear, though the whole description most likely derives from 2 Kings ii,11. See further 1 Enoch xxxix,3; lii,1; lxx,2; 2 Enoch iii,1 (version A). In midrashic literature it is told that Moses ascended to heaven in (!) a cloud: Pesikta Rabbati, ed. M. Friedmann, 96b (= A. Jellinek, Bet Ha-Midrash, vol. I, p. 59). In Tanḥumā (ed. Buber), "Zav", Parag. 16, it is said that the just ones ascend to heaven in clouds which God supplies for that purpose.

¹⁰ The analysis of this vision as found in H. Bietenhard, Die himmlische Welt im Urchristentum und Spätjudentum, Tübingen, J. C. B. Mohr (Paul Siebeck), 1951, p. 54, by no means exhausts the material.

¹² Thus according to the LXX. The Hebrew text here implies a slightly different sense: "awesome crystal". All this provided that the Hebrew qerāḥ really is the equivalent to the Greek 'krystalos'. See however above n. 8!

¹³ Hekhalot Zutreti (quoted and translated in G. Scholem, op. cit., p. 15), and Bavli Hagigah 14b. We shall come back to this point in greater detail in the next chapter.

¹⁴ Urbach, art. cit., p. 18.

dangers that might befall a mortal who is bodily translated onto heaven.¹⁵ Professor Scholem has rightly explained such experiences in terms of a mystical transfiguration,¹⁶ and they certainly belong to the heart of the apocalyptic and mystical experiences.¹⁷ In any event, Enoch had here to pass twice through such fiery flames, first when he passed through the wall and then when he entered the house.

When he entered the house, Enoch was overwhelmed with fright, and typical of a state of extreme terror he felt cold and hot almost simultaneously (verses 14-15).¹⁸ Then, as it turned out, he saw another house, which was within the first one.¹⁹ This second house, Enoch says, "excelled in splendour and magnificence" the first one, but generally speaking, apart from the ceiling, it more or less resembled the first one.²⁰ The second house contained the Throne of God, ¹⁵ See, similarly, Ascension d'Isaie, ix,9, ed. E. Tisserant, Paris, 1909. See further J. Maier, "Das Gefardungsmotiv bei der Himmelsreise in der jüdischen Apokalypik und 'Gnosis'", Kairos V (1963), pp. 18-40.

¹⁶ Scholem, op. cit., p. 60. To the parallel material which Scholem collected there, pp. 56-64 and 132, one should add Pistis Sophia, English Translation G. R. S. Mead, London, John M. Watkins, 1963, p. 18, where Jesus is reported to tell his disciples that he had clad himself in special light-vestures by the help of which he succeeded in passing the various heavenly evil-beings without being harmed by them.

¹⁷ M. Smith, Clement of Alexandria and a Secret Gospel of Mark, Cambridge, Mass., Harvard University Press, 1973, pp. 243-244, sees in the synoptic tradition about the Transfiguration of Jesus a piece of key information about the mystical activity of Jesus. Yet, the way Professor Smith infers the kind of baptism-mysticism which Jesus allegedly practised seems to be rather hypothetical and cannot be regarded conclusive.

¹⁸ This terror which seizes the apocalyptic visionary is typical almost of all the apocalyptic and mystical visions. A notable exception to the rule is Revelation iv, where no such feeling is reported. We shall come back to this vision later on.

¹⁹ H. Bietenhard, op. cit. p. 54 sees in the first house "eine Vorhalle". Yet, from the Hekhalot literature we know that the seven palaces in the seventh heaven were like "a room within a room". See, for instance, Hekhalot Rabbati xv,1. However, the Aramaic fragments of 1 Enoch published by Milik (above, n. 8) make the impression that the visionary saw only one "house". Compare the expression hadrei bekhel demamah in Hekhalot Rabbati iii,1 and vii,5. It should be noticed that the term demamah does not imply here quietness but a whisper. See E. Y. Kutscher, in: Archiv of the New Dictionary of Rabbinical Literature, 1, Ramat-Gan, Bar-Ilan University, 1972, pp. 77-78 (in Hebrew). See further Sifre to Numbers (ed. Horowitz), p. 56, where the angels are said to speak in low voice.

²⁰ While it is said of the ceiling of the first house that it was "like the path of the stars and the lightnings, and between them were fiery cherubim, and their heaven was clear as water", the ceiling of the second house is only briefly described: "its ceiling also was flaming fire". It should be noticed (1) that cherubim are seen only in the ceiling of the first house; (2) the "heaven" in connection with the first ceiling is not quite clear; and (3) both descriptions are only loosely and of it Enoch says: "its appearance was as crystal,²¹ and the wheels thereof as the shining sun,²² and there was the vision of Cherubim"²³ (verse 18). From underneath the throne there came out streams of fire²⁴ which made it difficult for Enoch to look at the Throne.²⁵

From the vision of the Throne Enoch passes on to the vision of the Godhead. He says that "the Great Glory²⁶ sat thereon, and His raiment shone more brightly than the sun and was whiter than the snow."²⁷ None of the angels could enter and behold His face by influenced by the way Ezekiel describes the firmament which he saw above the heads of the Creatures.

²¹ The description of the "lofty throne" (θρόνον ὑψηλόν) derives from Isaiah vi,1 (LXX: θρόνος ὑψηλός) and also from Ezekiel i,26. The "crystal" of which the throne is made of is unique. Ezekiel says that the throne was "in appearance like sapphire" (i,26; x,1). Sapphire was the stone which, as a matter of general rule, the throne was described as being made of. See Exodus xxiv, 10; Bavli Hulin 89a: "... and the firmament is like the sapphire, and the sapphire is like the throne of the Glory". Similarly it is said of the rod of Moses that it was made of sapphire; Tanhumā, "Beshalah", xxi. The Tablets of the Law were likewise said to be hewn from the Sapphire (Tanhumā, "Ki Tisa", xxix). At one place we also hear that the ark was made of sapphire (Tanhumā, "Beshalah", xxi; compare Exodus xxv, 10 ff.). As for the colour of the sapphire, it is generally considered to be blue (Bavli Hulin 89a: "... since blue is like the sea, and the sea looks like the firmament, and the firmament is like the sapphire, and the sapphire is like the throne of the Glory"). But in one place (Lekah Tov, ad Exodus xxiv, 10) it is said that the sapphire is white! See further, G. Scholem, "Farben und ihre Symbolik in der jüdischen Überlieferung und Mystik", in: Judaica III, Frankfurt a.M., Suhrkamp Verlag, 1970, pp. 117-119.

²² See Ezekiel i, 16 and Daniel vii, 9.

²³ There is a vast literature dealing with the cherubim. Still relevant is the discussion of W. F. Albright, "What Were the Cherubim", Biblical Archaeologist I (1938), pp. 1-3. See further P. Schäfer, Rivalität zwischen Engeln und Menschen, Berlin, Walter der Gruyter, 1975, pp. 18-20.

²⁴ 1 Enoch xiv, 19: ποταμοὶ πυρός φλεγόμενοι. Compare Daniel vii, 10, where only one ποταμὸς πυρός is mentioned. In 3 Enoch xix and xxxiii four and seven streams of fire are mentioned respectively. In Ma'aseh Merkavah iii (Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 103) twelve thousand streams of fire are referred to, while Revelation iv, 5 has no streams of fire at all. See also G. Scholem, ibid., pp. 56-57.

²⁵ The idea that no human being can see the face of God and survive is first expressed in Exodus xxxiii, 20. Hekhalot Rabbati xi, 4 contains a beautiful description of how the four Creatures come out from underneath of the Throne and dance before God. It is said there that in the course of their dance they uncover their faces, while God covers His own. In another place there (viii, 2) it is said that he who looks at God is immediately destroyed. Even the angels cannot serve Him but for one day "since they were utterly weakened and their face was completely burned; their heart was totally confused and their eyes were darkened". (viii, 2).

²⁶ xiv, 20: ἡ δόξα ἡ μεγάλη.

²⁷ God's raiment is a central theme both in Jewish apocalyptic and in Merkavah reason of the magnificence of the glory, and no flesh could behold Him.²⁸ The flaming fire was round about Him, and a great fire stood before Him, and none around could draw nigh Him".²⁹ At the end, Enoch describes the angels that minister unto God: "ten thousand times ten thousand (stood) before Him, yet He needed no counsellor.³⁰ And the most holy ones who were nigh to him did not leave by night nor depart from Him".³¹

We have extensively quoted from this vision of Enoch, since it is the oldest Merkavah vision we know of from the literature outside of the canonical Scriptures. It contains, on the one hand, several motives already found in the "Merkavah" visions in Scripture, and, on the other hand, there is already a great deal in this vision that became typical of later Merkavah visions. Indeed, one can consider this particular vision a model-vision of Merkavah mysticism. Although in the Hekhalot literature certain magicotheurgic practices are added, the Enoch-vision of chapter xiv contains in principle many important mystical elements. To begin with—as we have already said—it presupposes a heavenly ascent. But—quite unlike other heavenly visions in apocalyptic literature and in the Hekhalot mysticism—no angel is reported here to accompany Enoch on his heavenly journey.³² This fact, that Enoch makes this heavenly trip with no angelic accompaniment, is even more emphatically stressed when Enoch himself says (verse 21): "None of the angels could enter and behold His face".³³ In this respect Enoch is here more privileged than all the angels, and even more so when he finds himself addressed mysticism. See G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 56 ff. It should be noticed that contrary to Daniel vii,9 and 1 Enoch xlv,1 and lxxi,10, Enoch does not describe here the hair of God. See further Revelation i,14.

²⁸ See above note 25. See also Hekhalot Rabbati iii,4.

²⁹ Compare Deuteronomy iv,36; v,21-24. See also above note 7.

³⁰ It is interesting to notice, that in both Merkavah visions in 1 Enoch, here and in lxxi, there is no angelic song mentioned. But there is one in xxxix,12-13.

³¹ The presence of angelic beings at night is noteworthy for two reasons: (1) In Bavli 'Avodah Zarah 3b it is said that what God does at night is to hear the song of the Creatures (in Bavli Hulin 91b another tradition states that the angelic song is recited only at daytime). (2) In Hekhalot Rabbati we find that God descends from the eighth heaven to His throne in the seventh only at the hours of prayer of the People of Israel, in the morning and in the afternoon! Cf. Hekhalot Rabbati iii,3 and ix-xi. We shall come back to this interesting point later on.

³² For the function of the angelus interpres see P. Schäfer, op. cit., p. 10.

³³ There seems to be some kind of discrepancy between this verse and the next one, where it is said that the angels do stand before God.

directly by God (xiv,24-xvi,4). Thus it may be said, that in the eyes of the apocalypticist, Enoch enjoys a qualitative superiority over the angels. However, it is difficult at this stage to say with certainty whether this vision can be considered as the direct source of the Enoch-Metatron speculations, or whether we have to look for their source in a completely different direction.³⁴ What, however, is certain, is that the remark made in xv,1 about Enoch, who is described as a "righteous man and scribe of righteousness", actually brings this vision of Enoch very close to that Enoch-Metatron tradition.³⁵ In addition, it should be noticed, that Enoch sees two houses, one inside the other, and this we find later on to be characteristic of the Hekhalot visions.³⁶ Then we also have the terror which overwhelms Enoch just before the climax of the vision is reached. This is typical of many apocalyptic and Merkavah visions,³⁷ and one may argue that this terror, which results in a swoon, is later on in the Merkavah visions transformed into the danger-theme.³⁸ Finally, the vision of the Godhead seated on His throne with a great number of angels ministering to Him has since the days of Daniel and Enoch become classical.

Before we go on to the second central Merkavah vision in 1 Enoch, that of chapter lxxi, mention should be made of the several minor Merkavah-passages in the book. First, we have the short reference in xviii,8-9 to the "throne of God, of alabaster, and the summit of the throne was sapphire". Here the throne is not in a house, as the throne which Enoch described in chapter xiv, but on the peak of a mountain. This mountain, again, is the middle one in a series of seven mountains which Enoch is allowed to see, and the ³⁴ We need not enter here the difficult problem of the identification of Enoch with the Son of Man, as it occurs in the Book of Similitudes (1 Enoch xxxvii-lxxi). See mainly E. Sjöberg, Der Menschensohn im Äthiopischen Henochbuch, Lund, 1946. Notice too the detailed discussion in H. Odeberg, 3 Enoch, Reprint: New York, Ktav Publishing House, 1973, pp. 69 ff., and the commentary there pp. 6 ff.

³⁵ See also xii,3. Charles in his commentary overlooked the technical implications of the terminology used here in connection with Enoch. Compare Jubilees iv,16-17 with the tradition preserved in the Targum Yerushalmi to Genesis v,24 (version A). Cf. 3 Enoch viii-xi. See further our discussion of 3 Enoch, in Part Two of the present book.

³⁶ See above note 19.

³⁷ And in this sense it may reflect what R. Otto, The Idea of the Holy, Harmondsworth, Pelican Books, 1959, pp. 26 ff., has identified as the "Mysterium Tremendum"-element in religion.

³⁸ See J. Maier, "Das Gefährdungsmotiv bei der Himmelsreise in der Jüdischen Apokalyptik und 'Gnosis'", Kairos V (1963), pp. 18-40.

theophany which Enoch experiences thereon is obviously reminiscent of the theophany on Mount Sinai. Particularly so, since Enoch goes on to say: "And I saw a flaming fire".³⁹ A similar vision recurs in xxv,3. Here Enoch reaches another place of the earth, where again he sees seven mountains the middle one resembling the throne of God (xxiv,3).⁴⁰ When Enoch inquires of the accompanying angel the meaning of what he sees, the angel Raguel,⁴¹ says: "This high mountain which thou hast seen, whose summit is like the throne of God, is His throne, where the Holy Great One, the Lord of Glory, the Eternal King, will sit, when He shall come down to visit the earth with goodness" (xxv,3).⁴²

Another of the smaller Merkavah passages in 1 Enoch belongs to the so-called Book of Similitudes (xxxvi-lxxi). In xxxix Enoch describes his vision of the "dwelling-places of the holy, and the resting-places of the righteous". All this occurred in the course of a heavenly ascent (xxxix,3), which is of great interest for our study. The place to which Enoch is translated is most probably the Paradise of Righteousness (Aramaic: Pardes Qushtā),⁴³ though the term itself occurs only elsewhere: xxxii,3; lx,23 (see also verse 8); and lxxvii,3.⁴⁴ Enoch sees there not only the dwelling places of the righteous of Israel, but also the dwelling places of the angels,⁴⁵ and, last but not ³⁹ On the theme of the divine throne and temple situated on mountains see, J. Maier, 1 om Kultus zur Gnosis, Salzburg, Otto Müller Verlag, 1964, pp. 97 ff.

⁴⁰ It should be asked whether this vision is not a duplication of the previous one in xviii. See Charles' commentary ad viii,6.

⁴¹ For Raguel see P. Schäfer, op. cit., pp. 11, 22.

⁴² For a discussion of the parallels in other Jewish writings see, I. Gruenwald, Re'uyot Yehezkel, in: Temirin I (1972), p. 138.

⁴³ In Greek: παράδεισος τῆς δικαιοσύνης. See next note.

⁴⁴ There is a vast literature dealing with the idea of the Paradise, both from the eschatological and theosophical points of view. See lately, M. Stone, "Paradise in 4 Ezra iv,8 and vii,36; viii,52", The Journal of Jewish Studies, XVII (1966), pp. 85 ff.; M. Gil, "Enoch in the land of Eternal Life", (In Hebrew), Tarbiz XXXVIII (1969), pp. 322 ff.—It should be observed that the term "Paradise of Righteousness" is used in apocalyptic literature as the heavenly equivalent for the Garden of Eden in Genesis ii. As far as our knowledge goes, Hebrew texts in Tannaitic times, and even later on, always referred to the eschatological "Garden" as the Garden of Eden, while the term "Pardes" was reserved to designate mystical speculations. It seems that the turning point in the use of the word "Paradise", from an eschatological to a mystical sense, could be traced back to 2 Corinthians xii,4, which should be compared with I'ta Adae et Evae xxv,3. Compare also the terms "Paradise of God" in Ezekiel xxviii,13 and xxxi,8-9 (LXXI) and "Garden of Life" in 1 Enoch lxi,12. Yet, see infra our discussion of 2 Enoch viii-ix.

⁴⁵ The heavenly, and possibly also the earthly, participation of human beings least, of the Messiah himself.⁴⁶ Some scholars have been inclined to detect in the messianic passages in the Book of Similitudes Christian influence; yet, it should be observed that the inclusion of the Messiah in Merkavah visions is also known from the Hekhalot literature.⁴⁷ Since there is much more in this vision that has its parallel in Jewish sources—such as the notion that “all the righteous and elect before Him shall be shining as fiery lights”⁴⁸—the Christian origin of the Book of Similitudes is not from this point of view as self-evident as some scholars take it to be.⁴⁹ In the concluding section to the vision Enoch describes the angels and the doxologies which they recite. There are two doxological formulae mentioned here. The one, “Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of Spirits: He filleth the earth with spirits”, takes as its model the Sanctus of Isaiah vi,3; and the other one, “Blessed be thou, and blessed be the name of the Lord for ever and ever”, is reminiscent of the Benedictus of Ezekiel iii,12. In either case the biblical opening phrases are, as it were, the doxological in the angelic community is one of the most striking features of the eschatology of the Qumran sect. See now P. Schäfer, op. cit., pp. 33 ff.

⁴⁶ See xxxix,6: “And in that place mine eyes saw the Elect One . . . and I saw his dwelling-place under the wings of the Lord of Spirits.” Later on, in Kabbalah-literature, the Messiah was allocated a heavenly (mystical) palace. See G. Scholem, “The Sources for ‘The Story of Rabbi Gadi’el, the Infant’ in Kabbalistic Literature”, (in Hebrew), in: Devarim Bego, Tel Aviv, ‘Am Oved, 1975, pp. 270-283. See also the vision described in 1 Enoch xlv,1.

⁴⁷ See, for instance, the additions to Hekhalot Rabbati printed in A. Jellinek, Bet Ha-Midrash, V, pp. 167-169. Although these additions apparently belong to a rather late stage in the creation of the Hekhalot literature, the idea could well be of a much earlier date. See further, Y. Even-Shemuel, Midreshei Ge’ulah, Jerusalem-Tel Aviv, Bialik Institute, 1954, p. 7.

⁴⁸ See Sifre on Deuteronomy, ed. L. Finkelstein, p. 104/5, and parallels. Notice also the famous saying of Rav (Berakhot 17a), that in the world to come the righteous will sit peacefully before God with “their diadems on their heads, enjoying the divine Glory (Hebrew: ziv ha-shekhinah)”. “To enjoy the divine Glory” (Hebrew: Lehanot mi-ziv ha-shekhinah) is a technical expression in rabbinical literature and its meaning is: to have all the physical needs supplied from the divine Glory.

⁴⁹ The case for the post-Christian origin of the Book of Similitudes has recently gained new momentum: it has been observed that the only part of the Book of Enoch not represented in Qumran is that very Book of Similitudes. See J. T. Milik, Ten Years of Discovery in the Wilderness of Judaea, London, SCM Press, 1959, p. 33. Strong as this argument from Qumran may sound, it is still nothing but an argumentum ex silentio. And even when the post Christian date of its composition is taken for granted, the Jewish origin of the Book of Similitudes is not necessarily challenged. See E. Sjöberg, op. cit. (above note 34), p. 39. See also Chapter One, n. 15.

trade-mark, while the main body of the doxology is more or less in the form of a free variation on the biblical Vorlagen.

It goes beyond the purpose of the present study to investigate those doxologies for all their morphological and theological contents. There are, however, one or two points to be made in connection with doxologies and these concern the way these doxologies are tagged on to the above mentioned verses in Isaiah and Ezekiel.

Although, as has been mentioned before, the opening words are kept, the rest is but loosely and freely connected to the biblical wording. Some scholars have attempted to show that certain principles underlie these changes in and deviations from the biblical models. While to some of the scholars interpretative tendencies could be detected in the post-biblical doxologies,⁵⁰ to others theological considerations, both Jewish and Christian, appeared to have determined the variations in the wording.⁵¹ However, if all these examples of angelic doxologies are taken together, it appears that a variety of factors variety will have to be considered.⁵² In addition, certain liturgical formulae taken from the Temple service were introduced into these doxologies.⁵³ What is important for us here is to observe that when the biblical doxologies were not considered as strictly binding in their wording, significant changes could be introduced into them, and the way stood open for the composition of the more elaborate angelological hymns of the kind and lyrical quality found in the Hekhalot texts.

We shall have to return later on to a detailed discussion of the Hekhalot texts. What can already be said is that certain inner developments in those apocalyptic doxologies could in themselves have paved the way for the lyrical and structurally more complex composition of the Hekhalot hymns. A glance, for instance, at the doxologies found in Revelation would well show how the doxological elements underwent certain inner developments, both from the point of view of length and of the diversification of themes. But what at ⁵⁰ See D. Flusser, "Sanktus und Gloria", in: Abraham unser Vater: Festschrift für Otto Michel, Leiden, 1963, pp. 129-152.

⁵¹ See the survey of views in E. Werner, The Sacred Bridge, New York, Schocken Books, 1970, pp. 282 ff.; see also H. Bietenhard, op. cit., pp. 137 ff.

⁵² For a survey of some of the motives that played their respective role in the development of the Jewish Qedushah-liturgy see I. Elbogen, Der jüdische Gottesdienst in seiner geschichtlichen Entwicklung, Reprint: Hildesheim, Georg Olms, 1962, pp. 61 ff., 521/2.

⁵³ See E. Werner, ibid., pp. 277-291.

this stage seems to be of much greater importance for our study is the angelological liturgy of the Qumran sect. Professor John Strugnell published in 1960 two fragments from an angelic liturgy found among the manuscripts of the fourth cave at Qumran.⁵⁴ Professor Strugnell inclined to date these manuscripts between the years 75 and 50 B.C.E., though the liturgy itself could well go back to an earlier date. In other words, these fragments belong to the flourishing days of Jewish apocalyptic. Professor Strugnell is presently preparing some additional material of the same texts for publication in the series of "Discoveries in the Judaean Desert" (Oxford). When this material becomes available to the public, it will be seen that the Qumranites' interest in heavenly liturgies and hymns was greater than has previously been thought, when only the brief references in the Scrolls themselves and the small published fragments were known.⁵⁵ It is difficult to tell from these Qumran texts, whether real heavenly hymns are quoted or whether the Qumran writer only gave picturesque descriptions of the orders of the angels who are said to sing the hymns. The language of these fragments is so rich that it is very often difficult to decide whether a hymn is quoted or only a description of how it is sung is given. The bad condition in which these manuscripts are preserved makes it even more difficult to decide whether a description ends or a possible hymn begins. At any rate, when published, the fragments will be a major contribution to our understanding of one milieu in which the doxologies found in apocalyptic grew and also of the literary and conceptual background of the hymnological material in the Hekhalot literature. It now seems that if certain hymnological passages in rabbinic literature⁵⁶ are added to the evidence from apocalyptic and Qumran, then the sort of literary sources behind the Hekhalot hymns can be fairly well exemplified.

⁵⁴ J. Strugnell, "The Angelic Liturgy at Qumran, 4Q . . .", Vetus Testamentum Supplement VII (1960), pp. 318-345. Professor Y. Yadin has unearthed in Megadab another fragment of the same angelic Shabbat-liturgy.

⁵⁵ See, for instance, 1 QH (= Hodayot) III,21-23: "... Thou hast made a mere man to share the lot of the Spirits of Knowledge (= the angels) to praise thy name in their chorus . . ." (English translation: Th. Gaster, The Dead Sea Scriptures, New York, Anchor Books, Doubleday & Co., 1964, p. 145).

⁵⁶ See G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 22 ff. It must be remarked that the Song of the Kine quoted ibid., p. 25 is in its form and in its style closer to the angelological liturgy of Qumran than (as Professor Scholem inclines to think) to the Hekhalot hymns.

Finally, we come in this series of short Merkavah-like visions in 1 Enoch to the visions described in xlvii,3 and in lx,1-4. First, in xlvii,3, the visionary says that he saw "the Head of Days when He seated Himself upon the throne of His glory, and the books of the living were opened before Him; and all His Host which is in heaven above and His counsellors stood before Him". Apart from the fact that the description follows in its general lines those found in 1 Kings xxii,19 and in the Prologue to the Book of Job, a similar vision is recorded in xlvi,1, where the Messiah is included too. What should be noticed in the vision of xlvii,3 is the fact, that the scene is that of the final, eschatological, judgement.⁵⁷ The vision described in lx,1-4, however, is interesting for the report it contains of the great excitement of the apocalypticist, and also for the fact that the righteous are described there as standing before God together with the angels. This last point could well fit into the previously mentioned idea stressed in the Qumran writings about the eschatological participation of the angels in the community of the righteous, and, mutatis mutandis, of the community of the righteous in the heavenly orders of the angels. It should be noticed, too, that the inclusion of the righteous among those who stand before God is once again stressed in the Merkavah vision in Revelation iv. There, apart from the four Creatures, the Messiah and the seven Spirits of God, only the twenty-four elders are present before God. The angels are not mentioned there, which is quite remarkable in comparison with other Merkavah visions.

C

The second major Merkavah vision of 1 Enoch is the one found in lxxi. Although some of its characteristic features are in a way a repetition of those already found in the first major Merkavah vision (ch. xiv), there are some new items which this vision presents. Most noteworthy is the fact that Enoch is taken into what could be interpreted to be two separate heavens, and the fact that God is described as leaving His palace in order to welcome Enoch. But before we go into the details of that vision, some remarks are in order concerning its place in the book. In chapter lxx the final translation of Enoch is described, that is, the translation after which he did not return down to earth.⁵⁸ It is, therefore, quite peculiar to hear once again in lxxi about yet another translation of Enoch. Indeed, several of the interpreters of the Book of Enoch have thought this chapter to be an artificial addition to the main body of the book, and there are excellent reasons for accepting arguments that follow this line of thought. However, there is also another way of looking at the problem. 1 Enoch has long been thought to be composed of at least five main parts. Chapter lxxi was most probably a loose fragment which the editor(s) of the book did not exactly know where to place. Realizing that this fragment bears a number of similarities to the other visions contained in the Book of Similitudes, the editor decided to place it at the end of this part of the whole book. Thus it happens that after Enoch had been finally translated onto heaven, another translation comes in the form of an appendix.

⁵⁷ For the biblical background of the idea see Charles' Commentary ad locum. See further H. Bietenhard, op. cit., pp. 116 ff.

Now to the vision itself. It falls into two parts:⁵⁹ verses 1-4 describe Enoch's journey through the first heaven, while verses 5-17 apparently describe his journey through the second heaven.⁶⁰ In the first heaven Enoch sees "the holy sons of God",⁶¹ that is, the angels, and his description of them—"their garments were white and their faces shone like snow"—reminds one of the description of the angel ⁵⁸ The idea of Enoch being translated at least twice, once in his lifetime and once at his death, is obviously inspired by the twice repeated phrase "Enoch walked with God" in Genesis v,22&24. The notion of his final translation derives from the concluding remark in verse 24 to the effect that "he was not, for God took him".

⁵⁹ There is no absolute necessity to distinguish between two separate visions in this chapter, as suggested by Charles and others. Yet there is some difficulty in the literary structure of the chapter. In verse 3, Michael is mentioned as the guiding angel of Enoch during the latter's tour in the first heaven. In verse 8 Michael is once again mentioned, but this time as one of the four archangels in the second heaven. In addition, at the end of verse 2 we read: "and I fell on my face before the Lord of the Spirits", though God actually appears only later on in verse 10, that is in the second heaven! It should be noticed in this respect too that in the first part of the chapter God is referred to as the "Lord of the Spirits", while in the second part He is called "the Head of Days". However, if we take verses 2 & 3 to include some later interpolations, then these difficulties could be removed.

⁶⁰ Actually this vision of the journey through two separate heavens is nowhere else found in 1 Enoch, though it is typical of 2 Enoch, and some other apocalyptic books. This again may account for the fact, that the vision of chapter lxxi found no integral place in the book.

⁶¹ It seems that the derogatory associations in connection with the appellation "Sons of God" given to the evil angels in Genesis vi,2 did not persist for long. See Encyclopaedia Biblica (in Hebrew), vol. II (1954), coll. 172-174. Still, it is noteworthy, that they are here called "the holy Sons of God".

which Daniel saw (Daniel x,5-6).⁶² Typical of such visions, Enoch sees fire everywhere, though in contradistinction to the vision in chapter xiv Enoch also receives here revelations about the secrets of nature. In verse 5, the second part of the vision begins. Actually it is here that the more interesting Merkavah material of the vision is to be found. Enoch says that the angel Michael "translated my spirit into the heaven of heavens"⁶³ and that there he saw "a structure built of crystals". This structure obviously corresponds to the house or houses which Enoch saw in the vision of chapter xiv. Once again Enoch saw "tongues of living fire", and he remarks that the house itself was surrounded by "a girdle" of fire. Four classes of angels—Seraphim, Cherubim, Ophanim and 'Irim—together with countless other angels are present on the scene, the first ones (those distinguished as classes) guarding the throne of God and the second ones encircling the house. There Enoch also sees the four angels, Michael, Raphael, Gabriel and Phanuel, who together with other angels "go in and out of that house". Actually these four angels accompanied by the other angels escort God, called here "the Head of Days", when He comes out of the house to welcome Enoch! The idea of God coming out of His palace to welcome the visionary is found only here in the Merkavah visions we know of. It could be explained as a reflection of some biblical theophanies in which God is said to come out of the heavens.⁶⁴ When Enoch sees God, his whole body and soul are transfigured: "and my whole body became relaxed, and ⁶² Compare Revelation i,13-15 and x,1; xviii,1. It seems that the supernatural appearance of the angels, as described in Daniel and in other apocalyptic books is a comparatively late development in Jewish angelology. In Judges xiii, for instance, where Mano'ah's wife sees the angel and yet confusedly thinks him to be 'Ish Elobim, a man of God (verse 6), an appellation generally given to the prophets. Even Abraham, the Patriarch, seemingly could not distinguish between angels and common men; Genesis xviii,1. Nor did Joshu'a for that matter realise that the man standing before him with his sword drawn was in reality an angel (Joshu'a v,13-14). However, for a different interpretation of the angel-scene in Joshu'a see A. Rofé, Israelite Belief in Angels in the Pre-Exilic Period as Evidenced by Biblical Traditions (Dissertation. In Hebrew), Jerusalem, 1969, pp. 271 ff.

⁶³ Elsewhere it has been shown by the present writer that the designation 'Heaven of Heavens' (in Hebrew: Shmei Ha-Shamayim) is a common one for the second heaven in Palestinian lists of seven heavens. See in Temirin (above note 42), pp. 116 ff. If our interpretation of this vision is correct, and it really describes the ascent to two heavens, then this seems to be the first literary evidence for the name given here to the second heaven. But compare 1 Kings viii,27!

⁶⁴ See, for instance, 2 Samuel xxii,10-11 = Psalms xviii,10-11; and also the visions described in Ezekiel i & x.

my spirit was transfigured".⁶⁵ Consequently, Enoch sings songs of praise to God, a fact not mentioned before in 1 Enoch. This could therefore be considered to be one of the earliest references to a Merkavah hymn recited not by the angels but by the visionary himself!⁶⁶ The vision ends with a comparatively long reference to the Son of Man and a description of some of his eschatological functions.

The purpose of this extensive analysis of the so-called Merkavah passages in 1 Enoch was to stress some of the more characteristic features of these passages in comparison with the parallel biblical material and in anticipation of the corresponding material in the Merkavah literature. In the first chapter of the present book, a general outline has been given of two particular qualities of Jewish apocalyptic in relationship to Scripture. The aim of this chapter is to exhibit yet another quality of Jewish apocalyptic, that is, the special interest it shows in theosophy. It has been shown that certain mystical elements found in Scripture were picked up by the apocalyptists and worked into a, comparatively speaking, full-scale model of mystical experience. Needless to say, this Merkavah material in Jewish apocalyptic had its own important share in shaping the mystical experience of the kind which we find later on in the Hekhalot literature. Although it is quite difficult to show the direct historical connection between Jewish apocalyptic and the Hekhalot literature, the literary connections between these two types of literature are almost self-evident. It must be admitted that even in the case of the mystical passages in Scripture it is difficult to say that they really and directly gave rise to the mystical preoccupation in Jewish apocalyptic. Although one may well argue even in this case for the presence of real historical connections, literary connections too could in themselves account for the formation of the mystical tradition in Jewish apocalyptic.

A mystical sensibility is a common phenomenon in almost all the religions of the world. The rise of an interest in mystical speculations, or even the mystical experiences themselves, in one age or another, could be explained either by some kind of now unattested traditions which linked the ages, or else by an independent mystical impetus that annexed itself to traditional modes of expression, or most likely by both. Whether we view these connections as merely of a literary quality or as real historical affiliations, the fact that the ancient Jewish mystical tradition is mainly focused upon the vision of the divine Merkavah is more telling from the point of view of the historical connections than is sometimes admitted by scholars. More difficult, however, is the question of the connection between the Merkavah mysticism and later medieval developments of Jewish mysticism. The book which marked the change from Merkavah mysticism to the kind of mysticism which was later on designated by the term "Kabbalah" (= literally: tradition), was Sefer Yezirah or: The Book of the Formation of the World.⁶⁷ It was compiled sometime at the beginning of the Islamic period,⁶⁸ but some of its more characteristic elements belong to a much earlier period. Although it contains some references to the Merkavah lore (paragraphs 5, 8, 14, and 38), it is the starting point for quite a new language and direction in the history of Jewish mysticism, and hence presents some new historical and literary problems.

⁶⁵ For a characterisation of such feelings in the course of ecstasies see, E. Underhill, Mysticism, London, Methuen, 1960, pp. 359 ff.

⁶⁶ A parallel to this is to be found in the Apocalypse of Abraham. We shall later on come back to this point in connection with the Hekhalot hymns.

Returning to the Merkavah passages in Jewish apocalyptic, they show an extensive interest in mystical experiences, an interest that increased, at least in some Jewish circles, once Jewish apocalyptic was no more in the vogue. In addition, there is still much left for further investigation and thought concerning the place—or as some would like to call it: the "Sitz im Leben"—of these mystical scenes in Jewish apocalyptic. But in the present study considerations of the kind known as Formgeschichte would lead us off the main track, which is a thematic description of the Merkavah-tradition in Jewish apocalyptic, in the Talmudic literature and in the Hekhalot literature. We shall now turn to the Merkavah passages found in some of the other texts of Jewish apocalyptic, and first to the so-called Slavonic Enoch, or 2 Enoch.

⁶⁷ There is a vast literature on the book; see G. Scholem, Kabbalah, Jerusalem, Keter Publishing House, 1974, pp. 205/6.

⁶⁸ Professor N. Allony has recently published a series of articles in Hebrew in which he argued for the post-Islamic origin of Sefer Yezirah. Allony argues that the linguistic theory embodied in Sefer Yezirah could be explained only on the ground of the Kitab al-ʿEin of the first known Arab lexicographer, Ḥalil ibn Aḥmad (died in 797). It must be admitted, that the arguments presented by Allony cannot be easily dismissed as wrong, yet there is still a lot in the Sefer Yezirah that has its origin in earlier speculations, and particularly so the doctrine of the ten Sefirot. See further the article referred to above in Chapter One, note 18. Whatever its date, the book had a tremendous influence on all later developments of Jewish mysticism. And that part of the book which exercised the greatest conceptual influence is the first one, that is, the older one which deals with the Sefirot, and not the second, and later one, which deals with the letters of the alphabet!

D

The Merkavah material in 1 Enoch belongs to the period preceeding the destruction of the Second Temple. This is probably true also concerning the material found in the so-called Book of Parables (Similitudes), that is, chapters xxxvi-lxxi. Although reasons could be found for dating this particular part of the book to a later period, it seems certain that the Merkavah material contained therein is similar to the Merkavah material included in the earlier parts of the book. But all the other apocalyptic books we are going to discuss hereafter belong to a period which is very close to the destruction of the Temple and it may be said, that the writers had some particularly pressing problems to solve. It has been said in the previous chapter, that some parts of Jewish apocalyptic seem to express a crisis regarding the fulfilment of prophecy. Since a considerable part of the Scriptural prophecies remained unfulfilled, apocalyptic came to reassure people of the validity of biblical prophecy. With the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple, however, apocalyptic had to face a bitter crisis regarding itself. Indeed, it appears that Jewish apocalyptic hardly overcame this crisis. Within thirty or forty years from the destruction of Jerusalem, Jewish apocalyptic literature disappeared—at least for the time being—from the literary scene.

Yet, before it finally did so, it underwent a noteworthy change. Its natural interest in the world of the divine Merkavah gained more power and significance. Thus one can find in the apocalyptic texts which were written under the tragic impression of the destruction of Jerusalem a marked interest in theosophical subjects. In addition, the very rise of rabbinic Merkavah mysticism was connected with the name of Rabbi Yohanan ben Zakkai, who was himself an eyewitness to the events that led to the destruction of Jerusalem. Thus, in a sense, the preoccupation with mystical problems could well be interpreted as being one of the ways in which people reacted to the disasters which befell them. When the cultic centre of the nation was no longer available, some people adapted beliefs and cultivated experiences which in some sense could replace experiences which had once been connected with the now destroyed Temple and with the immanence of God which it had signified. Yet, again, this is not to say that the Sitz-im-Leben of Jewish Merkavah mysticism was in the Temple cult.⁶⁹ It seems that it would be safer to say that the destruction of the Temple brought about a reaction which could well be characterized as a kind of mystical escapism. The stresses and distresses of reality pushed people to find comfort and consolation in superior or infra realistic realms. Thus we find a marked intensification in the interest in, and in the preoccupation with, mystical speculation. Yet, even here it would be incorrect to interpret this increase in mystical speculation only as a result of the disappointment and grief felt at the destruction of Jerusalem. This intensified interest in mysticism could also, at least partly so, be inspired by parallel phenomena in the hellenistic culture of the period.⁷⁰ Other motivations, hitherto only vaguely identified, could also have had their share as contributing factors in instigating the mystical speculations of the period. Thus, internal and external, literary and historical, factors played their respective roles in preparing the conditions necessary for the flourishing of mysticism in the post-destruction period.

⁶⁹ See J. Maier, Vom Kultus zur Gnosis, Salzburg, Otto Müller Verlag, passim.

We shall now turn to the apocalyptic writings which were, in all likelihood, composed in that period. These apocalypses still reveal a marked interest in eschatology while the curiosity in cosmological and natural phenomena which is so characteristic of 1 Enoch is somehow suspended. Since the apocalyptic writings of the period which we shall discuss here describe ascents to a number of heavens, one may to some degree be justified in qualifying them as mystical apocalypses, without indeed overlooking their general eschatological interest. The number of the heavens to which the apocalypticist is said to ascend is generally seven, though Paul describes an ascent to the third heaven (2 Corinthians xii,2; see also Testament of Levi iii). Seven heavens are mentioned or described in 2 Enoch, in the Apocalypse of Abraham (they are referred to in chapter xix), in the Ascension of Isaiah, in the Greek Baruch (only five heavens are described) and in the fragment of the Apocalypse of Zephaniah which was preserved by Clement of Alexandria (only the fifth heaven is briefly described). It seems that only in Revelation we find once again the older concept of the existence of one heaven.

As already said, we shall first discuss the Merkavah material in the Slavonic Book of Enoch, or 2 Enoch. It is quite likely that its date of composition coincided with the events that terminated in the destruction of Jerusalem, yet the historical references in the book are rather vague and leave room for a number of guesses. In addition, the book presents some extremely difficult textual problems, the most difficult of which, namely the determination of the original version of the book, has not yet been conclusively solved. In our discussion of the Merkavah material found in the book, we shall pay equal attention to the long (A) and the short (B) recensions as they are printed in Charles, Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha, vol. II, pp. 431 ff.⁷¹ 2 Enoch contains, among other things, a description of the ascent of the hero to the seven heavens, and the great interest of the description lies in the details it gives of the things which the hero saw in each of the heavens. This extensive description of the contents of the seven heavens has a number of parallels in Jewish apocalyptic literature as well as in later Jewish mystical and cosmological writings.⁷² However, not all the details of this description directly belong to our subject; we shall limit ourselves to those details which directly concern us.

⁷⁰ E. R. Dodds, Pagan and Christian in an Age of Anxiety, Cambridge University Press, 1968, passim.

Generally speaking, the descriptions of what the seven heavens contain reveal a cosmological, or astronomical, interest. Yet, when it comes to the description of these things, one can always find a basic interest in theosophical matters.⁷³ Whatever one sees and finds in heaven always has a close connection to the divine and, thus, even the heavens below the seventh include items which are affiliated to the Merkavah material. This, naturally, reminds us of the fact already observed by various scholars, that, in apocalyptic literature and, also, in later mystical literature the interest in cosmological and theosophical matters goes hand in hand.

When we come to 2 Enoch, the point that should be noticed about chapters viii-ix is the fact that the hero there is said to see Paradise, the place of retribution for the righteous and compassionate ones, in the third heaven. This is interesting for two reasons. Firstly, while in 1 Enoch this Paradise is just said to be in heaven, here in 2 Enoch it is located in the third heaven. The location of Paradise in the third heaven is also known from Apocalypse of Moses xxxviii,4, and it seems that even in the case of Paul (2 Corinthians xii,2; 4) the same holds true. Secondly, the word "Paradise" in 2 Enoch is still a place in heaven and not a terminus technicus for theosophical speculations. The technical change in the use of the word can almost certainly be observed in Paul's account (ibid.), and it is already taken for granted in the story about the four sages who entered the Pardes. Thus it appears that 2 Enoch was composed either at a time when the shift in the terminological usage, already imminent in Paul, was not yet known, or else by someone who was not aware of the shift.

⁷¹ The best edition still is: A. Vaillant, Le Livre des Secrets d'Hénoch, Paris, Institut d'Études Slaves, 1952.

⁷² The relevant writings are: Re'uyot Yehezkel, Beraita De-Ma'aseh Beresbit, Bavli Hagigah 12b, and Sefer Ha-Razim. Among the apocalyptic writings, mention should be made in this connection of Greek Baruch (= 3 Baruch) and the fragment of the Apocalypse of Zephaniah found in Clement, Strom. V 11 77.

⁷³ See F. Cumont, Astrology and Religion among the Greeks and Romans, New York, 1912, particularly pp. 101 ff.

In some sense, however, the Paradise-description in 2 Enoch is already connected with the Merkavah lore. It is said in viii,8 (in both versions) that many angels (in A: three hundred) keep the garden and "with incessant sweet singing and never silent voices serve the Lord throughout all days and hours". This is a characteristic feature of 2 Enoch, where the song of the various angelic beings is repeatedly referred to. Only the angels in the fifth heaven do not sing their celestial song (according to A only!). More important in this respect, however, is the fact that the apocalypticist says that "in the midst of the trees (is) that of life, in that place whereon the Lord rests, when he goes up into Paradise" (viii,3; A and B). As Charles remarks in his notes ad locum (p. 434), "this is a familiar feature in Jewish Apocalypse".⁷⁴ We may add that wherever this particular idea occurs, it refers to the original abode of Shekbinah before the Shekbinah ascended to heaven on account of the sins of mankind. Thus, we find in 3 Enoch v, that "From the day when the Holiness, blessed be He, expelled the first Adam from the Garden of Eden, Shekbinah was dwelling upon a Keruv under the Tree of Life. And the ministering angels were gathering together and going down from heaven in parties . . . to do His will in the whole world. And the first man . . . (was) sitting outside of the gate of the Garden to behold the radiant appearance of the Shekbinah".⁷⁵ This description has obvious points of connection with the one found in 2 Enoch, the only difference being that the Paradise described in 2 Enoch is the celestial abode of retribution while the Garden in 3 Enoch is still in its original terrestrial environment. Wherever this Paradise is located, either on earth or in heaven, the Tree of Life could be the place on which God rests, and ⁷⁴ Cf. indirectly Ezekiel xxviii,13, where it appears that the notion of God's abode in the Garden of Eden is an ancient oriental tradition.

⁷⁵ English translation in H. Odeberg, 3 Enoch, Reprint: New York, Ktav Publishing House, 1973, p. 13 ff. See also Odeberg's commentary, ibid., where parallels are quoted.

God's theophany on the Tree of Life is, thus, a counterpart to His theophanies in the Temple and on His Throne of Glory.

Most important, of course, is the description of what happened to Enoch in the seventh heaven.⁷⁶ When Enoch reached that heaven with the two men who lifted him up to heaven,⁷⁷ he became afraid and began to tremble in great terror. The two men encouraged Enoch and showed him "the Lord from afar, sitting on His very high throne". Around the throne were the various classes of the angelic beings who served God. Then the two men departed and Enoch was left alone in great fear. Consequently, the archangel Gabriel was sent by God to carry Enoch and place him before His face. When Enoch fell prone and worshipped God, he heard God telling Michael to take him "out from his earthly garments, and to anoint him with sweet oil, and (to) clothe him in garments of glory" (version B xxii,8). Michael did so, and consequently Enoch was transfigured and looked "like one of His glorious ones". Then God summoned one of His angels⁷⁸ to bring forth books and a reed so that Enoch could write down in them all that had happened to him in heaven together with some other secrets that were revealed to him.

The book contains two additional references of Merkavah material: in chapter xxxi, version A only, a Merkavah vision of Adam is described, and in xxxvii Enoch experiences a final vision of a most fearful angel.

E

After 2 Enoch let us turn to the Apocalypse of Abraham. Chapters ix-xix of the book contain one of the most important Merkavah visions in apocalyptic literature. This Merkavah vision is introduced in the course of the apocalyptic retelling of the story of the making of the Covenant in Genesis xv. In fact, as Box has already remarked in his notes to his translation of the book,⁷⁹ Genesis xv became a locus classicus for the introduction of all kinds of apocalyptic speculations. The Apocalypse of Abraham, however, is unique in the significance that it bears also for the study of ancient Jewish mysticism in general.

⁷⁶ In version A there seems to be a certain confusion in the enumeration of the heavens. In xx,3 a tenth heaven, Aravat (= 'Aravot; see Bavli Hagigah 12b), is mentioned; and in xxi,6 the names of Muzaloth (= Mazaloth) and Kuchavim (= Kokhavim) are given to the eighth and the ninth heavens respectively. Only these three heavens are mentioned by name and it thus appears that B, which has only seven heavens, preserves the more original version.

⁷⁷ The fact that two men (= angels) escort Enoch in his heavenly journey is quite remarkable since it is similar to the idea of the two angels who carry the Merkavah mystic when he passes from one palace to the other. See Hekhalot Rabbati xvii.

⁷⁸ The name of the angel is given in A as Pravuil, and in B as Vretil. M. Margalioth, Sefer Ha-Razim, p. 56, n. 5, assumes that Pravuil is a corruption of Raziel. Yet, he adds: "This is a mere guess which I suggest with great reservation." However, Margalioth is less careful in suggesting all kinds of other links between 2 Enoch and Sefer Ha-Razim.

This part of the Apocalypse begins with the description of Abraham being ordered to bring a pure sacrifice to God and being promised that through that sacrifice God would bestow upon him a revelation of future events together with some other "great things which thou hast not seen" (ix). Very soon, however, the story in the Apocalypse of Abraham departs from its biblical source and Abraham is told to "abstain from every form of food that proceedeth out of the fire, and from the drinking of wine, and from anointing (thyself) with oil, forty days".⁸⁰ These preparatory practices which Abraham was instructed to follow are all well known from other apocalyptic works and in our general discussion of the Hekhalot literature (Chapter Four) they will receive proper attention. The narrator goes on to state that Abraham was overwhelmed with fear and, consequently, fell down upon the earth in a trance. Then, Abraham heard a voice speaking to the angel Jaöel telling him to raise Abraham to heaven "by means of the ineffable name".⁸¹ Jaöel came to Abraham, introduced himself, and led him up towards heaven.

⁷⁹ G. H. Box, The Apocalypse of Abraham, London, 1919, p. 44. All my quotations are from that edition. The Apocalypse of Abraham has no division into verses.

⁸⁰ These forty days are certainly an allusion to the forty days during which Moses stayed on Mount Sinai abstaining from sustenance. See Deuteronomy ix, 11. As we are going to see in chapter 4, different periods of time were prescribed as a preparation for the apocalyptic and mystical experiences.

⁸¹ This practice of speaking out holy names in order to bring about a mystical experience is well known from the Hekhalot literature. In Hekhalot Rabbati xiv, 4-5 we read: "And when a man wants to descend into the Merkavah, he should conjure Suriah, the Prince of the Countenance, and to call him a hundred and twelve times by the name of Tetrasii . . . He should be careful neither to add to that number of one hundred and twelve nor to subtract from it; for if he adds or subtracts, he is liable to die; but his mouth should speak out the names and his fingers should count a hundred and twelve. Then, for sure, he descends and masters the Merkavah". In his commentary to Bavli Hagigah 14b (s.v., "They entered the Pardes"), Rashi says: "They ascended to heaven by means of a Name". This explanation evidently displays Rashi's acquaintance with the mystical lore. See also Rav Hai Ga'on's Responsa in B. Lewin, Otzar Ha-Geonim, vol. IV, Jerusalem, 1931, "Tractate Chagiga", pp. 22 ff. See also G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 54. It should be noticed that in Mishnah 'Avot i, 13, Hillel the

Some of the things which Jaobel says when he introduces himself to Abraham are of importance to our subject and merit discussion. Jaobel says that he is called by that name "by Him who moveth that which existeth with me on the seventh expanse upon the firmament". The firmament is here, as also in the Ascension of Isaiah vii,9, a domain distinct from the seven heavens.⁸² Yet, in spite of the fact that Jaobel here mentions the "seventh expanse", Abraham is not described as having in reality experienced an ascent through seven heavens. Only almost at the end of the vision (xix) it is said that Abraham, who was standing on the peak of the Mount Horeb, was granted a vision—from above—of the seven heavens that were so to speak below him. Jaobel also mentions that he possesses "a power in virtue of the Ineffable Name that is dwelling in me". This may well be the earliest occurrence of the idea found also in several places in midrashic literature to the effect that "A tablet with the Name of the Holy One, blessed be He, is engraved on the hearts of the angels ...".⁸³ The idea which lies behind this midrashic saying is in all likelihood that the suffix "el" at the end of the names of many angels indicates not only their divine origin, but also the divine power or authority (exousia) which they possess. In the case of Jaobel, his name actually is a combination of the three root-letters of the Tetra-

Elder is reported to have said: "He who uses the Crown (Aramaic: Tāgā) is to pass away". According to the explanation found in ʿAvot de-Rabbi Nathan (ed. Schechter) version A, chapter xii, the meaning of Hillel's saying is: "He who uses the Shem Ha-Meforash (= the Ineffable Name) has no share in the world to come." It should be noticed that while Hillel warns him who "uses the Crown" of real death, the Scholia of ʿAvot de-Rabbi Nathan threatens only with the loss of future life. It is a well known fact, not only in the case of Ben ʿAzai who entered the Pardes (see next chapter), but also from the Hakhalot literature in general, that people who were not careful enough in their mystical experience were expected to suffer severe affliction and sometimes even death. We know of a certain tradition which speaks of the Name which was pronounced by the priests while reciting their Benediction in the Temple; see Bavli Qidushin 71a, where the Gemārā brings two views, the one about the Name which consisted of twelve letters and the other one about the Name which consisted of 42 letters! Now, Hillel, who lived in the days of the Temple, could well have meant that no one who was not authorized should "use" the Names for whatever purpose. He could have had in mind a priest who abuses the knowledge he gained in the Temple for a variety of theurgic purposes which were not connected with the priestly Benediction. Hillel, however, could have likewise meant people who gained knowledge of these Names and who were liable to use them for profane purposes.

⁸² In the Ascension of Isaiah it is the place where Sammael and his hosts are.

⁸³ For the discussions of the different versions of this saying see G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 71, 133; E. E. Urbach, The Sages, pp. 139, 150, 742, 749.

grammaton with the usual "el" ending (the Hebrew spelling of his name would thus most certainly be Yhwel). This is what Jaobel seems to imply when he says: "a power in virtue of the Ineffable Name that is dwelling in me".⁸⁴

After Jaobel has introduced himself by name and mentioned the special rank he enjoys among the angels, he proceeds to refer to his functions in heaven. First he says: "I am the one who has been set to restrain, according to His commandment, the threatening attack of the living creatures of the Cherubim against one another". This hostility of the living creatures, the Hayyot, of the Merkavah is nowhere else mentioned, at least not in those apocalyptic texts that came down to us. Generally, the hostility of the angels is directed only against human beings who ascend to heaven and the idea expressed here in connection with Jaobel is thus quite extraordinary. Yet, it should be remarked that there are some rabbinic sayings to the effect that a certain hostility does in fact exist among the angels,⁸⁵ and thus, the tradition preserved in Apocalypse of Abraham does not stand altogether alone.⁸⁶

Next Jaobel says that he teaches "those who carry Him the song of ⁸⁴ It goes beyond the present discussion to decide whether Jaobel is actually identical with Metatron, who is also called "little Jao" (3 Enoch xii; "And He called me The Lesser YHWH"), or whether at this stage Jaobel is still a separate angelic being not connected in any way to the Metatron tradition. See further, G. Scholem, "Über eine Formel in den Koptisch-Gnostischen Schriften und ihren jüdischen Ursprung", Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft XXX (1931), pp. 170 ff.

⁸⁵ The most striking rabbinical parallel is in Pesiktā Rabbati, ed. Friedmann, fol. 97b, where it is told of Galizur that "his wings are spread out to receive the vapour of the Hayyot, for if he does not receive it, the ministering angels are burned by that vapour". See also the material collected in the next note.

⁸⁶ First we find the saying attributed to Bar Kaporā in Shir Ha-Shirim Rabbā viii,11: "Why are the ministering angels called 'fellows' (Haberim)?—Because there is neither hatred nor jealousy nor enmity nor hostility . . . among them". Whatever its original purpose, this saying has obvious polemical overtones, which can be clearly heard if due attention is given to such sayings as: "Rabbi Yoḥanan said . . . 'Dominion and fear are with Him, He makes peace in his high heaven'. (Job xxv,2)—'Dominion' this is Michael, and 'Fear' this is Gabriel, 'With Him' and He makes them live in peace, and none of the two does any harm to the other"; Pesiktā de-Rav-Kahanā, ed. Mandelbaum, p. 5. In Devarim Rabbā (ed. Lieberman, p. 100) Reish Lakish is quoted as explaining this to be the result of the fact that Michael is made of snow while Gabriel is made of fire. See further Bavli Sanhedrin 99b: "Rabbi Alexandrei said: He who studies the Torah for its own sake causes peace to reign among those above and those below". See also Rav Safrā's prayer in Bavli Berakhot 16b-17a; and Agadath Shir Hashirim, ed. Schechter, p. 4.

the seventh hour of the night of man". The references given by Box ad locum make it sufficiently clear that there circulated a view according to which the angels did not sing their songs of praise to God during the day-hours, thus avoiding any interference with the prayers of the Sons of Israel. Yet, the more common view, which is also represented in the Hekhalot literature, is that the angels wait till the Sons of Israel have finished their day-prayers, notably the Qedushah, before they begin their own songs of praise. However, what Jaobel says is not sufficiently clear, and it is only with reservation that it can be viewed as a parallel in apocalyptic literature to the idea that the angelic song is heard only at night.

At the beginning of chapter xi, a detailed description is given of the appearance of Jaobel: "The appearance of his body was like sapphire, and the look of his countenance like chrysolite, and the turban upon his head like the appearance of the rainbow, and the clothing of his garments like purple; and a golden sceptre was in his right hand". This description of Jaobel derives in its essential details from such descriptions of God and of the heavens found, for instance, in Daniel x,5-6 and Joshua v,13 and its parallels are to be found in several places in apocalyptic literature too.

Then a description follows of Abraham going with Jaobel to Mount Horeb and of the sacrifice which Abraham offered there. Following the sacrifice, Abraham receives certain eschatological revelations and then experiences an ascent to heaven. Abraham says that "the angel took me with the right hand and set me on the right wing of the pigeon, and set himself on the left wing of the turtle dove which had neither been slaughtered nor divided", when Abraham offered his sacrifice. This description of the ascent is quite a peculiar one and its details will be discussed in chapter four.

Upon his arrival in heaven, Abraham experiences the main part of his Merkavah vision. This part of the vision is important for two reasons: First, it contains the longest Merkavah hymn in apocalyptic literature; and second, it contains a detailed description of the Throne of the Glory. We turn first to the Celestial Song, which was recited while Abraham and the angel were still in the air. It is of a composite nature and in spite of the various hymnological elements which it contains, has very little in common with the lyrical and numinous qualities of the Hekhalot hymns.⁸⁷ In form and content it is more like a liturgical hymn or sapiential psalm which recites the grace of God and His benevolence.⁸⁸ The song is, in fact, recited by Jaobel who tells Abraham to join him. From the words which Jaobel addresses to Abraham—"Only worship, Abraham, and utter the song which I have taught thee"—it appears, that the song also had the function of a protective charm. Abraham observes that he actually wanted to fall down upon the earth and thus pay reverence to the voice of the Divinity which he heard, but, since there was "no earth to fall upon", Jaobel told him to "Recite without ceasing".⁸⁹

⁸⁷ See A. Altman, in Melilab II (1945/46), pp. 1-24. See further J. Maier,

Next follows the Merkavah vision itself (chapter xviii). In its general form it derives from the description of the vision of Ezekiel, except that Ezekiel did not experience an ascent, which Abraham is here described as having had. This part of the vision begins when Abraham sees a huge flame of fire rising upwards and hears "a voice like the roaring of the sea".⁹⁰ When "the fire raised itself up, ascending into the height", Abraham saw "under the fire a throne of fire, and round about it all-seeing ones,⁹¹ reciting the song". Under the throne Abraham saw the four Living Creatures. Yet, although Ezekiel had described them as having each four wings (i,6, 11), Abraham saw them as having six wings, like the Seraphim in Isaiah vi,2.⁹² Interestingly, Abraham sees from where the six wings grow: from the shoulders, from their sides (?), and from their loins.⁹³ And he adds:

"Serienbildung und 'Numinoser' Eindruckseffekt in den poetischen Stücken der Hekhalot-Literatur", Semiotics III (1973), pp. 36 ff.

⁸⁸ Because of textual problems, it is quite difficult to tell what in this Celestial Song really belongs to the original and what was later on added.

⁸⁹ All the quotations in this paragraph are from chapter xvii.

⁹⁰ This could be a reference to Ezekiel i,24.

⁹¹ In Ezekiel i,18 we find that the backs of the four creatures were full of eyes. This gave rise to a number of similar descriptions in apocalyptic and Hekhalot literature. See 3 Enoch chapters ix; xviii; xxii; xxv; Hekhalot Rabbati iii,4; xxii,5; xxiii,1; Masekhet Hekhalot (in Jellinek Bet Ha-Midrash II, p. 42) chapter v. In some of the references, the alleged number of those eyes is given as well as their measure.

⁹² The Living Creatures in Revelation iv,8 likewise have six wings, and it may be argued that in this particular detail, some Christian translator or editor of Apocalypse of Abraham adapted the irregularity found in Revelation. See further Bavli Hagigah 13b where an attempt is made to harmonize between the number of the wings described by Isaiah and those described by Ezekiel.

⁹³ Another interesting description, attested to by some of the MSS, is that each of the Creatures had four faces, "so that the four creatures had sixteen faces". The number of the Creatures' faces was an important issue in Jewish mystical calculations. In Hekhalot Zutreti (in Sh. Musajoff, Merkavah Sbelemah, Jerusalem, 1921, fol. 7a) Rabbi Akiva is quoted as introducing the special secret

"with the (two) wings from their shoulders they covered their faces, and with the (two) wings which (sprang) from their loins they covered their feet, while the (two) middle wings they spread out for flying straightforward".⁹⁴ Then the Apocalypse refers once again to the hostility of the Creatures, "And when they had ended the singing, they looked at one another and threatened one another". Jaël interfered and "turned the countenance of each living creature from the countenance immediately confronting him, in order that they might not see their countenances threatening each other". In addition to that Jaël "taught them the song of peace". This part of the vision ends with a description of the Throne of the Glory, a description which follows quite closely the one given in Ezekiel i. The book ends with an extensive apocalyptic prophecy which tells the story of the Sons of Israel till the eschatological salvation. Before this conclusion of the vision, Abraham says that he was standing, in fact, in the seventh firmament and that God opened to him all the firmaments below.⁹⁵

F

Another vision of the Merkavah is included in The Ascension of Isaiah. There it comprises the second part of the book (chapter vi onwards) and from the date given at its beginning it appears that the writer did not intend to identify it with the vision described in Isaiah wisdom which deals with the number of the faces and the wings of the Hayyot. Interestingly, the number of faces is also given in the gnostic so-called Koptisch-Gnostische Schrift ohne Titel aus Codex II von Nag-Hammadi, ed. A. Böhlig & P. Labib, Berlin, Akademie Verlag, 1962, p. 52/3. Both in Hekhalot Zutreti and in the Aramaic Targum to Ezekiel i,6 sixty four faces and two hundred and fifty six wings are mentioned. See further Chapter Four, Section B.

⁹⁴ Compare the Aramaic Targum to Isaiah vi,2: "with two (wings) they cover their faces so as not to see (the Godhead); and with two they cover their bodies so as not to be seen (in their nakedness), and with two they perform (their) service (to God)". The service referred to here is the Celestial Song which according to a current tradition was voiced with two of their wings. See, for instance, Bavli Hagigah 13b, where "the wings with which they say the song" are said to have been taken away from the Creatures when the Temple was destroyed. See further, Tanhumā, "Qedoshim", paragraph vi; Pesikta de-Rav Kahana, ed. Mandelbaum, p. 151; Pirkei de-Rav Eliezer iv; Bavli Sanhedrin 37b (Tosafot, s.v. "Miknaḥ Ha-ʿAretz"); Arugat Ha-Bosem, ed. E. E. Urbach, vol. I, p. 213.

⁹⁵ This unique description is reminiscent of what Rabbi Yuda said in the name of Rabbi Yohanan about the experience which Abraham had had: "He raised him above the dome (Hebrew: Kippab) of the firmament. God told Abraham: 'Look at the heaven', and 'Look' (Hebrew: Habet) implies a look from above to below". Bereshit Rabba, ed. Theodor-Albeck, p. 432/3.

vi. The vision begins when King Hezekiah and all the people of his court, together with the prophet Isaiah, heard "a door which had opened and the voice of the Holy Spirit" (vi,6).⁹⁶ This idea of a door which is heard or seen being opened at the beginning of a mystical vision is also known from Revelation iv,1, and it may reflect a mystical interpretation of the words "the heavens were opened" in Ezekiel i,1. Yet, while Ezekiel experienced no ascension, such an experience is presupposed in The Ascension of Isaiah and in Revelation.⁹⁷ Indeed, the idea of a door which is opened in heaven is characteristic of the tradition describing heavenly ascensions. Thus the so-called Mithras Liturgy mentions such doors,⁹⁸ and in Hekhalot Zutreti such a door or gate⁹⁹ is said to have been pre-established by God before he made heaven and earth.¹⁰⁰ In Hekhalot Rabbati, the gates of the seven palaces and the special means which should be applied in order to pass through them safely become a central theme. However, there are several instances in Jewish mystical literature in which the phrase "the heavens were opened" or "the heavens were torn asunder" occur, but then they do not indicate a heavenly ascension.¹⁰¹

Soon Isaiah fell into a trance,¹⁰² and an angel came to show the vision to him. Isaiah goes into some detail when he describes the glory of that angel: he was "a glorious angel not like unto the glory of the angels which I used always to see" (vii,2). Obviously, this remark is directed to distinguish between this vision—which entailed a heavenly ascent—and the one in Isaiah vi, which the writer apparently believed to entail no such experience. In fact, the angel said that he

⁹⁶ This door is only mentioned in the Ethiopic text of the Ascension of Isaiah but not in the Latin texts. See R. H. Charles, The Ascension of Isaiah, London, 1900, p. 99. See further E. Tisserant, Ascension d'Isaïe, Paris, 1909, p. 136.

⁹⁷ Compare also Syriac Baruch xxii,1, where the words of Ezekiel are repeated and again no heavenly ascension is presupposed.

⁹⁸ A. Dieterich, Eine Mithrasliturgie, Reprint: Darmstadt, Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1966, p. 10/11, lines 19-20.

⁹⁹ The word used here is a hapax-legomenon. See G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 78, n. 9. See further, E. Ben Jehuda, Thesaurus, vol. IV, p. 1821, s.v. "Ḥatirab".

¹⁰⁰ See further 3 Maccabees vi,18, and Testament of Levi v,1.

¹⁰¹ See G. Scholem, op. cit. p. 68. See further Mark i,10 (and parallels), and also Revelation xix,11: "Then I saw the heaven open", where once again—in contradistinction to iv,1—no heavenly ascension is maintained.

¹⁰² Interestingly, the physical symptoms of that trance are given in the following words: "he became silent, and he saw not the men who stood before him, though his eyes indeed were open. Moreover his lips were silent ... But his breath was in him" (vi,10-12).

had come from the seventh heaven (vi,13) and that he did not want to reveal his name to the visionary (vii,4-5).¹⁰³

Then follows the description of what Isaiah was shown in each of the seven heavens. Before he reached the first heaven, however, he had passed through the firmament which was between the earth and the heaven.¹⁰⁴ Only afterwards did Isaiah reach the first heaven. Generally, the description of each of the first six heavens is more or less the same, only that every new heaven was more glorious than the preceding one. In each of the first five heavens, Isaiah saw "a throne in the midst, and on its right and on its left were angels".¹⁰⁵ This is probably the only occurrence in Jewish apocalyptic of the idea of the existence of a throne, a Merkavah, in each of the heavens. The idea is, however, repeated in an early Merkavah-midrash, Re'uyot Yehzekel, where Ezekiel is said to have seen a Merkavah in every one of the seven heavens. In Re'uyot Yehzekel, we also find the idea, which is first mentioned in the Ascension of Isaiah, that God is sitting only in the throne of the seventh heaven.¹⁰⁶ In addition, the Ascension of Isaiah says that the angels "who stood on the right had the greater glory, and they all praised with one voice . . .¹⁰⁷ and those who were on the left gave praise after them; but their voice was not such as the voice of those on the right, nor their praise like the praise of those".¹⁰⁸

Then Isaiah passes upwards to the second heaven. First, however, he remarks that "the height of that heaven is the same as from the ¹⁰³ Indirectly, this could reflect the Essene practice of not revealing the names of the angels. See Josephus, Bellum II, viii,7. Generally speaking, the apocalyptic writers did keep secret the names of the angels, while of the Merkavah mystics the contrary can be said to be the truth.

¹⁰⁴ This is quite unique a concept. Yet see Charles's commentary ad locum.

¹⁰⁵ The present writer slightly differs here from Charles's translation. Charles thinks that the 'throne' is an angel of the class of the θρόνοι and, therefore, translates: "on his right and on his left . . .". Yet, according to the Latin, the throne is a throne indeed: vidi ibi sedem. The textual evidence for the existence of somebody who sits on the throne from the second heaven upwards is somehow questionable. See further Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc. p. 18/9.

¹⁰⁶ In Re'uyot Yehzekel each of the seven Merkavot has a mystical name. See in Temirin I (1972), pp. 119 ff. A plurality of chariots is also mentioned in the yet unpublished angelic liturgy found at Qumran and in Megadab.

¹⁰⁷ For the idea of the angels singing in one voice see G. Scholem, op. cit., pp. 30, 129, to which, however, more material could be added.

¹⁰⁸ This lack of equality between those standing on the right and those standing on the left is in a way repeated in Hekhalot Rabbati xvii, where it appears that the gate-keepers on the right are more important than those standing on the left.

heaven to the earth". Similar utterances can be found in rabbinic literature¹⁰⁹ and in some of the Merkavah texts.¹¹⁰ But once again the occurrence of this measure in The Ascension of Isaiah could well be taken to be the first of its kind in Jewish apocalyptic and mystical tradition. When Isaiah, the visionary, ascends to the second heaven, he again sees a throne with two groups of angels standing on its right and on its left. However, in contrast to the throne seen in the first heaven, at least some of the manuscripts can be understood here to imply that somebody could be seen sitting in the throne. Yet, as has already been said,¹¹¹ the readings in the manuscripts could well be a result of the misunderstanding of the copyists.¹¹² Yet, the words of the angelus interpres in vii,21—"Worship neither throne nor angel which belong to the six heavens"—seem to imply that, after all, the throne did not remain unoccupied and that some kind of angelic being—a 'thronos'—was envisaged as occupying it. Yet, this seems to defy the Jewish tradition that angels cannot fold their legs and, thus, cannot sit.¹¹³ In any event, the "one who sat on the throne" is again mentioned in the third heaven (vii,27), in the fourth heaven (vii,31) and in the fifth (vii,35). In the sixth heaven, however, "there are no longer angels on the left, nor a throne set in the midst" (viii,7).¹¹⁴

When Isaiah reached the seventh heaven, he heard a voice saying: "How far will he ascend that dwelleth in the flesh?" (ix,1). This question obviously reflects the traditional theme of the angelic opposition to the ascent of man to heaven.¹¹⁵ But immediately another

¹⁰⁹ In Beraita de-Ma'aseh Bereshit (ed. N. Séd, in: Revue des Études Juives CXXIV (1965), p. 58), the distance is given as 502 "years of walk", which equals the total sum of the years which Abraham, Isaac and Jacob lived. These were later on rounded out to become 500 "years of walk". See next note.

¹¹⁰ See the material collected in my edition of Re'uyot Yehezkel, in: Temirin I, pp. 121 ff.

¹¹¹ See above n. 105.

¹¹² Thus we find in vii,21 that L² (in Charles' edition, p. 109) reads "ut adorem eum", while S (= the Slavonic version) implies "adoravi eos"! The "eum" could well refer to God who is in the seventh heaven, and not necessarily to the throne, or to the alleged being who is sitting thereon.

¹¹³ See Bereshit Rabba, ed. Theodor-Albeck, p. 738, and parallels. See further in Temirin I, p. 129. Only Metatron could enjoy the privilege of sitting, and this most probably because he had once been a human being (= Enoch). See Bavli Hagigah 15a.

¹¹⁴ The special numinous quality of the sixth heaven reminds us of the special quality of the sixth palace as described in the Hekhalot literature.

¹¹⁵ In the case of The Ascension of Isaiah, the voice came from the angel who "is over the praise-giving of the sixth heaven". See further J. Schulz, "Angelic Opposition to the Ascension of Moses and the Revelation of the Law", Jewish voice was heard to the effect that "It is permitted to the holy Isaiah to ascend hither; for here is his garment" (ix,2). As it turned out, this was God's voice, who here and elsewhere in parallel cases, set out to protect the ascending hero from the wrath of the jealous angels (ix,5). The first thing which Isaiah saw in the seventh heaven were all the righteous, "stript of the garments of the flesh" (ix,9). They were, in fact, like angels, "in their garments of the upper world" ¹¹⁶ (ibid.). What strikes Isaiah's attention is the fact that these righteous dwelling in heaven "have received the garment but have not the thrones and the crowns".¹¹⁷ This is explained by the angel thus: "Crowns and thrones of glory they do not receive, till the Beloved will descend in the form in which you will see Him descend into the world in the last days". This part of the vision obviously belongs to the Christian editor or interpolator of the book and it transforms at least one traditional Jewish theme, the wearing of crowns,¹¹⁸ into a Christian apocalyptic theologoumenon.¹¹⁹

Quarterly Review: LXI (1970/1971), pp. 282-307. Schulz rightly observes: "Thus there appear to be two lines of thematic development, one in which the angels serve as guides for the ascending hero, the other in which they protest or try to prevent his ascension". (p. 288). In Pesiktā Rabbati (ed. Friedmann) p. 96b, the opposing angels are referred to as "angels of destruction" (Mal'akhei Ḥabbalah), which obviously means that the author was disturbed by the idea that good angels could oppose the ascension of Moses to receive the Torah. See further P. Schäfer, Rivalität zwischen Engeln und Menschen, Berlin, Walter de Gruyter, 1975, pp. 128 ff. For the development of the term Mal'akhei Ḥabbalah, see in Israel Oriental Studies III (1973), p. 97. See further, Apocalypse of Abraham xiii, where this type of angelic opposition is put into the mouth of Azazel!

¹¹⁶ These "garments of the upper world" could have two distinct functions: (a) they are the white garments of the righteous as described several times in Revelation (see mainly iv,4), and in Vita Adae et Evae (Greek version), xl (in: Tischendorf, Apocalypses Apocryphae, p. 21). In all these cases they are eschatological garments; but we do have another type of heavenly garments: (b) mystical garments. These garments most likely are to protect the mystical visionary from all kinds of dangers. This could well be the meaning of God's words in Ascensio Isaiae ix,2. See further 2 Enoch xxii, 3 Enoch xii; Pesiktā Rabbati, ed. Friedmann, fol. 98a (= Bavli Shabbat 88b). It should also be noted that in one of the liturgical poems of Amram Dare, a Samaritan poet of the fourth century, it is said of Moses' ascension: "And the Good says: 'Let my prophet be exalted. Let the prophet be great and let him be beautiful and let him grow and reach the heaven. Indeed he will be vested by me in a garment that no being is worthy to wear'". English translation in: S. Leiter, "Worthiness, Acclamation, and Appointment: Some Rabbinic Terms", Proceedings of the American Academy for Jewish Research, Vol. XLI-XLII (1973-1974), p. 156. Unfortunately, Leiter was not aware of the possible mystical connotations of this passage.

¹¹⁷ Compare Revelation iv,4.

¹¹⁸ Bavli Berakhot 17a, see also above n. 48.

¹¹⁹ In fact, it is quite difficult to state with certainty what in ix,11 ff. actually

In fact, the whole of the description of the seventh heaven in The Ascension of Isaiah is impregnated with Christian material and it is quite difficult to differentiate between the Jewish origin and its Christian recasting. What, in any case, should be noticed in this part of the vision is: (a) Isaiah was transformed and became an angel (ix,30);¹²⁰ (b) Isaiah could not see the Great Glory, but he noticed that the righteous could (ix,37-38);¹²¹ (c) Isaiah heard the celestial song of praise (ix,40 ff.); (d) Isaiah saw the descent of the Messiah into the terrestrial world (x,8 ff.);¹²² and finally (e) Isaiah saw the Messiah ascending again through the heavens and reaching the seventh heaven. The terminology used in (d) and (e) comes very close to the terminology used in some of the texts of gnosticism, and it may, furthermore, be asked whether the Christian part of the book was not recast in some gnosticistic circles.

G

The Merkavah vision in Revelation iv is an interesting example of how Jewish Merkavah material was recast in the new Christian environment. It is generally believed that Revelation was composed by a certain John who was familiar with the apocalyptic writings of the Jews before the destruction of the Temple. Although the Apocalypse of John received its final shape some twenty years after the destruction of the Temple, its Merkavah material is nevertheless typical of its Jewish counterpart before the destruction. There is no plurality of heavens in the book and this might mean that the book was primarily conceived either in circles which had not adapted the idea or by someone who had simply ignored what was becoming a central concept or fashion in Jewish apocalyptic. In addition to that, it is believed that the Apocalypse of John is the only one of its belongs to a Christian editor or interpolator. There are good reasons to believe that the book as a whole is of Jewish origin and that all the clear Christian references belong to a later editor or interpolator. But it is difficult to decide whether everything from ix,11 ff. belongs to him or whether one has even here to try to distinguish between the Jewish origin and the Christian additions.

¹²⁰ This, as we have already seen, signifies a mystical transformation. See above n. 16. Compare also the transformation of Enoch into Metatron in 3 Enoch.

¹²¹ Compare Sifra, ed. Weiss, fol. 4a-b. It should be noticed that some of the MSS of the Ascension of Isaiah here read "Him" referring to the celestial figure of Jesus and not to God!

¹²² The description here comes very close to the description of the descent of the Saviour at the opening pages of Pistis Sophia. Yet, it would be beyond the scope of the present discussion to compare in detail The Ascension of Isaiah and Pistis Sophia.

kind that is not pseudepigraphically attributed to some biblical figure. This may be explained by the fact that the book purports to be a prophecy which should be revealed to the community of the believers (i,3; xxii,6 ff.). There are some discrepancies in the vision described in chapter iv and they, in turn, could be explained by the rather eclectic nature of the material contained in the vision. As we are going to see, the vision brings together several traditions and it could well be asked whether it describes a genuine experience or whether it is a mere compilation of literary motives. Of course, the question of the genuineness of the vision is quite a difficult one, and skeptics could find a great number of reasons to justify their doubts. Generally speaking, however, discussions of this kind do not lead very far in any sincere attempt to understand and evaluate the experience once it is cast as a literary document.

John, the apocalypticist, introduces his vision with the remark that he saw a "door opened in heaven". This expression may, of course, be reminiscent of the opening words used by Ezekiel to describe the beginning of his vision. However, since John does not literally repeat the words of Ezekiel "the heavens were opened" (Ezekiel i,1), we may well infer that John here uses technical terminology. Indeed, the reader may remember that the Ethiopic text of Ascensio Isaiae vi,9 says that Isaiah heard, not saw, a door being opened and then his vision began.¹²³ The technical sense in which John's words, "a door opened in heaven", becomes evident when they are compared with another of John's introductory remarks in xix,11. There John, together with Ezekiel, says that he "saw the heaven opened". In this last case, as also in that of Ezekiel, no heavenly ascent is assumed, while the phrase 'a door opened in heaven' usually introduces such an ascent. To be exact, however, the opening of the door in heaven in Revelation iv,1 is not directly followed by John's ascension. He first heard a voice, which he had previously heard (i,10), calling him to ascend to heaven. Only verse 2 says: "And immediately I was there in spirit". In contradistinction to similar experiences in apocalyptic literature, the writer does not state how he actually arrived,¹²⁴ although his manner of imparting what happened to him may well be in line with Paul's description in 2 Corinthians xii,2 & 3.¹²⁵ Then, John says, he saw that "a throne was set in heaven, and on the throne (was) one seated". It is noteworthy that—unlike Ezekiel, Daniel and Enoch—John does not refer to the "one" seated on the throne in anthropomorphic terms. Instead John says that "he that sat was to look upon like a jasper stone and a sardius" (iv,3). While Ezekiel (i,27/8) refers to the appearance of fire in connection with the "one" seated on the throne, Daniel (vii,9) says that the "throne was fiery flames" and that God himself appeared to him as "ancient of days" and that "his raiment was white as snow and the hair of his head like pure wool". Indeed, there are two traditions, so to speak, concerning the description of the appearance of God on His throne. The one, initiated by the vision of Ezekiel, stresses the appearance of fire, while the other refers to God in terms of an old man dressed in white. 1 Enoch xiv,20 describes "the Great Glory" on the throne thus: "His raiment shone more brightly than the sun and was whiter than any snow". Similarly 1 Enoch lxxi,10, speaks of the "Head of Days" in terms that are reminiscent of Daniel vii: "His head was white as pure wool, and his raiment indescribable". In the Hekhalot literature, however, the fiery appearance of God is a key notion, although greater attention is paid there to the separate speculations about His raiment, (Hebrew: Haluq.)¹²⁶

¹²³ See above n. 96. See also Testament of Levi v,1. In Yerushalmi Sanhedrin 28c (bottom) we hear of the secret opening which God opened under His throne so as to receive the prayer of the repenting King Manasseh.—The cosmological concept of gates that mark the entrance to the upper world and mainly to the netherworld is, in fact, very old and almost universal. For ancient Greece see G. S. Kirk & J. E. Raven, The Presocratic Philosophers, Cambridge University Press, 1973, pp. 10 ff. Scholars are often inclined to see the origin of certain Greek concepts and beliefs in the East and sometimes in Egypt. See the interesting text published in H. Frankfort and others, Before Philosophy, Harmondsworth, Penguin Books, 1954, pp. 167 ff. The mystical implication of this cosmological concept, however, becomes evident only in such passages as Revelation iv,1.

Before John continues describing the Throne of God, he is struck by the vision of twenty four elders sitting on twenty four thrones. Who these elders are and what they signify in this particular Merkavah vision is a question often debated among scholars. Their number, twenty four, was considered as pointing to the twenty four divisions of priests as they were first enumerated in 1 Chronicles xxiv.¹²⁷ Indeed, ¹²⁴ See our discussion in chapter 4.

¹²⁵ For the problems involved in the interpretation of this verse see R. H. Charles, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Revelation of St. John (The International Critical Commentary) Edinburgh, 1920, Vol. I, pp. 109-111. For the present study, the commentaries of W. Bousset, Die Offenbarung Johannes, Reprint: Göttingen, Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1966, and of H. B. Swete, The Apocalypse of St. John, Reprint: Ann Arbor, Michigan, Cushing-Malloy, Inc. N.D. have been consulted too.

¹²⁶ G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 26/7. 58 ff.

¹²⁷ Cf. W. Bousset, op. cit., ad locum.

their priestly, or levitic, function is further enhanced by the fact that they sing songs of praise (iv,10/1; v,9; vii,12; xi,17; xix,4) just as the levites were used to do in the Temple-service; and the "kithara" which each of the elders holds in his hands (v,8) is reminiscent, again, of the traditional Temple-psalmody.¹²⁸ In addition, the golden bowls of incense which they likewise hold in their hands are more than a clue to their priestly function.¹²⁹ The same can also be said concerning the white garments in which the elders are clad (iv,4).¹³⁰ Generally speaking, however, white garments are taken in the Apocalypse of John to signify the special status of those who believe in Jesus¹³¹ and the same kind of garments are also elsewhere mentioned in connection with angels.¹³² Indeed, the elders have an angelic function too: the incense which they present before the Lamb (= Jesus) is considered to be "the prayers of the saints" (v,8).¹³³ As Charles has pointed out in his commentary (p. 145/6), the idea of an angel, or archangel, offering the prayers of mankind to God is found quite often in apocalyptic literature. In rabbinic literature, however, it is a more complicated issue. In three places in the Bab. Talmud, it is stated that Michael, the archangel (or, in Hebrew, Sar Ha-Gadol) is ministering before the altar.¹³⁴ In a different context we hear that the angel Syndalphon ties crowns to the head of his Creator (Bavli Hagigah 13b). S. Lieberman has collected material which shows that in several instances this singular tradition about Syndalphon was interpreted as meaning that the crowns are made of the prayers of the angels.¹³⁵ This particular interpretation of the ¹²⁸ See H. B. Swete, op. cit., ad locum. This could well imply conditions conceivable after the destruction of the Temple. See further x,21/2. Cf. A. Büchler in Zeitschrift für Altestamentische Wissenschaft XIX (1899), pp. 93-133; 329-344; XX (1900), pp. 97-135. In Hekhalot Rabbati viii,4 the lute-playing of the Living Creatures is mentioned too.

¹²⁹ Revelation v,8.

¹³⁰ The holy linen garments mentioned in connection with the High Priest in Leviticus xvi,4 are called "garments of white" in Mishnah Yoma iii,6. See also Ezekiel xlv,17.

¹³¹ Revelation iii,4/5; vii,13-17; xix,8. Compare Ecclesiastes ix,8.

¹³² Ethiopic Enoch lxxi,1.

¹³³ Charles, op. cit., ad locum (p. 400, n. 3), considers this phrase to be a gloss, but his reasons for doing so, as expounded in his commentary, are not conclusive.

¹³⁴ Tal. Bav. Menahot 110a; Zevahim 62a; Hagigah 12b. See Scholem, op. cit., pp. 47 ff. Scholem also discusses there the relationship between the traditions about Michael and Metatron. See further, I. Gruenwald, 'Re'uyot Yehez'el', p. 128/9.

¹³⁵ S. Lieberman, Sbki'in (in Hebrew), Jerusalem, 1939, p. 13 f. As for the crowns which the elders put before the throne (Revelation iv,10) compare 3 Enoch Syndalphon-tradition is very close to the idea of the elders in Revelation who offer incense composed of the prayers of the saints. It is, of course, quite difficult to say whether there exists any direct connection between the two ideas or whether what John says is derived only from parallel material found in apocalyptic literature (as collected by Charles). But one thing seems to be clear: John here attributes to the elders an angelic function and this apart from their levitic and priestly functions which we have already discussed. The contamination of these three functions, though it may be explained partly by the kind of Christian-priestly theology developed in the Epistle to the Hebrews, is nonetheless highly peculiar. This may again be related to the suggestion made before, to the effect that John's manner of writing (and eventually his visionary imagination) is of a highly eclectic nature.

An additional word must be said about the crowns of gold which the elders wear on their heads. The closest Jewish parallel to this item in the vision is the saying of Rav (third century) describing the eschatological reward of the just: They are sitting before God with crowns ('Atarot) on their heads (Bav. Berakhot 17a). The eschatological context of this saying of Rav is very similar to the vision of the elders in Revelation and not unimportant is also the statement in both sources that the elders and the just are actually sitting. We know that according to one tradition, Elish'a ben 'Avuya saw Metatron while sitting. (Bav. Hagigah 15a; Sefer Hekhalot [3 Enoch] xvi). Knowing that nobody is allowed to sit in heaven, Elish'a ben 'Avuya came to the conclusion that there must be two powers in heaven.¹³⁶ We also saw that the angels cannot fold their legs into a sitting position.¹³⁷ The just and the righteous ones are here described, xviii. It must be noticed that in Hekhalot Rabbati xi,1 the Angel (of the Divine) Countenance (= Ma'akh Ha-Panim) ties crowns to the Living Creatures. In xvi,5, moreover, God is called the Lord of the Crowns (= Adon Ha-Ketarim). The Musaf-Qedushah of Shabbat and Festivals according to the Sepharadic (East European) Prayerbook opens with the words: "A Crown will be offered to you by the multitude of the angels on high together with your people gathered below". —J. N. Epstein, in Revue des Études Juives LXXIII (1921), p. 33, drew the attention to the magical implication of the Hebrew term QASHAR. This may well apply to what is said about Syndalphon in Bav. Hagigah 13b: "He (= Syndalphon) says (a magical) name and the crown of its own goes up and places itself on the head of God". See also Hekhalot Rabbati iii,2, where the Living Creatures are called 'those who tie crowns' (= Qoshrei Ketarim).

¹³⁶ We shall come back to this point in our discussion of 3 Enoch.

¹³⁷ Bereshit Rabbā, p. 738: "... there is no sitting in heaven ... they have no joints". Yerushalmi Berakhot 2c: "The angels have no joints". Both sayings are however, as sitting even in the presence of God. This is a privilege that angels do not have.¹³⁸ In a different context, moreover, we hear that "In the days to come God is going to sit (in judgement) and the angels offer thrones to the illustrious ones among the People of Israel and they sit, and God, the president of the court, with them, in judgement on the nations of the world".¹³⁹ It must, however, be remarked that the elders in the Apocalypse have no judiciary function¹⁴⁰ and that what is said about their doxologies is similar to what several sages say about the future heavenly banquet presided over by God and in which the righteous say words of praise to Him.¹⁴¹ Although the frequent doxologies recited by the elders in the Apocalypse may be associated to the Merkavah hymns of the Hekhalot literature, they still lack the lyrical pathos of those hymns. On the other hand, the Merkavah hymns serve many purposes,¹⁴² but they definitely lack the eschatological and messianic tones of the doxologies in the Book of Revelation.

Particularly interesting is John's description of the Divine Throne. Although there are many peculiar items in this description, we shall concentrate here on only two of them. It is said, firstly, that the four Living Creatures are "in the midst of the throne and round about the throne". The two phrases are generally considered to be self-contradictory and hence a suggestion was made to see in the first one—"in the midst of the throne"—an interpolation. Logically speaking, this phrase really causes difficulty, yet some kind of solution may be found in Rabbi 'Akiva's saying in Sifra about the throne introduced by Rabbi Haninah b. Andrei in the name of Rabbi Shemuel b. SITIR (Yerushalmi: SOTR). Rabbi Haninah could be the same Rabbi Haninah who is quoted as saying that the names of the angels are of Babylonian origin: Beresbit Rabbā, p. 485. If so, he most probably belongs to the Palestinian Amoraim of the third century.—In Wayyikra Rabbah, (ed. Margolioth) p. 135, Rabbi Shemuel bar Nahman is quoted as saying that "the angels of destruction (Mal'akhei Habbalah) have no joints". See further, Temirin I, p. 129, n. 115.

¹³⁸ See also the quotation from Karaite sources in S. Lieberman, op. cit., p. 14 (bottom). See further our discussion of Ascensio Isaiae, above n. 113.

¹³⁹ Tanḥumā ad Leviticus, ed. Buber, p. 72. The midrash is an attempt to explain the plurality of thrones mentioned in Daniel vii,9.

¹⁴⁰ But compare the scene described in 1 Enoch lx,2.

¹⁴¹ Yerushalmi Megilah 73b. See S. Lieberman, Hellenism in Jewish Palestine, New York, The Jewish Theological Seminary of America, 1950, p. 15/6; W. C. van Unnik, "A Note on the Dance of Jesus in the Acts of John", Vigiliae Christianae XVIII (1964), pp. 1-5.

¹⁴² See A. Altman, in: Melilah II (1964) (in Hebrew), pp. 1 ff.

and the Living Creatures. In a passage dealing with the question of who may see God, and under what circumstances, it is said (according to the good reading of MS. Vatican 66, fol. 9a): "Even the Living Creatures who are carried in the Merkavah cannot see the Divine Glory". Although Ezekiel clearly says that the Living Creatures carry the firmament over their heads, and it is on this firmament that the Throne of God is placed (Ezekiel i,22 ff.), the midrash conceives of the Creatures as being on the same plane as it, and as being carried by the Merkavah. Exactly the same concept is to be found in Hekhalot Rabbati, chapter iii. Even in the discussion of the seven heavens and what they contain as it occurs in Bav. Hagigah, the Creatures are placed on the seventh heaven together with the Divine Throne. Only after Ezekiel i,22 was introduced by the Gemārā, in a manner questioning this description, was the tradition of an eighth heaven introduced.¹⁴³

In addition, it is said in Revelation iv that the four Living Creatures which were seen by John were like a lion, an ox,¹⁴⁴ a man and a flying eagle. These are the same as those mentioned by Ezekiel, though the latter introduced them in a different order: man, lion, calf, eagle.¹⁴⁵ While Ezekiel stresses the fact that each of the creatures had four faces, nothing explicit is said in the Apocalypse about the fourfold structure of the Creatures' faces.¹⁴⁶ Moreover, while Ezekiel mentions that each of the Creatures had four wings, John describes them as having six wings, the number of the wings which the Serafim ¹⁴³ See also Hekhalot Rabbati, iii. For discussions of the traditions about the existence of eight, and not seven, heavens see G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 65 ff.; I. Gruenwald, in: Temirin I, pp. 116 ff.; idem, in Proceedings of the Sixth World Congress of Jewish Studies, Jerusalem, 1977, pp. 52 ff.

¹⁴⁴ The distinction made in Bav. Hagigah 13b between the ox (Ezekiel i,10) and the Keruv (Cherub) in Ezekiel x,14 is midrashic but unjustified from a philological point of view. Though the exact etymology of the word KERUV is not quite clear, there are good reasons to relate it to an ox. See Encyclopedia Biblica (Hebrew), vol. IV, coll. 238 ff. In post-biblical Merkavah literature the ox was frequently changed into a calf. The earliest occurrence of this change seems to be in a Midrash on Ezekiel i found at Qumran, and which Professor J. Strugnell is preparing for publication. See further, S. Lieberman, in: Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 122/3.

¹⁴⁵ The order of appearance of these creatures seemingly did not bother Ezekiel himself. At least there is a change in their order between chapters i and x. In Bav. Hagigah 13b the order is: lion, calf, eagle, man; and in Hekhalot Rabbati xxvi,5 the order is: man, calf, lion, eagle. In the Apocalypse of Abraham xviii the order is: lion, man, calf, eagle.

¹⁴⁶ See above n. 93.

of Isaiah vi had.¹⁴⁷ Again this blending together of motifs may be proof of the eclectic qualities of our visionary, particularly so since John hears the Creatures sing the Sanctus of Isaiah!

H

Naturally, not every apocalyptic book which contains Merkavah material could be included in our discussion. The choice fell upon the main texts and upon those visions which are most clearly of a Jewish origin. There is still relevant material to be found in such books as the *Testament of Levi*¹⁴⁸ and 3 Baruch,¹⁴⁹ yet the Merkavah material contained therein does not warrant extensive discussion here. However extensive our discussion of the Merkavah material found in Jewish apocalyptic was, it should be noticed that a number of important philological problems had to be left unsolved. The reason for this is that not all these texts were preserved in their original language of composition. Many changes have in all likelihood been introduced into the texts in the course of the translation and some of the texts were translated at least twice. In addition, most texts suffered from the hands of interpolators, who used the opportunity of introducing Christian theologumena into them. Room must likewise be left for the supposition that some Jewish theologumena were dropped by those interpolators or translators. However, it stands to reason to assume that the Merkavah sections were less affected by these processes than the rest of the material, particularly ¹⁴⁷ For an attempt to harmonize between the number of the wings of the Seraphim in Isaiah vi and the number of the wings of the Creatures in Ezekiel see Bav. Hagigah 13b.

¹⁴⁸ The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, and the Testament of Levi among them, are famous for the debate concerning their Jewish or Christian origin. It is here assumed that the Testaments are of Jewish origin, although they include obvious Christian interpolations.—In the case of the Testament of Levi, the Merkavah material can be briefly summarized thus: Levi describes his ascent to the third heaven where the angels showed him “the holy Temple and upon a throne the glory of the Most High” (v,1). In that Temple, Levi is ordained for his priestly offices. Yet, before this, in the first two heavens, Levi saw the places where all unrighteousness and iniquity is punished.

¹⁴⁹ 3 Baruch, or the Greek Book of Baruch, contains the description of an ascent to five heavens. It is full of allegorical visions and one may, therefore, assume that in spite of its clear mythological and pagan overtones, the vision of the sun in the third heaven (vi,1-2) actually is an allegorical Merkavah vision. But compare the magical practices in connection with the desire to “see the sun at daytime sitting in the Merkavah and rising”, in Sefer Ha-Razim, pp. 97 ff. It should be noticed that 3 Baruch is unique in having a door at the entrance of each heaven. See Psalms lxxviii,23.

so since the Church adapted Jewish angelology and the related subjects almost en bloc. Thus, we find in one of the first and most important Christian apocalypses, the Apocalypse of Paul, which we shall discuss immediately, a statement to the effect that the celestial song is recited in Hebrew!

In fact, the Apocalypse of Paul, in spite of its Christian origin, leans heavily on Jewish material. The Apocalypse describes, among other things, two visions of Paradise and it is particularly here that the Jewish material most clearly comes to the fore. In chapter xxx, the visionary asks the guiding angel: "What is Alleluia?",¹⁵⁰ to which the angel replies: "Alleluia is spoken in the Hebrew, that is the speech of God and of the angels". Notwithstanding the controversy found in rabbinical literature as to whether the Torah was given in "Assyrian" (that is, the common Hebrew letters) or in the old "Canaanite" script,¹⁵¹ it is quite evident from a number of sources, that Hebrew is the language of God.¹⁵² The angel's reply, moreover, mentions Hebrew as the language of the angels too. There are parallel statements in the rabbinical writings, notably the saying of Rabbi Yohanan to the effect: "He who prays for the fulfilment of his needs in Aramaic, the ministering angels do not come to his help, since the ministering angels do not understand Aramaic".¹⁵³ Elsewhere ¹⁵⁰ Thus according to the English translation of M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament, Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1963, p. 527 ff. The Greek text, however, has here: λέγεται Ἑβραϊστί θεβελ μαρηματά, λαλιά τῷ θεῷ τῷ θεμελιουντι τὰ πάντα . . . The sentence is not very clear, particularly the words θεβελ μαρηματά. On first sight the Greek θεβελ seems to be a transcription of the Hebrew Thevel = 'world'. But still the phrase remains unclear. Professor S. Liebermann has suggested to me to interpret θεβελ as a corrupt rendering of the Aramaic Tav El = 'God is blessed' or 'the good God'. As for μαρηματά, Professor Liebermann again suggests to see in it a corrupt rendering for the Aramaic Maranā ātā = 'our Lord will come'. The Syrian version of the Apocalypse of Paul here reads: "Hallelujah in the language of the Hebrews means: Praise the Lord. Praise God, who was the first of all. Unto him do the angels, without ceasing, raise Hallelujah, and praise him who sent us salvation and created for us all things". (English translation in Tischendorf, Apocalypses Apocryphae, p. 56).

¹⁵¹ See Yerushalmi Megilab 71b-c, and parallels.

¹⁵² See Jubilees xii,25-26: "'Open his (= Abraham's) mouth and his ears, that he may hear and speak with his mouth, with the language which has been revealed . . . and I (= Abraham) began to speak with him in Hebrew in the tongue of the creation". For further references see L. Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews, vol. V, Philadelphia, The Jewish Publication Society of America, 1955, p. 205 f.

¹⁵³ Bavli Shabbat 12b; Sotah 33a.

it is explicitly said that the ministering angels speak Hebrew.¹⁵⁴ Such sayings regarding the language which the angels speak and understand could well have had polemical functions, since we know that particularly within those circles which practised magic, angels were conjured in Greek¹⁵⁵ and in Aramaic.¹⁵⁶

In addition, the guiding angel has also something to say about the way the angelic song is recited: ¹⁵⁷ "if any sing Alleluia, and they that are present sing not with him, they commit a sin in that they sing not with him". This passage resembles, though not exactly, the one found at the end of Hekhalot Rabbati (chapter xxx) to the effect that the angels sing "in perfect unison, in one voice... and there is no one who preceeds his fellow or follows him in the recital of the song. And he who delays his voice in the spelling out of Your name even at an hair's breadth is turned out and burning fire devours him".¹⁵⁸

In chapter xlv of the Apocalypse, Paul, the visionary, experiences another vision of the Merkavah: "I beheld and saw the heaven shake like unto a tree that is moved by the wind: and suddenly they ¹⁵⁹ cast themselves down upon their faces before the throne: and I saw the four and twenty elders and the four beasts worshipping God". This part of the vision most obviously depends on the vision of Revelation iv: particularly so since the twenty four elders are mentioned in both cases. The second part of the vision, however, is even more interesting because of the new material it contains:

¹⁵⁴ Bavli Hagigah 16a; mesaprin bilshon ha-qodesh. See further Wayyikra Rabbah (ed. Margulies), p. 28.

¹⁵⁵ Particularly interesting in this respect are the Greek prayers—in Hebrew transcription!—in Sefer Ha-Razim, pp. 80, 99. See also Hekhalot Rabbati, xix (end), and J. H. Levi, Studies in Jewish Hellenism (in Hebrew), Jerusalem, Bialik Institute, 1969, pp. 259 ff.

¹⁵⁶ See, for instance, the text published in Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 111 (paragraphe 20). See also the Aramaic Incantation Texts from Nippur, published by J. Montgomery, Philadelphia, 1913. See further, B. Levine, "The Language of the Magical Bowls", an appendix to J. Neusner, A History of the Jews in Babylonia, vol. V, pp. 343-375.

¹⁵⁷ In the additions to Tanbuma from MS Oxford 183 Sh. Buber published a passage which refers to the Takhsisei Ha-Shir, that is, the "orders" (τάξεις) of the angelic song. See Buber's "Introduction", p. 126/7.

¹⁵⁸ See G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 29-30, 129. See also Apocalypse of Paul xliii (end): "And they, when they heard these words cried out and wept sore, and all said with one voice: Have mercy upon us, O Son of God".

¹⁵⁹ It seems that the angels are here implied, though the "they" in text here generally signify those "which say that Christ rose not from the dead, and that this flesh riseth not again" (xlii).

"and I saw the altar and the veil and the throne and all of them were rejoicing, and the smoke of a sweet odour rose up beside the altar of the throne of God". The altar and the veil make it evident that the heavenly Temple is meant. What, however, is the throne of God doing in the heavenly Temple? It may be argued that the visionary here links himself to the vision described in Isaiah vi,1, where God is seen sitting on His throne in the Temple. Yet, there are here some peculiar details of the vision not mentioned in Isaiah. The altar and the veil are not expressly referred to in Isaiah, though their existence there may be self-understood from the context. But apart from Isaiah vi the Temple is nowhere mentioned in any Merkavah vision.¹⁶⁰ On the contrary, in the list of the seven heavens and what is contained therein as described in Bavli Hagigah 12b, the heavenly Temple is said to be in the fourth heaven, Zevul. There it is said too that Michael, the archangel, offers sacrifices on the altar found therein.¹⁶¹ In Re'uyot Yehezkel, the heavenly Temple is said to be located in the fifth heaven, Shevaqim.¹⁶² In any event, there is no Temple in the seventh heaven which contains the Throne. Thus, it seems that both in Revelation and in the Apocalypse of Paul, the visionaries or the writers, brought together inconsistent literary elements which were not found in this manner in other Merkavah visions. This could be well explained by the fact that once "ecstatic" apocalyptic declined, an allegedly new type of apocalyptic arose. In this new type of apocalyptic, mere "literary" motives were blended together. A full discussion of this new type of apocalyptic, however, is not within the scope of the present study.

¹⁶⁰ But in Testament of Levi v,1, there is a Temple in the third heaven, and it contains also the divine Throne.

¹⁶¹ These sacrifices are generally explained to be the souls of the righteous. See also Bavli Menahot 110a, Zevahim 62a. In the Apocalypse of Paul only "the smoke of a sweet odour" is mentioned, but it is not said who offers the incense. See further Revelation v,8 and Charles's commentary ad locum.

¹⁶² See the writer's edition, pp. 128 ff.

CHAPTER THREE

THE ATTITUDE TOWARDS THE MERKAVAH SPECULATIONS IN THE LITERATURE OF THE TANNAIM AND AMORAIM

A

In the previous chapter we discussed the Merkavah material in apocalyptic literature. We shall now turn to the attitude towards the Merkavah speculations in the literature of the Tannaim and Amoraim. But before doing so, it should be remarked that in considering the mysticism of the period it would be wrong to restrict ourselves only to Merkavah mysticism. There are several utterances in rabbinical literature that refer to the Godhead in quite unusual modes of speech. Consequently, one may ask whether they display a kind of mysticism which is not directly related to the Merkavah tradition.¹ These utterances, few as they are, are highly important and despite the fact that they are sometimes far from clear, they reveal traces of a concept of God that comes close to mysticism.² In addition, some of the ¹ There are not many examples which may reflect this kind of apparently non-Merkavah mysticism, but a discussion of them all requires a study in itself. Two examples from the Mechiltā d' Rabbi Ismael (ed. Horovitz-Rabin) may give the reader a fairly clear idea of what could be meant by this non-Merkavah mysticism. To the words "And all the people were seeing the sounds" (Exodus xx,18) Rabbi Akiva is quoted to have said: "Seeing and hearing that which is given to sight; they saw a word (Hebrew: Dibber) of fire coming out of the mouth of the Gevurah (= dynamis) and being hewed on the Tables" (p. 235). For a discussion of this saying and its parallels in rabbinic literature see what the present writer wrote in Revue des Études Juives CXXXII (1973), pp. 501 ff. The other example from the Mechiltā concerns the words: "Behold, I will stand before you there on the rock at Horeb" (Exodus xvii,6; RSV). The Mechiltā says: "God told him (= Moses): wherever you find a place with the imprint of a man's foot, there I am in front of you!" (p. 175). See, however, Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 129, who, wrongly it appears, suggests that this version of the saying in Mechiltā d' Rabbi Ismael is secondary to the one found in Mekhilta de-R. Shimon ben Yohai, and which contains a gloss referring to Ezekiel i,26. See further the Targum Yerushalmi to Exodus xvii,6.

² In this respect the various sayings which refer to God in terms of place are of relevance for our discussion. See E. E. Urbach, The Sages, Jerusalem, Magnes Press, 1975, pp. 66 ff. See further the various sayings about the Shekhinah and the space it metaphorically occupies, in: Pesiktā de-Rav Kahanā (ed. Mandelbaum), pp. 1-8. Some of the sayings there are of great importance but were not always correctly interpreted.

utterances in Philo's writings have been taken as evidence of a Jewish hellenistic mystery-mysticism.³ One may, therefore, speak of a variety of mystical tendencies in the Judaism of the time of the Mishnah and Talmud, the existence of which has not been admitted without controversy, both in the literature of the period and in the scholarly assessment of that literature. We shall now turn to that literature and to the views expressed by some scholars regarding the mystical utterances found therein. Yet, before doing so, it should be remarked that in spite of that controversial attitude later rabbinical writings still persisted in referring to and even quoting from the mystical material found both in rabbinical writings and the so-called Hekhalot literature. Thus in post-talmudic times, one can find references to the Merkavah tradition in Pirkei-de-Rabbi Eliezer (composed most probably in Eretz Yisrael at the beginning of the eighth century) chapters iii-iv, and in some of the writings of the Ge'onim, notably in the halakhic and exegetical Responsa of Rav Hai Ga'on (939-1038).⁴

The mystical tradition of the Jews during the talmudic period is called Ma'aseh Merkavah (= the work of the divine chariot) and together with the so-called Ma'aseh Bereshit (= the work of the creation of the world) it forms the two branches of the so-called esoteric teachings of Judaism at that period. Both terms occur for the first time in Mishnah Hagigah ii,1 (= Tosefta Hagigah ii,1). The term "Merkavah", however, was used with reference to the visions of Ezekiel (but not by Ezekiel himself) in Ben Sira xlix,8. The Hebrew text there reads Zenei Merkavah where the Greek has ἀρματα χερουβιν. While the sense of the Greek is clear, the Hebrew, with the Syriac genasa, is taken to mean "the kinds of the chariot", which is a little vague.⁵ Elsewhere we find the term 'Merkavah' in the above mentioned fragment of the so-called angelological liturgy of Qumran which was first published by J. Strugnell. The term 'Merkavah' is also used in Mishnah Megillah iv, 10 and applied there to chapter one (and possibly also chapters eight and ten) of Ezekiel. And finally, the mystics of the time of the Talmud are called Yoredei Merkavah, that is, those who descend, so-to-speak, into the mystical vision of the divine chariot.⁶

³ See especially, E. R. Goodenough, By Light, Light: The Mystic Gospel of Hellenistic Judaism, Reprint: Amsterdam, Philo Press, 1969. Goodenough's thesis is not always convincing, and Professor David Winston informs me that he is to take up a new study of the subject.

⁴ See B. M. Lewin, Otzar Ha-Geonim, vol. IV, Jerusalem, 1931, part 2, pp. 10-24; 53-61.

⁵ For the suggestion that Ezekiel i originally contained yet another—now lost—vision, see Sh. Spiegel, in Journal of Biblical Literature, LIV (1935), p. 168. But see Rashi to Ezekiel i,9. For the term Minei Ha-Kavod (= the kinds of the Glory) see Midrash Ha-Gadol to Genesis xvii,22 (and parallels).

The central utterance in rabbinic literature with regard to the speculation of the Merkavah is to be found in Mishnah Hagigah ii,1: "It is forbidden to discourse... on the Creation of the World in the presence of two, and on the Merkavah in the presence of one, unless he is wise and able to understand of himself".⁷ The ensuing discussion in Talmud Bavli Hagigah 11b, and also the text of the Mishnah as it is explicated in Tosefta Hagigah ii,1, make it clear that the meaning of the Mishnah is that "it is forbidden to discourse on the Creation of the World with two (students), nor on the Merkavah with one, unless he is wise and able to understand of himself". The technical details as to how this particular kind of discourse on the matters of the Merkavah was conducted in Tannaitic circles is well exemplified in a much discussed and often misunderstood story about Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai and his disciple Rabbi El'azar ben 'Arakh recorded in Tosefta Hagigah ii,1 and in two major parallel versions in Yerushalmi Hagigah 77a and Bavli Hagigah 14b.

The story there tells of Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai who was travelling on a donkey while his disciple El'azar ben 'Arakh was walking behind. At a certain point on their way, the student requested his master to teach him "a chapter in the Work of the Divine Chariot". The master, however, was reluctant to fulfil the student's request and said: "Did I not teach you some time ago that one should not discourse on the Merkavah with a single (student) unless he is wise and able to understand of himself". Rabbi El'azar promptly grasped what his master had implied and, as the version found in Jer. Hagigah explicitly says, asked for permission to hold a discourse himself before his Rabbi. This was to convince the master of the abilities of his pupil, before the former revealed his knowledge. Soon, Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai descended from the donkey, put on, as the custom was in many religious and legal practices,⁸ his Tallit and both of them sat down on a stone in the shade of an olive tree. After Rabbi El'azar ben 'Arakh had finished his discourse, Rabban Yoḥanan stood up and kissed him on his head and blessed him for "knowing how to understand and to discourse in matters pertaining to the Glory (Kavod) of his Father in Heaven". In addition, Rabban Yoḥanan praised his student for being one "who discourses well and performs well".

⁶ Cf. the bibliography listed in G. Scholem, Kabbalah, Jerusalem, Keter Publishing House, 1974, pp. 204-206; 459. For the earliest recorded occurrence of the term 'Merkavah' in a context relevant for our discussion, see 1 Chronicles xxviii,18.

⁷ For the text of the Mishnah see Y. N. Epstein, Mavo LeNusab HaMishnah, Jerusalem, Magnes Press, 1964, p. 1115; Idem, Mevo'ot LeSifrut HaTannaim, Jerusalem, Magnes Press, 1957, p. 48. [See now also D. J. Halperin, Merkabah and Ma'aseh Merkabah according to Rabbinic Sources (Dissertation: University of California, Berkeley), 1977. Halperin's work deserves more attention than can be given to it now].

Now, this last sentence, which has been considered not to be in its right place,⁹ could well mean in this particular context that Rabbi El'azar ben 'Arakh was not only able to discourse correctly but that he also knew, as the first part of the story so clearly shows, how to introduce such a discourse on the Merkavah. (This notwithstanding the fact that later on Rabbi El'azar ben 'Arakh fell out of grace in the eyes of his colleagues, and Rabbi Yehoshu'a was then considered to be Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai's senior student in the matters of the Merkavah.¹⁰) The parallel versions of this story about Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai and Rabbi El'azar ben 'Arakh in both Talmuds contain the description of a mystical experience that took place while Rabbi El'azar was discoursing before his master. We shall come back to this experience only after making some additional comments regarding the story as it is told in the Toseftā.

The terminology used in this story, like that of the Mishnah, clearly indicates that the Ma'aseh Merkavah speculations in Tannaitic circles

⁸ Compare Toseftā Piṣṣa ii,16 (ed. Lieberman, p. 147 f.).

⁹ See E. E. Urbach, "The Traditions about the Merkavah Mysticism in the Tannaitic Period", Studies in Mysticism and Religion Presented to Gershom G. Scholem on his Seventieth Birthday, Jerusalem, Magnes Press, 1967, Hebrew Section, p. 3.

¹⁰ Bavli Hagigah 14b. Here he is said to be one of those who discoursed before their master but before whom nobody later on discoursed. On the ground of several Tannaitic sources (Kohélet Rabbā vii,1,7; Avot de-Rabbi Natan, Version A, ch. xiv, and Version B, ch. xxix (ed. Schechter, p. 58/9); and Bavli Shabbat 147b) it appears that Rabbi El'azar ben 'Arakh did either not follow his master to Yavneh or else that he soon left that place. Rabbi El'azar is reported to have followed his wife to Emmaus, where he forgot all that he had learned. The tragic end of Rabbi El'azar was often discussed by scholars. See recently, J. Neusner, A Life of Yoḥanan ben Zakkai, Leiden, E. J. Brill, 1970, p. 249. The change in the attitude of the sages towards Rabbi El'azar ben 'Arakh is best reflected in Mishnah 'Avot ii,9 where Rabbi El'azar is still considered Rabban Yoḥanan's favourite student, while the preceding mishnah, ii,8, already considers Rabbi Eli'ezer ben Horkenos as the most deserving of Rabban Yoḥanan's students. Nevertheless, Abba Shaul still tries to insist there on the original attitude towards Rabbi El'azar ben 'Arakh.

primarily were of a midrashic nature. Such terms as Darash (discourse), Shanah (teach), Pereq (a chapter), are terms which clearly show that as a matter of didactic principle there was no substantial difference in the way the Scriptural Merkavah material was studied from the way other biblical passages were handled in rabbinic circles.¹¹ Yet, there was a major difference between the two, namely, in the number of those allowed to participate in the study. Otherwise, the technical procedure of the study seems to be the customary one in both cases.¹² Moreover, the Babylonian Talmud (Hagigah 13a) discusses the question: "Which verses (in the first chapter of Ezekiel) correspond to the Ma'aseh Merkavah". There are two answers given to the question, which vary from verse 28 (according to Rabbi Yehudah Ha-Nasi) to the word Ha-Hashmal (most likely the one mentioned in v. 27;¹³ according to Rabbi Yizhak). Thereafter, several suggestions are made as to how the material in its various parts should be studied: According to one view, till the word "wa'ere" (Ez. i, 4) one may teach in the regular manner while from that word onwards only *Rashei Peraqim*¹⁴ should be taught. According to ¹¹ See my article "Yannai and the Hekhalot Literature" (in Hebrew), Tarbiz XXXVI (1967), p. 258/9. We shall later on come back to the "midrashic" terminology found in the Hekhalot literature itself.

¹² Except, of course, for the fact, that in the case of the Merkavah-midrash the student, and not the master, is expected to begin the discourse. As we are going to see, even this procedure was later on reversed.

¹³ The Hebrew text here reads: Hashmal (without the definite article). Doubtless the word HaHashmal (with the definite article) in verse 4 could not be meant here.—The word Hashmal itself had an interesting role in the rabbinic Merkavah speculations. First, we hear of two cases in which young and inexperienced students discoursed on the word Hashmal and a fire came out and devoured them (Bavli Hagigah 13a). Then, we also know that the Hashmal occupied a special chapter in the Ma'aseh Merkavah speculations; see Midrash Mishlei x. See also E. E. Urbach, art. cit. (above n. 8), p. 26. In addition, the word Hashmal is interpreted in Bavli Hagigah 13a-b as indicating the order of the angelic song. Angelic beings called Hashmalim are quite frequent in Jewish liturgical poetry. In the Hekhalot fragments published in Tarbiz XXXVIII (1969), p. 370.1.48 we find: "And the Hashmal is singing before you". Finally, in Hekhalot Rabbati xxv, 5 a section is inserted which discusses the perils which might befall the unworthy mystic at the gate of the sixth palace. Since at that stage Hekhalot Rabbati is already discussing matters that pertain to the seventh palace, this section is to all likelihood to be considered as an interpolation. The section begins with a quotation from Ezekiel i, 27—"wa'ere ke'ein Hashmal"—and may constitute an independent Merkavah-midrash. In some of the MSS. of the Hekhalot literature this section is quoted separately, and not in this place in Hekhalot Rabbati. It should also be noticed that in no other case in Hekhalot Rabbati is any of the sections introduced by the quotation of a scriptural phrase.

¹⁴ For a definition of the term see, Yerushalmi Megilah 72a. It appears that another view in the Gemara, till the word "wa'ere" one may teach Rashei Peraqim while the rest could be taught only when the student is "wise and able to understand of himself".¹⁵ All these, and also some additional elements which we shall presently discuss, clearly testify to the midrashic character of the Merkavah study in Tannaitic and Amoraic circles. Thus, the principal meaning of Ma'aseh Merkavah in these circles was a midrashic explication of the text of the first chapter in Ezekiel. Whether any mystical experiences were involved in that study remains to be considered later on in our discussion.

As for the terminology used in the story about Rabban Yoḥanan and Rabbi El'azar, it would be best to begin our discussion with the term PEREQ (a chapter). As W. Bacher indicated, the term pereq designated in Tannaitic literature a section of the oral law¹⁶ and in Amoraic usage it also referred to the chapters of the Mishnah.¹⁷ Generally speaking, a pereq may well equal a pericope of midrashic exposition, that is, a passage in which a biblical word or phrase is introduced and followed by a midrashic saying. When Rabbi El'azar ben 'Arakh asked Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai to teach him one chapter of the Ma'aseh Merkavah, he most probably meant that Rabban Yoḥanan should quote any of the biblical phrases found in Ezekiel i and offer his own midrashic interpretation to it. Rabban Yoḥanan refused, and as we have seen, Rabbi El'azar ben 'Arakh "opened and discoursed",¹⁸ i.e., he cited a biblical phrase and interpreted it accordingly. We do not know what the student discoursed before his master, but we know what his discourse was believed to have brought about. To this part of the story, however, we shall turn only later on.

In the time of the Amoraim, the term pereq was used in a new com-

Rashei Peraqim are the first verses of a biblical chapter in the massoretic division. See also G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 25 n. 14; Sh. Spiegel, in Journal of Biblical Literature LIV (1935), p. 166, n. 7; S. Lieberman, Tosefta Kifshutab: Shabbat, p. 104. In the yet unpublished angelic liturgy from Qumran one finds the term Rashei Tushbahot, which could well correspond to the Rosh Shirot found in Hekhalot Rabbati ii,4, but may also be a class of angels.

¹⁵ Bavli Hagigah 13a.

¹⁶ W. Bacher, Die Exegetische Terminologie der Jüdischen Traditionsliteratur, Leipzig, 1899, Erster Teil: "Die Bibelexegetische Terminologie der Tannaiten," p. 154.

¹⁷ Ibid., Zweiter (Schluss-) Teil: "Die Bibel- und Traditionsexegetische Terminologie der Amoräer," p. 163 f.

¹⁸ For the technical use of PATAH see ibid., Erster Teil, p. 162/3; Zweiter Teil, pp. 174 ff.

bination: Rashei Peraqim. It is said in Bavli Hagigah 13a that Rabbi Ḥiyya allowed one to "deliver Rashei Peraqim" to a single student who wanted to study the Ma'aseh Merkavah. From the way Rabbi Ḥiyya's words are introduced after the quotation from the Mishnah, "and not (in the matters of the) Merkavah to a single (student)", it clearly appears that Rabbi Ḥiyya intended to relax the ruling of the Mishnah. He says: "But one may deliver to him Rashei Peraqim". This phrase most likely means that the teacher could refer the student to the opening phrases from Scripture upon which the student was then allowed to introduce his own exposition. In giving to the student to the biblical reference, the master already does a great deal, particularly in stimulating the subject of the student's discourse on the matters of the Merkavah. Rabbi Zera (the first, who came from Babylonia), however, could not agree to this procedure and said: "One should deliver Rashei Peraqim only to the head of the study-house (Beit Din) and to him who sincerely worries".¹⁹ In both cases, what seems to be almost certain is, that at least some of the Amoraim tolerated a more lenient attitude towards the procedure of the study of the Ma'aseh Merkavah.²⁰

A parallel change in the attitude of the Rabbis towards the Merkavah material can also be seen from the story told about Rabbi Yoḥanan and Rabbi El'azar (both Palestinian Amoraim of the third century C.E.). Rabbi Yoḥanan offers to instruct Rabbi El'azar in the Ma'aseh Merkavah (Bavli Hagigah 13a). Rabbi El'azar declines the offer, saying that he is not old enough for that kind of study. No details are given here as to what the proper age for the study of the Ma'aseh Merkavah was and it is hardly conceivable that the subjective feeling of the candidate could be accepted in that matter.²¹ When Rabbi El'azar

¹⁹ The Gemara adds here a comment to the effect, that there were some who said that the words "he who sincerely worries" refer back to the head of the studyhouse. Heads of Yeshivot were later on, in Ge'onic times, considered to be recipients of esoteric knowledge. See B. M. Lewin, Otzar ha-Geonim, vol. VI, Jerusalem, 1934, p. 21, where it said that God's secret name of 22 letters was known "in Kabbalah" (oral transmission) to the heads of the Yeshivah. See also Pirkei de-Rabbi Eli'ezer, ch. viii, in comparison to Bavli Qiddushin 71 a.

²⁰ Here the writer agrees with Urbach's contention, art. cit. (n. 9), passim.

²¹ From the text of Ma'aseh Merkavah published by G. Scholem, op. cit., p. 108, it appears that the age of thirteen (!) was already considered as the ripe age for the study of esoteric lore. Compare Mishnah Avot v, 21 where it is said in the name of Yehudah ben Temā that 10 is the proper age for the study of the Mishnah, while 15 was considered as the suitable age for the study of the Talmud. The Qumranites, however, considered the age of 20 as the right age for the esoteric study of the Torah. And finally, the Sefer Raziel (ed. Amsterdam, 1701) which reached the right age, Rabbi Yoḥanan died. So Rabbi Assi came forward with a similar offer to Rabbi El'azar. Obviously, all this runs counter to the ruling of the Mishnah and, consequently, the Gemārā finds it necessary to state that Rav Yoseph refused to teach the Ma'aseh Merkavah to the Elders of Pumbedita, even in exchange for their teaching him the Ma'aseh Bereshit. It should be noticed that Rav Yoseph lived in Babylonia, while the other Amoraim mentioned in the Gemārā lived in Eretz Yisrael. Thus, one may argue that there was some kind of difference in the attitude to the study of the Merkavah lore between those living in Babylonia and those living in Eretz Yisrael.

Indeed, we find (Bavli Shabbat 80b) that a certain Galilean came to Babylonia and was asked by the people there to discourse on the matters of the Merkavah. When he did so, he was afflicted and died. This anecdote speaks for itself, and from yet another saying of the Talmud Yerushalmi Hagigah 77a it clearly appears, that in Eretz Yisrael later generations tried to relax the strict ruling of the Mishnah while the sages in Babylonia were less lenient in their obedience to the collects a good many ancient texts related to magic and Merkavah mysticism says that "this book which is called "The Secrets of Raziel" should be delivered only . . . to him who has reached the middle of his life". This is based on Bavli Qiddushin 71 a, where the conditions for the revelation of God's secret name are listed. As a matter of fact, 30 was regarded by many to be the earliest date for the study of Jewish Kabbalah. Yet see G. Scholem, Sabbatai Sevi, Princeton University Press; 1975, p. 114.—The qualities of those who want to study esoteric subjects is variously enumerated in ancient literature. The Qumranites laid great stress on the general demeanour of the candidate, and he had to wait at least two years before he could become full member of the sect and, this, not before he underwent a thorough examination of his moral behaviour and intellectual qualities (I QS VI,13-22). In addition, there was a yearly test of the moral and intellectual qualities of the members of the sect (I QS V,24). According to another text found at Qumran, the candidate had to pass a close examination of his physiognomy in relationship to the astrological signs at his birthtime (4 Q 186). In the Hekhalot literature great stress is laid on the perfection of the mystic in the study of the Torah and in his observance of the law (Hekhalot Rabbati xiii,2; in: A. Jellinek, Bei ha-Midrash, vol. III, p. 93). Among the Hekhalot mystics we too find the physiognomic examination of the candidate (G. Scholem, in: Liber Amicorum . . . Bleeker, Leiden, E. J. Brill, 1969, pp. 175-193; I. Gruenwald, in: Tarbiz XL (1971), pp. 301-319).—From the days of the Second Temple we hear that the secret name of God was delivered only to "the humble among the priesthood" (Bavli Kidushin 71a, and parallels). Finally, Maimonides says that the secrets of physics and metaphysics (in his terminology: Ma'aseh Bereshit and Ma'aseh Merkavah, respectively) should be studied only by those who have fed themselves with much study of the Law (Mishneh Torah, Sefer ha-Mad'a, iv,13). See also the discussion in Bavli Hagigah 14a, concerning those who are allowed to study the secrets of the Torah.

Mishnah. It is said there in Talmud Yerushalmi: "How does he do (= how is the study of the Ma'aseh Merkavah carried out)?—At the beginning his master opens with the Rashei Pesuqim"²² while the pupil listens in silence and examines if his own speculations concur with those of his master". Obviously, this is a procedure that is diametrically opposed to what may be inferred as being what Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai thought was the proper procedure in studying the Merkavah lore.²³ In any event, where the terms Rashei Peraqim and Rashei Pesuqim are referred to (Bavli Hagigah 13a and Yerushalmi Hagigah 77a) one clearly finds a break with the ruling of the Mishnah. Thus, under certain circumstances it was the master who was allowed to open the discussion in the Ma'aseh Merkavah with either Rashei Peraqim or Rashei Pesuqim. One might even go as far as to say that the idea of Rashei Peraqim or Rashei Pesuqim was introduced to legitimize the deviation from the ruling of the Mishnah.

This less rigorous Palestinian attitude towards the study of the Merkavah lore, as opposed to the strict adherence to the law of the Mishnah as it could be observed with some of the Babylonian sages, may be taken to reflect indirectly a more general attitude towards the mysticism of the Merkavah in Amoraic circles. It may be argued that the strict observation of the Mishnah as seen in the circle of Rabbi Yohanan ben Zakkai's students continued to be the rule as long as the tradition of the Merkavah speculations was a live one in Eretz Yisrael. When it ceased to be so, a more lenient attitude was adopted. However, in Babylonia the Merkavah speculations continued to be a most holy subject for a long time, so that even in the days of the later Amoraim there the attitude prescribed in the Mishnah was still strictly observed. We now know that certain Merkavah texts initially composed in Eretz Yisrael were transferred to Babylonia and adapted there for local purposes.²⁴ There are, therefore, good reasons for ²² See above, n. 14.

²³ One may suggest that the opposite procedure, namely that the master opens the discourse, was aimed at keeping a uniform procedure of study in the old Yeshivot even in matters of the Merkavah. See Yerushalmi Bava Metzi'a 8d: "Who is to be considered one's teacher that taught him wisdom?—Everybody who opened to him the discourse—this is the opinion of Rabbi Me'ir".

²⁴ In the Hekhalot text published by the present writer in Tarbiz XXXVIII (1969), pp. 354 ff. mention is made of a certain sage connected to the Merkavah circles who was to occupy a prominent position among the Jews in Babylonia. See, ibid., p. 357, ll. 13 ff. The text is based on Hekhalot Rabbati, and in some cases even quotes from it. Yet, it comes even closer to the Sar Torah, which is generally appended to Hekhalot Rabbati (ch. xxvii-xxx). And in some of the believing that the Merkavah tradition in Babylonia outlived its counterpart in Eretz Yisrael. One may likewise say that the more lenient attitude shown by the Amoraim of Eretz Yisrael reflects the fact that the Merkavah speculations became known in fairly wide circles and there was no longer the previously felt need to keep these speculations under the most severe restrictions. However, whatever the reasons and whatever the practice, the control required on the part of the master over his students was somehow relaxed, but not altogether cancelled. Finally, whether the above-mentioned difference in the attitude towards the Merkavah-midrashim was also influenced by a parallel attitude towards the Heklabot literature or not remains for the moment an open question.

B

We have now to turn to the verbs DARASH and SHANAH found in the story of Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai and Rabbi El'azar ben 'Arakh. These two verbs, which imply the study of the subject of the Ma'aseh Merkavah, are in line with the ruling of the Mishnah: "Ein Dorshin", "one should not discourse". It thus appears that a study and no mystical experience is here involved. These two verbs and the verbs GAMAR (to study and to teach), PATAH (to open a midrashic discourse usually by quoting a biblical verse the relationship of which to the verse under midrashic discussion is the subject of the discourse),²⁵ and HIRZAH (to lecture), which are repeatedly used in Tractate Hagigah, in both Talmuds, make it clear that the Ma'aseh Merkavah speculations of the Tannaim basically were of a midrashic nature. Moreover, from the words "many have discoursed in the Merkavah and have not seen it during their lifetime" (Toseftā Megilah iii (iv), 28) it clearly appears that in Tannaitic circles a clear distinction was maintained between the midrashic speculations about MSS of the Sar Torah we find the following passage: "This (i.e. the conjuration of the Sar Torah) was done by Rabbi Eliezer and he was answered but did not trust (his success), and it was repeatedly done by myself and I did not trust (my success) either, till I brought a fool who repeated what I had done. (Consequently) they told Rabbi 'Akiva to go abroad . . . and when Rabbi 'Akiva descended to Babylonia, and conjured (the angel) and was answered, he returned and told us (of his success) and we rejoiced." The passage obviously stresses the fact that the theurgic practices connected with the conjuration of the Sar Torah could be perfected (a) by every layman; and (b) not only in Eretz Yisrael but also—and most significantly so—in Babylonia.

²⁵ See above note 18.

the Merkavah and its mystical perception.²⁶ In other words, even in these circles one could not completely rule out the possibility of a mystical vision of the Merkavah and this in spite of the fact that no detailed descriptions of such visions were preserved in Tannaitic sources.

However, one may ask whether we can really accept the view as expressed by Prof. E. F. Urbach that the mystical experiences of the Tannaim are devoid of any real ecstatic elements and that "the prevailing tone (in the esoteric tradition of the Tannaim) is that of an ascetic ecstasy"! ²⁷ Apart from the fact that the idea of an "ascetic ecstasy" is far from being clear, it must be asked what kind of mystical experience did the Tannaim after all have and how should the historicity of the documents we have to consult for an answer be judged. In the case of the story about Rabban Yoḥanan and Rabbi El'azar, there are two, almost parallel, interpolations in the versions found in Talmud Bavli Hagigah 14b and Talmud Yerushalmi Hagigah 77a.²⁸ According to the version in the Yerushalmi, when Rabbi El'azar began his discourse, Rabban Yoḥanan "descended from the donkey, saying: 'It is not proper for me to hear the Glory of my Creator while I am riding the donkey' ". When both of them sat down beneath a tree, "fire came down from heaven and surrounded them, and the ministering angels were dancing in front of them as groomsmen rejoicing before the bridegroom". It is furthermore reported in the Yerushalmi that "one angel was speaking from within of the fire saying: 'It is as you say, Rabbi El'azar ben 'Arakh, this is what the Ma'aseh Merkavah is!' ". The end of the story follows, using the same words as in the Toseftā. According to the version found in the Talmud Bavli, after Rabban Yoḥanan had descended from the donkey, Rabbi El'azar asked him: "Why have you descended from the donkey?"—Rabban Yoḥanan answered: "Is it not improper for me to ride a donkey while you are discoursing in the Ma'aseh Merkavah, the Shekhinah is with us, and the ministering angels are accompanying us?" Immediately Rabbi El'azar ben 'Arakh began his discourse in the Ma'aseh Merkavah.²⁹ Only then, as the story in Tal. Bavli goes, did ²⁶ See Urbach, art. cit., p. 7, n. 25.

²⁷ Ibid., p. 11.

²⁸ See also Mekhilta d'Rabbi Sim'on b. Jochai, ed. Epstein-Melamed, p. 158/9.

²⁹ According to this version of the Bavli, before Rabban Yoḥanan descended from the donkey Rabbi El'azar asked him for permission to say something which "you have taught me".

the fire come down from heaven and surrounded all the trees in the field. The trees, thereupon, began to sing a song of praise³⁰ and only afterwards do we hear of the angel who spoke from within of the fire confirming: "This is the Ma'aseh Merkavah!"³¹

Although it is quite likely that the version found in Bavli is dependent on the one found in Yerushalmi, it is equally true to say that both versions are dependent on a common source, introducing their own changes. It remains to be considered what kind of relationship this alleged source and, consequently, the two versions in the Talmudim bear to the story as it is told in the Toseftā. According to Professor Urbach, on the one hand, the two versions of the Talmudim reflect the more lenient attitude towards the Merkavah material as it is found in Amoraitic circles. Thus, Urbach says, the original version of the story is that of the Toseftā: it is short and truly expresses the reserved mood of the mysticism of the Tannaim. On the other hand, the present writer has expressed the view that the stories found in the Talmuds, in spite of the differences between them, reflect the mystical mood of the original, while the Toseftā, which is more concerned with straightforward halakhic regulations, represents a shortened form of the story.³² Professor Urbach, furthermore, maintains that the fire-motif which is found in the versions of the Talmuds is not necessarily to be taken as indicating a real ecstatic experience. Urbach quotes several sayings and stories in which the vision of fire by several ³⁰ Corresponding to Psalm cxlviii, 7-9.

³¹ The Bavli adds another story about Rabbi Yehoshu'a and Rabbi Yossi Ha-Kohen who too discoursed in the matters of the Merkavah. It is told that "Clouds gathered in the sky, and a rainbow was seen, and the angels were gathering and coming to hear, as people who come to watch the festivities performed in honour of the bridegroom and the bride". Rabban Yoḥannan had also a special blessing for these two Rabbis. In Yerushalmi Hagigah the story is told, with some changes in the account, about Rabbi Yossef Hakohen and Rabbi Shim'on ben Netan'el. Urbach, art. cit., p. 7, inclines to distinguish between two branches of the tradition: the one concerning Rabbi El'azar ben 'Arakh, and the other about Rabbi Yossi Ha-Kohen and Rabbi Yehoshu'a. Concerning the rainbow which is seen by the two sages it must be remarked that Ezekiel mentions (i, 28) the "appearance of the bow that is in the cloud on the day of rain" (RSV). Hence, the description in the text of Shi'ur Qomah (in: Merkavah Shelemah, ed. S. Musajoff, Jerusalem; 1921, fol. 38b): "the body (of the Godhead) is like a rainbow". See also Bavli Berakhot 59a: "Rabbi Alexandrei in the name of Rabbi Yehoshu'a ben Levi said: Whosoever sees the rainbow must fall upon his face, as it is said (Ezekiel i, 28; see above): 'And when I saw it, I fell upon my face'". See also Bavli Hagigah 16a: "Everybody who looks at three things is liable to lose his eyesight: at the rainbow . . .". Compare Revelation x, 1.

³² See the article quoted above in n. 11, pp. 260 ff.

sages is introduced in association with the fire seen at the theophany on Mount Sinai. Only the song of the trees which is recorded in both Talmuds is taken by Urbach to express the ecstatic experience of the mystics. It may be argued, however, that fire is always expressive of a mystical experience³³ and the theophany-fire seen on Mount Sinai is, for that matter, no prototypal exception to the rule. Moreover, the present writer finds it difficult to follow Urbach when he argues that the relative freedom of expression of the Amoraim when they discussed the Ma'aseh Merkavah shows that in comparison to the Tannaim, the Amoraim were more familiar with the esoteric doctrines of the mystics while the Tannaim were more or less ignorant of the writings of the mystics. To begin with, we have already observed a noticeable distinction between the Palestinian and Babylonian Amoraim with regard to the attitudes they maintained towards the study of the Merkavah lore. Hence, it would be difficult to generalize concerning the differences between the Tannaim and the Amoraim, at least not as emphatically as Urbach tries to do. In addition, it is quite risky to reach conclusions about alleged differences of opinion just on the grounds of literary expression,³⁴ particularly so when we deal with secret lore.

It is really very difficult to guess what the Merkavah speculations of the circle of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai were like. What is reported concerning these speculations in the rabbinic sources is actually so restrained in matters of content and literary expression that almost everything can be said about it with equal justification. One can say, with Urbach, that what is said is, materially speaking, everything that was known; but one can also maintain that a great deal more than what was said was in fact known. Admittedly, it is quite reasonable to say that the Tannaitic speculations about the Merkavah did not depend on the Hekhalot literature which was composed at a later age. But it seems equally reasonable to say that the Tannaim did not have to wait for the Hekhalot literature to discover the ecstatic potentials for the Merkavah mysticism.

It must, therefore, be admitted that the original version of the story of Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai and Rabbi El'azar ben 'Arakh is hidden within the realm of guesswork. Was it the short version of the Toseftā, or was it perhaps a presently unknown source from which both the Yerushalmi and the Bavli drew their own versions and from which the editor of the Toseftā formed his shortened version. Of course, the answer to the question of whether the original story at all contained an ecstatic experience decisively depends on what the original version was. But whatever the conclusion on this particular issue will be, one cannot ignore the possibility that ecstasies still were familiar experiences in the Ma'aseh Merkavah speculations of the Tannaim. A discussion of the famous story about the four sages who "entered the Pardes" will show it to be a good example in which in spite of the lack of straightforward evidence in the talmudic and midrashic sources, one has to assume that the existence of an ecstatic experience was nevertheless implied. The main versions of this story (in Toseftā Hagigah ii,3; Yerushalmi Hagigah 77b; Midrash Rabbā to Shir Ha-Shirim, ed. Vilna, 7d-8a) do not contain any explicit references to an ecstatic experience. But on the ground of the terminology used there, one may reach the conclusion that such an experience was a priori assumed. To this, one should add that the version of the story found in Bavli Hagigah 14b and 15b (bottom) actually contains explicit references to an ecstatic experience of the kind and nature found in the Hekhalot literature.

³³ J. Abelson, Jewish Mysticism, London, 1913, pp. 39 ff.

³⁴ To do so, however, is very much in line with the methods used by those who subscribe to the Formgeschichte. Formgeschichtliche considerations should, however, be applied in the study of the literature of the Sages with great care, since in the process of oral transmission a lot was changed in the way of expression without necessarily indicating real differences of opinion.

As is well known, the story tells of the four sages, Ben 'Azzai, Ben Zomā, Rabbi 'Akiva and Elisha ben 'Avuyah, who "entered the Pardes". It is said that Ben 'Azzai (Yerushalmi: Ben Zoma) "cast a glance and died"; Ben Zoma (Yerushalmi: Ben 'Azzai) "cast a glance and was afflicted" (Rashi explains: ³⁵ went out of his mind). Elisha ben Avuyah "cast a glance and cut down the saplings"; and only Rabbi 'Akiva "ascended (or, as another version goes: entered) safely and descended (came out) safely". Professor G. Scholem ³⁶ has rightly interpreted this story in terms of the ascension stories known from apocalyptic literature and particularly from the ascension into Paradise described by Paul the Apostle in 2 Corinthians xii,1-4.³⁷ Even Professor Urbach here admits that the Pardes has to be interpreted in terms of the vision of the Merkavah,³⁸ although he parts ways with Professor Scholem in his interpretation of the words attributed to Rabbi 'Akiva in Bavli Hagigah 14b. Rabbi 'Akiva is reported there as having said to the other sages involved in the experience (or, more generally, to his students): "When you reach the pure marble stones, do not say: 'Water, Water!', as it is said: 'no man who utters lies shall continue in my presence' " (Psalm ci,7; RSV). Urbach admits that terms like "enter the Pardes", "cast a glance" (Hiḏiz), and "ascend" ('Alah) evidently point to experiences quite different from those implied by the terms of midrashic activity which we have encountered in the Rabban Yoḥanan story. Still, however, Urbach argues that these terms are worlds apart from "the imaginary compositions about 'ascensions' in apocalyptic literature, in Hellenistic literature, and in the late Merkavah literature".³⁹ Moreover, Urbach argues that Rabbi 'Akiva's utterance concerning the marble stones is to be interpreted allegorically as indicating a warning against spiritual processes the likes of which are known as Sobria Ebrietas or sober drunkenness.⁴⁰ More relevant, however, is Scholem's analysis which interprets Rabbi 'Akiva's warning in the light of the information which can be gained from the Hekhalot literature.

³⁵ Rashi writes here in accordance with the tradition preserved in the Responsa of Rav Hai Ga'on (cf. Otzar ha-Ge'onim, vol. IV, to Hagigah, p. 14/5). Rav Hai Ga'on actually quotes there from Hekhalot Zutreti (see the two versions of the text quoted in Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 15, notes 2 & 3).

³⁶ G. Scholem, Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism, London, Thames and Hudson, 1955, pp. 52-54; Idem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 14-19.

In two of the Hekhalot writings, Hekhalot Zutreti and Hekhalot Rabbati (the Small Book of the Palaces and the Great Book of the Palaces, respectively),⁴¹ there are descriptions of the special experience the mystics are to encounter at the gate of the sixth palace. They see there the glistening marble stones and are warned against crying out "Water, Water!". If they are not able to restrain themselves, the mystics are liable to endanger themselves physically and mentally. Now, this is exactly the context out of which come the words at-³⁷ Cf. also H. Bietenhard, Die Himmlische Welt im Urchristentum und Spätjudentum, Tübingen, J. C. B. Mohr, 1951, pp. 161 ff.

³⁸ Art. cit., p. 13.

³⁹ Ibid., p. 14.

⁴⁰ Ibid., p. 17, and the references there.

⁴¹ Unfortunately, no definitive critical editions of the Hekhalot literature are yet available. A list of major MSS. and prints of the Hekhalot literature is given in Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 5-7; to which one should add the list of texts, published mainly by the present writer, in: Israel Oriental Studies III (1973), p. 88/9, n. 4. Compare also J. C. Greenfield, "Prolegomenon" to H. Odeberg, 3 Enoch, New York, Ktav Publishing House, 1973, pp. xxvii-xx. See also Part Two of the present study.

tributed to Rabbi 'Akiva. One should, however, notice that Rabbi 'Akiva merely warns his colleagues, while the descriptions in the Hekhalot literature go into the details of what might actually befall the mystics at the gate of the sixth palace. Although Rabbi 'Akiva does not mention the gate of the sixth palace, as the Hekhalot tractates do, the relationship of his words to those found in the Hekhalot books seem to be self-evident. The purpose of the descriptions in the Hekhalot literature is to warn off those who are not fully qualified mystics from undergoing experiences which they are liable not to survive. Actually, the behaviour of the mystics at the gate of the sixth palace is considered to be the final serious test which they undergo before they are granted right of passage to the sixth and then to the seventh palace found in the seventh heaven. Admittedly, Rabbi 'Akiva's words are quoted in Bavli Hagigah out of that particular context, namely as an ordeal at the entrance to the sixth palace, but this fact does not permit us to interpret the whole utterance in allegorical terms. It is, therefore, closer to the truth to maintain with Professor Scholem "that the later Merkavah mystics showed a perfectly correct understanding of the meaning of this passage (= Rabbi 'Akiva's words), and their interpretation offers striking proof that the tradition of the Tannaitic mysticism and theosophy was really alive among them, although certain details may have originated in a later period".⁴² On the grounds of Scholem's presentation of the relationship between the utterance of Rabbi 'Akiva and the Hekhalot literature, it has been suggested by the present writer that the words of Rabbi 'Akiva actually reflect the same tradition which is incorporated in the above-mentioned passages in the Hekhalot literature.⁴³ It is not, as Professor Scholem argues, that the Hekhalot literature contains the correct interpretation of the saying of Rabbi 'Akiva, but that the words attributed to the sage are words virtually taken from what already was, or was soon to become, the established Hekhalot tradition.⁴⁴ It should be added that it is a question of a different order whether the words of Rabbi 'Akiva are authentic or apocryphally attributed to him, as are some of the Hekhalot writings themselves.

Since it is unanimously agreed that the entrance into the Pardes does correspond to a vision of the Merkavah, it remains to be asked ⁴² G. Scholem, Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism, p. 52.

⁴³ Art. cit. (n. 10), pp. 261 ff.

⁴⁴ Urbach's criticism art. cit., p. 15, n. 62, is therefore unjustified.

what exactly was meant by a mystical vision of the Merkavah in Tannaitic circles. There are some hints to the answer found in the Talmud Bavli. The first one has already been discussed and it concerns Rabbi 'Akiva's utterance about the pure marble stones. The second also centres round the figure of Rabbi 'Akiva. The Gemārā (Bavli Hagigah 15b, bottom) reports: "And the ministering angels wanted to drive away [or: kill] Rabbi 'Akiva, too, but God told them: 'Leave that wise man alone, as he is worthy of experiencing my Glory' ".⁴⁵ Now, this peculiar sentence reminds us of the hostile attitude the angels showed to Moses when he reached Heaven to receive the Torah⁴⁶ and it also reflects the general theme of the angels' hostility to the ascension onto heaven of human beings.⁴⁷ This hostility of the angels is known from apocalyptic literature⁴⁸ and from the Hekhalot literature⁴⁹ and it may be said that the gnostic concept of the Archons who try to prevent the soul of man from returning to its Source of Light is in many ways inspired by this motif.⁵⁰ In our case of Rabbi 'Akiva, it may again be argued that ⁴⁵ For a discussion of the theurgic term "lehistamesh bakavod" (literally, to use the Divine Glory) see Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 54/5. The parallel text of Hekhalot Zutreti here reads "lehistakel bikhvodi" (= to look at my Glory). See Scholem, ibid., p. 77, n. 7.

⁴⁶ Bavli Shabbat 88b, where Moses is said to have been afraid that the angels were going to burn him with the vapour of their mouths. In a different context it is said that when Moses was due to descend from heaven, angels again came to kill him (Shemot Rabbā, ch. xlii, 4; and parallels). In Pesiktā Rabbati, ed. Friedmann (Wien, 1880), fol. 96b it is told of Qemu'el, "who was in charge of 12 000 angels of destruction" (Mal'akhei Habalah) (see: Israel Oriental Studies III (1973), p. 97, n. 36), and of his colleague, Hadarniel, who intimidated Moses upon his ascension to heaven to receive the Torah. Pesiktā Rabbati also mentions the name of Galizur, who, among his other duties, "stretches out his wings to receive the vapour of the Living Creatures. For if he does not do so, the ministering angels might be burned up by the vapour of the Living Creatures". The hostility of the angels against each other was discussed in Chapter Two in connection to the Apocalypse of Abraham, ch. x, and ch. xvii.

⁴⁷ See J. Maier, "Das Gefährdungsmotiv bei der Himmelsreise in der jüdischen Apokalyptik und 'Gnosis'", Kairos V (1963), pp. 18-40; J. P. Schultz, "Angelic Opposition to the Ascension of Moses and the Revelation of the Law", Jewish Quarterly Review LXI (1970/1), pp. 282-307.

⁴⁸ Cf., though indirectly, Apocalypse of Abraham, ch. xiii, p. 51/2. It is Azazel who speaks there!

⁴⁹ Actually the whole of the Hekhalot literature is full of accounts which make it clear how dangerous it was for the mystic to carry out his journey in heaven. See specifically 3 Enoch, ed. Odeberg (Cambridge, 1928; New York, 1973), ch. vi, p. 12 (English translation, p. 20).

⁵⁰ Actually, the motif—in various variations—is known from many ancient cultures. See, for instance, N. K. Sandars, Poems of Heaven and Hell from Ancient it belongs to a later tradition than the story of those who entered the Pardes, but as the theme was already known in apocalyptic literature which preceded Tannaitic times, it may well be considered as belonging to the original milieu of the Pardes-story. The third clue concerns 'Elish'a ben 'Avuyah. It is asked in the Gemārā (Bavli Hagigah 15a): "What did he ('Elish'a ben 'Avuyah) actually do?—He saw Metatron, who was given permission to sit and write the merits of the people of Israel.—He ('Elish'a) said: We have learnt that up in heaven there is no one sitting. . . , can it be that there are two reshuyot (= two Gods)?—So they pulled Metatron out and beat him with sixty lashes of fire. They asked him: 'Why didn't you stand up when you saw him ('Elish'a ben 'Avuya)?' ".⁵¹ Much has been written about the angel Metatron⁵² and in spite of all that we now know about the development of the traditions concerning his name,⁵³ it would be too daring to maintain that this Metatron-passage in connection with the name of 'Elish'a ben 'Avuyah actually belongs to the original phase of the story.

Thus we find in the discussion of the Pardes tale in Talmud Bavli three passages: one of which (the angelic hostility towards Rabbi 'Akiva) could well go back to Tannaitic times; one (the saying concerning the pure marble stones) which could also go back to Tannaitic times; and one (the Metatron passage) which most probably belongs to a later period. All these passages, however, cannot be taken to be more than fragmentary hints to the solution of the problem what exactly the nature of the Merkavah-experience of the Tannaim was.

A more significant answer to the question may be found in the term Pardes itself. As we know, the term was used in a mystical context by Paul, and it is thus a crucial one in the characterization of the nature and scope of Jewish mysticism at the time of the early Tannaim. Paul says: "I must boast; there is nothing to be gained by it, but I will go on to visions and revelations of the Lord. I know a man in Christ who fourteen years ago was caught up to the third Mesopotamia, Harmondsworth, Penguin Books, 1971, pp. 117 ff. For the Greek sources cf. W. K. C. Guthrie, A History of Greek Philosophy, vol. II, Cambridge Univ. Press, 1974, pp. 9-13.

⁵¹ See also 3 Enoch, ch. xvi, p. 22/3 (English translation pp. 43-45).

⁵² Cf. Scholem, Kabbalah (above n. 6), pp. 377-381; M. Black, "the Origins of the Name Metatron", Vetus Testamentum I (1951), pp. 217-219. See also Appendix A to the present book.

⁵³ G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 43 ff.

heaven—whether in the body or out of the body I do not know, God knows. And I know that this man was caught up into Paradise—whether in the body or out of the body I do not know, God knows—and he heard things that cannot be told, which man may not utter” (2 Corinthians xii, 1-4). Assuming that Paul speaks about himself (“a man in Christ”) and that verses 2 and 4 reflect one and the same experience, one may conclude that for Paul “Paradise” was a place in the third heaven.⁵⁴ Now, this heavenly Paradise was commonly conceived of as the place of divine retribution for the just, or for their souls.⁵⁵ It is interesting, however, to notice that Paul, who most probably was aware of the terminology used in apocalyptic literature, did not here use the term found in the Greek translations of apocalyptic literature, “Paradise of Righteousness”.⁵⁶ He does not even refer to the Aramaic term “Pardes Qushtā”, which literally underlies the Greek “Paradise of Righteousness” and which Paul could have known if he read, and it appears that he did, the apocalyptic books in their original.⁵⁷ Paul simply uses the word “Paradise” without its qualification, and this brings his experience even closer to the story of the four who entered the Pardes. It therefore, seems, safe to maintain, with Scholem, that Paul in his Epistle to the Corinthians and the Rabbis who told the story of Rabbi ‘Akiva and his friends spoke the same theosophical language. Thus, we may assume that at a certain point in Jewish thought and terminological usage, the term Pardes came to be used not only as the place where the just and the righteous receive their after-life bonus, but also in connection with the apocalyptic experience in which a man saw himself snatched onto or entering heaven to see, in his lifetime, that place and all that it contained, including, as we saw in the previous chapter, the ⁵⁴ There are various theories about the location of the heavenly Paradise. The clearest parallel to its location in the third heaven, as Paul assumes, is in: Apocalypse Mosis xxxvii, 4, in: K. von Tischendorf, Apocalypses Apocryphae (Leipzig, 1866), p. 20. See also A. Vaillant, Le Livre des Secrets d'Hénoch, Paris, Institut d'Études Slave, 1952, pp. 8-11. The idea of the location of Paradise in the third heaven was later on exchanged for the idea of its location in the seventh heaven.

⁵⁵ See D. S. Russell, The Method and Message of Jewish Apocalyptic, London, SCM Press, 1964, p. 283/4; M. E. Stone, “Paradise in 4 Ezra iv, 8 and vii, 36, viii, 52”, Journal of Jewish Studies XVII (1966), pp. 85-88.

⁵⁶ For a discussion of the various references in apocalyptic literature see H. Bientenhard, op. cit., pp. 168 ff.

⁵⁷ The Aramaic Kushtā translates both Hebrew terms: Zedek (= righteousness), and ’Emet (= truth). See further M. Gil, “Enoch in the Land of Eternal Life” (in Hebrew), Tarbiz XXXVIII (1969), p. 329/30. Gil presents a comparative study of the Pardes-terminology in Ethiopic, Aramaic and Greek.

Merkavah. No records are left of that particular usage,⁵⁸ but this alleged usage might well explain the theosophical usage we encounter in Paul and in the Rabbis, where the Pardes is no more a place of retribution.

When Paul uses the term Pardes, it already designates the more general "visions and revelations... (and) things that cannot be told, which man may not utter". No further specifications are given and the same holds true concerning the story about the four who entered the Pardes. While in the case of Paul almost no clues are given, the Gemārā in the Talmud Bavli at least tries to make things a little more explicit. Hence, we must conclude that if the term Pardes actually relates to an ecstatic experience, its true nature is nowhere explicitly and extensively described. Only on the basis of the three short passages in Talmud Bavli Hagigah which hint at material that is contained in a more explicit form in the Hekhalot literature is it permissible to identify the Pardes experience with a mystical vision of the Merkavah. Those, however, who insist on denying the intrinsic connection between the additional material found in Bavli Hagigah and the story as it appears in its short form in the Toseftā are prevented from maintaining even this, namely that the Pardes-story is in any way connected to the mystical vision of the Merkavah.

We may, therefore, conclude that both stories, that of Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai and Rabbi El'azar ben 'Arakh and that of the four sages who entered the Pardes do not explicitly supply everything one might wish for a clear proof that the Merkavah speculations in Tannaitic circles virtually corresponded to the mystical experiences which one finds in Hekhalot literature. What may be maintained with relative certainty is that these mystical speculations of the Tannaim entailed ecstatic experiences the nature of which may be surmised from a comparison between (a) the various versions of the stories under discussion and (b) these stories and the Hekhalot literature. It should, however, be noticed that while in the case of Rabban Yoḥanan the ecstasy was an experience restricted to an earthly surrounding, the story of the four who entered the Pardes allegedly entailed a translation onto heaven.

⁵⁸ See further J. T. Milik in Revue Biblique LXV (1958), pp. 70-77. See also F. Nötscher, Altorientalischer und Alttestamentlicher Auferstehungsglauben, Darmstadt, 1970, p. 282 f.

C

We shall now turn to the controversy among the Tannaim regarding the possibility or impossibility, of experiencing heavenly ascensions. On the basis of Psalms cxv, 16—"The heavens are the Lord's heavens, but the earth he has given to the sons of men"—Rabbi Yossi is quoted as saying: "Neither did Moses and Elijah ascend to heaven nor did the Divine Glory (Kavod) descend to earth".⁵⁹ This controversial utterance which runs counter to a number of verses in Scripture, becomes the subject of a discussion in Bavli Sukkah 5a where it is finally modified to say that Moses ascended to God "but did not come nearer than ten handbreadths", while God descended on Mount Sinai "but did not come nearer than ten handbreadths". Rabbi Yossi probably aimed at a criticism of those who practised heavenly ascensions, or believed in the descriptions and prophecies of those who claimed such ascensions. These could well be either apocalyptic visionaries or practising mystics among the circles of the Tannaim, or both. Thus, one could see in the words of Rabbi Yossi a polemical response to the experiences implied by the very term Pardes, as it was used by Paul and in the story of the four who entered the Pardes. However, Rabbi Yossi, seems to be in the minority among the Tannaim, while most of his colleagues appear to have accepted the possibility of heavenly ascensions. The same problem was again raised in the circles of the Palestinian Amoraim, this time concerning the figure of Enoch.⁶⁰ One may assume that these polemical utterances could have had anti-Christian overtones too, that is, they could be a polemic against the ascension of Jesus.

More relevant to our discussion is the second problem, namely, the controversy among the Tannaim as to whether it is possible to see God and, if so, when and under what conditions. In an interesting attempt to define the nature of the prophecy of Moses, it is said that only Moses could hear the voice of God while those standing outside of the Tabernacle heard nothing.⁶¹ Then Rabbi Dosā is quoted: "It is said: '... for man shall not see my face and live' (Exodus xxxiii, 20)—during their lifetime they do not see, (but) they do see when they die". To this Rabbi 'Akiva makes the following comment:

⁵⁹ Mecbilta d' Rabbi Ismael, ed. Horovitz-Rabin, p. 217. Some of the MSS. drop the name of Moses, and others the name of Elijah.—See also 1 Macc. ii, 58.

⁶⁰ Beresbit Rabba, ed. Theodor-Albeck, pp. 238-239. See Israel Oriental Studies III (1973), pp. 66-67, n. 20.

⁶¹ Sifra (Torat Kobanim) quoted from MS. Vatican 66, fol. 9a-b.

"Even the Living Creatures (Hayyot) which are carried (in the Divine Throne) do not see the Divine Glory (Kavod)". To this Rabbi Shim'on ben 'Azzai in turn adds: "Even the ministering angels, whose life is eternal,⁶² do not see the Divine Glory".⁶³ It is certainly in place to notice that two of the Tannaim mentioned here, Rabbi 'Akiva and Shim'on ben 'Azzai, were also involved in the above-mentioned Pardes experience. This could be interpreted to imply that whatever Rabbi 'Akiva and his colleagues said in the matters of the Merkavah was based on their alleged visions. As a matter of fact, the idea that the mystics and the angels cannot see God is also stressed several times in the Hekhalot literature. Despite the daring modes of expression one can find in that literature about the contents of the mystical experience, the possibility of a direct visual encounter with God is generally ruled out.⁶⁴ The mystics whose experiences are described in the Hekhalot literature, expect to see "the King in (all) His beauty", but when it comes to a face to face meeting with God, one repeatedly hears of what is and should be done in order to avoid the experience.

However, we have seen that Rabbi Dosā said that one can see God after one's death. The belief in the afterlife encounter of the just with God is quite a common idea in midrashic literature.⁶⁵ The idea is also previously found in apocalyptic literature and it plays a prominent role in Revelation.⁶⁶ Yet, a visual encounter with God is also presupposed by the Shi'ur Qomah speculations, that is, the speculations concerning the corporeal appearance of God and its definition in terms of length and mystical names.⁶⁷ Apart from the texts which specifically deal with the subject,⁶⁸ there are quite a number of midrashic sayings based on the Song of Songs which Professor Saul Lieberman considers to be related to the Shi'ur Qomah specula-

⁶² The eternal life of the ministering angels is not always maintained. See, for instance, Bereshit Rabbā, p. 916 (and parallels); 3 Enoch, ch. xlvii; Hekhalot Rabbati, ch. xxx.

⁶³ Compare Siphrē ad Numeros, ed. Horovitz, p. 55/6 and 101/2. Cf. Urbach, art. cit., p. 19, n. 81. See further Bavli Yevamot 49b.

⁶⁴ See Hekhalot Rabbati iii,3-4.

⁶⁵ Sifre on Deuteronomy, ed. Finkelstein, p. 18 and 105; Sifrā (Torat Kobanim) ed. Weiss, p. 111, col. b; Bavli Sanhedrin 102a; Wayyikra Rabbā, ed. Margulies, p. 32; ibid., pp. 240-242 (and parallels) and, finally, Matthew v,8.

⁶⁶ Revelation iv,4; see also 4 Ezra vii (v),97/8.

⁶⁷ G. Scholem, Von der mystischen Gestalt der Gottheit, Zürich, Rhein-Verlag, 1962, pp. 7-47: "Shi'ur Qomah; die mystische Gestalt der Gottheit"; idem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 36-42.

⁶⁸ They are printed in S. Musajoff, Merkavah Shelemah, Fol. 34a ff.

tions.⁶⁹ These particular midrashim to the Song of Songs reveal two views: the one, attributed to Rabbi 'Akiva and his followers, according to which the Song of Songs was recited at the theophany on Mount Sinai; and the second, attributed to Rabbi Eli'ezer and his followers, which believes that the Song of Songs was said when God revealed Himself personally on the Red Sea. Particularly noteworthy is the saying of Rabbi Eli'ezer: "A maidservant at the Red Sea saw things that were not even seen by Ezekiel... When God revealed Himself on the Red Sea nobody had to ask: 'Who is the King', but as they saw Him, they (immediately) recognized Him".⁷⁰ Although there is no exact parallel saying of Rabbi 'Akiva with regard to the theophany on Mount Sinai, Rabbi 'Akiva is quoted as saying in a different context: "This (= the renewal of the moon in Nissan) is one of the things which God showed Moses as if with His finger!".⁷¹ This saying of Rabbi 'Akiva may be interpreted as implying that at least Moses saw a certain corporeal manifestation of God. Now, it may be claimed that this saying of Rabbi 'Akiva contradicts the one we have already seen, to the effect that even the Living Creatures cannot see the Divine Glory. However, the prophecy of Moses was never intended to be a criterion for the prophecy and for the mystical experiences of others. It must be noticed, moreover, that Rabbi 'Akiva considered the Song of Songs to be the holiest book,⁷² and that it was recited at the theophany on Mount Sinai. In the light of what has been said, it may be concluded that Rabbi 'Akiva experienced what he thought was a mystical ascension to the Pardes, although this did not entail a direct and immediate vision of the Godhead. What exactly happened could only be guessed on the grounds of the different versions of the Pardes tale, mainly those recorded by Paul, in the Talmud Bavli and in the Hekhalot literature. But it is certainly important ⁶⁹ G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., Appendix D, pp. 118-126: "Mishnah Shir Ha-Shirim" by Professor Saul Lieberman. See further, J. Maier, Geschichte der jüdischen Religion, Berlin & New York, Walter de Gruyter, 1972, p. 201. Maier inclines to date the Shi'ur Qoma speculations in "der spätmittelalterlichen und gaonäischen Zeit". From the evidence produced by Scholem and Lieberman it appears that the Shi'ur Qoma belongs to the earlier phases of the Hekhalot literature.

⁷⁰ Mekhilta d'Rabbi Ismael, p. 126/7. Compare Mekhilta d'Rabbi Sim'on b. Jochai, ed. Epstein-Melamed, p. 154/5. Rabbi Eli'ezer seems to extend here the view expressed by his father, Rabbi Yossi Haglili, to the effect that even babies and little children saw the Shekhinah on the Red Sea. Yerushalmi Sotah 16c; Mekhilta d'Rabbi Sim'on b. Jochai, p. 73/4. See Lieberman in Scholem, op. cit., p. 121.

⁷¹ Mekhilta d'Rabbi Ismael, p. 6 (emended according to parallels).

⁷² Mishnah Yadayim iii,5 (and parallels).

to notice that the tones struck by Rabbi 'Akiva's saying, to the effect that no man can see God,⁷³ are repeated in the Hekhalot literature too. However, as we are going to see, a different view is attributed to Rabbi 'Akiva in Shi'ur Qomah.

In completing this picture of the mystical concepts in the writings of the Tannaitic period, mention should be made of the belief that priests could have special experiences when they took the incense into the Holy of Holies.⁷⁴ Thus we hear of the High Priest, Sim'on the Just, who on entering the Holy of Holies used to encounter on every Day of Atonement an old man dressed in white (cf. Daniel vii,9);⁷⁵ and another High Priest, called Yishma'el ben Elish'a, is reported to have seen God Himself sitting on His throne (cf. Isaiah vi,1).⁷⁶ Yoḥanan, the High Priest, heard a prophetic utterance from the Holy of Holies⁷⁷ and Luke tells of Zacharias, the father of John the Baptist, that an angel appeared to him in the Temple.⁷⁸ Naturally, it would go too far to say that all Jewish mysticism from the times of the Tannaim onwards derived in many essential ways from the cultic life of the Temple.⁷⁹ It must equally be noticed, however, that some of those Tannaim who dealt with the Ma'aseh Merkavah were priests.⁸⁰ At any rate, if the experiences recorded in the Tannaitic ⁷³ It is here that I find myself disagreeing with S. Safrai, Rabbi 'Akiva ben Joseph: His Life and Teaching (in Hebrew), Jerusalem, Bialik Institute, 1970, p. 59. Safrai writes: "The ministering angels do not deserve the privilege of seeing the divine glory, while a human being, who is exalted by his good deeds does deserve the privilege of seeing the divine glory". Rabbi 'Akiva's words in Sifra are not in opposition to the words of Rabbi Dosa, but, on the contrary, they are complementing them. This is the meaning of the word "even" which introduces Rabbi 'Akiva's saying to the effect that the living creatures do not see the divine glory.

⁷⁴ See J. Z. Lauterbach, "A Significant Controversy between the Saducees and the Pharisees", Hebrew Union College Annual IV (1927), pp. 173-205. Lauterbach's Saduceean interpretation of these stories was variously challenged.

⁷⁵ Yerushalmi Yomā 42c (and parallels). Compare also Yerushalmi Sotah 24b.

⁷⁶ Bavli Berakhot 7a. See Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 51 ff.

⁷⁷ Tosefta Sotah xiii,5 (and parallels).

⁷⁸ Luke i,8-22.

⁷⁹ J. Maier, Vom Kultus zur Gnosis, Salzburg, Otto Müller Verlag, 1964. See K. Schubert, "Das Zeitalter der Apokalyptik", in: F. Leist (ed.), Seine Rede geschah zu Mir, München, Manz-Verlag, 1965, pp. 265-285.

⁸⁰ Although there were scholars who thought that Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai himself was a priest, it seems safer to maintain with G. Alon, The History of the Jews in Eretz Yisrael in the Time of the Mishnah and Talmud (in Hebrew), second edition, Tel Aviv, 1954, vol. I, p. 56, that no conclusive proof could be produced for the priesthood of Rabban Yoḥanan. See further G. Alon, Studies in Jewish History (in Hebrew), Tel Aviv, 1957, vol. I, pp. 255-256, where a certain sources and which refer to the Temple life really occurred, Judaism of that period must have been prepared for the mystical experiences of the kind we find in the Hekhalot writings in a manner seriously misrepresented by the scepticism of some of the scholars who have discussed the phenomenon.

rift between Rabban Yoḥanan and the priests is discussed. However, Rabbi Yossi and Rabbi Shim'on ben Netan'el, who were Rabban Yoḥanan's students and engaged in the Merkavah speculations (Yerushalmi Hagigab 77a), were both priests, though they seem to have left their master after the destruction of the Temple. See G. Alon, Studies etc., vol. 1, p. 256, n. 9. In Bavli Hagigab 14b Rabbi Yehoshu'a takes the place of Rabbi Shim'on ben Netan'el. See above note 11. It must be remembered, that Ezekiel, the prophet, also was a priest.

CHAPTER FOUR

THE HEKHALOT LITERATURE

A

In the present chapter we shall discuss some of the general characteristics of the Hekhalot literature. In the second part of the book, a detailed introduction to each of the Hekhalot books will be given.

The first scholar who attempted a serious evaluation of the Hekhalot literature, and also suggested a historical sequence for its composition, was H. Grätz.¹ In a series of three articles published in the Monatschrift für die Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judenthums VIII (1859), Grätz reached the conclusion that the so-called Hekhalot literature was composed in post-talmudic times, and that the first text in the series was 'Otiyot de-Rabbi 'Akiiva. Grätz's dating of that literature is still considered by some people to be true, though the sequence of the composition of that literature as suggested by him is no more accepted. Professor G. Scholem in a series of studies of that literature, suggested a different order of composition and a much earlier date of composition.² Scholem's views on these two issues are here followed, and the discussion which follows deals with some aspects of that literature which still deserve attention. In addition, Scholem's suggestion to interpret the Merkavah mysticism as a Jewish concomitant to gnosticism will be re-examined.³

Generally speaking, the three main subjects dealt with in the

¹ Grätz dismisses the chapter dealing with Jewish mysticism in L. Zunz, Gottesdienstliche Vorträge, 1832, pp. 165-170, as "so nichtssagend als nur möglich".

² See mainly his: Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism, London, Thames and Hudson, 1955, pp. 40-79: "Merkabah Mysticism and Jewish Gnosticism"; Jewish Gnosticism Merkabah Mysticism, and Talmudic Tradition, Second, Improved Edition, New York, The Jewish Theological Seminary of America, 1965; Ursprung und Anfänge der Kabbalah, Berlin, Walter de Gruyter, 1962, pp. 15-20: "Die vor-kabbalistische jüdische Geheimlehre über die Schöpfung und die Merkaba-Literatur der Hekhaloth und jüdische Gnosis"; Ion der mystischen Gestalt der Gottheit, Zürich, Rhein Verlag, 1962, pp. 7-47: "Schi'ur Koma; die mystische Gestalt der Gottheit"; Kabbalah, Jerusalem, Keter Publishing House, 1974, pp. 14-22; 373-376.

³ Here the writer will mainly follow his "'knowledge' and 'vision'—Towards a Clarification of two 'Gnostic' Concepts in the Light of their Alleged Origins", Israel Oriental Studies III (1973), especially pp. 88-107; and: "The Jewish Esoteric Literature in the Time of the Mishnah and Talmud", Immanuel 4 (1974), pp. 37-46.

Hekhalot literature are: heavenly ascensions, the revelation of cosmological and other secrets, and the special secret method of studying and memorizing the Torah. From the point of view of literary genre, the Hekhalot literature falls into two types: the description of heavenly ascensions and the description of the appearance on earth of angels who reveal secrets. A similar distinction with regard to the literary genre can be made concerning apocalyptic literature, but in contradistinction to apocalyptic literature, the Hekhalot literature gives detailed descriptions of the various means and practices by which the desired experiences or revelations are gained. In fact, it may be said that the whole of the Hekhalot literature might be defined as technical guides, or manuals, for mystics. A lot of the material contained therein is introduced by technical questions. A short paraphrase of some of the Hekhalot texts would begin thus: "What is the mystic required to do if he wants to bring about the following mystical experience". These technical details, the "praxis" of the mystical experience, generally consist of special prayers or incantations, of prolonged fasts and special diets, of the utterance of magical names and the use of magical seals, and of the ritual of cleansing the body. Although some of those means are already known from apocalyptic literature, their description in the Hekhalot literature is more detailed. They are also known from non-Jewish mysticism and magic.⁴

In contrast to Prophecy, which seems to be spontaneous, and sometimes even comes to those least desiring it, the kinds of experience described in apocalyptic and in Merkavah mysticism necessitated certain preparatory practices.⁵ Already in Daniel x,2-3, we hear of an extended period of fasting and praying before the visionary received a vision: "In those days I Daniel was mourning for three whole weeks, pleasant food I did not eat, nor did flesh and wine come to my mouth, nor did I anoint myself at all, until the fulfilling of three full weeks".⁶ This kind of self-preparation for the apocalyptic experience is also known from later Jewish apocalyptic. Thus we find in 2 (Syriac) Baruch ix,2 that Baruch and Jeremiah rent their garments, wept, mourned and fasted seven days, before God revealed himself to Baruch.⁷ These fasts in apocalyptic literature, whether they meant total abstention from any kind of food or whether they entailed special diets, were usually practised over periods of seven days, and their repetition two or three times. In 4 Ezra the apocalypticist is told at least three times to fast for seven days (v,13 — v,20; vi,31-35; xii,50).⁸ The three books mentioned here, Daniel, 2 Baruch and 4 Ezra, do not contain heavenly ascents, yet the practice of fasts was also known where ascents were experienced. Thus, as we already saw, in the Apocalypse of Abraham ix, Abraham was ordered to “abstain from every form of food that proceedeth out of the fire, and from the drinking of wine... forty days”. This period of forty days is likewise known from other cases,⁹ and it was most certainly influenced by what we know of Moses¹⁰ and Elijah.¹¹

⁴ See W. Bousset, Die Himmelsreise der Seele, Reprint: Darmstadt, Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1960; A. Dieterich, Eine Mithrasliturgie, Reprint: Darmstadt, Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1966; E. R. Dodds, The Greeks and the Irrational, University of California Press, 1964, pp. 283-311.

⁵ For the question to which extent prophecy was spontaneous or not see, for instance, J. Skinner, Prophecy and Religion, Cambridge University Press, 1963, pp. 1 ff. For a discussion of some psychological and phenomenological aspects of prophecy see, J. Lindblom, Prophecy in Ancient Israel, Oxford, Blackwell, 1965, pp. 6 ff.

⁶ Compare also ix,3. See J. A. Montgomery, The Book of Daniel (ICC), p. 407.

Sometimes instead of prolonged fasts only special diets were prescribed. Thus we hear in 4 Ezra xii,50 that the apocalypticist sustained himself for one week only on “the flowers of the field... (and) of the herbs”. In the Merkavah texts, however, all vegetables are strictly forbidden during the period of time in which the mystic ⁷ To be exact, these practices were initially performed as a sign of mourning over the destruction of Jerusalem, but it is no mere coincidence that as a result of these, God revealed himself to Baruch. Other fasts are reported in 2 Baruch in xii,5 and xxi,1.

⁸ For further examples of this kind see D. S. Russell, The Method and Message of Jewish Apocalyptic, London, SCM Press, 1964, pp. 169-173.

⁹ See the text published in Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., Appendix C, paragraphs 11, p. 108 and 14, p. 109. In MS. Oxford 1531, 46a we find: “He who wants to study this Mishnah and to utter the Holy Name of God should fast for forty days”. In both cases no ascent is maintained; but see the Responsum of Rev Hai Ga’on in B. Lewin, Otzar Ha-Geonim, vol. IV (Tractate ... Chagigah), p. 14 where fasts are mentioned in connection with ascents to heaven.

¹⁰ Exodus xxxiv,28; Deuteronomy ix,9,18. In another tradition preserved in Bavli Yomā 4a (= Avot de-Rabbi Nathan Version A, Chapter i), Rabbi Nathan is quoted as saying that six days had to pass before Moses could receive the word of God. This had to happen “so that he would be cleansed of all the foods and drinks in his bowels, and thus become like the angels”. In Bavli Hagigah 16a we hear that the angels do not eat. See further the discussion between Rabbi ‘Akiva and Rabbi Yishmael in Bavli Yomā 75b as to whether the angels eat and of what their nutrition consists.

¹¹ 1 Kings xix, 7-8. See further, R. Arbesmann, “Fasting and Prophecy in Pagan and Christian Antiquity”, Traditio VII (1949/1951), pp. 1-71; S. Lowy, “The Motivation of Fasting in Talmudic Literature”, Journal of Jewish Studies XIX (1958), pp. 19-38.

prepares himself for his ecstatic experience.¹² In addition, it is said there several times that he should bake his bread himself,¹³ and that he should particularly avoid the bread baked by a woman.¹⁴ In the Merkavah texts, fasts and diets go hand in hand and no distinction is drawn between them: "...he should sit in fast for forty days, his morsel should be eaten with salt only" (Ma'aseh Merkavah, paragraph 11).¹⁵ Generally, all these ascetic means are also well known from other sources,¹⁶ and even in some rabbinic circles it was maintained that the study of the Torah entailed an ascetic, or austere, way of life.¹⁷ But when we come to the Hekhalot literature, and particularly to those sections which describe the practices of conjuring angels to reveal secrets, these ascetic means become a mystical rite.¹⁸

Together with these diets and fasts we find ritual baths. The initiate preparing himself for his mystical experience is told to take daily ritual baths, preferably every evening before he eats his daily meal. This special procedure is prescribed, again, only in the case of the conjuration of angels in order to come down to earth and to reveal secrets.¹⁹ Sometimes, the number of such ritual baths is given:

¹² See, for instance, "Sar Torah" (— Hekhalot Rabbati) xxx,1 and in Musajoff, Merkavah Shelemah 5a: "He should not taste any vegetables".

¹³ "Sar Torah", ibid.; Merkavah Shelemah 4b.

¹⁴ MS. Oxford 1531, 46b (= MS. Jewish Theological Seminary 828, 25a): "He should not eat bread baked by a woman, nor should he drink water touched by a woman; but he should knead with his own hands, and grind himself, and bake for himself one bread every day and eat" (translated from Aramaic).

¹⁵ In fact, as Hekhalot Rabbati xxx,1 explicitly says, one could break one's fast every evening, but then only special kinds of food could be eaten. As we shall soon see, before touching the food, one had to take a ritual bath.

¹⁶ For asceticism as it is viewed by Philo, see H. Leisegang, Der Heilige Geist, Darmstadt, Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1967, p. 215.

¹⁷ Mishnah 'Avot vi,4: "This is the way of the Torah: A morsel with salt shalt thou eat and water by measure shalt thou drink; and thou shalt lie upon the earth, and thou shalt live a life of hardship, and labour in the Torah". (English translation: R. Travers Herford, The Ethics of the Fathers, New York, Schocken Books, 1962, p. 154). For a general summary of the rabbinical views on asceticism, see E. E. Urbach, "Ascesis and Suffering in Talmudic and Midrashic Sources" (In Hebrew), in I. F. Baer Jubilee Volume, Jerusalem, 1960, pp. 48-68.

¹⁸ We shall come back to this point in Part Two of our book, where a detailed description of the texts will be given. We also know from rabbinic sources that fasts were in practice when people desired the revelation of Elijah the Prophet; see Jerushalmi Terumot viii (46b).

¹⁹ The technical term for this process in Hebrew is: ZQQ, literally 'to bind (by an oath)'. See in Tarbiz XXXVIII (1969), p. 365, note to line 31.

in one case we find twenty four,²⁰ and in another seven.²¹ In one or two cases specifications are given as to how the ritual baths are to be taken: "at the end of his fast-days and his ritual cleansing he should go and sit in water up to his neck . . .".²² Yet, whatever is prescribed in these cases is quite innocent in comparison to the elaborate magical practices known from some of the Greek magical papyri and from the Hebrew magical treatises such as Sefer Ha-Razim and Sefer Ha-Malbush. In these magical texts, the performer is told to bring animal offerings, wine libations and all kinds of strange instruments and objects which are said to aid the magical performance. It is probably through the influence of these magical performances that we find in some Hekhalot texts the idea that certain practices are useful only for bringing about certain experiences at specific dates. Thus we find special practices for mystical experiences and revelations which are to be accomplished on the Feast of Shavu'ot, on New Year Day, at the beginning of every month, etc.²³

In the Hekhalot tractates which deal with heavenly ascents, the theurgic practices which are applied are mainly incantations (or ²⁰ Ma'aseb Merkavah, paragraph 11, p. 108. It should be noticed that it is difficult to harmonize between this number—twenty four—and the forty days of fasting prescribed in the same context.

²¹ See Merkavah Rabbā in: S. Musajoff, Merkavah Shelemah, 1b.

²² Ibid. A similar procedure is described in the case of Adam's penitence in Vita Adae et Evae vi: Adam was spending forty days fasting and told Eve to "go to the river Tigris and lift up a stone and stand on it in the water up to thy neck in the deep of the river. And let no speech out of thy mouth". Adam also told Eve to "stand in the water of the river thirty seven days". He himself spent forty days in the water of Jordan. In vii,2 it is again said that "Adam walked to the river Jordan and stood on a stone up to his neck in water". A similar tradition is preserved in Pirkei de-Rabbi Eliezer xx, where it is told of Adam's penitence that "Adam went to the upper Gihon till the water reached his neck, and he fasted seven weeks . . ." For the whole subject see L. Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews, vol. V, pp. 114-115. However, Ginzberg observes that "both sources (= The Vita and Pirkei de-Rabbi Eliezer) go back to the old Halakā"; yet, as Professor Lieberman pointed out to me, the opposite is the truth. In Bavli Yomā 78a (not 87a, as indicated by Ginzberg) Rav Yoseph is quoted as saying that a ritually unclean woman may take a cleansing bath while she is immersed only up to her neck in water. The Gemārā, however, remarks that this is not the accepted ruling (and a woman is cleansed only if she immerses completely into the water; see also Slavonic Vita Adae et Evae, xxxvi,4, in Charles, Pseudepigrapha, p. 135). See further Toseftā Kippurim iv (v),5, and Bavli Yomā 77b (twice); Bavli Berakhot 25b.

²³ Cf. Ms. Oxford 1531, fol. 67a-b (= Ms. New York 828, fol. 39a).—Compare, for instance, K. Preisendanz, Papyri Graecae Magicae, vol. II, Stuttgart, Verlag Teubner, 1974, p. 13, where the days which are unsuitable for magical performance are listed. In Sefer Ha-Razim we find several references to the days and hours, which are most suitable for the magical performance.

hymns), the saying of names, charms and magical seals. As for the incantations or hymns, Hekhalot Rabbati opens with the question: "What are the incantations which should be said by him who wants to contemplate the vision of the Merkavah, to descend safely and to ascend safely" (i,1). As the last words indicate, the function of these incantations is to conduct the visionary safely through all the dangers which might befall him during his mystical experience. Indeed, we have already seen in the Apocalypse of Abraham that the angel Jael told the visionary to worship and "to utter the song which I have taught thee". It appears that he did so in order to protect the visionary and to strengthen him against the things he experienced in heaven. The theurgic quality of these incantations also becomes evident from two passages in Ma'aseh Merkavah. Both passages are introduced as questions which Rabbi Yishmael asked Rabbi 'Akiva. In the first one, Rabbi Yishmael enquired: "How can a man gain a vision of what is above the Seraphim who stand above Rozaya, Lord God of Israel?". To which Rabbi 'Akiva answered: "When I ascended to the first Hekhal, I said a prayer and [then] I saw from the first Hekhal in heaven to the seventh Hekhal".²⁴ The second passage brings the question: "How can a man have these visions and see what Rozaya, Lord God of Israel, does?" Rabbi 'Akiva's answer accordingly was: "I prayed a prayer of compassion and thus I was saved".²⁵

However, reading these hymns and incantations, their protective function does not immediately come through. On the contrary, some of these hymns are extremely lyrical in their tone and form. They appear to be songs of praise, and only occasionally is a phrase introduced that betrays their real function. Thus, for instance, one of these songs in Ma'aseh Merkavah (paragraph 16, p. 110) contains one line which reads: "And rescue me from all these hostile ones (= the angels of destruction) which stand [behind the Holy Creatures], so that they shall become the bearers of my love before You". The theurgic functions come even more directly to the fore in the "five prayers" quoted in Ma'aseh Merkavah, paragraphs 26-31. These prayers combine lyrical poetry with magical names. The prayers begin with the remark, attributed to Rabbi Yishmael: "I was praying each of these prayers with its names, both on my descent to and ascent from the Merkavah, and thus no harm was caused to my limbs". Notwithstanding these examples, the general truth remains that these songs were conceived of as songs of praise said by the angelic beings, and even by the Throne of Glory,²⁶ to God. The mystic who ascended to heaven learnt them in order to apply them also as theurgic means.²⁷ However, whether these hymns were said as autohypnotic means or whether they were recited in heaven as protective means,²⁸ their numinous quality²⁹ establishes them as outstanding specimens of Jewish poetry in Talmudic times.

²⁴ Paragraph 33, p. 116.

²⁵ Paragraph 4, p. 103. See also paragraph 9, p. 107: "I (Rabbi 'Akiva) said the Qedushah before him who created and ordered (into being) all the creatures, so that the ministering angels should not consume me". See also there paragraph 17, p. 110.

Even, more important from the magico-theurgic point of view is the saying of names, mainly the secret names of the Deity and of the angels. We already saw that there were various traditions, going back to the ritual practice of the second Temple, which refer to the secret names of God.³⁰ Thus, we know of the secret name pronounced out by the priests in their blessing.³¹ In another place we hear of a secret name that was enunciated in the special oath which God used in the creation of the world.³² We also know of so-called nomina barbara said in adjurations.³³ Finally, mention should also be made of the theurgic material found in the magical papyri,³⁴ and ²⁶ For the idea that the Throne of Glory addresses God with words see Hekhalot Rabbati iii,2. In xxiv,1 we read: "When he (= the mystic) is standing before the Throne of Glory, he opens and says the song which the Throne of Glory sings every day". In MS. Vatican 228 these words are headed by the title: Shir Kisē, "The Hymn of the Throne".

²⁷ See Hekhalot Rabbati iv,2 we read: "Rabbi Yishmael said: all these songs Rabbi 'Akiva heard when he descended to the Merkavah; and he caught and learned them in front of His Throne of Glory when His ministers were singing to him".—For an analysis of these hymns and their theurgic functions see A. Altman, "Shirei-Qedushah Be-Sifrut Ha-Hekhalot Ha-Qedumah", in Melilah II (1945-6), pp. 1 ff.

²⁸ See A. Altman, ibid., pp. 2-4.

²⁹ See G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 20 ff.

³⁰ See G. Scholem, "Der Name Gottes und die Sprachtheorie der Kabbala", in Judaica III, Frankfurt am Main, Suhrkamp Verlag, 1970, pp. 7 ff.

³¹ See above, Chapter Two, n. 81. See also L. H. Schiffman, "A Forty-Two Letter Divine Name in the Aramaic Magic Bowls", Bulletin of the Institute of Jewish Studies, vol. I. (1973), pp. 97 ff. Schiffman's explanation seems rather hypothetical.

³² I Enoch lxix,14 ff. Compare also Sifre on Deuteronomy, ed. Finkelstein, paragraph 330, p. 380.

³³ See S. Lieberman, "Some Notes on Adjurations in Israel", Texts and Studies, New York, Ktav Publishing House, 1974, pp. 21-28; and more specifically in Toseftā Ki-Fshutab to Shabbat, pp. 91 ff.

³⁴ See G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 75 ff.: "The Theurgic Elements which in some respects derived from old Jewish magical practices.³⁵ In short, there is much in the traditions of the time preceding the Hekhalot literature that could well explain the background of the names-praxis of the Hekhalot mystics.

Names and adjurations are the two main theurgic means found in the Hekhalot literature applied in connection with the descent to the Merkavah and the invocation of angels to come down to earth and to reveal secrets. Most illuminating in this respect is the following passage from Hekhalot Rabbati: "When a man wants to descend to the Merkavah, he should call Suriya, the Prince of the Countenance, and conjure him a hundred and twelve times in the name of Tetrasii, Lord God. . . . He should neither add nor subtract from that number of a hundred and twelve, for if he does, he fatally endangers himself. His mouth should utter the names and his fingers should count a hundred and twelve, and he immediately descends and masters the Merkavah" (xiv,4-5). It is interesting to notice that not only does the exact number of the names guarantee the success of the mystical experience, but that in fact any deviation from it is physically endangering the mystic. Similarly, we find in the case of the conjuration of angels that the mystic is told to "pronounce names, and his fingers should count till he reaches the number one hundred and eleven".³⁶ As we see, the number of names can slightly vary from 112 to 111, but in any event, a deviation from the number prescribed does not only result in failure but virtually works harm on the mystic.

However, there are also other sets of numbers prescribed for the conjurations.³⁷ In one case,³⁸ we read that God is conjured by a series of the Lesser Hekhaloth and the Magical Papyri". See also E. E. Urbach, The Sages, Chapter Seven, pp. 124 ff. Urbach, however, does not refer to the Hekhalot material.

³⁵ For a recent discussion of the relevant eastern and hellenistic magical material, see J. M. Hull, Hellenistic Magic and the Synoptic Tradition, London, SCM Press, 1974. Unfortunately, Hull is not acquainted with the relevant Jewish sources and thus his treatment of the subject is incomplete. More relevant for our discussion, however, is M. Smith, Clement of Alexandria and a Secret Gospel of Mark, Harvard University Press, 1973, pp. 220 ff. Most valuable too is E. R. Dodds' article "Theurgy" now reprinted as Appendix II to his The Greeks and the Irrational, Berkeley & Los Angeles, University of California Press, 1964, pp. 283 ff.

³⁶ "Merkavah Rabbah", in: Musajoff, Merkavah Shelemah, 46. Compare also Ma'aseh Merkavah, paragraph 30, p. 114.

³⁷ In Ma'aseh Merkavah paragraph 12, p. 109 we find three names: In Merkavah Rabbah (in: Merkavah Shelemah 1b), there are fourteen names. In the Sar Torah section of Hekhalot Rabbati (xxx,4) twelve angels are conjured by their secret names.

³⁸ Hekhalot Rabbati xii,4.

of sixteen names all of which begin with “tetra” (or: “totro”, as some of the Hebrew manuscripts reproduce the name). In addition, it is said there in Aramaic: “And the sign of this Halakhah is to learn these Great Names³⁹ from Tetrasii till Tetrasi: he should learn them in the following sequence...”.⁴⁰ Interestingly, the importance of the correct sequence is stressed here, but never do we hear anything of the importance of correctly uttering the names. We know of the great importance attached in the magical papyri to the correct pronunciation of the names of the conjured gods (ἐχψώνησις), but nothing of the kind is explicitly said in our texts.

All in all, the theurgic elements of the Hekhalot literature have their decisive share in giving this literature its idiosyncratic quality. In contradistinction to the view expressed by A. Jellinek, to the effect that the theurgic content of the Hekhalot literature was introduced (“untergeschoben”) at a comparatively late period, it must be maintained, with G. Scholem, that that particular element in the Hekhalot literature actually belonged to its very heart and this almost from its very beginning.⁴¹ In fact, one of the earliest Hekhalot texts we possess, Re’uyot Yeheskel, explicitly refers to those who are in possession of the mystical secret knowledge as “Meshamshin Ba-Shum”, which is the Aramaic equivalent for theurgists, that is, those who “acted upon” the gods by the power of their secret names.⁴²

Last in this catalogue of mystical practices are the seals. The mystic who descends to the Merkavah has to prepare all kinds of mystical ³⁹ MS. Budapest (Kaufmann) 238, p. 174: shmabatā ravrevayā. This is the plural of shmā rabbā, the Aramaic equivalent of the Hebrew shem gadol, which is to be interpreted as “a most powerful magical name”. See the opening three paragraphs of Hekhalot Zutreti, (especially nos. 2 & 3) in Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 77, n. 6. To this compare also Hekhalot Rabbati ix,5 and xxii,1. See further B. A. Levine, “The Language of the Magical Bowls”, Appendix to J. Neusner, A History of the Jews in Babylonia, vol. V, Leiden, E. J. Brill, 1970, pp. 372-373. The “Great Name” also occurs in a text describing the Ascension of Moses: “The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Michael, Go and teach him (i.e. Moses) my Great Name, so that the flame of the Shekhinah shall not consume him...”. See, The Ascension of Moses and the Heavenly Jerusalem, translated by H. W. Attridge, in: Studies on the Testament of Moses, edited by G. W. E. Nickelsburg, Jr., Society of Biblical Literature, Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1973, p. 123. See also Mishnah Ta’anit iii,8.

⁴⁰ There follow the sixteen letters which correspond to the various endings to the “Tetra” root-form. See also Ma’aseh Merkavah, paragraph 30, p. 114, where the “Tetra” root-form was not corrupted.

⁴¹ See A. Jellinek, Bet Ha-Midrash, vol. VI, Introduction, p. XXVII f. See further G. Scholem, ibid., p. 75.

⁴² Compare E. R. Dodd, ibid., p. 283 seq.

seals which he is told to show to the gate-keepers at the entrance of each Hekhal. These seals are to grant him passage through the various gates and to protect him against the hostility of the gate-keepers. Nothing is said in the Hekhalot texts about the detailed contents of those seals. What we, however, hear in Hekhalot Rabbati xvii, is that at each of the first six gates the mystic has to show two seals, one to the gate-keepers standing to the right and one to those standing on the left. The seals are designated by their mystical names. These names are as unclear as the names uttered in the adjurations and invocations. Professor Scholem has shown that at least in two cases the numerical value of pairs of letters which build up the names of the seals can explain the forms of the names.⁴³ But, in spite of the fact that some additional formal principles—such as changes in the order of the letters or in the endings of the names—could be pointed out too, the real contents and meaning of these seals are still by and large obscure. Much work has still to be devoted to the deciphering of the names of the seals and of the spells scattered in the literature of the period. As a matter of fact, only the combined efforts of scholars from different branches and fields of knowledge can bring about the desired progress in the study of the magico-theurgic practices found in the magical papyri, in the amulets and bowls, in the writings of gnosticism, and in Jewish mysticism and magic. Only a comprehensive and comparative study of all this vast material will enable us to understand the technique of creating these names and spells, and this notwithstanding the fact that in several cases the names were obscured on purpose, so as to prevent people from using or misusing them. In addition, it should be noticed that errors and confusion were often introduced by careless and ignorant copyists.

What still deserves attention, is the fact that the occurrence of these theurgical practices in the Hekhalot literature makes it evident that at least in one of its more central features this literature apparently came under the spell of parallel elements found in the pagan religious syncretism of the time. Indeed, it is quite tempting to argue that in this respect the Hekhalot literature virtually betrays indebtedness to pagan and Christian (or gnosticistic) syncretism. If we take into account the fact that the Hekhalot mystics were in no way opposed to rabbinic Judaism, then the presence of such syncretistic elements can in no way be taken as a side issue which may be relegated to carelessness or chance. As Professor Scholem has pointed out, these mystics were learned Jews who greatly valued the study of the Law and advocated strict obedience to its rulings.⁴⁴ Thus the magical and theurgical elements in their writings can really be taken to imply a challenge to some of the established views on the nature of Judaism in Talmudic times. Having in mind our short observations concerning the theurgical elements in the Hekhalot literature, it seems quite safe to maintain that the last word in the characterization of that Jewry, or at least of certain parts in it, has not yet been said. Later on—in the Introduction to Part Two of our study—we shall have an opportunity to come back to this point. In addition, Sefer Ha-Razim confronts us with much graver questions than the ones involved in the discussion of the theurgical elements in the Hekhalot literature. At the moment suffice it to say, that the picture of the life and beliefs of the Jews living in the Talmudic times as we are used to viewing it from the commonly studied rabbinic sources, will have to be supplemented from less commonly studied sources among which we include the Hekhalot literature.

⁴³ G. Scholem, op. cit., pp. 65 ff.

However, there is nothing new or strange today in the recognition that one form or another of magic was known and practised in the circles of the Jewish sages of the Mishnaic and Talmudic era. There is a lot in the rabbinical sources that points to the fact that magic was not spread among the unlearned and vulgar people alone.⁴⁵ It may be argued that magic was almost universally taken for granted, and even practised by many, without the least concern for the fact that Scripture has fought a bitter fight against it and the pagan world-view that it entailed. No wonder, then, that theurgical practices found their way into Merkavah mysticism. Actually, where autohypnotic and autosuggestive experiences were cultivated, one could expect to find the suitable soil for the theurgical and magical seeds to grow. Having in mind these observations, Rashi's commentary to the story of the four who entered the Pardes is a most telling one: Rashi explains the words "entered the Pardes" by saying: "They ascended to heaven by means of a Name!"⁴⁶ The matter-of-fact way in which Rashi introduces his commentary to the story almost succeeds in diverting the attention from the theological problem involved. But when one gets behind his comment, one discovers a scenery rich in theurgic and magical prescriptions and practices.

⁴⁴ G. Scholem, op. cit., pp. 9-13. See also Appendix B, below p. 241f.

⁴⁵ Still relevant for this point is L. Blau, Das Altjüdische Zauberwesen, Budapest, 1898 (Republished in 1970 by Gregg).

⁴⁶ See above Chapter Two, n. 81.

Finally, it should be noticed that the theurgical means which we have just discussed were also applied in the cases of the conjuration of angels. Thus we hear in Ma'aseh Merkavah (paragraph 12, p. 109) that Arpedes,⁴⁷ the Angel of the Countenance, told Rabbi Yishmael that "he who wants to make use of this great secret (— of the Sar Torah) should... invoke⁴⁸ those three names, and I shall descend".⁴⁹ Similarly, seals were also used on such occasions: "Rabbi Yishmael said: I sealed myself with seven seals, when Padkeres, the Angel of the Countenance, descended" (paragraph 15, p. 109). We also have in this text a detailed description of how the mystic put on seven seals: one on his (right?) leg, one on his heart, one on his right arm and one on his left arm, one on the neck, one "to protect my body",⁵⁰ and one on the top of his head.⁵¹

B

All in all, the practices which we have discussed here almost amount to a magical ritual.⁵² Yet, we should be careful not to confuse magic with mysticism. In spite of all the similarities between the two, the Hekhalot mysticism cannot be classified in terms of magic or theurgy. There are magical and theurgical elements in Merkavah mysticism,

⁴⁷ The name of an angel Arpada, or Arpeda, is known from Sefer Ha-Razim, ed. Margalioth, p. 82, l. 27. It should be noticed that many of the names of the angels occurring in the Hekhalot literature do in themselves sound like magical names; and, in any event, those engaged in the study of etymologies may quickly find out that the names of angels are slippery ground.

⁴⁸ The verb here used is qara. The root QR'A is generally used in the Aramaic and Mandaic incantations in the sense of evil invocation against which one seeks protection. See, for instance, C. H. Gordon, "Aramaic Magical Bowls in the Istanbul and Baghdad Museums", Archiv Orientalni VI (1934), p. 324, Text B, line 6; idem, "Aramaic and Mandaic Magical Bowls", Archiv Orientalni IX (1937), p. 96, Text M, line 11.

⁴⁹ There follows a series of nine words whose meaning is not clear. In the next paragraph, mention is again made of "the three names which are said by the Angels of the Glory". Again nine unidentifiable words are given. In addition, this paragraph (13) mentions the "three letters which are uttered by the Hayyot when they see Archas (= Arche?), Lord God of Israel", and also the "three letters which the wheels of the (divine) chariot say when they sing their song to the Throne of the Glory".

⁵⁰ Apparently, this seal is put on the chest. See Song of Songs viii, 6.

⁵¹ See also paragraph 11, p. 108.

⁵² See further the comparative references in M. Margalioth, Sefer Ha-Razim, Tel-Aviv: 1966, p. 8 ff.

but Merkavah mysticism is neither a magical nor a theurgic experience. E. R. Dodds described theurgy as "magic applied to a religious purpose and resting on a supposed revelation of a religious character".⁵³ Dodds also remarked that "whereas vulgar magic used names and formulae of religious origin to profane ends, theurgy used the procedures of vulgar magic primarily to a religious end".⁵⁴ It should be noted that Dodds here uses the word magic in the sense applied to it in the Greek magical papyri, and not in the sense in which the nineteenth century anthropologists understood it, that is, as a rudimentary form of religion. In any event, practices known from popular magic infiltrated into the various forms of Merkavah mysticism, but this should not be taken to mean that Merkavah mysticism is a form of magic.

In addition, some of these magico-theurgic practices—and specifically ritual baths, seals and names—bear strong resemblance to practices and to the symbolism known from various gnostic writings.⁵⁵ It may thus be asked whether the occurrence of these practices in the Hekhalot literature is not also indicative of either a real gnostic influence on it, or, at least, of the existence of certain points of connection between the Hekhalot mysticism and gnostic beliefs and practices. As we know, it has been argued by Professor Scholem that the Hekhalot writings are a Jewish concomitant to gnosticism. The present writer, however, has expressed the view, that since these writings are basically mystical writings with no immediate redemptive claims, they are to be strictly distinguished from the gnostic concepts and writings which have an emphatic redemptive quality.⁵⁶ In this respect, one has to distinguish between certain eschatological hopes mentioned in the Hekhalot writings or attached to the mystical activity,⁵⁷ and the basic redemptive functions of gnosticism and its ⁵³ Op. cit., p. 291.

⁵⁴ Ibid. See further A. D. Nock, Essays on Religion and the Ancient World, Harvard University Press, 1972, vol. I, p. 189, n. 81.

⁵⁵ See W. Bousset, Die Himmelsreise der Seele, Reprint: Darmstadt, Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, (n.d.), pp. 5 ff. Bousset's arguments to the effect that the practices applied in ascension-experiences are to be viewed in the light of similar practices known from the Iranic religion are no more acceptable.

⁵⁶ Cf. Israel Oriental Studies III (1973), pp. 88 ff.

⁵⁷ There are clear eschatological passages in the Hekhalot writings and the most emphatic eschatological claim, in this respect, is attached to the study of the Shi'ur Qomab. See in Merkavah Shelemah, fol. 38b, where Rabbi 'Akiva is quoted as saying that an after-life is promised to everyone who knows the mystical dimensions of the divinity.

writings. While gnosticism by and large means a final escape from the bonds of the material, evil, world, the mysticism of the Merkavah presupposes that the mystic always returns from his celestial adventures to his body on earth. If he fails to do so, that is if he dies in the course of his experience, or as a result of it, this indicates that he did not "deserve to see the King in His beauty", as a common phrase in Hekhalot literature goes.⁵⁸

Moreover, the angels who try to stand in the way of the ascending mystic do not share the evil qualities of the Archons (the evil rulers of this world) who try to capture the soul of the redeemed person and to prevent it from ascending to Incorruptibility, or to the Source of Light. Although these angels in the Hekhalot literature—and in the rabbinic literature related to it—are sometimes referred to as 'angels of destruction', they are not in their essence opposed to the divine. On the contrary, they are zealous in their desire to keep God aloft and apart from any undeserving human being. It is only when God personally intervenes on behalf of the visionary, or when the appropriate seals are produced, that passage is granted to the ascending human being. Thus, the relevant material in the Hekhalot writings bears at its best only a formal resemblance to concepts and to practices known from gnosticism. However suggestive this resemblance may appear, it does not justify the virtual interpretation of Jewish Merkavah mysticism in terms of gnosticism. Admittedly, in following such an interpretation for a short time we gained a lot in our understanding of certain important details in Merkavah mysticism, but we should now be careful not to follow this interpretation in all directions. We always have to keep in mind that gnosticism was a religious phenomenon diametrically opposed to everything Jewish; in fact, the God of the Jews was considered by the gnostics an evil deity. If we keep this in mind, it becomes clear that the Jewish mystics, who were everything but downright heretics, avoided all conscious contacts with the gnostics, their concepts, their practices and their writings.⁵⁹

On the contrary, in recent years it has increasingly become evident that many of the gnostic writings were in one way or another influenced by Jewish thought and beliefs. Although the exact way these Jewish ideas reached gnosticism is still a riddle, one may assume that certain Jews who underwent conversion to gnosticism brought their knowledge along with them.⁶⁰ In addition, Christian writers who were familiar with Jewish writings could have served as literary intermediaries. In any event, it is clear today that a number of Jewish ideas and concepts found their way into gnosticism, and this in spite of the fact that gnosticism totally rejected Judaism. In this manner, we may, for example, understand the occurrence of two Merkavah passages in two of the gnostic writings: in the so-called "Die Schrift ohne Titel vom Ursprung der Welt"⁶¹ and in the "Hypostasis of the Archons".⁶² Both texts contain detailed descriptions of the creation of the world. The background of the descriptions is the biblical story in Genesis which is interpreted to contain the gnostic truth. Both treatises are strongly interrelated, and it seems that they derive from a third, common, source, which is no longer known to us.⁶³

⁵⁸ See S. Leiter, "Worthiness, Acclamation and Appointment: Some Rabbinic Terms", Proceedings of the American Academy for Jewish Research, Vol. XLI-XLII (1973-1974), pp. 143 ff.

⁵⁹ On this see further, D. Flusser, "Scholem's Recent Book on Merkavah Literature", The Journal of Jewish Studies XI (1960), 59-68.

We begin with the "Untitled Work on the Creation of the World". Its declared purpose is to show what had existed before Chaos came into being, what was the nature of that pre-existent entity and what happened to Chaos when it was shaped into the material world. Briefly, the theory developed in the book is that there had been an immense domain of light beneath which a veil (παχραπέτισμα) was spread. That veil created a shadow, and in that shadow Chaos came into being. Pistis, who is also called Sophia, and who came from above the veil, created a ruler over that Chaos. This ruler, or Archon, was called Yaldabaoth⁶⁴ and he was responsible for the creation of everything that came into being beneath that veil.

⁶⁰ See I. Gruenwald, "Jewish Sources for the Gnostic Texts from Nag Hammadi?", Proceedings of the Sixth World Congress for Jewish Studies, Jerusalem, 1977, pp. 45 ff. See also the curious statement made by Irenaeus, Adversus Haereses, I, xxiv,6, to the effect that the gnostics claim that they are not any longer Jews or Christians.

⁶¹ A. Böhlig and P. Labib, Die koptisch-gnostische Schrift ohne Titel aus Codex II von Nag-Hammadi, Berlin, Akademie-Verlag, 1962.

⁶² See B. Layton, "The Hypostasis of the Archons", Harvard Theological Review LXVII (1974), pp. 351 ff.; and R. A. Bullard, The Hypostasis of the Archons, Berlin, Walter de Gruyter, 1970. My quotations, however, are from Layton's English translation of the Coptic text.

⁶³ J. Doresse, The Secret Books of the Egyptian Gnostics, New York, The Viking Press, 1960, p. 163, assumes that "much of this treatise (= The Hypostasis of the Archons) is manifestly an abridgement of a certain Book of Norea".

⁶⁴ The name "Yaldabaoth" has caused difficulties and a number of theories were suggested for its explanation. See most recently G. Scholem, "Jaldabaoth

Among the things which he created were seven archangels, who possessed masculine and feminine qualities and names, and to whom he allocated heavens. These heavens contained, among other things, thrones, temples and chariots (150,11 ff.). When Yaldabaoth saw all the magnificence of his creation, he boasted and declared himself to be the only God (151,12). Pistis, who heard this blasphemy, condemned Yaldabaoth and told him that a 'Son of Light' would come and destroy him and all his Creations. However, Sabaoth, one of the offspring of Yaldabaoth, heard the voice of Pistis, praised her and joined her in her condemnation of his father and mother. As a reward Pistis stretched out her finger and poured over him Light. Consequently, Sabaoth was endowed with great power and became the Lord of all the Powers (152,9). He loathed all his kinsfolk, and they in turn waged war against him in the seven heavens. Pistis, who saw what was going on, sent seven archangels to rescue Sabaoth and they snatched him up to the seventh heaven. There, she erected for him a heavenly kingdom (152,23). In addition, Pistis gave him the Place of Rest (τόπος ἀνάπαυσις) for his repentance (μετάνοια). She also brought to him her daughter Zoe so that she might teach him about all that existed in the Ogdoad, that is, in the eighth heaven (152,26 ff.). Then Sabaoth, who was very powerful indeed, made for himself a dwelling-place which was big and wonderful. In fact, this dwelling-place was even bigger than its counterparts in the other heavens (152,31-35). In front (!) of that dwelling-place he created a Reconsidered", in: Mélanges d'Histoire des Religions offerts à Henri-Charles Puech (1974), pp. 405-421. Scholem writes (p. 418): "... Jaldabaoth is a composite of yald - abaoth. I propose that it owes its invention to a heretical Jew familiar with Aramaic, the Hebrew Bible and the literature or practice of the magicians, a Jew who, in the context of the Ophitic myth, created it as a secret name of Samael". The element Yald designates, according to Scholem, not the son but the begetter (p. 419), and the element abaoth "originated as an abridged form, or substitute, of Sabaoth" (p. 420). Scholem's explanation is the best so far, though it may be argued that the 'yald'-element actually conveys Yaldabaoth's double role as the one begotten (by Pistis Sophia, and hence called in the Untitled Work γενέστωρ) and the one who begets! That in the explanation of the alleged etymology of the name Yaldabaoth one should not overlook his status as the begotten one becomes evident from the Untitled Work 148,1 ff. (p. 40/1 f.) where among the things mentioned as Yaldabaoth's roles, nothing is said of his role as the one who begets. It is here that Pistis Sophia calls him by the name of γενέστωρ, that is "child", or in Hebrew Yeled. Only later on does the Archon discover in himself the desire to create and to beget. Then the shift occurs from the status of the one begotten to the one who begets, or in Aramaic: Yalda. If our explanation is correct, then the etymology of the first element in the name actually derives both from Hebrew and from Aramaic.

big throne which was placed on a chariot (ἄρμα = Merkavah!). The chariot had four faces (πρόσωπον), and it was called Cherubin. Now, the Cherubin had four forms (μορφῆς), one on each of its four corners: lion forms (!) calf forms, human forms, and eagle forms. The number of all the forms thus amounted to sixty-four. Before the throne stood seven archangels. Sabaoth himself was the eighth; thus all the forms amounted to seventy-two, which the Untitled Work assumes is the number which corresponds to the number of the nations of the world.

Before we go on with the description of the installment scene in the Untitled Work, a few remarks are in place concerning the preceding part of the narrative. To begin with, the description of Sabaoth's throne is quite peculiar and causes some difficulties, the main one being how exactly the author conceived of the faces of the "Forms"? He says that each of the four corners of the throne, called "Cherubin", had eight forms, that is, the four forms—the lion, the calf, the human form, and the eagle—which were all placed at every corner had two faces each. This is quite remarkable in itself, and when we multiply the eight faces by four (= corners) we get only thirty two faces, and not sixty four, as the author himself counts (153,9). Elsewhere, in Hekhalot Zutreti (in: Merkavah Shelemah 7a) we read that each of the Holy Creatures in the divine chariot had four faces, and since there were four Creatures at every corner of the throne there were all in all sixty four faces (4 Creatures $\times$ 4 faces $\times$ 4 corners = 64!). A similar calculation is preserved in the Targum to Ezekiel i,6: every creature had four faces, and there were four creatures at every corner, so that the sum total of the faces was sixty four. Evidently, the tradition preserved in the Untitled Work is dependent on such Merkavah-speculations, and it may be argued that its details should be emended in order to fit the Merkavah material known from Hekhalot Zutreti and the Targum to Ezekiel. As for the order in which the "Forms" are enumerated in the Untitled Work, it should be noticed that it preserves the order given in Revelation iv,7.

Another point which deserves attention is the instruction given by Zoe⁶⁵ concerning all that is in the Ogdoad. Though nothing explicit is said in the text about the contents of Zoe's teachings and the ⁶⁵ In 154,6, however, it is Pistis Sophia herself who is instructing Sabaoth. Yet, from the parallel passage in the Hypostasis of the Archons, it becomes evident that Zoe, and not Pistis Sophia, instructs Sabaoth. See also the Untitled Work 155,4.

Ogdoad, we may conclude that since the Ogdoad represents the domain of light of the Imperishability, the teaching about it is of a theosophical nature, and may also include the secrets of redemption. The idea, that whatever belongs to the Ogdoad is top secret is also found in the Jewish Merkavah speculations. In Bavli Hagigah 12b a detailed description is given of the seven heavens and what they contain. Then (13a, top) the Gemārā quotes Rabbi 'Aḥa bar Ya'aqov's question to the effect that there is yet another, eighth heaven, which is above the heads of the Hayyot. The question refers to Ezekiel i,22 ff., where the prophet sees a firmament stretched above the heads of the Holy Creatures. The response given in the Gemārā is: "Till this place (= the seventh heaven) you may discourse, from here onwards (= the eighth heaven) you have no permission to discourse". The Gemārā also refers the student to Ben-Sira iii,21-22 which is taken to support the idea. However, it should be noticed that while the Gemārā forbids any speculations of the eighth heaven, the Untitled Work maintains that knowledge of the Ogdoad was granted to Sabaoth. Now, in some respects, Sabaoth in the Untitled Work reminds one of the fate of Enoch who was translated to heaven, transformed into the angel Metatron, and thus received all kinds of honours and revelations of secrets.⁶⁶ Both Enoch-Metatron and Sabaoth enjoyed exceptional fates, yet the different contexts of their experiences forbid us from pushing their points of resemblance beyond their formal aspects.

The Merkavah account in the Untitled Work ends with the description of how Sabaoth created above that throne a host of angelic beings (153,16 ff.). One class of the angels was called "Seraphim". Their form was that of serpents⁶⁷ and they were always praising Sabaoth.⁶⁸ Sabaoth also created a first-born one called "Israel", which in a common etymology of the time⁶⁹ was taken to designate "the man ⁶⁶ See mainly 3 Enoch.

⁶⁷ This is a rather peculiar—yet typically gnostic—interpretation of Numbers xxi,6. See also next note. The Coptic text here uses the Greek word δράκων. In Jewish laws of idolatry, the dragon-form received special attention: Mishnah 'Avodah Zarah iii,3. According to Talmud Yerushalmi (fol. 42d), a dragon has spikes growing out of his neck. See further Bavli 'Avodah Zarah 43a.

⁶⁸ See Isaiah vi,2-3 in comparison to xiv,29 and xxx,6. It is still an open question as to what made Isaiah call the holy angels by a word he uses also for dragons.

⁶⁹ See J. G. Kahn, "Israel - Videns Deum", (in Hebrew), Tarbiz XL (1971), pp. 285-292. Kahn (= Y. Cohen-Yashar), however, was not aware of the existence of the gnostic parallels, as given by A. Böhlig in his notes, p. 54. See also J. Z. Smith, "The Prayer of Joseph", in: Religions in Antiquity, ed. J. Neusner, Leiden, E. J. Brill, 1968, pp. 262-268.

who sees God".⁷⁰ It is noteworthy that the People of Israel receive in this text a place of honour among the celestial beings. Yet, whatever their status, they still belong to the unredeemed world of the Archons. They are in the hosts of the angels serving Sabaoth, and Sabaoth, to be sure, though he had been transferred to the seventh heaven, did not reach the Domain of Light of the Imperishability. Concerning that Domain, he received only oral instruction. In addition to these angelic beings, Sabaoth created another being called "Jesus Christ", who was like the saviour who was in the Ogdoad. This "Jesus Christ" had a special throne on the right of the throne of Sabaoth,⁷¹ while on its left was sitting the virgin, which represented the holy spirit of Christian theology. Before Sabaoth were also standing seven other virgins in whose hands were zithers, psalteries and trumpets. Finally, Sabaoth himself is described as sitting on a Throne of Light⁷² which was surrounded by a great cloud. This description of the throne is familiar from Jewish sources.⁷³

As already mentioned before, a similar description of the installment of Sabaoth in the seventh heaven is found in another gnostic text — The Hypostasis of the Archons. There, the description is part of the instruction of Eleleth to Norea,⁷⁴ after she had resisted the ⁷⁰ At the end of Midrash Conen (in A. Jellinek, Bet ha-Midrash, vol. II, p. 39) mention is made of one Creature (Hayyah), called "Yisrael", and which stands in the middle of the firmament and says praises to God. In all likelihood, this Creature is meant to be a mystical representation of the People of Israel in heaven.

⁷¹ This is in line with the Christian interpretation of Psalm cx,1.

⁷² A literal translation of the Coptic text here reads: upon a throne in the light in a great cloud. As Professor Bentley Layton observed in an English translation of these pages which he has kindly prepared for me, the text seems to be corrupt. Layton suggests to read "a luminous throne" in a great cloud! "A luminous throne" is nothing but the translation of the Hebrew Kisse Ha-Kavod, the Throne of (the) Glory.

⁷³ See Mechilta d'Rabbi Ismael to Exodus xx,18 (p. 238).—The idea that God is covered from the sight of men and angels by a cloud is also known from a so-called Jewish Orphic poem from the second or third century B.C.E. The poem was preserved in two versions, which were recently re-discussed in Y. Gutman, The Beginnings of Jewish-Hellenistic Literature (in Hebrew), Jerusalem, Bialik Institute, 1958, pp. 153 ff. In the first version preserved in Cobort. ad. gent., attributed to Justin Martyr, God's invisibility is accounted for by the cloud which covers him. And in the version attributed to Aristobulus (quoted in Eusebius, Præparatio Evangelica XIII,12) God is hidden from the sight of men by "a tenfold mist" (νέφος . . . δεκάπτυχον). The so-called tenfold mist most likely corresponds to the ten heavens known by the Pythagoreans.—For the Palestinian nomenclature which refers to the fourth heaven by the name of 'Arafel (νέφος), see my edition of Re'uyot Yehezkel, p. 118.

⁷⁴ For the studies dealing with the figure of Norea see B. Layton, art. cit., p. 388.

temptation of the Archons to lead her astray. In its form and content, the description there is an abridgement of the source from which it drew.⁷⁵ In any event, as becomes clear from a number of differences between the two narratives, the account of the installment of Sabaoth in The Hypostasis of the Archons does not derive from its counterpart in the Untitled Work. For instance, in contradistinction to the Untitled Work, where to the left of Sabaoth's throne one can find the Virgin of the Holy Spirit, The Hypostasis of the Archons reports that on the left of the throne the Angel of Wrath was placed. Thus, one finds Unrighteousness occupying the left of what may be called the sub-Ogdoadian Deity, a fact which implies a symbolism that in a sense draws from the writings of Qumran, and which later on was a key notion in the Kabbalah.⁷⁶ Since Sabaoth, in spite of his substantial prominence over the other Archons, still occupies the place which is beneath the veil that separates between the Above and the Below, he cannot fully equal the qualities of the God of the Jews in Jewish thought. The degraded Sabaoth here is a gnostic concept and he belongs to the inferior world of the Archons. Thus, even in the conceptual framework of The Hypostasis of the Archons, the existence of the Angel of Wrath in the realm of the seventh heaven next to Sabaoth cannot be viewed in such radical dualistic terms as one is used to consider evil in gnostic thought. It has to be noticed too that in the Untitled Work (154,11 ff.) Pistis Sophia places Sabaoth on her right while the Archigenetor (= Yaldabaoth) is called to occupy a place on her left. Thus, both books conceive of evil as being in the vicinity of a divine or semi-divine being. This not only emphasizes the reality of its existence, but also, and even more so, makes it clear that however rebellious the powers of evil may appear, they are still under the control of the supreme divinity. Thus, we once again realize that dualistic religious systems may nonetheless be monistic at their very heart.⁷⁷

⁷⁵ See above n. 63.

⁷⁶ In the Untitled Work 154,12 ff. Pistis Sophia is said to call Sabaoth to her right and the Archigenetor (= Yaldabaoth) to her left, thus forming a cosmic scheme of righteousness versus unrighteousness. This division comes very close to the one portrayed in the Qumran Rule of the Community (1 Q S), III,13 ff. See G. Scholem, "Gut und Böse in der Kabbalah", in Von der mystischen Gestalt der Gottheit, Zurich, Rhein Verlag, 1962, pp. 49 ff.—Professor Scholem called my attention to Masekhet Hekhalot, in Bet ha-Midrash, vol. II, p. 46, where life and death are placed to the right and left of God respectively.

⁷⁷ I have discussed this issue in Israel Oriental Studies III, (1973), pp. 77 ff.

We have gone into some detail in our presentation of certain Merkavah-passages in two gnostic writings so as to suggest that just as a number of gnostic elements found their way into Merkavah mysticism so did also certain Merkavah elements find their way into gnosticism. A comparative study of Merkavah mysticism and gnosticism will certainly render important results, one of which will prevent us from overdoing our job by interpreting the one phenomenon in terms of the other. The points of connection between the two can tell us a lot about their own spirit and of the character of the syncretism of the first centuries of the Christian Era. Speaking about "Syncretism", the term can mean many things, yet here it is understood to imply the transference and reception of religious beliefs and practices. The degree of receptivity which some Jewish circles showed to ideas originating from pagan sources is still one of the most bewildering problems which the student of the Judaism of the Talmudic period faces. It will in no way ease the problem if we assume that some Jewish circles timidly and carelessly collected whatever they found in the international market of religions. But it seems equally true to maintain that once foreign ideas had found their way into Judaism they were not—or even could not be—easily swept under the carpet. Although one may argue that in certain cases the Jews were not fully aware of the real qualities—and of the imminent dangers—of the beliefs and practices which they adopted, this argument can hardly explain the whole of the truth. In most cases, however, the impression one gets is that those people were attracted by complex pictures even when these pictures were composed of the most heterogeneous elements. The artificial combination of various and sometimes even conflicting religious elements was the fashion of the day, and if this was believed to enrich one's religious experience, the question of the cost was not raised. On the contrary, the gain appeared to be enormous, and people seem to have been sure that nothing was lost in their own integrity. Thus gnosticism could refer to the Jewish Scripture and "discover" there its own cosmology, while the Jewish mystics partook of rites and practices that grew on the soil of magic and gnosticism. Nonetheless, neither side believed that it lost by this anything of its own identity. On the contrary, new sources opened new directions and this in turn resulted in deepening the experience.

C

In the previous section, we discussed some problems in connection with the relationship between gnosticism and Merkavah mysticism. On the whole, it must be remarked that gnosticism owes much more to Judaism than vice versa. In fact, there is very little in Judaism that was inspired—even negatively so—by gnosticism. The various sayings, for instance, refuting the two powers (Shte'i Reshuyot) doctrine need not necessarily be an explicitly anti-gnostic theologoumenon. As for the theurgical elements in Hekhalot mysticism, it may be argued that they were so common and widely spread in those days that their attribution to gnosticism alone cannot be conclusively proved.

In this section we shall make some additional remarks about the techniques of the ascension, both in apocalyptic and in Merkavah mysticism. In apocalyptic literature we know of at least three kinds of ascensions. The most common description is that of an ascension on clouds in the course of a storm. Thus we find in 1 Enoch xiv,8-9 the following description: "And the vision was shown to me thus: Behold, in the vision clouds invited me and a mist summoned me and the course of the stars and the lightnings sped and hastened me, and the winds in the vision caused me to fly and lifted me upward, and bore me into heaven".⁷⁸ No doubt, the description takes after its model, the ascension of Elijah (2 Kings ii.11), but it should be noticed that the visionary here clearly distinguishes between reality (his sleep) and what he saw in his dream-vision (his ascension). Elijah's ascension also left its traces on the description of three other ascensions: on 1 Enoch lxx,2 ("And he was raised aloft on the chariots of the wind"); on 1 Enoch xxxix,3 ("and in those days a whirlwind carried me off from the earth") and on lii,1 ("... I had been carried off in a whirlwind"). Although in the last instances no dream is explicitly mentioned, one may assume that the manner in which the ascension is described in 1 Enoch xiv,8-9 still holds true in the other cases too. In 2 Enoch iii, however, the visionary is described as being raised on the wings of two angels.⁷⁹ In like manner, as we al-

⁷⁸ Compare the description of the ascension of Moses in Pesikta Rabbati (ed. Friedmann, 96b): "When Moses was about to ascend to heaven, a cloud came and prostrated itself before him. However, Moses did not know whether to ride on it or to hold it, so the cloud opened and Moses entered ... and the cloud carried him and he walked in the heaven".

⁷⁹ See also 1 Enoch lxxxvii,2-3: "And I saw in vision, and behold there came ready saw in the Apocalypse of Abraham, both the visionary and his guiding angel were raised to heaven on the wings of a bird. In Greek Baruch ii,1 and in the Ascension of Isaiah vii,2, it is simply said that an angel carried the visionaries to heaven. In Testament Levi ii,6-7 and in Revelation iv,1-2, it appears that the visionary did not need any assistance in his ascent. Yet, the expression "and I was there in spirit" (Revelation iv,2) apparently was a technical term used to designate experiences which the visionary saw in a trance.⁸⁰

More elaborate, however, are the details given about the ascensions in the Hekhalot literature. A recurring image in Hekhalot Rabbati is the ladder which the mystic is said to use as a means for his ascension. Thus, we read that the Merkavah mystic is like "a man who has a ladder in his home which he ascends and descends, and nobody can interfere with what he does" (xiii,2; xx,3). In yet another place, mention is made of a "heavenly ladder which stands on earth and reaches up to the right leg of the Throne of Glory" (xiv,1). The idea behind this description evidently is Jacob's ladder (Genesis xxviii,12), though the ones climbing it up and down were the angels.⁸¹ In one late Hekhalot fragment,⁸² we find that the angels climb out of the bath they take in the rivers of fire by help of a "ladder of fire". Another ladder is mentioned in connection with the souls of the righteous ones which are said to climb that ladder in the celestial garden of Eden.⁸³ Finally, a ladder with seven rungs (κλίμαξ ἑπτάπυλος), which symbolizes the ascent of the soul through the seven gates of the heaven, is known from the temples of Mithra.⁸⁴

In several instances in the Hekhalot literature, various kinds of forth from heaven beings who were like white men ... and those three that had last come forth grasped me by my hand and took me up ..."

⁸⁰ See Charles's Commentary ad loc.

⁸¹ See A. A. Altman, "The Ladder of Ascension", Studies in Mysticism and Religion Presented to G. G. Scholem, p. 1 ff. Altman has brought most of the relevant material from early Jewish mysticism. See further Bavli Sotah 35a: "... if Moses is to tell us to make ladders and to ascend to heaven will we not obey him? ...". See also, E. R. Goodenough, Jewish Symbols in the Greco-Roman Period, vol. VIII (1958), pp. 148-157. See also the next three notes.

⁸² In A. Jellinek, Bet-ha-Midrash, vol. III, p. 162. See also S. A. Wertheimer, Batei Midrashot, vol. I, p. 46.

⁸³ A. Jellinek, Bet ha-Midrash, vol. II, p. 28.

⁸⁴ See A. Dieterich, Eine Mithrasliturgie, Reprint: Darmstadt, Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1966, pp. 183-184. F. Cumont, Die Mysterien des Mithra, Reprint: Darmstadt, Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1963, p. 123. All this material escaped the eyes of J. Danielou, Théologie du Judéo-Christianisme, Tournai, 1958, pp. 131-138, where he discussed the subject of L'échelle Cosmique.

wagons or carriages are mentioned. In one instance, Hekhalot Rabbati xviii,5-6, we read that Qazpiel, one of the angels who stands at the gate of the sixth palace, "brings you a whirlwind, and he places you in a wagon of light".⁸⁵ This wagon is used in the course of the passage from the sixth to the seventh Hekhal.⁸⁶ In 3 Enoch vi we read of Enoch's translation with the help of 'Anafiel⁸⁷ in a carriage of fire.⁸⁸ Once again, we must notice that the idea of the wagon or carriage is inspired by the description of the ascent of Elijah (2 Kings ii,11), though it should be equally noticed that in Plato's Phaedrus too the soul is described as ascending to heaven in a chariot. Generally, however, the passage from one heavenly palace to the other is performed with the help of two angels who accompany the mystic on both his sides. New accompanying angels take the place of the former ones in every new palace. In two cases, we even find that the mystic is dragged on his knees till he reaches the Throne of Glory.⁸⁹

To end this general introduction to the Hekhalot literature, two additional characteristics will be pointed out. We have seen in the previous chapter that the Ma'aseh Merkavah speculations in rabbinic circles were subject to severe restrictions regarding the number of those allowed to participate in the study and the manner in which the discourse on the Merkavah should be introduced. Briefly, we saw that the Merkavah material could be studied only in the presence of one student, provided that he was wise and able to understand by himself. At first, it was the student who had to open the discourse, and only later permission was granted to the teacher to introduce the discourse by suggesting the Rashei Pesuqin or Rashei Peraqim.⁹⁰

⁸⁵ See also A. Dieterich, op. cit., p. 183-184; G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 18,82. See further the expression "carriages of gold" in Bavli Kidushin 76b.

⁸⁶ The details of this stage in the mystical ascent are given in Hekhalot Rabbati, chh. xix-xxiii.

⁸⁷ In Hekhalot Rabbati xxii,4 ff. 'Anafiel is described as a most distinguished angel, and some of his extraordinary qualities actually remind of some of the qualities of Metatron.

⁸⁸ See further the so-called Apocalypsis Mosis xxxiii, where Adam's body is described to be carried up to heaven after his death in a chariot of light borne by four eagles. In the gnostic Letter of James it is said that when the revelations have come to an end Christ rises to Heaven in a Chariot of Pneuma: see G. Quispel, "The Jung Codex and its Significance", in: Gnostic Studies I, Istanbul, 1974, p. 8.

⁸⁹ See Hekhalot Rabbati, iii,1 and the Hekhalot text published in Tarbiz XXXVIII (1969), p. 359, ll. 30 ff.

⁹⁰ Only after the completion of Chapter Three has G. A. Wewers's book, Geheimnis und Geheimhaltung im rabbinischen Judentum, Berlin, Walter de Gruyter,

In the Hekhalot writings, however, no specific demand for secrecy is included, and even contrary to the tone struck in Jewish apocalyptic, there is no claim for the exclusiveness of the revelation. What one does repeatedly hear in the Hekhalot writings are the details of the extraordinary dangers which the mystics have to overcome. Only the most deserving ones will come out safely from the series of ordeals and tests which they have to undergo. The imminent dangers of the Ma'aseh Merkavah are already stressed in the discussions found in both Talmuds on the first Mishnah of Tractate Hagigah. In the Hekhalot writings, the danger-motif comes even more emphatically to the fore, evidently in order to prevent the undeserving from realizing the experiences described. The theurgic elements in these writings also belong to this aspect of that literature. In fact, the mystic is taught all these theurgic practices and means in order to be able to overcome the dangers which he has to encounter in the course of his mystical experience. Only the knowledge of their correct application is to guarantee him physical and psychical safety.

But, it is interesting to notice that the Hekhalot writings do not declare these theurgic means to be secret. In contrast to the reserve felt in the pages of the Talmuds with respect to everything relevant to the subject, the Hekhalot writings do not even refrain from discussing openly the theurgic means which are to be used in every case. No secrecy is demanded from the initiate, and although we may assume that such secrecy was elementary, one still remains puzzled by the outright manner in which the material is displayed. The fact that people were aware of the extreme dangers involved in such experiences did not guarantee that no leak will be found in the wall of secrecy. Dangerous experiences only arouse the curiosity of people, and in many cases nothing can stop them from trying out the mystical experiences described.⁹¹

It is hardly conceivable that those who put the Hekhalot tractates into writing were not aware of the dangers involved in putting these writings before the ignorant public. And yet they did so. Thus, the question arises if we have to interpret this fact as indicating that the 1975, reached me. Unfortunately Wewers' discussion does not add anything substantial to our understanding of the material he handles. Although he touches some of the important problems, his original contribution is quite hypothetical. He could have done better had he made use of the Hekhalot literature etc. In addition, Wewers was not aware of a number of studies published in recent years and reference to which could have opened his eyes in many essential points.

⁹¹ See in Tarbiz XXXVIII (1969), p. 358.

process of putting the Hekhalot literature into writing took place only after the Hekhalot mysticism had become a memory of the past and decayed so-to-speak into a mere literary phenomenon?

There is very little, if anything at all, in the Hekhalot literature that may justify its classification as esoteric, at least not in the sense in which esotericism was applied in Jewish apocalyptic. In our discussion of Jewish apocalyptic, it was pointed out that its esoteric quality was mainly lying in its explicit or implicit claim that what had been revealed to the visionary in many cases was an exclusive angelic revelation, or at least some kind of heavenly inspiration. Although secrets are sometimes referred to in the Hekhalot literature, it cannot, thus, be defined as esoteric. The Hekhalot writings did not claim secrecy for themselves, and what was assumingly in them that could prevent their contents from being misused were the dangers described therein. In a sense the description of the details of these dangers can be much more effective in restraining people from misapplying the information gained from the Hekhalot literature than the mere formal demand to keep its contents secret.

PART TWO

INTRODUCTION

As indicated before, the second part of our book contains detailed introductions to the various Hekhalot writings we possess. The first part of the book was devoted to an analysis of some of the major problems involved in the study of the development of the Merkavah tradition in the time of the Mishnah and Talmud. After an attempt had been made to qualify the esoteric features of Jewish apocalyptic (Chapter One), we passed on to examine the place and nature of the Merkavah tradition incorporated in that literature. It was seen that some of the apocalyptic books contain detailed Merkavah visions which follow the Merkavah tradition found in books like Ezekiel, Isaiah and Daniel (Chapter Two). In Chapter Three the attitude of the rabbinical circles to the Merkavah material was examined. Finally, in Chapter Four, a general introduction to the Hekhalot writings was presented.

However, two major problems still have to be discussed in a more detailed manner. The first one is the question of the continuity of the Merkavah tradition. It has been shown that there existed at least a thematic continuity between the so-called Merkavah tradition in Scripture and the one in apocalyptic literature. There is even a thematic continuity which can be traced from apocalyptic literature on the one hand to the Merkavah material in rabbinical literature and to the Hekhalot writings on the other hand. The question now arises as to whether a historical continuity can be pointed out in addition to this thematic continuity. The answer to this question is particularly difficult for a number of reasons: First, we lack almost all the literary documents which were created between the fifth century B.C.E., that is the days of the last prophets, and the middle of the third century B.C.E., that is the early hellenistic period. This is a long period of silence, and doubtlessly in that period all the foundations were laid for the creation of the Jewish hellenistic literature. Second, we lack any direct evidence that the circles which produced the apocalyptic corpus of writings were historically related to those circles that engaged in Merkavah speculations and experiences from the Tannaitic times onwards. Third, no conclusive proof has yet been found that the Tannaim and the Amoraim were directly involved in the creation of the Hekhalot writings. Although the existence of alleged points of connection between all these circles can be concluded from the thematic affinities which the writings under discussion display, no direct proof has yet been found for the existence of real historical connections between them.

However, when we come to the hellenistic period, we find that at least one of its major works contains a so-called Merkavah vision. The work we have in mind is the play written by Ezekiel, the Tragedian, and which describes events connected with the Exodus from Egypt.¹ Among other things, it contains a dream-vision which Moses experienced when he was wandering with the flocks of Jethro in the desert. In his vision, Moses saw himself on the top of Mount Sinai, and there he saw a high throne which reached to the heaven. On the throne was sitting someone who looked like a man wearing a crown on his head and holding a sceptre in his left hand. With his right hand, the figure on the throne gestured to Moses to come forward and to approach the throne. When Moses stood near the throne the being sitting on it gave him the crown² and the sceptre, and

¹ Y. Gutman, The Beginnings of Jewish-Hellenistic Literature (in Hebrew), vol. II, Jerusalem, Bialik Institute, 1963, pp. 66-69, argues that Ezekiel was a citizen of Berenice in Cyrenaica, and lived there in the first century B.C.E. However, M. Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism, Philadelphia, Fortress Press, 1974, vol. I, p. 109, vol. II, p. 109, n. 396, represents the more common view that Ezekiel, the Tragedian, lived in Alexandria in the second century B.C.E. It should be remarked that Gutman's discussion of Ezekiel and his work contains a number of rather hypothetical arguments. For example, in his interpretation of the vision of Moses on Mount Sinai, Gutman argues that the man whom Moses saw sitting on the throne was no divine figure, but a real man. The reason for this Gutman finds in the word φῶς used by Ezekiel and which Gutman (probably following a remark in Liddell & Scott s.v. φῶς III) takes to be used only "opp. a god". But had Ezekiel used the word ἄνθρωπος, he would not have changed matters in any substantial way. It is only in the Septuaginta and in the New Testament that ἄνθρωπος received its divine or messianic connotations! For the Greek text of Ezechielus Tragicus, see A.-M. Denis, Fragmenta Pseudepigraphorum quae Supersunt Graeca, Leiden, Brill, 1970, pp. 210-216.

² The idea of a crown which was given to Moses, is several times repeated in Jewish literature. It complements, most probably, the description of the skin of his face, which was reported to be shining (Exodus xxxiv, 29 ff.). The most striking parallel to Ezekiel Tragicus is the Shabbat morning service in which we find that God gave to Moses "a crown of glory [Kelil Tif'eret] when he stood before You on Mount Sinai". See further J. Liver, The House of David (in Hebrew), Jerusalem, Magnes Press, 1959, p. 100-101, who pointed out the various functions of the 'Atarah (στέφανος) in the ancient Near East. In the Qumran writings, we find that the members of the sect were to be endowed with a "crown of glory" (Kelil Kavod) as a sign of their eschatological blessing. See 1 QS IV, 7; 1 QH IX, 25. See further Bavli Berakhot 17a where the righteous are described in the world to come as sitting in the presence of God with crowns ('Atarot) pointed to him to take his seat on the big throne. Then the 'man' left the throne, and Moses had from above a vision of the whole earth.³ Finally, Moses says that he saw the hosts of the heavenly stars falling down on their knees before him,⁴ and then marching past his throne. The vision obviously implied the initiation of Moses into the heavenly realms and his nomination to his kingly office. However, it is quite doubtful whether real deification was also implied by it. Deification, as we know, was generally believed to occur only after the hero's death and not during his lifetime. Thus, one may see in the vision a description of the enthronement of Moses as viewed within a mystical, or semi-mystical, framework.⁵

In spite of its obvious mystical setting, the vision described in the scene is certainly no Merkavah vision in the full sense of the term, and it is noteworthy that no angels are described in it.⁶ Yet, it is also noteworthy that a Jewish drama written in Greek contains such a vision. This fact is evidently telling something about the public for which the play was written: they apparently expected such a scene or at least found nothing strange in its inclusion. Admittedly, this scene has a tremendous dramatic effect, but it also betrays the fact that people in Alexandria were familiar with such experiences and that they clearly understood what such experiences implied. If so, we may assume that mystical, or semi-mystical, experiences were part of the intellectual milieu of the Jewish-hellenistic world.⁷ on their heads. The idea became a current one in Christian theology and is well known from Christian iconography. Professor Morton Smith drew my attention to the fact that the "crowns" were really diadems, that is bands tied around the head, which were the Greco-Roman symbol of royalty.

³ See Y. Gutman, op. cit., pp. 43-46. This part of the dream could have been the model for the writer of the Apocalypse of Abraham xix.

⁴ The reference here most certainly is to Joseph's dream in Genesis xxxvii,9. See also Nehemiah ix,6, where the stars are said to be worshipping God in a similar manner.

⁵ For Deification after death, see E. Rohde, Psyche, New York, Harcourt, Brace & Co., 1925, pp. 524 ff.—For the motif of the enthronement, see G. Widengren, "Iran and Israel in Parthian Times with Special Regard to the Ethiopic Book of Enoch", in: Religious Syncretism in Antiquity, ed. Birger A. Pearson, Missoula, Montana, Scholars Press, 1975, p. 126 f. Widengren, who was unaware of Ezekiel the Tragedian, suggests that Indo-Iranian as well as ancient Near-Eastern material was the background of the kind of enthronement described in 1 Enoch lxxi.

⁶ However, the absence of angels from the vision cannot be attributed with certainty to polemical motivations.

⁷ See M. P. Nilsson, Greek Piety, Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1948, pp. 124 ff., though some of Nilsson's generalizations, particularly those concerning gnos-

This conclusion may also be inferred from Philo, De Vita Mosis, 158 where Moses is described as entering "into the darkness where God was, that is into the unseen, invisible, incorporeal and archetypal essence of existing things".⁸ The reference here is to Exodus xx,21, which in rabbinical literature too was interpreted as implying a special mystical experience.⁹ To be sure, what Philo describes in his writings is no Merkavah vision, but it points to a kind of sensibility that in others could, and actually did, induce a Merkavah-imagery. Thus, to come back to the scene in Ezekiel the Tragedian, we hear that Moses saw himself elevated to see God on His throne, a vision that evidently draws its imagery from its counterpart in Isaiah vi. Yet, there are already some details in this vision that go beyond and differ from the material presented in Isaiah vi. We have already mentioned the fact that unlike the vision which Isaiah saw the being sitting on the throne offered to Moses his crown, sceptre and very throne. In addition, it should be noticed that unlike Isaiah vi,1, the scene in Ezekiel's tragedy does not take place in a palace but on the summit of Mount Sinai.¹⁰ Finally, as we already observed, in contradistinction to Isaiah no angels were present on the scene. What in later apocalyptic and Merkavah literature—as already in Isaiah and Ezekiel—was the function of the angels was here performed by the heavenly stars. Nevertheless, all the differences notwithstanding, we may see in the scene in the Tragedy of Ezekiel a live link in the development of the Merkavah tradition between Scripture and apocalyptic literature. Thus, the historical continuity of that tradition ticism, cannot be accepted without criticism. More important, however, for our purposes is the chapter "The Mystic Moses" in E. R. Goodenough, By Light, Light, Amsterdam, Philo Press, 1969, pp. 199-234. This is not to say that the present writer agrees with Goodenough's thesis regarding the existence of a fully developed Jewish hellenistic mystery religion.

⁸ Similarly in De Mutatione Nominum, 7: "So Moses the explorer of nature which lies beyond our vision, Moses who, as the divine oracles tell us, entered into the darkness by which figure they indicate existence invisible and incorporeal, searched everywhere and into everything in his desire to see clearly and plainly Him, the object of our much yearning, Who is good".

⁹ See Mechilta d'Rabbi Ismael, p. 238. See further Goodenough, op. cit., pp. 212 ff.

¹⁰ Compare Mechilta d'Rabbi Ismael, pp. 216 & 238 (= Bavli Sukkah 5a) where it becomes clear that the virtual descent of the Kavod on Mount Sinai, as also the ascent of Moses, became a controversial subject in Tannaitic literature.—The picture of the divine throne which is placed on the summit of mountains is a familiar one in antiquity; see J. Maier, Vom Kultus zur Gnosis, Salzburg, Otto Müller Verlag, 1964, pp. 97 ff.

at least up to apocalyptic literature is more clearly attested to than has hitherto been assumed. In any event, the inclusion of Merkavah material in Jewish apocalyptic is now more solidly accounted for: it is not merely the natural interest in things heavenly which explains the presence of this material in that literature, but also an allegedly live tradition which sought soil for its growth.

The second question to which attention must be given here is: How widespread the Merkavah tradition really was. We have already seen that there were various degrees of secrecy which restricted the discourse in the matters of the Merkavah to a small and highly qualified number of students. No wonder, then, that only few, but choice ones, enjoyed acquaintance with the subject. We saw too that the kind of experiences which the Hekhalot writings describe was connected with the knowledge of practices that verged on magic and theurgy. Magic and theurgy evidently were branches of knowledge and ritual that could hardly be tolerated in so-called orthodox circles. One may thus advance the conclusion that Merkavah mysticism was confined to a narrow elite of initiates who let themselves be exposed to practices that could be defined as idolatry. But, can it be maintained that people who lived at the very heart of Judaism of the time participated in practices that fell under the immediate spell of the pagan syncretism of the time? The question is no easy one to answer, and it bears decisively on our understanding and evaluation of the nature of Judaism in Talmudic times. It was variously argued, mainly in connection with the discussion of the problem of Jewish receptivity to customs emanating from idolatry, that the sages had no easy job in their attempts to control and to limit the measure of the exposure of many of their kinsfolk to idolatry. The practices we encounter in the Hekhalot writings only add fuel to the fire, and we are faced with the problem that, as it appears, traces of pagan syncretism which broke the rules of the Law, did after all reach the very heart of the Judaism of the period.

Since the Hekhalot writings are in no other way opposed to the concepts of the Law and the obedience to it, the question becomes even more difficult to answer. In addition, the Hekhalot writings have distinctive literary qualities and from this point of view alone it cannot in any way be maintained that they were produced by illiterate, ignorant, Jews who were not able to pass judgement on their own activities. The insistence found in these writings on the observation of the Law and the preoccupation with the problems of the study of the Law and its memorization make it again evident that the solution to our problem cannot be sought in marginal heterodox groups or associations. The problem thus concerns the very heart of the Judaism of the period, and we may say that the occurrence in these writings of magical and theurgic practices can illuminate things that were to all likelihood going on in circles which were not so tightly controlled by the sages. Naturally, the Hekhalot writings contained a refined form of magic and theurgy in comparison with the more vulgar form of these practices as it could be found among those less learned and pious. It therefore seems permissible to infer that certain elements of pagan syncretism penetrated into wide Jewish circles, and this in various degrees of intensity and in a manner that cannot leave us indifferent to the problems involved. It is hardly conceivable that the Jews who practised these things did not really believe in the efficacy of the powers they invoked and of the practices they applied. Thus, when it came to it, certain established standards of behaviour and norms of belief had to be suspended. This is particularly so, where the end was worth justifying the means.

Another point which should be considered here is whether we can define the knowledge of the Merkavah material among the common people as mysticism. The interest in what is going on in heaven is a natural component of religion and should not be too easily identified with mystical practice and speculation. It has been pointed out by Professor David Flusser that Jewish liturgy in the times of the Second Temple contained so-called mystical elaborations to the angelic doxologies quoted in Isaiah vi,3 and Ezekiel iii,12.¹¹ Flusser referred to the close connections between the material found in Jewish apocalyptic and in Merkavah mysticism on the one hand and in Jewish and Christian liturgy on the other. Indeed, there were ways in which the liturgy of the synagogue was influenced by apocalyptic and Hekhalot material.¹² But it is a question of a different order as to how deep this knowledge of the apocalyptic and Hekhalot material really went. It is quite likely that those who composed the liturgy connected with the three forms of the *Qedushah*¹³ were in fact more familiar with the mystical material which was alluded to in their composition than were those who participated in the daily service in the synagogues. And it will not be far from the truth if we assume, that those liturgical poets were responsible—sometimes even more than were the mystics themselves—for the spreading of the mystical Merkavah material. But it would be wrong to say that the common man was really aware of the mystical implications and connotations of the prayers he used to say.

¹¹ D. Flusser, "Sanktus und Gloria", Festschrift für Otto Michel, Leiden, Brill, 1963, pp. 129 ff.

¹² See J. Schirmann, "Hebrew Liturgical Poetry and Christian Hymnology", The Jewish Quarterly Review XLIV (1953), particularly pp. 138-140; I. Gruenwald, "Yannai and the Hekhalot Literature" (in Hebrew), Tarbiz XXXVI (1967), pp. 257 ff. G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 20-30 has investigated some qualities of the Merkavah hymns, yet the subject of the literary qualities of the Hekhalot literature still waits a scholarly discussion.

Turning now to the Hekhalot writings themselves, it should again be observed that no voices of dissidence are heard in these writings, nor can it be said that they contain any explicit form of criticism towards non-mystical circles. Contrary to some of the writings of Jewish apocalyptic, the Hekhalot writings bear no sectarian trade-marks. Furthermore, the Hekhalot writings do not indulge in apocalyptic visions of the imminent destruction of the world, nor do they display the apocalyptic belief according to which the messianic future is reserved to a small group of the elite. Although there are several instances in which the bliss of the world to come is promised to the Hekhalot mystics,¹⁴ the general tone of their writings is not eschatological.

¹³ See E. Werner, The Sacred Bridge, New York, Schocken Books, 1970, pp. 282 ff.

¹⁴ Thus, for instance, it is said of those who know the Shi'ur Qomah that future life is promised to them, "on condition that they study this Mishnah (= of the Shi'ur Qomah) everyday". See the text published in Musajoff, Merkavah Shelemah, 38b.

RE'UYOT YEḤEZKEL

Re'uyot YeḤezkel, or the Visions of Ezekiel, is listed by Professor Scholem as the earliest Merkavah text we possess.¹ It is not a Hekhalot text in the strict sense of the term. In fact, the word Hekhal never occurs in the text. Instead, the work enumerates the various things which the prophet Ezekiel allegedly saw in his Merkavah vision. In fact, Re'uyot YeḤezkel is a mystical midrash on the first chapter of the Book of Ezekiel. The names of the rabbinical authorities quoted in the text may justify the conclusion that the text was probably composed in the fourth or the fifth century C.E. In addition, all the names of the rabbinical sages quoted belong to Eretz Yisrael and thus there is good reason to believe that the book was composed and edited there.

The mystical part of the book begins with the statement (p. 106) that "God opened to Ezekiel seven divisions of the lower world and as Ezekiel was looking at them, he saw everything that was in the heaven". The divisions mentioned here by their names are sub-terrestrial "earths", that is, layers of seven earths which correspond to the seven heavens.² In fact, Re'uyot YeḤezkel incorporates elements of cosmological speculations, the nature and significance of which are beyond the common mystical interest.³ However, cosmological

¹ A fragment of the text was first published by Marmorstein in: Jewish Quarterly Review, New Series, VIII (1917-1918), pp. 367-378, from a Genizah fragment at the British Museum. Later on, J. Mann and Sh. A. Wertheimer published the whole text in two different editions. All these editions have been shown to be faulty, and the present writer has published a new critical edition and commentary in Temirin I (1972), pp. 101-139. The extent to which the previous editions were faulty can best be illustrated by the fact that the text became known as Re'iyot (!) YeḤezkel, while the colophons of the manuscripts read Re'uyot. Although the term is rare, it can nonetheless be explained as: Visions.—[Notice that line 14 in my edition has been misplaced by the printer to become, erroneously, line 10 on p. 104. It should be replaced as the last line of the text on p. 105!].

² The names of these divisions as they are given in Re'uyot YeḤezkel are: ²*Adamah*, ²*Eretz*, Heled, Neshiyah, Dumab, She'ol, Tit Ha-Yaven. In other rabbinical sources, different names are given. See my edition, pp. 107-108.

³ There are several Jewish texts which deal with such cosmological speculations. Two of these are the Beraita de-Ma'aseh Bereshit (ed. N. Sed, in Revue des Études Juives CXXIV (1965), pp. 23-123; with a French translation); and Midrash Konen in Bet ha-Midrash II, pp. 23 ff. As for the Beraita de-Ma'aseh Bereshit, Sed used all the bad manuscripts which he could find. The pagination of these manuscripts secrets are frequently referred to in the Hekhalot writings, though only with few specifications. Here, in Re'uyot Yehezkel, the basic structure of the universe is referred to, though, as might be expected, only the celestial world receives extensive attention.

As a matter of mystical technique, Ezekiel is described as looking downward and seeing what is above: "Ezekiel was standing on the River Chebar looking down at the water and the seven heavens were opened to him and he saw the Glory of the Holy One". To illustrate this rather peculiar procedure the text brings the following comparison: "This matter is like the following story: A man entered a barber's shop, and he cut his hair. He gave him a mirror and he looked in it. As he was looking in it, the king passed by. He saw the king and his retinue by the doorway. The hairdresser said to him: 'Turn around and see the king'. He said to him: 'I have already looked in the mirror' ". From a technical point of view this passage is of great interest. It tells something unusual about the apocalyptic and mystical technique: The visionary is standing near a river or a sea and while looking at the water, he sees the reflection of heavenly visions. From Scripture and from apocalyptic literature we know of several instances in which the prophet or the apocalypticist described himself as standing near water or at the banks of a river.⁴ The water thus served as a mirror of the things shown in heaven. This is reminiscent of the famous distinction drawn in rabbinical writings between the prophecy of Moses and that of the other prophets. It is said that all the prophets gazed upon nine mirrors while Moses gazed upon one only, or that Moses gazed upon a shining mirror while the other prophets gazed upon an opaque mirror.⁵ Looking at the mirror-like surface of the water thus turns out to be—at least in some of the cases—an integral part of the prophetic and apocalyptic technique. This procedure could be a means of avoiding the immediate sight of the Godhead and the heavenly beings. In any event, if our interpretation is correct, the passage under discussion in Re'uyot Yehezkel sheds light on a most interesting detail in the visual experience of some prophets and apocalypticists.

is confused, and Sed was unfortunately unaware of the existence of manuscripts which contain the correct pagination.

⁴ Daniel vii,2-3; viii,2; x,4-5; 4 Ezra ix (xi)-xi (xiii); 2 Baruch xxi,1; 3 Baruch ii,1. Compare also 1 Enoch xiii,7. See also G. Scholem, "Tradition und Neuschöpfung im Ritus der Kabbalah", in: Zur Kabbalah und ihrer Symbolik, Zürich, Rhein-Verlag, 1960, pp. 182-183.

⁵ Wayyikra Rabbah, ed. M. Margulies, i,14, p. 30-31; Bavli Yevamot 49b.

Looking at the waters of the River Chebar, Ezekiel is said to see the "Holiness" opening to him the seven heavens and thus giving him an opportunity of seeing the "Gevurah" (the Dynamis).⁶ Furthermore, it is said that Ezekiel not only saw the Divine Glory⁷ but also all the heavenly creatures as they were tied to the Merkavah. "They were passing in the heaven and Ezekiel was watching them (reflected) in the water". The names of the seven heavens are given: Shamayim, Shemei Shamayim, Zevul, 'Arafel, Shehaqim, 'Aravot, and Kissé Kavod. This is a rather peculiar list, which is nowhere repeated in the various lists of the names of the heavens either in rabbinical writings or in writings connected with the Hekhalot literature. The names of the first two heavens make it evident that the list is of Palestinian origin.⁸ Interestingly, some of its idiosyncratic names also occur in the liturgical poetry of Yannai.⁹ However, the list of the heavens as it is repeated later on in the text includes slight changes: Raqi'a, Shemei Ha-Shamayim, Zevul, 'Arafel, Shehaqin, Makbon, 'Aravot, Kissé Ha-Kavod. In comparison to the first one, this list mentions Raqi'a (instead of Shamayim) as the first heaven and it adds the name of another heaven, Makbon, thus bringing the total number of the heavens to eight. We shall later on, in our discussion of Hekhalot Rabbati, see that the Hekhalot mystics actually conceived of the existence of eight heavens. The eighth heaven is the place where God abides while he is not sitting on His throne in the seventh palace in the seventh heaven. But in the second list in Re'uyot Yehezkel, the eighth heaven is called by the name of Kissé Ha-Kavod, which clearly indicates that the throne of God is placed here. Thus, if we harmonize Re'uyot Yehezkel with Hekhalot Rabbati, it follows that ⁶ For a discussion of this sentence see Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 68. To the references given there for parallel expressions to the phrase "God opened to him the seven heavens" one should add: Tanhuma (ed. Buber), Toledot, paragraph 22; 'Agadat Shir Ha-Shirim (ed. Schechter), p. 39 (line 1134); The Acts of the Apostles vii, 55-56. See further H. Bietenhard, Die Himmlische Welt, pp. 7-8, n. 1, who observes that the plural ouranoi in Acts should not be interpreted as meaning that a plurality of heavens is maintained. See also L. I. J. Stadelmann, The Hebrew Conception of the World, Rome, Biblical Institute Press, 1970, pp. 41-42, where the view is expressed that Shemei Ha-Shamayim is "an all-inclusive term to denote the space above the earth" (p. 42). Yet, at least in Re'uyot Yehezkel the plurality of heavens is clearly said to derive from the plural form of the verb "the heavens were opened" in Ezekiel i, 1.

⁷ The terms Gevurah (= dynamis) and Kavod (= doxa) are interchangeably used in the text!

⁸ See the discussion in my edition pp. 116 ff.

⁹ See the present writer's article in Tarbiz XXXVI (1967), pp. 269-270.

when God leaves His throne, he ascends to the ninth heaven, or else that Re'uyot Yehezkel does not conceive of the existence of a so-called super-celestial abode of God.¹⁰

What is also unique in the seven heavens doctrine as it is displayed in Re'uyot Yehezkel is the idea, which is quoted in the name of Rabbi Me'ir, to the effect that "God created seven heavens and there are seven chariots (Merkavot) in them". This statement, which apart from its clear reference to the existence of seven (!) heavens, is reminiscent also of the idea which we met in Ascensio Isaiae (above, Chapter Two), namely that a throne is placed in every heaven. But, in contradistinction to Ascensio Isaiae, in Re'uyot Yehezkel no one is seen as occupying the Merkavah in the first six heavens. In addition, each of the Merkavot in Re'uyot Yehezkel has a name, and, generally, these names are derived from biblical verses. Only the Merkavah in the heaven Zevul has a non-biblical name, Haluyah,¹¹ and, as we have already said,¹² the heaven Makbon has no Merkavah at all. In addition, the text states that "Thus did the Holiness, Blessed be He, say to Ezekiel: 'I am showing the Chariot to you on condition that you expound it to Israel. . . But you should convey them to the people only as much as the eye can see and the ear hear' ". As we shall see in our discussion of Hekhalot Rabbati, there are several utterances in the Hekhalot literature which make it clear that no special demand for secrecy was laid down these writings. As we notice here, Ezekiel is called upon to reveal to the People of Israel the content of his mystical vision of the Merkavah, though, of course, with a certain degree of reservation: only what the eye can see and the ear hear.¹³ This is a statement which no apocalyptic writer could conceive of. The words addressed to Ezekiel by God are also important from another point of view. God says: "I am showing the Chariot to you. . .". "To see the Chariot" is used here in its plain sense and has no technical overtones.¹⁴ In the other Hekhalot texts, the expression

¹⁰ Interestingly, in contradistinction to the other heavens no Merkavah is mentioned in Makbon. This by itself could support the view that Makbon was a later addition introduced in order to harmonize between the list in Re'uyot Yehezkel and the lists found in other sources.

¹¹ This may well be a corrupt rendering of a name that can no more be identified.

¹² See above n. 10.

¹³ A similar expression is found in Mechilta d' Rabbi Ismael, p. 235 in connection with the theophany on Mount Sinai. See also the notes in my edition, p. 121.

¹⁴ Compare Tosefta Megilah iii,28 (ed. Lieberman, p. 361-362): "They said to him (= to Rabbi Yehudah): many discoursed in the Merkavah but had never

"to see the Chariot" has a technical sense, and stands for the mystical experience as a whole.¹⁵

When the text turns to the discussion of the seven heavens and what they contain, it does so by quoting an introductory remark in the name of Rabbi Yizḥaq: "From the earth to Raqi'a there is a distance of a five hundred years' walk". Curiously, the biblical verse quoted as supporting this measure is Deuteronomy xi,21: "That your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, in the [land which the Lord swore unto your fathers to give them, as the days of the heaven upon the earth"]".¹⁶ The cosmological measure given here in the name of Rabbi Yizḥaq is elsewhere¹⁷ attributed to Rabbanan: "(The width of the firmament) is like the years of the lives of the Patriarchs. (As it is written:) 'as the days of the heaven upon the earth' ".¹⁸ The sum total of the years of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob amounts to five hundred and two, and this is also the measure given for the distance between the earth and heaven in Beraita de-Ma'aseh Bereshit (ed. Sed, p. 58).¹⁹ The measure of five hundred years' walk is repeated in Re'uyot Yehezkel as the regular distance between each of the heavens. If we may learn anything from the description of the space between the first and the second heaven, then all the spaces between the heavens are filled with water. It is said: "And the water which is above Raqi'a is five hundred years' of walk", and there are good reasons to believe that the same could be said of the other "inter-celestial" spaces too.

It would deflect us from the main course if we were here to discuss all the details of the cosmological speculations of what all the seven heavens contain. In fact, the whole subject deserves a separate study in which justice will be done to the various elements involved. It should be remarked that in addition to a few items which repeat seen it before". See also G. Scholem, Major Trends in Jewish mysticism, p. 358, n. 18.

¹⁵ Instead of the present expression "to see the Chariot" we find in later Hekhalot writings the expression "to see the King in His beauty". See S. Leiter, "Worthiness, Acclamation, and Appointment: Some Rabbinic Terms", Proceedings of the American Academy for Jewish Research XLI-XLII (1973-1974), pp. 143-145.

¹⁶ The words in square-brackets are not quoted in the text. The underlined words are the most relevant ones to the saying of Rabbi Yizḥaq.

¹⁷ In Yerushalmi Berakhot i,1 (2c).

¹⁸ Compare also Yerushalmi Berakhot ix,1 (12a). There Rabbi Levi gives the distance of 500 years.

¹⁹ In Midrash Kohen (in: Jellinek, Bet ha-Midrash II, p. 27) the number of the years of the Patriarchs is wrongly given as 500. In any event, 500 years is a round number and was probably preferred to 502 for the sake of convenience.

themselves in all the parallel sources there are many others that vary from source to source. Thus, we shall concentrate here only on those items that bear direct significance to our subject. To begin with, the angels who say the Qedushah are said to be in the second heaven. Generally, these angels are described as being in the fifth heaven,²⁰ and their existence here in the second heaven may reflect an ancient tradition according to which there were only two heavens.²¹ Evidently, in this case of the existence of two heavens only, God was abiding in the second heaven and there one expected to find the ministering angels too. Curiously, however, where there were more than two heavens the angels who recite hymns to God were not always located in the same heaven as the one in which the throne of God was said to be located. Considering the seven-heavens system in Re'uyot Yehezkel, it is noteworthy that the sanctifying angels are located in the second heaven, while the seventh heaven contains, in addition to the Merkavah, only the hooves of the Living Creatures and their wings.

It is also said of these sanctifying angels that their existence in the second heaven is not permanent. In fact, they are renewed everyday. This idea, which is also documented in midrashic literature,²² might express the notion that apart from God,²³ nothing in the world, not even the angels, enjoys permanent existence. The substantial difference between the Creator and the things which He creates lies in the transiency of the things created. Whether the angels are destroyed because they do not recite their hymns properly,²⁴ or whether they undergo a process of self-annihilation,²⁵ they carry out only one message and then new ones are created in their place.²⁶ According ²⁰ Thus, for instance, in Bavli Hagigah 12b.

²¹ That tradition is explicitly assumed by Rabbi Yehudah in Bavli Hagigah 12b. We also saw (in Chapter Two) that 1 Enoch lxxi,5 ff. could also be interpreted as giving expression to the two-heavens doctrine. Indeed, the angels are described in 1 Enoch lxxi as being in the second heaven.

²² See my notes ad locum (p. 125). To the literature referred to there add E. E. Urbach, The Sages, pp. 181-182. However, Urbach does not discuss the theological implications of this idea.

²³ The Living Creatures, the Hayyot, and the archangels (Michael, Raphael etc.) also enjoy "immortality".

²⁴ Hekhalot Rabbati xxx (end); 3 Enoch xl.

²⁵ Bavli Hagigah 14a: "Every day the Ministering Angels are created from the River of Fire ('Nebar di-Nur') and they utter a song and are annihilated!". In Hekhalot Rabbati viii,1-2, it is said that the angels can serve God only once, because their faces and their eyes are burned by the beauty of their King.

²⁶ We shall later on see that there were two distinct theories concerning the to Re'uyot Yehezkel, the angels recite their hymns from sunrise till sunset, an idea that contradicts several midrashic sayings according to which the heavenly beings sing their songs only at night, while at daytime God listens to the prayers of His People.²⁷

In the third heaven, Zevul, one finds the Sar, that is the Heavenly Prince. He is described as filling with his presence the whole of that heaven, and thousands upon thousands of angels are said to serve him. Daniel vii,9-10 is quoted as supporting the idea, and one might rightly ask whether the author of Re'uyot Yehezkel did not think that the 'Atiq Yomin described in the Book of Daniel was identical with the Sar of the Heaven Zevul. Admittedly, the identification is not explicitly made, but one may assume that it could have been implied when the relevant verses in Daniel were quoted in connection with the Sar of Zevul.²⁸ A number of names are suggested for this Sar, two of which are of particular interest for us.²⁹ The first of these is Komes,³⁰ that is a minister in the king's court, and the other is Metatron. Recently,³¹ Professor S. Lieberman has suggested that creation of the angels. According to the one, the angels are created from the words which God utters; and according to the other, they are created from the river of fire. See further 3 Enoch xl.

²⁷ See Bavli Hagigah 12b; 'Avodah Zarah 3b. On the other hand, Bavli Hulin 91b concurs with the idea found in the Hekhalot writings that the angels in fact sing also at daytime. They do so in correspondence with the prayers of the People of Israel. In the apocalyptic writings which refer to the song of the angels, no explicit restriction is maintained regarding the singing hours of the angels. However, in 1 Enoch xxxix,13 we read: "And here my eyes saw all those who sleep not: they stand before Him and bless and say ...". Now, "those who sleep not" are in all likelihood those who say their hymns at night. But as has variously been recognized, "those who sleep not" are a class of angels invented by a mistranslation. Daniel iv mentions the Aramaic 'Ir and the 'Irin as a class of angels. If the word 'Ir means "messenger", then the translation ἐγρήγορος, "wakeful", suggested in the LXX, is wrong. See, however, J. A. Montgomery, The Book of Daniel [ICC], Edinburgh, T. & T. Clark, 1964, pp. 231-234. See further Encyclopedia Judaica (Jerusalem), s.v. "Song, angelic".

²⁸ It should be noticed that the Sar is mentioned three times in Talmudic writings: Bavli Hagigah 12b; Menahot 110a; Zevachim 62a. In all three cases it is the angel Michael who is called "the Great Prince" (Ha-Sar Ha-Gadol), and he is said to offer sacrifices on the heavenly altar. However, the Sar in Re'uyot Yehezkel does not offer sacrifices, and this probably because the heavenly Jerusalem is here described as being in another heaven. The term Sar Ha-Gadol derives from Daniel xii,1, and is there the appellation given to the Angel Michael.

²⁹ In any event, the greater number of the names are not clear to us: they seem to be "mystical" names.

³⁰ In the manuscript wrongly: Kimos.

³¹ In a Study Conference devoted to the Hekhalot literature and held in the Institute for Advanced Studies in Jerusalem on June 13, 1976. Professor Lieberman publishes his remarks in an appendix to the present book.

Metatron reflects the older form of synthronos,³² that is, the God enthroned alongside with a major deity. This idea of the synthronos, or as it was allegedly later on substituted by the metathron(os), is also implied by the name Komes given here to the Sar. It should be noticed that the term Metatron is frequently qualified by such phrases as "whose name is like that of his master",³³ "whose name is like that of the Dynamis",³⁴ and even the "Small Yah".³⁵ All these qualifying phrases stress the close affinity between God and His Sar, an affinity that is adequately expressed in the names Komes and Metatron.

The next heaven, 'Arafel, contains the "Canopy of the Law" and the Merkavah in which God descended on Mount Sinai.³⁶ The location of these two items in 'Arafel is easily explained by Exodus xx,21 (MT!). The fifth heaven, Shehagim, contains the heavenly Jerusalem and all the vessels of the Temple. Makbon is the name of the next heaven and it contains the treasures of snow and hail, and the future rewards for the righteous and the wicked. 'Aravot is the seventh heaven and it again contains both the treasures of snow and the future rewards for the righteous and the wicked. This repetition is rather peculiar, and it may perhaps be explained by the fact, that the heaven Makbon was interpolated into the text of Re'uyot Yehezkel by a writer who wanted to harmonize the lists of the heavens in Re'uyot Yehezkel with those found in other Jewish sources.³⁷ In any event, apart from these things, 'Aravot also contains the treasures of the souls.³⁸ Finally, the highest heaven, Kissé Ha-Kavod, contains the hoofs of the Hayyot and the edges of their wings as well as the Big Merkavah in which God will descend in order to judge all the nations. The text ends with the remark that God is above the wings of the Hayyot.³⁹

³² See Liddell & Scott, p. 1717. The prefix "syn" was gradually superseded by the prefix "meta", which implied even a closer union than "syn". See Liddell & Scott, p. 1108.

³³ Bavli Sanhedrin 38b.

³⁴ Re'uyot Yehezkel, which may represent an older tradition than the one given in Bavli Sanhedrin. Another name, suggested by the theurgists (Mesbamshin Ba-Shum) is: SLNS QS BS BS QBS "like the name of the Demiurgos (Yozger Ha-'Olam)".

³⁵ 3 Enoch xii.

³⁶ For both details see my commentary ad locum, pp. 131-132.

³⁷ See my commentary, pp. 116-120. It should, however, be noticed that in Bavli Hagigah 12b, Makbon is said to contain the treasures of snow and hail.

³⁸ In the list of heavens in Bavli Hagigah, the treasures of the souls are likewise found in 'Aravot.

³⁹ The fact that the wings of the Hayyot are mentioned twice in this heaven may be explained as indicating the two pairs of wings mentioned in Ezekiel i,6.

HEKHALOT ZUTRETI

Hekhalot Zutreti (or: Zutrati) is in all likelihood the oldest Hekhalot text proper that we possess. It is a collection of several short Merkavah-passages, some of which are in Aramaic. Professor Jonas Greenfield, who undertook a linguistic study of the Hebrew and Aramaic sections of the book, inclines to locate it in Eretz-Yisrael, most probably in the second or third century C.E. This conclusion concurs with that of Professor Gershom Scholem, who on the basis of an analysis of its contents regards the book as representing the Merkavah lore of the Tannaitic, possibly early Amoraic, period. The text in its entirety has never been published, though about three quarters of the text are printed in Musajoff's collection of Merkavah texts, Merkavah Shelemah.¹ However, our discussion here will be based on the texts contained mainly in MSS Oxford 1531 and Jewish Theological Seminary Mic. 8128.

The text begins with a short introduction: "If you want to be singled out in the world and that the secrets of the world and the mysteries of wisdom should be revealed to you, you have to study this Mishnah and be careful about it till the day of your death (?).² You should neither try to understand what is behind you, nor inquire into the sayings of your lips.³ Just understand what is in your heart and keep quiet, so that you will be worthy of the Beauties of the Chariot.⁴ You should be careful about the Glory of your Creator, and do not cause Him to descend.⁵ And if you have caused Him to

¹ See G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 6 and 76 ff.

² The term used here Yom Perishah could also be taken to mean: as long as you are engaged in the ascetic practices connected with the Merkavah experience.

³ This is a mystical paraphrase of Ben Sira iii, 19-21. The phrase "Do not investigate the words of your lips" can be interpreted as meaning that one should not venture explaining words uttered as glossolalia. However, the more simple meaning, namely, that there are matters relating to the secret lore which should not be discussed in public, cannot be ruled out. See further S. Lieberman, Tosefta Ki-Fshutah to Hagigah, p. 1295.

⁴ For the expression "the beauties of the Chariot" (Yofiyot Ha-Merkavah) see, S. Leiter, "Worthiness, Acclamation and Appointment: Some Rabbinic Terms", Proceedings of the American Academy for Jewish Research, XLI-XLII (1973), p. 144.

⁵ Professor S. Lieberman suggested to me to see in the Hebrew words We'al tered lo (= "and do not make him descend"?) a reference to the saying in 'Avot de-Rabbi Natan Version B, xxxiii (ed. Schechter, p. 72): "He (= Ben Zoma) used to say: Do not peep into a man's vineyard; and if you peeped into it do not descend, do not enjoy anything of Him; and if you have enjoyed anything of Him you are likely to be turned out of this world. 'It is the Glory of God to keep (His) word secret',⁶ so that you will not be turned out of this world". This passage includes one of the rare occasions in which a claim for secrecy is uttered in the Hekhalot literature.

After this introduction, there comes in MS Oxford a short paragraph which is connected with the Sar-Torah speculations.⁷ It says: "When Moses ascended on high to God, God taught him: Everybody whose heart is going astray,⁸ should call the following names. . . :⁹ 'that I may keep in my mind everything that I hear and study. . . and I shall never forget it, neither in this world nor in the one to come' ". As we shall see later on, the Sar-Torah sections incorporated in the Hekhalot literature in all likelihood belong to a period when real mystical experiences were no longer practised. If this is true, then the Sar-Torah passage in Hekhalot Zutreti was introduced into the text at a rather late stage, probably in the sixth century C.E.¹⁰ If not, then this very section was the model for the later Hekhalot texts, most of which contain material related to Sar-Torah. The gist enter (lit. descend into) it; and if you entered do not look; and if you looked do not touch; and if you touched do not eat. For if a man eats he loses his soul's share both in this world and in that to come". In Tosefta Ki-Fshutab to Hagigab, p. 1291, Lieberman suggests to see in Ben Zoma's words an old parable used by him for mystical purposes. See further Sifre to Numbers (ed. Horowitz), p. 191, l. 15.

⁶ Proverbs xxv,2.

⁷ See our discussion of Hekhalot Rabbati (end).

⁸ The Hebrew here reads: Shogeh; however, one of the variant readings here has Sboneh, that is, studies.

⁹ Among the magical names listed here one finds SMOSLM and MARMA-RAOT. Both names are known from the syncretistic magical papyri and their exact meaning is still under dispute among scholars. See Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 76 and 134. On page 76 Scholem explains the first name as being "perhaps a corruption of the Hebrew Shemesh 'Olam (= Sun of the World)", while on p. 134 (in the Second Edition of the book) he writes: "... the magical name Semisalam so frequently used in the magical papyri, seems to come from the Aramaic. The word does not represent the Hebrew Shemesh 'Olam, but rather the Aramaic phrase Shemi Shelam which literally means: 'my name is peace' ". In the unpublished Registers to K. Preisendanz, Papyri Graecae Magicae, p. 230, Preisendanz explains the word as implying "Ewige Sonne" (= Eternal Sun).—I am indebted to Professor Morton Smith for preparing for me a xerox copy of the Registers.

¹⁰ Professor Scholem, op. cit., p. 77 likewise assumes that the opening passages of Hekhalot Zutreti "may not constitute an original part of the Urform of the book." However, since the whole text is rather fragmentary it is quite difficult to decide what really belongs to its original layer of composition.

of the Sar-Torah speculations is the secret theurgical method of studying the Law and of its memorization. MS. New York (The Jewish Theological Seminary) later on quotes a longer Sar-Torah section, which lists several magical names,¹¹ and in addition mentions the special qualities of Hekhalot Zutreti: "This book is (a book of) wisdom, sagacity and knowledge, and inquiries about the things above and the things below, the hidden things of the Torah and of heaven and of earth, and the mysteries which (God) gave to Moses, the son of 'Amram, . . . and revealed it to him on Mount Horeb, and by the means of which the world is sustained. In addition, by the means of (this book) Moses performed all the wonders and the miracles in Egypt, and with its help he beat the Egyptians. It is the fire of the burning-bush. And Metatron revealed himself to Moses . . .". This passage is interesting for a number of reasons. Briefly, it maintains a secret revelation of a certain mystical or magical book to Moses on Mount Sinai. In this respect, we may go back to the Book of Jubilees which also claims to have been revealed by the angels to Moses on Mount Sinai. In fact, the revelation of a secret lore to Moses in addition to the exoteric Law constituted an important branch in ancient Jewish esotericism.¹² We find it also repeated in other Merkavah texts,¹³ and in magical texts.¹⁴ In our case, however,

¹¹ One of which is YHOEL.

¹² See B. Z. Wacholder, Eupolemus, Cincinnati, Hebrew Union College, 1974, pp. 71 ff.: Chapter Three: "The Hellenized Moses—Jewish and Pagan".

¹³ See the beginning of the text Ma'aseh Merkavah (in Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 103, paragraph 1): "Since you have revealed to Moses the secrets and the secrets of the secrets, the mysteries and the mysteries of the mysteries, and Moses [taught] them to (the People of) Israel, so that they can learn with them the Torah and multiply with their help the study of the Torah". See also 3 Enoch (Sefer Hekhalot), xv(b) and xlviii(d).

¹⁴ The famous magical text called "The Sword of Moses" and first published by M. Gaster (London: 1896) begins in MS. Oxford 1531 fol. 35a, with the following statement: "This is the Sword of Moses which was delivered to him in the burning bush, and was (henceforth), revealed to Rabbi Yishma'el ben Elish'a in the Ma'aseh Merkavah!". The "Sword of Moses" is a technical expression for magical practices connected in some way with the staff of Moses, regarding which, we know, several magical and supernatural traditions circulated in midrashic writings. See mainly Targum Pseudo-Jonathan to Exodus ii, 21 and Pirkei de-Rabbi 'Eliezer, xl. Both texts reflect a rather late stage in the transmission of a tradition that has its origins in tannaitic times. See Pesikta de-Rav Kahana (ed. Mandelbaum), p. 308. As for the term "The Sword of Moses" see M. Magalioth, Sefer Ha-Razim, pp. 29-31, who rightly refers to the Greek term ξίφος (= sword) as implying also a magical formula. To the secret magical books attributed to Moses which Magalioth lists (p. 30, n. 8) one can add the ἀρχαγγελικὴ βίβλος attributed in one of the Paris amulets to Moses. See R. Reitzenwe may assume that the book which is meant is none but Hekhalot Zutreti itself. The book was believed to contain all the important secrets of the world and of the Torah; at least it was considered to be a magical key to their revelation.

The third paragraph of Hekhalot Zutreti introduces the Name which "was revealed to Rabbi 'Akiva when he contemplated the Ma'aseh Merkavah; and he descended ¹⁵ and taught it to his students. He said to them: 'My sons, be careful about the Name; it is a great name,¹⁶ a holy name and a pure name.¹⁷ For whoever uses it in terror, in fright, in purity, in holiness and in meekness—his seed will multiply, and he will be successful ¹⁸ in all his ways and his days will be long' ". In fact, a great part of Hekhalot Zutreti deals with magical and theurgical names, so that the kind of warning attributed here to Rabbi 'Akiva is quite in place. It is interesting to notice that in Hekhalot Rabbati iv,3 we read that Rabbi Yishmael said: "All these incantations Rabbi 'Akiva heard when he descended unto the Merkavah: he caught them and taught them from before of His Throne of Glory, when His ministers were singing them to Him". The purpose of such utterances is to show that the theurgical practices of the Ma'aseh Merkavah are no human invention but of heavenly origin. Consequently, one has to be particularly careful in their application. The stein, Poimandres, Reprint: Darmstadt, Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1966, p. 292 f. See further in Tarbiz XXXVIII (1969), p. 355. See also A. Böhlig and P. Labib (eds.), Die Koptisch-gnostische Schrift ohne Titel aus Codex II von Nag Hammadi, Berlin, Akademie Verlag, 1962, p. 47. In one of the Aramaic magical bowls published by C. H. Gordon in Archiv Orientalni IX (1937), p. 87 we read: "By the Lord and the great throne belonging to the Master and YHWH, the Ineffable Name that was revealed to Moses in the bush" (English translation on p. 88). These are almost the very opening words of the second paragraph of Hekhalot Zutreti. See further, G. Scholem, "Der Name Gottes und die Sprachtheorie der kabbala", in: Judaica III, Frankfurt am Main, Suhrkamp Verlag, 1973, pp. 7 ff.

¹⁵ Contrary to the more current usage of the verb "to descend" (= to enter into the trance of the Merkavah experience), the verb here implies what was in other texts, designated by "to ascend".

¹⁶ The term "Great Name" is a frequent one in Greek, Aramaic and Hebrew magical texts. It is to be understood in the sense of "a most powerful Name".

¹⁷ "Purity" (Toborab) in connection with magical names implies the fact that this is the real name, in contrast to its corresponding nomen barbarum. See further G. Scholem, "Über eine Formel in den koptisch-gnostischen Schriften und ihren jüdischen Ursprung", Zeitschrift für die Neutestamentliche Wissenschaft XXX (1931), pp. 170 ff. See also below n. 19.

¹⁸ The Hebrew verb ZLH has a special meaning in a magical context. It implies that one's magical charm was efficacious. See further H. Tawil in Journal of Biblical Literature xcv (1976), pp. 405-413.

same idea is also implied at the end of our paragraph in Hekhalot Zutreti where a blessing is quoted for the purpose "of the sanctification of the Name".¹⁹

A central place in Hekhalot Zutreti is occupied by the story of the four who entered the Pardes. Since Hekhalot Zutreti, like Re'uyot Yehezkel, does not mention the seven palaces, it is of particular interest to notice that in the version of this story as it is told in Hekhalot Zutreti the sixth palace is mentioned. This can only be explained by the fact, that Hekhalot Zutreti is a compilation of mystical passages which represent different layers in the history of the Hekhalot literature. It has already been pointed out above in Chapter Three that the version, or, rather, the versions, of the story of the four who entered the Pardes as told in Hekhalot Zutreti represent the true meaning and possibly also the original setting of Rabbi 'Akiva's saying in Bavli Hagigah 14b, to wit: "When you reach the pure marble stones, do not say: 'Water! Water!'" It would be superfluous to repeat here a full-scale discussion of the relation between the saying in Hagigah and the story in Hekhalot Zutreti. However, what requires additional comment here is the fact that the so-called water-episode is repeated in the manuscripts in three different versions:

- (a) Ben 'Azai cast a glance into the sixth palace and saw the brilliance of the air of the marble stones that were decorating the palace. His body could not endure (i.e., the magnificence of the vision) and he opened his mouth and asked them:²⁰ "These waters, what are they?" And he died.²¹
- (b) Ben Zoma cast a glance at the marble stones and thought that they were (made of) water. His body could endure not to ask them, nevertheless his mind could not. And he went out of his mind.²²
- (c) Rabbi 'Akiva said: Ben 'Azai was found worthy and stood at the gate of the sixth Hekhal. And he saw the brilliance of the ¹⁹ In this respect Hekhalot Zutreti constitutes a mystical elaboration on the rulings regarding the transmission and study of the Ineffable Name in priestly circles in the days of the Second Temple. See Bavli Kidushin 71a. See also the Responsum in Otzar Ha-Geonim to Hagigah, pp. 22-23. See further E. E. Urbach, The Sages, pp. 124 ff.

²⁰ Probably, the alleged accompanying angels.

²¹ MS. New York, 16b.

²² Ibid.

pure marble stones. He opened his mouth twice and said: 'Water, Water'. Immediately they cut his head off and threw upon him eleven thousand iron bars. This should become a lesson for future generations, that a man should not commit the (same) mistake at the gate of the sixth palace.²³

As we shall see in our discussion of Hekhalot Rabbati xxv, the gate of the sixth palace was the place where the last tests were put before the ascending mystic. The worthiness of the mystics was, in fact, tested at every gate, but the sixth gate entailed some crucial tests and temptations, most of which may be called water-tests. The visionary saw marble stones, and the manner in which he reacted to the vision was taken to be proof of his worthiness to proceed.

After the tale of the four who entered the Pardes, Rabbi 'Akiva is quoted as saying: "At that hour, when I ascended on high, I put a sign at the vestibules of the firmament. There are more of them (in heaven) than in my house, and when I approached the Pargod, angels of destruction came out to beat me. But God told them: leave that sage alone, since he is worthy of gazing at my glory". Once again this sentence comes close to something that is said in Bavli Hagigah 15b (bottom): "The ministering angels even wanted to kill Rabbi 'Akiva, but God told them: leave that sage alone, since he is worthy of using²⁴ my glory". Both passages underline in their own particular way the extraordinary qualities of Rabbi 'Akiva which make him the model Merkavah mystic. In contrast to the apocalyptic writers who selected their fictitious heroes from the gallery of biblical heroes, preferably from antediluvian times, the Merkavah mystics were more selective in their choice and affiliated themselves to the two great heads of halakhic schools in the Tannaitic period. The purpose of this was, among other things, to find authorization for mystical activities in quarters that had a decisive say in halakhic Judaism. This is not to say that the historical founders of rabbinic Judaism were estranged to the res mysticae. On the contrary, we find that from the days of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai onwards the leaders of halakhic Judaism were involved in mystical speculations.²⁵ It is, however, remarkable that from Rabbi 'Akiva onwards we lose the chain of the mystical tradition. But we may well assume that it was continued, in spite of the fact that the links of that tradition seem to us today to be discontinued.

²³ MS. New York, 23a.

²⁴ A common variant reading here is (as in Hekhalot Zutreti): "gazing". For a discussion of the terms and their meaning see G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 54.

²⁵ See Bavli Hagigah 14b.

This account of the Pardeś-story brings to an end the Hebrew section of Hekhalot Zutreti. What follows is, first, a list of subjects that are assumingly revealed to the Merkavah mystic.²⁶ The list contains items relating both to cosmology and to theosophy. In fact, it again becomes clear that in the Hekhalot literature the two subjects are closely interrelated, and that he who is worthy of the secrets of the Merkavah is also worthy of the secrets of the cosmos. It should be noticed that these revelations are said to come to the mystic in the course of a heavenly ascent: "Before God made heaven and earth, He had established a vestibule²⁷ to heaven, to go in and to go out". Through this vestibule the mystic ascends to receive his secrets. But all ascensions reach their climax with the mystical vision of the Deity.

The text continues with a comparatively long discussion of the question how it is possible to have a physical vision of God when it is explicitly said that no man can see God and remain alive. Rabbi 'Akiva is quoted as settling the issue by saying: "It is as if He resembles us; but He is greater than everything else, and that is His glory which is hidden from us. And Moses says to those and to those: 'Do not reflect upon your own words, since He, blessed be He, is in His place'". The reference here obviously is to Ezekiel iii,12, which in Midrashic literature is interpreted as indicating the fact that God's real place of dwelling is completely unknown.²⁸

A central place among the things which are revealed to the mystic is occupied by the appearance of the Holy Creatures. The text calculates how many faces and wings the Creatures have, and what they do with their wings. Then the text describes all that is to be seen between the Creatures and the Throne of Glory. The text ends with a rather long discussion of various magical names, in which the Greek ²⁶ See Scholem, op. cit., p. 78, and our discussion above in Chapter One. See further in Israel Oriental Studies III (1973), pp. 70 ff.

²⁷ See Scholem, ibid., n. 9, to which one may add Bavli Bava Batra 74a where it is told in the name of Rava bar bar Ḥanah that a certain Yishmaelite merchant showed him where heaven and earth met together. At that place they also saw the window of heaven (Aramaic: kbwata de-reqi'a). In Shemot Rabbā xlii,4 it is said that God opened to Moses a small window (Pishpash) under the Throne of Glory so that he could escape from the wrath of the angels of destruction.

²⁸ See, for instance, Bavli Hagigah 13b.

elements play a prominent role. This last part of the text is of a highly technical nature, and can hardly be summarized. However, it is of great importance for a comparative study of magic and theurgy, and it may prove to be one of the earliest texts of its kind in that literature.

HEKHALOT RABBATI

This is the major Hekhalot tractate we possess. It is preserved in a comparatively great number of manuscripts,¹ and there are a number of printed editions of the text.² The main body of the text consists of twenty-six chapters, while the last four, or sometimes five, chapters which are appended to them belong to the Sar-Torah speculation, that is to the secret technique of the study of the Law and its memorization.³

The text begins with the question: "What are the incantations which should be recited by him who wants to behold the vision of the Merkavah, to descend safely and to ascend safely".⁴ This opening

¹ The two best manuscripts are: Vatican 228 and Budapest/Kaufmann 238. Other manuscripts are: Oxford, Neubauer 1531 (printed in Jellinek, Bet ha-Midrash III, though in a rather negligent manner: both the man who copied the manuscript for Jellinek and, probably, the printer introduced misreadings and misprints); New York: Jewish Theological Seminary 8128 (this manuscript and the one previously mentioned seem to derive from the circles of the old Hasidim in Germany); Firenze Laurentiana 44.13; MS. Jerusalem 4 (Scholem, Codices Codicum Cabbalisticorum Hebraicorum, Jerusalem, 1930, p. 22; this is the manuscript which Sh. A. Wertheimer printed in his Batei Midrashot, I, p. 67 ff. See next note); Munich 22 & 40. There are also some manuscripts which contain parts of the texts. Several Genizah fragments were preserved too.

² The best known texts are those printed by A. Jellinek, Bet ha-Midrash III, pp. 83-108; V, pp. 167-169; and by Sh. A. Wertheimer, Batei Midrashot (see previous note). The text printed by Wertheimer has a different chapter division than all other texts known to us, and from xxxii,4-xl,5 it contains an apocalypse which uses old material re-written in circles connected with Sabbatai Zevi. A less known publication of Hekhalot Rabbati is the one incorporated in the collection of short writings by Isaiah Lev, Sod 'Ez Ha-Da'at (= "The Secret of the Tree of Knowledge"), edited by S. Musa[joff], Jerusalem, 1891 (it too contains the text printed by Wertheimer). In spite of its obvious defects, Wertheimer's edition is so far the best available: it contains selective variae lectiones and also a commentary.

³ Other texts which deal with the technique of the Sar Torah are: several sections in the text called Ma'aseh Merkavah (published by G. Scholem in: Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 103-117), and parts of the Merkavah Rabba (published by Sh. Musajoff in: Merkavah Shelemah, fol. 1a-6a). As we saw, Hekhalot Zutreti too contained Sar-Torah material, and, as we shall see, Sefer Hekhalot (3 Enoch) too contains Sar Torah material.

⁴ The English translation is generally made from MS. Vatican 228; however, MS. Budapest/Kaufmann 238 has constantly been consulted. In fact, any future critical edition of the text will have to be based on these two manuscripts. The chapter division in them is the same one as in the text published by Jellinek, though there are slight differences in the numbering of the sections.

question is noteworthy for a number of reasons. First, it stresses the technical aspects of what follows. Indeed, Hekhalot Rabbati as also the other Hekhalot writings, are cast as mystical manuals, describing at some length what should be done in order to achieve the desired experience and how to overcome the perils that stand in the mystic's way. In this respect the Hekhalot writings are not mere descriptions of mystical experiences, but mystical guides to experiences the nature of which is described so-to-speak en passant. Second, the opening question makes it clear that mystical incantations occupy a central part in achieving the desired experiences. Third, in iv,3 it is claimed that those incantations were learnt by a mystic ("Rabbi 'Akiva") during a heavenly ascent.

The opening question is repeated in ii,3 where the incantations are introduced. From i,1(b) to ii,3 the text lists the special accomplishments which are attributed to the Merkavah mystics. The mystics are believed to have all kinds of supernatural knowledge and powers, which are supposed to gain them special social status. The mystic is, for instance, able to identify all kinds of criminals and transgressors of religious law. In addition, his social position is strengthened through his ability to know what will happen to people in the future. Last but not least, supernatural protection against his enemies is offered the Merkavah mystic. All this sounds rather peculiar. If this is no mere propaganda for recruiting novices, it may be argued that this section of the book belongs to a stage, or place, where no real mystical experiences were in the reach of those who believed themselves worthy of having them. Otherwise, it is quite difficult to understand why the mystics had to praise themselves for having all kinds of quasi-magical proficiencies instead of being content with the inner satisfaction which the mystical experience obviously brings.⁵ In fact, the opening sections of Hekhalot Rabbati may be interpreted as reflecting a stage in which mysticism declined into mere wonder-making. If anything certain can be said regarding the process of editing the texts of the Hekhalot literature, one may say that these opening sections are an editorial addition.

As already said, the introductory question is repeated in ii,3: "What is the utterance of the incantations which a man recites when he descends into the Merkavah?" The song which is henceforth quoted maintains, as we have already observed, that the mystic actually recites the same songs of praise that are sung by the angelic beings to Him who sits on the divine throne. It is stated that "All these hymns Rabbi 'Aqiva heard when he descended unto the Merkah. He absorbed them and learnt them as he was standing in front of the divine throne. (They were the very hymns) which His servants were singing to Him". What originally were the hymns of the angels have become theurgical incantations which help the mystic to achieve his goal.⁶ The idea of the mystics sharing the song of the angels comes close to the idea expressed by the Qumran sectarians that the special merit of the believers was to enjoy partnership with the angels.⁷ But what the Hekhalot mystic actually maintains is that he can use the angelological hymns for his own theurgic purposes. G. Scholem has rightly referred to these incantations as "numinous hymns"⁸ and J. Maier has pointed out some of their poetical characteristics.⁹ On the whole, however, the literary qualities of the Hekhalot hymns still require systematic study. Such a study will discuss the Hekhalot hymns also in the light of the doxologies found in apocalyptic literature, including the Book of Revelation, and in comparison to later developments of Jewish liturgical poetry—some of which was influenced by the Hekhalot hymnology.

⁵ Similar supernatural qualities are attributed to the initiates at the beginning of Sefer Ha-Razim and Sefer Ha-Malbush, both stemming from circles which claimed to be in possession of magical powers.

Chapter iii begins with a short dialogue between God, who is here called Zoharariel (= God of the Shining Light), and the mystic as to why the mystic is so terrified. The mystic answers that he is called before God for six hours every day, and that the angels drag him

⁶ See A. Altman, in Melilah II (1946), pp. 1 ff. Altman, in fact, draws on the conclusions reached by G. Scholem in his analysis of the Hekhalot literature in general and of Hekhalot Rabbati in particular. See Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism, pp. 40 ff. See also M. Smith, "Observations on Hekhalot Rabbati", Biblical and Other Studies, ed. A. Altman, Cambridge, Mass., H.U.P., 1963, pp. 142-160. Smith's observations are most valuable to the study of the text, though the present description and analysis of the text differs in a variety of points from that of Morton Smith. See further A. Goldberg, "Einige Bemerkungen zu den Quellen und den Redaktionellen Einheiten der Grossen Hekhalot", Frankfurter Judaistische Beiträge, Heft 1 (1973), pp. 1-49, which suffers at times from mis-translations.

⁷ See, for instance, 1 QS XI,8; 1 QSb IV,26. M. Weinfeld has recently published a comparative study (in Hebrew) in which the idea of the liturgical partnership between men and angels is traced back to ancient Near Eastern, mainly Sumerian, sources. See Beth Mikra, 1974, pp. 136 ff.

⁸ Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 21.

⁹ See J. Maier, "Serienbildung und 'Numinoser' Eindruckseffekt in den poetischen Stücken der Hekhalot Literatur", Semiotics III (1973), pp. 36-66.

on his knees till he reaches the divine throne.¹⁰ When the mystic learns that what the angels do is authorized by their King, he proceeds to describe the magnificence of the divine throne. The throne is described as hovering ever since the creation of the world. The Living Creatures are carrying it, but even they do not place their feet on the ground of the firmament.¹¹ Then follows a most interesting account of the throne which, so-to-speak, bows down before God, asking Him to be seated on it. The description is extremely interesting, though scholars have unfortunately failed to note its importance. What the throne is here described as doing and saying implies that God is not always present on His throne in the divine palace. When God is absent from the seventh Hekhal, where he usually receives the prayers of His People and the songs of His angelic servants and where He is given to mystical contemplation, He, so the text of Hekhalot Rabbati evidently assumes, resides in the eighth heaven which is above the heads of the Living Creatures.¹² The seventh Hekhal is thus taken to be the official, so-to-say public, court of God. He attends there, as we are going to see, two or three times a day, corresponding to the hours of prayer of the People of Israel. The rest of the time, we must assume, He spends in the eighth heaven. Thus, even the Hekhalot literature actually supposes a certain degree of divine transcendence.

The text in Hekhalot Rabbati iii which describes God's descent to the seventh Hekhal says:

Wonderful loftiness, strange power,
Loftiness of grandeur, power of majesty that the Angel of the Countenance of God behaves thus thrice daily in the heavenly court before Your Throne of Glory, when He comes and

¹⁰ The text here reports of "a thousand times they drag me on my knees till I reach Your Throne of Glory". The Hekhalot text published by the present writer in Tarbiz XXXVIII (1969), p. 359, says of Ben Zoma that he was dragged "a hundred times on the first Hekhal, ... two hundred times on the second Hekhal, four hundred times on the third Hekhal, eight hundred times on the fourth Hekhal, one thousand and six hundred on the fifth Hekhal, three thousand and two hundred on the sixth Hekhal, and six thousand and four hundred on the seventh hekhal". The sum total here is: 12700. The text there adds: "However, one does not suffer even one scratch!"

¹¹ Compare Pirkei de-Rabbi 'Eliezer iv: "... and His throne is exalted and suspended above in the air ...".

¹² This is a clear allusion to Ezekiel i,22-23. See also my article, "Jewish Sources for the Gnostic Texts from Nag Hammadi?", in the Proceedings of the Sixth World Congress for Jewish Studies, 1977, pp. 45-56.

arrives on the heavens above the heads of the Cherubim, above the heads of the Ofanim and above the heads of the heavenly Creatures.¹³

And the Cherubim, Ofanim and the heavenly Creatures, bound, stand beneath the Throne of the Glory. And when they see Him coming on the firmament which is above the heads of the Cherubim, the Ofanim and the Holy Creatures, they retreat and are frightened and fall back in swoon.¹⁴

Needless to say, this description is unique in the way in which it conceives of the manner in which God enters and departs from His abode in the eighth heaven. When God appears on His throne in the seventh palace, He is clad in His divine garment (Halug).¹⁵

Let us return for a moment to the description of God's descent to the seventh Hekhal in the seventh heaven. As is explicitly stated in Hekhalot Rabbati ix, God's descents to His throne correspond to the times of the three daily prayers of the People of Israel. The idea that there is a liturgical and ritual connection between the saying of the Qedushah by the People of Israel and the Sanctus recited by the angels is a common one in Jewish and Christian sources.¹⁶ What is new here in Hekhalot Rabbati is the concept that prayers said even by those who are not consciously practising mystics do in fact have mystical consequences. This adds a novel dimension to prayer, and it was the privilege of the Merkavah mystics to reveal that new aspect of prayer. The mystical aspects of prayer were considerably developed through the Middle Ages, both in Judaism¹⁷ and in Christianity,¹⁸ but attention has not yet been given to this particular significance which the daily prayers have: they are, in fact, taken to be invocations to God to descend to His throne in the seventh Hekhal.

To complement this idea of prayer as it is conceived of in Hekhalot Rabbati, we must refer to xi,3-4 where God is described as addressing, twice daily, words of blessing to those officiating before Him. In the blessing said in the morning, God asks the angels to be silent so as ¹³ Originally there was no real difference between the Cherubim and the Living Creatures (Hayyot). Both terms were synonymously used in the visions in Ezekiel i and x.

¹⁴ The English translation here follows the draft-translation of Hekhalot Rabbati prepared for me by Mr. Yehoshua Schwartz of Jerusalem.

¹⁵ For a detailed discussion of the theme of the Halug see G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 58 ff.

¹⁶ See above, Introduction to Part Two, n. 11.

¹⁷ See I. Tishbi, The Wisdom of the Zohar (in Hebrew), vol. II, Jerusalem, Bialik Institute, 1961, pp. 247-306.

¹⁸ See F. Heiler, Prayer, New York, Oxford University Press, 1932, pp. 172-202.

to enable Him to listen to the prayers of His People. However, nothing is said about the contents of the blessing said by God at the time of the Minhah-prayer. On the whole, mystical ideas of prayer occupy in Hekhalot Rabbati a much more prominent place than has hitherto been noticed. A significant proportion of the description found in the book is in one way or another connected with the appearance of God on His throne. And as we have seen, God descends to the throne from his abode in the eighth heaven at the daily prayer-times of the People of Israel. If this idea is carried to its logical conclusion, it appears that a mystical descent to the Merkavah was carried out only during these official hours of prayer. Indeed, there are several instances in the Hekhalot writings that make it relatively clear that the mystical prayers, or invocations, were introduced into or appended to the daily prayers. Furthermore, the various descriptions in Hekhalot Rabbati as to how the throne is prepared for that descent (chapters x and xi) are substantially connected with the prayer-times of the People of Israel. Chapter x contains a mystical hymn to encourage the Holy Creatures to perform their heavenly duties, while chapter xi describes what the Prince of the Countenance does when he prepares the throne for God. In addition, chapter xi contains a request of the mystic to the Holy Creatures to carry the throne willingly. In xi,4, the ecstatic ritual dance of the angels before the throne of God is described,¹⁹ while in chapter xii, the office of the angels is extended to include the power to intercede on behalf of the People of Israel.²⁰ Thus perfect correspondence is achieved between the terrestrial—assumingly even non-mystical—human prayer and the angelic liturgical performance. Consequently, the ideas of the angelological liturgy known from the published and yet unpublished texts from Qumran²¹ seem to have undergone a substantial mystical transformation.

We deliberately refrain from referring to the angelological liturgy from Qumran, and, for that matter, to the corresponding angelological material in apocalyptic literature, in full mystical terms. On the one hand, although the Qumranites appear to have possessed clear notions about a certain liturgical correspondence between the "orders of men" and the "orders of angels",²² the texts we have do not prove that they had special mystical practices which enabled them to experience these heavenly scenes. On the other hand, the richness of the style and the vividness of the description may give the impression that, after all, lying behind the text, were real visionary experiences of the sort known from some apocalyptic writings. Compared to the parallel experiences in the Hekhalot literature, the relevant experiences found in apocalyptic literature are, so-to-speak, proto-mysticism, that is they contain all the necessary elements which could easily turn into mysticism. But we must remember that it was not the ultimate goal of the apocalyptists to experience the Deity. Some of them experienced heavenly ascensions in the course of which they also had a vision of the Deity. Thus, in contrast to the Hekhalot mystics who ascended in order to attain a vision of the Beauties of the Merkavah, the apocalyptists were translated to heaven in order to have first hand contact with the secrets of the world. These secrets generally entailed information about the cosmological order of the world and the historical process that leads from creation to redemption. When a vision of the Deity occurred, this only added a mystical ingredient but did not turn the whole of the apocalyptic experience into mysticism.

¹⁹ See also viii,3 which could be interpreted to imply that God's throne itself is revolving.

²⁰ Later on, in medieval Jewish mysticism, this motive of the intercession of the angels on behalf of the People of Israel became a central issue in the concept of prayer.

²¹ See our discussion in Chapter Two, Section B.

Another substantial difference between Merkavah mysticism and apocalyptic comes to the fore in Hekhalot Rabbati ix. Here, in relation to the mystical ideas expressed in connection with prayer, God is quoted as asking the mystics, the so-called Yordei Merkavah,²³ to "tell my sons what I am doing during the morning and afternoon prayers"²⁴... teach them and tell them... and testify unto them what you saw me doing to the countenance of the face of Jacob, your patriarch, which is engraven on my throne". Here the mystics are explicitly asked to tell and to reveal to the general public ("to my sons") this element of their vision. This, of course, is not in line with the idea of secrecy as maintained in apocalyptic, and it speaks for the non-esoteric quality of the rest of the Hekhalot literature. This non-esoteric quality of the Hekhalot literature is further stressed in x,3, where it is emphatically stated: "May the decree of heaven be upon you, descenders unto the Merkavah, if you do not tell and say what you have heard; and if you do not tell what you have seen upon the countenance of grandeur, might, wonder and glory". And again in xvi,3 and 5, God is described as waiting for the mystics to descend unto the Merkavah so as to be able to "see and tell to the seed of Abraham, His beloved". Of course, one may argue that the ones to whom the mystics have to report their experiences are none other than the members of the mystical group.²⁵ But, one should notice that the Hekhalot writings almost never require secrecy. In addition, no esoteric layers of Scripture are revealed in them. As we have already seen, the dangers described in the Hekhalot tractates could prevent unworthy people from undergoing experiences which they could neither physically nor emotionally endure. But no straightforward requirement of secrecy is expressed in them, and, as we just saw, the mystics are told not to keep for themselves the contents of their revelation.

²² The terms Seder 'Anashim and Seder Mal'akhim occur in fragments connected with the angelological liturgy.

²³ In spite of the many attempts to explain the term, it has not yet been satisfactorily explained. See G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism, p. 20, n. 1. See also Ph. Bloch, "Die Yordei Merkavah, die Mystiker der Gaonzeit, und ihr Einfluss auf die Liturgie", Monatsschrift für die Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judenthums XXXVII (1893), pp. 22 ff.

²⁴ Some manuscripts here add the word for the evening prayer too: 'Aravit. Yet, this addition, also found in some of the quotations of this passage in Halakhic sources discussing the Qedushah said in the daily service, seems to be out of place, since the evening prayer never contained the recital of the Qedushah.

Before we go on with our discussion of Hekhalot Rabbati, a word is due regarding the ten-martyrs-apocalypse incorporated in the text (iv,3-vi, end.).²⁶ It is not clear when this apocalypse was introduced into the text, but it is clear that it belongs to a comparatively early stage of the text. All manuscripts known to the present writer contain the apocalypse, some with a longer version than usual. In addition, the apocalypse is known as a separate composition in a number of manuscripts.²⁷ Since there are several historical or semi-historical figures alluded to in the text, attempts have been made to date the apocalypse and hence to determine the termini a quo and ad quem of the whole work.²⁸ However, it is always difficult to date and locate ²⁵ See the description of the mystical-"seance" in chapter xviii, and the comments thereon by M. Smith, art. cit., pp. 144 ff.

²⁶ See Ph. Bloch, "Rom und die Mystiker der Merkavah", Festschrift für Jacob Guttman Leipzig: 1915, pp. 113-124; and Scholem's remarks in Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism, p. 357, n. 10.

²⁷ My colleague, Professor Joseph Dan, is now preparing a critical edition of this apocalypse. For the time being see the two versions printed in Bet ha-Midrash vols. II and VI.

²⁸ See the suggestion concerning the dating of the apocalypse made by Professor Morton Smith. He writes: The "use of the title 'Caesar' for the Emperor (= Lupinus, in the apocalypse) suggests a date prior to Diocletian, the -inus ter-stories of religious persecution, particularly so when the sages of antiquity are called upon to serve as models of religious devotion for later, less illustrious, generations.

The raison d'être for the apocalypse in Hekhalot Rabbati becomes clear from iv,4, where Rabbi Nehuniah ben Ha-Qanah asks Rabbi Yishmael to descend unto the Merkavah and to find out in heaven the reason for the Roman decree to put to death four of the sages of the People of Israel or eight thousand students as their ransom. The four sages are: Shim'on ben Gamli'el, Yishmael ben 'Elish'a, 'El'azar ben Dama and Yehudah ben Bava. Later on, in v,1, it becomes evident that the decree actually concerns ten sages whose names are not always given in the manuscripts.²⁹ The reason for this savage decree is that the ten martyrs have to expiate the sin of the ten brothers who sold Joseph to the Ishmaelites (Genesis xxxvii,27-28). As it is written (Exodus xxi,16) "Whoever steals a man, whether he sells mination and the slaughter of the Roman administrators reflect the troubled years of the midthird century when relations between the emperors and the Senate were particularly bad ... The folk-tale motif of transformation and substitution of persons was popular at the time; we find it, for instance, in the third century strata of the Pseudo-Clementine Homilies". See, art. cit., p. 149. However, this suggestion finds no support in Professor S. Lieberman's summary of the historical and halakhic evidence for alleged religious persecutions in the third and fourth centuries. See his article "Redifot Dat Yisra'el" in: The S. Baron Jubilee Volume (Hebrew Part), 1974, pp. 234 ff. Professor Lieberman finds no historical evidence for the existence of religious persecutions in Eretz Yisrael in the third and fourth centuries C.E. If so, the apocalypse of the ten martyrs reflects no real historical situation of religious persecution. Professor Lieberman pointed out to me in a private conversation that Jewish stories of martyrdom could have arisen in the third or fourth century at the time when many Christians had suffered martyrdom. The alleged purpose of these stories was to show that Jews too were ready to pay with lives for their belief and religious practice. Indeed, these stories were pseudepigraphically projected back to the second century, when Jews had really suffered religious persecution mainly at the time of Hadrian. Such historical retrojections were common literary phenomenon in the literature dealing with martyrdom. For the halakhic and historical sources dealing with second century religious persecution see S. Lieberman, art. cit., p. 213-234.

²⁹ In MS. Vatican 228, for instance, the names were added in the margin by a second hand. Of these names, two, at least, are generally erroneously identified: Rabbi Yishma'el and Rabbi Shim'on known from the rabbinical sources as martyrs were not the sons of 'Elish'a and Gamli'el respectively. Their exact identity is unknown though it is clear that they were martyred before Rabbi 'Akiva suffered martyrdom. See S. Lieberman, art. cit., p. 227. Lists of the martyrs found in rabbinical writings considerably vary one from the other. Compare, for instance, the list found in Hekhalot Rabbati with the ones found in 'Eikhab Rabba ii (ed. Buber, fol. 50b), and in Midrash Tehillim ix (ed. Buber, fol. 45a). See also next note.

him or is found in possession of him, shall be put to death", the ten martyrs have to pay with their lives for the sin of their forefathers. Recently Professor E. E. Urbach rightly traced threads of the legend back to Jubilees xxxiv,18-19, and pointed out the occurrence of the idea in some medieval midrashic writings which in turn were probably influenced by the Hekhalot literature.³⁰ Urbach likewise remarks that "when the Temple was destroyed, the sin (of the selling of Joseph) allegedly remained without an atonement, and it appears that the burden of expiation was imposed on the righteous in each generation" (p. 521).³¹ However interpreted, the legend and its theological consequences are, to say the least, rather peculiar in Jewish thought, and they certainly contradict the basic Jewish concept of retribution as expounded, for example, in Deuteronomy xxiv,16 and in Ezekiel xviii.

The rest of this ten-martyrs apocalypse is, in fact, of little concern for our subject, so that we may leave the discussion of the apocalypse at this point. It should be noted, however, that later on (in chapter xiv)³² the ten martyrs are called together to form a kind of mystical group which participates in the ecstasy of a medium who descends unto the Merkavah. We shall come back to this scene in due course.

Chapters viii-xii give an extensive account of the angelic ceremony in heaven. They include long poetical passages, which are masterpieces of lyrical composition. The description chiefly concerns the manner in which the angelic beings prepare themselves and the divine throne for the appearance of God in the seventh Hekhal. Long stretches in these descriptions are devoted to the angelic song and dance.³³ It is repeatedly emphasized that this angelic ceremony takes place when the People of Israel recite their Qedushah; thus, the heavenly perfectly corresponds with the earthly ritual. At one point a piece of Shi'ur Qomah speculation is introduced: "From the Throne of His Glory the height of God is a hundred and eighty thousand ³⁰ E. E. Urbach, The Sages, pp. 521-522 and the notes on p. 921 f., which contain references to further bibliography.

³¹ According to Hekhalot Rabbati iv,4 the decree is to last till the future day of revenge, when Sama'el, the heavenly prince of Rome, will be slain together with the other heavenly princes. It is said there that they will be lying slain "as lambs and sheep (offered on) the day of atonement". Here the text points back to Jubilees xxxiv,18.

³² See also chapter xviii.

³³ Hekhalot Rabbati viii,3. The paragraph can also be taken to mean that the throne revolves around itself. The angelic dance is again described in xi,3.

times ten thousand parasangs and from his right arm to his left arm His width is seventy thousand times ten thousand parasangs" (x,1).³⁴ These measures (unless interpolated) show that the writer of Hekhalot Rabbati was aware of the Shi'ur Qomah speculations and that the latter, although little room is given to them in the Hekhalot writings, were part of the ancient Jewish mystical tradition.³⁵

Not only has the throne of God to be prepared, but so do also the Living Creatures who carry it. In chapter xi, the Angel of the Countenance crowns each of the Living Creatures with thousands upon thousands of "crowns". He falls upon his face every time he puts a "crown" on their heads. When the Living Creatures see that God is, so-to-speak, angry with the People of Israel, they untie their "crowns" and beat them on the ground thus asking forgiveness for the People of Israel (chapter xii).

Chapters xiii-xxvi contain a long and detailed description of the ascent unto the Merkavah.³⁶ It begins with a pseudohistorical paragraph that links the description with the ten-martyrs apocalypse: "Rabbi Yishma'el said: When Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah saw Rome planning to destroy the mighty of Israel, he at once revealed the secret of the world: that is the virtue of the one who is worthy of gazing on the king and His throne..."³⁷ The impression one may gain from this introductory passage is that the revelation of the secrets of the world was made public as a result of religious persecutions. At least on that occasion, as we shall later on see, it became necessary to use the mystical services of a medium. In xiii,2 the virtues of the mystic are given: "What is the technique of the Merkavah mystic like? It is like having a ladder in one's house and being able to go up and down at will. This may be done by anyone who is pure of idolatry, sexual offenses, bloodshed, slander, vain oaths, profanation of the Name, impertinence, and unjustified enmity, ³⁴ Some of the MSS. contain even a longer Shi'ur Qomah passage which quotes a sentence said by Metatron and also several verses from the Song of Songs v,10 ff. In any event, the Shi'ur Qomah passage in Hekhalot Rabbati is only partly known from the largest preserved Shi'ur Qomah text. See in Merkavah Shelemah, 37b.

³⁵ See G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 36 ff.; idem, Von der Mystischen Gestalt der Gottheit, Zürich, Rhein-Verlag, 1962, pp. 7 ff.: "Schi'ur Koma . . ."; S. Lieberman, "Mishnat Shir Ha-Shirim", Appendix D to Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 118-126.

³⁶ See M. Smith, art. cit. (above, n. 6), pp. 144 ff.

³⁷ The translation is—with some changes—that of Professor Morton Smith.

and who keeps every positive and negative commandment".³⁸ The ladder-motif which is mentioned here³⁹ is known both from Greek philosophy⁴⁰ and from Islamic philosophy and mysticism,⁴¹ but in our case it could also indicate the angel-like quality of the Merkavah mystic.⁴² In any event, the ladder is used here only metaphorically, while the real means of the ascension are different ones.

When Rabbi Yishma'el heard what the qualifications of the Merkavah mystic were, he felt discouraged and said to Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah: "If so, there is no end to the matter, for there is no living man so pure".⁴³ In response to that Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah told Rabbi Yishma'el to gather all the "heroes of the assembly and all the distinguished people of the academy" so that he might tell them the most secret mysteries of "the beam of the web upon which rest the perfection of the world and its beautiful construction. And also the axle of heaven and earth to which are bound, sewed, connected, hung and fastened all the edges of the earth and the universe and also the edges of the celestial firmaments. And also the pathway of the heavenly ladder which leads from earth to the right leg of the Throne of Glory" (xiv,1). This description of the creation of the world is also known from other sources,⁴⁴ and its ³⁸ See previous note. This passage among others was interpreted by Professor Scholem as indicating "The Halakhic Character of Hekhalot Mysticism"; see Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 9-13.

³⁹ See also xiv,1 which should be compared with the text published by L. Ginzberg, Genizah Studies I, New York, 1928, pp. 185-187. See also xx,3.

⁴⁰ Professor David Winston drew my attention to the following references: Plato, Symposium, 211c: Regarding the candidate to be initiated in the mysteries of Love it is said: "... he must for the sake of that highest beauty be ever climbing aloft as on the steps of stairs (ὥσπερ ἐπαναβαθοῖς χρώμενον) ..."; Philo De Praemiis et Poenis 43. Speaking of those who have by the power of their intellect recognized the operation of God in Nature, Philo says; "These no doubt are truly admirable persons and superior to the other classes. They have, as I said, advanced from down to up by a sort of heavenly ladder (διὰ τινος οὐρανόθεν κλίμακος) and by reason and reflection happily inferred the Creator from His works". [Both translations are from the Loeb Classics; that of Plato, however, with a slight change according to Liddell & Scott, p. 606, s.v. ἐπαναβαθμός]. See also E. R. Dodds, Pagan and Christian in an Age of Anxiety, p. 52.

⁴¹ See A. Altman, "The Ladder of Ascension", in: Studies in Mysticism and Religion Presented to Gershom G. Scholem, Jerusalem, The Magnes Press, 1967, pp. 1 ff. Although Altman deals mainly with later medieval sources his discussion is most relevant for our passage in Hekhalot Rabbati.

⁴² See Genesis xxviii,12.

⁴³ See above note 37.

⁴⁴ See S. Lieberman, Tosefta Ki-Fshutah to Tractate Kippurim, pp. 772-773.

inclusion here again speaks for the close connection between mystical and cosmological speculations. On the other hand, some of the Jewish cosmological texts, such as the Beraita de-Ma'aseh Bereshit and Midrash Kohen, contain important mystical sections. This link between mystical and cosmological speculations has already been shown to be present in some of the Jewish apocalyptic writings and is also characteristic of later Jewish mysticism, the Kabbalah. In principle, the secrets of the Deity and the secrets of nature may be classified as two distinct branches of knowledge, but in practice they are usually interrelated, and so they also appear in the Hekhalot writings.⁴⁵

To come back to Hekhalot Rabbati xiv, when Rabbi Yishma'el heard the request to gather the distinguished members of the academy, he did so and "assembled every Sanhedrin, great or small, at the third gate of the temple. Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah was sitting on a bench made of pure marble which Elish'a my (= Rabbi Yishma'el's) father gave him from the property of my mother and which had been part of the dowry that she brought to him".⁴⁶ In xiv,3 nine names of sages are given who, together with Rabbi Yishma'el, were sitting before Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah. All the rest of the Haverim (colleagues), however, were standing on their feet, because "they saw globes of fire and torches of light separating us from them". The italicized words indicate that actually three groups of people were present.⁴⁷ The first was a one-man group, and it consisted of Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah only. The second group consisted of the ten sages, whose names are given. In the third group were those to whom the text refers to as "the multitude of the colleagues" (bamon haverim). Only Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah "was sitting expounding all the matter of the Merkavah, the descent and the ascent, how one descends unto and how one ascends from (the Merkavah)". The others were either carefully listening to him or writing down what he was saying.

See also my article "Jewish Sources for the Gnostic Texts from Nag-Hammadi?", in: The Proceedings of the Sixth World Congress for Jewish Studies, Jerusalem, 1977, pp. 45-56 ff.

⁴⁵ See also Hekhalot Rabbati ix,4, and 3 Enoch ix seq., where the secrets of the Torah are added to the cosmological and theosophical secrets.

⁴⁶ Here M. Smith translates only in a summary form.

⁴⁷ Professor Morton Smith informs me that he too noticed that three groups were involved, as can be seen from his translation of the passage: "... and R. Nehunya sat and instructed the chosen few who sat before him, while the rest of the scholars stood at a distance, separated from them by globes of fire and torches of light."

Then follows a detailed description of the "praxis", that is, how the descent should be carried out. This description of the descent unto the Merkavah begins with the words: "When a man wanted to descend to the Merkavah he would call Suriyah, the Prince of the Countenance, and conjure him a hundred and twelve times". In addition, it is said that the mystic should be careful neither to add nor to subtract from that number, for if he does, he might fatally endanger himself. "He should utter the names while his fingers count a hundred and twelve times".⁴⁸ Then follows the description of the seven palaces and of the doorkeepers. Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah says: "Totrosi'i, Lord God of Israel, dwells in seven palaces, one inside the other, and at the gate of each palace there are eight doorkeepers, four on either side" (xv,1). The names of the doorkeepers of the first six palaces are immediately given, while we have to wait till chapter xxii,1 for the names of the doorkeepers standing at the seventh palace.⁴⁹ Here it is only said that those standing at the seventh hekhal are most fearful ones (xv,8). Chapter xvi goes into some detail about the fearful horses on which those doorkeepers ride, and it is said that in spite of everything the Yordei Merkavah ascend (!) and are not harmed. In fact, it is said that God is waiting, almost impatiently, for the mystic to undergo a descent to the Merkavah. The passage through the doors is granted only when two seals are shown, one to those standing on the right and one to those standing on the left (chapter xvii). At the door of the sixth Hekhal, however, a slight change is introduced: two seals have to be shown to those standing on the right and one to those on the left (xviii,5-6). Only when the seals are shown, do the doorkeepers accompany the mystic to the next door.

In xvii,6, however, an observation is made by Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah to the effect that the doorkeepers of the sixth palace are so fearful that they inflict destruction on those who descend unto the Merkavah but are not considered as descenders unto the Merkavah. In spite of the fact that the doorkeepers were severely punished for that—they were burned and replaced—the new ones show no better qualities. When the members of the mystical group heard this, they asked Rabbi Yishma'el to call Rabbi Neḥunyah ben Ha-Qanah back from his celestial vision, so that he might identify this particular class of mystics called "those who descend unto the Merkavah but do not [really] descend unto the Merkavah". Rabbi Yishma'el fulfilled their wish and woke Rabbi Neḥunyah ben Ha-Qanah from his trance. He did so in the following manner: he put on the knees of Rabbi Neḥunyah ben Ha-Qanah a piece of fine and white wool which had previously been touched very slightly by a menstruating woman who had been declared to be pure by a majority of the rabbinical court. According to Jewish law, menstrual blood renders women unclean, and this uncleanness is considered to pass over to people and things which are touched by them. We have already pointed out (in Chapter Four) that ritual purity was a necessary prerequisite for any mystical experience. The mystic had to undergo a series of ritual baths before he could begin with the more technical "praxis" of the mystical experience. Now, to wake him from the trance a piece of fine and white wool—Mela Parhava—which was generally used in order to examine the blood of menstruating women was put on the knees of Rabbi Neḥunyah ben Ha-Qanah.⁵⁰

⁴⁸ In a genizah-fragment found in Leningrad (Antonin Collection 186), and which contains a hitherto unknown Merkavah text it is said: "How does he count?—On every finger he counts ten times; then he repeats and counts ten on his first finger and two on his second one".

⁴⁹ In xxii,3 it is said that a difference exists between the names of those who keep the doors on the way in and the names of those who keep the doors on the way out.

In discussing this passage in Hekhalot Rabbati, Professor Gershom Scholem referred to it as a "set of fictitious circumstances". However, in an appendix to this book, Professor Saul Lieberman analyses the details of this process of awakening Rabbi Neḥunyah ben Ha-Qanah from his trance, and reaches the conclusion that the story is an ingenious construction of mystical imagination based on halakhic knowledge.⁵¹ When Rabbi Neḥunyah ben Ha-Qanah was "dismissed from before of the throne of Glory where he had been sitting and beholding", he was asked who were those who were called "those who descend unto the Merkavah but do not descend unto the Merkavah". His answer to this was that those people were the ones whom the real Yordei Merkavah placed before them, either standing or sitting, and told them to keep alert and hear and write down all that the mystics said and heard when they reached the throne of Glory.⁵² If those people were not worthy of the experience, the door-keepers of the sixth Hekhal beat them. It was, therefore, necessary to be very careful in the choice of those who participated in the mystical seance. Although those people were only amanuenses, they had to be men of purity and piety comparable to those of the Yordei Merkavah themselves.

⁵⁰ In Bavli Niddah 17a we also find the mela parhava as a means of testing the menstrual blood of a woman. It is there identified with a kind of material that is either Pikkulin (cotton?) or pure and soft wool. Rashi, however, explains mela parhava as cotton, but brings also a parallel explanation: "a pure and soft wool". As for the parhava, it still remains a riddle.

⁵¹ See now L. H. Schiffman, "The Recall of Rabbi Neḥunyah ben Ha-Qanah from Ecstasy in the Hekhalot Rabbati", Association for Jewish Studies Review, I (1976), pp. 269-281. Schiffman's analysis mistinterprets both the halakhic and magical aspects of the passage!

The sixth door entails a series of particularly challenging tests for the mystic. Some of the tests are described here and some elsewhere (in xxv, 5-6, and in Hekhalot Zutreti). The angel in charge of those standing on the right side of the door is Qeẓfiel ("The Wrath of God"), and he holds in his hand a drawn sword. This sword is a most fearful one: lightening bolts come out of it, and it shouts "destruction". On the left side stands Dumi'el ("Divine Silence") about whom the text has some interesting things to say. First, his real name is not Dumi'el but Averghidrihm. This curious name was rightly explained by Professor Johanan H. Levy as a corrupt transcription of the three Greek words: ἀήρ, γῆ, ὕδωρ (air, earth and water, respectively). These are three of the four elements in Greek philosophy.⁵³ It may be argued that the reason for the change in the angel's name could be explained by the fact that an angel bearing a name composed of the three or four elements out of which the world was created could be misunderstood to be the Demiurge. Since we know that the angels themselves were created,⁵⁴ their participation in the creation of the world was generally considered in rabbinic thought to be a gnostic blasphemy.⁵⁵ The reason which the text, however, gives for the change in the name is: "He should be called Dumi'el after my name: just as I see and remain silent so does he."⁵⁶ His post of duty is at the right side of the door-post. But ⁵² In this respect they resemble the scribes of the Sanhedrin. See Mishnah Sanhedrin iv, 3-4.

⁵³ See J. H. Levy, Studies in Jewish Hellenism (in Hebrew), Jerusalem, Bialik Institute, 1969, p. 261. Levy suggests seeing in the rather strange ending of the word a corrupt rendering of the Greek πῦρ, fire.

⁵⁴ According to the Book of Jubilees the angels were created on the first day. Later on, however, their creation was said to have taken place on the second or even the fifth day. See Beresbit Rabba iii, ed. Theodor-Albeck, p. 24. The theological difficulties caused by Genesis i, 26 ("let us make a man") have given rise to a vast literature. See next note.

⁵⁵ See E. E. Urbach, The Sages, pp. 203 ff.

⁵⁶ See Mechilta d'Rabbi Ismael, p. 142, line 10, where it is said of God that Qezfiel, the Prince, used to push him aside. Nevertheless, he (—Dumi'el) felt towards him neither malice nor rivalry. Both of them do whatever they do in my honour”.

When the mystic shows the proper seals, Qezfiel calls a whirlwind for him and puts him in a carriage of light and blows trumpets and horns for him while Dumi'el paces in front carrying a “present” (xix,1).⁵⁷ What is this present? It is of pure theurgic function. First of all, it consists of the magical seals which the mystic has to produce at the gates of every one of the seven palaces. But, even more important, it consists also of the document in which the legal knowledge and observance of the mystic is recorded. This document is obtained in the following manner: When the Merkavah mystic arrives at the sixth gate, he is met by Dumi'el who is sitting on a bench made of a pure stone.⁵⁸ The angel greets the mystic with a Greek blessing: “Extraordinary day. Show the seal. Shalom”,⁵⁹ and then invites him to take his seat beside him. Then Dumi'el addresses the mystic, warning him that only he who has studied all the various categories of the written and oral law or (!) he who strictly observes all that is said therein may pass onward to the seventh Hekhal. If the mystic claims that he possesses either of these qualities, Dumi'el calls Gabri'el, the Scribe,⁶⁰ and asks him to make a note of this fact on a piece of paper. This paper is hung on a mast⁶¹ on the carriage of light in which the Merkavah mystic is placed before he passes through the sixth Hekhal. When the doorkeepers of the seventh Hekhal see Dumi'el, Gabri'el and Qezfiel walking in front of the carriage of the Merkavah mystic, they cover their faces and sit down. Before, however, they were standing in a most intimidating manner, but before the time of the future redemption He watches the miserable state of His People without uttering a word. See further J. H. Levy, op. cit., p. 262, who identifies in our paragraph a transcription of the Greek word σιγή, silence. In fact 1 Kings xix,12 inspired a number of speculations about the divine silence.

⁵⁷ The Hebrew text here uses a Greek loan word: δῶρον.

⁵⁸ The word used here is λίθος, which means “of stone”. See Liddell & Scott, p. 1048, s.v. λίθ-λιον.

⁵⁹ See J. H. Levy, op. cit., pp. 260-261. Levy assumes that at least two more words can be identified in the corrupt Hebrew transcription of the Greek words. But upon examination of the good manuscripts, it appears that only three phrases can be deciphered with certainty.

⁶⁰ In Jewish apocalyptic and mystical tradition, it is generally Enoch-Metatron who is the heavenly scribe. The allocation of that function to Gabriel in Hekhalot Rabbati seems to be unique!

⁶¹ The word used here is SKRIYA. See Aruch Completum, vol. I, p. 199, s.v. ASKRAYA.

now they loosen their drawn bows and return their drawn swords to their sheaths. Nevertheless, the mystic has to show the doorkeepers of the seventh Hekhal "a great seal and a fearful crown".⁶² When the gatekeepers see all this, they enter the seventh Hekhal to fetch all kinds of musical instruments,⁶³ and thus they escort the Merkavah mystic till they offer him a seat near the heavenly Creatures that carry the Throne of Glory and minister to it.

Chapter xxi begins with a digression: it suddenly turned out that the names of the gatekeepers of the seventh Hekhal were not given. When the members of the mystical company appealed to Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah, he told them that this was on purpose. The names of the gatekeepers of the first six Hekhalot could be revealed, and the mystics were allowed to make use of them. But one was allowed neither to mention nor use the names of the gatekeepers of the seventh Hekhal. Now that he was asked to reveal their names, Rabbi Nehunyah agreed to do so, on condition that all the members of the company stood up. However, whenever he uttered a name, they had to fall on their faces. The chapter ends with the remark that immediately all the members of the mystical company "stood on their feet before Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah: he uttered [the names], and they fell on their faces, and the scribes were writing".

The names of the gatekeepers of the seventh Hekhal are given in chapter xxii. It is remarked that there is a difference in the names of those keeping the gates on the way of the descent and the names of those on the way of the ascent. A prominent role among the gatekeepers of the seventh Hekhal is given to 'Anafi'el. "And why is he called 'Anafi'el?—Because of the branch⁶⁴ of the crown of the crowns that was placed on his head and used to cover all the chambers of the palace of the firmament 'Aravot. (And in this) he resembles the demiurge.⁶⁵ As it is pointed out about the demiurge:

⁶² In the Greek words, which here follow in the text Levy, op. cit., p. 262, hypothetically identifies the words: θεός οὐρανός γῆ ὁ δεσπότης. However, Morton Smith, art. cit., p. 146, suggests a slightly different reading. The opening prayer of Hekhalot Zutreti is sometimes called "The prayer of the Great Seal and of the fearful crown". See Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 6, n. 12; pp. 54-55. [See now P. Schäfer, "Prolegomena zu einer kritischen Edition und Analyse der Merkava Rabba", in: Frankfurter Judaistische Beiträge, Heft 5 (1977), pp. 65 ff.]

⁶³ Literally: "all kinds of music and song".

⁶⁴ In Hebrew: 'Anaf.

⁶⁵ In Hebrew: Yogzer Bereshit. See Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 28, 34 and 46-48.

'His glory covers the firmament' (Habakkuk iii,3),⁶⁶ so it is also with 'Anafi'el, the minister, who is a servant that is called after the name of his master".⁶⁷ For a description of God in similar terms we have to turn to chapter xxiv,3 where it is said: "King of Kings, God of Gods and Lord of Lords/ He who is exalted with chains of crowns/ Who is encompassed by the branches of the rays of brilliance/ Who covers the firmament with the branch of His glory".⁶⁸ The "branch" here can well be a metonym for the crown and indeed it seems that 'Anafi'el belongs to the category of angels of the highest rank. In this respect he may be viewed as an equal to Metatron, 'Akatri'el and Synadelphon.

It is 'Anafi'el who opens for the Merkavah mystic the gates of the seventh palace. And when the holy creatures of that palace try to assault the mystic, 'Anafi'el assists him, "he and the sixty three gatekeepers of the seven Hekhalot".

Chapters xxiv-xxvi contain the so-called "Song of the Throne"⁶⁹ which the mystic utters when he stands before the Throne of the Glory. In xxv,5-6, however, a short interpolation describes how those who are not worthy of descending unto the Merkavah are prevented from entering the gates of the palaces. If he is a true Merkavah mystic, then, when he is told to enter the gate, he does not stir. He only enters when he is invited a second time. But the false Merkavah mystic has only to be invited once. He almost tries to force his way into the palace, but the angels stand in his way and throw upon him thousands of iron bars. Another test is the one at the gate of the sixth palace. Here the gatekeepers throw upon the descender unto the Merkavah something that looks like thousands upon thousands waves of water. But in reality there is not even a drop of water there. If he asks: "What are these waters", the angels pursue him and reproach him: "Worthless man, are you of the seed of those who kissed the golden calf,"⁷⁰ and thus unworthy of beholding ⁶⁶ Professor G. Scholem has rightly recognized the connection between the Psalm of Habakkuk and the Merkavah speculations.

⁶⁷ The last words—"who is called after the name of his master"—are frequently found in connection with Metatron. See Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 46 ff.

⁶⁸ The English translation is basically that printed in G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 62, though several changes have been introduced into it.

⁶⁹ The term "Song of the Throne" is mentioned in MS. Vatican 228, and in the famous responsum of Rav Haj Ga'on (in Lewin, Otzar Ha-Geonim to Hagigah, p. 24).

⁷⁰ For the picture of Israel kissing the golden calf, see Pirkei de-Rabbi 'Eli'ezer, the King and His Throne?" Thereupon a voice from heaven declares this suspicion to be justified, and they throw upon him thousands of iron bars.⁷¹ A similar test is described in Hekhalot Zutreti, and its connection to a saying attributed to Rabbi 'Akiva in Talmud Bavli Hagigah 14b has already been discussed above in Chapter Three.⁷² The text ends with another hymn at the end of which Metatron and his eight secret names are mentioned.⁷³

The last part of Hekhalot Rabbati does not belong to the main body of the text. With chapter xxvii begins the famous Sar-Torah section, which generally consists of five chapters. It deals with the secret, magical method of studying the Torah and memorizing that study. As a number of Merkavah texts deal with that subject, it seems that the problems discussed in the Sar-Torah obstinately occupied the minds of the Hekhalot mystics. Sar-Torah passages are found in Hekhalot Zutreti, in Ma'aseh Merkavah, in Merkavah Rabbah, in Sefer Hekhalot (3 Enoch) and in the Hekhalot fragments published by the present writer. It may be argued that these Sar-Torah passages belonged to a period where real mystical experiences were no more practised, and new applications had to be found for the old theurgical practices.⁷⁴ The text of Sar-Torah in the appendix to Hekhalot Rabbati is in the form of a dialogue between God, the People of Israel and the angels. The pseudo-historical circumstances are the days of the construction of the Second Temple.⁷⁵ The speakers, however, are once again the pseudepigraphical Hekhalot mystics: Rabbi Yishma'el xliv: "Rabbi Yehudah said: Sama'el entered into it (= the golden calf) . . . and when Israel saw it, they all kissed it . . .". For kissing as a kind of idolatry see Mishnah Sanhedrin vii,6.

⁷¹ See 2 Samuel xii,31.

⁷² Professor Z. Werblowski drew my attention to the fact that in the Ami-táyur-Dhyána-Sûtra, paragraph 10, a series of meditations is enumerated, the second one of which—after the perception of the sun—is the preception of water, "clear and pure". Then follows the perception of ice, and as "thou seest the ice shining and transparent, thou shouldst imagine the appearance of lapis Lazuli". See Sacred Books of the East XLIX part 2, p. 170. See also the writer's article "Mysticism, Science and Art", Leonardo VII (1974), pp. 123-130.

⁷³ The number eight here is certainly significant. See, Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 102, n. 6; and D. Sperber, "Ligaturae: Something about Amulets in the Talmudic Period" (in Hebrew), in The Bar Ilan Yearbook XIII (1976), p. 128, n. 21.

⁷⁴ See E. E. Urbach in Studies in Mysticism and Religion Presented to Gershom G. Scholem, Hebrew Section, pp. 23 ff.

⁷⁵ The expression used here for the Second Temple—Ha-Bayit Ha-Aharon—is taken from Haggai ii,9.

and Rabbi 'Akiva, who speaks in the name of Rabbi 'Eli'ezer Ha-Gadol.

The text begins with the statement that although the Torah had been given on Mount Sinai, its splendour and glory were not revealed until the days of the Second Temple. The splendour and glory of the Torah evidently are the oral law. This is a remarkable statement, since the customary Jewish concept of the oral law is that it was given to Moses together with the written law.⁷⁶ When the people saw, so the text says, that two tasks—that of building the Temple and that of studying the Torah—were laid upon them simultaneously, they were constrained to complain to their Father in Heaven. The two tasks were too much for them, they said, so they wanted to know which of the two they could abandon. God's answer to that complaint is quite remarkable. God is quoted as saying that as long as His people were in exile they did not study the Torah, and now He desires to hear "the voice of my Torah from your mouth". In addition, it is reported that God told His People that it was improper for them to disobey His commandments and that consequently He had to drive them into exile, and that He repented of His rash judgement against His people. As for their complaint itself, He thinks that it is justified, and is thus ready to compensate them for the extra toil put upon them. They only have to express their wish and God will supply everything from His infinite store-houses. Since God is aware of the fact that the People of Israel wish to study the Torah intensively, He is ready to do everything in His power to make them famous and respected throughout the whole world. For that purpose He gives them "a seal" and "a crown", that is, theurgical means, to use whenever they study the Torah. In this manner neither fool nor stupid man will be found in their number.

But, in contradistinction to the theurgical practices of the descent unto the Merkavah, it is here said that the theurgical practice which should be applied in the study of the Torah is a secret. God remarks that His servants, the angels, are sad about its being revealed. In addition, not only the jealousy of the angels is aroused by that revelation, but actually everybody on earth that is informed about this secret practice becomes envious. In fact, with the knowledge of the Torah come fame, riches and respect. It now becomes clear that ⁷⁶ For the development of this concept in Judaism see E. E. Urbach, The Sages, pp. 286 ff.

"the People of Israel" to whom God is reportedly speaking are in reality the mystics of the Merkavah, to whom it is promised that they will become the real leaders of the People. With this we actually return to the beginning of Hekhalot Rabbati where the qualities and virtues of the mystics are listed. It has been pointed out in our discussion there that these extraordinary qualities which are attributed to the Merkavah mystic probably belong to a period when no real mystical visions were anymore experienced. This alleged devaluation of the mystical experience had to be made up for in some manner, and hence the attempt to allure those who would carry on the tradition, by the promise of special social status and economic security. This part of the Sar-Torah ends with God remarking that the angels opposed His decision to reveal these theurgical means.

The essence of the angel's opposition is that if these secrets were revealed, men would actually become like angels. It is proper for the Torah to be studied with great effort; and it is to the glory of the Creator if people, because they forget what they have studied, have to repeat it constantly. People should pray to God to preserve their learning in their minds. "But if you reveal that secret to your sons, a young man will be like an old one, and a fool like a wise man". The angels seem to reflect in their words the opposition of certain Jewish circles who criticized the practices and possibly also the arrogance of the mystics. God, nevertheless, decided to disclose the secret to "the faithful seed", so as to compensate His People for their troubles in the exile. God has already given His People everything that he has in His storehouses: gold, silver, precious stones and all kinds of foods. "But what is the world still lacking?—This secret and this mystery!" After this secret had been revealed, so the story goes, the people returned to building the temple. However, it is stressed that God did not reveal His secret before His People forced Him by an oath to do so. They refrained from putting "one stone upon the other in the temple" before God acceded to their request. The text tells how God descended on His throne into the temple, and this only when the skeleton of the building was finished. This allegedly was to prove Haggai's prophecy (ii,9) that the glory of the second temple would be even greater than that of the first one.

Thus the author of the Sar-Torah believes that the revelation of the oral law together with the theurgical means of practising it distinguishes the days of the second temple from those of the first one. The actual theurgical means mentioned in the Sar-Torah appended to Hekhalot Rabbati are comparatively scanty. Those enumerated in Merkavah Rabbah and in Ma'aseh Merkavah are much more detailed ones. The essence of them all is that one has to prepare oneself by observing absolute ritual cleanliness and special diets or even fasts. In the Sar-Torah of Hekhalot Rabbati the preparatory practices are said to last twelve days, during which one has to live in absolute seclusion. Special prayers are to be said three times a day in the course of which the Sar-Torah (= the Minister of Law) is conjured by twelve secret names. "And when the twelve days have passed he may engage in every activity he wishes in connection with the study of the Law: whether it is Scripture, the Mishnah or the Talmud, and even beholding the Merkavah. For he now lives in purity and in asceticism. For it is a lesson in our hands, an ordinance of the patriarchs and a tradition of the ancient ones who wrote and issued the decree for future generations to the effect that only modest people may use it. And he who is worthy is answered when using it". It should be noticed that beholding the Merkavah is here considered a part of the Sar-Torah!

The last part of the Sar-Torah tells how Rabbi 'Eli'ezer Ha-Gadol performed the practice and was answered; but he did not trust its efficacy. Even Rabbi Yishma'el did not trust its efficacy before he brought a stupid man who went through the practice "and he became like me". Then it was performed by simple and unlearned shepherds and they likewise were successful. Finally Rabbi 'Akiva was sent to the diaspora and the secret of the Sar-Torah turned out to be efficacious even there. It is quite obvious that this last remark in connection with Rabbi 'Akiva was to indicate that people in Babylonia were anxious to show that the Merkavah practice was not limited to the Country of Israel. On the contrary, there are a number of instances—some of which will be discussed later on—which make it clear that in later days the Merkavah lore was mainly practised in the diaspora, first in Babylonia and then in Italy.⁷⁷ It is from Italy that the Merkavah tradition was transmitted to the circles of the German Hasidim.⁷⁸ Parallel to the transmission of the Merkavah lore to the diaspora we find the Sar-Torah speculations developed in the circles of the Ge'onim and the German Ḥasidim of the Middle Ages.⁷⁹

⁷⁷ See, for instance, the Merkavah material incorporated in Megillat Abima'az, ed. B. Klar, Jerusalem, Tarshish Books, 1973. The "Scroll" describes events which happened in Oria, in South Italy.

⁷⁸ See G. Scholem, Kabbalah, Jerusalem, Keter Publishing House, 1974, p. 33.

⁷⁹ See G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 13. Scholem also assumes that "it is . . . quite plausible that procedures for getting this angel (— of the Sar-Torah) to impart some of his treasures to the students of the Law could have been very old". But he admits that "we may safely assume that many of the injunctions for a perfect knowledge of the Law do in fact belong to a later stage".

MERKAVAH RABBAH

This is a compilation of several technical and difficult Merkavah texts. Its main subject matter is the theurgical techniques of adjuring angels to descend on earth and to reveal secrets to man. In this respect, Merkavah Rabbah has a number of similarities to the Sar-Torah practices as described in the chapters bearing that name and annexed to Hekhalot Rabbati. Merkavah Rabbah is printed in Musajoff's collection of Merkavah texts, Merkavah Shelemah, and it is also known from a number of manuscripts.¹ Our quotations here are from the manuscripts.

The text begins with a question which Rabbi 'Akiva asks Rabbi Eliezer Ha-Gadol: "How is the Minister of the Countenance adjured to descend on earth and to reveal to man the secrets of heaven and earth...?" Rabbi Eliezer's answer is: "My son, I once caused him to descend and he wanted to destroy the whole world. He is the most magnificent angel in the heavenly family, and is always standing and ministering to God...". What this answer seems to imply is that mystical experiences which are inadequately undertaken are liable to bring disaster. We have already seen that unworthy mystics were liable to endanger themselves in the course of the heavenly journeys which they should not have undertaken. In our case, the adjured angel threatens to bring destruction on "the whole world". However, the words "the whole world" may be understood metaphorically as implying the mystic only. It is not said what had been done wrong that aroused the angel's wrath, but his hostile behaviour is no surprise to those who should know of the angels' hostile attitude to men. However, the text goes into great detail to describe what should be done to control the angel and to protect oneself from his threats. It soon becomes clear that, as in the case of the ascending mystic so also in our case the mystic adjuring angels to descend has to seal himself with special protective magical seals. In our case, the prescribed seal is that of the Name of the Forty-Two Letters,² upon the sealing of which on himself the practitioner has to say a special prayer: "I adjure you and constrain you by an oath to continue to be bound to my will... and fulfil my wish: Do not frighten me, and do not make me tremble... And I shall be strengthened so that the oath shall be pronounced properly and the Name shall be well ordered in my mouth³... Thus I shall not be devoured by the fire, by the blaze, by the storm and by the whirlwind which are accompanying you".

¹ See Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 6, n. 15.

² The question what is the Name of the Forty-Two Letters has not yet been conclusively settled and this in spite of the recent article published on the subject by L. H. Schiffman in the Bulletin of the Institute of Jewish Studies I (1973), pp. 97-102. In fact, one can find in magical literature a variety of ways in which the rather enigmatic name of Forty-Two Letters—first mentioned in a tradition that allegedly goes back to temple times—was to be rendered. See Bavli Qidushin 71a.

But even before the seal is applied and its prayer is said, certain preparations have to be made by the mystic. Again we hear of fasts, ritual baths and incantations which constitute the mystic's practice of self-preparation. Thus, we realize that as a matter of theurgical practice there was no essential difference between the means prescribed in the case of ascensions and those to be followed when angels were adjured to descend on earth. Yet, it seems that in the case of the adjuration of an angel more room is allowed for describing the magical names and their applications. In fact, there are two sets of names: the one which is said in the manner called Meforash and the other in the manner referred to as Kinuy.⁴ The Name—Meforash generally is a name of an angel taken from the more or less common inventory of angelic names, while the name in the Kinuy-mode is a nomen barbarum to which certain combinations of the letters Y, H and W are added.⁵ The number of these double-names in our case is fourteen, four of which are said to be engraved on the heads of the Holy Creatures, four on the four corners of the Throne, four on the four crowns of the Ofanim who stand opposite of the Holy Creatures, and two are engraved on the crown of God. Curiously, the names which are said to be thus engraved are not identical with the ones that are uttered in the course of the previously mentioned adjurations. After the names have been uttered, the mystic repeats his request: "I swear you, I constrain you and bind you to hasten and to descend to me I, N. son of N., you and not your messenger. And when you descend, I should not be driven out of my mind. And reveal to me all the hidden things that are on high and below... as a man who speaks to his friend".

³ The meaning of this request most probably is that the forty-two letters of the Holy Name should be said in the right order.

⁴ Professor Scholem explains Meforash as "a secret name" while Kinuy is understood by him as meaning "a name that may be pronounced". See in Zeitschrift für die Neutestamentliche Wissenschaft XXX (1931), p. 175. However, this habit of giving double-names to deities, and then to angels in magical practices, seems to be very old. In Jewish tradition we know that the name of God was pronounced in one way in the temple and in another way out of the temple. See Mishnah Sotah vii,6 and Tamid vii,2. See also Mishnah Sanhedrin vii,5 and the discussions in both Talmuds: Bavli 56a ff.; Yerushalmi 25a ff. Since there is a vast literature on the subject, so suffice it here to mention only J. Z. Lauterbach, "Substitutes for the Tetragrammaton", Proceedings of the American Academy for Jewish Research II (1930-31), p. 39 ff.; and Z. Ben Hayyim in Sefer Eretz Yisrael III (1954) p. 147 ff. (in Hebrew). It seems that in later magical literature the magicians, or writers, praised themselves with the knowledge of the double reading of the names without paying too much attention to the fact which of the two was the secret one.

⁵ Sometimes, however, the difference between the two kinds of names is hardly discernable. Thus, for example, we find the name Meforash KNGIALIYA, and its Kinuy ZZMKHT SYYHU YH WYHWH. The only difference can be observed in the addition of Y-H-W-element in the case of the Kinuy-name.

However, it appears, one round of incantations and all that they contain seems not to have had its desired effect, and the mystic is compelled to repeat: "Once again I call you with five names, the holiest ones of your names... you have been ordered by God that when you hear an oath containing these names, you will do honour to your name. And hasten and do the will of the one who adjures you. And if you delay, I shall push you into a river of fire,⁶ and replace you by another one who is under your command...". But even this turns out to be insufficient; the angel still seems not to be constrained, so the mystic invokes him again: "I call you once again, in the greatest of your names, a lovely and pleasant (name), (by which you are called) in the name of your Master. Your name has one letter less than His,⁷ and by that name He created and founded everything and sealed by it all the work of His hands".⁸ The first part of Merkavah Rabbah ends with what seems to be a prayer which should be said on the angel's departure: "Ascend in peace, and I shall not be terrified at the hour of your departure from me". Again names are to be uttered in combination with certain phrases from Scripture.

The second part of Merkavah Rabbah contains two prayers called ⁶ The word used here for river, Rigyon, is not clear. See Y. Levy, Studies in Jewish Hellenism (in Hebrew), Jerusalem, Bialik Institute, 1969, pp. 264-265, who suggests to interpret the word as the stream of lava flowing from a volcano.

⁷ In the Hekhalot fragments published by the present writer in Tarbiz XXXVIII, pp. 257-358, it is said that the secret name of God contains five letters: TNR'EL! In that case the name of the angel here is of four letters.

⁸ Again it is said that the name has two modes. This time they are called Perush and Lesbon Toborah. These two modes are to all likelihood parallel to the ones mentioned before.

“The Great Seal” and “The Awesome Crown”.⁹ There is nothing particularly magical about these prayers, though it is said in the name of Rabbi Yishmael: “Everybody who practises the Great Seal and Awesome Crown¹⁰ and does not say prayers on each of them is likely to be hurt”.

The third part of the book contains a mystical elaboration on the short Synadelphon passage in Bavli Hagigah 13b. Briefly, the “Secret of Synadelphon”, as it is here called, is the theurgical practice that is to bring illumination (’Or) into the mystic’s heart.¹¹ In all likelihood, what is here meant is an inner illumination concerning the study of the Torah, that is a practice similar to the one of the Sar-Torah which is also sometimes called Or-Torah (= the Light of the Torah).¹² New in our passage is the fact that the names of the angels are not only said but also written down. The practice of writing the names of angels for theurgical purposes is also known from the Sar-Torah passages in the Ma’aseh Merkavah published by G. Scholem¹³ and is also frequent in magical texts, such as Sefer Ha-Razim.

Following this Sar Torah section comes another section which contains a series of prescriptions for magical practices, mainly those performed on certain dates throughout the year. There are prescriptions for practices which are performed on the Jewish Feast of the Weeks (Shavu’ot), on New Year Day, on New Moon Day and on the first day of the Month of ’Adar. It seems that these practices are connected with the prediction of events, at least nothing to the contrary is indicated in the text. The common procedure in all these practices is that the practitioner writes the names on leaves of plants or on his finger nails and then puts them into his mouth so as to delete the holy names with his saliva. Only the practice of the first

⁹ This part is not printed in Merkavah Shelemah 3a. However, the prayer of the Awesome Crown is printed thereafter on page 6a (at the beginning of Hekhalot Zutreti). [See also above p. 167, n. 62].

¹⁰ Here the terms are used to indicate certain theurgical practices which are not described in the text. See Hekhalot Rabbati xxviii, 3-4 (Sar-Torah).

¹¹ In this respect, it is interesting to compare this passage with the ones containing the phrase “to lighten one’s heart” and the like in the Qumran writings, 1 QS II, 3; IV, 2 etc. See now M. Kister, “Levi = Light” (in Hebrew), Tarbiz XLV (1976), pp. 327-330.

¹² That this is the case can be seen from the five shepherds which are mentioned here and at the end of the Sar-Torah sections appended to Hekhalot Rabbati.

¹³ Interestingly, the angel Synadelphon is also mentioned there—together with Metatron—in a similar context. See Ma’aseh Merkavah, paragraph 19, p. 111.

day of the last month of the year, 'Adar,¹⁴ breaks this rule: In this particular case the names are written on the inside of a silver bowl and then wine is poured into it in order to delete the names. It seems that the deletion of the names here is not part of the practice itself, but on the contrary, marks its cessation.¹⁵ The power of the spell or the charm is broken when the names are deleted.¹⁶ But we know from Sefer Ha-Razim that in certain cases the ink with which holy names were written was deleted in oil and then a charm was said over that oil.¹⁷

The next section of the text is again devoted to the Sar-Torah.¹⁸ What is of particular interest in this part of the text is that it establishes the alleged sequence of the esoteric tradition in Judaism: God "revealed the secrets of the secrets and the mysteries of the mysteries to Moses, and Moses to Joshu'a, and Joshu'a to the Elders, and the Elders to the Prophets, and the Prophets to the Hasidim (the Pious Ones), and the Hasidim to those who feared God,¹⁹ and those who feared God to the Men of the Great Assembly, and the Men of the Great Assembly revealed them to all the People of Israel.²⁰ And the People of Israel were learning with their help the Torah and multiplying its study". The fact that the secret of the Sar-Torah was revealed to all the People of Israel reminds of the Sar-Torah text appended to ¹⁴ It seems that the magical year began in Nissan; see Sefer Ha-Razim, p. 101 (lines 13-14). New Year Day, however, signifies the first of Tisbri. See further Mishnah Rosh Ha-Shanah i,1. See also S. Lieberman, Tosefta Ki-Fshutab to Rosh Ha-Shanah, pp. 1017 ff.

¹⁵ However, the unfaithful woman (Sotah) is brought to test by drinking the water of bitterness into which the priest washes off curses written on a scroll. These curses contain the Holy Name. See Numbers v,16 ff., and Mishnah Sotah, chapter ii. The water of bitterness which contains the washed-off ink in which the holy name was written has no holiness whatever and may be spilt, if the woman admits her unfaithfulness before she drinks of it. See Tosefta Sotah ii,2.

¹⁶ In Sefer Ha-Razim we find magical practices which entail the saying of names or charms on vessels of water. See Margalioth's Introduction p. 5 (where also parallels from the Papyri Graecae Magicae are quoted).

¹⁷ See Sefer Ha-Razim, pp. 71-72; 102.

¹⁸ In MS. Oxford 1531 it is preceded by the story of the four who entered the Pardes. This version of the story is the same one as the one in Hekhalot Zutreti. In Merkavah Shelemah we find instead of the Pardes-story an interpolation of a mystical-eschatological nature which is also printed in Bei Ha-Midrash V, pp. 167 ff.; and in Midreshei Ge'ulah (ed. Even Shemuel), pp. 3 ff.

¹⁹ Obviously, the term "those who feared God" (Yir'ei Ha-Shem) is not used here in its ancient technical sense as "half proselytes". On the technical use of the term see, for instance, S. Pines in the Proceedings of the Israel Academy of Sciences and Humanities II/7 (1967).

²⁰ The dependence of this list on Mishnah 'Avot i,1 is self-evident.

Hekhalot Rabbati. However, we saw there that the words "all the People" could be understood in a less democratic way; in fact, they seemed to imply there the "aristocracy" of the Merkavah mystics.

In connection with this Sar-Torah section another section dealing with the same subject is introduced.²¹ Rabbi Yishma'el tells how at the age of thirteen Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah saw him "in great grief". The reason for that grief was that Rabbi Yishma'el was quickly forgetting all his studies. Nothing that Rabbi Yishma'el did helped in bringing about a change in that sad condition. He was leading an ascetic way of life and still no change occurred. So Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah took him from his father's house, brought him to the temple, and there made him take the Oath of the Great Seal. As it happened, this oath was the one of the Secret of the Torah. Immediately, so the pseudohistorical story goes, Rabbi Yishma'el experienced an illumination of the Torah and thus he no longer forgot his studies. Evidently, Rabbi Yishma'el felt himself as if born anew and "everyday it seemed to me as if I was standing before the Throne of the Glory". This last remark is a most interesting one: it betrays the fact that the Sar-Torah experience was considered a substitute for the ascension unto the heavenly Merkavah. When Rabbi 'Akiva saw all this, he told Rabbi Yishma'el to return to Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah and to ask him to reveal the details of that particular practice. Rabbi Nehunyah gave the following answer: "Go back and report the following answer: The servants are sworn in the name of their king and the slave²² is sworn in the name of his master". Rabbi 'Akiva easily understood this hint and consequently "his mouth pronounced names while his fingers were counting a hundred and eleven times".

Merkavah Rabbah ends with a detailed description, attributed to Rabbi Yishma'el, of how the practice of the Sar-Torah should be carried out. It is made clear that the main practice is to be performed in the morning when one gets out of bed. Then one should wash one's hands twice and anoint them with oil. Then one puts on the Tefilin and stands before one's bed to pray. It again becomes clear that the theurgical prayers are said in the course of the daily prayers which every Jew is expected to say. In addition to the names and theurgical prayers said in the course of the adjuration of the Sar-Torah, one has to lead an ascetic life for forty days. It is important to notice that in one of the concluding sentences of the text it is reported that Rabbi 'Akiva learnt all this from before of the Throne of Glory and was told to teach the secret to his colleagues. This is reminiscent of what is said in Hekhalot Rabbati about Rabbi 'Akiva and the special manner in which he learnt the heavenly songs.

²¹ This section bears strong resemblance to the Sar-Torah paragraphs in Ma'aseh Merkavah, §§ 11 ff.

²² It soon becomes clear that the slave, 'Eved, is Metatron. For the appellation 'Eved as directed to Metatron, see H. Odeberg, 3 Enoch x, p. 28, n. (3). The text which Odeberg identifies there as "Hekhalot Zotreti" in the Oxford MS. is in fact—as has already been recognized by G. Scholem—nothing but our Merkavah Rabbah.

MA'ASEH MERKAVAH

This is the text which Professor Scholem published in Appendix C to his Jewish Gnosticism, Merkavah Mysticism and Talmudic Tradition.¹ The text is an interesting combination of two kinds of Merkavah traditions: heavenly ascents and adjurations of angels in connection with the Sar-Torah practices. Our quotations will be according to the paragraph division in Scholem's edition.

The first part of the book consists of paragraphs 1-10. Its main subject matter is the incantations that should be said before and in the course of the ascensions. This part also contains a description of the seven Hekhalot. The text begins with a question which Rabbi Yishmael asked Rabbi 'Akiva: "What is the prayer which one should pray when one ascends (!) to the Merkavah?". In answer to that, a short prayer is quoted in which the mystic blesses God for revealing the secrets to Moses. As we know from other texts, the "secrets" mentioned here should be understood in a technical sense: they are magical or theurgical practices. In paragraph 3 Rabbi 'Akiva describes the heavenly bridges on which the singing angels stand. These bridges connect the vestibules of all the Hekhalot and they are stretched "like a bridge across the river so that everybody may cross them".² There are a hundred and twenty million of such bridges, half of which are stretched above the vestibule and the other half below. There are also rivers of fire, rivers of hailstone, treasuries of snow and wheels of fire—all of which encircle the angels that stand on the bridges.

In paragraph 4 the question is asked: "How can one look at them?" To This Rabbi 'Akiva replies: "I prayed a prayer of compassion, and in this manner I was saved". It is said that he who wants to study

¹ The first edition of the book was published in 1960. Before the publication of the Second Improved Edition the present writer has reexamined the manuscripts from which Professor Scholem printed the text of Appendix C. However, for technical reasons not all the corrections could be introduced into the text. In addition to MSS. Oxford and New York which were used by Professor Scholem, one has to refer to MSS. Munich 22 and 40, both of which contain only parts of the text.

² The paragraphs which describe these bridges are also printed separately in Bet Ha-Midrash VI, pp. 153-154, and as chapter 22b and c in Odeberg's edition of 3 Enoch. See further G. Scholem, Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism, p. 71; and Hekhalot Rabbati xiii,1.

this secret (of the ascension) should "learn it every day at dawn, and he should clean himself of all injustice, fraud and evil, so that ROZAYA, Lord God of Israel, will do him justice every day in this world... and it is promised that he will enjoy future life". There follows the first of the Merkavah hymns which the text contains. It should be noticed that Ma'aseh Merkavah contains two types of hymns: The first type lacks the ecstatic quality of the hymns we meet in Hekhalot Rabbati and thus resembles common religious poetry. These hymns are written like Psalms, giving expression to the poet's praise of God and enumerating His omnipotence and omniscience. The mystical setting comes to the fore almost in passing when the angels and their heavenly duties are referred to or described. A typical example of this kind of Merkavah hymns is the famous "Alenu le-Shabe'ah" ("we have to give praise") which is also known from the daily Jewish prayerbook.³ Had it not been for their context, we would not even have noticed the relationship of this type of hymns to the Hekhalot literature. The other type of hymns included in Ma'aseh Merkavah is that of the series of "prayers" at the end of the book (paragraphs 26-33). These "prayers" are a classic example of Merkavah hymns. What is particularly interesting in them are the long series of magical and theurgical voces which they contain. In this respect they resemble the magical prayers, the ἐπαοιδαί, of the magical papyri. In tone and structure these "prayers" also resemble the hymns of Hekhalot Rabbati, the only difference being that the latter do not contain the lists of magical names. It may thus be argued that the "prayers" of Ma'aseh Merkavah are the only ones of their kind that so clearly expose their theurgical function. In fact, one may argue that what the hymns of Hekhalot Rabbati practically lack is that very theurgical element so forcefully displayed in the hymns of Ma'aseh Merkavah. Indeed, the question arises whether the Hekhalot Rabbati hymns were not actually deprived of those so-to-speak non-poetical elements. If that is so, though there is no evidence for it in any of the manuscripts, then the Ma'aseh Merkavah "prayers" represent a more original phase of Hekhalot hymnology than do their counterparts in Hekhalot-Rabbati.⁴

³ In Ma'aseh Merkavah this prayer is introduced in the singular form 'Alai (I have to) instead of the plural form known from the prayer books. See also I. Elbogen, Der jüdische Gottesdienst, Reprint: Hildesheim, Olms, 1962, pp. 80-81, 143.

⁴ See, however, A. Altman in Melilab II (1946), p. 8 ff. (in Hebrew), who thinks that the second type of the hymns of Ma'aseh-Merkavah belongs to a later

The theurgical function of the hymns belonging to the first type is nevertheless indicated in the several utterances which accompany them. Thus, for instance, we read: "Rabbi 'Akiva said: After I had prayed this prayer, I saw 6400000000 angels of glory standing before the Throne of Glory and I saw the knot of the Tefillin of Gedudiya,⁵ Lord God of Israel, and I gave praise with all my limbs" (paragraph 5).⁶ In another place it is again said in the name of Rabbi 'Akiva: "Blessed is the man who stands and with all his power sings hymns to Barukhiya, Lord God of Israel. He gazes at the Merkavah and sees all that is done before the Throne of Glory upon which Barukhiya, Lord God of Israel, is sitting" (paragraph 8). And in paragraph 9 we read: "In the sixth palace I said the Qedushah before Him who said and created (the world); and He ordered that none of the Angels of the Service should destroy me". This last quotation refers us to one of the most interesting problems connected with the Hekhalot hymns. It is generally believed that there is a strong connection between these hymns and the Qedushah poems in the prayerbook. That the Qedushah (Isaiah vi,3 and Ezekiel iii,12) is a very old element in Jewish liturgy need not be proved here. We know that one of the first literary documents in which the angelic hymnology was taken as a model for human liturgy is the one in the angelic liturgy at Qumran, which in turn should be viewed within the general context of Jewish apocalyptic.⁷ But this does not mean that the idea of the correspondence between celestial hymnology and human liturgical service is a registered patent of the apocalyptists. As far as we know, the apocage than the first one. If Scholem's view, that the theurgical elements of the Hekhalot literature belong to the earliest stratum of that literature, is correct, then there is no basis for Altman's view. See Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 75: "The theurgical element was not a later addition to the texts but a basic component, one which the editors of such books as the Greater Hekhaloth, 3 Enoch, and the Massekhet Hekhalot attempted to minimize or to discard entirely." Scholem recognizes the importance of Ma'aseh Merkavah, but I am reluctant to agree with him that the text represents a stage of "a progressive hypertrophy of this (theurgical) material as to amount to a process of degeneration" (ibid.).

⁵ Interestingly, the attribute of Synadelphon, who crowns God with the Tefilin as described in Merkavah Rabbah (based on the story in Bavli Hagigah 13b), is Gedud. See in Merkavah Shelemah 1a (beginning).

⁶ In Bavli Hagigah 13b it is noticed that nobody can see God, and consequently it is impossible to crown God with His Tefilin. The solution suggested there is that Synadelphon actually conjures the Tefilin and they go up and place themselves on the right spot. In our text, it appears, Rabbi 'Akiva is described as having been allowed to see more than the angel in Hagigah.

⁷ See our discussion above in Chapter Two.

alypists were mainly those who developed the Qedushah to what it became both in the Hekhalot writings and in the daily service. It is likely that those who composed the relevant sections in the prayer-book were familiar with so-called esoteric hymnology, but this again does not mean that everything in the prayer book that refers to the angels derives from apocalyptic or Hekhalot writings. On the other hand we may argue that at least in the case of some of the later Hekhalot writings, knowledge of the prayer book has to be assumed. But nothing absolutely certain in either direction can be proved and we may leave the issue open at this point assuming that Jewish liturgy and the Hekhalot writings were mutually influenced in their concepts of the earthly and heavenly Qedushah.

Where the concept of Hekhalot hymnology in Ma'aseh Merkavah also differs from its counterpart in Hekhalot Rabbati is in the fact that according to Ma'aseh Merkavah there are thousands upon thousands of chariots in each of the heavenly palaces which are said to give praise to God. The praise they give is not in the form of hymns but in the form of short doxologies, which remind of their counterpart in the various Qedushah-sections in the prayer book and in apocalyptic literature (see particularly Ma'aseh Merkavah, paragraph 6).

The second part of Ma'aseh Merkavah belongs to the Sar-Torah practices (paragraphs 11-22). It is probably the longest and most detailed Sar-Torah piece that we have, though in paragraph 17 an interesting transition from the Sar-Torah to the Hekhalot speculations occurs. Like the Sar-Torah section in Merkavah Rabbah, it begins with a statement made by Rabbi Yishma'el to the effect that everything that he is about to tell happened when at the age of thirteen ⁸ he was fasting in order to receive the revelation of the Sar-Torah. When Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah disclosed the secrets of the Sar-Torah, that is, after Rabbi Yishma'el had received the necessary theurgical information as we find it explicated mainly in Merkavah Rabbah and in Hekhalot Rabbati, Suriyah, the Prince of the Countenance, revealed himself to Rabbi Yishma'el and told him: "The Prince (= Sar) of the Torah is called Yofiel,⁹ and everybody who wants him (to appear) should fast for forty days.¹⁰ He should eat his morsel ⁸ See Mishnah Ḥagigah v,24.

⁹ See S. Leiter, in: Proceedings of the American Academy for Jewish Research XLI-XLII (1973-1974), p. 144. However, this place escaped his eye.

¹⁰ The forty days should be reminiscent of the forty days which Moses spent on Mount Sinai to receive the Torah. Deuteronomy ix,9: "I remained on the in salt and eat nothing that defiles the body. He should immerse himself twenty-four times,¹¹ and he should not gaze on any coloured clothes.¹² He should cast his eyes at the ground only.¹³ He should say his prayer with all his might, and concentrate himself on his prayer. He should seal himself with his seals and say twelve spells".¹⁴

Particular attention in the Sar-Torah practices of Ma'aseh Merkavah deserve the things which the mystic has to do in order to guard himself against evil demons (Maṣiqim). In fact, our text is one of the rare examples in the Hekhalot literature that refers to the evil spirits. Generally, we know, the mystic has to protect himself against the angels of destruction. These angels have no demonic role, and it is, thus, noteworthy that in Ma'aseh Merkavah special performances are devoted to the protection against those evil spirits. Thus, for example, we read: "He should lift his eyes to heaven so that he might not die. He should stand up and say a name and give praise, so that all his limbs should be sealed. Wisdom and insight are in his heart. He should offer a prayer to the Sar-Torah. And he should draw a circle on the ground¹⁵ and stand in its midst, so that the evil spirits shall not come and appear to him as angels and kill him"! (paragraph 11, end). In another place, the practitioner asks for protection against destructive angels and evil spirits alike: "And I said three names . . . so that the angels and the evil spirits should not touch me" (paragraph 15, end).

mountain forty days and forty nights; I neither ate bread nor drank water". See also 1 Kings xix,8. See also the discussion, above in Chapter Four.

¹¹ I find it difficult to account for that number.

¹² See Mishnah Megillah iv,8. It should, however, be noticed that coloured clothes worn by women were considered as having a tempting effect on men. See Mishnah Zavin ii,2; Bavli Yevamot 76a; Bavli 'Avodah Zarah 20a-b. See also Yalkut Shim'oni to Beresbit, paragraph 44. Compare Ethiopic Enoch viii,1 (Greek Version).

¹³ For that kind of posture, see Scholem, Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism, p. 49.

¹⁴ The Hebrew word used here is Davar, which in a magical context always means "a spell" or "a charm".

¹⁵ The drawing of circles for magical purposes is a widespread technique. However, in the Hekhalot literature this is the only occurrence of that particular practice. We know of Ḥoni, the circle maker, who drew a circle before he prayed to God for rain: "... I swear by Your great name that I shall not move until You have had mercy upon Your children". See Mishnah Ta'anit iii,8. In the light of what we have seen in the present study, the magical functions of Ḥoni's practice and prayer need no further comment. See A. Büchler, Types of Jewish-Palestinian Piety, Reprint: New York, Ktav Publishing House, 1968, pp. 196 ff. Büchler collected many relevant sources but was not aware of their connection to popular magic. See also the discussion in G. Alon, Studies in Jewish History I, Tel Aviv: 1957, pp. 194 ff. (in Hebrew).

In paragraph 14 Rabbi Yishma'el reports of an interesting, though somewhat terrifying, experience he has had: "I was fasting for twelve days, and when I realized that I could not endure it any longer, I used the name of forty-two letters and the angel PDKRS descended in anger. He said to me: 'You most disgraceful man, I am not going to give in before you sit (in fast) for forty days'. I was shocked and said three letters and he ascended... And I was fasting for forty days, praying three prayers in the morning, three at noon time and three in the evening, and every time I said twelve theurgical formulae. On the last day I prayed three times and said twelve "words". Consequently PDKRS, the Angel of the Countenance, and some angels of compassion, descended and planted wisdom into my heart".

Another theurgical practice is described in the Aramaic part of the book (paragraphs 18-20). It is again connected with the secret of the Sar-Torah, and in contradistinction to the other Sar-Torah practices this one should be performed at the beginning of the Month of Sivan. Here too the mystic has to perform the usual practices of fasting, special diets, immersion and praying. However, in this particular case new elements are added. First, it is said that the mystic should not sleep alone, so that he will not be harmed. This may be due to the role the evil spirits played in the mind of the writer(s) of this text. Then, the mystic has to take a leaf of a fig tree, three olive-leaves,¹⁶ a silver goblet, some wine and an egg.¹⁷ With everyone of these objects he has to perform magical practices. For example, the practitioner has to say the following adjuration on the leaf taken from the fig tree: "I adjure you, Synadelphon, the angel who ties a crown to his master, that you shall go up (!) and tell those two angels, Metatron and 'AGMITYA, that they should (plant) wisdom into the heart of that man (= that is, the practitioner himself), so that I shall know and be wise, learn without forgetting, study without forgetting...". The other objects are used in similar manner.

Already before this Aramaic part of the book the text quotes another of Rabbi Yishma'el's questions: "I asked Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah: when one says the twelve words how can one gaze at the glory of the Shekhinah?"¹⁸ Here an interesting transition occurs:

¹⁶ On the writing on olive-leaves see S. Lieberman, Tosefta Ki-Fshutah to Shabbat, p. 176, n. 29.

¹⁷ For the use of eggs in magical practices see S. Daiches, Babylonian Oil Magic in the Talmud and in Later Jewish Literature, London, 1913, pp. 7 ff.

¹⁸ Paragraph 17.

Rabbi Yishma'el inquires if the theurgical practice used in the case of the Sar-Torah is also applicable in the case of the descent unto the Merkavah. We have already observed that the Sar-Torah apparently developed from the Merkavah practices and that it probably was a substitute to the latter ones. Here we see that the mystic wants to reverse the process: from Sar-Torah theurgy to the Merkavah vision. Indeed, the subject of the Merkavah vision is again taken up in paragraph 21, but in paragraph 22 the two subjects are for a moment linked together again: "Rabbi Yishma'el said: When I received this information from Rabbi Nehunyah ben Ha-Qanah I stood on my feet and asked him all the names of the ministers of wisdom (Sarei Hal-Iokhmah).¹⁹ As a result of that question I saw light in my heart comparable to the light of the first days of the creation of the world".²⁰ When Rabbi Yishma'el stood up and saw his face shining with his wisdom,²¹ he uttered the names of all the angels that were guarding the seven palaces. However, the names of these angels are only seldom identical with the ones listed in Hekhalot Rabbati xv. The differences could be explained either by the existence of parallel traditions, or by the fact that in the course of their oral or written transmission these lists underwent changes. In addition, the distinction made in Hekhalot Rabbati as to the alternate lists of angels on the way in and on the way out is not repeated here.

The third part of Ma'aseh Merkavah is mainly devoted to the five prayers that should be said during the descent to and ascent from the Merkavah.²² As already indicated above, these prayers include marked theurgical elements. The flow of each hymn is broken in the middle by lists of theurgical names and words. The text ends with two additional hymns which help the mystic gaze at the Shekhinah (paragraphs 32-33).

¹⁹ This is a clear reference to the procedure described in Hekhalot Rabbati xxi,3.

²⁰ The literal translation here would be: "light . . . like the days of the heavens". However, my translation takes into account the aggadic sayings about the storing away of the light that was shining before the fourth day of the creation. See Beresheet Rabba, p. 21 and parallels.

²¹ See Sifre to Numbers (ed. Horowitz), p. 44, paragraph 41 (beginning).

²² Paragraphs 26-31.

"HEKHALOT" FRAGMENTS

These "Hekhalot" Fragments, published by the present writer in Tarbiz XXXVIII (1969), pp. 354-372,¹ from Genizah fragments at the University Library at Cambridge, are a clear proof that not all the once extant Merkavah texts reached us. Apparently, some of the writings were altogether lost; others were only fragmentarily preserved.² However, it seems that the basic texts, which had a wider circulation than the others, were preserved. The "Hekhalot" fragments which we shall discuss here seem to be part of two different compositions, and they are of special interest for a number of reasons. Firstly, although they extensively quote from Hekhalot Rabbati, they contain material that was hitherto unknown to us. Secondly, these fragments, at least the first one, contain historical—though enigmatic—references. Finally, they claim to be a systematic angelic revelation: it is the angel who describes the celestial world to the mystic, and not the mystic who experiences a heavenly ascent. The angel teaches the mystic "the study of the descent unto the Merkavah". It seems that the complete texts described the details of the descent from the very beginning, that is, from the stages of the preparation, until the entrance into the seventh Hekhal. Unfortunately, what was preserved of the texts belongs only to the last stage of the ascent. To make the loss even more painful, some of the lines are badly damaged and it is almost impossible to reconstruct them.

The MS begins with some mutilated lines which make no sense. Then follows a description of the creation of the world in the metaphorical terms of the weaver's work. The description derives from Hekhalot Rabbati xiv.1,³ though some interesting details are added.⁴ Then comes a considerably long passage (lines 13-23) which—in a ¹ Additional notes were published in Tarbiz XXXIX (1969), pp. 216-217.

² The present writer knows of more Genizah material relating to the Hekhalot literature which he hopes to publish in due course.

³ See our discussion there.

⁴ What is added is mainly the description of the whip with which God is described to have beaten heaven and earth after their creation. Professor S. Lieberman suggested to me that this part of the description is a reference to the stick which the weaver uses to harden the finished piece of cloth. See Tosefta Shabbat viii(ix),2, and S. Lieberman, Tosefta Ki-Fshutah to Shabbat, p. 107. However, the description as a whole still seems to be unclear.

highly enigmatic manner—refers to one of the leaders of Babylonian Jewry whose name, consisting of five letters, has been fixed from the days of the creation of the world. The whole passage sounds like political propaganda in favour of a certain leader who seeks divine support for the position for which he is campaigning, or else has to defend himself against some unidentified opponents (cf. Hekhalot Rabbati xxviii, 5).

In line 23 the angel turns to the Merkavah mystic and says: “And now return, my friend, to the study of the descent unto the Merkavah which I was explicating to you and teaching you: thus one descends and thus one ascends; this is the quality of the first Hekhal; and thus does one conjure, and thus does one adjure. For I have interrupted you! And now write it down and leave the seal of the descent unto the Merkavah to all the people of the world, and to everybody who wants to descend and cast a glance at the King and at His Beauty. He will take that path and see without being hurt. I have written it for you on a scroll, and you saw it, and then you descended and saw. You tried it out without being hurt, because I made all the paths of the Merkavah to you like light. . .”. The passage speaks for itself. Here a unique procedure is recorded: the angel had taught the Merkavah mystic all the necessary things in connection with the mystical ascent; the mystic then followed his instructions, and afterwards the angel and the mystic met for a further discussion of the matters involved. No similar procedure is known from any of the other Hekhalot writings.

Then follows a long section (lines 28-38) which describes the various dangers and temptations that might befall the Merkavah mystic in his passage from one Hekhal to the other. In fact, the mystic resembles a man who loses his way in a wood and suddenly arrives at a place full of all kinds of beasts which attack him and threaten to tear him to pieces. However, the mystic who uses his seals correctly is not hurt. In line 38 we find the angel turning to the mystic: “And return, my friend, to the theurgical means,⁵ about which you have been warned concerning the sixth Hekhal. . . so that you shall not be destroyed”. The angel describes the various kinds of fires emerging from the seventh Hekhal, and he tells the mystic that when he sees these fires, he should step aside and not stand in the middle of the doorway. However, knowing that the mystic will be frightened by that vision, the angel gives him the following instructions. "If you are standing, sit; and if you are sitting, lie down; and if you are lying on your back, lie with your face down; and if you are lying with your face down, stick the nails of your fingers and your toes into the ground of the firmament. And put cotton in your ears, and cotton in your nose, and cotton in your rectum so that your soul shall not depart from your body until I come [to your rescue]...!" This again is a most extraordinary description, and no parallel to it is found in any of the other Hekhalot texts.

⁵ The term used here is Siman, (Greek: σῆμα) which may be taken here to refer to the seal(s) with which the mystic protects himself against the hostile angels. However, similar terminology is used in Hekhalot Zutreti (in MS. New York [Jewish Theological Seminary] Mic. 8128, fol. 23a), and there the Siman is used in the sense of warning.

The greatest part of the text (pp. 361-367) describes what is happening in the seventh Hekhal. Again, many lines in the manuscript are badly damaged, but their subject matter seems to be the various steps the angel takes to rescue the mystic. When the mystic enters the seventh Hekhal he sees Metatron (Na'ar) coming from behind the Throne of Glory. His appearance is a most wonderful one, and he places the mystic on a seat before the Throne of Glory. A great deal that is said in the text hereafter is in the form of short remarks on various mystical subjects. Among the subjects mentioned is the Sar-Torah (p. 366, lines 36-37).⁶ In another place (p. 369, line 20) the Sar-Talmud is mentioned. It appears that our text maintained the traditional connection between the Merkavah material and the Sar-Torah speculation. We cannot end this short description of the text without pointing out its elaborate angelology. Many of the names of the angels mentioned in the text are unknown from other sources. In addition, some of the mystical names attributed to God in our text are likewise unknown from parallel sources.

With all its curiosities and oddities, the "Hekhalot" Fragments seem to represent a hitherto unknown line of development within the Merkavah tradition. On the one hand, we find in it long quotations from Hekhalot Rabbati,⁷ and on the other hand great portions of the text display completely new Hekhalot material. The colophon, which is partly preserved, mentions the "seven great and little palaces", which could well be a reference to Hekhalot Rabbati ("The Greater Hekhalot") and to Hekhalot Zutreti ("The Smaller Hekhalot"), thus indicating some of the sources of the text or its all-encompassing quality.

⁶ See also p. 371, lines 10-12; and p. 372, lines 20-28.

⁷ There are also references to short quotations from other Hekhalot writings; e.g. p. 370, line 48.

SEFER HEKHALOT (3 ENOCH)

Sefer Hekhalot, or as it became known: 3 Enoch, is probably the best known Hekhalot text. Odeberg's famous edition of the book, which also contains an English translation and commentary, made the book available to the scholarly world. In spite of all its deficiencies,¹ Odeberg's edition has done justice to the subject, and in many cases his commentary and long introduction contain interesting and valuable material. Sefer Hekhalot is the longest and most complex of the Hekhalot writings, and by the manner in which it fuses together a number of esoteric traditions it can be viewed as a romance or grand summary of the Jewish apocalyptic and mystical traditions.

Although it is clear that the book draws its material from a variety of sources, it is not always possible to identify them and to assess the special manner in which the book uses them. Even in the case of the Hekhalot material incorporated in the book it is not always easy to show where it derived from. From the manner in which the writer, or compiler, of the book put his material together we may conclude that it is not an original work, as for example Hekhalot Rabbati or even Sefer Ha-Razim are. In fact, Sefer Hekhalot fuses traditions together in a rather artificial way, and one is justified in characterizing it as an eclectic composition. In addition, the writer, or compiler, of the book used his terminology in a rather loose, even careless, manner, and the reader sometimes wonders at the degree of literary degeneration the Hekhalot literature has reached with Sefer Hekhalot. In fact, none of the original components of the Hekhalot writings are present in Sefer Hekhalot. Nothing is said in it about the special technique of the ascent; it lacks any reference to the theurgical means which protect the mystic on his journey in heaven; and it contains no Hekhalot hymns. However, in spite of all its literary shortcomings, the book is a treasure-house of information about the esoteric traditions at the time of its writing. The book seems to have been written, or compiled, in post-talmudic times, probably in the 6th century C.E. In any event, it is clear that it was composed at a rather late stage in the creation of the Hekhalot literature. However, J. T. Milik's attribution of the book to the Kabbalistic literature of the twelfth or thirteenth centuries only shows how little Milik knows of both the Hekhalot literature and of the Cabbalah.²

¹ For an excellent summary of the main problems of the book as they are seen by a modern scholar, see J. Greenfield's "Prolegomenon" to the Ktav Publishing House Reprint (1973) of H. Odeberg, 3 Enoch. In spite of all its deficiencies Odeberg's is still the only Hekhalot text that received scholarly treatment. A new translation and commentary is now being prepared by Dr. Philip Alexander of Manchester for Doubleday, New York. My translations here follow mainly those of Odeberg, though at times I differed from him, mainly because his text is based on completely wrong textual presuppositions.

From a literary point of view, the book is affiliated to the ancient Enoch tradition, and it appears that in spite of its late date of composition it contains a great deal that derives from the early Enoch tradition and literature. The book may be divided into several parts, and this division may help us in analyzing and understanding the special manner in which the writer handled his material. The first part of the book (chapters 1-12) describes Enoch's translation unto heaven and his transformation into the angel Metatron. However, in order to affiliate itself to the Merkavah tradition, the book begins with a description of the mystical ascent of Rabbi Yishma'el to behold the vision of the Merkavah (chapters 1-2). This description of Rabbi Yishma'el's ascent is a literary device, which defines the setting of the book: it is a rewritten version of the Enoch tradition in terms of the Merkavah tradition. In this way many of the original traits of the apocalyptic Enoch tradition are preserved, though they are recast in a story that was to become part of the Merkavah tradition.

In line with the common Merkavah tradition, Rabbi Yishma'el is described as having passed from palace to palace until he reached the seventh palace. Before he entered the seventh Hekhal, he had said a prayer so that he might be saved from the wrath of Qezfiel and his retinue. We already met Qezfiel in Hekhalot Rabbati xviii, where he was one of the gatekeepers of the sixth Hekhal. His new post in ² See J. T. Milik, The Books of Enoch: Aramaic Fragments of Qumran Cave 4, Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1976, pp. 125-135. There is nothing in Sefer Hekhalot that betrays either the style or the symbolism of Jewish medieval Kabbalah. Milik's contention that the identification of Enoch with Metatron does not "appear in Western Europe until the twelfth century" (p. 134) has no basis. Equally strange is Milik's dating of the Greek original of the Slavonic Enoch (2 Enoch) "to the ninth if not tenth century" (p. 126). A post-Byzantine dating of 2 Enoch is simply inconceivable to anyone who has the slightest idea of the history of literature. In addition, Milik's explanation of the name Metatron as deriving "from the Latin metator through the Greek μετάτωρ, μπάτωρ" (p. 131) has very little, if any, substantiation. A closer study of the Hekhalot literature and its relationship to Jewish apocalyptic could have saved Milik from falling into many pitfalls.

Sefer Hekhalot at the gate of the seventh Hekhal may of course be explained by the occasional inconsistencies in the Hekhalot literature regarding the names of the angels and their roles in heaven. But we may also argue that Qeṣṣiel's post at the seventh gate is a characteristic example of the idiosyncratic manner in which the writer of the book used his sources. We shall have several occasions to show this idiosyncrasy of the writer, or compiler, of the book. As said, Rabbi Yishma'el prayed that Qeṣṣiel might not "get power over me and throw me down from heaven". Although this appears to be the only case in the book in which any theurgical practices are referred to, there is something in this prayer that gives reason for speculation. Usually in the Hekhalot writings the angels threaten to kill the mystic or to chase and hurt him, but nothing is said of throwing the mystic down from heaven. We may, therefore, see in Rabbi Yishma'el's prayer an echo or interpretation of sayings like: "The ministering angels wanted to push Rabbi 'Akiva away" (Bavli Hagigah 15b).³ In any event, the prayer is characteristic of late mystical literature and one of its literary parallels is to be found in Midrash Ma'ayan Hokhmah (= Pesikta Rabbati 97a) where Moses expresses his wish to fall down from the cloud on which he has ascended to heaven.

On hearing Rabbi Yishma'el's prayer, God called Metatron to his rescue. Metatron came "with great joy . . . to meet me so as to save me from their hands". He took Rabbi Yishma'el by his hand and said to him: "Enter in peace before the high and exalted King and behold the picture⁴ of the Merkavah". However, when Rabbi Yishma'el entered the seventh Hekhal, he encountered other angelic beings who frightened him. Metatron again came to his rescue, but this time Rabbi Yishma'el was completely exhausted. As he himself says: "there was not in me strength enough to say a song before the Throne of Glory". However, after a short while, Rabbi Yishma'el recovered his senses and he was able to recite the proper song, which was promptly answered by the Qedushah of the angels.

³ However, it should be noticed that "to push him away" is a literal translation of the Hebrew verb used here DAḤAF. But as can be seen from Bavli Sanhedrin 103(b) (bottom), the real meaning of the phrase is "to kill".

⁴ The Hebrew word which is used here is Demut, which is a synonym of Zelem. Both terms indicate the corporeal appearance of God or man. See Genesis i,26; v,3. Here, as elsewhere in the text, terms which are loaded with meanings and associations are somewhat profusely used, or at least they appear to be arbitrarily introduced into new contexts and combinations. The term Demut Ha-Merkavah does not occur in the Hekhalot writings which we have hitherto discussed. The equivalent technical term which we met in Hekhalot Zutreti was Yofiot Ha-Merkavah ("The Beauties of the Chariot"). In Hekhalot Rabbati we frequently find the expression "to look at the King and His Throne" (xiii,1; xviii,5; xxv,6) [le-histakel ba-melekh We-kis'o].

The kind of reception Metatron gave Rabbi Yishma'el aroused the envy and resentment of the angelic beings ministering to the Throne of Glory. They asked Metatron why he let a human being look at the celestial Merkavah. Metatron replied that Rabbi Yishma'el was from the tribe of Levi, and from the seed of Aaron, that is, Rabbi Yishma'el was a priest. This apparently convinced the angels and they said: "Indeed, this man is worthy of beholding the Merkavah". Professor Scholem rightly pointed out that the tradition that presents Rabbi Yishma'el of the Hekhalot literature as a priest, is a fiction.⁵ However, we have already referred to the fact that according to an ancient Jewish tradition, high priests could experience visions of the Divine Presence in the Holy of Holies. Consequently Rabbi Yishma'el, the alleged high priest, would also gaze at the divine Merkavah.⁶

To sum up our observations on the first two chapters of Sefer Hekhalot, we may say that they are a typical example of the kind of work the compiler of the book did. He put together a great number of literary elements which were collected from a variety of sources. The ascent of Rabbi Yishma'el needs no further comment, though as we saw, the description lacks many of the technical characteristics that are present in parallel descriptions in the Hekhalot literature. The angel Qezfiel, is known from Hekhalot Rabbati, though what he attempts to do in our text does not exactly follow the same lines as his actions in Hekhalot Rabbati. While in Hekhalot Rabbati Qezfiel is one of the three angels that escort the wagon of the Merkavah mystic into the sixth Hekhal (xviii,5 ff.), he appears here as the leader of a group of angels that stand in the mystic's way. In Hekhalot Rabbati Qezfiel is appeased by the seal that the mystic shows him, but in Sefer Hekhalot—which mentions no protective seals—his opposition has to be overcome by another angelic being, namely Metatron. Also the manner, in which the angels express their objection to Rabbi Yishma'el's ascent has no parallel in other Hekhalot writings. As we saw in our discussion of Hekhalot Rabbati, the gatekeepers were appointed to check the passage of the mystic from palace to palace.

⁵ See G. Scholem, Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism, p. 356, h. 3.

⁶ The fact that Ezekiel himself was a priest was certainly a major factor in the development of that tradition.

The mystic had to show his seals and also convince them of his moral and intellectual accomplishments. The gatekeepers rarely speak. All this theurgical procedure is missing from Sefer Hekhalot. There are no gatekeepers and no seals to be shown to them. Instead the angels express their verbal opposition to the mystic's ascent. What they say is in line with similar utterances in aggadic literature, but unlike what they do in the Hekhalot literature. Finally, it should be noted that although Metatron is mentioned in other Hekhalot writings, he is nowhere else identified with the transfigured Enoch. In his case, Sefer Hekhalot blends together apocalyptic and mystical traditions.

Speaking about Metatron, not all the problems connected with his name, status and offices, have satisfactorily been solved. To begin with, we have to consider the name "Metatron" and its etymology. In an appendix to the present book, Professor Lieberman suggests that the name Metatron is a derivation from an earlier form: Synthronos. A Synthronos was, Professor Lieberman argues, a title given to someone whose throne stood alongside the throne of a king or a deity. Professor Lieberman maintains that the word Synthronos could be used either as a substantive or as an adjective, and that whatever we find about Metatron in our sources, both in midrashic literature and in the Merkavah writings, very well fits the idea of the ancient Synthronos, that is, the one who is seated on a throne alongside God. Professor Lieberman's explanation is fully acceptable from the point of view of its concern with the etymology of the name. One may, of course, argue that no Synthronos is found in any of the extant Jewish writings, but Professor Lieberman has shown that the idea of a Synthronos obviously lies behind the story of 'Elish'a ben 'Avuyah's blasphemy as described in Bavli Hagigah 15a and Sefer Hekhalot xvi. The story there tells of how 'Elish'a ben 'Avuyah saw Metatron sitting in heaven. Knowing that the angels cannot sit, 'Elish'a ben 'Avuyah was led to the false conclusion that there were two powers in heaven. And, indeed, the name of Metatron is also elsewhere mentioned in relation to the two-powers heresy (Bavli Sanhedrin 38b). The status and offices of Metatron in heaven could really induce impressions of the kind 'Elish'a ben 'Avuyah had. In order to avoid such false impressions, so the story reports, Metatron was beaten with sixty lashes of fire and reproached for not standing up in the face of 'Elish'a ben 'Avuyah. However, Sefer Hekhalot x suggests a different solution to the problem: Metatron received a throne not in the seventh palace itself, alongside the Throne of Glory, but at the gate of that palace. True to his method of mixing up traditions, the writer of Sefer Hekhalot was not content with that solution, and when he retold the story of 'Elish'a ben 'Avuyah in chapter xvi, he again changed the story. In its new "improved" version, 'Elish'a ben 'Avuyah's heresy was not induced by the mere fact that he saw Metatron sitting (see Bavli Hagigah), but by the fact that he saw Metatron "sitting upon a throne like a king with all the ministering angels standing by me (Metatron) as my servants and all the princes of the kingdoms adorned with crowns surrounding me".

In short, the name "Metatron" signified the office and status of the angel who acts as a vice-regent or divine plenipotentiary. Finally, it should be noticed that in Bavli Sanhedrin 38b Rav Idi, who is described as an authority in the disputations between Jews and heretics (Minim), told one of the heretics with whom he argued over the status of Metatron, that he would not even accept him as a (divine) messenger (the term used here for mission is the Persian word Parwanka = Parwanak). In this office, Metatron may be viewed as the Jewish counterpart to Hermes, who was the divine messenger in Greek mythology. It is interesting to notice in this connection that in one of the Aramaic Incantation Texts published by James Montgomery, Hermes and Metatron are mentioned side by side.⁷

Sefer Hekhalot also refers to Metatron with the appellations Yahweh Ha-Qatan (Yahweh the Smaller, or: the Lesser Yahweh) and Na'ar (Youth). As Professor Scholem has shown,⁸ the first appellation, Yahweh Ha-Qatan, may derive from the early tradition concerning the angel Yaho'el. And indeed, Yaho'el occurs as one of Metatron's names not only in the list of the seventy names of Metatron,⁹ but also in the Aramaic Incantation Bowls.¹⁰ The term Yahweh Ha-

⁷ See J. A. Montgomery, Aramaic Incantation Texts from Nippur, Philadelphia, 1913, p. 123; J. T. Milik, op. cit., pp. 128-131. However, the reading Hermes is not certain!

⁸ In Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 43.

⁹ Sefer Hekhalot xlvi (D). The first two names there are Yaho'el Yah and Yaho'el. Compare also Hekhalot Rabbati xxvi, 8.

¹⁰ Misled by Montgomery, his followers, (including H. Odeberg, 3 Enoch, p. 110) read Yehi'el instead of Yahoel. See Plate XXIV (Text 25), line 7; Ch. D. Isbell, Corpus of the Aramaic Incantation Bowls, Missoula, Montana, Scholars Press, 1975, has added nothing but his own mistakes to the First Editions and Publications of the Bowls. Thus he repeats on p. 87 Montgomery's misreading: Yehi'el. It also appears that the Bowl of the Ashmolean Museum, No. 1932.620, first studied by C. Gordon, in Orientalia X (1941), p. 280, and re-studied by J. T. Milik, op. cit., pp. 129-130, contains the name of Yaho'el and not of Yehi'el. Admittedly, Montgomery in his notes to Text 25 (p. 208) raises the possibility

Qatan apparently signifies—as Professor Lieberman thinks—“a smaller god” (deus minor) or the semi-divine status of Metatron. It should be remembered that according to the story told in Sefer Hekhalot, Metatron had formerly been the man Enoch,¹¹ and thus whatever his status in heaven his previous human existence should not be forgotten.¹² As Metatron he was raised to a very high position among the angelic beings; in fact, he was made their superior. He was not deified, but was turned into an angel. By calling him Yahweh Ha-Qatan one probably wanted to indicate the authority which the appellation lent. This authority is clearly implied by relating the term Yahweh Ha-Qatan to Exodus xxiii, 21: “For my name is in him” (Sefer Hekhalot xii).¹³ It is true that the Christian gnostics referred to a divine figure called “the little Jao, the Good”.¹⁴ But unlike “the little Jao” of the gnostics, Metatron, or Yahweh Ha-Qatan as he is called in Sefer Hekhalot, is the mystically transformed Enoch! We may well assume that the correct reading is Yaho’el and not Yehi’el. This may explain Epstein’s silence on the issue in his “Gloses Babylo-Araméennes”, Revue des Études Juives LXXIII (1921), p. 53. Isbell and Milik could have avoided repeating the erroneous reading had they consulted J. C. Greenfield, “Notes on some Aramaic and Mandaic Magic Bowls”, Gaster Festschrift [The Journal of the Ancient Near Eastern Society of Columbia University V (1973)], p. 156, n. 40. It should be noticed that Greenfield also discusses the alleged and real “Enochian echoes in the magical bowls” (pp. 150 ff.).

¹¹ The most important parallel to this identification of Enoch with Metatron is to be found in Targum of Jonathan to Genesis v, 24. Milik, op. cit., p. 128, remarks on the end of the verse (“and He called his name Metatron, the Great Scribe”): “But the second part of this passage is certainly, in my opinion, a very late addition, as it does not appear in other Palestinian Targums”. Could Milik really overlook a tradition that dates back to Jubilees iv?

¹² It may be due to his previous human existence that Metatron is able to sit. Other angels, as we saw, could not fold their legs into a sitting position! It should be noted, however, that the class of the angels called Shotrim in Sefer Ha-Razim had chairs to sit upon. It is interesting to notice that one of the appellations given to Metatron in the Aramaic Magical Bowls is: Metatron ’Isara Rabba de-Kurseh (“Metatron the Great Prince of the Throne”); cf. C. H. Gordon, “Aramaic Magical Bowls in the Istanbul and Baghdad Museums”, Archiv Orientalni VI (1934), pp. 328-329.

¹³ The same verse is quoted in relation to Metatron in Bavli Sanhedrin 38b. As G. Scholem, Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism, p. 366, n. 107, pointed out, the Qaraite author Qirqisani quoted the passage in Sanhedrin as saying: “... Metatron is Yahweh Qatan”. Scholem remarks that “the name Yahweh Qatan was deliberately eliminated from the Talmudic manuscripts, because of its heretical connotations”. However, I incline to agree with E. E. Urbach, The Sages, p. 743, n. 15, that it was Qirqisani who interpolated the name into the Talmudic passage and not vice versa.

¹⁴ Cf. Pistis Sophia vii (in G. R. S. Meads edition, p. 9); in chapter cxi we find several times the term “the little Sabbaoth, the Good”!

that the appellation Yahweh Ha-Qatan was given to Metatron by people who knew of "the little Jao" of the gnostics, but when they did so they had in mind the special authority given to the angel and not his divine essence.

The other appellation given to Metatron is Na'ar (Youth). This appellation was probably inspired by Exodus xxxiii,11, and if so, it could imply the status of a chief servant and even of a deputy.¹⁵ The explanation given in Sefer Hekhalot to the appellation tells the story of the ascent of Enoch to heaven and his transformation into Metatron (chapter iv). As the story there tells, God elevated Enoch to heaven in the days preceding the Flood. When God saw the evil deeds of the generation of the Flood, He took Enoch up to heaven so that he could be preserved as a witness against the sinful people of that generation.¹⁶ What Enoch was expected to testify against was that not only did the people of his generation rebel against God but that their animals shared their sinful behaviour. Thus no injustice was done to anyone in the Flood.¹⁷ As far as we know, this part of the story derives from apocalyptic literature;¹⁸ however, the second part of the story adds new tones to the original Enoch tradition. It is said that when Enoch came up to heaven, three angels, 'Uzah, 'Azah and 'Azael,¹⁹ came forth and claimed before God that it was improper for a human being to ascend to heaven. Their claim was not solely directed against Enoch, but against the whole of mankind, of which he was to become the representative. Man is a sinful being and should not have been created, and now he is even permitted into heaven. In their objections, the angels combined two traditions of the angelic opposition to man. The first tradition speaks of the opposition of the angels to the creation of man,²⁰ while the second speaks of their ¹⁵ Obviously, this verse which refers to Yehoshu'a ben Nun could not be quoted in relation to Metatron, and thus we find later sources quoting Psalms xxxvii,25 and Proverbs xxii,6, as biblical references to Metatron.

¹⁶ Compare Mishnah Sanhedrin x,3 and parallels.

¹⁷ Compare Jubilees v,2; Beresbit Rabba (ed. Theodor-Albeck) p. 266.

¹⁸ See Jubilees iv,22-24 and parallels.

¹⁹ Some of the manuscripts give only two names: 'Aza and 'Aza'el, and this appears to be the better reading. See Odeberg's note to the place (pp. 10 ff.). For the various spellings of the names of these angels see D. Dimant, "The Fallen Angels" in the Dead Sea Scrolls and in the Apocryphal and Pseudepigraphic Books Related to Them (Dissertation, in Hebrew), Jerusalem, 1974, pp. 55 ff.

²⁰ See P. Schäfer, Rivalität zwischen Engeln und Menschen, Walter de Gruyter, Berlin, 1975, pp. 75 ff.

opposition to the ascent of human beings to heaven.²¹ As we saw, the blending together of traditions is a typical trait of the compiler of Sefer Hekhalot, and it appears that he misses no opportunity of doing so.

God's answer to the angels' claim is resolute: He wants Enoch to be in heaven and to become their superior. In accepting Enoch into heaven, and in transforming him into Metatron, God may be said to declare that He wants the chief angelic being in heaven to be of human origin. From a human point of view, this may be interpreted to imply the idea that mankind has a representative in heaven; this representative was even raised to occupy the highest angelic position. However, once Enoch had left his earthly existence to become a celestial being, he had in fact nothing to do with mankind. He is the Na'ar of God,²² and in charge of whatever the angels do. However, Enoch-Metatron himself explains his appellation thus: "And because I am small and a youth among them. . . therefore they call me Na'ar" (chapter iv, end). In point of fact, however, only God calls Metatron by that appellation, while the other heavenly beings call him by the seventy names he has, corresponding to the seventy languages in the world.²³ In our discussion of Merkavah Rabbah we saw that some of the angels have at least two names. There is an exoteric and an esoteric mode of the angels' names. Metatron, however, has many names and appellations. In Re'uyot Yehezkel we met the Sar who dwells in the heaven Zevul. Several, mostly esoteric, names were suggested there for that Sar, one of which was: "Metatron, like the name of the Gevurah" ("Dynamis").²⁴ In Hekhalot Rabbati xxvi,8 Metatron is said to have eight names. In the Aramaic Magical Bowls Metatron is called 'Isara Rabba ("the great minister"), and in an ancient Shi'ur Qomah fragment Metatron is called Shamasha Reḥima Sara Rabba de-Sabaduta ("the beloved servant, the great prince of testimony").²⁵ This last appellation clearly includes the various ²¹ See J. Schultz, "Angelic Opposition to the Ascension of Moses and the Revelation of the Law", Jewish Quarterly Review LXI (1970/71), pp. 282-307.

²² Notable exceptions to this rule are: Bavli 'Avodah Zarah 3b where Metatron is said to teach Torah to the souls of dead infants, and Bemidbar Rabba xii,12 where Metatron is said to sacrifice in the heavenly temple the souls of the righteous ones (compare Bavli Menahot 100a where the angel Micha'el is described offering sacrifices on the heavenly altar).

²³ In chapter xvii the parallel tradition of 72 languages is mentioned. The seventy names of Metatron are enumerated in xlvi(d).

²⁴ See G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 46, notes 13 and 14.

²⁵ Ibid., p. 50.

aspects of Metatron: he is God's choice servant;²⁶ he is the Great Prince;²⁷ and he is to bear testimony against the generation of the Flood.²⁸

We cannot enter here a detailed discussion of everything that the book says about Metatron and what he told and showed Rabbi Yishma'el. Sometimes parallel and conflicting episodes are piled one upon the other, as for example in chapters iv and vi where two different accounts are given of the angelic opposition to the ascent of Enoch. The one, as we noticed, was put in the mouth of the evil angels, and the other, in the more traditional manner, was attributed to the angels of service. However, the eclecticism of the compiler may be viewed as his felix culpa: it enables us to have a panoramic view of the esoteric traditions in the post-Talmudic period. In this respect, it is interesting that Metatron is identified with Enoch. Nowhere²⁹ in Jewish midrashic and Talmudic literature are the two, Metatron and Enoch, identified. On the contrary, we find that some of the Palestinian sages of the third century expressed negative views about Enoch.³⁰ These views, which were expressed as polemical utterances in disputes with Minim ("heretics"), may be viewed as reflecting anti-Christian positions. Since Enoch and his like who experienced heavenly ascensions could have pre-figured the Ascension of the Christ,³¹ some sages found themselves obliged to clear Jewish tradition from the events and experiences which served the early Christians in building up their religion. If one claimed, as these sages did, that Enoch was not entered in the book of the righteous and that he was not translated unto heaven but died a natural death, one clearly aimed at depriving the Christians of some of their alleged roots in the Jewish religion. The sages who undermined the righteousness of Enoch could hardly comply with books such as Sefer Hekhalot. Yet, even from their point of view the identification of Enoch with Metatron could have served in their alleged anti-Christian polemic. Enoch was not a messianic figure who was translated to heaven in order to ²⁶ See Sefer Hekhalot viii: "... Metatron ... said to me: Before He appointed me to attend (le-shamesh) the Throne of Glory"; and chapter x: "... This is Metatron, my servant ...".

²⁷ Cf. Re'uyot Yehezkel.

²⁸ Sefer Hekhalot iv.

²⁹ Targum Yerushalmi to Genesis v,25 is the only exception to the rule.

³⁰ In Bereshit Rabba (ed. Theodor-Albeck, pp. 238-239).

³¹ See Hebrews xi,5, though the context there is not the question of the Ascension but of belief. Compare also Jude 14; and particularly 1 Clement ix,3.

complement his mission and function as Son of Man, as the Christians thought of their Christ, but a man who ascended to heaven to become an angel. Thus, one may see in the Enoch's metamorphosis into the angel Metatron an attempt to overcome the so-called Christian overtones which the apocalyptic legends about Enoch had. By merging apocalyptic and mystical traditions, the Enoch-Metatron legends could have helped, theologically speaking, certain esoteric groups in finding legitimation for a tradition which, under the circumstances, was no longer as fashionable as it had once been in esoteric circles.

In chapter v Metatron tells Rabbi Yishma'el another version of how he ascended to heaven. The story begins with Adam's expulsion from the Garden of Eden. At that time God was dwelling upon a Keruv under the Tree of Life. God's initial presence in the Garden of Eden is a constant theme in aggadic literature.³² But, in contrast to the aggadic utterances which state that God already ascended to the first heaven after the Original Sin had been committed, Sefer Hekhalot tells a different story: God ascended only later on, in the days of Enosh (Genesis iv,26),³³ when the angels convinced Him that it would be improper for Him to stay on earth among sinful people. It should be noticed that the subject of God's ascent from earth to heaven is an aggadic theme and has nothing to do with the subject dealt with in the Hekhalot literature. Even in apocalyptic literature God is always conceived of as dwelling in heaven, and His presence in Paradise, as described in Apocalypsis Mosis xxii,3-4, is an exception to the rule. What, then, is the purpose of this extraordinary chapter in Sefer Hekhalot? Odeberg may be right in saying (see his commentary, p. 13) that this chapter provides another explanation for the translation of Enoch into heaven. There is nothing that can prevent the writer of Sefer Hekhalot from introducing yet another explanation for this translation, an explanation that does not concur with the one given in chapter iv. Odeberg is, thus, certainly right when he comments (p. 13): "As regards the relationship between ch. iv on the one hand and chs. v and vi on the other, it might be safe to assume that they represent respectively two different lines of tradition as to the translation of Enoch".

³² See Pesikta de-Rav Kahana (ed. Mandelbaum), pp. 1-3, and parallels. See also Odeberg's notes, p. 14.

³³ According to Pesikta de-Rav Kahana, in the days of Enosh God ascended to the second heaven, while the generation of the Flood caused God to ascend to the third heaven.

However, Odeberg was not sufficiently aware of the problems emerging from the eclectic method which the writer of Sefer Hekhalot applies in his book. Thus, for example, in chapter vi we hear that 'Anafi'el was sent to fetch Enoch up to heaven. In discussing this chapter Odeberg quotes a number of literary parallels without qualifying and analyzing them. For instance, Odeberg should have noticed that this practice of sending an angel down to earth to fetch the visionary up to heaven is characteristic of some apocalyptic writings, but is never the case in the Hekhalot literature. In 2 Enoch i-iii we hear of the two angels who came to take Enoch up to heaven, and in the Apocalypse of Abraham x we read that Jao'el was sent to raise the visionary to heaven. But already in 1 Enoch no angel comes down to fetch the visionary up to heaven; there are only angels who guide him in the course of his heavenly journeys. However, in Sefer Hekhalot 'Anafi'el was sent to bring Enoch to heaven. We already met 'Anafi'el in Hekhalot Rabbati xxii-xxiii where he is described as one of the gatekeepers of the seventh Hekhal. It should be observed that some of the things that are said there about 'Anafi'el are actually found elsewhere in connection with Metatron,³⁴ and it may be argued that Metatron received the status and offices of 'Anafi'el. Nevertheless, it is still an extraordinary fact that in Sefer Hekhalot 'Anafi'el is described as the divine herald who brought Enoch up to heaven. Since in Hekhalot Rabbati 'Anafi'el is described as ushering the Merkavah mystic into the seventh Hekhal, it appears that the writer of Sefer Hekhalot could not find a more distinguished angel to carry out the mission of translating Enoch onto heaven. As it were, Enoch ascended to heaven upon a fiery chariot with fiery horses, and in that he resembled Elijah (2 Kings ii,11).³⁵ But Enoch and 'Anafi'el ³⁴ Just to give two or three examples: (1) It is said of 'Anafi'el (Hekhalot Rabbati xxii,4) that he is the "‘Eved ('Servant') who is called after the name of his master". We know that similar words are used in connection with Metatron (Hekhalot Rabbati xxvi,8; Sefer Hekhalot x). (2) 'Anafi'el bears the ring which has the seal of heaven and earth on it (Hekhalot Rabbati xxii,1), and we read of Metatron's name being "written in one letter with which heaven and earth were created and which was sealed by the ring of 'Eheyeh 'asher 'Eheyeh" (Shi'ur Qomah in: Merkavah Shelemah 39b). (3) The angels worship 'Anafi'el (Hekhalot Rabbati xxii,2) as they worship Metatron (Sefer Hekhalot xiv).

³⁵ See also Odeberg's notes ad locum. It should be noticed that in chapter vii Enoch says that he was raised on the wings of the storm. See 1 Enoch xiv,8 as compared to lxx,2.

were not alone on that occasion: "And he lifted me up to the high heavens together with the Shekhinah".³⁶

When Enoch reached heaven, the angels gave expression to their "traditional" opposition to the ascent of man. But, as was customary on such occasions, God silenced them, saying: "But this one whom I have taken from among them (the children of men) is a choice one... and he is equal to all of them in faith, righteousness and perfection of deed".

From chapter viii onwards Metatron describes the special gifts and qualities which God bestowed upon him. God adorned Metatron with special angelic features and attributes, and placed him on a throne at the gate of the seventh palace. This throne was made in the likeness of the Throne of Glory. Chapter viii describes the great wisdom bestowed upon Metatron. The chapter is written in the form of a Hekhalot hymn. Chapter ix describes how Enoch-Metatron was transformed into a huge angel. In chapter x Metatron tells Rabbi Yishma'el how he was appointed as God's representative and ruler over all the celestial princes of the kingdoms. However, Metatron was not appointed over the eight high princes called by the name of the Ineffable Name. The names of these angels are not mentioned in the text, and all the attempts made by Odeberg to identify them either by their office or by their names only add to the confusion.³⁷ However, it appears that what the writer had in mind were the seven archangels described in chapter xvii, and which, together with 'Anafi'el, were appointed over the seven heavens. In addition, Metatron was appointed over secret knowledge and sciences; in fact, nothing was hidden away from him (chapter xi). God made for Metatron a garment of glory and put a royal crown on his head (chapter xii).

Most interesting is the description of Metatron's crown (chapter xiii). It is said that God wrote on it with his finger the letters with which he had created heaven and earth and all that they contain. The letters of the alphabet which were used by God in the creation of the world played a prominent role in Jewish mysticism,³⁸ but it is only here that it is said that they are written on Metatron's crown.

³⁶ This is, of course, incompatible with the earlier description (chapter v) according to which God ascended to heaven in the days of 'Enosh.

³⁷ The nearest parallel to our passage can be found in Hekhalot Rabbati xxvi, 8, where the eight names of Metatron himself are enumerated.

³⁸ See G. Scholem, Judaica 3, Frankfurt am Main, Suhrkamp Verlag, 1970, pp. 7 ff.: "Der Name Gottes und die Sprachtheorie der Kabbala".

In this respect, it may be true to say that Metatron's crown contained the mystical or magical formula of creation. A similar idea is found in Shi'ur Qomah where it is said that Metatron's name was written in "one letter with which heaven and earth were created".³⁹ This idea is later (in chapter xiv) complemented by the idea of the celestial curtain, Pargod, which is said to be spread before the Holy One and upon which are engraved "all the generations of the world and all their doings".

Chapter xiv is the first of a series of chapters which contain a most elaborate angelological system. It should be observed that very few of the angels mentioned in the other Hekhalot writings are also found in Sefer Hekhalot. In fact, Sefer Hekhalot has a different kind of angelology than do the other Hekhalot tractates. Most of the angels mentioned in our text perform cosmological duties, and their names derive from the Hebrew names of the objects and phenomena in Nature over the function of which they are appointed. Thus, for example, the angels appointed over the day and the night are called Shemesbi'el and Laila'el, Shemesh being the Hebrew word for sun and Lailah the Hebrew for night. It may thus be argued that the angelology of Sefer Hekhalot is of a cosmological nature. This type of angelology is known from the apocalyptic Enoch literature and it should be distinguished from yet another type of angelology—magical angelology—which is found in Sefer Ha-Razim and in the Magical Papyri. Since the whole subject of Jewish angelology still requires a systematic study, the three types of angelology referred to here (cosmological, mystical and magical angelologies) should be considered only as a provisional classification. Although general classifications can never be conclusive, they are helpful in pointing out essential differences of context and function.

Curiously, in chapter xv we return to the mystical metamorphosis of Enoch into Metatron. A more suitable place for this chapter would have been after chapter viii, principally because chapter ix already described the huge angelic dimensions of Metatron. The opening words of chapters viii and xv are almost identical, and indeed the two chapters are artificially separated. In both chapters we hear of what had happened to Enoch before he became the chief servant before the Throne of Glory. The sequence of the chapters in Sefer Hekhalot, particularly in the first part of the book, raises a number of questions, which, unfortunately, have to be left unanswered. Since we do not know the literary sources used by the compiler of the book, we cannot determine the method he applied in organizing his material. The only thing that may be said with some certainty is that the book betrays the fact that it was compiled from a number of sources, which were put together in a manner that leaves the reader with many questions. One also has to take into account the fact that some of the manuscripts add to the confusion by introducing heterogeneous material. Thus, for instance, we find that some manuscripts interpolate into chapter xv a fragment which describes the ascent of Moses!⁴⁰ As for the details of the mystical metamorphosis itself, they recall what is said in 2 Enoch xxii about Enoch's mystical transformation, although a basic difference still exists between the two descriptions. In 2 Enoch the hero is anointed with special oils so as to enable him to stand in the presence of God, while in our text Enoch is said to be turned into a fiery angel.

³⁹ See in Merkavah Shelemah, 39b.

Chapter xvi tells the story of 'Elish'a ben 'Avuyah's apostasy. The story derives from Bavli Hagigah 15a, though, as we already saw, several details are changed or added. Unlike the story in Hagigah, the story here is told as seen from the point of view of Metatron, and, most significantly, it is said that 'Anafi'el was the one who treated Metatron with sixty lashes of fire. We have already pointed out the fact that in contrast to Hagigah where 'Elish'a ben 'Avuyah only saw Metatron sitting, in our text it is said that he also noticed the special services rendered him by the angels. Chapter xvii describes the seven archangels who are nominated over the seven heavens and the five angels who are appointed over the astral world. In chapter xviii a description is given of the special manner in which the angels pay homage to their superiors, first the angels of the seven heavens and then the angels of the seven Hekhalot. The description appears to derive from Hekhalot Rabbati xi,1, though it is implied there (xxii,2) that the angels do not pay homage to one another. According to Hekhalot Rabbati, only before the Sar Ha-Panim may the angels fall down, and this only by a special permission from God (Hekhalot Rabbati xxii,2). The writer of Sefer Hekhalot may have overlooked this fact, but one may also argue that the writer of our text did not feel himself dogmatically bound to concepts and notions which he found in the sources that he used. The obligation he felt towards his literary sources should not be overestimated. As we saw, he felt free to invent new mystical situations and unknown classes of angels. For instance, he describes the angels which inhabit the seventh Hekhal, and among the names which he mentions we find several ones that in Hekhalot Rabbati and in Ma'aseh Merkavah are said to be stationed in other places in heaven.⁴¹ To give only one example of this process of shifting angels from one station to the other in heaven, we may mention the angel Gevurati'el, who, according to Hekhalot Rabbati xv,5, is one of the gatekeepers of the fourth Hekhal and in Sefer Hekhalot xviii he was promoted to be one of the angels of the seventh Hekhal.

⁴⁰ Printed in Odeberg's edition as chapter xv/b. It describes Moses' ascent to heaven, and it may be considered a mystical version of the story found in Bavli Shabbat 88b. Another mystical version of the same story is found in Pesikta Rabbati (ed. Friedmann), 96b-98b. A slightly different version of the story found in Pesikta Rabbati is known as Ma'ayan Hokhmah; see A. Jellinek, Bet ha-Midrash, I, pp. 58-61.

Referring to its angelology, it should be observed that the book is rich in angelological etymologies. It is not clear whether the compiler invented these etymologies or whether he found them in the sources he used. Comparatively speaking, the other Hekhalot writings only seldom engage in etymologies, and, thus, the practice of our compiler deserves special attention. Chapters xix-xxii describe more angels who are stationed in the seventh palace before the Throne of Glory and their roles and duties. These chapters are distinguished by their poetical richness. They are interrupted by two chapters—xxiii-xxiv—which enumerate the various kinds of spirits (Ruhot) and chariots of God. Chapter xxv again takes up the subject of the angels. First we hear of Ofafani'el, the prince of the 'Ofanim, and later (chapter xxvi) of Sarafi'el, the prince of the Serafim. The physical description of Sarafi'el is strongly influenced by the Shi'ur Qomah terminology. In connection with Sarafi'el, an interesting etymology is brought to explain the word "Serafim": "Why are they called Serafim?—Because they burn (sorfim) the writing tables of Satan. Every day Satan is sitting together with Samael, the Prince of Rome, and with Dubiel, the Prince of Persia, and they write the iniquities of Israel on writing tables which they hand over to the Serafim, in order that they may present them before the Holiness, blessed be He, so that He may destroy Israel from the world. But the Serafim know the secrets of the Holiness, blessed be He, that He desires not that the people of Israel should perish. What do the Serafim do?—Every day they take them from Satan and burn them in the burning fire which burns in front of the high and exalted Throne”.

⁴¹ It must however be admitted that in this respect there are even substantial differences between Hekhalot Rabbati and Ma'aseh Merkavah. Compare, for instance, Hekhalot Rabbati xv with Ma'aseh Merkavah paragraph 23!

The presence of Satan here is rather unusual. Satan does not figure in the Hekhalot texts known to us, but Samael—who is generally taken to be his main configuration—is mentioned in the Martyrs-Apocalypse in Hekhalot Rabbati. The person of Satan is also rarely mentioned in the rabbinic writings of the Tannaitic and Amoraic periods. Living in an age in which Christianity and gnosticism flourished, the rabbis probably felt that too much of the Satan would draw attention in the wrong direction. It is noteworthy that according to Sefer Hekhalot the powers of Satan have access to heaven.⁴² In fact, nothing is said of their Fall.⁴³ In comparison with later developments of Jewish mysticism, it may be said that the Hekhalot literature had almost nothing to say about the powers of evil. As we saw, Ma'aseh Merkavah mentions the demons and here Satan and some of his powers are referred to, but these two exceptions to the rule cannot but bring us back to the conclusion that Hekhalot mysticism was only indirectly influenced by gnosticism.

The subject of the heavenly court is carried on until chapter xxxiii, and in chapter xxxiv a new angelological section is introduced. Its main subject matter is the heavenly Qedushah. A great deal is said concerning the details of the ritual, but no hymns are quoted. This section ends with chapter xl, and in xli Metatron reveals to Rabbi Yishma'el a series of cosmological secrets. The descriptions here resemble those of the heavenly journeys known from apocalyptic literature, notably in the Enoch writings, though several details borrowed from the Merkavah writings are added. These descriptions practically lead to the end of the book (chapter xlviii), where some of the manuscripts add a number of appendices. It should be noticed that chapter xlviii contains several references to the future redemption.

⁴² Odeberg in his notes (p. 93) rightly observes that a similar concept is found in 1 Enoch xl,7.

⁴³ See also Sefer Hekhalot iv and v, where 'Uza and 'Azael are twice mentioned in heaven. Compare Bavli Yoma 67b: "It was learnt according to Rabbi Yishma'el: 'Azazel (Leviticus xvi,6 ff.) [is called by that name] because he atones for the deeds of 'Uza and 'Aza'el". See Rashi to the place. Compare also Sifra (ed. Weiss) 43c (letter c), and L. Ginzberg, Genizah Studies, Vol. I (New York, 1928), p. 83 and Pesikta Rabbati 191a.

One of these appendices, printed in Odeberg's edition as chapter xlviii (d), is an interesting résumé of the Metatron legend.⁴⁴ Among other things this résumé contains the list of the seventy names of Metatron, and it ends with a section that links Metatron with the Sar-Torah. After Moses had suddenly forgotten all that he had learnt from the mouth of God, Metatron is said to have revealed the secrets of the Torah to Moses on Mount Sinai.⁴⁵ This is a typical Sar-Torah episode, and its inclusion at the end of the book was probably aimed at reminding the reader of the parallel ending of Hekhalot Rabbati.

⁴⁴ A similar résumé is also known from 'Otiyot de-Rabbi 'Akiva, Version A, Letter Aleph.

⁴⁵ Compare Ma'aseh Merkavah, paragraph 1.

MASEKHET HEKHALOT

Masekhet Hekhalot is the most frequently published Hekhalot text we have,¹ and there are also many manuscripts of the text.² The text is also known as Ma'aseh Merkavah or Pirkei Hekhalot, and it consists of seven chapters. The first chapter is divided into two: the first part enumerates six names by which both God and His Throne are called. Biblical verses are quoted to substantiate this parallelism in the nomenclature. In the second part of the chapter the question is asked: "How many thrones does God have?", in answer to which eleven names are given together with the biblical verses from which they allegedly derive. The material in this chapter bears the marks of a free midrashic composition, and it has almost nothing to do with the material found in the other Hekhalot writings. It is neither said where the eleven thrones are placed, nor is any explanation offered for the different number of thrones given in the first part of the chapter and the one given in the second part.

The second chapter describes the huge dimensions of the Throne. In fact the beginning of this chapter may be described as the Shi'ur Qomah of the Throne. In addition, it is said that God has "seventy thrones of kingdoms... which are like his own Throne". These thrones correspond to the seventy kingdoms of the world. God also has seventy crowns of glory and seventy sceptres, and thus all the kings of the world are under His dominion. They depend on God for all the glory that they have. It should be noticed, in comparison, that in Sefer Hekhalot (3 Enoch) Metatron is appointed over the kingdoms of the world. Chapter iii goes on in describing the magnificence of the Throne of Glory. The appearance of the Throne "is like Hashmal", which the writer of the text explains as meaning that "three hundred and seventy-eight³ kinds of light" are fixed in the throne. The throne is covered by a garment from which emanate all kinds of light. Thus none of the heavenly beings can look at the throne and at God. This garment is reminiscent of the Pargod which according to Sefer Hekhalot xlv is said to be spread before the Throne of Glory. However, it is interesting to note that the writer of Masekhet Hekhalot does not use the term Pargod (curtain),⁴ but the rather strange term Beged (garment). It appears that by doing so he wanted to allude either to the Halug (garment) of God which is described in Hekhalot Rabbati iii,4 and iv,2, or to the "cloth of all blue" (Beged Kelil Tekbelet) with which the ark of the testimony was covered when carried from place to place (Numbers iv,6).⁵

¹ See, for instance, A. Jellinek, Bet ha-Midrash II, pp. 40-47; and Sh. A. Wertheimer, Batei Midrashot, I, pp. 51-62 and 387-390. The text published by Wertheimer is much better than that published by Jellinek, but even Wertheimer's text should be amended according to the MSS. mentioned in the next note.

² From the great number of manuscripts which the present writer has examined it seems that MSS. Firenze-Laurentiana 44/2, fol. 159a-162a, and Parma 3531 (Stern 91) [no pagination] are the best.

³ This is the numerical value of the Hebrew term Hashmal.

Chapter iv introduces more familiar and interesting Merkavah material than that contained in the first three chapters. The chapter begins with a description of the seven heavens and their luminous light. Particular attention is given to the seventh heaven, Aravot. It is said that four walls of fire—the names of which are given—encircle the Throne of Glory. Within these walls of fire there are the seven Hekhalot, but the text does not explicate how these seven palaces are situated among the four walls of fire.⁶ Every palace has 8766 gates of lightnings, which correspond to the number of the hours of one year of 365 days.⁷ Every such gate has 365,000 kinds of light, and in every gate stand 3,650,000,000 angels. It seems that like the writer of Sefer Hekhalot our writer allowed himself a considerable amount of freedom in his descriptions. He did not feel himself bound by the Hekhalot texts which he knew, and there are good reasons to consider him an epigone who looked for artificial means of decorating his subject matter. His manner of writing may betray his origin: he probably belonged to the circles of German Hasidim (about 1150-1250). According to the writer of Masekhet Hekhalot, not only the angels sing their celestial song but also their horses. We have already met celestial horses in Hekhalot Rabbati xvi, where only their fearful appearance is described. In Masekhet Hekhalot, however, these horses are said to have four wings, like the angels

⁴ The MSS. mentioned in note 2 contain in chapter vi a short sentence which refers to the Parokhet (curtain) that is spread before the Throne of God.

⁵ It should be noted that in Hekhalot Rabbati xi,4 a different procedure is recorded: when the angels uncover their faces to look at God, God covers His face. No garment or curtain is mentioned there. We shall come back to this point in our discussion of chapter vi.

⁶ It is unlikely that the writer of Masekhet Hekhalot conceived of four sets of seven palaces.

⁷ In reality, only 8760 divided into 365 makes 24!

who ride them, and like the angels they speak seventy languages! The chapter ends with a description of the eight very important angels who stand at the gates of the seventh palace, and who check all those who enter to see the Throne of Glory.⁸

Chapter v describes in some detail the seventh palace and all that it contains. We find in it a long list of the classes of angels who minister in this palace, some of which are not known from the other Hekhalot writings.⁹ In chapter vi more angelological material is introduced. Its main subject matter is the details of the celestial Qedushah. Among other things it is said that clouds of fire envelop the faces of the angels, so that they should not look at the vision of the Shekkinah. This remark is particularly interesting, since the text already said (chapter iii) that God is hidden away from the angels by the "garment" that is spread over the Throne of Glory. This discrepancy can be explained by the fact that the writer of the text used different sources, or else that he invented new details without paying too much attention as to how these details harmonized. In any event, the writer also mentions the fact that a Parokhet (curtain) is spread before the Throne. Seven angels, those who were first born, are said to serve God. In addition, a detailed description of the Hayyot is given. Parts of that description seem to be the result of the writer's misunderstanding of his literary sources.¹⁰ The chapter ends with another angelological section, which describes a variety of angelological hierarchies.

The seventh chapter describes Me'onah,¹¹ which is the firmament above the heads of the Hayyot. Although the writer does not explicitly allude to it, it appears that he has in mind the eighth heaven.¹² How-

⁸ In fact, the chapter has a short epilogue: a passage is quoted from Bavli Hagigah 13a in which the limbs of the Hayyot are described.

⁹ Thus, for instance, we find a class of angels called Hadudei Panim ("the angels with the shining faces"). For Hadudim in the sense of rays of light see "Livre de Noé" in: Discoveries in the Judaean Desert I: Qumran Cave 1, ed. D. Barthélémy and J. T. Milik, Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1955, p. 85. See also E. Kimron, in Lešonenu XXXVII (1973), pp. 96-98, to which one has to add the expression Zinorei Shemesh (rays of the sun) in Sefer Ha-Razim, p. 92, l. 5.

¹⁰ Thus, for instance, the writer says that each Hayyah has "four faces within four faces, and four wings within four wings". He may have used Hekhalot Zutreti, but obviously his interpretation of the relevant passage there will not fit the calculation of the number of faces and wings as it is explicated in Hekhalot Zutreti.

¹¹ The name, which is unknown from other sources, derives from Deuteronomy xxxiii, 27.

¹² See our discussion of Re'uyot Yehezkel.

ever, what the writer says about this heaven is not very clear, and he seems to have used descriptions of the seventh heaven which he found in different sources. He mainly used Hekhalot Rabbati, where he rightly noticed the fact that God descends from the eighth heaven to His Throne in the seventh palace in the seventh heaven. However, the manner in which he refers to Hekhalot Rabbati is another proof of the freedom he allowed himself in handling his material. Among other things, he assumes that a dialogue is held between the Angels of Idolatry¹³ and the Angels of the Synagogues and Study Houses, as to who God is. Naturally, the Angels of Idolatry are unable to recognize God when He descends from the upper heaven. They ask "Who is the King of Glory?", to which the guardian angels of Israel answer: "The Lord of hosts, he is the King of glory".¹⁴ The chapter ends with a series of quotations from midrashic and Hekhalot sources which discuss the creation of the world¹⁵ and the Throne of Glory.¹⁶ Once again, the writer handles his sources in a free manner, as can easily be seen from the way he quotes Hekhalot Rabbati iv,3 in the concluding sentence of his text.

¹³ Sarei 'Avodah Zarah, which in this particular context seem to be the guardian angels of Christianity.

¹⁴ The reference is to Psalms xxiv,8-10. I cannot find a parallel or source to this interpretation of the biblical text.

¹⁵ First he quotes Bereshit Rabba xii (ed. Theodor-Albeck, pp. 108-109) on the creation of the world with the two letters Yod and Hei. Then he quotes Sefer Yezirah i,13 (ed. I. Gruenwald, in: Israel Oriental Studies, I (1971), p. 146, paragraph 15). Between the quotations from Bereshit Rabba and that from Sefer Yezirah a number of short aggadic sayings are introduced.

¹⁶ See Hekhalot Rabbati iii,2.

SHI'UR QOMAH

With Shi'ur Qomah we begin the discussion of a series of texts which are not Hekhalot writings in the narrow sense of the word, but which belong to the ancient Merkavah tradition.¹ Among these texts Shi'ur Qomah is the most controversial one.² It describes the physical measures of God's limbs and gives their mystical names. In contrast to the Hekhalot tradition which refers back to the terminology and imagery of Ezekiel, the Shi'ur Qomah speculations attach themselves to the Song of Songs.³ The term Shi'ur Qomah means "The Measurement of the Body", and it derives from the Song of Songs vii,8. It is first found in Tannaitic literature in connection with the vessels of the Temple.⁴ However, 2 Enoch xxxix,6 may contain the first reference to the Shi'ur Qomah of God.⁵ In the Middle Ages the Shi'ur Qomah was one of the targets which the Qaraites attacked in rabbinic Judaism.⁶ Even some of the rabbis were not happy with those provocative speculations.⁷ Interesting in this respect was the position taken by Maimonides: in his youth he believed in the book, while in his later days he nervously rejected its Jewish origin.⁸

Since the book abounds in mystical names and measurements, its contents are difficult to convey. The only full text is printed in Musajoff's Merkavah Shelemah, and it contains textual information

¹ For the connections between the Hekhalot tradition and the Shi'ur Qomah speculations, see G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 36-42.

² For the various theological problems involved in the Shi'ur Qomah speculations, see G. Scholem, Von der Mystischen Gestalt der Gottheit, Zürich, Rhein-Verlag, 1962, pp. 7 ff. For a survey of the medieval controversy over Shi'ur Qomah see A. Altmann, "Moses Narboni's Epistle on Shi'ur Qoma", in: Jewish Medieval and Renaissance Studies, ed. A. Altmann, Harvard University Press, 1967, pp. 225 ff.

³ See S. Lieberman in G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., pp. 118-126.

⁴ Yerushalmi Shabbat 2d in the name of the 'Amora, Rabbi Hananiah bar Shemu'el.

⁵ The visionary says: "I have seen the measureless and harmonious (B: incomparable) form of the Lord. To Him there is no end".

⁶ See, for instance, Salmon ben Jeruchim, The Book of the Wars of the Lord, ed. I. Davidson, New York: 1934, pp. 114-124. See further, L. Nemoy, "Al-Qirqisani Account of the Jewish Sects and Christianity", Hebrew Union College Annual VII (1930), pp. 331, 350 ff.

⁷ See above n. 2.

⁸ See S. Lieberman in Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 124.

gleaned from a number of sources.⁹ The text begins in a manner familiar from the Hekhalot literature: "Rabbi Yishma'el said: I saw the King of the Kings sitting on a high and exalted throne, and His servants were attending Him on His right and on His left". Metatron appears and reveals to Rabbi Yishma'el the measurement of God's body. The description begins from the feet and goes up to the head. Every limb is measured by parasangs. On page 38a the fantastic size of these parasangs is given: "Every parasang equals three miles, and every mile equals ten thousand ells, and every ell equals three small fingers. The small finger is that of God, and His small finger fills the whole world".

It is hard to say whether any method lies behind these measures, but we may assume that originally the measures aimed at conveying the notion of ideal proportions. These proportions were shared by God and man alike: "Rabbi Natan, Rabbi Yishma'el's student, said: He (Rabbi Yishma'el) gave me the measure of the nose too, from the right and from the left. And also (the measure of) the lips and (of) the cheekbones . . . the width of the forehead equals the height of the neck; the shoulder is as long as the nose (?), and the nose is as long as the small finger,¹⁰ and the height of the cheekbones is like the hemisphere of the head. And this is also the size of every man". Since man was created in the image of God, those interested in the subject felt entitled to make inferences from the physical proportions of the human body to that of God.

Every limb has also a mystical name. This may be explained in different ways: First, we already saw that according to Merkavah Rabbah the angels have two parallel sets, or modes, of names. Allegedly, one is their exoteric, official name and the other is the esoteric, mystical, appellation. We may thus assume that in the case of the Shi'ur Qomah a similar concept was employed. But we may also say that since nobody was allowed to conceive the corporeal configuration of the Deity,¹¹ the mystics had to use mystical metonyms when they described His corporeal features. Thus the mystical language which was invented for that purpose aimed at circumventing the anthropomorphic problem. But there is yet another way of looking at these mystical names. At one stage the text says: "The appearance of the face is like that of the cheekbones, and the appearance of the cheekbones and the face is in the likeness of the spirit and in the form of the soul. Nobody can recognize Him. His body is like the Tarshish,¹² and His glory flashes in an awesome manner from out of the darkness. Clouds and mists encircle Him... We do not possess any measure, but only the names are revealed to us".¹³ If taken literally, these sentences, and particularly the last one, indicate that the mystical names replace the measures. Thus the mystical name may refer to a particular limb and also indicate its measurement.

⁹ The text printed there on pages 30a-36a comes from the sources of the German Hasidim. However, we shall refer here only to the text printed on pages 36a-44a.

¹⁰ See S. Lieberman, Shkiin, Jerusalem, 1939, p. 12.

¹¹ See Exodus xxxiii, 20.

The degree of anthropomorphism maintained in Shi'ur Qomah is really remarkable. At one point the measure of God's beard is given (37a) and at another that of His eyebrows and of His curls (38b). Naturally, Rabbi Yishma'el was shocked by all that Metatron had revealed to him, so Rabbi 'Akiva felt it necessary to strengthen Rabbi Yishma'el's self-confidence: "Everybody who knows this measure of our Creator and His corporeal configuration¹⁴ which is hidden from the people, is promised life in the world to come..." (38b). Apparently, these words had their expected calming effect and Rabbi Yishma'el turned to his pupils: "I and Rabbi 'Akiva give our pledge that he who knows this measure of our Creator and the corporeal configuration of the Lord is promised life in the world to come, on condition that he studies it every day". The condition expressed in the last words is reminiscent of the Sar-Torah speculations which, as we saw, should be studied or said daily.

The second part of Shi'ur Qomah (38b-39a bottom) extends the principle to God's arrows, sword, Throne and Living Creatures. Each of them has its secret mystical name as well as its huge dimensions. The second part of the text ends with an interesting remark. Referring to the Living Creatures which have just been described, it says: "Those are the ones who say the Sanctus and those are the ones who say the Benedictus. As it is said (Psalms cxlvii,19): 'He declares His word to Jacob'.¹⁵ And everybody who does not conclude ¹² The reference here is to Daniel x,6, which describes one of the angels which Daniel saw. As for the Tarshish itself, it is generally believed to indicate the sea. See M. Mishor in Lešonenu XXXIV (1969-70), pp. 318-319.

¹³ Merkavah Shelemah 37a.

¹⁴ The Hebrew term used here is Shevah, and it resembles the Arabic Shabah, meaning "human figure indistinctly seen from a distance". See also A. Altmann, art. cit., pp. 228-229.

¹⁵ It is not made clear why this particular verse is quoted at this place. The with the 'order of the work of creation' (Seder Ma'aseh Bereshit) errs concerning God's glory (Shogeh be-tif'arto soel Ha-Qodesh Barukh Ha'). Similar words to the last ones are introduced when earlier the locus classicus of the Shi'ur Qomah speculations, Song of Songs v.10 ff., is quoted: "And everybody who does not conclude with this verse errs". There probably was an established procedure according to which the Shi'ur Qomah speculations were explicated. Every deviation from this customary order of explication was a grave mistake. However, in contrast to the Hekhalot writings, nothing is said regarding what might befall the erring mystic.

The third part of the text (39a bottom-40a) is devoted to a description of the celestial Qedushah. It begins with the words: "His glory fills everything" (Tif'arto meio ha-kol). The words obviously refer to the Glory of God which has just been mentioned in connection with the erring mystic, but it is not clear whether this part of the text really belongs to the original Shi'ur Qomah. In several manuscripts this part, and the one following, are reproduced out of their present context as parts of Shi'ur Qomah. However, the raison d'être for their inclusion here is clear: Metatron who revealed the secrets of the Shi'ur Qomah to Rabbi Yishma'el is playing a major role in organizing the celestial Qedushah. In addition, the concluding sentences of the second part of the text already refer to the celestial Qedushah said by the Hayyot. This (third) part of the text is divided into two sections. In the first section a description is given of how Metatron and the angels perform the ritual of the heavenly Qedushah, while in the second part, Merkavah hymns¹⁶ and Psalms¹⁷ form the hymnological conclusion of the text. One point in this description of the celestial Qedushah is particularly noteworthy: Metatron is described putting "the fire of deafness" into the ears of the Hayyot so that they might not hear the voice of God and the Ineffable Name which Metatron utters. We do not know of a similar procedure in any of the other Hekhalot writings, and even Sefer Hekhalot (3 Enoch) which describes same verse is also quoted before (37a) in connection with the "Shi'ur Qomah" of the tongue. However, Psalms cxlvii contains another verse (5) which is also taken to refer to God's "Shi'ur Qomah". See Scholem, U'on der mystischen Gestalt der Gottheit, p. 16. Was Psalms cxlvii believed to be a "Shi'ur Qomah" psalm? Though the sources do not bear direct evidence to this, it is noteworthy that two verses are quoted from that psalm in the same connection.

¹⁶ One section of these hymns equals the "Seventh Heaven" of Sefer Ha-Razim. See Margalioth's edition of Sefer Ha-Razim, p. 107, n. 1.

¹⁷ Psalms xxix, xxiv, Nehemiah ix,6-8, and 1 Chronicles xxix,11-13.

Metatron's role in the celestial Qedushah has no reference to that effect.¹⁸ It appears that the compiler of Sefer Hekhalot was ignorant of this part of the Shi'ur Qomah text, since nothing of it is quoted in his text. Towards the end of these hymns a short personal prayer is introduced (42a-42b), in which the Merkavah mystic asks for several personal favours.

¹⁸ However, Sefer Hekhalot xv(b) contains a paraphrase of this passage. But this part of the book, which refers to Moses, is no integral part of it.

PHYSIOGNOMY, CHIROMANCY AND METOPOSCOPY

In our discussion of Shi'ur Qomah we noticed that underlying it possibly was a certain theory regarding the ideal proportions of the human body. These proportions were assumed to be shared by God and man alike. Naturally, man who was created in the image of God reflected the same ideal physical proportions as God. And, mutatis mutandi, those who engaged in speculations regarding the anthropomorphic features of God could use their observations about the structure of the human body in relation to what they believed was the corporeal configuration of God. However, the human body was not only conceived as revealing a secret mystical doctrine of the corpus Dei, but also supplied necessary information about man's character and future fate. This information was gained by examining the shape and relative size of several parts of the body.

The earliest Jewish source known to us that refers to the examination of the human body in order to define the moral and spiritual qualities of a person is a cryptic document from Qumran now published as 4Q 186.¹ The quintessence of this document is that man's moral and spiritual qualities can be defined through an examination of the size and shape of his thighs, toes, fingers, hair, eyes, beard, teeth and height. Even the quality of his voice has something to tell about his righteousness or wickedness. When the information gained through such an examination is added to the zodiacal sign of a man's birth, a perfect sketch of the moral and spiritual qualities of that man may be drawn. According to the theory maintained in that document, man has a share either in the House of Light or in the House of Darkness and that share is determined by a total number of nine points. The ratio of 4:5 is always the critical one in the decision to which of the two Houses he belongs. As Professor J. Licht rightly observed,² the information gained by such an examination together with the annual tests of a man's intellectual accomplishments was to help the leaders of the Qumran sect to decide who was worthy of sharing the sect's lot, and who had either to quit or be rejected.

Another document found at Qumran (Cave 4), written in Aramaic,

¹ See: Discoveries in the Judaean Desert. V: Qumran Cave 4, ed. J. M. Allegro, Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1968, pp. 88-91.

² In Tarbiz XXXV (1966), p. 18 ff.

possibly defines the corporeal features of the future Messiah.³ Since these Qumran texts were preserved in a rather fragmentary condition, much that could help us in defining the scope and origin of their underlying theory is missing. However, we know that similar theories were spread in the ancient Near East, and since it has recently been argued that at least a certain fraction of the Qumran sect came from Babylonia,⁴ it is quite likely that the Qumranites adapted in this case an ancient Babylonian theory and practice. Unfortunately, no traces of such a theory are preserved in either the pseudepigraphical corpus of writings or in the rabbinical writings. Admittedly, there are a few instances in these writings that could be interpreted as indicating a similar theory, but their true meaning could also lie elsewhere. To begin with, Ben Sira xix,29-30 says: "A man is known by his appearance, / And the wise man recognizeth him by his look / . . . / And his gait showeth what he is".⁵ Indeed, these verses of Ben Sira can only be a paraphrase of Isaiah iii,9,⁶ but the words Hakarat Panim mentioned in this verse became a technical term for metoposcopy, the art of reading the lines of the forehead, and for the art of reading special signs on one's face in general. In addition, we find in Testament Shim'on v,1: "For some of the trouble of the spirit the face manifesteth". But this can, of course, be only a general statement with no technical overtones.

In rabbinical writings we find at least two cases in which certain corporeal features were singled out to determine certain halakhic problems. In the first case we have the abortion of an embryo. His degree of development is determined by the possibility of recognizing on him what the *Mishnah*⁷ calls Zurat Adam, the shape of man. Referring to the same Mishnah, the *Tosefta*⁸ uses the term Zurat Panim, the shape of the face, and the *Talmud Yerushalmi*⁹ uses the ³ J. Carmignac, "Les Horoscopes de Qumran", Revue de Qumran V (1965), pp. 206-217.

⁴ See J. Murphy-O'Connor, "The Essenes and their History", Revue Biblique LXXXI (1974), p. 215 ff.

⁵ The text was preserved only in Greek. The English translation is that of Box & Oesterley in Charles, Apocrypha, p. 384. See the translators' note ad locum.

⁶ It should, however, be noticed that the Greek of Ben Sira does not repeat the LXX of Isaiah iii,9.

⁷ Mishnah Niddah iii,2. Compare Mishnah Bekhorot viii,1.

⁸ Tosefta Niddah iv,6-7; see also Bavli Niddah 25b.

⁹ Yerushalmi Niddah 20c. The terms Hakarat Panim, Parzuf Panim (Mishnah Yevamot xvi,3) and Qelaster Panim (Wayyikra Rabba, ch. xviii, ed. Margalioth, p. 391), are all synonyms.

term Hukrat Panim, that by which the individual features of the face are recognized. In another case, the finding of a corpse, the Hukrat Panim is determined by means of the nose, the cheekbones and the forehead.¹⁰ As Professor Scholem rightly remarked, this material can only be taken as a general background to the esoteric material which we shall presently discuss.¹¹

We now know that the Merkavah mystics engaged in detailed speculations about what can be learnt from the various parts of a man's body concerning his moral quality, his social and economic status, his health, his family, and his future lot in general. A number of texts, published by G. Scholem¹² and the present writer,¹³ give a fairly wide picture of the scope of these speculations among the Merkavah mystics. Unfortunately, however, what is said in these texts is of a highly enigmatic character. The technical terminology used in the text is nowhere graphically displayed and analysed, so that the reader has to guess what the various signs really imply. Particular importance is attached in these texts to the lines found on one's palm and forehead. These lines, and particularly those of the palm, have long been subject to all kinds of theories, and some modern psychologists of the Jungian school find them helpful in their psychological diagnosis of their patients. The science of looking at the lines of the palm is called chiromancy, while the observation of the lines of the forehead—the younger of the two sciences—is called metoposcopy. However, the Merkavah mystics did not confine themselves to the hand and the forehead, but added speculations about the other parts of the body, including the sex organs. On the ¹⁰ See Mishnah Yemot xvi,3. The Mishnah states that the dead man's identity is determined by his face (Parguf Ha-Panim) together with his nose. In Yerushalmi Yemot 15c Rav Yehudah is quoted as saying that the nose together with the cheekbones determine the dead man's identity, while Rabbi Yirmiyah in the name of Rav quotes Isaiah iii,19 and infers that the Hukrat Panim is qualified by the nose only. A similar view to the last one is brought there also in the name of Rabbi 'Abba bar Kahana. In Bavli Yemot 120a Rabbanan are quoted as saying that the dead man's identity is determined by either the forehead or the Parguf Panim and the nose. In any event, the nose is taken to be the most important part of the face to determine the identity of a dead man. In Yerushalmi Niddah 20c it is said that the degree of development of an embryo is determined by an examination of the following "signs": the forehead, the eye-brows, the eye, the ear, the cheekbone, the nose, the cheeks (lit. the beard), and the jaw-bone. Rabbi Shim'on ben Yohai adds even the fingernails.

¹¹ See G. Scholem in Sefer Assaf (in Hebrew), Jerusalem, 1953, p. 462.

¹² See previous note.

¹³ In Tarbiz XL (1971), pp. 301 ff.

whole, the discipline that is displayed in these texts is that of an occult science, by the help of which the Merkavah mystics either exhibited their superior modes of knowledge¹⁴ or tested the qualities of those who wanted to join their ranks.¹⁵

The physiognomic and chiromantic texts of the Merkavah mystics raise a number of interesting problems. We shall refer here only to those problems not discussed in the studies which Professor Scholem published on these texts.¹⁶ The first problem concerns the historical continuity of the physiognomic and chiromantic tradition in Judaism. Scholem states that "Chiromancy appears first in Judaism in the circle of Merkavah mysticism".¹⁷ From what we saw in the Qumran writings it appears that the physiognomic tradition in Judaism is much older than Merkavah mysticism. If the Responsa of Hai Ga'on and his father, Sherira Ga'on,¹⁸ supply the necessary documentary bridge between the chiromantic writings of the Merkavah mystics and the physiognomic and chiromantic passages in the Zohar,¹⁹ no such links are known to exist between the relevant texts of the Qumran people and the chiromantic texts of the Merkavah mystics. Admittedly, we found in some of the rabbinic writings certain terms that later on became key notions in the chiromantic texts of the Merkavah mystics. But while these terms as they appear in the rabbinic writings only indicate general physiognomic notions, the Merkavah mystics were in possession of fully developed disciplines of chiromancy and metoposcopy.

However, it was already noticed that several technical terms used in the Qumran texts do reappear in the chiromantic texts of the Merkavah mystics.²⁰ This fact may be interpreted as indicating the ¹⁴ See Hekhalot Rabbati i-ii, where the recurring phrase Yode'a umakir bo may be taken to indicate familiarity with the physiognomic tradition and terminology.

¹⁵ See G. Scholem, in Sefer Assaf, p. 459.

¹⁶ Apart from the article published in Sefer 'Assaf Scholem published "Ein Fragment zur Physiognomik und Chiromantik aus der Spätantiken jüdischen Esoterik" in: Liber Amicorum: Studies in Honour of Professor Dr. C. J. Bleeker, Leiden: 1969, pp. 175 ff.; and the article "Chiromancy" in: Kabbalah, Jerusalem, Keter Publishing House, 1974, pp. 317-319. "Ein Fragment etc." is a revised and updated German version of the article in Sefer Assaf; and the article "Chiromancy", which should have been an updated version of Scholem's article on that subject in Encyclopedia Judaica Jerusalem, was, unfortunately, printed without the additional notes.

¹⁷ See Kabbalah (see previous note), p. 317.

¹⁸ Scholem, ibid.

¹⁹ See I. Gruenwald in Tarbiz XL (1971), p. 301, n. 3.

²⁰ See my discussion in Tarbiz XL (1971), pp. 304-305. See also J. Greenfield, "Prolegomenon" to 3 Enoch, pp. XXXV-XXXVII.

existence of a historical continuity between these two facets of the physiognomic and chiromantic tradition. In discussing certain striking similarities between the Qumran documents and the Qaraite writings, Professor N. Wieder observed: "It may reasonably be assumed that the remnants of the Qumranites formed one of the dissident elements that went into the formation of the Qaraite sect, and that the Qumran element was able, either through sheer spiritual and intellectual weight, or through numbers, or both, to exert a preponderant influence on the medley of heterogeneous groups and individuals that rallied to 'Anan's banner'.²¹ However, Wieder had to admit that in "the absence of documentary data we are naturally thrown back upon theory and hypothesis, but, fortunately, not upon blind conjecture".²² Wieder's words stating the relationship between the Judaean Scrolls and Qaraism ideally fit the problem of the transmission of esoteric traditions in general. Esoteric traditions appear and disappear and the assumed underground streams that connect them give rise to speculations. Hundreds of years passed between the composition of the Qumran texts and the relevant ones of the Merkavah mystics. Yet, one wonders whether it is merely coincidence that the Merkavah mystics repeated some of the technical terms of the Qumranites. Or do we have to assume that hitherto unidentified underground links are to account for the continuation of the physiognomic tradition through the ages.

Turning to the physiognomic texts of the Merkavah mystics, it should be noted that it is difficult to discover in them a coherent system. In fact, certain irregularities can easily be pointed out. For example, the texts frequently refer to certain letters of the alphabet the shape of which is believed to be inscribed in various parts of the human body. Neither is there any regularity in the enumeration of these letters, nor can any coherency be found regarding the part of the body in which these letters appear to be inscribed.²³ Since these letters appear to belong to the heart of this kind of esoteric physiognomy and chiromancy—they are also mentioned in the chiromantic and physiognomic passages of the Zohar—it is to be expected that particularly in their case a fixed system should be discovered. However, this is not the case, and the impression one gets is of casualness and arbitrariness. In another case, we find that a certain terminology is differently used in two texts.²⁴ And in yet another case the same fate is obtained from two different signs of the body.²⁵ One may easily explain such discrepancies by the existence of parallel traditions or differences of opinion regarding the identification of the signs and their meaning. And it may be argued that in the case of such a popular science no absolute consistency is to be expected. What really mattered in the eyes of those people was the practice itself and its various functions, but not the methodological consistency of the technique.

²¹ N. Wieder, The Judean Scrolls and Karaism, London, East and West Library, 1962, pp. 254-255.

²² Ibid., p. 254.

²³ See I. Gruenwald in Tarbiz XL (1971), p. 307, n. 16. It should be noticed in this connection that some scholars claimed that they discovered certain secret letters in the Qumran Rule of Discipline. See, for instance, E. Ettisch, "Eschatologisch-Astrologische Vorstellungen in der Gemeinderegel (X,1-8)", Revue de Qumran II (1959), pp. 3-19. However, almost everything that was said about the letters in question appears to be of a highly speculative nature.

Another problem that concerns the physiognomic texts of the Merkavah mystics is the inclusion of astrological speculations in some of these texts.²⁶ Judaism considered astrology as idolatry, and from biblical times onward it fiercely fought all kinds of astral beliefs. However, we know that there were times in which the popular belief in astrology was stronger than the laws forbidding its practice. In many countries and for a long time astrology was the queen of the sciences, so that it was almost inevitable that Judaism of Talmudic times should succumb to the general—pagan—fashion of the time. There are a great number of utterances in rabbinic writings about the efficacy of the astral bodies and the dependence of man on their powers.²⁷ But it would be wrong to think that Judaism of Talmudic times shared the pagan astrological beliefs without any reservation. On the contrary, there are some sharp utterances against the belief in astrology. On the whole, it may be argued that Judaism of that time maintained an ambivalent attitude towards astrology. On the one hand one finds attempts towards a systematization of this belief;²⁸ on the other hand one finds views which, in spite of their recognition of the efficacy of astrology, deny its power over an obedient Jew.²⁹

²⁴ See Gruenwald, art. cit., p. 311, n. 19.

²⁵ Ibid., p. 312, n. 7.

²⁶ Particularly in the first text published by the present writer in Tarbiz XL (1971).

²⁷ Despite many attempts to deal with the subject, there is still room for a comprehensive study of the various Jewish attitudes towards astrology.

²⁸ See particularly Bavli Shabbat 156a.

²⁹ See in Tarbiz XL (1971), pp. 302-303. To which one should add Tosafot 'Avodah Zarah 3b (s.v. Shomer Nafsbo).

However, in our text, it appears, no room is left for ambivalence: astrology is taken to support and to complement chiromancy and metoposcopy in their prognostic faculty. In fact, if the whole text had been preserved it could have been a grand display of these occult disciplines. Unfortunately, only small parts of what seems to have been a detailed treatise on these subjects have come down to us, and from the few small pages a great deal has to be inferred.

SEFER HA-RAZIM

The publication in 1967 of the Sefer Ha-Razim by the late Professor M. Margalioth drew the attention of the scholarly world to the existence in Hebrew of a fully developed magical literature. The nature and scope of that literature in Hebrew does not fall short of the parallel Greek magical papyri and the Aramaic Incantation Bowls. In fact, in addition to Sefer Ha-Razim we know of the existence of a great number of Hebrew manuscripts which contain similar material of no less importance than the Sefer Ha-Razim.¹ The subject matter of Sefer Ha-Razim consists mainly of magical prescriptions for a great variety of purposes: medicine, subjugation of one's enemies, discourse with supernatural powers, etc. The technical term for these practices is Baqashah (Request), and most of them begin with the words 'Im Biqashta (If you expressed the wish). The technical terms used in the book for magic, or the magical practice, are Davar, 'Eseq and Hefez. The common Hebrew term for magic, Keshafim, is only used twice in the book (p. 86, l. 95; p. 94, l. 42), and this only when the magical practice of one's enemy is mentioned. This is probably to say that the book does not designate itself as an inferior kind of pagan or idolatrous magic. This is no black magic for subduing people to the powers of the devil, but white magic used for allegedly constructive purposes.

Although we have dealt extensively in the present book with theurgical and magical practices, magic as such does not directly belong to our subject matter. In fact, the whole question of Jewish magic still deserves a full-scale study which will take into account the details of the relationship between Jewish magic and the Greek magical papyri on the one hand, and the Aramaic Incantation Bowls on the other. Despite L. Blau's monograph, Das Alt-jüdische Zaubermwesen, first published in 1898 and still a notable cornerstone in the study of Jewish magic, and the many subsequent studies, we still await a comprehensive study of Jewish magic and its connections with other magical systems.² Our concern with Sefer Ha-Razim results mainly from its unique combination of magic and Merkavah material and our comments revolve around this curious combination of literary elements.

¹ Two such manuscripts—Sassoon 290 (now sold) and Gaster 177 (now in Manchester)—are described by M. Benayahu in Temirin I, (in Hebrew), Jerusalem: 1972, pp. 187 ff. Although the manuscripts are comparatively late—probably of the 16th century—they contain versions of Sefer Ha-Razim, Harba De-Moshe, Sefer Ha-Malbush, etc.

One of the magical practices of the book contains a historical reference,³ on the basis of which attempts have been made to date the book as belonging to either the third or fourth century C.E.⁴ However, it appears that despite the fact that the book contains some early elements, it was compiled rather late (6th or 7th century C.E.) by a compiler who did not always understand the material available to him.⁵ In any event, the book presents a unique combination of esoteric beliefs and practices which permeated certain circles in the Judaism of Talmudic times. In this respect, it gives us an opportunity to look back and reconsider some of the problems which have been discussed in the present book.

Before we begin our discussion of Sefer Ha-Razim, a few words must be said about Margalioth's edition. To begin with, Margalioth published an eclectic text. The book should not therefore be quoted without a close study of the variae lectiones printed at the end of the text. In addition, Margalioth tampered with the text, in some cases even where the manuscripts supply good and interesting readings.⁶ After a careful study of the book the present writer came to the conclusion that a new critical edition is required. In a new edi-

² To give one example of what we have in mind we can mention John M. Hull, Hellenistic Magic and the Synoptic Tradition, London, SCM Press, 1974. In spite of the fact that Hull's book was published seven years after the publication of Sefer Ha-Razim, the latter is not mentioned in Hull's discussion and survey of Jewish and hellenistic magic! And this is not the only shortcoming of that book.

³ See Sefer Ha-Razim, p. 68, ll. 27-28: "These are the angels who attend to the magical practice in the first and in the second year of the cycle of fifteen years reckoned by the 'Kings of Greece'". See next note.

⁴ In a letter to the editor of the book, Professor A. Rosenthal interpreted the date quoted in the previous note as referring to the cycle of the Indictiones started by Diocletian in Egypt in 297, and by Constantine in 312. Professor Rosenthal inclines to date the book in the fourth century C.E., while Margalioth himself argues for an earlier date (in the third century C.E.). See, Margalioth's "Introduction", pp. 24-26.

⁵ This is particularly true in the case of the many Greek words which the book contains. Not all the corrupt transcriptions can be attributed to careless copyists.

⁶ To give just one or two examples: On p. 66, l. 27 he omitted the word Ha-Razim after the third word in the line. In line 30 Margalioth changed the clear Taskil into the curious Taskit.

tion a commentary should be added and the indices enlarged and improved.⁷

Sefer Ha-Razim begins with an Introduction which tells the history of the transmission of magic from the days of Noah. That Noah was selected to be the first recipient of magic may be due to the tradition that goes back to Jubilees x,12-14, where the angels teach Noah how to cure all kinds of illnesses. Noah writes everything down in a book. However, it should be noted that Sefer Ha-Razim was given to Noah before the Flood, while Jubilees x,12-14 refers to events that took place after the Flood. The Introduction lists all the things that can be known or achieved with the help of magic. Yet, very little of what the Introduction lists as the efficacy of magic is later displayed in practice in the course of the book. In fact, the Introduction is also known from other books,⁸ and its omnibus catalogue of subjects could indeed fit a number of purposes. The Introduction begins with the statement that Sefer Ha-Razim was revealed to Noah by the angel Razel before the former entered his ark. From Noah the book was transmitted down the many generations until it reached King Solomon. As a matter of fact, the Introduction speaks about a plurality of Sifrei Ha-Razim ("Books of Mysteries"). Our Sefer Ha-Razim is thus only one in a series of such books, and according to the Introduction, it was one of the magical books which King Solomon allegedly possessed.⁹

Reading the details of the Introduction, one can see that the efficacy of magic stretches over the whole of Nature. Magic may help man to gain all kinds of secret knowledge, to divine the future, and to influence the course of events. Magic is efficacious in astronomy, in astrology, in meteorology, and so on. All that one has to do is to study the Sefer Ha-Razim and to learn its practices and prescriptions.

⁷ It is a curious fact that all those who reviewed Margalioth's edition did not refer to its obvious textual shortcomings. Attempts have already been made to translate the book, or parts of it, into English, French and German. None of the translators were aware of the fact, that the text published by Margalioth cannot be trusted without checking the variant readings! Only half of the book is contained in the Genizah fragments, the discovery of which made Margalioth announce it as a sensation.

⁸ See A. Jellinek's remarks in Bet ha-Midrash III, pp. XXX-XXXIII.

⁹ As far as I can see, the first writer who attributed the knowledge of magic to King Solomon was Josephus Flavius in Antiquities VIII, 45-48. At least, Josephus is the first datable written source to the tradition that was variously dispersed in antiquity. See further, J. Doresse, The Secret Books of the Egyptian Gnostics, New York, The Viking Press, 1960, pp. 170-172.

Indeed, the existence of such a book in Hebrew could cause its editor severe dogmatic difficulties. Magic was strictly forbidden in Judaism. Even in apocalyptic literature the teaching of magic to mankind was attributed to the evil angels.¹⁰ However, in rabbinic literature a more complex view was held on magic. We cannot include here a detailed summary on the rabbinic view of magic,¹¹ but it may briefly be said that some of the sages were familiar with certain magical practices and others also practised magic. The official reason for this deviation from the obvious biblical prohibition to practise magic was that one may study—and perform—magic for the purpose of familiarizing oneself with the subject. We may well assume that the common people were less conscientious in restricting their use of magic.

When it comes to Sefer Ha-Razim, we find magical practices organized in what appears to be a systematic magical manual. From an orthodox Jewish point of view this is all the more perplexing, since the Sefer Ha-Razim is the only systematic magical treatise we know of in (post) Talmudic times. Neither the magical papyri nor the Aramaic Incantation Bowls, to say nothing of the various kinds of magical amulets and gems, are in any sense of the word magical books.¹² All these magical documents are shorter or longer collections of magical practices, and no attempt is made in them to organize the material in any coherent method or system. The way Sefer Ha-Razim organizes its magical subject matter is thus rather interesting. The book is divided into seven parts, corresponding to the seven heavens. The names of two of these heavens resemble those found in the so-called Palestinian lists of heavens,¹³ a fact that underlines the assumption that the book was composed in Ereẓ-Yisrael, or at least by a Jew who was familiar with peculiarities of the Palestinian Merkavah tradition. The organization of this Merkavah material is particularly interesting. The “First Heaven” contains no Merkavah material at all. From the “Second Heaven” onwards, the higher we proceed in the “Heavens” the more Merkavah material, and the less ¹⁰ See, for instance, 1 Enoch vi-viii, and lxix.

¹¹ See E. E. Urbach, The Sages, Chapters vi-vii.

¹² It should be noticed that magical books are sometimes referred to in the Greek magical papyri published by Karl Preisendanz.

¹³ See I. Gruenwald, in Tarbiz XXXVI (1967), pp. 269-270. More evidence for the Palestinian origin of the book is supplied by Margalioth, though he inclines to locate its place of composition in Alexandria.

magical material is introduced. In the "Seventh Heaven" no magical material is found at all.

Sefer Ha-Razim contains a rather elaborate angelology which in itself underlines the structure of the book. In the "First Heaven" we find a class of angels, called Shotrim, ("Scribes"), sitting (!) on seven thrones and presiding over seven camps of angels who serve them. Each camp of angels is responsible for a certain magical activity. In the course of his magical performance, the magician has to call out the names of the proper angels or to write them down—usually in blood—and thus send them on their magical mission. In this sense, one may see the angels as magical apprentices. The number of the angels varies from camp to camp. Although some of the manuscripts mention certain numbers, the actual number of names does not always correspond to the number given in the manuscripts. The reason for this discrepancy lies in copyists' errors. Because the names of the angels in Sefer Ha-Razim are rather unusual and mostly incomprehensible, the copyists had difficulty in dividing those completely incomprehensible chains of letters into words. Nothing could direct them as to how to split groups of letters into words. Only in cases where the names had the usual—'el—ending did the copyists find themselves on safe ground.

The "Second Heaven" is formally divided into twelve classes of angels. They are called Ma'alot ("Steps"), since, like the Levites in the Temple, they stood on twelve steps in the "Second Heaven". Although many of these angels have the traditional—'el—ending, their names are almost as incomprehensible as the names which do not have that ending. Three angels are in charge of the "Third Heaven". As in the previous two heavens, these angels too preside over groups of angels. Accordingly, this "Heaven" is sub-divided into three parts. The "Fourth Heaven" is divided into two parts corresponding to the two classes of angels that inhabit it: the angels of the day and the angels of the night. In the "Fifth Heaven" there are the twelve angels called The Presidents of Glory (Nesi'ei Ha-Kavod). The number corresponds to the twelve months of the year. Evidently, these angels are in charge of information of what may happen in the respective months over which they preside. However, the "Fifth Heaven" is not subdivided into twelve corresponding parts. It contains only a general instruction of what one should do in order to know in which month one will die. The "Sixth Heaven" is once again divided into two parts, corresponding to the two groups of angels inhabiting the west and the east of that Heaven. Since the "Seventh Heaven" does not contain any magical practices, no specific classes of angels are mentioned therein.

When it comes to the magical practices described in the book, a number of interesting features should be emphasized. To begin with, the conjuration of the angels is frequently connected with ritual performances which, according to traditional standards, are downright idolatry. One is expected to offer libations to the angels and incense to the astral bodies.¹⁴ In one case one even has to sacrifice a white cock to the moon and stars.¹⁵ Most surprising is the prayer to Helios, which one has to say if one desires to see the sun rising in its chariot.¹⁶ These and other idolatrous practices described in the book led Margalioth to the conclusion that Sefer Ha-Razim is in fact a heretical book.¹⁷ And indeed a book that contains a magical practice for necromancy¹⁸ cannot but arouse orthodox antagonism.¹⁹ In the enlarged Hebrew edition of his book Greek and Hellenism in Jewish Palestine (pp. 73 ff.), Professor Saul Lieberman discussed the problem of the penetration of heathen and pagan beliefs in astrology and magic into the world of the Jews in Talmudic times. According to Professor Lieberman, it cannot be denied that the Jews of Talmudic times were influenced by the beliefs and practices maintained and performed among their non-Jewish neighbours. However, according to Professor Lieberman, the Jews absorbed from that world only that which was commonplace in everyday life. Thus, the magical and astrological information contained in rabbinic writings still bears the marks of the strong resentment felt by the rabbis towards that kind of material.

Yet, it may be asked whether a book like Sefer Ha-Razim, and similar material contained in manuscripts, does not betray, in a more reliable manner than do the rabbinic writings, the nature and scope of these occult practices among the common people. After all, the rabbis and those who put their sayings into writing had certain standards to maintain. Their responsibility and obligations as religious and social leaders imposed on them restrictions and modes of ex-

¹⁴ See Margalioth, "Introduction", pp. 10-11.

¹⁵ Ibid., p. 12.

¹⁶ Ibid., pp. 12-13.

¹⁷ Ibid., p. 14 ff. Margalioth quotes Church Fathers who attacked the Jews for (a) praying not to God but to angels and (b) practising magic.

¹⁸ "First Heaven", ll. 176 ff.

¹⁹ Leviticus xix,31; Deuteronomy xviii,10-11.

pression that were not always applied among the common unlearned people. Despite the distinctive literary qualities of Sefer Ha-Razim which may suggest that its origin was in literate and educated circles, it still seems to represent the popular spirit of the time which engaged in magic and astrology. Magic and astrology, we should remember, were respected sciences. In practising these sciences, the Jews of the time were only following the intellectual fashion of the day. If this is true, then halakhic and doctrinal considerations were suspended in the light of the practical functions these sciences played in everyday life.

In spite of the fact that Sefer Ha-Razim bears strong points of resemblance to the Greek magical papyri, one should not view it as a mere Hebrew imitation of the magical material contained in those papyri. There are some outstanding characteristics in the book which make it an original contribution in the history of magical literature. The writer, or compiler, of the book was in all probability familiar with the material found in the magical papyri—he even uses several Greek technical terms found in them—but this fact makes his own contribution to the subject all the more interesting. In contrast to many of the magical practices found in the magical papyri, Sefer Ha-Razim repeatedly stresses the importance of the preparatory steps, which, similar to the preparatory stages in the Hekhalot mysticism, insist on the ritual purity of the performer and on the special diets he has to keep. In addition, Sefer Ha-Razim sometimes refers to the special magical signs and letters—the so-called kharakteres of the magical papyri—but it totally omits any reference to the magical words and formulae of the magical papyri. Instead, Sefer Ha-Razim displays a highly developed angelology, and the invocation of these angels comes in the place of the magical formulae (Zauberwörter) in the magical papyri. It is also interesting to note in this connection that the names of many angels in Sefer Ha-Razim sound like magical words, a fact that may be due not to the mere caprice of the writer of the book, but may rather reveal his desire to judaize certain essential elements of the magical papyri.

The magical papyri contain prayers and applications to the various magical spirits and demons which are invoked. These magical prayers are sometimes replaced in Sefer Ha-Razim by semi-Merkavah hymns. The Merkavah material in Sefer Ha-Razim is interesting for a number of reasons. On close examination, its poetical quality is of a different nature from the hymns in the Hekhalot writings. It lacks the ecstatic tone of the Hekhalot hymns, and in its style and form it resembles the liturgical poetry, the Piyyutim. Although the Merkavah material of Sefer Ha-Razim apparently derived from mystical sources that sprang, if not exclusively, from the Hekhalot literature, one may see in this Merkavah material a more or less independent development of the Hekhalot literature.

As previously mentioned, there is no Merkavah material in the so-called "First Heaven". The "Second Heaven" begins with a description of what it contains: "Frost,²⁰ treasure-houses of snow, treasure-houses of hail, angels of fire, angels of fright, spirits of fear and spirits of awe". We know of similar lists which enumerate what each of the heavens contains (Bavli Hagigah 12b-13a; Re'uyot Yehezkel; Beraita de-Ma'aseh Bereshit; etc.). There are significant differences between these lists regarding what is contained in each of the heavens. Sefer Ha-Razim does not follow any of the parallel lists, and it may be said that the writer of the book was not seriously interested in cosmological problems. The incorporation of cosmological material into his book probably followed the fashion of the day. Ma'aseh Bereshit (cosmology) and Ma'aseh Merkavah went hand in hand, but the manner in which the writer of Sefer Ha-Razim used them for his magical purposes is rather unique. To give one example of the use the writer made of the cosmological material, one may refer to his description of what the first two heavens contain. In the parallel cosmological lists we find that the first two heavens are always connected with the operation of the heavenly luminaries. However, in Sefer Ha-Razim nothing is said about the first heaven apart from the fact that it is inhabited by the seven Shotrim ("Scribes"). The second heaven in Sefer Ha-Razim contains elements which in the other lists are contained in the sixth and seventh heavens. It should be noted too that the treasure-houses of snow and of dew are found, according to 2 Enoch iv-vi, in the first heaven. It thus appears that Sefer Ha-Razim was not the first to break established facts of cosmological descriptions.

The "Second Heaven" also contains twelve groups of angels which are described at some length. For example, the first group is described in the following manner: "They stand in a frightening position. / They are wrapped up in wrath. / They are girdled with fear. / They are encircled by trembling. / Their garment is like that of fire. /

²⁰ The text uses two words, Kefor and Qitor, which appear to be synonyms.

Their face is like the vision of lightning. / Their mouth does not cease from many things. / But their voice is not heard. / Since their job is to silence and to terrify and to frighten him who stands up against the one who conjures them in ritual purity". The twelfth group is described thus: "They are encircled by justice. / And they have rays of glory on their heads. / They are full of sagacity. / They are qualified by their song. / They stand in two groups. / Half of them sing, and half of them say the response. / There is healing in their tongue and binding up in their speech. / And you shall be successful in everything that they are conjured for". This is more or less the style and form of the Merkavah material in the Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Heavens. It mainly concerns the angels, their features and their activity in heaven.

In the 'Seventh Heaven', which contains no magical material, a description is given of God sitting on His Throne of Glory. The degree to which the writer was familiar with the Hekhalot literature is clearly seen from the fact that no palaces are mentioned in that heaven. Instead, God is said to be sitting in His Holy Abode, Me'on Qodsho, a term that derives from Deuteronomy xxvi,15. Books of fire are said to be opened before Him,²¹ and streams of fire are pouring forth from underneath the Throne.²² God is not even seen by His angels. He is carried by the Hayyot. Before the angels sing the Qedushah, they immerse in "streams of purity" (Nabarei Toborah) and wrap themselves up in garments of white fire.²³ The description ends with a Merkavah hymn, the phraseology of which is strongly influenced by biblical images. In contrast to the Hekhalot hymns, the lyrical elements of Sefer Ha-Razim owe a great deal to the poetry of Scripture. In fact, whole biblical verses are quoted in the Merkavah hymns of Sefer Ha-Razim, and in this respect we may repeat that the Merkavah material of the book comes closer to the Piyyutim than to the Hekhalot hymns. In any event, most of them lack the ecstatic tone and style of the Hekhalot hymns.

To sum up, Sefer Ha-Razim was included in our discussion of the Hekhalot writings because of the Merkavah material it contains. It is ²¹ Compare Sefer Ha-Razim, p. 89, ll. 142-143; 3 Enoch xxvii, xxviii, xxx, xxxii, xliv. See Daniel vii,10.

²² Compare Sefer Ha-Razim, p. 96, l. 3. Heavenly streams (of fire) are also mentioned in Ma'aseh Merkavah, paragraphs 2 and 10, and in 3 Enoch, passim. Needless to say, the idea derives from Daniel vii,10.

²³ For the parallels in the Hekhalot literature, see the writer's notes to Re'uyot Yehezkel, pp. 126-127, n. 65. See also Sefer Ha-Razim, p. 96, ll. 6-7.

no mystical treatise in the proper sense of the term, but it is an interesting example of the interplay of magic and mysticism in antiquity. The book still deserves a full-scale revaluation, but not before a new critical edition of the book is available. Then the whole subject of Jewish and pagan magic will be re-opened in light of the material found in the Greek and Coptic magical writings on the one hand, and the Aramaic and Mandaic Incantation Bowls on the other.²⁴

²⁴ See E. R. Goodenough, Jewish Symbols in the Greco-Roman Period, vol. II (1953), pp. 153-295. Goodenough gives an English translation of several magical papyri and bowls, but his discussion of the material he quotes in extenso is far from satisfactory. [After the completion of this book, P. Schäfer drew my attention to J. H. Niggemeyer, Beschwörungsformeln aus dem 'Buch der Geheimnisse', Georg Olms Verlag, Hildesheim & New York, 1975. Niggemeyer produced a systematic and serious work.]

APPENDICES

by SAUL LIEBERMAN

1. Metatron, the meaning of his name and his functions

The origin of the name מיטטרון was discussed by many scholars. The whole material was collected by H. Odeberg in his edition of 3 Enoch, p. 137 ff. He first quotes the conjecture that Metatron is "equivalent to σύνθρονος, co-occupant of the Divine Throne", and he then cites a number of other theories. In conclusion he summarizes: "Of these different modes of interpretation that regarding Metatron as equivalent to σύνθρονος can be easily dismissed. There is not a single instance in any known Jewish source of Metatron being represented as the co-occupant of the Divine Throne".

The scholars took for granted that the use of σύνθρονος is similar to the use of σύνναχος (sharing the same temple), i.e. sharing the same throne. Professor G. Scholem was therefore quite right in rejecting (Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism, p. 60-70) all the conjectures cited by Odeberg. However, the exact meaning of σύνθρονος was misunderstood by Odeberg and his predecessors. E. Cornemann (Klio I, p. 55) correctly pointed out that living dignitaries were often called σύνθρονοι θεοί, the technical expression for such honors was ἰσοθεοὶ τιμαί.¹ It appears that in our sources Μετάθρονος (= σύνθρονος) is a mere title, [ἄγγελος] μετάθρονος, as he is frequently called in 3 Enoch: מטטרון מלאך.² This last source correctly understood that the chair of the angel stood alongside the Throne of his Master.³ Genesis (41:43) says about Joseph, the viceroy of Pharaoh: "And he (i.e. Pharaoh) made him ride in the second chariot etc." which Rashi correctly understood to mean that Joseph rode alongside Pharaoh's chariot. Test. Levi (xiii,9) uses the following expression: σύνθρονος ἔσται βασιλέων, ὥσπερ Ἰωσήφ ὁ ἀδελφός μου. Lucianus in his mockery oracle⁴ maintains: ἦρῶα μέγιστον σύνθρονον Ἡφαίστω

¹ Comp. also the material adduced by A. D. Nock, Essays in Religion etc., p. 135 and notes ibid.

² And not מיטטרון המלאך!

³ See 3 Enoch ch. 7 and ch. 10. In ch. 48, p. 66 it is explicitly stated: ועשיתי לו כסא כנוד כסא. In later literature σύνθρονος is simply a πάρεδρος, assessor. See further Liddell and Scott, s.v. σύν!

⁴ de mor. Peregrini 29.

καὶ Ἑρακλῆϊ ἄνακτι. Peregrinus was eager that his throne should stand alongside the throne of Heracles, as Lucianus said above:⁵ συνοδεύει παρὰ τὸν Ἑρακλέα.⁶ For our purpose it is important to note that σύνθρονος is a common feature in the heathen temples (heikhaloth). In the earlier sources σύνθρονος represents the highest personalities in the temples, mostly the living emperors, or their immediate families.⁷

We shall cite here two inscriptions.⁸ An inscription of the first century C.E. mentions⁹ a "priestess of Athena Nikephoros and Athena Polias and Julia, enthroned with her, as Young Nikephoros, daughter of Germanicus Caesar".¹⁰

And again an inscription published by A. von Premerstein¹¹ contains an order of the Athenian people that an image of the empress Julia Domna be dedicated under the same roof as Polias, in order that she should be synthronos with the god.¹²

Depicting a noisy heathen procession, the rabbis describe¹³ it as follows: "They carry a great god to a small god",¹⁴ i.e. when the pagans want to increase the prestige of a temple they introduce a great god alongside with the smaller god dwelling in the temple. The rabbis were familiar with the term "small god". And indeed, the heathen temples were replete with gods and goddesses, great gods and small gods (di maiores and di minores), half gods and even "small gods among the lesser gods".¹⁵ The sources sometimes do

⁵ Ibid., 24.

⁶ But, of course, after being cremated he might have aspired to become an equal of the gods, to become a god himself.

⁷ See Liddell and Scott, s.v. σύνθρονος.

⁸ Not referred to by Liddell and Scott, but one of them is listed in the Index of OGIS, the other is referred to by Nock, Essays, etc., p. 229, n. 155.

⁹ OGIS 474: Ἱέρειαν . . . τῆς Νικηφόρου καὶ Πολιάδος [Ἀθηνᾶς καὶ] Ἰουλίαν συνοθρόνου, νέας Νικη[φόρου, Γερμα]νικοῦ καίσαρος θυγατρός.

¹⁰ On νέοι θεοί (like: νέος Διόνυσος, νέος Ἀπόλλων, etc.), see Nock, ibid., p. 43, n. 84, p. 149, n. 73, p. 151, n. 82. On the meaning of νέος θεός, see ibid., p. 149 and n. 73 ibid. Similarly Metathronos (= Synthronos), like our Julia Synthronos, was also styled קטן יה (see below, n. 24). In biblical Hebrew it could signify: Νέος Ιάω.

¹¹ Jahreshefte d. Österreichischen Arch. Inst. XVI (1913), p. 250.

¹² Ἰνα σύνθρονος ᾗ τῇ θεῷ. See ibid., p. 254.

¹³ TP 'Aboda Zarab II, 3, 41b. Comp. Lucretius II. 608 ff.

¹⁴ מוֹלִיכִין עֲבוּדָה זֶרָה גְּדוּלָּה אֶצֶל עֲבוּדָה זֶרָה קְטָנָה. The reading of the text is sure. It is also corroborated by the commentary of Rabbenu Hananel TB ibid. 32b. Rabinovitz Shaare Torah Eretz Israel, p. 562, needlessly emends the text. He misunderstood the purport of the procession.

¹⁵ Anthol. Pal. IX 334: τὸν ἐν συμικροῦς ὀλίγον θεόν.

not deign to mention the names of the subordinate gods,¹⁶ but simply state: Δὲ Ὁγμήνω καὶ τοῖς σὺν αὐτῷ θεοῖς¹⁷ exactly as it frequently appears in the legal documents: ¹⁸ ὁ δεῖνα καὶ οἱ σὺν τῷ αὐτῷ.

The ancients were much less sensitive to the term god than our modern society. Mortals are styled "gods" during their lifetime. The Jews living in a polytheistic society were very well aware of it. The term "small god" would be shocking to us, but it was not so to the ancient mind. As long as no worship is involved the "small god" remains a mere title (see below).

One rabbi maintained¹⁹ that Moses was a ἡμιθεός, a semi-god, his upper half a god, his lower half a man. According to other rabbis, he was sometimes a man and sometimes a god.²⁰

Again, we read in Ps. 8:6: "Yet Thou hast made him but little lower than God, and hast crowned him with glory and honor etc." The rabbis understood²¹ this verse as referring to Moses and God.²² Symmachus translates the verse: καὶ ἐλαττώσεις αὐτὸν ὀλίγον παρὰ θεόν.²³

Similarly, Metatron was called²⁴ a minor god,²⁵ his name being like that of his master.²⁶ He is also styled in Palestinian Targum ספרא רבה, "the great scribe",²⁷ a very important title.²⁸ He is cred-¹⁶ Comp. Lieberman, Hellenism in Jewish Palestine, p. 115.

¹⁷ Journal of Hellenic Studies X, p. 227, cited by Nock, Essays in Religion, etc., p. 239.

¹⁸ See Preisigke, Wörterbuch II, p. 521, s.v. σὺν.

¹⁹ Debarim Rabba xi,4.

²⁰ Ibid. and Pesikta de Rav Kahana (towards the end), ed. Mandelbaum, p. 443 ff. and parallels.

²¹ TB Nedarim 38a.

²² And not angels.

²³ TB ibid. explains that Moses was only a little lower than God, because he was endowed with forty nine "gates of Binah". Comp. 3 Enoch, ch. 48c, p. 67, in the variants.

²⁴ See Scholem, Major Trends, p. 366 passim, Jewish Gnosticism etc., p. 47.

²⁵ In heathen literature, Enoch would never be able to escape this title. Any mortal who was taken up (bodily) to heaven becomes a god, See Bickerman, Entretiens sur l'Antiquité Classique, vol. XIX, 1973, p. 14-15. A monotheist would never accept it, but this mortal may become almost a god, a small god.

²⁶ See Scholem, ibid., p. 68, p. 366, n. 103. Comp. Aggadath Shbir Hashirim, ed. Schechter, p. 9 and Brüll Jahrbücher I, p. 224 and n. 6, ibid. The association of the number "seventy" with that of the languages is a later speculation.

²⁷ The same title is given to Moses in the Talmud and Targumim, See Lieberman יונית ויונות באי, p. 212, and notes ibid. Add: Vayyikra Rabba I,3, p. 12: הסופר שהיה ספרן של ישראל The argument of Krauss in הגורן VII, p. 29 ff. is childish. Comp. Ezra 7: 11 passim.

²⁸ See Lieberman ibid. The wording in TB Hagigab 15a is probably a later ited ²⁹ with the task of teaching babies [who died in their infancy]. 3 Enoch ³⁰ is more specific: "He is teaching the souls of the embryos that died in their mothers' womb etc."³¹ This is a very old legend. Clemens of Alexandria ³² cites the Apocalypse of Petrus which in his turn asserts: "The Scripture saith (ἡ γραφή φησι) that the children who have been exposed are delivered to a care-taking angel, by whom they are educated and brought up etc.". The same fate is allotted to abortive babies,³³ exactly like in the tradition of 3 Enoch. According to one tradition of the Talmud ³⁴ this function of Metatron was subsequently taken over by the Lord himself.

Here we have to note that there is no contradiction ³⁵ between the different titles of Metatron. The rabbis saw a great similarity between the hierarchy of the kingdom on earth and that of the kingdom on heaven.³⁶ At a certain period during the imperial times the slaves and the libertini of the emperors exercised a great power over the empire, or, as the rabbis put it: "A slave of a king is a king".³⁷ However, at the very same time they could be humiliated and even decapitated at the whim of their master. A small god might wield a lot of power over mortals, but the greater god could destroy him at his will.

A synthronos could be the most powerful figure (call him: the Prince of the world), a minor god, but at the same time he is a servant, a slave of his master.³⁸ Metatron, the great prince (שרא רבא), the Synthronos, was also styled a נער, a servant,³⁹ in the same sense as "And his servant Joshua the son of Nun, the attendant (נער), did sophistication, Comp. Scholem, Gnosticism, etc. p. 51, n. 24. With regard to the prophet Elijah, see V. Aptowitzer in Tarbiz II (1931), p. 260, n. 7.

²⁹ TB 'Abodah Zarah 3b.

³⁰ Ch. 48c, p. 70; Midrash Othioth de R. Akiba, ed. Wertheimer, 1914, p. 11.

³¹ See Lieberman, H. A. Wolfson Jubilee volume, p. 523 ff.

³² Eclogae Proph. 41.

³³ Ibid. 48: τὰ βρέφει <τὰ> ἐξαμβλωθέντα.

³⁴ Ibid. (above n. 29).

³⁵ As a rule, (repeated many times in Geonic literature, see Lieberman, Sbkiin, p. 83) we do not ask questions with regard to contradictions in Haggadic (legendary) literature. Inconsistency is part of the very essence of that literature. But in our case there is not the slightest conflict between the functions of Metatron, as we shall presently see.

³⁶ TB Berakboth 58a.

³⁷ Sifre Deuteronomy 6, p. 15.

³⁸ Moses was a slave of God (Deut. 34:5), and it was considered a great compliment. See Sifre a.l. 357, p. 428.

³⁹ See Scholem, Gnosticism etc., p. 50, n. 23.

not budge from the tent" (Ex. 33:11). "He was tied to Moses".⁴⁰ Metatron was a servant, a קימוס (read קמים)⁴¹ an attendant,⁴² and a great prince. The rabbis did not see any discrepancy in those terms; they were well aware of the realities of the Roman government.

However, the people could be sometimes inclined to consider the synthronos as an equal to his master. Diodorus Siculus (XVI, 92 and 95) stated that the image of Philip of Macedon (while alive) was borne alongside the twelve gods,⁴³ insinuating the arrogance of such behavior. The master would certainly not tolerate such confusion. We may cite two anecdotes to this effect. Midrash *Beresith Rabba*⁴⁴ records in the name of Rabbi Hoshaya:⁴⁵ "When the Holiness blessed be He created Adam, the angels were about to recite the Trisagion to him. This [situation] could be likened to a king and an eparchus sitting together in one chariot⁴⁶ (קרוכין, αραροῦχα) and the people wanted to acclaim one of them 'Domine', but they did not know which one of them was the king. What did the king do? He pushed the eparchus, and threw him out of the chariot". In other words, the people did now realize who is the *synthronos*⁴⁷ and who is his master. By being thrown out of the chariot the subordinate position of the synthronos was revealed.

We find exactly the same situation with regard to Metatron. The Babylonian Talmud relates⁴⁸ that Aḥer (Elisha the son of Abuyah) once found Metatron *sitting*⁴⁹ and recording the merits of Israel.

⁴⁰ TP Yebamoth IV, 2, 6a, Nidda I, 4, 49b.

⁴¹ Visions of Ezekiel, ed. Grünwald in Temirin I, p. 129. See note ibid.

⁴² In the new fragments of Heikhaloth literature, published by Grünwald in Tarbiz, vol. 38, 1969, p. 367 (last line) קברקליאל השר is mentioned. Since the differences between ך and ך are indistinguishable in many manuscripts (see Tosefta Kifshuta IV, p. 583, note, p. 607 passim), we may perhaps read קברקליאל Cubicularius.

⁴³ σύθρονον . . . τοῖς δώδεκα θεοῖς. See Nock, Essays, etc. p. 247, and Nock's conjecture with regard to Alexander, ibid. p. 135.

⁴⁴ VIII, 9, p. 63.

⁴⁵ Fl. in the beginning of the third century C.E.

⁴⁶ i.e. the eparchus was the synthronos of the king. Socrates (Ecl. Hist. II, 16) depicts the following scene: Μακεδόνιος ἐν τῷ ὀχήματι σύθρονος τῷ ἐπάρχῳ κατλ. Makedonios was synthronos of the eparchus in the chariot.

⁴⁷ See above n. 46.

⁴⁸ Hagigah 15a. Comp. 3 Enoch ch. 16, p. 23.

⁴⁹ The Talmud does not designate explicitly the place from where he was taken out. But Arukh s.v. פלס, quotes מאחורי הפרגור. From a new fragment of the Heikhaloth literature, published by I. Grünwald (Tarbiz 38, 1969, p. 362, line 13 ff.) it also appears that he was sitting in the ἔδυστον. He was therefore carried out from "behind the curtain", and was flogged, exactly like the angel

He remarked to himself: We have a tradition that there is no "sitting on high",⁵⁰ perhaps there are two Powers? Whereupon Metatron was carried out and administered sixty fiery lashes.⁵¹ This passage of the Talmud and the parable in the Midrash reflect the same situation. The Master showed who is the Master and who is the synthronos.⁵²

To summarize: We may say that when we combine all the sources, the earlier and the later ones, we gain the definite impression that Metatron is a title, and it could be used both as a substantive and an adjective (exactly like synthronos).⁵³ Metatron might have originally borne another name, but subsequently he was raised to the rank of Metatron, and finally assumed this name as a substantive. This is, of course, a matter of speculation, and we leave it to the specialists.

As for the spelling of מיטטרון,⁵⁴ it is perfectly normal. מיטטרון = μετάρωνος = μετάρωνος = σύνθρονος. The Semites transliterating Greek words which contain both a τ and a θ often spelled them with two ט, like טיאטרון (instead of תיאטרון) and אנטיפוטה (instead of אנתιפוטה).⁵⁵

Gavriel, according to TB Yoma 77a (in the uncensored editions). However it is evident from the parallel passage in Vayyikra Rabba XXVI, 8, p. 608-609, that Gavriel was never admitted "behind the curtain".

⁵⁰ Comp. also Beresith Rabba LXV, 21, p. 738. But the privilege of "sitting" was also granted to Moses, as it is explicitly stated in Midrash Tannaim, ed. Hoffmann, p. 19. Comp. also Sifre Deut. 305, p. 326, and parallels. See further Gruenwald, in Tarbiz XXXVIII (1969), p. 362, l. 13, and p. 363, l. 17.

⁵¹ Comp. 3 Enoch ch. 28, p. 47, ch. 44, p. 57. This is of course, a topos, comp. above, n. 49. The same is said about Elijah the Prophet in TB Baba Mezi'a 85b, as a punishment for revealing heavenly secrets. However, other angels were exiled from their compartments for a period of one hundred and thirty eight years for the same misdemeanor, but were not flogged.

⁵² Rabbenu Hananel (a.l. 16a) records in the name of a Gaon that the purpose of the lashes was only to show that there is a Master over Metatron.

⁵³ See Sophocles, s.v. σύνθρονος.

⁵⁴ The ך in מיטטרון indicates that it should be pronounced Metatron with an E (see Lieberman, Tosefet Rishonim II, p. 227, line 22; Epstein, Introduction to the Text of the Mishnah, p. 1242, p. 1243 s.v. ך ויוד אחרי ש), and not Mtatron. This is especially true in the transliteration of Greek words, see Krauss LW I, p. 16, § 24, A. 2-3. It is more frequently used in the middle of words like (μετάξιον) נומירון מיטכסון (μελία) מילה, מיטון מילינה, מיתורין, מיטורפלין, טיטרפלין, טיטרטון and many other words.

⁵⁵ In Syriac it is also spelled אנטיפוטה. See also Odeberg, p. 140. For the interchange of θ and τ in Byzantine literature, see S. B. Psaltes, Grammatik der Byzantinischen Chroniken, p. 69. Compare also Liddell and Scott, s.v. αλοκύνθη.

The use of Metathronos instead of Synthronos appears to be a special feature of the κωνή. It was already established by A. Thumb that the κωνή abounds in Ionic and poetic elements.⁵⁶ Let us cite two instances which are very similar to our term. The usual Greek use for sitting together is συνίζειν. However, Homer (Odyss. XVI, 362) uses μεταίξειν.⁵⁷ Again, the normal verb for dwelling together is συνναίειν, but the Homeric hymns (Ad Cer. 87) use : μεταναιετάειν. Similarly, in the Theogony ascribed to Hesiod 401 we read : μεταναίετας. The Jews might have had serious reasons for avoiding the term Synthronos with regard to an angel. It was used by the Christians as a title for Jesus,⁵⁸ and it is not surprising that the Jews shunned this term as an appellation of the Angel.

2. The Knowledge of Halakha by the Author (or Authors) of the Heikhaloth

Chapter 18 of the Heikhaloth retains a puzzling and enigmatic passage. It can be understood only in the light of the specific, detailed, and minute laws governing the rules with regard to the impurity of a menstruant woman. According to the strict Halakha such a woman imparts impurity to any man who touches her body, or the cloth on her body.

Similarly, any cloth (or any object which is fit for sitting, or lying) on which this woman sits, or presses (leans against) with the greatest part of her weight⁵⁹ imparts impurity to any man who touches or carries it.⁶⁰ However, those objects which were merely touched by that woman (without sitting or leaning on them) do not impart impurity to either man or vessel.

However, we possess a strange book,⁶¹ in which these laws are pushed to the very extreme. Although this source is replete with absurdities and nonsense, many medieval rabbinic authorities ⁵⁶ See the references by Lieberman, Greek in Jewish Palestine, p. 48, n. 111, p. 63, n. 226.

⁵⁷ The Greek lexicons quote it as a hapax.

⁵⁸ See the numerous references by G. W. H. Lampe, A Patristic Greek Lexicon, p. 1331, s.v. σύνθρονος. 2. We may add the Christian epigram in Anthol. Palat. I, 24.: σύνθρονος καὶ συνάναρχε τέῳ πατρί.

⁵⁹ Mishnah Zabim IV, 5.

⁶⁰ Ibid. V, 5, Abiloth I, 5, passim.

⁶¹ Beraitha de Masseketh Niddah V, (hereafter = Beraitha d'Niddah), ed. Ch. M. Horowitz 1890. The work was composed not later than the Geonic period (see below).

treated it very seriously.⁶² It cannot therefore be ignored, since this work was current in rabbinic circles. We must add that this book contains some mystic elements,⁶³ and it stands to reason that the mystics considered the stringent laws of that source binding on persons who pretended to be admitted to the different precincts of heaven. According to that book the very sand on which a menstruating woman treads imparts uncleanness to man.⁶⁴

Now let us proceed with the explanation of the above mentioned cryptic passage of the Heikhaloth. Its essence consists of a plot devised by a group of rabbis which aimed at luring Rabbi Nehunya ben Ha-Qanah out of his place in heaven. The surest way would be by bestowing impurity upon him, and then he would automatically be removed from his place. But, firstly, it is not permitted to convey uncleanness to a man sitting in heaven, and, secondly, there is a risk that the rabbi might become aware of it and prevent the action.

In order to understand the plot and its denouement we must bear in mind the following laws and situations. The law requires women with fixed periods of menstruation to examine themselves at the beginning of those periods in order to learn whether they became impure. However if a woman neglected to do so, but subsequently tested herself and found that she is now pure, her status is questionable. According to the majority opinion she is considered ritually pure, but a minority, and it includes Rabbi Eliezer, dissented.⁶⁵

It could be expected that Jewish women would undergo ritual immersion in such cases,⁶⁶ but, under circumstances of inconvenience, they would certainly stick to the opinion of the majority.⁶⁷ The group of rabbis conceived the following plan. They instructed ⁶² See the sources adduced by Horowitz ibid. IV (פתחי נדה) p. 7 ff. V. Aptowitzer (in his book מחקרים בתקופת הגאונים, Jerusalem, 1941, p. 168) bitterly complained against modern writers who treated the book earnestly. However, I know no modern scholar who acted in such way. The only exception is, apparently, Aptowitzer himself. See his notes to his edition of the Sefer Rabiab I, Berlin 1912, p. 45, notes 10-12. But here we are interested in medieval authorities only.

⁶³ See Beraithab d'Niddab, ibid., p. 45.

⁶⁴ Ibid., p. 13. It appears that the source mistakenly compared the sand on which the woman trode to the מסמא stone (Mishnah Kelim i,3, and Tosefta Parah viii,2, passim), and it considered the sand as Midras, thus imparting uncleanness to both man and vessel. Compare also below n. 79.

⁶⁵ TB Niddab 16a. Comp. Tosafoth a.l. s.v. ורב.

⁶⁶ In order not to involve themselves in doubtful laws.

⁶⁷ See Tur Yoreh De'ab 184.

the slave of Rabbi Akiba to put a strip of Parhaba⁶⁸ woolen cloth [on the ground] next to a woman who underwent ritual immersion that turned out to be invalid.⁶⁹ According to the stringent laws of Beraitha d'Niddah the cloth would become unclean even if it was not touched by the woman.⁷⁰ The slave was then ordered to immerse the strip of cloth in ritual water to render it pure. This procedure was necessary in order to indicate that the immersion was performed with direct intention to purify it from stringent impurity (טומאה חמורה). In such way the cloth would be declared pure even in the opinion of those rabbis who followed the strictest views of these laws.⁷¹ The woman was then advised to approach the rabbis and explain to them the ways of her periods. The result of the enquiry would be that the majority (i.e. of the group mentioned in the Heikhaloth ch. XIV) would declare her "pure".⁷² But one of that group would rule her "unclean",⁷³ and since her previous immersion was invalid, she is now impure.

They instructed the woman to touch the strip of cloth with the tip of her middle finger, but to be careful not to press it, but to touch it slightly, with "a light gesture, like a man who removes something that fell into his eye".⁷⁴ But here again they run a certain risk. Some of the rabbis were able to detect menstrual blood by its odor,⁷⁵ and Rabbi Nehunya might belong to this body of experts,⁷⁶ and he might be able to discover in time that the strip was touched by an impure woman. He would never permit the placing of that kind of cloth on his knees.

What did Rabbi Ishmael do? He pressed a myrtle twig full of foliatum soaked in pure balsam (אפלסמון, βάλσαμον) into this ⁶⁸ The etymology of the word is obscure (see Geiger apud Krauss in his Addimenta ad Librum Aruch Completum, p. 337, s.v. פרהבא), but it is evident from TB Niddah 17a that it is a white soft piece of wool.

⁶⁹ The slightest interposition between the nude body and the water would invalidate the immersion. See Mishnah Mikwa'oth IX,1-4 passim.

⁷⁰ See above, n. 64.

⁷¹ With regard to "intention" in immersion, see Lieberman Tosefta Ki-fshuta V, p. 1307 ff.

⁷² I.e. that immersion was not necessary, and it is therefore immaterial whether her previous immersion was valid or not.

⁷³ The "one" is Rabbi Eliezer, see TB Nidab 16a.

⁷⁴ The rabbis took precautions to instruct the woman not to press and lean against the cloth in order not to confer on it Midras (מדרס) impurity.

⁷⁵ TB Niddah 20b.

⁷⁶ Comp. Beraitha d'Niddah, p. 9. Rabbi Hanina ben ha-Kanah is certainly identical with Rabbi Nehunya ben ha-Kanah.

strip. This balsam was famous for its pleasant and very strong odor,⁷⁷ and the strip of cloth having been permeated with this balsam would repress any other odor. The rabbi would never be able to detect the suspicious odor. The plot was safe. The strip of cloth was placed on the knees of Rabbi Nehunya, and he was immediately dismissed from his seat.

The rabbis legitimately achieved their purpose. According to the Halakha prevailing on earth no impurity was imparted to Rabbi Nehunya. The woman was ritually pure, for such was the ruling of the majority of the rabbis. Moreover, even if the woman would be impure she would not confer Midras (מדרס) impurity on the cloth by merely touching it. Our Rabbi would, in any case remain pure when he carried the strip of cloth on his knees.

In heaven, however, the rules of Rabbi Eliezer prevailed,⁷⁸ and in his opinion the woman was ritually impure. According to the laws of the Beraitha d'Nidda any object touched by a menstruating woman (not only Midras) imparts impurity to a man.⁷⁹

As surmised above, the mystics considered these stringent laws as binding on any man who wanted to be admitted to the precincts of heaven. Rabbi Nehunya carrying the strip of cloth on his knees became impure and consequently dismissed from his seat. The group of rabbis achieved their purpose without violating any principle of the Halakha valid on earth.

This passage of the Heikhaloth demonstrates that the Jewish mystics were not רבנן דאגדה (rabbis who dealt with Aggadah only), but were scholars also at home in the subtle intricacies of the Halakha.

⁷⁷ See TP Ma'asser Sheni IV, 55d, TB Sanhedrin 109a, Beresith Rabba XXVII, 3, p. 257. Compare also Gruenwald's note in Tarbiz XXXVIII (1969), p. 370, n. 48.

⁷⁸ See TP Mo'ed Katan III, 1, 81d, TB Baba Mezi'a 59b. Comp. also Pesikta de Rav Kahana IV, ed. Mandelbaum, p. 73, and parallels. Beraitha d'Niddah (p. 21) claims that in heaven they follow the rules of the school of Shammai.

⁷⁹ See p. 50: דילמא נגע במידי דנגעה היא ואתי לאטמויי

INDICES

A. GENERAL

- Abraham, 55-57, 100, 138, 157
 Adam, 239
 Aggadah, 244
 Alphabet, Letters of, 203, 322
 Assyrian, 70
 Combination of, 11
 'Anan ben Ner, 222
 Angels, 13, 23, 25, 26-29, 31, 35-38, 42-44, 50-51, 53, 58, 60-61, 65-67, 70-71, 83, 89, 94, 101, 104, 109, 113, 119-120, 129-130, 139-140, 152, 155-156, 159, 169-170, 181, 188-189, 193, 198, 200, 206, 212
 Angelic revelation, 123, 200, 205-207, 210-211, 214
 Etymology of names of, 206
 Song of:
 Benedictus, 215
 Celestial song, 55
 Doxologies, 39, 40, 67, 152, 184
 Hymns of, 31, 41, 55-56, 67, 103, 139-140, 152-155, 191-192, 207, 216, 232-233
 Incantations, 150-151
 Qedushah., 55, 139, 154, 159, 190, 207, 216, 233
 Sanctus, 69, 154, 215
 Classes of:
 Cherubim, 35, 44, 54, 114, 154, 201
 Hayyot, 54, 56, 57, 67-69, 94-95, 103, 114-116, 139, 141, 148, 153, 155, 160, 167, 176, 211, 214-215, 233
 'irim, 44
 Ofanim, 44, 154, 176, 204
 Serafim, 44, 56, 68, 103, 115, 206-207
 Thronos, 59, 60
 Proper Names of:
 'Agmitiya, 186
 Akatriel, 168
 'Anafiel, 121, 167-168, 202-205
 Arpedes, 109
 'Aza, 198
 'Azael, 198, 207(43)
 Dubiel, 206
 Dumiel, 165-166
 Gabriel, 44, 51, 166.
 Gedudaya, 183-184
 Gevuratiel, 206
 Jaoel (Yhoel), 52-57, 103, 144, 194, 196, 202
 Lailael, 204
 Metatron, v. Metatron
 Michael, 44, 51, 65
 'Ofafaniel, 206
 Padkeres, etc., 109, 186
 Panuel, 44
 Qazpiel, 121, 165-166, 192-193
 Raguel, 38
 Raphael, 44
 Raziel, 227
 Samael, 206-207
 Sarafiel, 206
 Satan, 206-207
 Suriya, 105, 184
 Synadelphon, 65-66, 168-169, 177, 183 (5)
 Uriel, 9, 12
 'Uza, 198, 207 (43)
 Yofiel, 184
 Apocalyptic, 14, 22-28, 48, 50, 55, 69, 72, 90, 94, 127, 135, 144, 156-157, 227-228
 Christian, 61
 Jewish, 9, 16, 27, 29, 45-47, 50, 59-60, 100, 109, 123, 132, 162
 Anthropomorphism, 215
 Astrology, 227-230
 Astronomy, 227
 Babylonia, 80, 81, 172
 Chaos, 112
 Chiromancy, 218, 219, 224
 Cosmology, 9, 14-18, 19, 48, 98, 118, 134-135, 148, 155, 162
 Crystal, 33, 35
 Day of Atonement, 96
 Deification, 129
 Dualism, 27, 119

- Egypt, 130, 144
 Elijah, 93, 95, 100, 119, 202
 Enoch, 93, 115, 192, 200, 207, 213
 Eschatology, 12, 21, 24, 25, 48
 Esotericism, 22, 24-25, 122, 144, 199
 Ezekiel, the Prophet, 134, 213
 Ezekiel, the Tragedian, 128, 130
 Feasts, 102
 Garments, heavenly, 35, 61, 64, 65, 159, 210
Geonim, 172
 God, passim.
 and angels, 29, 35-36, 42-43, 51, 70
 154, 169, 199, 211, 233
 Appearance of, 51, 94
 Barukhiya, 183
 Day of, 10
 Demurge, 142, 165, 167
 and the People of Israel, 169, 171
 Immanence of, 47
 Justice of, 5, 6
 Limbs of, 213-214
 Names of, 11, 104-106, 174
 Omnipotence of, 5
 Rozaya, 103, 182
 Sacrifice to, 52
 Shi'ur Qomah, V. S. V.
 Tetrastii, etc., 105-106, 163
 Voice of, 61, 93, 216
 Ways of, 5-7, 13, 17
 Zohariel, 152
 Gnosticism, 27-29, 110-111, 118-119, 165, 207
 Archons, 89, 111-112, 116-117
 Eleleth, 116
 Norea, 116
 Ogdoad, 113, 114-116, 117
 Pistis, 112-113, 117
 Sabaoth, 113-117
 Son of Light, 113
 Sophia, 112, 117
 Yaldabaoth, 112, 113, 117
 Zoe, 113, 114
Hasidim, German, 172-173, 178, 210
 Heavens, 48, 49, 51, 59-62, 68, 113, 115-118, 137-138, 153-154, 228
 Names of:
 'Arafel, 136, 141
 'Aravot, 136, 141, 167, 210
 Makhon, 137, 141
 Meonah, 211
 Raqi'a, 136, 138
 Shamayim, 136
 Shehaqim, 144, 136, 137, 141
 Shemei Shamayim, 136
 Seventh Expanse, 53
 Zevul, 136, 137, 140
 High Priests, 96
 Simon, the Just, 96
 Yishmael ben Elisha, 96
 Yohanan, 96.
 Jacob, 138, 215
 Ladder of, 120
 Jeremiah, 100
 Jethro, 128
 Jesus, 65, 93, 116
 Job, 4-17, 30, 42
 John, the Apocalypticist, 63-64, 66, 68, 69, 96
 Joseph, 158, 235
 Joshua, 178
 Kabbalah, 4, 46, 117, 162, 192
 Kingdoms, Seventy, 209
 Levites, 229, 230
 Luke, 96
 Magic Black, 225
 Coptic Texts of, 234
 Diets and Fasts, 99, 101
 Greek Papyri of, 102, 104, 106-107, 110, 182, 204, 225-231, 234
 Jewish, 225-234
 Letters of Alphabet in, 174
 Names in, 99-110, 144, 148
 Oaths, 10-12, 179
 Pagan, 234
 Praxis, 99, 105, 162-164
 Purity, 160, 164
 Ritual Bath, 101, 110
 Seals, 93, 103, 106-110, 111, 166, 170, 174, 177, 185, 189
 I'oces, 182
 White, 225
 Texts of:
 Aramaic Incantation Bowls, 234
 Greek Magical Papyri, 102, 104, 106-107, 110, 182, 204, 225-231, 234
 Mandaic Incantation Bowls, 234
 Sefer Ha-Razim, 177, 191, 226-233

Sefer Ha-Malbush, 102
 Maimonides, 213
 Messianism, 39, 42, 62, 200
 Metamorphosis, mystical, 201-205
 Metatron, 66, 90, 115, 140-141, 144, 168, 186, 170, 190, 192-194, 196, 198-209, 214-217, 235-241
 Appellations of:
 'Eved, 179, 202 (34)
 Isara Rabba, 199
 Komes, 140, 239
 Na'ar, 199, 238
 Sar Ha-Panim, 205
 Sara Rabba de-Sahaduta, 199
 Sar . . . Zevul, 140
 Shamasha Rchima, 199
 Synthronos, 238-241
 Yah Ha-Qaton, 197-198, 236
 Meteorology, 227
 Metoposcopy, 218-224
 Mithras, Liturgy of, 58, 120
 Moses, 89, 93, 95, 100, 128-130, 135, 143-144, 148, 170, 178, 181, 193, 205, 208, 237, 239
 Noah, 227
 Nag Hammadi, 27
 Pardes (Paradise; Garden of Eden), 22, 38, 49, 50, 70, 86-88, 90-95, 108, 146-148, 201
 Paul, 48-49, 86, 90-95
 Pharaoh, 235
 Philo, 161
 Physiognomy, 218-223

Plato, 161
 Pumbedita, 80
 Prophecy, 3, 19, 21-22, 28, 95, 99, 138, 178
 Qedushah, v. Angels, song of Qumran, 15, 19, 21, 41, 42, 117, 152, 155, 222
 Red Sea, 95
 Salvation, 14, 15
 Sapphire, 35, 55
 Sar Torah, 109, 143-144, 150, 177, 186, 215
 Sceptre, 128, 130, 209
 Sar Talmud, 190
 Sarei Hokhmah, 187
 Sinai, Mount, 15, 93, 95, 128, 130, 144, 170, 208 (see also: Horeb)
 Shi'ur Qomah, 94, 209, 213-217
 Temple, 4, 47-48, 62, 72, 96, 97, 104, 213, 229
 Tetragrammaton, 52, 53, 69, 106, 145
 Theophany, 30, 31, 38
 Theurgy, v. Magic
 Throne of Glory, 31, 34-35, 37-38, 44, 51, 55, 57, 59, 60-68, 71-72, 94-95, 104, 116, 120-121, 127, 129, 130, 145, 153-154, 160, 165, 167, 183, 190, 194, 203, 211-212, 215, 233
 Tree of Life, 50, 51, 201
 Zodiac, signs of, 218

B. PROPER NAMES (TALMUDIC SAGES)

ʿAḥa bar Yaʿaqov, 115
 ʿAkiva, 67, 86, 87 ff., 103, 145 ff., 174, 179-180, 183, 193, 215, 243
 ʿAssi, 80
 Ben ʿAzzai, 86 ff., 94, 146
 Ben Zoma, 86 ff., 146
 Bezalel, 11
 Dosa, 93, 94
 ʿElazar ben ʿArakh, 75, 76, 78, 79-80, 82, 83, 86, 92
 ʿElazar ben Dama, 158
 ʿEliezer, 95, 172, 174, 242, 244
 ʿElisha ben ʿAvuyah, 66, 86, 90, 205, 239
 Hiyya, 79
 Meir, 137

Natan, 214
 Nehuniah ben Ha-Qanah, 158, 160-163, 167, 179, 184-186, 242, 243, 244
 Rav, 11, 66
 Shimon ben Gamliel, 158
 Yehoshua, 76
 Yehuda (Rav), 11
 Yehudah (Rabbi), 77
 Yizḥaq, 77, 138
 Yishmael, 103, 109, 145, 158, 160-164, 169, 172, 177, 179, 181, 184, 186, 187, 192, 194, 200, 203, 207, 214, 215, 243
 Yohanan ben Zakkai, 47, 70, 75-76, 78, 79-80, 81-83, 85-87, 92, 147
 Yossi, 93
 Zera, 79

C. MODERN SCHOLARS

- Abelson, J., 85 (33)
 Albeck, Ch., 24 (60)
 Albright, W. F., 35 (23)
 Alexander, Ph., 191 (1)
 Allony, N., 46 (68)
 Alon, G., 11 (20), 96 (80), 97 (79), 185 (15)
 Altman, A., 55 (87), 67 (142), 104 (27) (28), 120 (81), 152 (6), 161 (41), 182 (4), 213 (2), 215 (14)
 Aptowitzer, A. V., 30 (4), 238 (28), 242 (62)
 Arbesmann, R., 100 (11)

 Bacher, W., 78 (16)
 Benayahu, M., 225 (1)
 Ben Hayyim, Z., 175 (4)
 Betz, O., 20 (45)
 Bietenhard, H., 32 (10), 34 (19), 42 (57), 87 (37), 91 (56), 136 (6)
 Black, M., 10 (15), 15 (31)
 Blau, L., 28, 108 (45)
 Bloch, Ph., 156 (23), 157 (26)
 Böhlig, A., 22 (55), 27 (68), 112 (61), 115 (69), 145 (14)
 Braun, H., 20 (45), 23 (57)
 Bruce, F. F., 20 (45)
 Bousset, W., 64 (125), 64 (127), 99 (4), 110 (55)
 Box, G. H., 52 (79), 55
 Buchanan, G. W., 15 (29)
 Büchler, A., 65 (128), 185 (15)
 Bullard, R. A., 27 (68), 112 (62)

 Carmignac, J., 219 (3)
 Charles, R. H., 8 (12), 15 (29), 17 (37), 38 (40), 49, 50, 64 (125), 65 (133), 66, 120 (80)
 Cross, F. M., 3 (1), 19 (44), 27 (70), 30 (3), 30 (5)
 Cornemann, E., 235
 Cumont, F., 49 (73), 120 (84)

 Daiches, S., 186 (17)
 Dan J., 157 (27)
 Danielou, J., 32 (8), 120 (84)
 Davenport, G. L., 24 (59)
 Davies, W. D., 16 (33)
 Denis, A. M., 128 (1)
 Dieterich, A., 58 (98), 99 (4), 120 (84), 122 (85)
 Dimant, D., 8 (11), 198 (19)

 Dodds, E. R., 48 (70), 99 (4), 105 (35), 106 (42), 110
 Doriesse, J., 112 (63), 227 (9)

 Eichrodt, W., 6 (7)
 Epstein, Y. N., 66 (135), 75 (7), 197 (10)
 Elbogen, I., 40 (52), 182 (3)
 Ettisch, E., 222 (23)
 Even-Shemuel, Y., 39 (47)

 Finkelstein, L., 39 (48)
 Flusser, D., 40 (50), 111 (59), 132 (11)
 Friedman, S., X

 Gaster, Th., 41 (55)
 Gil, M., 38 (44)
 Ginzberg, L., 10 (14), 70 (152), 102 (22), 207 (43)
 Giversen, S., 27 (69)
 Goodenough, E. R., 74 (3), 120 (81), 130 (7), 234 (24)
 Goldberg, A., 152 (6)
 Gordon, C. H., 109 (48), 145 (14), 197 (12)
 Grant, R. M., 27 (67)
 Grätz, H., 98, 98 (1)
 Greenfield, J. C., 9 (13), 18 (40), 87 (41), 142, 191 (1), 197 (10), 221 (20)
 Guthrie, W. K. C., 90 (50)
 Gutman, Y., 18 (38), 116 (73), 128 (1), 129 (3)

 Hanson, P. D., 3 (1), 4 (3)
 Harrington, D. J., 25 (63)
 Hartman, L., 28 (72)
 Heiler, F., 154 (18)
 Hengel, M., x, 14 (27), 22 (56), 223 (27)
 Herford, T. R., 101 (17)
 Hull, J. M., 105 (35), 226 (2)

 Isbell, Ch. D., 196 (10)
 Issaverdens, J., 12 (22)

 James, M. R., 70 (150)
 Jellinek, A., 39 (47), 106, 106 (41), 120 (82), (83), 205 (40), 227 (8)
 Jeremias, J., 30 (5)

 Kahn, J. G., 115 (69)
 Kimron, E., 211 (9)
 Kirk, G. S., 63 (123)
 Kister, M., 177 (11)

- Klar, B., 172 (77)
 Koch, K., 3, 3 (1)
 Kraft, R. A., 16 (35)
 Krauss, S., 243 (68)
 Kutscher, E. Y., 34 (19)
- Labib, P., 27 (68), 112 (61), 145 (14)
 Lampe, G. W. H., 241 (58)
 Lauterbach, J. Z., 96 (74), 175 (4)
 Layton, B., X, 112 (62), 116 (74) (74)
 Leiter, S., 61 (116), 111 (58), 138 (15),
 142 (4), 184 (9)
 Levine, B. A., 71 (156), 106 (39)
 Levy, J. H., 71 (155), 165, 165 (53), 166
 (59), 176 (6)
 Lewin, B. M., 52 (81), 74 (4), 79 (19), 100 (9)
 Licht, J., 21 (51)
 Lieberman, S., X, 65, 65 (135), 67 (138),
 (141) 70 (150), 78 (14) 94, 95 (70)
 104 (33), 140, 158 (28) (29), 161 (44)
 164, 178 (14), 186 (16), 188 (4), 213
 (3) (8), 214 (10), 230, 237 (16), (27),
 (28), 238 (31), 241 (56)
 Lindblom, J., 19 (42), 30 (5), 99 (5)
 Liver, J., 128 (2)
 Lowy, S., 100 (11)
 Lührmann, D., 18 (18)
- Maier, J., 6 (7), 34 (15), 37 (38), 38 (39), 47 (69), 55 (87), 89 (47), 95 (69), 96
 79), 130 (10), 152, 152 (9)
 Margalioth, M., 51 (78), 109 (52), 178
 (16), 216 (16), 224, 226, 226 (4), 230,
 230 (14)
 Mead, G. R. S., 34 (16)
 Montgomery, J. A., 99 (6), 140 (27)
 Milik, J. T., 10 (15), 32 (8), 39 (49), 92
 (58), 192, 192 (2), 196 (10), 197 (11)
 Mishor, M., 215 (12)
 Murphy-O'Connor, J., 20 (49) 219 (4)
 Musajoff, Sh., 56 (93)
- Nemoy, L., 213 (6)
 Neusner, J., 71 (156)
 Nickelsburg, G. W. E., 106 (39)
 Niggemeyer, J.-H., 234
 Nilsson, M. P., 129 (7)
 Nock, A. D., 110 (54) 235 (1) 236 (8)
 (10)
 Nötscher, F., 92 (58)
- Odeberg, H., 9 (13), 37 (34), 50 (75), 196 (10) 201-203, 208, 235
- Osten-Sacken, P. von der., 10 (14), 22
 (53)
 Otto, R., 37 (37)
- Pearson B. A., 129 (5)
 Pines, S., 178 (19)
 Pope, M. H., 4 (5)
 Preisendanz, K., 102 (23)
 Permerstein, A. von, 236
 Psaltes, C. D., 240 (55)
- Quispel, G., 11 (17), 121 (88)
- Rad, G. von, 5 (6), 29 (1)
 Raven, J. E., 63 (123)
 Reitzenstein, R., 144 (14)
 Rofé A., 44 (62)
 Rohde, E., 129 (5)
 Rosenthal, A., 226 (4)
 Rowley, H. H., 3 (2)
 Rüger, H. P., 17 (37)
 Russell, D. S., 22 (54), 91 (55), 100 (8)
- Sandars, N. K., 89 (50)
 Schäfer, P., X, 35 (23), 36 (32), 38 (41), 61 (115), 167 (62), 198 (20)
 Schirmann, J., 132 (12)
 Schiffman, L. H., 104 (31), 164 (51),
 174 (2)
- Scholem, G., X, 4 (4), 11 (16), 13 (23), 25, 33 (11), 33 (13), 34, 34 (16), 35
 (21), 35 (24), 36 (27), 39 (46), 41 (56),
 54 (84), 58 (99) (101), 59 (105) (107),
 64 (126), 65 (134), 68 (143), 71 (158),
 73 (1), 75 (6), 80 (21), 86, 86 (36), 87,
 87 (41), 88, 88 (42), 90 (52) (53), 94
 (67), 95 (69), 96 (76), 98, 100 (9), 104
 (29) (30) (34), 106, 106 (39) (41), 107,
 107 (43), 108, 108 (44), 110, 112 (64),
 114 (76), 121 (85), 132 (12), 134, 135
 (4), 138 (14), 142, 142 (1), 143 (9)
 (10), 145 (14) (17), 147 (24), 152, 152
 (6), 154 (1) (3), 160 (35), 164, 167
 (62) (65), 168 (66) (68), 169 (73), 172
 (78), 173 (79), 174 (1), 175 (4), 179
 (22), 181 (2), 183 (4), 185 (13), 194
 (5), 197 (13), 199 (24), 203 (38), 213
 (2) (3), 216 (15), 220, 220 (11), 221
 (15) (16), 235, 237 (24), 238 (39)
- Schubert, K., 14 (27), 96 (79)
 Schulz, J. P., 60 (115), 61 (115), 89 (47),
 199 (21)
 Schreiner, J., 6 (7), 19 (42)

- Séd, N., 11 (19), 60 (109), 134 (3)
 Segal M. Z., 18 (39)
 Sjöberg, E., 37 (34), 39 (49)
 Skinner, J., 99 (5)
 Smith, M., X, 34 (17), 153 (6), 157 (28), 160 (36), 162 (46), 167 (62)
 Sperber, D., X, 169 (73)
 Spittler, R., 16 (35)
 Spiegel, Sh., 74 (5), 78 (14)
 Stadelmann, L. I. J., 33 (11), 136 (6)
 Stone, M., 12 (22)
 Strugnell, J., X, 41, 41 (54), 74
 Swete H. B., 64 (125), 65 (128)

 Tawil, H., 145 (18)
 Tischendorf, K. von., 61 (116)
 Tishbi, I., 154 (17)
 Tisserant, E., 58 (96)

 Vaillant, A., 8 (12), 49 (71), 91 (54)
 Vermes, G., 21 (52), 24 (60)

 Underhill, E., 45 (65)
 Unnik, W. C. van, 10 (15), 15 (31), 67
 (141)

 Urbach, E. E., 31 (7), 33 (14), 53 (83),
 73 (2), 76 (9), 77 (13), 83, 85, 87, 88
 (44), 94 (63), 105 (34), 139 (22), 146
 (19), 158, 159, 159 (30), 165 (55),
 169 (74), 170 (76), 197 (13), 223 (27)

 Wacholder, B. Z., 144 (12)
 Wasserstein, A., 7 (10)
 Weinfeld, M., 19 (43), 152 (7)
 Weiss, H. F., 33 (11)
 Werblowski, Z., 169 (72)
 Werner, E., 40 (51), (53), 133 (13)
 Wertheimer, Sh. A., 209 (1)
 Wewers, G. A., 121 (90)
 Wiedengren, G., 129 (5)
 Wieder, N., 222, 222 (21)
 Winston, D., X, 161 (40)
 Williamson, R., 26 (65)

 Yadin, Y., 41 (54)

 Zeitlin, S., 25 (61)
 Zeron, A., 26 (63)
 Zunz, L., 98 (1)

D. HEBREW AND ARAMAIC TECHNICAL TERMS

- ‘Alab, 87
Alleluia, 70, 71
 ‘Atarot, 66, 128

Baqashab, 224
Beged Kelil Tekhelet, 210
Beit Din, 79

Dabaf, 193 (3)
Darash, 77, 82
Davar, 185 (14), 224
Demamah, 34
Demut, 193 (4)
Dibber, 73

Eretz Yisrael, 74, 80, 134, 142, 228
 ‘Eseq, 225
 ‘Eved, 202 (34)

Gamar, 82
Gevurab, 73

Hadudei Panim, 211 (9)
Hakarat Panim, 219, 220
Haluq, 35, 64, 154, 210
Hamon Haverim, 162
Hashmal, 77, 209

Hirgab, 82
Hizig, 87
 ‘Im Biqashtab, 225

Kavod, 76, 93, 94
Keshafim, 225
Kinuy, 175
Kise Ha-Kavod, 141

Ma‘alot, 233
Meforash, 175
Mela Parbava, 164
Midras, 244

Nabarei Toborab, 233

Pardes Qushta, 22, 38, 91
Pargod, 114, 147, 204, 210, 211
Parguf Panim, 219 (9)
Patab, 78, 82
Pereq, 77, 78

Qelaster Panim, 219 (9)

Rasbei Peraqim, 72 (14), 78-79, 81, 121
Rasbei Pesuqim, 81, 121
Rigyon, 176 (6)

Shekinah, 186 (7), 202, 211

Shetei Reshuyot, 90, 119

Sotrim, 229, 231

Siman, 189 (5)

Seriya, 166 (61)

Tarshish, 215

Tohorah, 145 (17)

Yom Perishah, 142 (2)

Yofiyot Ha-Merkavah, 193 (4)

Zalah, 145 (18)

Zelem, 193 (4)

Zenei Merkavah, 74

Zqq, 101 (19)

Zurat Adam, 219

Zurat Panim, 219

A00001277280

A00001277280

Third Baruch

From The Apocrypha and Pseudeipgrapha of the Old Testament by R. H. Charles, vol . II , Oxford Press

Prologue. 1 A narrative and revelation of Baruch, concerning those ineffable things which he saw by command of God. Bless Thou, O Lord. A revelation of Baruch, who stood upon the river Gel weeping over the captivity of Jerusalem, when also Abimelech was preserved by the hand of God, at the farm of Agrippa. And he was sitting thus at the beautiful gates, where the Holy of holies lay.

III BARUCH

Date: first to third century A.D.

translation by H.E Gaylord, Jr.

Chapter one

1 Woe, now I Baruch (was) weeping in my mind and considering the people and how King Nebuchadnezzar was permitted by God to plunder his city, saying

2 Lord, why have you set fire to your vineyard and laid it waste? Why have you done this? And why, Lord, did you not requite us with another punishment, but rather handed us over to such heathen so that they reproach us saying, Where is their God?

3 And behold, while I was weeping and saying such things, I saw an angel of the Lord coming and saying to me, Know, O man, greatly beloved man, and do not concern yourself so much over the salvation of Jerusalem. For thus says the Lord God Almighty,

4 and he sent me before you in order that I should proclaim and disclose to you all things of God

5 For your prayer has been heard before him and has entered the ears of the Lord God;

6 And when he told me these things, I became clam, and the angel said to me Cease irritating God, and I will disclose to you other mysteries greater than these.

7 And I Baruch said, As the Lord lives, if you disclose a word to me and I hear it from you, I shall speak no further. May God add to me punishment on the Day of Judgment if I speak in the future.

8 And the angel of hosts said to me, Come and I shall disclose to you the mysteries of God.

Chapter two

1 And taking me, he led me to where the heaven was set fast and where there was a river which no one is able to cross, not even one of the foreign which God created.

2 And taking me, he led me up to the first heaven and showed me a very large door. And he said to me, Let us enter through it. And we entered as on wings about the distance of 30 days journey.

3 And he showed me a plain within the heaven. And there were men dwelling on it with faces of cattle and horns of deer and feet of goats and loins of sheep.

4 And I Baruch asked the angel, Tell me, I pray you, what is the thickness of this heaven in which we have journeyed, and what is its width, and what is this plain, that I may report these to the sons of men.

5 And the angel, whose name was Phamael, said to me, This door which you see is (the door) of heaven, and (its thickness) is as great as the distance from earth to heaven, and the width of the plain which you saw is the same (distance) again

.

6 And again the angel of hosts said to me Come and I will show you greater mysteries.

□

7 And I said, I pray you, show me what those men are. And he said to me These are the ones who built the tower of the war against God, and the Lord removed them.

Chapter three

1 And taking me, the angel of the Lord led me to a second heaven, And he showed me there a door similar to the first. And he said, Let us enter through it.

2 And we entered, flying about the distance of 60 days journey.

3 And he showed me there also a plain, and it was full of men, and their appearance was like (that) of dogs, and their feet (like those) of deer.

4 And I asked the angel, I pray you, lord, tell me who these are.

5 And he said, These are the ones who plotted to build the tower. These whom you see forced many men and women to make bricks. Among them one woman was making bricks in the time of her delivery; they did not permit her to be released, but while making bricks she gave birth. And she carried her child in her cloak and continued making bricks.

6 And appearing to them, the Lord changed their languages; by that time they had built the tower 463 cubits (high).

7 And taking an auger, they attempted to pierce the heaven, saying, Let us see whether the heaven is (made) of clay or copper or iron.

8 Seeing these things, God did not permit them (to continue), but struck them with blindness and with confusion of tongues, and he made them be as you see.

Chapter four

1 And I Baruch said, Behold, lord, you have shown me great and wondrous things. Now show me all, for the Lord's sake.

2 And the angel said to me, Come, let us go throughwith the angel from that place, a journey of about 185 days.

3 And he showed me a plain and a serpent who appeared to be stone. And he showed me Hades, and its appearance was gloomy and unclean.

4 And I said, What is this dragon and this monster around it?

5 And the angel said. This dragon is the one which eats the bodies of those who pass through their lives badly, and he is nourished by them.

6 And this is Hades which is like him, in that also he drinks about one cubit from the sea, and nothing is diminished from it (the sea).

7 Baruch said, And how is that? And the angel said, Listen, the Lord God made 360 rivers, the primary ones of them being the Alphias, the Aburos, and the Gerikos, and because of these the sea is not diminished.

8 And I said, I pray you, show me which is the tree which caused Adam to stray. And the angel said, It is the vine which the angel Samail planted by which the Lord God became angered, and he cursed him and his planting. For this reason he did not permit Adam to touch it. And because of this the devil became envious and tricked him by means of his vine.

9 And I Baruch said, And since the vine became the cause of such evil and was cursed by God and (was) the destruction of the first formed, how is it now of such great use?

10 And the angel said, Rightly you ask; when God caused the Flood over the earth and destroyed all flesh and 409,000 giants, and the water rose over the heights 15 cubits, the water entered Paradise and killed every flower, but it removed the sprig of the vine completely and brought it outside.

11 And when the earth appeared from the water and Noah left the ark, he started to plant (some) of the discovered plants.

12 He also found the sprig, and taking it, he considered in his mind what it was. And I came and told him about it.

13 And he said, Should I plant it, or what (should I do with it)? Since Adam was destroyed by means of it, will I also encounter the anger of God through this? And while saying these things, he prayed for God to reveal to him what he should do with this.

14 And in 40 days he completed his prayer and entreating much and crying, he said

□

Lord, I implore you to reveal to me what I should do with this plant.

15 And God sent the angel Sarasel, and he said to him, Rise, Noah, plant the spring, for the Lord says this: Its bitterness will be changed into sweetness, and its curse will become a blessing, and its fruit will become the blood of God, and just as the race of men have been condemned through it, so through Jesus Christ Emmanuel in it (they) will receive a calling and entrance into Paradise.

16 Then know, Baruch, that just as Adam through this tree was condemned and was stripped of the glory of God, thus men now who insatiably drink the wine deriving from it transgress worse than Adam, and become distant from the glory of God, and will secure for themselves eternal fire.

17 For (no) good derives from it. For those who drink excessively do these things: Brother does not have mercy on brother, nor father on son, nor children on parents, but by means of the fall through wine come forth all (these): murder, adultery, fornication, perjury, theft, and similar things. And nothing good is accomplished through it.

Chapter five

1 And I Baruch said to the angel, May I ask you one question, lord?

2 Since you told me that the serpent drinks one cubit from the sea, tell me how large its belly is.

3 And the angel said, Its belly is Hades. As far as 300 men can throw a weight, so great is his belly. Come now and I will show you works greater than these.

Chapter six

1 And taking me, he led me where the sun goes forth.

2 And he showed me a chariot drawn by four horses and fire underneath it. And upon the chariot sat a man wearing a fiery crown. The chariot was drawn by forty angels. And behold, a bird runs along before the sun, as large as nine mountains.

3 And I said to the angel, What is this bird? And he said to me, This is the guardian of the world.

4 And I said, Lord how is the guardian of the world? Teach me.

5 And the angel said to me, This bird accompanies the sun and spreading its wings absorbs its fire-shaped rays.

6 For if it did not absorb them none of the race of men would survive, nor anyth ing else that lives, so God appointed this bird.

7 And he unfolded his wings, and I saw on his right wing very large letters like the place of a threshing floor, having the space of 4000 media, and the letters were gold.

8 And the angel said to me, Read them. And I read, and they said thus: Neither earth nor heaven bear me, but the wings of fire bear me.

9 And I said, Lord, what is this bird, and what is its name?

10 And the angel told me, His name is Phoenix.

11 And what does he eat? And he told me, The manna of heaven and the dew of the earth.

12 And I said, Does the bird excrete? And he said to me, He excretes a worm, and from the excretion, the worm, cinnamon comes into existence, which kings and princes use. But wait and you will see the glory of God.

13 And while he was speaking, there was a thunderclap and the place where we stood was shaken. And I asked the angel, My lord, what is this sound? And the angel said to me, The angels are opening the 365 gates of heaven now, and light is separating itself from darkness.

14 And a voice came saying, Light giver, give splendor to the world!

15 And hearing the sound of the bird, I said, Lord, what is this sound?

16 And he said, This is what wakens the cocks on earth, for just as articulate beings do, thus also the cock informs those on the earth according to its own tongue. For the sun is being prepared by the angels and the cock is crowing.

□

Chapter seven

1 And I said, And where does the sun begin to work after the cock crows?

2 And the angel said to me, Listen, Baruch, everything I have shown you is in the first and second heaven; and in the third heaven the sun passes through and gives splendor to the world, But wait and you will see the glory of God.

3 And while I was speaking to him, I saw the bird, and he appeared ahead and grew little by little, and became full sized.

4 And after him (I saw) the sun gleaming and with him angels carrying (him) and a crown on his head; we were not able to look directly into this sight and see..

5 And at the same time as the sun shone out, the phoenix spread out its wings. Seeing such glory, I became overcome with a great fear and fled and hid in the wings of the angel.

6 And the angel said to me; Do not fear, Baruch, but wait and you will see them setting.

Chapter eight

1 And taking me, he led me to the west. And when the time of the setting (of the sun) came, I saw again the bird coming in front and the sun coming with the angels. When he came, I saw the angels, and they removed the crown from his head.

2 And the bird was overcome and let his wings droop.

3 And when I saw these things, I said, Why do they remove the crown from his head and why is the bird so overcome?

4 And the angel said to me, When the day is completed, 4 angels take the crown of the sun and carry it to heaven and renew it because it and its rays are defiled upon earth. And every day it is renewed.

5 And I Baruch said, Lord, by what are its rays defiled upon earth? And the angel said to me, By the sight of the lawlessness and unrighteousness of men committing fornication, adultery, theft, robbery, idol-worship, drunkenness, murder, discord, jealousy, slander, murmuring, gossip, divination, and other things which are unacceptable to God. By means of these it is defiled, and because of this it is renewed.

6 And now, concerning how the bird becomes overcome; It is overcome because it checks the rays of the sun and the fire and burning the whole day.

7 For if its wings did not draw around the rays of the sun as earlier said, no living being would survive.

Chapter nine

1 And when they had withdrawn, night arrived, and with it the moon and the stars.

2 And I Baruch said, Lord, explain this also to me, please. How does it depart and where is it going, and in what pattern does it travel?

3 And the angel said, Wait and you will see this shortly. And on the morrow I saw this also in the form of a woman, seated in a wheeled chariot. And in front of it were oxen and lambs near the chariot, and also many angels.

4 And I said, Lord, what are the oxen and lambs? And he said to me, These are angels also.

5 And again I asked, Why does it sometimes grow larger and sometimes grow smaller?

6 Listen, O Baruch: This which you see was designed by God to be beautiful without peer.

7 And during the transgression of the first Adam, she gave light to Samael when he took the serpent as a garment, and did not hide, but on the contrary, waxed. And God was angered with her, and diminished her and shortened her days.

8 And I said, And why does she not shine all the time, but only at night? And the angel said. Listen: Just as servants are unable to speak freely before kings, so also before the sun, the moon and stars are unable to shine. For the stars are permanently suspended, but they are dispersed by the sun; and the moon, while being safe, is exhausted by the heat of the sun.

□

Chapter ten

1 And when I had been taught all these things by the archangel, he took me to a third heaven.

2 And I saw an unbroken plain and in the middle of it was a lake of water.

3 And in it were many birds of every species but unlike those here. But I saw a crane, like large oxen. And all were great, excelling those on earth.

4 And I asked the angel, What is the plain and what is the lake and what are the multitude of birds around it?

5 And the angel said, Listen, Baruch: This plain which surrounds the lake, and in which are other mysteries, is the place where the souls of the righteous come when they assemble, living together choir by choir.

6 And the water is that which the clouds receive to send as rain upon the earth, and (then) fruit grows.

7 And again I said to the angel of the Lord, What are the birds? And he said to me, These are the ones who continuously praise the Lord.

8 And I Baruch said, Lord, why do men say that the water which rains is from the sea?

9 And the angel said, There is rain from the sea and from water on earth; but that which produces the fruits is from here. Know from now on that what is called the dew of heaven comes from here.

Chapter eleven

1 And taking me from this, the angel led me to the fifth heaven.

2 And the gate was closed. And I said, Lord, will the gate be opened so that we can enter? And the angel said to me, We are not able to enter until Michael the holder of the keys of the kingdom of heaven comes. But wait and you will see the glory of God.

3 And there was a great noise like thunder, and I said, Lord, what is this noise?

4 And he said to me, The commander-in-chief Michael is descending to receive the prayers of men.

5 And behold a voice came: Let the gate be opened! And they opened, and there was a shriek as from thunder.

6 And Michael came, and the angel with me went to meet him and made obeisance to him and said, Hail, commander-in-chief of all our regiment.

7 And Michael said, Hail thou also, our brother, interpreter of revelations to those who pass through life rightly.

8 And after they greeted each other, they stood still. And I saw the commander-in-chief Michael take hold of a very large bowl, its depth being so great as from heaven to earth, and its width so great as from north to south. And I said, Lord, what is it that Michael the archangel is holding?

9 And he said to me, This is where the virtues of the righteous and the good works which they do are carried, which are brought by him before the heavenly God..

Chapter twelve

1 And while I was speaking with them, behold angels came carrying baskets filled with flowers, and they gave them to Michael.

2 And I asked the angel, Lord, who are these and what is it that they are carrying?

3 And he said to me, These are the angels over the principalities.

4 And taking the baskets, the archangel emptied them into his bowl.

5 And the angel said to me, These above-mentioned flowers are the virtues of the righteous.

6 And I saw other angels carrying baskets which were less than full. And they came distressed, and did not dare to approach, for they did not achieve the full prizes.

7 And Michael cried out, saying, Come also, you angels, bring what you have brought.

□

ght.

8 And Michael was greatly distressed and so was the angel with me, because they had not filled the bowl.

Chapter thirteen

1 And then similarly came other angels crying and lamenting and saying with fear, See how we are, blackened, Lord, for we are handed over to evil men, and we want t to be withdrawn from them.

2 And Michael said, So that the enemy will not dominate at the end, you must not withdraw from them. But tell me what you desire.

3 And they said, We beg you, Michael our commander-in-chief, transfer us from them, for we are unable to remain with evil and foolish men. For there is no goodness in them, but only every unrighteousness and greediness.

4 Indeed we have seen them enter into no church, nor (go) to the spiritual fathers, nor to anything good. But wherever there is murder, they are in the midst of it, and wherever there is fornication, adultery, theft, slander, perjury, envy, drunkenness, strife, jealousy, grumbling, gossip, idol worship, divination, and things similar to these, There are (with these men) works of such nature and worse; therefore we ask to be released from them.

5 And Michael said to the angels, Wait until I learn from the Lord what is to happen.

Chapter fourteen

1 And at that time Michael departed and the doors closed. And a noise like thunder came.

2 And I asked the angel, What is the noise? And he said to me, Now Michael is bringing the virtues of men to God.

Chapter fifteen

1 And at that time Michael came down, and the gate opened, and he brought oil.

2 And for the angels who had brought the full baskets, he filled (the baskets) with oil saying, Take, give a hundredfold reward to our friends, and to those who have laboriously done good works. For those who have sown well, harvest well.

3 And he said to those who had brought the half-full baskets, Come you also, receive the reward according to what you brought, and give it to the sons of men.

4 Then he said to those who brought the full (baskets) and those (who brought) the half-full (baskets), Go, bless our friends and tell them that thus says the Lord: You have been faithful over a little, he will set you over much; enter into the delight of our Lord.

Chapter sixteen

1 And turning, he said to those who had brought nothing, Be not sad, and cry not, but do not let the sons of men alone.

2 But since they have provoked me to anger by their deeds, go and provoke them to jealousy, and provoke them to anger, and embitter them against those who are not of your nation, against a people without understanding

3 Moreover, send forth caterpillars and locusts, rust and grasshoppers, hail with lightning and fury. Punish them with the sword and death, and their children with demons.

4 For they did not listen to my voice, nor observe my commands, nor carry them out, but they despised my commands and my churches, and insulted the priests proclaiming my words to them.

Chapter seventeen

1 And while he was speaking, the door closed and we withdrew

□

2 And taking me, the angel returned me to where I was at the beginning.

3 And when I came to myself, I praised God, who had deemed me worthy of such honors.

4 And you, brethren, who happen upon these revelations, glorify God also so that he will glorify us now and forever to all eternity! AMEN.

SELAH.

First page of "Gospel of Thomas" coptic manuscript. (Photo Courtesy of the Institute for Antiquity and Christianity, Claremont Graduate University)

Nag Hammadi Library main page

Introduction to Gnosticism and the Nag Hammadi Library

Alphabetic Index of the Nag Hammadi Library

Codex Index of the Nag Hammadi Library

Gospel of Thomas Collection

Search the Nag Hammadi Library

Return to The Gnostic Society Library page

Return to The Gnosis Archive main page

(Above image of the Gospel of Thomas courtesy of the Institute for Antiquity and Christianity, Claremont Graduate University)

Visit the Bookstore for a complete selection of translations and books about the Gnostic Gospels.

The Gnostic Gospels, by Elaine Pagels \(Click to buy the book\)

The Nag Hammadi Library, edited by James Robinson \(Click to buy the book\)

The Gnostic Society Library

The Nag Hammadi Library

The (First) Apocalypse of James

Translated by William R. Schoedel

It is the Lord who spoke with me: "See now the completion of my redemption. I have given you a sign of these things, James, my brother. For not without reason have I called you my brother, although you are not my brother materially. And I am not ignorant concerning you; so that when I give you a sign - know and hear."

"Nothing existed except Him-who-is. He is unnameable and ineffable. I myself am also unnameable, from Him-who-is, just as I have been given a number of names - two from Him-who-is. And I, I am before you. Since you have asked concerning femaleness, femaleness existed, but femaleness was not first. And it prepared for itself powers and gods. But it did not exist when I came forth, since I am an image of Him-who-is. But I have brought forth the image of him so that the sons of Him-who-is might know what things are theirs and what things are alien (to them). Behold, I shall reveal to you everything of this mystery. For they will seize me the day after tomorrow. But my redemption will be near."

James said, "Rabbi, you have said, 'they will seize me.' But I, what can I do?" He said to me, "Fear not, James. You too will they seize. But leave Jerusalem. For it is she who always gives the cup of bitterness to the sons of light. She is a dwelling place of a great number of archons. But your redemption will be preserved from them. So that you may understand who they are and what kinds they are, you will [...]. And listen. They are not [...] but archons [...]. These twelve [...] down [...] archons [...] upon his own hebdomad."

James said, "Rabbi, are there then twelve hebdomads and not seven as there are in the scriptures?" The Lord said, "James, he who spoke concerning this scripture had a limited understanding. I, however, shall reveal to you what has come forth from him who has no number. I shall give a sign concerning their number. As for what has come forth from him who has no measure, I shall give a sign concerning their measure"

James said, "Rabbi, behold then, I have received their number. There are seventy-two measures!" The Lord said, "These are the seventy-two heavens, which are their subordinates. These are the powers of all their might; and they were established by them; and these are they who were distributed everywhere, existing under the authority of the twelve archons. The inferior power among them brought forth for itself angels and unnumbered hosts. Him-who-is, however, has been given [...] on account of [...] Him-who-is [...] they are unnumbered. If you want to give them a number now, you will not be able to do so until you cast away from your blind thought, this bond of flesh which encircles you. And then you will reach Him-who-is. And you will no longer be James; rather you are the One-who-is. And all those who are unnumbered will all have been named."

<James said,>, "Rabbi, in what way shall I reach Him-who-is, since all these powers and these hosts are armed against me?" He said to me, "These powers are not armed against you specifically, but are armed against another. It is against me that they are armed. And they are armed with other powers. But they are armed against me in judgment. They did not give [...] to me in it [...] through them [...]. In this place [...] suffering, I shall [...]. He will [...] and I shall not rebuke them. But there shall be within me a silence and a hidden mystery. But I am fainthearted before their anger."

James said, "Rabbi, if they arm themselves against you, then is there no blame?"

You have come with knowledge, that you might rebuke their forgetfulness.
You have come with recollection, that you might rebuke their ignorance.
But I was concerned because of you.

For you descended into a great ignorance,
but you have not been defiled by anything in it.
For you descended into a great mindlessness, and your recollection remained.
You walked in mud,
and your garments were not soiled,
and you have not been buried in their filth,
and you have not been caught.
And I was not like them, but I clothed myself with everything of theirs.

There is in me forgetfulness, yet I remember things that are not theirs.

There is in me [...], and I am in their [...].

[...] knowledge [...] not in their sufferings [...]. But I have become afraid before them, since they rule. For what will they do? What will I be able to say? Or what word will I be able to say that I may escape them?"

The Lord said, "James, I praise your understanding and your fear. If you continue to be distressed, do not be concerned for anything else except your redemption. For behold, I shall complete this destiny upon this earth as I have said from the heavens. And I shall reveal to you your redemption."

James said, "Rabbi, how, after these things, will you appear to us again? After they seize you, and you complete this destiny, you will go up to Him-who-is." The Lord said, "James, after these things I shall reveal to you everything, not for your sake alone but for the sake of the unbelief of men, so that faith may exist in them. For a multitude will attain to faith and they will increase in [...]. And after this I shall appear for a reproof to the archons. And I shall reveal to them that he cannot be seized. If they seize him, then he will overpower each of them. But now I shall go. Remember the things I have spoken and let them go up before you." James said, "Lord, I shall hasten as you have said." The Lord said farewell to him and fulfilled what was fitting.

When James heard of his suffering and was much distressed, they awaited the sign of his coming. And he came after several days. And James was walking upon the mountain which is called "Gaugelan", with his disciples, who listened to him because they had been distressed, and he was [...] a comforter, saying, "This is [...] second [...]" Then the crowd dispersed, but James remained [...] prayer [...], as was his custom.

And the Lord appeared to him. Then he stopped (his) prayer and embraced him. He kissed him, saying, "Rabbi, I have found you! I have heard of your sufferings, which you endured. And I have been much distressed. My compassion you know. Therefore, on reflection, I was wishing that I would not see this people. They must be judged for these things that they have done. For these things that they have done are contrary to what is fitting."

The Lord said, "James, do not be concerned for me or for this people. I am he who was within me. Never have I suffered in any way, nor have I been distressed. And this people has done me no harm. But this (people) existed as a type of the archons, and it deserved to be destroyed through them. But [...] the archons, [...] who has [...] but since it [...] angry with [...] The just [...] is his servant. Therefore your name is "James the Just". You see how you will become sober when you see me. And you stopped this prayer. Now since you are a just man of God, you have embraced me and kissed me. Truly I say to you that you have stirred up great anger and wrath against yourself. But (this has happened) so that these others might come to be."

But James was timid (and) wept. And he was very distressed. And they both sat down upon a rock. The Lord said to him, "James, thus you will undergo these sufferings. But do not be sad. For the flesh is weak. It will receive what has been ordained for it. But as for you, do not be timid or afraid". The Lord ceased.

Now when James heard these things, he wiped away the tears in his eyes and very bitter [...] which is [...]. The Lord said to him, "James, behold, I shall reveal to you your redemption. When you are seized, and you undergo these sufferings, a multitude will arm themselves against you that <they> may seize you. And in particular three of them will seize you - they who sit (there) as toll collectors. Not only do they demand toll, but they also take away souls by theft. When you come into their power, one of them who is their guard will say to you, 'Who are you or where are you from?' You are to say to him, 'I am a son, and I am from the Father.' He will say to you, 'What sort of son are you, and to what father do you belong?' You are to say to him, 'I am from the Pre-existent Father, and a son in the Pre-existent One.' When he says to you, [...], you are to say to him [...] in the [...] that I might [...]."

'[...] of alien things?' You are to say to him, 'They are not entirely alien, but they are from Achamoth, who is the female. And these she produced as she brought down the race from the Pre-existent One. So then they are not alien, but they are ours. They are indeed ours because she who is mistress of them is from the Pre-existent One. At the same time they are alien because the Pre-existent One did not have intercourse with her, when she produced them.' When he also says to you, 'Where will you go?', you are to say to him, 'To the place from which I have come, there shall I return.' And if you say these things, you will escape their attacks.

"But when you come to these three detainers who take away souls by theft in that place [...] these. You [...] a vessel [...] much more than [...] of the one whom you [...] for [...] her root. You too will be sober [...]. But I shall call upon the imperishable knowledge, which is Sophia who is in the Father (and) who is the mother of Achamoth. Achamoth had no father nor male consort, but she is female from a female. She produced you without a male, since she was alone (and) in ignorance as to what lives through her mother because she thought that she alone existed. But I shall cry out to her mother. And then they will fall into confusion (and) will blame their root and the race of their mother. But you will go up to what is yours [...] you will [...] the Pre-existent One."

"They are a type of the twelve disciples and the twelve pairs, [...] Achamoth, which is translated 'Sophia'. And who I myself am, (and) who the imperishable Sophia (is) through whom you will be redeemed, and (who are) all the sons of Him-who-is - these things they have known and have hidden within them. You are to hide <these things> within you, and you are to keep silence. But you are to reveal them to Addai. When you depart, immediately war will be made with this land. Weep, then, for him who dwells in Jerusalem. But let Addai take these things to heart. In the tenth year let Addai sit and write them down. And when he writes them down [...] and they are to give them [...] he has the [...] he is called Levi. Then he is to bring [...] word [...] from what I said earlier [...] a woman [...] Jerusalem in her [...] and he begets two sons through her. They are to inherit these things and the understanding of him who [...] exalts. And they are to receive [...] through him from his intellect. Now, the younger of them is greater. And may these things remain hidden in him until he comes to the age of seventeen years [...] beginning [...] through them. They will pursue him exceedingly, since they are from his [...] companions. He will be proclaimed through them, and they will proclaim this word. Then he will become a seed of [...]."

James said, "I am satisfied [...] and they are [...] my soul. Yet another thing I ask of you: who are the seven women who have been your disciples? And behold all women bless you. I also am amazed how powerless vessels have become strong by a perception which is in them." The Lord said, "You [...] well [...] a spirit of [...], a spirit of thought, a spirit of counsel of a [...], a spirit [...] a spirit of knowledge [...] of their fear. [...] when we had passed through the breath of this archon who is named Adonaios [...] him and [...] he was ignorant [...] when I came forth from him, he remembered that I am a son of his. He was gracious to me at that time as his son. And then, before <I> appeared here, <he> cast them among this people. And from the place of heaven the prophets [...]."

James said, "Rabbi, [...] I [...] all together [...] in them especially [...]."

The Lord said, "James, I praise you [...] walk upon the earth [...] the words while he [...] on the [...]. For cast away from you the cup which is bitterness. For some from [...] set themselves against you. For you have begun to understand their roots from beginning to end. Cast away from yourself all lawlessness. And beware lest they envy you. When you ... speak these words of this perception, encourage these four: Salome and Mariam and Martha and Arsinoe ... since he takes some ... to me he is ... burnt offerings and ... But I ... not in this way; but ... first-fruits of the ... upward ... so that the power of God might appear. The perishable has gone up to the imperishable and the female element has attained to this male element."

James said, "Rabbi, into these three (things), then, has their ... been cast. For they have been reviled, and they have been persecuted ... Behold ... everything ... from anyone ... For you have received ... of knowledge. And ... that what is the ... go ... you will find ... But I shall go forth and shall reveal that they believed in you, that they may be content with their blessing and salvation, and this revelation may come to pass."

And he went at that time immediately and rebuked the twelve and cast out of them contentment concerning the way of knowledge ...

... And the majority of them ... when they saw, the messenger took in ... The others ... said, "... him from this earth. For he is not worthy of life." These, then, were afraid. They arose, saying, "We have no part in this blood, for a just man will perish through injustice" James departed so that ... look ... for we ... him.

The Apocalypse of James

Original translation of this text was prepared by members of the Coptic Gnostic Library Project of the Institute for Antiquity and Christianity, Claremont Graduate School The Coptic Gnostic Library Project was funded by UNESCO, the National Endowment for the Arts, and other Institutions

E. J. Brill has asserted copyright on texts published by the Coptic Gnostic Library Projects.

The translation presented here has been edited, corrected and formatted for use in the Gnostic Society Library.

For academic citation, please refer to published editions of this text.

| Nag Hammadi Library | Gnostic Society Library | Gnosis Archive |

Search the entire library index

Gnostic and Related Material:

Library Main Page

Nag Hammadi Library

Gnostic Scriptures

GRS Mead Collection

Polemical Works

Christian Apocrypha

Corpus Hermeticum

Manichaean Writings

Mandaean Writings

Cathar Writings

Alchemical Writings

Modern Gnostic Texts

Return to

Gnosis Archive

The Gnostic Society Library

Gnostic Scriptures and Fragments

The Odes of Solomon

Archive Notes

The Odes date from the second century, and were probably written in Greek or Aramaic. At least one scholar has suggested they may have an origin in Valentinian Gnosticism, though this is of course speculative. The Church Father Lactantius (third century) quoted from them, and the Pistis Sophia mentions about five complete Odes.

In 1909 the English Scholar J. Rendel Harris discovered an old Syriac manuscript with contained all but the second of the 42 Odes. These texts evidence the close inter-relationship of Christian and Gnostic church piety. Translation below is by James H. Charlesworth. (Another more poetic translation of several odes -- from an unknown source -- follows the Charlesworth translation.)

In his commentary on the Odes, Charlesworth notes :

The date of the Odes has caused considerable interest. H. J. Drijvers contends that they are as late as the 3d century. L. Abramowski places them in the latter half of the 2d century. B. McNeil argued that they are contemporaneous with 4 Ezra, the Shepherd of Hermas, Polycarp, and Valentinus (ca. 100 C.E.). Most scholars date them sometime around the middle of the 2d century, but if they are heavily influenced by Jewish apocalyptic thought and especially the ideas in the Dead Sea Scrolls, a date long after 100 is unlikely....

The 11th ode was found among the Bodmer Papyri in a 3d-century Gk manuscript (no. 11). Five were translated into Coptic in the 4th century and used to illustrate the Pistis Sophia (Odes Sol. 1, 5, 6, 22, and 25). Also in the 4th century Ode 19 was quoted by Lactantius (Div. Inst. 4.12.3). In the 10th century a scribe copied the Odes in Syriac, but only Odes Sol. 17:7-42:20 are preserved (British Museum ms. Add. 14538). In the 15th century another scribe copied them into Syriac, but again the beginning is lost (John Rylands Library Cod. Syr. 9 contains only Odes Sol. 3.1b-42:20). [--The Anchor Bible Dictionary, v. 6, p. 114]

The Odes of Solomon

Ode 1

The Lord is on my head like a crown, and I shall never be without Him.
Plaited for me is the crown of truth, and it caused Your branches to blossom in me.
For it is not like a parched crown that blossoms not;
For You live upon my head, and have blossomed upon me.
Your fruits are full and complete; they are full of Your salvation....

Ode 2

[There is no extant copy of Ode 2]

Ode 3

... I am putting on the love of the Lord.
And His members are with Him, and I am dependent on them; and He loves me.
For I should not have known how to love the Lord, if He had not continuously loved me.
Who is able to distinguish love, except him who is loved?
I love the Beloved and I myself love Him, and where His rest is, there also am I.
And I shall be no stranger, because there is no jealousy with the Lord Most High and Merciful.
I have been united to Him, because the lover has found the Beloved, because I love Him that is the Son, I shall become a son.
Indeed he who is joined to Him who is immortal, truly shall be immortal.
And he who delights in the Life will become living.
This is the Spirit of the Lord, which is not false, which teaches the sons of men to know His ways.
Be wise and understanding and awakened.
Hallelujah.

Ode 4

No man can pervert Your holy place, O my God; nor can he change it, and put it in another place.
Because he has no power over it; for Your sanctuary You designed before You made special places.
The ancient one shall not be perverted by those which are inferior to it. You have given Your heart, O Lord, to Your believers.
Never will You be idle, nor will You be without fruits;
For one hour of Your faith is more excellent than all days and years.

For who shall put on Your grace and be rejected?

Because Your seal is known; and Your creatures are known to it.

And Your hosts possess it, and the elect archangels are clothed with it.

You have given to us Your fellowship, not that You were in need of us, but that we are always in need of You.

Shower upon us Your gentle rain, and open Your bountiful springs which abundantly supply us with milk and honey.

For there is no regret with You; that You should regret anything which You have promised;

Since the result was manifest to You.

For that which You gave, You gave freely, so that no longer will You draw back and take them again.

For all was manifest to You as God, and was set in order from the beginning before You.

And You, O Lord, have made all.

Hallelujah.

Ode 5

I praise You, O Lord, because I love You.

O Most High, forsake me not, for You are my hope.

Freely did I receive Your grace, may I live by it.

My persecutors will come but let them not see me.

Let a cloud of darkness fall upon their eyes; and let an air of thick darkness obscure them.

And let them have no light to see, so that they cannot seize me.

Let their designs become hardened, so that whatever they have conspired shall return upon their own heads.

For they have devised a plan, but it was not for them.

They prepared themselves maliciously, but they were found to be impotent.

Indeed my confidence is upon the Lord, and I will not fear.

And because the Lord is my salvation, I will not fear.

And He is as a woven crown upon my head, and I shall not be shaken.

Even if everything should be shaken, I shall stand firm.

And though all things visible should perish, I shall not die;

Because the Lord is with me, and I with Him.

Hallelujah.

Ode 6

As the wind glides through the harp and the strings speak,

So the Spirit of the Lord speaks through my members, and I speak through His love.

For He destroys whatever is alien, and everything is of the Lord.

For thus it was from the beginning, and will be until the end.

So that nothing shall be contrary, and nothing shall rise up against Him.

The Lord has multiplied his knowledge, and He was zealous that those things should be known which through His grace have been given to us.

And His praise He gave us on account of His name, our spirits praise His Holy Spirit.

For there went forth a stream, and it became a river great and broad; indeed it carried away everything, and it shattered and brought it to the Temple.

And the barriers which were built by men were not able to restrain it, nor even the arts of them who habitually restrain water.

For it spread over the surface of all the earth, and it filled everything.

Then all the thirsty upon the earth drank, and thirst was relieved and quenched;

For from the Most High the drink was given.

Blessed, therefore, are the ministers of that drink, who have been entrusted with His water.

They have refreshed the parched lips, and have aroused the paralyzed will.

Even living persons who were about to expire, they have held back from death.

And limbs which have collapsed, they have restored and set up.

They gave strength for their coming, and light for their eyes.

Because everyone recognized them as the Lord's, and lived by the living water of eternity.

Hallelujah.

Ode 7

As is the course of anger over wickedness, so is the course of joy over the Beloved; and brings in of its fruits unhindered.

My joy is the Lord and my course is towards Him, this path of mine is beautiful.

For there is a Helper for me, the Lord. He has generously shown Himself to me in His simplicity, because His kindness has diminished His dreadfulness.

He became like me, that I might receive Him. In form He was considered like me, that I might put Him on.

And I trembled not when I saw Him, because He was gracious to me.

Like my nature He became, that I might understand Him. And like my form, that I might not turn away from Him.

The Father of knowledge is the Word of knowledge.

He who created wisdom is wiser than His works.

And He who created me when yet I was not knew what I would do when I came into being.

On account of this He was gracious to me in His abundant grace, and allowed me to ask from Him and to benefit from His sacrifice.

For He it is who is incorrupt, the perfection of the worlds and their Father.

He has allowed Him to appear to them that are His own; in order that they may recognize Him that made them, and not suppose that they came of themselves.

For towards knowledge He has set His way, he has widened it and lengthened it and brought it to complete perfection.

And has set over it the traces of His light, and it proceeded from the beginning until the end.

For by Him He was served, and He was pleased by the Son.

And because of his salvation He will possess everything. And the Most High will be known by His holy ones:

To announce to those who have songs of the coming of the Lord, that they may go forth to meet Him and may sing to Him, with joy and with the harp of many tones.

The Seers shall go before Him, and they shall be seen before Him.

And they shall praise the Lord in His love, because He is near and does see.

And hatred shall be removed from the earth, and with jealousy it shall be drowned.

For ignorance was destroyed upon it, because the knowledge of the Lord arrived upon it.

Let the singers sing the grace of the Lord Most High, and let them bring their songs.

And let their heart be like the day, and their gentle voices like the majestic beauty of the Lord.

And let there not be anyone who breathes that is without knowledge or voice.

For He gave a mouth to His creation: to open the voice of the mouth towards Him, and to praise Him.

Confess His power and declare His grace.

Hallelujah.

Ode 8

Open, open your hearts to the exultation of the Lord, and let your love abound from the heart to the lips.

In order to bring forth fruits to the Lord, a holy life; and to talk with watchfulness in His light.

Rise up and stand erect, you who sometimes were brought low.

You who were in silence, speak, for your mouth has been opened.

You who were despised, from henceforth be lifted up, for your Righteousness has been lifted up;

For the right hand of the Lord is with you, and He will be your Helper.

And peace was prepared for you, before what may be your war.

Hear the word of truth, and receive the knowledge of the Most High.

Your flesh may not understand that which I am about to say to you; nor your garment that which I am about to show you.

Keep my mystery, you who are kept by it; keep my faith, you who are kept by it.

And understand my knowledge, you who know me in truth; love me with affection, you who love;

For I turn not my face from my own, because I know them.

And before they had existed, I recognized them; and imprinted a seal on their faces.

I fashioned their members, and my own breasts I prepared for them, that they might drink my holy milk and live by it.

I am pleased by them, and am not ashamed by them.

For my workmanship are they, and the strength of my thoughts.

Therefore who can stand against my work? Or who is not subject to them?

I willed and fashioned mind and heart, and they are my own. And upon my right hand I have set my elect ones.

And my righteousness goes before them, and they shall not be deprived of my name; for it is with them.

Pray and increase, and abide in the love of the Lord;

And you who were loved in the Beloved, and you who are kept in Him who lives, and you who are saved in Him who was saved.

And you shall be found incorrupt in all ages, on account of the name of your Father.

Hallelujah.

Ode 9

Open your ears, and I shall speak to you.

Give me yourself, so that I may also give you myself.

The word of the Lord and His desires, the holy thought which He has thought concerning His Messiah.

For in the will of the Lord is your life, and His purpose is eternal life, and your perfection is incorruptible.

Be enriched in God the Father; and receive the purpose of the Most High. Be strong and redeemed by His grace.

For I announce peace to you, His holy ones, so that none of those who hear shall fall in the war.

And also that those who have known Him may not perish, and so that those who received Him may not be ashamed.

An everlasting crown is Truth; blessed are they who set it on their head.

It is a precious stone, for the wars were on account of the crown.

But Righteousness has taken it, and has given it to you.

Put on the crown in the true covenant of the Lord, and all those who have conquered will be inscribed in His book.

For their book is the reward of victory which is for you, and she sees you before her and wills that you shall be saved.

Hallelujah.

Ode 10

The Lord has directed my mouth by His Word, and has opened my heart by His Light.

And He has caused to dwell in me His immortal life, and permitted me to proclaim the fruit of His peace.

To convert the lives of those who desire to come to Him, and to lead those who are captive into freedom.

I took courage and became strong and captured the world, and the captivity became mine for the glory of the Most High, and of God my Father.

And the Gentiles who had been dispersed were gathered together, but I was not defiled by my love for them, because they had praised me in high places.

And the traces of light were set upon their heart, and they walked according to my life and were saved, and they became my people for ever and ever.

Hallelujah.

Ode 11

My heart was pruned and its flower appeared, then grace sprang up in it, and my heart produced fruits for the Lord.

For the Most High circumcised me by His Holy Spirit, then He uncovered my inward being towards Him, and filled me with His love.

And His circumcising became my salvation, and I ran in the Way, in His peace, in the way of truth.

From the beginning until the end I received His knowledge.

And I was established upon the rock of truth, where He had set me.

And speaking waters touched my lips from the fountain of the Lord generously.

And so I drank and became intoxicated, from the living water that does not die.

And my intoxication did not cause ignorance, but I abandoned vanity,

And turned toward the Most High, my God, and was enriched by His favors.

And I rejected the folly cast upon the earth, and stripped it off and cast it from me.

And the Lord renewed me with His garment, and possessed me by His light.

And from above He gave me immortal rest, and I became like the land that blossoms and rejoices in its fruits.

And the Lord is like the sun upon the face of the land.

My eyes were enlightened, and my face received the dew;

And my breath was refreshed by the pleasant fragrance of the Lord.

And He took me to His Paradise, wherein is the wealth of the Lord's pleasure.

I beheld blooming and fruit-bearing trees,

And self-grown was their crown.

Their branches were sprouting and their fruits were shining.

From an immortal land were their roots.

And a river of gladness was irrigating them,

And round about them in the land of eternal life.

Then I worshipped the Lord because of His magnificence.

And I said, Blessed, O Lord, are they who are planted in Your land, and who have a place in Your Paradise;

And who grow in the growth of Your trees, and have passed from darkness into light.

Behold, all Your laborers are fair, they who work good works, and turn from wickedness to your pleasantness.

For the pungent odor of the trees is changed in Your land,

And everything becomes a remnant of Yourself. Blessed are the workers of Your waters, and eternal memorials of Your faithful servants.

Indeed, there is much room in Your Paradise. And there is nothing in it which is barren, but everything is filled with fruit.

Glory be to You, O God, the delight of Paradise for ever.

Hallelujah.

Ode 12

He has filled me with words of truth, that I may proclaim Him.

And like the flowing of waters, truth flows from my mouth, and my lips declare His fruits.

And He has caused His knowledge to abound in me, because the mouth of the Lord is the true Word, and the entrance of His light.

And the Most High has given Him to His generations, which are the interpreters of His beauty,

And the narrators of His glory,

And the confessors of His purpose,

And the preachers of His mind,

And the teachers of His works.

For the subtlety of the Word is inexpressible, and like His utterance so also is His swiftness and His acuteness, for limitless is His progression.

He never falls but remains standing, and one cannot comprehend His descent or His way.

For as His work is, so is His expectation, for He is the light and dawning of thought.

And by Him the generations spoke to one another, and those that were silent acquired speech.

And from Him came love and equality, and they spoke one to another that which was theirs.

And they were stimulated by the Word, and knew Him who made them, because they were in harmony.

For the mouth of the Most High spoke to them, and His exposition prospered through Him.

For the dwelling place of the Word is man, and His truth is love.

Blessed are they who by means of Him have perceived everything, and have known the Lord in His truth.

Hallelujah.

Ode 13

Behold, the Lord is our mirror. Open your eyes and see them in Him.

And learn the manner of your face, then declare praises to His Spirit.

And wipe the paint from your face, and love His holiness and put it on.

Then you will be unblemished at all times with Him.

Hallelujah.

Ode 14

As the eyes of a son upon his father, so are my eyes, O Lord, at all times towards You.

Because my breasts and my pleasure are with You.

Turn not aside Your mercies from me, O Lord; and take not Your kindness from me.

Stretch out to me, my Lord, at all times, Your right hand, and be to me a guide till the end according to Your will.

Let me be pleasing before You, because of Your glory, and because of Your name let me be saved from the Evil One.

And let Your gentleness, O Lord, abide with me, and the fruits of Your love.

Teach me the odes of Your truth, that I may produce fruits in You.

And open to me the harp of Your Holy Spirit, so that with every note I may praise You, O Lord.

And according to the multitude of Your mercies, so grant unto me, and hasten to grant our petitions.

For You are sufficient for all our needs.

Hallelujah.

Ode 15

As the sun is the joy of them who seek its daybreak, so is my joy the Lord;

Because He is my Sun, and His rays have lifted me up; and His light has dismissed all darkness from my face.

Eyes I have obtained in Him, and have seen His holy day.

Ears I have acquired, and have heard His truth.

The thought of knowledge I have acquired, and have enjoyed delight fully through Him.

I repudiated the way of error, and went towards Him and received salvation from Him abundantly.

And according to His generosity He gave to me, and according to His excellent beauty He made me.

I put on immortality through His name, and took off corruption by His grace.

Death has been destroyed before my face, and Sheol has been vanquished by my word.

And eternal life has arisen in the Lord's land, and it has been declared to His faithful ones, and has been given without limit to all that trust in Him.

Hallelujah.

Ode 16

As the occupation of the ploughman is the ploughshare, and the occupation of the helmsman is the steering of the ship, so also my occupation is the psalm of the Lord by His hymns.

My art and my service are in His hymns, because His love has nourished my heart, and His fruits He poured unto my lips.

For my love is the Lord; hence I will sing unto Him.

For I am strengthened by His praises, and I have faith in Him.

I will open my mouth, and His Spirit will speak through me the glory of the Lord and His beauty,

The work of His hands, and the labor of His fingers;

For the multitude of His mercies, and the strength of His Word.

For the Word of the Lord investigates that which is invisible, and reveals His thought.

For the eye sees His works, and the ear hears His thought.

It is He who made the earth broad, and placed the waters in the sea.
He expanded the heaven, and fixed the stars.
And He fixed the creation and set it up, then He rested from His works.
And created things run according to their courses, and work their works, for they can never cease nor fail.
And the hosts are subject to His Word.
The reservoir of light is the sun, and the reservoir of darkness is the night.
For He made the sun for the day so that it will be light; but night brings darkness over the face of the earth.
And by their portion one from another they complete the beauty of God.
And there is nothing outside of the Lord, because He was before anything came to be.
And the worlds are by His Word, and by the thought of His heart.
Praise and honor to His name.
Hallelujah.

Ode 17

Then I was crowned by my God, and my crown was living.
And I was justified by my Lord, for my salvation is incorruptible.
I have been freed from vanities, and am not condemned.
My chains were cut off by His hands, I received the face and likeness of a new person, and I walked in Him and was saved.
And the thought of truth led me, and I went after it and wandered not.
And all who saw me were amazed, and I seemed to them like a stranger.
And He who knew and exalted me, is the Most High in all His perfection.
And He glorified me by His kindness, and raised my understanding to the height of truth.
And from there He gave me the way of His steps, and I opened the doors which were closed.
And I shattered the bars of iron, for my own shackles had grown hot and melted before me.
And nothing appeared closed to me, because I was the opening of everything.
And I went towards all my bound ones in order to loose them; that I might not leave anyone bound or binding.
And I gave my knowledge generously, and my resurrection through my love.
And I sowed my fruits in hearts, and transformed them through myself.
Then they received my blessing and lived, and they were gathered to me and were saved;
Because they became my members, and I was their Head.
Glory to You, our Head, O Lord Messiah.
Hallelujah.

Ode 18

My heart was lifted up and enriched in the love of the Most High, so that I might praise Him with my name.

My members were strengthened, that they may not fall from His power.

Infirmities fled from my body, and it stood firm for the Lord by His will; because His kingdom is firm.

O Lord, for the sake of those who are in need, do not dismiss Your Word from me.

Nor, for the sake of their works, withhold Your perfection from me.

Let not light be conquered by darkness, nor let truth flee from falsehood.

Let Your right hand set our salvation to victory, and let it receive from every region, and preserve it on the side of everyone who is besieged by misfortunes.

You are my God, falsehood and death are not in Your mouth; only perfection is Your will.

And vanity You know not, because neither does it know You.

And You know not error; because neither does it know You.

And ignorance appeared like dust, and like the foam of the sea.

And vain people thought that it was great, and they became like its type and were impoverished.

But those who knew understood and contemplated, and were not polluted by their thoughts;

Because they were in the mind of the Most High, and mocked those who were walking in error.

Then they spoke the truth, from the breath which the Most High breathed into them.

Praise and great honor to His name.

Hallelujah.

Ode 19

A cup of milk was offered to me, and I drank it in the sweetness of the Lord's kindness.

The Son is the cup, and the Father is He who was milked; and the Holy Spirit is She who milked Him;

Because His breasts were full, and it was undesirable that His milk should be ineffectually released.

The Holy Spirit opened Her bosom, and mixed the milk of the two breasts of the Father.

Then She gave the mixture to the generation without their knowing, and those who have received it are in the perfection of the right hand.

The womb of the Virgin took it, and she received conception and gave birth.

So the Virgin became a mother with great mercies.

And she labored and bore the Son but without pain, because it did not occur without purpose.

And she did not require a midwife, because He caused her to give life.

She brought forth like a strong man with desire, and she bore according to the manifestation, and she acquired according to the Great Power.

And she loved with redemption, and guarded with kindness, and declared with grandeur.

Hallelujah.

Ode 20

I am a priest of the Lord, and Him I serve as a priest;

And to Him I offer the offering of His thought.

For His thought is not like the world, nor like the flesh, nor like them who worship according to the flesh.
The offering of the Lord is righteousness, and purity of heart and lips.
Offer your inward being faultlessly; and let not your compassion oppress compassion; and let not yourself oppress a self.

You should not purchase a stranger because he is like yourself, nor seek to deceive your neighbor, nor deprive him of the covering for his nakedness.

But put on the grace of the Lord generously, and come to His Paradise, and make for yourself a garland from His tree.

Then put it on your head and be joyful, and recline upon His rest.

For His glory will go before you; and you shall receive of His kindness and of His grace; and you shall be anointed in truth with the praise of His holiness.

Praise and honor to His name.

Hallelujah.

Ode 21

I lifted up my arms on high on account of the compassion of the Lord.

Because He cast off my bonds from me, and my Helper lifted me up according to His compassion and His salvation.

And I put off darkness, and put on light.

And even I myself acquired members. In them there was no sickness or affliction or suffering.

And abundantly helpful to me was the thought of the Lord, and His everlasting fellowship.

And I was lifted up in the light, and I passed before Him.

And I was constantly near Him, while praising and confessing Him.

He caused my heart to overflow, and it was found in my mouth; and it sprang forth unto my lips.

Then upon my face increased the exultation of the Lord and His praise.

Hallelujah.

Ode 22

He who caused me to descend from on high, and to ascend from the regions below;

And He who gathers what is in the Middle, and throws them to me;

He who scattered my enemies, and my adversaries;

He who gave me authority over bonds, so that I might unbind them;

He who overthrew by my hands the dragon with seven heads, and set me at his roots that I might destroy his seed;

You were there and helped me, and in every place Your name surrounded me.

Your right hand destroyed his evil venom, and Your hand leveled the Way for those who believe in You.

And It chose them from the graves, and separated them from the dead ones.

It took dead bones and covered them with flesh.

But they were motionless, so It gave them energy for life.

Incorruptible was Your way and Your face; You have brought Your world to corruption, that everything might be resolved and renewed.

And the foundation of everything is Your rock. And upon it You have built Your kingdom, and it became the dwelling-place of the holy ones.

Hallelujah.

Ode 23

Joy is for the holy ones. And who shall put it on but they alone?

Grace is for the elect ones. And who shall receive it but they who trusted in it from the beginning?

Love is for the elect ones. And who shall put it on but they who possessed it from the beginning?

Walk in the knowledge of the Lord, and you will know the grace of the Lord generously; both for His exultation and for the perfection of His knowledge.

And His thought was like a letter, and His will descended from on high.

And it was sent like an arrow which from a bow has been forcibly shot.

And many hands rushed to the letter, in order to catch it, then take and read it.

But it escaped from their fingers; and they were afraid of it and of the seal which was upon it.

Because they were not allowed to loosen its seal; for the power which was over the seal was greater than they.

But those who saw the letter went after it; that they might learn where it would land, and who should read it, and who should hear it.

But a wheel received it, and it came over it.

And a sign was with it, of the kingdom and of providence.

And everything which was disturbing the wheel, it mowed and cut down.

And it restrained a multitude of adversaries; and bridged rivers.

And it crossed over and uprooted many forests, and made an open way.

The head went down to the feet, because unto the feet ran the wheel, and whatever had come upon it.

The letter was one of command, and hence all regions were gathered together.

And there was seen at its head, the head which was revealed, even the Son of Truth from the Most High Father.

And He inherited and possessed everything, and then the scheming of the many ceased.

Then all the seducers became headstrong and fled, and the persecutors became extinct and were blotted out.

And the letter became a large volume, which was entirely written by the finger of God.

And the name of the Father was upon it; and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, to rule for ever and ever.

Hallelujah.

Ode 24

The dove fluttered over the head of our Lord Messiah, because He was her head.
And she sang over Him, and her voice was heard.
Then the inhabitants were afraid, and the foreigners were disturbed.
The bird began to fly, and every creeping thing died in its hole.
And the chasms were opened and closed; and they were seeking the Lord as those who are about to give birth.
But He was not given to them for nourishment, because He did not belong to them.
But the chasms were submerged in the seal of the Lord, and they perished in the thought with which they had remained from the beginning.
For they were in labor from the beginning, and the end of their travail was life.
And all of them who were lacking perished, because they were not able to express the word so that they might remain.
And the Lord destroyed the devices, of all those who had not the truth with them.
For they were lacking in wisdom, they who exalted themselves in their mind.
So they were rejected, because the truth was not with them.
For the Lord revealed His way, and spread widely His grace.
And those who understood it knew His holiness.
Hallelujah.

Ode 25

I was rescued from my chains, and I fled unto You, O my God.
Because You are the right hand of salvation, and my Helper.
You have restrained those who rise up against me, and no more were they seen.
Because Your face was with me, which saved me by Your grace.
But I was despised and rejected in the eyes of many, and I was in their eyes like lead.
And I acquired strength from You, and help.
A lamp You set for me both on my right and on my left, so that there might not be in me anything that is not light.
And I was covered with the covering of Your Spirit, and I removed from me my garments of skin.
Because Your right hand exalted me, and caused sickness to pass from me.
And I became mighty in Your truth, and holy in Your righteousness.
And all my adversaries were afraid of me, and I became the Lord's by the name of the Lord.
And I was justified by His kindness, and His rest is for ever and ever.
Hallelujah.

Ode 26

I poured out praise to the Lord, because I am His own.
And I will recite His holy ode, because my heart is with Him.

For His harp is in my hand, and the odes of His rest shall not be silent.
I will call unto Him with all my heart, I will praise and exalt Him with all my members.
For from the East and unto the West is His praise;
Also from the South and unto the North is His thanksgiving.
Even from the crest of the summits and unto their extremity is His perfection.
Who can write the odes of the Lord, or who can read them?
Or who can train himself for life, so that he himself may be saved?
Or who can press upon the Most High, so that He would recite from His mouth?
Who can interpret the wonders of the Lord? Though he who interprets will be destroyed, yet that which was interpreted will remain.
For it suffices to perceive and be satisfied, for the odists stand in serenity;
Like a river which has an increasingly gushing spring, and flows to the relief of them that seek it.
Hallelujah.

Ode 27

I extended my hands and hallowed my Lord,
For the expansion of my hands is His sign.
And my extension is the upright cross.
Hallelujah.

Ode 28

As the wings of doves over their nestlings, and the mouths of their nestlings towards their mouths, so also are the wings of the Spirit over my heart.
My heart continually refreshes itself and leaps for joy, like the babe who leaps for joy in his mother's womb.
I trusted, consequently I was at rest; because trustful is He in whom I trusted.
He has greatly blessed me, and my head is with Him.
And the dagger shall not divide me from Him, nor the sword;
Because I am ready before destruction comes, and have been set on His immortal side.
And immortal life embraced me, and kissed me.
And from that life is the Spirit which is within me. And it cannot die because it is life.
Those who saw me were amazed, because I was persecuted.
And they thought that I had been swallowed up, because I seemed to them as one of the lost.
But my injustice became my salvation.
And I became their abomination, because there was no jealousy in me.
Because I continually did good to every man I was hated.
And they surrounded me like mad dogs, those who in stupidity attack their masters.
Because their thought is depraved, and their mind is perverted.

But I was carrying water in my right hand, and their bitterness I endured by my sweetness.
And I did not perish, because I was not their brother, nor was my birth like theirs.
And they sought my death but did not find it possible, because I was older than their memory; and in vain did they cast lots against me.
And those who were after me sought in vain to destroy the memorial of Him who was before them.
Because the thought of the Most High cannot be prepossessed; and His heart is superior to all wisdom.
Hallelujah.

Ode 29

The Lord is my hope, I shall not be ashamed of Him.
For according to His praise He made me, and according to His grace even so He gave to me.
And according to His mercies He exalted me, and according to His great honor He lifted me up.
And he caused me to ascend from the depths of Sheol, and from the mouth of death He drew me.
And I humbled my enemies, and He justified me by His grace.
For I believed in the Lord's Messiah, and considered that He is the Lord.
And He revealed to me His sign, and He led me by His light.
And He gave me the scepter of His power, that I might subdue the devices of the people, and humble the power of the mighty.
To make war by His Word, and to take victory by His power.
And the Lord overthrew my enemy by His Word, and he became like the dust which a breeze carries off.
And I gave praise to the Most High, because He has magnified His servant and the son of His maidservant.
Hallelujah.

Ode 30

Fill for yourselves water from the living fountain of the Lord, because it has been opened for you.
And come all you thirsty and take a drink, and rest beside the fountain of the Lord.
Because it is pleasing and sparkling, and perpetually refreshes the self.
For much sweeter is its water than honey, and the honeycomb of bees is not to be compared with it;
Because it flowed from the lips of the Lord, and it named from the heart of the Lord.
And it came boundless and invisible, and until it was set in the middle they knew it not.
Blessed are they who have drunk from it, and have refreshed themselves by it.
Hallelujah.

Ode 31

Chasms vanished before the Lord, and darkness dissipated before His appearance.
Error erred and perished on account of Him; and contempt received no path, for it was submerged by the truth of the Lord.
He opened His mouth and spoke grace and joy; and recited a new chant to His name.
Then He lifted his voice towards the Most High, and offered to Him those that had become sons through Him.

And His face was justified, because thus His Holy Father had given to Him.

Come forth, you who have been afflicted, and receive joy.

And possess yourselves through grace, and take unto you immortal life.

And they condemned me when I stood up, me who had not been condemned.

Then they divided my spoil, though nothing was owed them.

But I endured and held my peace and was silent, that I might not be disturbed by them.

But I stood undisturbed like a solid rock, which is continuously pounded by columns of waves and endures.

And I bore their bitterness because of humility; that I might redeem my nation and instruct it.

And that I might not nullify the promises to the patriarchs, to whom I was promised for the salvation of their offspring.

Hallelujah.

Ode 32

To the blessed ones the joy is from their heart, and light from Him who dwells in them;

And the Word of truth who is self-originate,

Because He has been strengthened by the Holy Power of the Most High; and He is unshaken for ever and ever.

Hallelujah.

Ode 33

But again Grace was swift and dismissed the Corruptor, and descended upon him to renounce him.

And he caused utter destruction before him, and corrupted all his work.

And he stood on the peak of a summit and cried aloud from one end of the earth to the other.

Then he drew to him all those who obeyed him, for he did not appear as the Evil One.

However, the perfect Virgin stood, who was preaching and summoning and saying:

O you sons of men, return, and you their daughters, come.

And leave the ways of that Corruptor, and approach me.

And I will enter into you, and bring you forth from destruction, and make you wise in the ways of truth.

Be not corrupted nor perish.

Obey me and be saved, for I am proclaiming unto you the grace of God.

And through me you will be saved and become blessed. I am your judge;

And they who have put me on shall not be falsely accused, but they shall possess incorruption in the new world.

My elect ones have walked with me, and my ways I will make known to them who seek me; and I will promise them my name.

Hallelujah.

Ode 34

There is no hard way where there is a simple heart, nor barrier for upright thoughts,
Nor whirlwind in the depth of the enlightened thought.

Where one is surrounded on every side by pleasing country, there is nothing divided in him.

The likeness of that which is below is that which is above.

For everything is from above, and from below there is nothing, but it is believed to be by those in whom there is no understanding.

Grace has been revealed for your salvation. Believe and live and be saved.

Hallelujah.

Ode 35

The gentle showers of the Lord overshadowed me with serenity, and they caused a cloud of peace to rise over my head;

That it might guard me at all times. And it became salvation to me.

Everyone was disturbed and afraid, and there came from them smoke and judgment.

But I was tranquil in the Lord's legion; more than shade was He to me, and more than foundation.

And I was carried like a child by its mother; and He gave me milk, the dew of the Lord.

And I was enriched by His favor, and rested in His perfection.

And I spread out my hands in the ascent of myself, and I directed myself towards the Most High, and I was redeemed towards Him.

Hallelujah.

Ode 36

I rested on the Spirit of the Lord, and She lifted me up to heaven;

And caused me to stand on my feet in the Lord's high place, before His perfection and His glory, where I continued glorifying Him by the composition of His Odes.

The Spirit brought me forth before the Lord's face, and because I was the Son of Man, I was named the Light, the Son of God;

Because I was the most glorified among the glorious ones, and the greatest among the great ones.

For according to the greatness of the Most High, so She made me; and according to His newness He renewed me.

And He anointed me with His perfection; and I became one of those who are near Him.

And my mouth was opened like a cloud of dew, and my heart gushed forth like a gusher of righteousness.

And my approach was in peace, and I was established in the Spirit of Providence.

Hallelujah.

Ode 37

I stretched out my hands towards the Lord, and towards the Most High I raised my voice.

And I spoke with the lips of my heart, and He heard me when my voice reached Him.

His Word came towards me, in order to give me the fruits of my labors;
And gave me rest by the grace of the Lord.
Hallelujah.

Ode 38

I went up into the light of Truth as into a chariot, and the Truth led me and caused me to come.
And caused me to pass over chasms and gulfs, and saved me from cliffs and valleys.
And became for me a haven of salvation, and set me on the place of immortal life.
And He went with me and caused me to rest and did not allow me to err; because He was and is the Truth.
And there was no danger for me because I constantly walked with Him; and I did not err in anything because I obeyed Him.
For Error fled from Him, and never met Him.
But Truth was proceeding on the upright way, and whatever I did not understand He exhibited to me:
All the poisons of error, and pains of death which are considered sweetness.
And the corrupting of the Corruptor, I saw when the bride who was corrupting was adorned, and the bridegroom who corrupts and is corrupted.
And I asked the Truth, Who are these? And He said to me: This is the Deceiver and the Error.
And they imitate the Beloved and His Bride, and they cause the world to err and corrupt it.
And they invite many to the wedding feast, and allow them to drink the wine of their intoxication;
So they cause them to vomit up their wisdom and their knowledge, and prepare for them mindlessness.
Then they abandon them; and so they stumble about like mad and corrupted men.
Since there is no understanding in them, neither do they seek it.
But I have been made wise so as not to fall into the hands of the Deceivers, and I myself rejoiced because the Truth had gone with me.

For I was established and lived and was redeemed, and my foundations were laid on account of the Lord's hand; because He has planted me.

For He set the root, and watered it and endowed it and blessed it, and its fruits will be forever.
It penetrated deeply and sprang up and spread out, and it was full and was enlarged.
And the Lord alone was glorified, in His planting and in His cultivation;
In His care and in the blessing of His lips, in the beautiful planting of His right hand;
And in the attainment of His planting, and in the understanding of His mind.

Hallelujah.

Ode 39

Raging rivers are the power of the Lord; they send headlong those who despise Him.
And entangle their paths, and destroy their crossings.
And snatch their bodies, and corrupt their natures.
For they are more swift than lightnings, even more rapid.

But those who cross them in faith shall not be disturbed.
And those who walk on them faultlessly shall not be shaken.
Because the sign on them is the Lord, and the sign is the Way for those who cross in the name of the Lord.
Therefore, put on the name of the Most High and know Him, and you shall cross without danger; because rivers shall be obedient to you.
The Lord has bridged them by His Word, and He walked and crossed them on foot.
And His footsteps stand firm upon the waters, and were not destroyed; but they are like a beam of wood that is constructed on truth.
On this side and on that the waves were lifted up, but the footsteps of our Lord Messiah stand firm.
And they are neither blotted out, nor destroyed.
And the Way has been appointed for those who cross over after Him, and for those who adhere to the path of His faith; and who adore His name.
Hallelujah.

Ode 40

As honey drips from the honeycomb of bees, and milk flows from the woman who loves her children, so also is my hope upon You, O my God.
As a fountain gushes forth its water, so my heart gushes forth the praise of the Lord, and my lips bring forth praise to Him.
And my tongue becomes sweet by His anthems, and my members are anointed by His odes.
My face rejoices in His exultation, and my spirit exults in His love, and my nature shines in Him.
And he who is afraid shall trust in Him, and redemption shall be assured in Him.
And His possessions are immortal life, and those who receive it are incorruptible.
Hallelujah.

Ode 41

Let all the Lord's babes praise Him, and let us receive the truth of His faith.
And His children shall be acknowledged by Him, therefore let us sing by His love.
We live in the Lord by His grace, and life we receive by His Messiah.
For a great day has shined upon us, and wonderful is He who has given to us of His glory.
Let us, therefore, all of us agree in the name of the Lord, and let us honor Him in His goodness.
And let our faces shine in His light, and let our hearts meditate in His love, by night and by day.
Let us exult with the exultation of the Lord.
All those who see me will be amazed, because I am from another race.
For the Father of Truth remembered me; he who possessed me from the beginning.
For His riches begat me, and the thought of His heart.
And His Word is with us in all our way, the Savior who gives life and does not reject ourselves.
The Man who humbled Himself, but was exalted because of His own righteousness.

The Son of the Most High appeared in the perfection of His Father.
And light dawned from the Word that was before time in Him.
The Messiah in truth is one. And He was known before the foundations of the world, that He might give life to persons for ever by the truth of His name.
A new chant is for the Lord from them that love Him.
Hallelujah.

Ode 42

I extended my hands and approached my Lord, for the expansion of my hands is His sign.
And my extension is the upright cross, that was lifted up on the way of the Righteous One.
And I became useless to those who knew me not, because I shall hide myself from those who possessed me not.
And I will be with those who love me.
All my persecutors have died, and they sought me, they who declared against me, because I am living.
Then I arose and am with them, and will speak by their mouths.
For they have rejected those who persecute them; and I threw over them the yoke of my love.
Like the arm of the bridegroom over the bride, so is my yoke over those who know me.
And as the bridal chamber is spread out by the bridal pair's home, so is my love by those who believe in me.
I was not rejected although I was considered to be so, and I did not perish although they thought it of me.
Sheol saw me and was shattered, and Death ejected me and many with me.
I have been vinegar and bitterness to it, and I went down with it as far as its depth.
Then the feet and the head it released, because it was not able to endure my face.
And I made a congregation of living among his dead; and I spoke with them by living lips; in order that my word may not be unprofitable.
And those who had died ran towards me; and they cried out and said, Son of God, have pity on us.
And deal with us according to Your kindness, and bring us out from the bonds of darkness.
And open for us the door by which we may come out to You; for we perceive that our death does not touch You.
May we also be saved with You, because You are our Savior.
Then I heard their voice, and placed their faith in my heart.
And I placed my name upon their head, because they are free and they are mine.
Hallelujah.
And a second, more poetic translation of several of the Odes:

The Odes of Solomon

Ode I

The Lord is on my head like a crown and I shall not be without him.

The Crown of truth was woven for me, and caused your branches to blossom in me.

The Crown is not dry and sterile.

You live
and blossomed on my head.

Your fruits are full and perfect and filled with salvation.

Ode III

I Clothe his limbs, his own limbs and hang from them.
He loves me.

How would I know how to love the Lord
if he did not love me?
And who can tell us about love?
Only one who is loved.

I love the beloved and my soul loves him and I am where he reposes, and will be no stranger to him,

because he is not petty, my high merciful Lord.

I have gone to join him for the lover has found his beloved.

Whoever joins the Immortal becomes Immortal.
Whoever delights in the living one is living.

This is the spirit of the Lord.
It does not lie, it teaches us his ways.

Be wise,
Be understanding and your eyes open.

Ode VI

As the hand moves over the harp and the strings speak, so the Spirit of the Lord speaks in my members and I speak by his love.

For he destroys what is foreign and bitter.

So he was from the beginning and will be to the end.
Nothing will be his adversary
The Lord multiplies his knowledge and was zealous to make us know what he gives us through his grace.

He gave us praise for his name and our Spirits praise his Holy Spirit.

A stream went forth and became a long and broad river.
It flooded and broke and carried away the temple.

Ordinary men could not stop it,
nor could those whose art is to halt the waters,
and it spread over the face of the whole earth,
filling everything,
And the thirsty of the earth drank and their thirst was quenched.

The drink came from the highest one.
Blessed are the Ministers of that drink, those who guard his water.

They assuage dry lips
They raise up those who have fainted.

Souls that were about to depart,
they have drawn back from death.

and limbs that had become crooked they made straight.

They gave strength to our feebleness and light to our eyes.

Everyone knew them in the Lord, and by the water they lived forever.

Ode VII

As anger moves over evil so joy moves over the beloved and floods us with fruits.

My joy is the Lord and I move towards him
,The Way is excellent.

My helper is the Lord who in his candor lets me know him thoroughly.
His kindness has humbled his magnitude.

He became like me so I could receive him,
He thought like me so I could become him and I did not tremble when I saw him, for he was gracious to me.

He took on my nature so I could learn from him, took on my form so I would not turn away.

The father of knowledge, is the word of knowledge.

He who gave birth to Wisdom, is wiser than his works.

Ode XI

My heart was cloven and there appeared a flower, and grace sprang up and fruit from the Lord, for the highest one split me with his holy spirit, exposed my love for him and filled me with his love.

His splitting of my heart was my salvation and I followed the way of his peace, the way of truth.

From the beginning to the end
I received his knowledge.

and sat on the rock of truth
where he placed me.

Speaking waters came near my lip from the vast fountain of the Lord, and I drank and was drunk with the living water that never dies, and my drunkenness gave me knowledge.

I threw off vanity, turned to my God
and his bounty made me rich.

I threw off the madness of the earth,
I stripped it from me and cast it away, and the Lord renewed me in his raiment and held me in his light.

From above he gave me uncorrupt ease and I was like land deep and happy in its orchards, and the Lord was sun on the face of the land.

My eyes were clear,
dew was on my face.

and my nostrils enjoyed the aroma of the Lord.

He took me to Paradise where I knew Joy and worshipped his glory.

Blessed are they planted in your land,
in Paradise,
who grow in the growth of your trees and change from gloom to light.

Your Servants are lovely.
They do good,
they abjure evil and turn to your pleasantness.

They are free of the bitterness of trees ancient in their land.

You are everywhere,
always before your servants.

There is much space in Paradise
but no wasteland,
All is fruit.

Glory, Lord, and the eternal delight of Paradise.

Ode XIV

As the eyes of a son to his father, so my eyes turn to you, O Lord, at all times,
for with you are my consolation and joy.

Do not turn your mercy from me, O Lord,
nor your kindness,
but stretch out your right hand,
and be my guide to the end.

Care for me,
save me from evil.

and let your gentleness and love be with me.

Teach me to sing of truth,
that I may engender fruit in you.

Open the harp of your holy spirit so I may praise you, Lord, with all its notes.

From your sea of mercy,
help me,
help me in my hour of need.

Ode XV

As the sun is joy for those who seek daybreak, so my joy is the Lord.

He is my sun and his rays have lifted me up and chased all darkness from my face.

In him I have acquired eyes and seen his sacred day.

I have acquired ears and heard his truth.

I have acquired knowledge and been made happy in him.

I left the way of error and went to him and was saved.

According to his bounty he gave me, according to his beauty he made me.

I found purity through his name,
I shed corruption through his grace.

Death has died before my countenance, hell is abolished by my word.

A deathless life appears in the land of the Lord, is known to those with faith,
and given those with faith, uncessantly.

Ode XVII

I was crowned by God,
by a crown alive.

and my Lord justified me.
He became my certain salvation.

I was freed from myself and uncondemned.
The chains fell from my wrists.

I took on the face and ways of a new person, walked in him and was redeemed.

The thought of truth drove me.

I walked to it and did not wander off.

Those who saw me were amazed, supposing me to be a strange person.

He who knew me and brought me up is the summit of perfection.

He glorified me by kindness and lifted my thought to truth and showed me his way.

I opened closed doors,

shattered bars of iron.
My own shackles melted.

Nothing appeared closed because I was the door to everything.

I freed slaves,
left no man in bonds,

I spread my knowledge and love and sowed my fruits in hearts and transformed them.

I blessed them. They lived.

I gathered them and saved them.

They became the limbs of my body and I was their head.

Glory to you, our head, Our Lord Messiah.

Ode XIX

A cup of milk I was offered and I drank its sweetness as the delight of the Lord.

The Son is the cup and he who was milked is the Father, and he who milked him is the Holy Ghost.

His breasts were full and his milk should not drip out wastefully.

The Holy Ghost opened the Fathers raiment and mingled the milk from the Father`s two breasts.

and gave that mingling to the world, which was unknowing.
Those who drink it are near his right hand.

The Spirit opened the Virgin`s womb and she received the milk.

The Virgin became a mother of great mercy;
she labored, but not in pain, and bore a son.
No midwife came.

She bore him as if she were a man, openly, with dignity, with kindness.
She loved him, and swaddled him, and revealed his majesty.

Ode XXI

I raised my arms high to the grace of the Lord,

for he had cast off my bonds.
My helper had lifted me to his grace and salvation.

I discarded darkness and clothed myself in Light.

My soul acquired a body
free from sorrow,
affliction or pain.

The thought of the Lord restored me.
I fed on his incorruptible fellowship.

And I was raised in the Light and went to him,
near him,
praising and proclaiming him.

He made my heart flood into my mouth, made it shine on my lips.

On my face the exultation of the Lord increased, and his praise.

Ode XXIV

The dove flew over the head of the Messiah who was her head, and she sang over him
and her voice was heard.

The inhabitants were afraid and travelers shuddered.

Birds took flight and all creeping things died in their holes.

Abysses opened and closed.
They were seeking God like women in labor.

They had no food.
None belonged to them.

The abysses sank and were sealed by the Lord and people perished in their own thought, ancient and new.

Everyone was imperfect and died.
They could say nothing.

The Lord destroyed the imagination of all who did not have his truth.

They were weak in wisdom and were rejected. They lacked his truth.

The Lord disclosed his way,
and spread his grace in alien lands.

Those who understood know holiness.

Archive | Library | Bookstore | Index | Web Lectures | Ecclesia Gnostica | Gnostic Society

THE GREEK APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH

OR

3 BARUCH

Prologue.

1 A narrative and revelation of Baruch, concerning those ineffable things which he saw by command of God. Bless Thou, O Lord.

2 A revelation of Baruch, who stood upon the river Gel weeping over the captivity of 3 Jerusalem, when also Abimelech was preserved by the hand of God, at the farm of Agrippa. And he was sitting thus at the beautiful gates, where the Holy of holies lay.

1. 1 Verily I Baruch was weeping in my mind and sorrowing on account of the people, and that 2 Nebuchadnezzar the king was permitted by God to destroy His city, saying: Lord, why didst Thou set on fire Thy vineyard, and lay it waste? Why didst Thou do this? And why, Lord, didst Thou not requite us with another chastisement, but didst deliver us to nations such as these, so that they 3 reproach us and say, Where is their God? And behold as I was weeping and saying such things, I saw an angel of the Lord coming and saying to me: Understand, O man, greatly beloved, and trouble not thyself so greatly concerning the salvation of Jerusalem, for thus saith the Lord God, 4 the Almighty. For He sent me before thee, to make known and to show to thee all (the things) 5, 6 of God. For thy prayer was heard before Him, and entered into the ears of the Lord God. And when he had said these things to me, I was silent. And the angel said to me: Cease to provoke 7 God, and I will show thee other mysteries, greater than these. And I Baruch said, As the Lord God liveth, if thou wilt show me, and I hear a word of thine, I will not continue to speak any longer. 8 God shall add to my judgement in the day of judgement, if I speak hereafter. And the angel of the powers said to me, Come, and I will show thee the mysteries of God.

The First Heaven.

2 1 And he took me and led me where the firmament has been set fast, and where there was a river which no one can cross, nor any strange breeze of all those which God created. And he took me and led me to the first heaven, and showed me a door of great size. And he said to me, Let us enter 3 through it, and we entered as though borne on wings, a distance of about thirty days' journey. And he showed me within the heaven a plain ; and there were men dwelling thereon, with the faces of 4 oxen, and the horns of stags and the feet of goats, and the haunches of lambs. And I Baruch asked the angel, Make known to me, I pray thee, what is the thickness of the heaven in which we journeyed, 5 or what is its extent, or what is the plain, in order that I may also tell the sons of men? And the angel whose name is Phamael said to me: This door which thou seest is the door of heaven, and as great as is the distance from earth to heaven, so great also is its thickness; and again as great as is the distance (from North to South, so great) is the length of the plain which thou didst see. And again the angel of the powers said to me, Come, and I will show thee greater mysteries. But 6, 7 I said, I pray thee show me what are these men. And he said to me, These are they who built the tower of strife against God, and the Lord banished them.

The Second Heaven.

3 1 And the angel of the Lord took me and led me to a second heaven. And he showed me there 2 also a door like the first and said, Let us enter through it. And we entered, being borne on wings 3 a distance of about sixty days' journey. And he showed me there also a plain, and it was full of 4 men, whose appearance was like that of dogs, and whose feet were like those of stags. And I asked 5 the angel: I pray thee, Lord, say to me who are these. And he said, These are they who gave counsel to build the tower, for they whom thou seest drove forth multitudes of both men and women, to make bricks; among whom, a woman making bricks was not allowed to be released in the hour of child-birth, but brought forth while she was making bricks, and carried her child in her apron, and 6 continued to make bricks. And the Lord appeared to them and confused their speech, when they 7 had built the tower to the height of four hundred and sixty-three cubits. And they took a gimlet, and sought to pierce the heaven, saying, Let us see (whether) the heaven is made of clay, or of 8 brass, or of iron. When God saw this He did not permit them, but smote them with blindness and confusion of speech, and rendered them as thou seest.

The Third Heaven.

4 1 And I Baruch said, Behold, Lord, Thou didst show me great and wonderful things; and now 2 show me all things for the sake of the Lord. And the angel said to me, Come, let us proceed. (And I proceeded) with the angel from that place about one hundred and eighty-five days' 3 journey. And he showed me a plain and a serpent, which appeared to be two hundred plethra in length. 4 And he showed me Hades, and its appearance was dark and abominable. And I said, 5 Who is this dragon, and who is this monster around him? And the angel said, The dragon is he 6 who eats the bodies of those who spend their life wickedly, and he is nourished by them. And this is Hades, which itself also closely resembles him, in that it also drinks about a cubit from 7 the sea, which does not sink at all. Baruch said, And how (does this happen)? And the angel said, Hearken, the Lord God made three hundred and sixty rivers, of which the chief of 8 all are Alphias, Abyrus, and the Gericus; and because of these the sea does not sink. And I said, I pray thee show me which is the tree which led Adam astray. And the angel said to me, It is the vine, which the angel Sammael planted, whereat the Lord God was angry, and He cursed him and his plant, while also on this account He did not permit Adam to touch it, and therefore 9 the devil being envious deceived him through his vine. [And I Baruch said, Since also the vine has been the cause of such great evil, and is under judgment of the curse of God, and was the 10 destruction of the first created, how is it now so useful? And the angel said, Thou askest aright. When God caused the deluge upon earth, and destroyed all flesh, and four hundred and nine thousand giants, and the water rose fifteen cubits above the highest mountains, then the water entered into paradise and destroyed every flower; but it removed wholly without the bounds the shoot 11 of the vine and cast it outside. And when the earth appeared out of the water, and Noah came out 12 of the ark, he began to plant of the plants which he found. But he found also the shoot of the vine; and he took it, and was reasoning in himself, What then is it? And I came and spake to 13 him the things concerning it. And he said, Shall I plant it, or what shall I do? Since Adam was destroyed because of it, let me not also meet with the anger of God because of it. And saying 14 these things he prayed that God would reveal to him what he should do concerning it. And when he had completed the prayer which lasted forty days, and having besought many things and wept, 15 he said: Lord, I entreat thee to reveal to me what I shall do concerning this plant. But God sent his angel Sarasael, and said to him, Arise, Noah, and plant the shoot of the vine, for thus saith the Lord : Its bitterness shall be changed into sweetness, and its curse shall become a blessing, and that which is produced from it shall become the blood of God; and as through it the human race obtained condemnation, so again through Jesus Christ the Immanuel will they receive in Him the 16 upward calling, and the entry into paradise]. Know therefore, O Baruch, that as Adam through this very tree obtained condemnation, and was divested of the glory of God, so also the men who now drink insatiably the wine which is begotten of it, transgress worse than Adam, and are far from the 17 glory of God, and are surrendering themselves to the eternal fire. For (no) good comes through it. For those who drink it to surfeit do these things: neither does a brother pity his brother, nor a father his son, nor children their parents, but from the drinking of wine come all evils, such as murders, adulteries, fornications, perjuries, thefts, and such like. And nothing good is established by it.

5 1 And I Baruch said to the angel, 2 Let me ask thee one thing, Lord. Since thou didst say to me 3 that the dragon drinks one cubit out of the sea, say to me also, how great is his belly? And the angel said, His belly is Hades; and as far as a plummet is thrown (by) three hundred men, so great is his belly. Come, then, that I may show thee also greater works than these.

6 1 And he took me and led me where the sun goes forth; 2 and he showed me a chariot and four, under which burnt a fire, and in the chariot was sitting a man, wearing a crown of fire, (and) the chariot (was) drawn by forty angels. And behold a bird circling before the sun, about nine 3 cubits away. And I said to the angel, What is this bird? And he said to me, This is the 4, 5 guardian of the earth. And I said, Lord, how is he the guardian of the earth? Teach me. And the angel said to me, This bird flies alongside of the sun, and expanding his wings receives its fiery 6 rays. For if he were not receiving them, the human race would not be preserved, nor any other 7 living creature. But God appointed this bird thereto. And he expanded his wings, and I saw on his right wing very large letters, as large as the space of a threshing-floor, the size of about four 8 thousand modii; and the letters were of gold. And the angel said to me, Read them. And I read 9 and they ran thus: Neither earth nor heaven bring me forth, but wings of fire bring me forth. And I said, Lord, what is this bird, and what is his name? And the angel said to me, His name is called 11 Phoenix. (And I said), And what does he eat? And he said to me, The manna of heaven and 12 the dew of earth. And I said, Does the bird excrete? And he said to me, He excretes a worm, and the excrement of the worm is cinnamon, which kings and princes use. But wait and thou shalt 13 see the glory of God. And while he was conversing with me, there was as a thunder-clap, and the place was shaken on which we were standing. And I asked the angel, My Lord, what is this sound? And the angel said to me, Even now the angels are opening the three hundred and sixty-five gates 14 of heaven, and the light is being separated from the darkness. And a voice came which said, Light 15 giver, give to the world radiance. And when I heard the noise of the bird, I said, Lord, what is this 16 noise? And he said, This is the bird who awakens from slumber the cocks upon earth. For as men do through the mouth, so also does the cock signify to those in the world, in his own speech. For the sun is made ready by the angels, and the cock crows.

7 1 And I said, And where does the sun begin its labors, after the cock crows? 2 And the angel said to me, Listen, Baruch: All things whatsoever I showed thee are in the first and second heaven, and in the third heaven the sun passes through and gives light to the world. But wait, and thou 3 shalt see the glory of God. And while I was conversing with him, I saw the bird, and he appeared 4 in front, and grew less and less, and at length returned to his full size. And behind him I saw the shining sun, and the angels which draw it, and a crown upon its head, the sight of which we were 5 not able to gaze Upon, and behold. And as soon as the sun shone, the Phoenix also stretched out his wings. But I, when I beheld such great glory, was brought low with great fear, and I fled and 6 hid in the wings of the angel. And the angel said to me, Fear not, Baruch, but wait and thou shalt also see their setting.

8 1 And he took me and led me towards the west; and when the time of the, setting came, I saw again the bird coming before it, and as soon as it came I saw the angels, and they lifted the crown 2, 3 from its head. But the bird stood exhausted and with wings contracted. And beholding these things, I said, Lord, wherefore did they lift the crown from the head of the sun, and wherefore is 4 the bird so exhausted? And the angel said to me, The crown of the sun, when it has run through the day-four angels take it, and bear it up to heaven, and renew it, because it and its rays have been defiled upon earth; moreover it is so renewed each day. And I Baruch said, Lord, and wherefore 5 are its beams defiled upon earth? And the angel said to me, Because it beholds the lawlessness and unrighteousness of men, namely fornications, adulteries, thefts, extortions, idolatries, drunkenness, murders, strife, jealousies, evil-speakings, murmurings, whisperings, divinations, and such like, which are not well-pleasing to God. On account of these things is it defiled, and therefore is it renewed. 6 But thou askest concerning the bird, how it is exhausted. Because by restraining the rays of the sun through the fire and burning heat of the whole day, it is exhausted thereby. For, as we said before, unless his wings were screening the rays of the sun, no living creature would be preserved.

9 1 And they having retired, the night also fell, and at the same time came the chariot of the moon, along with the stars. 2 And I Baruch said, Lord, show me it also, I beseech of thee, how 3 it goes forth, where it departs, and in what form it moves along. And the angel said, Wait' and thou shalt see it also shortly. And on the morrow I also saw it in the form of a woman, and sitting on a wheeled chariot. And there were before it oxen and lambs in the chariot, and a multitude of 4 angels in like manner. And I said, Lord, what are the oxen and the lambs? And he said to me, 5 They also are angels. And again I asked, Why is it that it at one time increases, but at another 6 time decreases? And (he said to me), Listen, 0 Baruch: This which thou seest had been written 7 by God beautiful as no other. And at the transgression of the first Adam, it was near to Sammael when he took the serpent as a garment. And it did not hide itself but increased, and God was 8 angry with it, and afflicted it, and shortened its days. And I said, And how does it not also shine always, but only in the night? And the angel said, Listen: as in the presence of a king, the courtiers cannot speak freely, so the moon and the stars cannot shine in the presence of the sun; for the stars are always suspended, but they are screened by the sun, and the moon, although it is uninjured, is consumed by the heat of the sun.

The Fourth Heaven.

10 1 And when I had learnt all these things from the archangel, he took and led me into a fourth 2 3 heaven. And I saw a monotonous plain, and in the middle of it a pool of water. And there were in it multitudes of birds of all kinds, but not like those here on earth. But I saw a crane as great as 4 great oxen; and all the birds were great beyond those in the world. And I asked the angel, What 5 is the plain, and what the pool, and what the multitudes of birds around it? And the angel said, Listen, Baruch : The plain which contains in it the pool and other wonders is the place where the 6 souls of the righteous come, when they hold converse, living together in choirs. But the water is 7 that which the clouds receive, and rain upon the earth, and the fruits increase. And I said again to the angel of the Lord, But (what) are these birds? And he said to me, They are those which 8 continually sing praise to the Lord. And I said, Lord, and how do men say that the water which 9 descends in rain is from the sea? And the angel said, The water which descends in rain-this also is from the sea, and from the waters upon earth; but that which stimulates the fruits is (only) from 10 the latter source. Know therefore henceforth that from this source is what is called the dew of heaven.

The Fifth Heaven.

11 1 And the angel took me and led me thence to a fifth heaven. And the gate was closed. And I said, Lord, is not this gate-way open that we may enter? And the angel said to me, We cannot enter until Michael comes, who holds the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven; but wait and thou shalt see 3 the glory of God. And there was a great sound, as thunder. And I said, Lord, what is this sound? 4 And he said to me, Even now Michael, the commander of the angels, comes down to receive the 5 prayers of men. And behold a voice came, Let the gates be opened. And they opened them, and 6 there was a roar as of thunder. And Michael came, and the angel who was with me came face to 7 face with him and said, Hail, my commander, and that of all our order. And the commander Michael said, Hail thou also, our brother, and the interpreter of the revelations to those who pass through life 8 virtuously. And having saluted one another thus, they stood still. And I saw the commander Michael said, Hail thou also, our brother, and the interpreter of the revelations to those who pass through life 8 virtuously. And having saluted one another thus, they stood still. And I saw the commander Michael, holding an exceedingly great vessel; its depth was as great as the distance from heaven to 9 earth, and its breadth as great as the distance from north to south. And I said, Lord, what is that which Michael the archangel is holding? And he said to me, This is where the merits of the righteous enter, and such good works as they do, which are escorted before the heavenly God.

12 1, And as I was conversing with them, behold angels came bearing baskets full of flowers. And 2 they gave them to Michael. And I asked the angel, Lord, who are these, and what are the things 3 brought hither from beside them? And he said to me, These are angels (who) are over the 4, 5 righteous. And the archangel took the baskets, and cast them into the vessel. And the angel 6 said to me, These flowers are the merits of the righteous. And I saw other angels bearing baskets which were (neither) empty-nor full. And they began to lament, and did not venture to draw near, 7 because they had not the prizes complete. And Michael cried and said, Come hither, also, ye 8 angels, bring what ye have brought. And Michael was exceedingly grieved, and the angel who was with me, because they did not fill the vessel.

13 1 And then came in like manner other angels weeping and bewailing, and saying with fear, Behold how we are overclouded, O Lord, for we were delivered to evil men, and we wish to depart from 2 them. And Michael said, Ye cannot depart from them, in order that the enemy may not prevail to 3 the end; but say to me what ye ask. And they said, We pray thee, Michael our commander, transfer us from them, for we cannot abide with wicked and foolish men, for there is nothing good 4 in them, but every kind of unrighteousness and greed. For we do not behold them entering [into Church at all, nor among spiritual fathers, nor] into any good work. But where there is murder, there also are they in the midst, and where are fornications, adulteries, thefts, slanders, perjuries, jealousies, drunkenness, strife, envy, murmurings, whispering, idolatry, divination, and such like, 5 then are they workers of such works, and of others worse. Wherefore we entreat that we may depart from them. And Michael said to the angels, Wait till I learn from the Lord what shall come to pass.

14 1 And in that very hour Michael departed, and the doors were closed. And there was a sound as 2 thunder. And I asked the angel, What is the sound? And he said to me, Michael is even now presenting the merits of men to God.

15 1 And in that very hour Michael descended, and the gate was opened; and he brought oil. 2 And as for the angels which brought the baskets which were full, he filled them with oil, saying, Take it away, reward our friends an hundredfold, and those who have laboriously wrought good works. 3 For those who sowed virtuously, also reap virtuously. And he said also to those bringing the half-empty baskets, Come hither ye also; take away the reward according as ye brought, and 4 deliver it to the sons of men. [Then he said also to those who brought the full and to those who brought the half-empty baskets: Go and bless our friends, and say to them that thus saith the Lord, Ye are faithful over a few things, I will set you over many things; enter into the joy of your Lord.]

16 1 And turning he said also to those who brought nothing: Thus saith the Lord, Be not sad of 2 countenance, and weep not, nor let the sons of men alone. But since they angered me in their works, go and make them envious and angry and provoked against a people that is no people, a 3 people that has no understanding. Further, besides these, send forth the caterpillar and the unwinged locust, and the mildew, and the common locust (and) hail with lightnings and anger, and 4 punish them severely with the sword and with death, and their children with demons. For they did not hearken to my voice, nor did they observe my commandments, nor do them, but were despisers of my commandments, and insolent towards the priests who proclaimed my words to them.

17 1 And while he yet spake, the door was closed, and we withdrew. 2 And the angel took me and 3 restored me to the p/ace where I was at the beginning. And having come to myself, I gave glory 4 to God, who counted me worthy of such honor. Wherefore do ye also, brethren, who obtained such a revelation, yourselves also glorify God, so that He also may glorify you, now and ever, and to all eternity. Amen.

Edited by Wesley Caspers for the Wesley Center for Applied Theology at Northwest Nazarene University

© Copyright 2000 by the Wesley Center for Applied Theology

Text may be freely used for personal or scholarly purposes or mirrored on other web sites, provided the notice below the horizontal line is left intact. Any use of this material for commercial purposes of any kind is strictly forbidden without the express permission of the Wesley Center at Northwest Nazarene University, Nampa, ID 83686. Contact webadmin@wesley.nnu.edu for permission or to report errors.

Red numbers identify chapters

Black numbers within the text refer to verses -- the first full sentence following the number.

Alexander Kulik

3 Baruch

Commentaries on Early Jewish Literature (CEJL)

Edited by Loren T. Stuckenbruck and
Pieter W. van der Horst · Hermann Lichtenberger
Doron Mendels · James R. Mueller

De Gruyter

Alexander Kulik

3 Baruch

Greek-Slavonic Apocalypse of Baruch

De Gruyter

ISBN 978-3-11-021248-8
e-ISBN 978-3-11-021249-5
ISSN 1861-6003

Library of Congress – Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Kulik, Alexander.

3 Baruch : Greek-Slavonic Apocalypse of Baruch / Alexander Kulik.

p. cm. -- (Commentaries on early Jewish literature)

title: Three Baruch

Includes an English translation of the Greek Apocalypse of Baruch, presenting a synopsis of the Greek and Slavonic versions.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 978-3-11-021248-8 (23 × 15,5 cm : alk. paper) 1. Greek Apocalypse of Baruch -- Criticism, interpretation, etc. I. Greek Apocalypse of Baruch. English.

II. Title. III. Title: Three Baruch.

BS1830.B46K85 2010

229°.5066--dc22

2010002481

Bibliographic information published by the Deutsche Nationalbibliothek

The Deutsche Nationalbibliothek lists this publication in the Deutsche Nationalbibliografie; detailed bibliographic data are available in the Internet at <http://dnb.d-nb.de>.

© 2010 Walter de Gruyter GmbH & Co. KG, Berlin/New York

Typesetting: Dörlemann Satz GmbH & Co. KG, Lemförde

Printing and binding: Hubert & Co GmbH & Co. KG, Göttingen

⊗ Printed on acid-free paper

Printed in Germany

www.degruyter.com

*For my father and mother,
Eduard Kulik and Maria Neverodsky*

Blessed is he who has acquired knowledge:
He is troubled neither by his people's calamity, nor by an inclination to unjust action.
He observes the ageless cosmos of immortal nature,
how it has been formed, in what way and manner.
The urge to shameful deeds never dwells with such people.
Euripides, Fr. 910

Virtue, unlocking heaven to those who deserve not to die, tries denied ways ...
Horace, Odes 3.2

... you must firmly believe
In the beginnings and in the ends. You must know Where Hell and Paradise lie in wait for us.
You are given a fearless measure
To measure all that you see.
Your sight – let it be strong and clear.
Erase accidental lines –
And you will see: the world is beautiful.
Alexander Blok, Retribution

With the farming of a verse
Make a vineyard of the curse,
Sing of human unsuccess
In a rapture of distress.
In the deserts of the heart
Let the healing fountains start,
In the prison of his days
Teach the free man how to praise.
W.H. Auden, In Memory of W. B. Yeats

Acknowledgments

I am deeply grateful to friends and colleagues whose support I enjoyed in working on this research. I want to thank James Kugel, Michael Stone, and Moshe Taube for their encouragement and advice. Reuven Kiperwasser, Serge Ruzer, Michael Schneider, and Dan Shapira read parts of the manuscript and made insightful comments. My academic assistants Sergey Minov and Michael Tuval read drafts, made valuable comments, and saw through the final stages of preparing the manuscript for publication. I am indebted to Shani Berrin-Tzoref, who not only edited my English, but also made invaluable suggestions for improving both the structure and content of the text. The reliable and diligent collaboration of my technical research assistants Elina Chechelnitsky and Denis Dorum made my part of working on this book considerably easier and more efficient. My gratitude is extended to Loren Stuckenbruck, the editor of the Commentaries to Early Jewish Literature series, without whose involvement the book could not have taken final shape. Students in my seminars on Slavonic Pseudepigrapha at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, especially Benjie Gruber, Oded Mazor, Sergey Minov, and Michael Tuval, were inspiring interlocutors, whose fresh vision led to innovative and fruitful interpretive possibilities.

My special gratitude is due to my family: my parents, to whom I dedicate this book, and to Lara, Shlomit, Joseph, and Hanna for their long-enduring patience and help.

I would also like to address my reader and humbly ask for forgiveness for any mistakes, omissions or overly bold assumptions that may still be encountered in the text. The responsibility for them remains mine alone. I made a sincere effort to understand the book, and did my best to introduce innovations without at the same time impinging on the usefulness of my study as a handy and lucid reference tool.

The research was generously supported by the Israeli Science Foundation (grant no. 450/07) and by the Hebrew University Orion Center for the Study of the Dead Sea Scrolls and Associated Literature.

Jerusalem
May 2009

Alexander Kulik

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements	VII
----------------------------	-----

INTRODUCTION

I. Purposes and Methods	3
II. Manuscript evidence	7
III. Scholarship	9
IV. Original Language	11
V. Date	12
VI. Provenance	13
VII. Content	16
1. Extant Content	16
2. Reconstructed Content	19
2.1. Greek Version (G)	20
2.1.1. Christian Interpolations	20
2.1.2. Biblical Citations and Allusions	21
2.1.3. Explanatory Expansions	22
2.1.4. Other Textual Phenomena	23
2.2. Slavonic Version (S) and Its Greek Vorlage (R ^S)	23
2.3. Common Proto-text of G and S (R ^{GS})	24
2.3.1. R ^{GS} as Witnessed by G	24
2.3.2. R ^{GS} as Witnessed by S	25
2.4. Urtext (R ^U)	26
3. Implied Content	27
VIII. Message	34
1. Consolation	34
2. Retribution and Afterlife	34
3. Cosmology	36
3.1. Cosmographic Escapism	36
3.2. Pious Curiosity	36
IX. Method	38
1. Inherited Wisdom	39
1.1. Mythology	39

1.2.	Hidden Exegesis	39
1.3.	Apocalyptic Tradition	41
2.	Cosmos Revealed	45
3.	Rationalized Mythology	46
3.1.	Harmonized Traditions	46
3.2.	Tamed Myths	48
4.	Riddles and Subtexts	49
X.	Worldview	51
1.	God	51
2.	Angels	52
3.	Demons	53
4.	Physical World	54
4.1.	Earth	54
4.2.	Waters	55
4.3.	Heaven	55
5.	History	56
6.	Moral	56
7.	Retribution	57
8.	Afterlife	57
9.	Numeric Symbolism	58
XI.	General Conclusions	60
XII.	Bibliography	60

TRANSLATION AND COMMENTARY

A.	Title	89
B.	Prologue (1)	103
C.	Vision	121
I.	Builders or Abode of Demons	121
	Builders: First Account (2:1–3)	121
	Excursus : Dimensions of Heaven (2:4–7)	132
	Builders: Second Account (3:1–5a)	137
	Builders Continued (3:5b–8)	151
II.	Beasts or Abode of Wicked	155
	Beasts: Serpent and Hades (4:1–5G; 4:1–3aS)	155
	Excursus : Cosmic Hydrology (4:6–7G; 4:3b–5S)	180
	Excursus : Tree of Knowledge (4:8–17S; 4:6–17S)	187
	Beasts Continued: Dimensions of Hades (5)	223
III.	Lights or Interim Region	227
	Sun, Sun Bird and Sun Protection (6:1–12)	227

Sunrise and Predawn Call (6:13–16)	251
Sun's Route (7)	264
Sunset and Earthly Wickedness (8)	270
Moon and Heavenly Disobedience (9)	275
IV. Birds or Abode of Just (10)	283
Lake of Birds (10:1–7)	283
Excursus : Cosmic Hydrology Continued (10:8–9)	298
V. Angelic Service or Retribution Mechanism	304
Where Prayers Go (11)	304
Flower Offering: Righteous (12:1–5)	343
Flower Offering: Unrighteous (12:6–13:5)	355
Behind the Door (14)	360
Oil Recompense for Righteous (15:1–2)	365
Locusts Recompense for Unrighteous (15:3–16:10)	373
D. Return (17)	386

INDICES

Index of References	391
Index of Names and Subjects	441
Index of Authors	443

INTRODUCTION

I. Purposes and Methods

Greek-Slavonic Apocalypse of Baruch (= 3 Baruch) stands out among apocalyptic writings with respect to both the nature of the composition itself and its treatment in the history of research. Despite the fact that it is one of the six “major” early Jewish apocalypses (1 Enoch, 2 Enoch, Apocalypse of Abraham, 2 Baruch, 3 Baruch, 4 Ezra), it has been relatively neglected in modern scholarship. This can be demonstrated by even a cursory glance at the index of sources in any monograph in relevant fields. Whereas citations and detailed analyses of other apocalyptic compositions abound, 3 Baruch often does not appear in these works at all. At best, it is mentioned in footnotes, and even then, it tends to appear only in lists of other sources containing a common motif. To be sure, there have been some seminal studies devoted to 3 Baruch, which have stimulated awareness of the book, and I gratefully acknowledge my debt to the authors of these works below. Nevertheless, the book has not been properly integrated into broader scholarly discussion, and in the absence of intensive and polyphonic academic discourse, even brilliant works that have appeared in recent decades cannot bridge the gap. It would seem that the reason for this situation is the fact that 3 Baruch is one of the most difficult works to comprehend and classify. This sense of obscurity functions as both cause and effect in a vicious circle of lack of understanding and lack of scholarly attention. In addition to this, there are more factors that make this apocalypse one of the most challenging early Jewish texts:

- 3 Baruch is not a typical apocalypse. The content of 3 Baruch differs significantly from that of other writings of the same genre. The book preserves syncretistic ideas and tendencies which are combined in unique ways. Its seer (or “visionary”) does not attain the experience of a theophany, which is the ultimate goal of most other seers. Furthermore, collective eschatology, the central issue of apocalyptic literature, does not find its place here. 3 Baruch is most probably a Jewish composition, but it is universal in its interests, and the vision itself (in contrast to its prologue) does not explicitly mention any specifically Jewish values, concerns, or religious practices. Its lack of interest in the future is matched by its indifference to the past of the nation; it is as loudly silent about the sacral history of Israel as it is about eschatology.

In certain cases, the very fact that the book does not fully belong to a “classical paradigm” of ancient apocalyptic literature can help shed light on the enigmas of other, more typical, compositions. As we know from numerous fields of knowledge, marginal and atypical sources frequently offer a fresh perspective that can provide answers to the most sore questions raised with regard to more “central” and influential exemplars.

- The worldview, the message, and the very textual structure of 3 Baruch are enigmatic in many aspects. As a result, the book has earned such descriptions as “a good example of a degenerative apocalypse ... strange sights, the account of which is grotesque rather than impressive,”¹ “naïve childishness,”² “trivial invention,”³ “amateurish.”⁴ I will try to show, however, that the incomprehensibility of 3 Baruch is due to the fact that it is filled with non-explicit data, which may have been clear to its target audience while being hidden from modern readers. It appears that this mode of communication was employed in 3 Baruch to a greater extent than in other esoteric compositions (see Implied content and Method: Riddles and subtexts below).

Implicit meanings, structural links in the text, and conceptions behind the text are partly reconstructable, though there is inevitably a range in the probability of reconstructions of implied data. In this study, some bold assumptions and juxtapositions are introduced when they are needed to make the text intelligible. Such reconstructions are offered mostly when the passage or motif under discussion would otherwise be incoherent due to internal inconsistencies or factors pertaining to inter-textual contexts. Thus, the basic methodological principle underlying this study is a commitment (1) to achieve a comprehension of initial and editorial meanings of the text at different stages of its development, as well as of its message, method, and worldview, while (2) taking into consideration a certain degree of distortion over the course of textual history and (3) defining the place and roots of these topics in Jewish lore and literary tradition, as far as they are preserved in early Jewish sources, including Jewish Hellenistic, Rabbinic, Gnostic, and Christian writings.

¹ Torrey, “Apocalypse,” 674.

² Ferrar, “Baruch,” 93.

³ Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 120.

⁴ Wright, Heaven, 168.

- 3 Baruch is interesting also for its textual history. The Slavonic translation from Greek preserved a version more authentic than the extant Greek text. The latter is also very instructive, reflecting a reception of an older version by its early readers, and in fact looks like an explanatory targum to it. Their common proto-text has also undergone meaningful editorial changes before splitting into two rescensions. In the case of 3 Baruch these changes may be traced and bring us closer to the original form of the book. The book is obviously of a composite nature, and in this case we need not rely upon such dubious criteria as types of outlook or style in order to identify the stratification of layers, since the hands of the redactors can be detected by relatively clear basic philological considerations.

Formally, the present study consists of the introduction, translation, notes, and commentaries.

The introduction classifies and summarizes the observations and argumentations given in detail in the commentary. Therefore, the introduction contains only the references to the text of 3 Baruch, while all the argumentation, as well as references to primary sources and research literature may be found in the commentaries to the relevant verses.

The translation presents a synopsis of the Greek and Slavonic versions. The latter follows the synthetic text based mainly on ms L. In the cases of polysemantic forms, I have tried to choose the meanings common for both rescensions when they seemed likely to have derived from the common source, in contrast to other cases, when the divergence seemed more likely to have originated from discrepancies in their Vorlagen, or to be the result of translation technique or errors in the Slavonic version.

In the notes I have tried to confine my remarks to purely textual issues. However, when issues of content have had an impact upon textual choices, these points are raised in the notes as well. Conversely, where textual problems have had an influential role in interpretation, there is expansion of the textual discussion in the commentary. There are more notes to the Slavonic version, due to its more complicated textual history and the large number of copies that have survived from different periods and regions, in contrast to the two Greek manuscripts which contain insignificant, mostly orthographic, discrepancies.

The main body of the research is presented in the form of a detailed commentary which follows the order of the text. The fragmented nature of discussion prescribed by the genre of commentary is partly compensated by multiple cross-references to the issues common for different sections of the text. Furthermore, many key issues that arise in several passages and demand an integrative analysis are treated separately in the introductory sections of the commentaries to specific chapters.⁵

As a rule, ancient sources cited in the commentary were either newly translated or their translations were significantly revised.

⁵ In fact, there are three levels of generalization in this work: the introductory commentaries to chapters are summarized in the general introduction, which in turn is briefly summed up in the General conclusions below.

II. Manuscript Evidence

3 Baruch is preserved through two Greek and at least twelve South- and East-Slavic manuscripts (not including later reworkings). The Greek texts are found in the British Museum manuscript Add. 10.073 dated to the 15th–16th centuries (hereafter – ms A), and in the Monastery of the Hagia (the island of Andros), manuscript no. 46.39, dated to the beginning of the 15th century (ms B). There are no significant discrepancies between the two, and they even share numerous misreadings, grammatical errors and orthographic deviations. Although Picard regarded ms B as the earlier version, it is not a source for ms A (as is clear from the obvious parablepsis in 6:16, absent in ms A).⁶

The textual history of the Slavonic rescension was elaborated upon in the critical edition by Gaylord.⁷ Among the Slavonic manuscripts, the one closest to the Greek version is the 13th century South-Slavic St. Petersburg, RNB, Greč 70 (ms L). Together with two East-Slavic abridged copies – Moscow, RGB, f. 272, Syn. 363 of the 15th–16th centuries (ms T) and Moscow, GIM, Barsov (signature unknown) of the 17th–18th centuries (ms B) – it constitutes the family α of the Slavonic rescension. Both T and B at times witness readings closer to the Greek version than ms L.

In the family β Gaylord distinguishes two groups of South-Slavic manuscripts:

- (1) β^1 , comprised of Belgrade, NB, 651 of the 13th–14th centuries (ms S), Zagreb, KJAZU III.a.20 [Šibenički Zbornik] of the 16th century (ms N), the Glagolitic Zagreb, NSB, R4001 [Petrarov Sbornik] of 1468 (ms Z); and
- (2) β^2 with Sofia, NBKM, 433 [Panagjurski Sbornik] of the 16th century (ms P), Vienna, ÜNB, Slav. 149 of the 16th century (ms V), Sofia, NBKM, 326 (Adžarskij Sbornik) of the 16th century (ms I), Goljamo Belovo, Bulgaria of the 17th–18th centuries (ms D).

⁶ Picard, “Apocalypsis.”

⁷ Gaylord, Slavonic, xxi–xxvii.

There are also two copies of which only fragments are preserved: Belgrade, NB, 828 of 1409 (ms G) and Kiev, CBAN, Sp. 168/III of the 18th century (ms K).

Although the family β is in general the result of inner-Slavic redaction (including expansions, omissions and revisions of earlier readings reflected in the Greek version and the family α) in some cases it preserves better readings. This means that the divergence between the textual families took place in the South-Slavic area prior to the 13th century. Some misreadings may witness the Glagolitic Slavonic proto-text and uncial Greek Vorlage. The stemma of the Slavic version according to Gaylord are as follows:

The relationship between the Greek and Slavic versions are examined in Re-constructed Content below.

III. Scholarship

As observed above, 3 Baruch is an “underdog” among ancient Jewish apocalypses, and the history of its research is not rich. It was introduced to scholarship in 1886, when Stojan Novaković published the Slavonic ms N.⁸ The Greek text found in British Museum by E. Cuthbert Butler was published by Montague R. James in 1897.⁹ Since then six more Slavonic manuscripts have been published: ms T by Nikolaj Savvich Tikhonravov in 1894,¹⁰ ms K by Mikhail Mikhailovich Speranskij in 1906,¹¹ mss BPS were published by Mikhail Iur’evich Sokolov in 1907,¹² and ms Z by Eduard Hercigonja in 1964.¹³ Jordan Ivanov republished ms S with discrepancies from mss NP in 1925.¹⁴ The bibliography published by Alexandr Ivanovich Jatsimirskij in 1921 included almost all of the manuscripts known today (except ms D).¹⁵ The second known Greek copy was published by Jean-Claude Picard in his critical edition of the Greek text in 1967.¹⁶ The decisive breakthrough in the textual research on 3 Baruch was achieved by Harry E. Gaylord, who prepared a critical edition of the Slavonic version in his dissertation at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem in 1983.¹⁷

The Slavonic ms N was translated to German by Gottlieb Nathanael Bonwetsch in 1896¹⁸ and then into English by William R. Morfill in 1897.¹⁹ Wolfgang Hage translated ms S into German in 1974,²⁰ while Donka Petkanova – the eclectic text based on mss SNPI to Bulgarian in 1981,²¹ A. Iu.

⁸ Novaković, “Otkrivene.”

⁹ James, “Baruch,”

¹⁰ Tikhonravov, “Otkrovenie;” cf. Milkov, “Otkrovenie,” 480–87.

¹¹ Speranskij, Izvestija.

¹² Sokolov, “Apokrificheskoe.”

¹³ Hercigonja, “Videnie,” 63–72.

¹⁴ Ivanov, Bogomilski, 193–200.

¹⁵ Jatsimirskij, Bibliograficheskij.

¹⁶ Picard, “Apocalypsis.”

¹⁷ Gaylord, Slavonic.

¹⁸ Bonwetsch, “Slavisch.”

¹⁹ Morfill, “Apocalypse.”

²⁰ Hage, Griechische, 15–44.

²¹ Petkanova, Apokrifi.

Karpov and Vladimir Vladimirovich Milkov – presented a Russian translation of ms T in 1990 and 1999 respectively.²² The Greek version was first translated into German by Victor Ryssel in 1900,²³ into English by Henry M. Hughes in 1913,²⁴ into Hebrew by Eliyahu Shemuel Hartom in 1967,²⁵ into Spanish by Natalio Fernández Marcos in 1990,²⁶ and into Russian by Maria and Vadim Vitkovskij in 2001.²⁷ The parallel versions were translated by Harry E. Gaylord in 1983.²⁸

Mikhail Iur'evich Sokolov, Emil Turdeanu, and Harry E. Gaylord have made the most noticeable contribution to the textual study of the Slavic recension and its relation to the Greek version. Among relatively recent works, the studies by Richard J. Bauckham, John Collins, Mary Dean-Otting, George W. E. Nickelsburg, Andrei Orlov, Jean-Claude Picard, Rainer Stichel, and Edward J. Wright are of crucial significance in the collective attempt to understand 3 Baruch.²⁹ The history of research of 3 Baruch has culminated in two studies without which the present work would not be possible: the unpublished critical edition of the Slavonic version by Harry E. Gaylord³⁰ and the thorough and insightful monograph by Daniel C. Harlow.³¹

²² Karpov, “Otkrovenie,” 276–82; Milkov, “Otkrovenie,” 488–93.

²³ Ryssel, “Apokalypsen.”

²⁴ Hughes, “Greek.”

²⁵ Hartom, “Hazon.”

²⁶ Fernández Marcos, “Apocalipsis.”

²⁷ Vitkovskij, “Otkrovenie.”

²⁸ Gaylord, “Baruch.”

²⁹ See General Bibliography, 3 Baruch: Articles and Chapters.

³⁰ Gaylord, Slavonic.

³¹ Harlow, Baruch.

IV. Original Language

There is no evidence that the Greek text of 3 Baruch had a Hebrew or Aramaic original. All obvious Hebraisms found in the book are biblicisms that are also attested in other Judeo-Greek texts. The gematria calculations, based on Greek words put into Hebrew letters, demonstrate that their author knew at least the Hebrew alphabet (4:7G; 4:10). The text probably has several wordplays, some of which are based on polysemy, homophony, and homeophony of Greek words: ἔλαιον “oil” and ἔλεος “mercy” (ms T 4:7S and 15:1S; πτώσεως (gen. sg.) “calamity” and πόσεως (gen. sg.) “drinking” (4:17G); παράπτω “kindle” and “transgress”; θλίβω “compress” and “afflict” (9:7G; 15:1S). A hypothetical wordplay may also refer to the similarity of Hebrew roots עוֹר “bird” and עֵי “faint, weary” (8:2, 3, 6G; the same word-play is attested in Exod. Rab. 38).

V. Date

There are no decisive data indicating the dating of 3 Baruch. Usually any reference to the destruction of the Temple serves as an argument for the post-destruction origin of a composition. Origen (Princ. 2.3.6) may provide a terminus ad quem, if his reference to a “book of the prophet Baruch,” in which there are “very clear indications of the seven worlds or heavens”, is understood as a reference to a version of 3 Baruch, though with different ouranology (seven heavens instead of five or fewer in the original text) and different terminology (“world” for heaven) than the extant versions of the book.

VI. Provenance

Like most apocryphal and pseudepigraphical writings, 3 Baruch has been preserved in Christian tradition. As shown below (see Reconstructed Content) the earlier rescension of the book most probably did not include any specifically Christian materials. Nevertheless, as far as we can judge from the extant redactions, it contained contradictory tendencies, which could have been developed in either direction. On the one hand, the vision itself seems indifferent to the sacred history of Israel, both past and future: the latest historical figure mentioned is Noah, a universal patriarchal figure; there are no explicit references to any specifically Jewish values, or to the dichotomy of Israel and the nations, and collective eschatology is not treated at all. On the other hand, the setting of the vision shows a concern for the theodicy pertaining to the destruction of the Temple. The relationship of this “particularist” problem to the universalistic vision is not clarified, and may be interpreted in either Rabbinic or Christian terms – either as a consolation and theodical justification, or as a message about the insignificance of the terrestrial Temple.

At the same time, the text is deeply rooted in Jewish lore and cannot be understood out of the context of traditions preserved in Jewish (and even specifically Rabbinic) literature. Thus, the question of whether its Jewish author believed that Jesus of Nazareth was the true messiah may seem irrelevant or at least impossible to determine, as long as the text does not directly reflect such a belief or a dependence on early Christian texts. Rabbinic Jewish and Christian Jewish authors of the period shared many common traditions and interests. The question of the potential compatibility of the book’s content with Christian ideas is more relevant to the reception of the text, as a Christian hand is recognizable in reworked layers of the composition. Thus some readings of the reworked Greek version, in addition to Christian terminology, citations and paraphrases from the New Testament, may hint that the destruction of the Temple is not only deserved (as in 1:3S), but is not important (1:3G), and that the paradigmatic sinners are the Jews (16:2G). In the case of 3 Baruch we are delivered from the vicious circle of the assumptions that the Christian passages must be interpolations since the text is Jewish, and that the text must be Jewish, since all that is Christian is interpolated. Here we are lucky to have the Slavonic version, which serves as a witnesses to a pre-Christianized stage: the Slavonic version does not contain the Christian materials of the Greek reworking and preserves clues of an earlier redaction (see Reconstructed Content below).

Our text shares a significant number of unique or rare traditions with Gnostic writings; however, despite its transcendentalist and probably angelolatric tendencies, it has nothing to do with Gnostic theology. This observation counts in favor of the hypothesis that the uniquely Gnostic traditions which reappear later in Jewish mysticism may reflect a common Jewish heritage³² or may even be rooted in more widely circulating Mediterranean lore. Among these proto-Gnostic traditions one might mention the presentation of the building of the Tower of Babel as a demonic plot (Paraph. Shem 24–25); blind celestial forces (cf. blind archons of Hyp. Arch. passim); the conception of the cosmic serpent as a place of torment in the afterlife (Pistis Sophia 3.126) or as a holder of Hades (Acts Thom. 32); traditions about five celestial trees (Gos. Thom. 19:3–4; Bala'izah Gnostic fragment; Pistis Sophia 1.1 and 10; 2.86; 3.95; etc.); the satanic and serpentine origin of vine (Epiphanius, Haer. 3.45.1.2); and chrismatic “seals” for the afterlife (Ap. John 31.22–25; Origen, Cels. 6.27, 34).

Our interpretation of the relationship between 3 Baruch and Gnostic tradition may, with certain precautions, be implemented also for some commonalities found between 3 Baruch and early Christian tradition. With the Gnostics, the contradiction between the availability of common material and the obvious disagreement of the respective outlooks point towards a common Jewish substratum rather than direct influence. Such a hypothesis would be less demonstrable for explaining Christian parallels: our text is preserved in Christian tradition and does not contradict Christian doctrines. Nevertheless, we can raise the possibility of proto-Christian motifs in 3 Baruch, especially when significant variation in details testify against direct borrowing. These parallels would be of particular interest in instances when they provide a clarification or complementation for some unique or obscure early Christian imagery which, in turn, could have been rooted in the Jewish traditions witnessed by 3 Baruch. Among these are the motifs of the Tree of Knowledge planted by Sammael (4:8) and the parable of tares; “false wheat” planted by “the Adversary” when the “man” (Adam?) is asleep (Matt 13:24–30; cf. the Tree of Knowledge as wheat in Gen. Rab. 15.7; b. Ber. 40a; b. Sanh. 70a); angels as bearers of the flowers (of the Paradise of Virtues?; 12:1G; cf. 4:7S; 4:10) and angels as harvesters of the same parable (Matt 13:39); the uprooted Vine of Knowledge planted by Sammael (4:10) and the uprooting of the “plant which my heavenly Father has not planted” (Matt 15:13; it is specifically the vine in Gos. Thom. 40 and par); the lake of the souls (10:5G) followed by the oil reward (from the Olive of Life?; 15:1–2); the washing in the “water of life” which provides the “right to the Tree of Life” (Rev 22:1–2, 14, 17 and par.); the “Kingdom of Heaven” as an abode of the righteous guarded by a key-holder in 11:2 and in Matt 8:11 and 16:19; the structurally similar descriptions of the angelic offering of flowers (12–15) and the angelic incense offering (Rev 5:8; 8:3–5); the locusts plague (16:3) opposed to the oil reward (chrismatic seal?; 15:2) and the locusts plague opposed to protective seal (Rev 9:3–11); and many more similarities with NT, as well as with Christian pseudepigrapha and the works of the Church Fathers. All these parallels, although only attested in Christian literature, do not contain specifically Christian conceptions, and in this they do not differ from abundant Christian parallels to other traditions more widely attested in early Jewish literature.

³² Idel, Kabbalah, 30, 116.

Another kind of question is the extent to which the author was influenced by non-Jewish Hellenistic traditions and whether the text reflects a provenance in Palestine or elsewhere. The work in its current form shows a substantial degree of Hellenization. This is evident in the language itself, in gematrias based on Greek words, in names of rivers, and in translatio graeca of Hebrew concepts such as the well known substitution of Sheol by Hades, or the correspondence, found only in 3 Baruch, of the protective bird Ziz by Phoenix (adopting not only the Greek name, but also some of its characteristics). In addition to these elements, which could have been introduced or modified during translation or transmission, we also find Hellenistic concepts and images that are central to the composition. These include: the celestial afterlife, Acherusian lake (though unnamed), and solar and lunar chariots that bear anthropomorphic riders. At the same time, the cosmology of the apocalypse has nothing to do with new Greco-Roman theories, and some of the Hellenistic features mentioned above might have had Near Eastern equivalents, which could have been adopted by Jews without Greek mediation. Among the most prominent Near Eastern traditions partly shared with Greeks are the sun chariots, known to Jews since biblical times, and the complex of Egyptian ideas on the ascent of ba (soul-bird), its purification in the celestial lake, and the range of heavenly gates.

One feature that might point toward a Palestinian provenance is the idea that only rain water can cause plants to be productive. This is plausible in Palestine, where the agriculture is based primarily on rain water, but could hardly be raised in countries with developed irrigation cultures.

VII. Content

1. Extant Content

Below is a summary of the last redactions of 3 Baruch as attested in the extant versions. The attempts to figure out the contents of earlier redactions, on the one hand, and the most obvious implied data behind the explicit account, on the other, are presented in the following chapters (Reconstructed Content and Implied Content).

Weeping at the gates of the destroyed Temple, Baruch seeks a theodicy for the catastrophe. In response, an angel sent by God promises to show him the “great mysteries.” The angel takes him to “where heaven was set,” and to the river that cannot be crossed by any “alien breath.” Having arrived at the “first heaven,” they enter the very large door, and after a month-long journey, they find a plain inhabited by strangely shaped creatures. Baruch’s first question is about “the thickness of heaven in which we journeyed;” he learns that it is equal to the height of the sky and the width of heaven (thus G; S equates it to the width of earth, while the width of heaven is as the height of the sky).

The angel takes Baruch to the “second heaven,” where they find almost the same creatures, only dog-faced, who are also identified as the builders of the Tower of Babel. Then Baruch learns how they afflicted a woman in the throes of childbirth and wanted to bore through heaven in order to study its composition; moreover, he learns how they were punished with blindness and confusion of languages.

After further long journey through another long gate, Baruch sees another plain with the Serpent and Hades “around him” (in G; below, the latter is also identified as a belly of the former). Baruch learns about the eating and drinking habits of the monster: “the dragon is he who eats the bodies of those who pass through life wickedly” (G; in S it eats earth instead) and drinks every day a regular portion of water from the sea, which still does not sink, being filled with rivers, a list of which is given.

The vision of Serpent-Hades is interrupted by Baruch’s sudden request to see the Tree of Knowledge. In the response to this request, he hears a story (instead of seeing a vision), which contains the following episodes: (1) On the Garden, where the five different fruit trees were planted by five named angels; among them, the olive tree was planted by Michael, while the vine was planted by Satanael (only in S); (2) On the Tree of Knowledge that turns out to be the vine planted by Sammael (in G; Satanael in S), and thus is forbidden to Adam, who was divested of the Divine glory for his transgression. (3) On the Flood, which destroyed many giants, entered Paradise, destroyed its flowers and either removed the vine completely (G) or brought a shoot from it outside (S). Noah, after severe hesitation, replanted the vine by God's order. However, he was warned that although "its bitterness shall be changed to sweetness," through excessive drinking major sins still come into the world. Here the account of the Beasts resumes with a question about the dimensions of Serpent's belly, which turns out to be Hades ("insatiable" according to S), and is measured by the distance of a thrown lead.

The angel and Baruch proceed to the east and observe the anthropomorphic figure of the crowned sun riding in its quadriga. It is accompanied by the bird, defined as the "guardian of the world" since it "goes before the sun and, stretching out its wings, receives its fire-shaped rays. For if it did not receive them, the race of men would not survive, nor any other living creature." This bird is gigantic; it is called Phoenix, born in fire, and produces cinnamon. Here Baruch watches the sunrise from the celestial point of view: the 365 gates of heaven open with a great sound as the light is being separated from the darkness, the Bird commands the sun to shine, and the command wakes the roosters on earth.

Baruch wonders about how long the sun can remain motionless and learns that it is a very short period of time "from when the roosters cry until the light comes" (thus in S; in G he asks about its route, but this is probably secondary). Here G repeats the description of the rising sun and the Sun Bird's performances, which at this point is not only heard by Baruch, but is also witnessed by him firsthand.

Baruch then proceeds with the angel to the west to watch the sunset: the crown is taken from the sun's head for the nightly renewal "up to heaven," and the Bird looks exhausted. Baruch learns that the sun's crown is defiled through its rays by human sins, and he learns that the Bird is exhausted by the sun's radiation.

The moon is located in the same heaven. It is shown to Baruch in the morning, in the likeness of a woman, also moving in its chariot of oxen. Although initially having been created "beautiful," now it waxes and wanes, since it did not hide itself during the transgression of Adam and Eve. G adds that the moon and the "suspended" stars do not dare to shine in the presence of the sun. The sun outshines the stars, and the moon, although "being intact," is exhausted by its heat.

In the next heaven, the "third" heaven (only in G), there is another plain (G; or “mountain” in S) with a lake inhabited by diverse birds, and especially cranes (or birds similar to cranes in size in S). This is the place “where the souls of the righteous come, when they assemble, living together choir by choir” (only G). The “pure” (only S) birds unceasingly praise God (both G and S). The lake is also a source of the rain and – according to G – the “dew of heaven.” They are taken by clouds only from here (S) or also from the sea, while in the latter case only these celestial waters can cause the earth to produce fruit (G).

The angel takes Baruch to the next heaven, identified as the “fifth” heaven (although the “fourth” has not been mentioned), where Baruch faces the closed gate, upon which the names of men are inscribed (S). The gate opens only to admit the commander-in-chief Michael, the key-holder of the Kingdom, descending from behind it with a great sound to receive the prayers of men. He holds a cosmically sized bowl, into which the “virtues” (G; from here on S always has “prayers” instead of the “virtues” in G) of men enter in order to be brought in it to God.

A procession of angels brings baskets filled with flowers and casts them into Michael’s bowl. The flowers represent human virtues (or “prayers” in S). Then other angels, grieving, bring empty (or half-empty) baskets, the offerings from which “did not fill the bowl.” Other angels (either the same “other” or a third group) weep and fear; they ask Michael twice to release them from evil men, whose transgressions they enumerate.

Michael goes behind the gate, which closes after him with a thunder signifying that he brings the virtues of men to God. The gate opens again, and Michael distributes the oil. He puts it into the same baskets (in S “mercy” substitutes for “oil”). This reward is given “to our beloved and those who have diligently done good deeds.” Michael sends those who brought full and half-empty baskets to bless their charges.

Angels that have not brought any offerings are not allowed to leave their men but are ordered to “provoke against them No-Nation” (only G) and to send upon them locusts with “hail and lightning and wrath and cut them in twain with the sword and with death and their children with demons.”

S adds to this a brief notion, that the guiding angel ordered Baruch to see the resting places of the righteous and the tortures of the impious. Baruch hears the lament of the latter and receives permission to weep on their behalf.

Finally, Baruch “comes to himself” (G), or descends to earth (S) and glorifies God.³³

³³ Many of the elements of the above narrative are not found in other Jewish texts. The claim for uniqueness is declared in the prologue to the vision, where Baruch is prom-

If this is the authentic content, it is no wonder that many have considered the book to be a chaotic conglomeration of non-coherent and bizarre fragments. At best this could have been regarded as a dream record, mostly devoid of inner logic and barely integrated into the literary tradition. This would not be typical for what we know about Jewish writings of the period. In other words, it would be highly surprising for a Jewish visionary of the period to see visions out of the context of traditional concepts, and even more so, to organize them in an unfamiliar literary form. I will try to demonstrate that the text, though admittedly laconic and even elliptic, is nonetheless internally coherent, and that many of its seemingly unique, bizarre or non-Jewish motifs are in fact deeply rooted in Jewish tradition. Moreover, the very preterition or paraleipses (deliberate but apparent omission of information) in the text, when they are well corroborated by parallel traditions, may paradoxically be useful – they can indicate which topics were taken as self-evident by the authentic author and his audience.

2. Reconstructed Content³⁴

Some of the interpretive cruxes in 3 Baruch must have arisen as a result of the complicated textual history of the book. Baruch's promise to "neither ised to see "great mysteries which no man had seen" (1:6S). Among the unique motifs are the following:

- Builders of the Tower of Babel banished to heaven (2–3)
- The twofold cosmic Serpent-Hades drinking the sea and eating the wicked (4–5G)
- Angels planting Paradise (4:7S)
- The Tree of Knowledge planted by Sammael/Satanael (4:7S; 4:8)
- Flood entering Paradise and destroying its plants (4:10)
- Cinnamon as excrement of worms excreted by the Sun Bird (Phoenix; 6:12)
- Daily separation of the light from the darkness (6:13)
- Moon's collaboration with Sammael in the seduction of the first men (9:7)
- Celestial lake of birds (10:2–7)
- The fifth heaven as the culmination of an ascent (11:1)
- Virtues (or prayers in S) as flowers (12:5)

There is also some unique terminology: "narration and revelation" (διήγησις καὶ ἀποκάλυψις) as a title of apocalypse (T:1G); "alien spirit" (ξένη πνοή; 2:1G; found once more in a late Byzantine text); "monster" (ἄπτηνής) used as a noun and applied to Hades (4:4G); "Sarasael" (Σαρρασάηλ / САРАСАИΛЪ) as an angelic name (4:15); "the guardian of the inhabited world" (ὁ φύλαξ τῆς οἰκουμένης / ХРАНИТЕЛЬ ВЪСЕЛЕНЪИ) as an epithet of the Sun Bird (6:3).

³⁴ This section is based on my article (Kulik, "Veritas").

subtract nor add a word” (1:7S) was not implemented by the editors (and was even itself omitted from a more reworked G).

The book has been preserved in two rescensions, Greek (G) and Slavonic (S). The lost Vorlage of S (R^S) differed significantly from the tradition presented by G, which is replete with Christian interpolations, on the one hand, and with omissions of important fragments, on the other. We thus presume that R^S is a better witness for the Greek proto-text underlying both rescensions (R^{GS}). Both rescensions share traces of the same reworking, enabling us to distinguish R^{GS} from an Urtext (whether Greek or Semitic) or the earliest reconstructable version of the composition (R^U).

Hence, in addition to the two preserved rescensions, there are three textual layers (R^S , R^{GS} , and R^U), the elements of which can be reconstructed.

2.1. Greek Version (G)

2.1.1. Christian Interpolations

Both G and S show indications of independent Christian reworking. The most blatant are those interpolations which are not shared by both versions. These passages can be categorized as follows:

(A) Passages with obvious Christian terminology (in italics):

- “... and that which is begotten from it [the vine] shall become the blood of God; and as the human race obtained condemnation through it, so again through Jesus Christ the Emmanuel [and] in him is the receipt of the future invocation, and the entry into Paradise” (4:15G).
- “For we do not see them ever entering into assembly [or “church,” Gk ἐκκλησία], either into spiritual fathers or into any good thing” (13:4G).

(B) New Testament wording without christological terms (which theoretically could have been shared with other Jewish texts):

- “Prizes” as heavenly rewards (12:1G; cf. 1 Cor 9:24; Phil 3:14; Clement of Rome, 1 Ep. Cor. 5.6).
- “Bring a hundredfold reward to our friends and those who have diligently done good deeds. For those who have sowed well, reap well” (15:2G; cf. Matt 19:29 and 25:24, 26; Mark 10:30; Luke 15:8; 2 Cor 9:6; although a similar expression appears also in Hagg 1:6).
- “You are faithful over a little, he will set you over many things; enter into the joy of our Lord” (15:4G; cf. Matt 25:21, 23).

(C) Deuteronomic paraphrases (sometimes found also in NT) link the plagues for the sinners with the punishment promised to Israel, and thus identify the two. They are more likely to have been added than omitted in the process of Christian transmission of the text:

- “But since they [the sinners] angered me by their deeds, go and make them envious and angry and provoke against them No-Nation, a nation void of understanding” (16:2G; cf. LXX Deut 31:29; 32:21; cited in Rom 10:19).
- “[The plagues are sent to the sinners,] because they did not listen to my voice, nor observe my commandments, nor do them, but came to be despisers of my commandments and my assemblies, and offenders of the priests who announced my words to them” (16:4G; cf. LXX Deut 28:1; 1 Chr 16:22).

The latter verse mentions also “the priests, who announced my words to them,” which would refer to Christian rather than to Jewish priests, and is probably a development of the topic of “spiritual fathers” of 13:4G.

(D) There is also a passage that may reflect Christian historiography. The suggestion not to “care so much for the salvation of Jerusalem” (1:3S) is significantly different from the theodical “it came to Jerusalem to accept this” in G.

2.1.2. Biblical Citations and Allusions

In addition to the Deuteronomic paraphrases serving ideological editing, G has more citations and allusions to the Bible (especially to LXX), absent in S:

- “And why, Lord, did you not requite us with another punishment, but delivered us to such nations, so that they upbraid saying, ‘Where is their God?’” (1:2G; cf. Pss 79:10; 115:2; Joel 2:17; Mic 7:10).

- “calamity of wine” (πτώσεως τοῦ οἴνου; 4:17G; cf. “wine of calamity” in LXX Ps 60[59]:5[3]).
- “little by little” (πρὸς μικρὸν μικρόν; 7:3G; cf. LXX Deut 7:22).
- “all breath” (πᾶσα πνοή; 8:7G; cf. LXX Ps 150:6).
- “in order that the Enemy may not prevail for ever” (ὕνα μὴ εἰς τέλος κυριεύσῃ ὁ Ἐχθρός; 13:2G; cf. LXX Ps 73:10).

2.1.3. Explanatory Expansions

Often G functions as if it were an explanatory targum for the laconic text of R^{GS} (as it is witnessed by S):

- “And he showed me Hades, and its appearance was dark and impure. And I said, ‘Who is this dragon, and who is this monster around him?’ And the angel said, ‘The dragon is he who eats the bodies of those who pass through life wickedly, and he is nourished by them’” (4:3b–5G). The passage, absent in S, introduces the ideas of the “pairedness” and the “unity in two” of Serpent and Hades; Hades’ function as the eater of the wicked; and Hades’ darkness and impurity. Although these motifs are ancient and some of them may be deduced from 5:3, they are only made explicit by G.
- “That is why he did not permit Adam to touch it, and that is why the devil being envious deceived him through his vine” (4:8G). S confines itself to mention of the serpent, which is omitted in G and replaced by the expanded explanation. G provides biblical background, never given explicitly in S, and adds widely known motifs of the identification of the serpent of Eden with the devil, and their envy toward man.
- “It [Flood] removed the shoot of the vine completely” (4:10G). In S only one shoot is removed. G probably explains why Baruch does not see the requested Tree.
- “Know therefore, Baruch, that as Adam through this tree obtained condemnation, and was divested of the Glory of God, so also now the men drinking insatiably the wine which is begotten of it, make a transgression worse than Adam, and become far from the Glory of God, and commit themselves to the eternal fire. For [no] good comes through it” (4:16G). G verbalizes the connection between the first humans’ transgression and contemporary wine abuse, structurally implicit in S. The motif of the garment of Glory was widely known, including Christian traditions.
- “And I said, ‘And how is it that it [the moon] does not also shine always, but only at night?’ And the angel said, ‘Listen, as before a king his household cannot speak freely, so the moon and the stars cannot shine before the sun. For the stars are suspended, but they are outshined by the sun, and the moon, [although] being intact, is exhausted by the heat of the sun” (9:8G). G complements the basic lesson on the moon, explaining not only its phases but also the absence of the moon and stars in daytime.

- “Listen, Baruch! The plain that has in it the lake and other wonders [is the place] where the souls of the righteous come, when they assemble, living together choir by choir” (10:5). Similarly to 4:3b–5G, the motif of soul-birds, very important and central in this apocalypse, is only implied in the unexplained image of the birds in S.
- “Dew,” treated twice in G (6:11G and 10:9G), is totally absent in S. In the first case it complements the information on the drinking habits of the Sun Bird, on which S reports only “what it eats” (as on the other Beasts above we learn as on eating, so also on drinking). In the second, it serves as a reminder that the dew, and not only the rain, is of celestial origin.
- “For unless its wings, as we said before, were screening the rays of the sun, no living creature would survive” (8:7) – inner explanatory reference to 6:6 absent in S.
- The men’s virtues are brought “before the heavenly God” (11:9G; in 14:2G again God is mentioned only in G; cf. 15:2S). This is implicit in 13:5.
- “And the angel told me, “These flowers are the virtues of the righteous” (12:5G). This identification in S may easily be deduced from 11:9 and 12:4.

2.1.4. Other Textual Phenomena

G also shows textual developments which are free from ideological or hermeneutic considerations, like parablepsis in 4:2G or duplication in 7:3–5aG. The latter verse appears to provide a variant of the account of the sun and Phoenix already given in 6:2–5a. The same data, which in ch. 6 is presented in a dramatic form, is presented in ch. 7 as a description of a vision.

2.2. Slavonic Version (S) and Its Greek Vorlage (R^s)

In most cases, it is impossible to distinguish between the development of the rescension before the translation (R^s) or after it (S).

Like G, R^s or its translation might have been subject independently to interpolation of Christian content. There are passages which employ terminology that is likely to be Christian, although interpertatio judaica is still possible in some of these cases:

- “For their wives flee to the Temple [or “church” or “assembly;” CS црьквь], and from there they bring them out to jealousy and to fornication and to envy, and they strive to many other things, which you, O Glorious One, know” (13:4S).
- “Be not idle, but prostrate yourself in prayer in the holy Temple [свѣтъша црькви]” (15:3S).
- “They do not fear God and they do not come to the Temple [црьквь] and to the place of prayers” (16:4S).

In distinction from G there is only one explanatory expansion – the “Slavonic Conclusion” (16:5–10S). This is best viewed as a later addition, as it stands in contrast with the rest of the narrative visuospatially and stylistically, and has an obvious harmonizing and conceptualizing agenda.

2.3. Common Proto-text of G and S (R^{GS})

2.3.1. R^{GS} as Witnessed by G

Some readings witnessed by G were corrupted in S during its transmission:

- “God-made tower” (стѣпѣ бѣотворѣны) instead of “Tower of War against God” (стѣпѣ бѣоворѣны) (2:7S).
- “And now show me all things for the Lord’s sake” (4:1G), omitted due to homoioteleuton in S.
- “187” (ϣ: и й: и ѓ:: 4:2S) instead of a hypothetical Glagolitic “185.”
- “On an armed chariot” (на орѣжнѣ колесѣници; 9:3S) instead of “on a wheeled chariot” (на орѣжии колесѣномѣ; as ἐπὶ ἄρματος τροχοῦ in G).

Some readings were mistranslated in S:

- “With blindness” (3:8) mistranslated as “invisibly” by S.
- “Angels [who are] over the principalities [ἐπὶ τῶν ἐξουσιῶν]” (12:3G) mistranslated in S as “the angels who are in the power [вѣ области] of men.”

Explanatory readings:

- “Oil” (15:1G) substituted by homeophonic “mercy” in S.

Harmonized readings:

- “Virtues” (11:9G; 14:2G) and “good deed” (15:2G) interchanging with “prayers” (11:4G), are consistently unified to “prayers” in S.

Some passages in G, absent in S, but well integrated into early Jewish literature, might be original:

- “And where there was a river which no one can cross, nor any alien spirit of all those that God created” (2:1G); this may either be original or interpolated due to influence of late Christian apocalypses.
- “As if [borne] on wings” (2:2G).
- “Baskets” (12:1G) substituted by neutral “offerings” in S.

2.3.2. R^{GS} as Witnessed by S

Readings corrupted in G:

- “Fiery horses” (κοιι πλaмѣни; * ἵππων πυρός; 6:2S) instead of “with a fire underneath” (ὃ ἦν ὑπόπυρον; both manuscripts have ο ην υποπυρος) of G.
- “‘How much [or “how” ποῦ] does the sun rest [ἀποσχολάζει]?’ {And the angel told me,} ‘From when the roosters cry out until the light comes’” (7:1S; as a dialogue without an intermediate remark) misinterpreted as one repique “And where [ποῦ] does the sun begin its labors [ἀποσχολεῖται] after the rooster cries?” in G.

Harmonized readings:

- S has “chamber” (3:3S) and “mountain” (10:2, 4S) instead of the unified “plain” in all the cases in G.

Some passages in S, absent in G, but well integrated into early Jewish literature, might be original. Among them entire fragments:

- the account on planting the Garden (4:7S) omitted in G due to homoeoarchon
- 6:14b omitted by G due to homoeoteleuton

There are also shorter passages which could be original:

- “You will neither add nor omit [anything] ... I will neither subtract nor add a word” (1:6–7S).
- “He showed me means of safety [σωτηρία]” (2:2S) retroverted from “he showed me salvation [спасение].”
- “As [the distance] from east to west” (2:5S).
- “Pure birds” (10:5S).
- “And he showed me large gates, and names of men were written [on them]” (11:2S).

Some readings of R^{GS} difficult or incomprehensible to later Christian scribes, were replaced by more neutral readings in G:

- “Be silent” (1:3S), an order with ambiguous message replaced with “understand” in G.
- “Great mysteries” (1:6S), the term, well attested in apocalyptic parallels, was replaced by “mysteries” in G.
- “... stirring [the clay for bricks]” (3:5S), paralleled in an aggadic account, replaced with “making bricks” in G.

Some mss of S present angels' names in Semitic (rather than Slavic or even Greek) rather than Slavic or even Greek) forms. Thus S has "Paniel" (ΠΑΝΟΥΗΛ in T:1S; cf. Phanuel ΦΑΝΟΥΗΛ in 2:5), going back to Gk *Πανουηλ; Heb לַנְּוּחַל, instead of Phamael (Φαμαηλ; 2:5) in G. In 4:7S mss S and Z have Sarazael (ΣΑΡΑΖΑΗΛ; Gk *Σαρ Ραζαιλ; Heb שַׂר רִזְאֵל) and Rasael (ΡΑΣΑΗΛ; Gk *Ρασαιλ); cf. on Sarasael in both versions in 4:15 below).

There are three features of Serpent-Hades found in S but absent from G that are paralleled in the Bible – Serpent “eats earth like grass” (4:3S); God “kindled its heart” (4:7S); “Hades is insatiable” (5:3S). They could either be original or have been interpolated at any stage. Similarly, it is difficult to assess priority in 10:9 where S, holding to the ancient tradition, states that all rains originate from the celestial storage place, whereas G exhibits compromises with Hellenistic science.

The lists above show that although both rescensions were independently reworked, G has introduced more changes. These modifications reflect (1) ideological editing (Christianization); (2) intertextual sophistication which integrated authoritative textual traditions into the laconic report (by means of citations and allusions from the Bible and NT); and especially (3) explanatory (targumic) expansions. By contrast, S exhibits fewer signs of deliberate editorial activity. Although S contains certain distortions, mainly textual corruptions and mistranslations, it shows that R^S has been less reworked than G and is thus a better witness for R^{GS}.

2.4. Urtext (R^U)

Certain characteristics shared by both G and S, and thus belonging to R^{GS}, could nevertheless reflect editorial elaborations different from R^U. Among the most significant are:

- Duplication of the account of the Builders: sections 2:2–3, 7a and 3:1–5a as two variants of the same account (cf. duplication in 7:3–5G).
- The numbering of the heavens (2:2; 3:1; 7:2; 10:1; 11:1), inconsistent in both versions, must have been absent in R^U.

These two reworkings belong to the same editorial process. Fortunately, it was not consistent. The duplication hypothesis, which reduced one heaven from the total calculation, concords with the rudiments of the original numbering of heavens preserved in 7:2S and 10:1G. At the same time, the suggestion of the editorial origin of the numbering of the heavens helps to harmonize other indications of the intercelestial transfers – two or three celestial journeys (2:2; [3:1;] 4:2) and two or three gates (three before the last in S and totally three in G; 2:2; [3:1;] 4:2; 11:2) – with the three heavens scheme (instead of five heavens of the extant text). Both the original scheme and its reworking to the models with additional multiple heavens, are well attested (for the detailed discussion see introductory comm. to ch. 11: Ouranology).

- The original model of two groups of angels representing two classes of men was supplemented with the intermediate group by a very delicate emendation. R^{GU} reads Gk ἡποκένους (15:3G) as “half empty” instead of “empty.” This interpretation is reflected in both the corresponding verse of S (only in family α) and in the next verse of G (15:4G, obviously Christian). In light of this reading, the word “other” in 13:1 may be interpreted as referring to the third group, and not to the second which is also defined as “other” in 12:6 (see introductory comm. to 12:6–13:5). Such reworking of a twofold model of human classes into a threefold scheme may be suggested also in the versions of Apocalypse of Adam (see introductory comm. to 12:6–13:5).
- An interesting evidence on R^U is preserved in the unique name of the angel who communicates with Noah – “Sarasaël” (Σαρασαήλ / סרסאסאחל; 4:15). It must go back to scripto continua סררסאסאחל – שר רזאל “Prince Rasael/Rasiel,” well known as Noah’s interlocutor in Hekhalot literature.

The accounts of the celestial dimensions (2:4–6) and the vine (4:8–17G; 4:6–17S) – these intrude into the coherent narratives of the Builders (chs. 2–3) and of the Beasts (chs. 4–5) respectively – are to be regarded more as excursus than as interpolations. The excursus on the celestial dimensions could be misplaced (rather than interpolated) during the course of the compilation of two variants of the Builders story. The vine account, however, although intervening into the description of the Beasts, is thematically connected to it and to other sections of the apocalypse.

There also are no strong arguments in favor of the suggestion that R^U could have had a longer text that included an ascent to higher heavens (see introductory comm. to ch. 11: Ouranology: Seven heavens and abridged version).

3. Implied Content

Even in comparison to other compositions of the same genre, 3 Baruch strikes the modern reader as an extremely elliptic and fragmented narrative, and thus an enigmatic one. We may infer that the author(s) expected the target audience to be well-versed in the ancient lore that was requisite for filling the gaps between seemingly disconnected images. Relying on the knowledge base of the intended readers, the authors were free to concentrate on the visual and symbolic “highlights” of the revelation, leaving many implied connections unmentioned. In many cases, 3 Baruch confines itself to apocalyptic ekphrasis, a description of the objects seen by the visionary which neither explains the meaning of each image nor makes clear the connections between them. This way of communication is characteristic of intentionally vague symbolic accounts that broaden the interpretation field and require on the part of the recipient a more active participation in building the narrative. This approach was only partly compensated for by a late version preserved in G, which gives explanations and expansions of the more laconic proto-text better reflected in S. The characteristics and possible reasons for applying such a form of expression are treated in Method below.

I have attempted to reconstruct these implied data on the basis of intertextual analysis. The overwhelming majority of reconstructions of the implied content below are introduced here for the first time. The sources and argumentation for the reconstructions may be found in the commentaries to relevant chapters. The summary of the account of 3 Baruch as it was given in the section Extant Account above appears below in italics, while the reconstructed data complementing it are given in ordinary font:

Weeping at the gates of the destroyed Temple, Baruch seeks a theodicy of the Fall. In response, an angel sent to him by God promises to show him the “great mysteries.” The angel takes him to “where heaven was set,” and to the river, i.e., to the “ends of earth,” where the River Oceanus surrounding the flat earth meets the “ends” of the hemispheric heaven. It cannot be crossed by any “alien breath,” since the boarder between the two worlds cannot be crossed by terrestrial demonic “alien spirits.”

Having arrived to the entrance to the “first heaven” (the numbers of heaven hereafter must be interpolated), they enter the very large door, which is a celestial opening located on the line where earth and heaven meet, and after a month-length journey through the “door,” which is a tunnel-gate through the “thickness of heaven” measured below, they find a plain inhabited by strangely shaped creatures described as satyrs and cynocephali. These must be the demonic forces of the lower heaven. Identified below as the chief builders of the Tower of Babel, they could be the fallen angels’ gargantuan progeny, most of whom perished in the Flood (as below), but some of whom survived either physically or as demonic spirits.

Baruch's first question is about "the thickness of heaven in which we journeyed," i.e., through which they passed inside the tunnel-gate. He learns that it is equal to the height of the sky and the width of heaven (thus G; S equates it to the width of earth, while the width of heaven is as the height of the sky).

The angel takes Baruch to the "second heaven," where they find almost the same creatures, only dog-faced, who are also identified as the builders of the Tower of Babel. It is a duplication of the previous account (thus the number of the heaven has to be ignored). Then Baruch learns how they afflicted a woman in the throes of childbirth (demons are especially dangerous for women giving birth and to newborns), how they wanted to bore through the heaven, in order to study its composition (a reference to a motif of Tower accounts pertaining to fighting or transfixing heaven with "sharp things") and possibly to reach celestial water supply treated below; moreover, he learns how they were punished with blindness (as blind archons and Sammael as "the god of the blind"), and confusion of languages.

After further long journey through another long gate to the second heaven, Baruch sees another plain with the Serpent and Hades "around him" (in G; below the latter is also identified as a belly of the former). This is a chthonic dyad or a twofold monster intertwined as Leviathan and Behemoth or as snakes of caduceus. It shares many features with diverse cosmic, celestial, and sea serpents, on the one hand, and with the celestial or cosmic, sometimes also serpentine, Hell, on the other. The two Beasts must be part of a triad together with the Sun Bird appearing below, in correspondence with the Rabbinic triad of Leviathan, Behemoth, and Ziz. Baruch learns about the eating and drinking habits of the monster: "the dragon is he who eats the bodies of those who pass through life wickedly" (G, since the dead can enter Hell in body and be physically annihilated there; in S it eats earth instead, as the cursed serpent of Eden) and drinks every day a regular portion of water from the sea, which still does not sink, being filled with rivers, a list of which is given. The function is vital for preventing a new flood, since the terrestrial hydrosystem is not cyclic, being completed with celestial waters (as we learn below). This is also among the central functions of the Rabbinic Leviathan and Behemoth. By eating, the Beasts help to get rid of the sinners; by drinking, they help get rid of superfluous water.

The vision of Serpent-Hades is interrupted with Baruch's sudden request to see the Tree of Knowledge. The request about the Tree of Knowledge, the origin of sin, follows the description of the final destination of the sinners. There are more links between the Beasts and the subsequent account: serpents are known to guard cosmic trees; serpents are connected specifically to the vine and wine; the serpent of Eden and the celestial serpent may be identified; although the eschatological banquet is not mentioned the Beasts and the “fruit of vine” are both its basic elements. In the response to this request, he hears a story (instead of seeing a vision), which contains the following episodes: (1) On the Garden, where the five different fruit trees were planted by five named angels (according to the number of the trees of Paradise known to Gnostics and Philo’s “Paradise of virtues;” cf. also four basic virtues and the number of trees without Satanael’s vine); among them the olive tree was planted by Michael, while the vine was planted by Satanael (only in S). This must be “Paradise of virtues,” the flowers of which, i.e., the virtues, appear below in the scenes of the angelic offering and retribution, along with the oil from the celestial olive. (2) On the Tree of Knowledge that turns out to be the vine planted by Sammael (in G; Satanael in S), and thus is forbidden to Adam, who was divested of the Divine glory for his transgression. (3) On the Flood, which destroyed many giants, while the surviving giants initiated the construction of the Tower of Babel (above). It also entered Paradise, destroyed its flowers (“virtues”?) and either removed the vine completely (G; which explains thus, why Baruch is not shown the Tree) or brought a shoot from it outside (S). Noah, after severe hesitation, replanted the vine by the God’s order. However, he was warned that although “its bitterness shall be changed to sweetness,” through excessive drinking, major sins still come into the world, reflecting the dual valence of wine throughout ancient Jewish literature, associated with both sacral use and profane abuse. Here the account of the Beasts resumes with a question on the dimensions of Serpent’s belly, which turns out to be Hades (“insatiable” according to S), and is measured by the distance of a thrown lead.

The angel and Baruch proceed to the east and observe the anthropomorphic figure of the crowned sun riding in its quadriga, a well known Greco-Roman image, probably also found in earlier Near Eastern contexts, and well attested in Jewish iconography. It is accompanied by the bird, defined as the “guardian of the world,” since it “goes before the sun, and stretching out its wings receives its fire-shaped rays. For if it did not receive them, the race of men would not survive, nor any other living creature.” The bird functions exactly as Ziz of the Rabbinic tradition (and protective cosmic birds of Near Eastern iconography or other means that moderate the sun’s heat known to Jewish lore), which is the third element of the triad of gigantic archetypical beasts together with Leviathan and Behemoth (corresponding to Serpent and Hades above). This bird is gigantic, similarly to Ziz and differently from the Greek phoenix; it is called Phoenix and is born in fire and produces cinnamon as the Greek phoenix – these are the only features of the Greek phoenix, probably not original in the text.

Here Baruch watches the sunrise from the celestial point of view: the 365 gates located on the circle of the horizon on the rotating sphere of heaven open with a great sound. The primordial light is being separated from the darkness, on a daily basis, probably presuming creatio aeterna. The Bird commands the sun to shine. The command, although inaudible to humans, wakes the roosters on earth, before the sunrise.

Baruch wonders about how long the sun can remain motionless and learns that it is a very short period of time "from when the roosters cry until the light comes" (thus in S; in G he asks about its route, but this is probably secondary), in contrast to the belief in a more prolonged rest of the sun, which at any case moves also at night either beneath the earth, or above the lower firmament. Here G repeats the description of the rising sun and the Sun Bird's performances, which at this point is not only heard by Baruch, but is also witnessed by him firsthand (most probably a duplication).

Baruch then proceeds with the angel to the west to watch the sunset: the crown is taken from the sun's head for the nightly renewal "up to heaven," probably to be purified in the "lake," a baptismal basin of celestial waters in the next heaven (see below); and the Bird looks exhausted. Baruch learns that the sun's crown is defiled through its rays by human sins, and he learns that the Bird is exhausted by the sun's radiation.

The moon is located in the same heaven, in contrast to Hellenistic views. It is shown in the morning, probably during its daytime motion, hidden from sight above the visible sky, in the likeness of a woman, as Selene and Luna distinct from the male Helios, Sol, and Phoebus, also moving in its chariot of oxen, in biga (of 20 in S) of oxen and not in quadriga of horses as the sun, according to Hellenistic imagery. Although initially having been created "beautiful" as the sun, now it waxes and wanes, since it did not hide itself during the first transgression of Adam and Eve, as luminaries are supposed to do when they witness a cosmic tragedy. G adds that the moon and the "suspended" stars fixed to the rotating sphere as distinct from the wandering planets, do not dare to shine in presence of the sun. The sun outshines the stars, and the moon, although "being intact," is exhausted by its heat, as Israel whose symbol it is, is injured but survives in the destruction of the Temple.

In the next heaven, the "third" heaven (only in G; here the number may reflect the original order of ascent; according to S, Baruch is still in the same heaven) in the pure sphere beyond the moon separated from the sublunary impure heavens by the intermediate region of the luminaries, there is another plain (G; or "mountain" S) with a lake inhabited by diverse birds, and especially cranes (or birds similar to cranes in size in S). This is the place "where the souls of the righteous come, when they assemble, living together choir by choir" (only G). The "pure" (only S) birds unceasingly praise God (both G and S). These ornithomorphic souls of the pious are similar to Egyptian ba and analogous images in Jewish belief; they remain on the lake on their way to their permanent resting places. Here they are baptized in the lake, which like the lake of Acherousia, is a purification and probably transformation basin, and await an anointing of eternal life that will be given to their angels in the next heaven (see below).

The angel then takes Baruch to the entrance to the "fifth" heaven (although the "fourth" has not been mentioned – probably interpolated as a result of the duplication of the account of the Builders). Baruch faces the closed gate, upon which the names of men are inscribed (S), who, in contrast to Baruch, are allowed to enter it (either alive or dead). This must be the inaccessible supercelestial heaven above the three or two heavens visited by Baruch. The gate opens only to admit the commander-in-chief Michael, the key-holder of the Kingdom, and the angelic high priest, descending from behind it with a great sound to receive the prayers of men. This must be the well known "gate of prayer," behind which is the sacral realm accessible only to the high priest Michael. He holds a cosmically sized bowl, in which the "virtues" (G; from hereon S always has "prayers" instead of "virtues" in G) of men enter in order to be brought in it to God. They could literally "enter," since "Virtues" (depicted as flowers below) was known also as an angelic title.

A procession of angels brings baskets filled with flowers, as Greek kane-phoroi or as Jewish processions with first-fruits carried in baskets decorated with plants or as the wreaths of human prayers woven by angels and put on God's head, and cast them into Michael's bowl (a procedure with many liturgic connotations). The flowers represent human virtues, probably connected to the "Paradise of virtues" planted also by angels above (or "prayers" in S).

Then other angels, grieving, bring empty (or half-empty) baskets, the offerings from which "did not fill the bowl." Other angels (either the same "other" or a third group) weep and fear, since the angels may be punished for the sins of their charges; they ask Michael twice to dismiss them from evil men, whose transgressions they enumerate.

Michael, as a high priest on the Day of Atonement, all alone and leaving other angels outside, goes behind the gate, which closes after him with a thunder, signifying that he brings the virtues of men to God. The gate opens again, and Michael distributes the oil of life from the celestial olive, the Tree of Life, that he himself planted (above). The oil must serve for an anointing of the eternal life and a protective chrismatic "seal." The wicked who are deprived of it are attacked by the demonic locusts (below) and destitute of eternal life; they are annihilated, “eaten,” by Hades (above). He puts the ointment into the same baskets, which means that they are not wreathed but rather cultic basket-shaped vessels called “baskets,” well attested in Jewish and pagan liturgic practices. In S the word “mercy” substitutes for “oil,” (these are homeophonic in Greek), as in the “Fast of Mercy,” an expression used to denote the Day of Atonement. This reward is given “to our beloved and those who have diligently done good deeds,” which may refer to two different groups, Israelites and righteous gentiles.

Michael sends those who brought full and half-empty baskets to bless their charges. This is an interpolation intended to replace a twofold division of mankind to the righteous and the wicked by a threefold one, including a middle group.

Angels that have not brought any offerings are not allowed to leave their men but are ordered to “provoke them against No-Nation” (only G; probably an interpolation intended to identify the sinners with Jews) and to send upon them demonic locusts with “hail and lightning and wrath and cut them in twain with the sword and with death and their children with demons,” while the righteous are defended from the plague by the “seal” of anointing.

S adds to this a brief notion, probably interpolated, that the guiding angel ordered Baruch to see the resting places of the righteous and the tortures of the impious. Baruch hears the lament of the latter and receives permission to weep on their behalf, in contrast to the order to cease his bewailing of Jerusalem before the vision (above).

Finally Baruch “comes to himself” (G), which means that this was a spiritual experience and not a bodily ascent, or descends to earth (S) and glorifies God.

VIII. Message*

1. Consolation

3 Baruch presents a celestial tour given in response to the destruction of the Temple. This raises the question of the connection between the two. On the one hand, the revelatory angel seems to dissociate the two topics in his initial words (1:3), either distracting Baruch from the theodicy of the destruction (thus probably Christianized G), or briefly explaining it as a just punishment (as in S). In any case, the issue is not raised again, nor is there any promise of restoration.³⁵

However, some kind of consolation must be implied. It may be simply a recognition of the magnificence of creation (as in Job). Possibly, Baruch should not “care so much” for Jerusalem (as in G), since despite the cessation of the terrestrial worship, the heavenly liturgy continues to be performed (as shown in 12–14) and the gate of prayer still opens in due time (11:4–5). Certain consolation may also be found in the fact that “it came to Jerusalem to accept this” (as in 1:3S) – the punishment only demonstrates the proper functioning of the celestial judgment, a mechanism of retribution with punitive elements (shown in ch. 16).³⁶

2. Retribution and Afterlife

At first glance, 3 Baruch seems to be preoccupied with cosmology. Charles Torrey even maintained that “the religious element, usually so prominent in this literature, is almost wholly wanting” from this apoca-

³⁵ For the attempts to read the vision as “an indirect, yet sustained and coherent response to the problem of Jerusalem’s fate” (Harlow, Baruch, 109), see Picard “Observations,” 92–98; idem, “Autre mystères,” 23–35; Harlow, Baruch, 29–31; 109–163; cf. Nickelsburg, Jewish Literature, 302–303; Collins, “Genre Apocalypse,” 538–40.

³⁶ The topic of wine, so central in 3 Baruch, is connected to consolation in the following saying of R. Hanina: “Wine was created for the sole purpose of comforting mourners and rewarding the wicked, for it is said, ‘Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto the bitter in soul’ [Prov 31: 6]” (b. Erub. 65a).

* The following two sections are based on my article (Kulik, “Apocalyptic”).

lypse.³⁷ However, Martha Himmelfarb has noticed that the central concern of 3 Baruch must be reward and punishment brought into relation with the created world.³⁸ Developing this proposal, we suggest that, although more space is allotted to observations of physical aspects of the functioning of the world, the composition of the vision indicates its focus on retribution and its central element, the afterlife:

Structure	Dominant Topics
Builders Scientific Excursus: Dimensions of Heaven	Abode of Demons
Serpent-Hades Scientific Excurses: Cosmic Hydrosystem I Tree of Knowledge Sun and Moon	Abode of Wicked Souls
Lake of Birds Scientific Excursus: Cosmic Hydrosystem II	Temporary Abode of Just Souls
Gate to the Kingdom of Heaven	Gate to the Permanent Abode of the Just Souls
Angelic Service	Retribution Mechanism

The chart reflects a reading according to which post-mortem retribution, although scarcely mentioned explicitly, is a structurally dominant topic. This is the main agenda of this apocalypse: implicit in S and only partly explicated in G, it is obvious from the structure of the narrative. In this case, 3 Baruch is to be read as follows: (1) The visionary proceeds through the lower heaven, with the abode of demons in it, first to the heaven of the final destination of the wicked (Hades; 4–5), (2) then to the heaven where the transition station of the pious souls is located (lake of birds; 10), (3) and finally he arrives to the gates of the Kingdom of Heaven, their destined permanent abode, where, due to being alive, he is not admitted (11). (4) There, at the completion of the ascent, he observes the mechanism of such selection to the seen abodes. All other materials are excurses that provide information about additional contents of the heavens, where the stations of the soul's ascent are found. At the first heaven the dimensions of the firmament are given. At the heaven of Hades, information is provided about the celestial water collector and luminaries, and at the heaven of the righteous, we are told about the celestial water supply.

³⁷ Torrey, "Apocalypse," 674.

³⁸ Himmelfarb, Ascent, 91.

The designation that defines Baruch's vision, "mysteries of God" (1:4S; 1:8G), which may refer to diverse phenomena, is specifically applied in Wis 2:22 to the mechanism of retribution: "As for the mysteries of God, they knew them not, neither did they hope for a recompense of holiness nor discern the innocent souls' reward."

This interpretation will relate 3 Baruch to many Jewish (and non-Jewish) compositions which are concerned primarily with the fate of the dead and which contain tours of the world of the dead. Thus, also the tour of Baruch may be nekyia, though relocated to heaven (which is also not unique: all categories of the dead are located in heaven in 1 Enoch; 2 Enoch; and Gnostic Apocalypse of Paul).

3. Cosmology

3.1. Cosmographic escapism. Even if one accepts the above interpretation, suggesting that there is an implicit agenda behind the cosmological descriptions of 3 Baruch, "scientific" interest in the physical aspects of the way the world functions remains very relevant for this composition. While other, theophanic, apocalypses are focused on Ma'aseh Merkaba, and are concerned with theosophy as well as with eschatology, 3 Baruch confines itself to Ma'aseh Bereshit, that is, to cosmogony and cosmology. This kind of wisdom, although restricted to chosen ones, is less protected: "Ma'aseh Bereshit must not be explained before two, nor Ma'aseh Merkabah before one, unless he be wise and understands it by himself" (m. Hag. 2.1).

The consolation for the destruction of the Temple and for the injustices of this world, which was quite commonly sought in theophany or in heavenly retribution and especially afterlife, is somehow quantitatively overshadowed in 3 Baruch by another kind of consolation – the satisfaction of intellectual curiosity regarding cosmological issues. "Abraham" says that he can depart from life without sorrow after he has seen "all of the inhabited world and all the creations" (T. Abr. (A) 9:6). This curiosity might also have an escapist dimension: "My heart is not fixed on earthly things, since the earth and all that inhabit it are unstable. But my heart holds fast to the heaven, because there is no trouble in heaven" (T. Job 36:3 [8:9]).

3.2. Pious curiosity. However, beyond consolatory escapism there were other factors behind the introduction of cosmology. Cosmological knowledge was an integral part of religious experience in the ancient world, so that the boundaries between cosmography and theology are not always clear: religio ... est iuncta cum cognitione naturae "religion ... is joined with a knowledge of nature” (Cicero, Div. 72 [149]). The cosmological knowledge could even bring about moral perfection: “Blessed is he who has acquired knowledge ... he is not inclined to unjust action. He beholds the ageless cosmos of the immortal nature, how it has been formed, in what way and manner. The urge to shameful deeds never dwells with such people” (Euripides, Fr. 910). What in the pagan world was a religious concern for the life of gods, often identified with hierophanic nature, had to find alternative justifications for a Jewish explorer. A Jewish approach to the observation of nature was more ambiguous: on the one hand, “Lest you raise your eyes heavenward and observe the sun, the moon and the stars, and you are enticed to bow to them and serve them” (Deut 4:19), and on the other, “When I see your heavens, the work of your fingers, I am inspired to realize my insignificance in relationship to God, who is overwhelming” (Ps 8:4). The applied knowledge, like astrology, as an investigation of a connection between celestial bodies and human destiny on earth, equivocally treated but known to Jews (4Q186; 4Q318; 4Q561; b. Shab. 156a-b), does not seem to interest our visionary: this discipline is preoccupied with the future, while 3 Baruch does not refer to it at all. The computation of time and calendar issues is also not represented here (except the fact of knowledge about the length of the solar year; 6:13). However, even non-applied scientific knowledge was not strange to the ancient Jewish intellectual. Astronomy and other phenomena of nature are treated in Job 28–40 and in apocalyptic works, which also address the ends of the earth, celestial openings, the expanse of heaven, sources of rivers, springs and abysses of the sea, origin of light, motion of luminaries, etc. (e.g., 1 En. 17–19; 60:11–12; 72–87; cf. also 2 Enoch; Apocalypse of Abraham; 2 Baruch; 4 Ezra). God is recognizable through his creation (Wis 13:1) or in even more intimate manner through his habitation: “You will s[i]t upon (the) mountain of h(o)ly [S]inaios; ... [you] who sit upon the s[e]a, ... you who sit [upon] the s[er]pent gods, the [God who s]i[ts upon the s]un ...” (Pr. Jac. 8). Wisdom, including “the accurate knowledge of all things that are, the structure of the world and the working of the elements, the beginning and the end and the midpoint of times, the changes in the sun’s course and the variations of the seasons, cycles of years, positions of the stars, natures of animals, tempers of beasts, powers of the spirits and thoughts of men, uses of plants and virtues of roots,” leads to righteousness (Wis 7:18–20). Interest in the movements of celestial bodies was considered pious by the Rabbis (b. Shab. 75a), and the high evaluation of mathematic and astronomical knowledge as “the after-courses of wisdom” is found in m. Ab. 3.18; b. Hor. 10a; and b. Suk. 28a. Many Rabbinic discussions of astronomic and meteorological problems, including those raised in 3 Baruch, are adduced in the commentary below.

IX. Method

Questions about the content and message of the writing cannot be detached from the interconnected problems of Sitz im Leben, creative method, and form of presentation.

We cannot say much about the Sitz im Leben of 3 Baruch, nor of its creation or function. As for creation, it is difficult to determine whether any given apocalyptic text reflects an actual mystical experience or is a simulating literary invention. Moreover, hypothetical connections to mysterial rites remain unclear, since we do not know enough about these cryptic practices. As for functioning and target audience, these writings could either be esoteric or addressed to a lay audience (cf. one of the interpretations of “be silent” in 1:3S versus “Bring Baruch down to the face of earth, so that he will tell the sons of men what he saw and heard, and all the mysteries you gave him” in 16:1S).

The creative method and presentation of the work can be more effectively traced. The apocalyptic content of 3 Baruch must be a combination of

- (1) traditional knowledge of three types:
 - (1.1) mythology transmitted in Jewish and general lore;³⁹
 - (1.2) exegesis of authoritative texts;
 - (1.3) apocalyptic tradition;
- (2) ecstatic experience (either that of the immediate author of the writing or transmitted as an esoteric tradition);
- (3) speculative thought rationalizing and organizing the former two into more or less coherent and systematic entity.
- (4) As for presentation, the resulting report is given in deliberately enigmatic mode, which could have been conditioned by its ecstatic origin, esoteric function, mythological imagery, implicit intertextual references, and genre conventions.

³⁹ Hellenistic lore can hardly be discerned sometimes from Hellenistic speculative science. The influence of the latter is obvious only in 10:9G.

1. Inherited Wisdom

1.1. Mythology. Mythological imagery shared by many peoples of the Mediterranean and the Near East dominates this composition. The description of the ends of the earth (2:1–2), etiology of demons (derivable from 2–3 and known not only from 1 Enoch 6–16 and Jubilees 5–10, but also from Hesiod and Plato), cosmic beasts, sea and celestial serpents (4–5), anthropomorphic luminaries and their chariots (6–8; very popular in Greco-Roman world), soul-birds (ba of Egyptian mythology), and post-mortem purification lake (known to Egyptians and Plato) all have clear parallels in universal mythological beliefs, while only some of them may be traced in specifically Jewish sources, including the Bible and apocalyptic tradition (like the dyad of Leviathan and Behemoth).

1.2. Hidden exegesis. As shown above (Reconstructed Content), most passages with direct citations, paraphrases, and allusions to the biblical texts in 3 Baruch also contain indications of editorial reworking. The original layers of the text, common for both versions, refer only to three pre-Abrahamic accounts in their aggadic expansions (Adam and Noah in their connection to the Tree of Knowledge and the Tower of Babel in connection to celestial demonology). The Watchers account expected in this context is not entirely ignored but found implicitly in the demonological etiology of their progeny, the demonic Giants-Builders.

At first glance, the rest of the revelatory narrative, which is rich in mythopoeic images deeply rooted not only in Jewish but also in universal lore, looks free of the bounds of authoritative textual tradition. However, it is still possible that many of the mythopoeic motifs here are in fact linked to biblical texts by well known midrashic techniques.

Sometimes entire accounts in 3 Baruch can be structured according to biblical models. The idea of a cosmic journey as presented in Ps 139(138):8–10 conforms perfectly to the order of visions in 3 Bar. 3–8:

Ascent to heaven (2)	If I go up to heavens, you are there;
Hades (3–5)	if I descend to Sheol, here are you.
Sunrise and Phoenix (6)	If I take wings with the dawn,
Sun's route (7) and the sunset (8)	to come rest on the western horizon,
Angelic guidance	even there your hand will guide me, and your right hand will hold me.

One may also compare the sunrise as described in 3 Bar. 6:13–16 with Eccl 12:4:

And the doors to the streets will be shut, when the sound of the grinding becomes low,
and it will rise at the voice of the bird,
and all the daughters of singing will bow down.

It could be read in the following way: the celestial gate is closed behind the sun, the sound of the rotating solar wheel comes down,⁴⁰ the sun rises at the voice of the Sun Bird, and the earthly birds greet it.

The following are some more motifs juxtaposed to the biblical passages that could have served as their implicit prooftexts:

Serpent in the envoys to the Tree (3–5) and the universal image of the serpent guarding the Garden (cf. “the fence of Paradise,” in Sataniel’s account in mss LT 3 Bar. 4:7S)	“who breaches a fence, will be bitten by a serpent” (Eccl 10:8)
“Serpent on a mountain of a rock” (4:3S; cf. PRU 2.3.8–10; = UT 1003.3–10; 1 En. 60:8)	“ Behemoth on a thousand mountains” (Ps 50:10); “a serpent on a rock” (Prov 30:19)
Five angels of Presence (4:7S)	“five men of them that saw the king’s face [מראי פני המלך]” (2 Kgs 25:19)
Planting the celestial Garden (4:7S)	“planting the skies [Heb לנטע שמים]” (Isa 51:16)
Daily purification of the sun (8:4)	“and the sun set and he/it is purified [בא השמש וטהר]” (Lev 22:7)
Mountain of the bird-souls’ (10:2S)	“How will you say to my soul, ‘Take to the mountain, O bird!’” (Ps 11:1); cf. “all birds of mountains” (Ps 50:11)
Lake of the bird-souls (10:2)	“With you is the fountain of life” (Ps 36:10)
Oil reward (probably from the product of the celestial Olive, the Tree of Life; 15:1–2G; 4:7S)	“The fruit of the righteous is the Tree of Life” (Prov 11:30)

⁴⁰ The sun is known to make an extraordinary noise while grating against its wheel: “You may think that it glides in heaven, but it is not so, being rather like a saw which saws through wood” (Gen. Rab. 6.7 and many parallels).

Sometimes the link to the biblical text is even corroborated in midrashic tradition:

“as [the distance] from east to west, so great is the thickness of heaven, as the distance from earth to heaven, so great is its width – the plain where we are standing” (2:5S)

“What distance is longer, from heaven to earth or from east to west? Some said, ‘From east to west, because when the sun is at east or west, everyone can look at it, while when it is in the middle of the firmament, one cannot.’ But the Sages said, ‘Both dimensions are equal, because it is said, ‘As heavens are high above earth,’ etc. ‘As east is far from west’” [כרחק מזרח ממערב; Pss 103:11 and 12]” (b. Tamid 32a)

Builders planning to transfix heaven with a bore (3:7; cf. other accounts associate the building of the Tower with sharp tools: Gen. Rab. 38.7; Tan. B. Noah 27; Sefer HaYashar 9.29; cf. b. Git. 56a).

“one speech [דברים אחדים]” (Gen 11:1) of the Deluge generation interpreted as “sharp things [דברים חדים]” (cf. Gen. Rab. 38.7, where [א]חדים דברים is interpreted as “sharp words”)

“Adam ... was divested of the Glory of God” (4:16G; cf. Apoc. Mos. 20:2; 21:5–6; cf. Gen. Rab. 19.6; Tgs. Gen 3:21; Pesiq. R. 37.2; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 6.5; Pirqe R. El. 14; etc.)

First humans’ “garments of skin [כתנות עור]” (Gen 3:21) interpreted as “garments of light [אור] ;” Ezek 28:13; Gen. Rab. 20.12; Pirqe R. El. 14.20; Abot R. Nat. B)

Sun Bird sheltering the world is called “the protector of the inhabited world” (6:3)

“R. Yohanan said, ‘He [God] is also a protector of the whole world [Heb מנין על כל העולם כולו], as it is written, ‘with the shadow of my hand have I sheltered you’ [Isa 51:16]” (b. Sanh. 99b)

1.3. Apocalyptic Tradition

We do not know to what extent the author of 3 Baruch distinguished between canonical biblical texts and popular apocalyptic writings outside the canon. 3 Baruch presents a unique fusion of traditions, and in many cases it is difficult to distinguish real textual influences from coincidence of single words or images taken out of their contexts. As already noted, most parallels to Jewish works from the same genre or period attest to common traditions rather than direct influences. Among the compositions that could have been in some sort of mutual dependence with 3 Baruch is the Apocalypse of Paul with its incomplete ascent, cosmological depictions of the conduits to heaven (21; 31), intercelestial gates and the names on them (19), measurement of Hades (32), the sun as a witness of human sins (4), the lake of the pious souls (22–23), interceding angels divided into the groups (7–10), Michael’s role in the intercession (43), lists of vices (6), and the neglect of the prayer as a basic sin (10). None of these motifs is unique for these two compositions, but their abundance and sometimes the correspondence in details can hardly be coincidental. The mention of Abimelech spared in the Agrippa’s estate (T:2G) alludes to the story known from 4 Bar. 3:9–5:30. Another motif shared with 4 Baruch is the idea that Michael is “the key-holder of the Kingdom of Heaven” (11:2): he “opens the gates for the righteous” also in 4 Bar. 9:5; (cf. T. Levi 5:1 and 6 possibly also referring to Michael). The unique motif of the “alien breath” (2:1G), in its combination with similar cosmographic depictions, may be shared with Hist. Rech. (Apoc. Zos.) 2:9.⁴¹

The rich traditions of 1 Enoch provide many important parallels, mainly from the Book of Watchers. Among the most significant is the Enochic etiology of demons (15:3–10), which underlies the implicit demonology of 3 Baruch (2–4). The Builders of 3 Baruch are banished to heaven just as the Watchers (probably their fathers) in the Enochic tradition: Hades is celestial in both compositions (3 Bar. 4–5; 1 En. 18–19; 2 En. 10) and the Watchers are also imprisoned in heaven (1 En. 18–19; cf. 2 En. 7 and 18), just as are the Builders (probably their progeny) in 3 Bar. 2–3. 1 En. 60:7, developing Job 41:8–9, mentions the unity of “two monsters”, undivided also in 3 Baruch (4:4G; 5:3G). The division for “the spirits of the righteous, in which there is the bright spring of water” in the mountain (1 En. 22:9), may correspond to the description of S, where the lake of the pious souls is also located “in the midst of the mountain” (10:2S). A list of visions very similar to the combination found in 3 Baruch, but in a changed order, occurs in 1 En. 32:3–33:3. The tour of Baruch looks like an expansion of the following fragment:

3 Baruch	1 En. 32:3–33:3
Trees of Eden (4:7S)	... And I came to Paradise of Righteousness and saw beyond these trees many large trees growing there, large, very beautiful and glorious,
The Vine Tree of Knowledge (4)	and the Tree of Wisdom from which the holy ones eat and know great wisdom. That tree is in height like the fir, and its leaves are like those of the carob; and its fruit is like the clusters of the vine, very beautiful; and the fragrance of the tree penetrates afar. Then I said, “How beautiful is the tree, and ⁴¹ Some close parallels from late works, like Desputatio Panagiotae, Physiologus, etc., must be posterior to 3 Baruch.

	how attractive is its look!" Then Raphael the holy angel, who was with me, answered me and said, "This is the tree of wisdom, of which your father of old and your mother of old, who were before you, have eaten, and they learned wisdom and their eyes were opened, and they knew that they were naked and they were driven out of the Garden."
Beasts (3–5)	And from there I went to the ends of the earth and saw there great beasts, and each differed from the other;
Birds (10)	and [I saw] birds also differing in appearance and beauty and voice, the one differing from the other.
Foundations of heaven (2)	And to the east of those beasts I saw the ends of the earth whereon the heaven rests,
Gates of heaven (passim)	and the gates of heaven open.
Luminaries and their routs (6–9)	And I saw how the stars of heaven come forth, and I counted the gates out of which they proceed, and wrote down all their outlets, one by one, according to their number and their names, their courses and their positions, and their times and their months ...

We may also note similarities between the lists of images in 2 Bar. 10:10–12 and 4 Ezra 7:38–42.

Many astronomic depictions of 3 Bar. 6–8 belong to the same tradition as the ones of 2 Enoch: there are two lower "corruptible" heavens (8:5); the solar and lunar tracks are in the same heaven (11); solar gates (13:1); the sun and moon chariots driven by angels (11:3–5; 12 (A):2; 14 (J):3; also in 1 En. 72:4–5; 73:2; 75:4); the sun's crown taken away and brought back by four (or four hundred in J) angels (14:2–3); the call for or the song to the "light giver" (15 (J):2); phoenixes accompanying and greeting the sun (12:1–2; 15:1–2); and the sun's rest at night (14:3; contradicting 1 En. 72:37). S shares with 2 Enoch the name and the role of Satanael (18:3; 21:4; 29:4–5; 31:4). Some details of the transformational celestial anointing are common to 3 Baruch, 2 Enoch and the Life of Adam and Eve (2 En. (A) 8:5; 22:9; Vita 35; 36:2; 40:1–2; 42:1–2; Apoc. Mos. 9:4; 13:1–3).

Some features of the unique ouranology of 3 Baruch are dispersed through several compositions. The Testament of Levi (rescension α) probably shares with 3 Baruch its original cosmology of three heavens with intercelestial gates (5:1) and celestial waters (2:7), and holds also to the idea of "dark" lower heavens inhabited by punitive and demonic forces (3:1–3; cf. 2 En. 8:5). There is also a Michael-like gate guardian (5:1, 6). See also 4 Ezra 3:19, which may refer to four subsequent intercelestial gates, and in this case, imply the ouranology similar to that of 3 Baruch and the Testament of Levi. Significant ouranological parallels are found also in the Ascension of Isaiah, which clearly divides between the five low and two high heavens and mentions intercelestial gates (8–10) with their gatekeepers (10:23–31) and the demons of the first firmament (7:9). The Apocalypse of Zephaniah, preserved in a fragmentary state, does not mention any heavens beyond the fifth. It reports on angelic intercession, although it describes it differently (3–4). At the gate of heaven, the visionary meets zoomorphic angels similar in their chimeric appearance and location to the Builders of 3 Baruch (3–4), while later the seer is threatened near Hades by a serpent-like angel (6:1–8). In 3 Baruch, both the demonic Builders and Serpent-Hades lack any explicit threatening characteristics, which could nevertheless have been an original raison d'être of these images in the narrative, describing the route of the soul's ascent with its obstacles and dangers. The Apocalypse of Abraham and the Book of Revelation also preserve the traditions combined in the image of Serpent-Hades: the former identifies Hades with the fiery belly of the serpent-like Satan (Apoc. Abr. 23:7–11 and 31:2–5), while the latter attests to the identification of the figure of the celestial serpent with Satan (Rev 12:9). Apoc. Abr. 23:5 is also the only non-Rabbinic source identifying the Tree of Knowledge as the vine (in 1 En. the fruit of the “Tree of Wisdom” is only “like clusters of vine”; 32:4). Apoc. Abr. 17:18–19 may refer to the concept of daily kindling of the primordial light or the separation of the light and darkness (6:13).

3 Baruch does not have much in common with 2 Baruch, except the identical title and similar details in the setting for the revelation, including its topography and preceding lamenting (3:5; 10:5; 11:1–2; 34–35:1; cf. also the description of the return to earth in 3 Bar. 17:2 and 2 Bar. 7:2). If there was some mutual awareness, it is likely to have been of a polemic nature: our Baruch does not share the prophetic ambitions of the protagonist of 2 Baruch. See also 2 Bar. 10:10–12, which declares that some of the central images of the revelation in 3 Baruch (the vine, the sun and the moon, rain and dew) are no longer relevant after the destruction of the Temple (although this could simply be a coincidence; cf. also 4 Ezra 7:38–42). The images of the twofold beast of 3 Bar. 4–5 and Leviathan and Behemoth of 2 Bar. 29:4 are widely known, but their unification with the vine is not common and may help to explain why the account of the twofold beast is interrupted with the vine account in 3 Baruch. As human transgressions defile the sun or darken the angels in 3 Bar. 8:5; 13:1, so also they darken heavenly waters in 2 Bar. 58:1; 60:1.

Some unique traditions found in 3 Baruch could also have been known to Philo. The five trees of Eden (4:7S; known also to Gnostics) and the flowers-virtues (12:5Gff) may relate to elements of Philo's conception of the five trees of Paradise of Virtues (Plant. 8–9 [32–37] and par.), “bearing their fruit in the form of the virtues” (Opif. 56.153).

2. Cosmos Revealed

There is an apparent contradiction between the cosmological content of the book and the condemnation of the cosmological curiosity of the Builders: “Having taken a bore, they were eager to bore heaven, saying, ‘Let us see whether heaven is [made] of clay, or of copper, or of iron.’ When God saw this he did not allow them, but smote them with blindness and confusion of languages, and rendered them as you see” (3:7–8). This appears just a few verses after Baruch himself was curious about the “thickness” of the same heaven (4:4–5). This double standard may be settled by the suggestion that it is not the interest which is improper, but the shamelessly empiric method employed to satisfy it. The conflicting or mutually complimenting methods of empiric observation, speculation, authoritative knowledge, and revelation were all known to ancient thought. In his discussion of the superiority of speculative thinking, Plato also condemned the “light minded” empiricism in cosmological matters of those who, “being students of the worlds above, suppose in their simplicity that the most solid proofs about such matters are obtained by the sense of sight” (Plato, Tim. 91d). The Rabbis, in their turn, also rejected empirical observations, but in favor of authoritative textual witnesses (e.g., b. Tamid 32a; see comm. to 2:5S). 3 Baruch, like other apocalyptic writings, presents an alternative methodology to resolve scientific questions – revelatory experience. The author regards revelation as the ultimate method for acquiring knowledge of the physical world (or at least he refers to such a conception, when he ascribes the cosmological picture he constructed to revealed knowledge). Cosmological knowledge is revealed to other apocalyptic seers (see above), and scientific curiosity could even be among the main factors of mystic experience. In the Mithras Liturgy a potential visionary asks for a revelation in order “to ascend heaven as an inquirer and behold the universe” (484–85). Revelation as an ultimate tool of exploration is not strange to Greco-Roman science (Er’s ascent in Plato, Rep. 10.614a–621d; Scipio’s dream in Cicero, Resp. 6.29), and could have been naturally adopted by the Hellenized thinkers of a people whose own legacy was based on revelation. It is plausible that an ability to obtain mystically revealed knowledge could have been an element of the Bildung of a Jewish intellectual, just as mystical initiation was for his Hellenistic contemporary (cf. Philo, Leg. All. 3.33.100; Cher. 14.48–49; Sacr. 15.60; 16.62). The hypothesis that the origin of 3 Baruch lay in real mystical experience may be corroborated by the report of passing through the tunnels (see comm. to 2:2), unique for early Jewish literature (and thus hardly traditional), but very well attested in clinical reports of dreams and near-death experience.

3. Rationalized Mythology

The revealed cosmographic knowledge is given in 3 Baruch through mythopoeic images. In this respect, 3 Baruch is a good example of “re-mythologized” Jewish thought.”⁴² This model was well developed by the Greeks, who tried to combine new empiric and speculative science with the images of traditional mythology. Thus already since the pre-Socratic Anaximander a speculative cosmogonic philosophy creatively integrated the elements of Hesiod’s traditional theogony. Similarly the creator of 3 Baruch resorts to Ikonen, mythologems or the symbolic language of Jewish and universal lore, integrating them into his more or less coherent ideas of “how the world works.” Some of these ideas may be speculative invention, while most of them probably derived from the national oral tradition and written prooftexts, as well as from foreign lore and science.

The combination of traditional, revealed, and speculative elements is achieved through elegant harmonization of different traditions. The main conceptual tendency of this harmonization seems to be the uniquely systemized reconciliation of physical (astronomic and meteorological) and spiritual (retributive) functions traditionally ascribed to cosmic phenomena:

3.1. Harmonized traditions. An attempt at harmonization is inevitable for a composition based on such an approach. This applies both to the harmonization of different Jewish traditions and to the reconciliation of Jewish and Greco-Roman conceptions. The most remarkable examples are the following:

- the reconstructed account of celestial demons (2–3 and T. Levi 3:2; Asc. Isa. 7:9; T. Sol. 2:2; 4:6; 8:2; Eph 6:12; etc.) juxtaposed to the inaccessibility of heaven for terrestrial demons (2:1G and 1 En. 15:8–10);
- the story on the giants that perished in the Flood (4:10 and 1 En. 89:6; Sib. Or. 2:283; 3 Macc 2:4; Wis 14:6; 4Q370 1.6; CD 2.19–20) harmonized with the traditions concerning the giants that survived the Flood (1 En. 15:3–10; Jub. 5 and 10; Tg. Ps.-Jon. Deut 3:11; b. Nid. 61a; b. Zeb. 113a-b; Pirqe R. El. 23; etc.) and instigated the building of the Tower (2–3 and Pseudo-Eupolemus 9.17.2–3; etc.);
- the motifs of the imprisonment of the fallen Watchers in heaven (1 En. 18–19; 2 En. 7; 18) and of their demonic offspring in the underworld (Jub. 10:7–11) woven into the idea of the imprisonment of the demonic progeny of the Watchers in heaven (2–4);

⁴² Cf. Koch, Rediscovery, 27; Fishbane, Biblical.

- the complex figure of the twofold beast (3–5) combining several characteristics of Leviathan and Behemoth; cosmic, sea and celestial serpents; Hades and Satan, dispersed among diverse traditions (1 En. 60:7; 63:14; 2 Bar. 29:4; 4 Ezra 4:42; 6:52; Apoc. Abr. 30; Rev 6:8; 20:13–14; 12; Pistis Sophia 3.126; b. B. Bat. 72b–75a; Lev. Rab. 22.9–10; etc.);
- the combined image of Jewish Ziz (6–8 and Gen. Rab. 19.4; Lev. Rab. 22.10 and par.) and Greek phoenix (Hesiod, Frag. 204; Herodotus, Hist. 2.73; etc.); and
- the dichotomy of productive masculine and non-productive feminine waters (10:9G and 1 En. 54:7–8; t. Taan. 1.4; etc.) introduced in order to reconcile the tradition of the upper waters (1 En. 41:3; b. Taan. 10a; etc.) with the Hellenistic meteorology of the closed hydrosystem (Xenophanes, Frag. 11; Aristotle, Meteor. 2.9; etc.; cf. Gen. Rab. 13.10–11).⁴³

See also below on the traditions concerning the drinking cosmic serpent and the devouring Hades as the serpent's belly (4–5); the consuming punitive sun and the protective bird (6–8); and the celestial water supply and the purification lake (10). It is difficult to judge whether these harmonized accounts are an innovation of 3 Baruch, or whether, on the contrary, they reflect earlier forms of conceptions, which were subsequently separated into component parts in other preserved sources.

The conceptual collision of originally independent motifs sometimes produces an ironic, probably deliberate, effect:

- Builders intent to pierce the firmament (3:7), which is as thick as the height of the sky or the width of earth (2:4);
- Builders who wished to reach heaven, got what they wanted, and were taken there, but as a punishment for such an intention (2:7; 3:7–8); and
- Beasts, cosmic drinkers and man-eaters (4:5G; 4:6G; 4:4S; 5:1), are in other accounts eaten by men at the eschatological banquet.

See also obvious ironic discourses in Apoc. Abr. 1–6; in many sections of the Testament of Abraham; in the Testament of Job and the fragments of Artapanus; and in Josephus, Ant. 7.172, 195, 238; 11.247, 252. Similarly, we may note the famous ironic treatments of traditional mythological accounts by Euripides.

⁴³ Thus also the ouranological depictions must be not a “misunderstanding of the Greco-Roman models” (Wright, Heaven, 177, 183), but rather a fusion of Greek and Near Eastern astronomic traditions (see comm. to chs. 6 and 11).

3.2. Tamed myths. There are different ways to rationalize mythology. 3 Baruch does not rework the mythologems in the direction of Platonic spiritualization, assuming that every part of the universe must be “ensouled” and inhabited by a creature proper to it (Tim. 39e–40a). Furthermore, the celestial inhabitants of 3 Baruch can hardly be archetypical or spiritual equivalents of earthly beings (as they probably are in Apoc. Abr. 22:2 and passim). At the same time, 3 Baruch does not confine its cosmic forces to purely physical functions. Here the archaic monsters are tamed to serve the cosmic order also in its metaphysic dimensions, functioning as components of the mechanism of retribution (cf. Message above). This multifunctionality does not indicate spiritualization so much as an integration of both the physical and spiritual:

- The Serpent-Hades, by drinking, serves as a cosmic sewerage, disposing of superfluous water (cf. b. B. Bat. 74b; Lev. Rab. 22.9–10 and par.), whereas by eating, it serves as a cosmic executioner, disposing of the sinners (cf. Apoc. Abr. 30).
- The sun not only gives light, but is also a potential punitive force sensitive to human sins and destined to burn the wicked at the end of times (cf. Isa 30:26; Mal 3:19; Apoc. Paul 4; Gen. Rab. 6.6; etc.),⁴⁴ while the sun bird moderates its punitive power (cf. Gen. Rab. 19.4; Lev. Rab. 22.10; b. Git. 31b; b. B. Bat. 25b).
- The lake of birds serves as a cosmic water supply (cf. 1 En. 41:3; b. Taan. 10a; etc.), and probably also functions as a purification basin for the sun and the soul-birds (cf. Plato, Phaed. 113a; Apoc. Mos. 37:3–5; Apoc. Paul 23; Apoc. Pet. 14; Gen. Rab. 6.6 and par.).

Thus, the seeming chaotic conglomerate of archaic images in 3 Baruch is actually best viewed as a rather harmonious picture of the cosmos: the impure destination of lower waters and the wicked from beneath; the pure upper waters, the destination of the just, from above; and between them, the sun with its bird, a pair representing a balanced system of justice and mercy (6–8; cf. Job 25:2; Apoc. Abr. 10:9). See also the widely found Rabbinic conception of the balance of the attributes of Justice and Mercy (מידת הרחמים and מידת הדין): “You [God] conquer the attribute of Justice with Mercy.” (Sifre Num. 134; cf. Sifre Deut. 26; Mek. Beshalah, Shira 3; etc.).

⁴⁴ Cf. the universal motif of the Sun as a deity of justice, mention of the sun in the judgment contexts in Num 25:4; 2 Sam 12:11–12; Ps 19 and probably its ironic and polemical treatment in Eccl 3:16; 4:1; 8:9–10, 14–15 (see Gericke, “Injustice”).

4. Riddles and Subtexts

As shown in Implied content above, our interpretation of 3 Baruch is predicated upon the premise that the book speaks in riddles and preteritions. This text is not only laconic, but also deliberately elliptic, concealing the meanings of revealed images, and the connections between them. The text is furthermore rich in symbols and ekphrases which also contribute to the puzzling character of the narrative.

This character might have been connected to the Sitz im Leben of 3 Baruch, as either a report of actual mystic experience or within a context of mysterial rites, such that it would reflect the logic of either a dream or ritual. Although both suggestions are plausible, neither is provable, and it is also possible for a high level of subtextuality to appear in a purely literary work. The subtexts, which to different extents are regular constituents of any piece of literature, are especially relevant for esoteric narratives, particularly so when they resort to myths. The equivocal and symbolic language referring to known myths and traditions, as well as to other texts, puts prerequisites of previous knowledge to the audience, widens the semantic field of the implicit message, and demands more active interpretational effort. An oracle “does not say and does not hide, but indicates” (σημανεῖ; Heraclitus apud Plutarch, Pyth. Or. 21.404e). Similarly myths “hint” or “speak in riddles” (αἰνίττονται; Plotinus, Enn. 5.1.7.27; cf. Plutarch, Pyth. Or. 407e).⁴⁵ Greek mythic αἰνίγματα in this respect may be phenomena similar to Jewish חידות: “I will open my mouth in a parable [משל], I will utter riddles from of old [קדם-חידות מני]” (Ps 78:2). Also Jesus “did not say anything to them without a parable [χωρὶς δὲ παραβολῆς]” (Mark 4:34; cf. 4:11). “Now we see [as] through a mirror in a riddle [ἐν αἰνίγματι]; then we shall see face to face” (1 Cor 13:12).

This way of expression may be characterized by the extreme mythopoeic concreteness and visibility of the narrative: virtues are flowers, mercy is oil, evil is wine, souls are birds, demonic spirits are satyrs, hell is serpent, etc. The visually puzzling images of 3 Baruch are also a function of the fact that according to the conventions of the genre, the work is supposed to be a report of visual experience. The very genre of “vision” makes apocalyptic thinking ekphrastic (although it can be very difficult to discern when the text employs ekphrasis, as a verbal depiction, reflecting a real or imagined referent, and when symbols function as cultural codes without a concrete referent). Whether our author actually saw these images during mystical experience or whether he developed them on the basis of known traditions, he will in either case have been influenced by the dominant physical imagery of the material culture of his civilization. Leaving aside verbal explanations, this is the complete list of what our visionary saw between the first and the last gates of heaven:

⁴⁵ On the riddle language in antiquity see Stroumsa, Hidden.

- satyrs/fauns (2:3; 3:3),
- intercoiling serpents (caduceus; 4:4G),
- four or five trees of Paradise (4:7S),
- vine tree (Eden; 4:8ff),
- sun’s quadriga (6:1–2),
- sun bird stretching its wings before the sun (possibly the winged sun; 6:2–8; 7:3–6; 8:2),
- moon’s chariot (9:3),
- lake with birds (10:2–3),
- cultic phiale (11:8),
- virtues (probably personified Aretai, Virtutes; 11:9G), and
- cultic baskets bearers (kanephoroi; 12:1).

All these images are found in Hellenistic and Near Eastern iconography, and some were very popular. Some of them, like the depictions of the vine or of the sun’s quadriga, have been preserved also among the remnants of ancient Jewish art.

Ekphrasis causes the verbal narrative to assimilate to the dumb or “feebly mumbling” visual arts, at the same time lacking advantages of real visual presentation. While the interpretive potential of such a narrative grows, the explicit communicative efficiency becomes more limited. Visualization is a major factor in the incomprehensibility of apocalyptic literature for the uninitiated recipient, be it a stranger, an ignorant member of the originally intended audience, or a modern researcher. This fact is only partly compensated by the eratopocritic narrative accompanying these depictions. In 3 Baruch most of the images pass unexplained and some are explicated only in the later rescension, thus presupposing the ability of the target audience to decipher them on their own.

X. Worldview

Below I adduce a systemized description of the world as seen by the author(s) or early editor(s) of 3 Baruch, including their values and beliefs. In assembling and analyzing clues to the implied outlook of the composition as a whole, we must bear in mind that some of the evidence could have been introduced by individual redactors, who are likely to have differed from the original author(s), and from one another, in various aspects of their worldviews. When possible, we will aim to distinguish between these layers (see Reconstructed Content). Many descriptions below are the result of new interpretations, the basis for which may be found in the commentaries on the text.

1. God

God is mentioned in the setting of the vision and in the biblical excurses and other explanations heard by Baruch in its course, while in the vision per se God is completely absent. The vision of the “glory of God” promised to Baruch (4:2S; 6:12; 7:2; 11:2; 16:6S),⁴⁶ must refer not to theophany, but to other celestial mysteries.

The transcendentality of God is emphasized. God resides in the heaven (probably supercelestial) which is inaccessible even to angels, except for Michael (11, 14). Although God does communicate directly with humans – he sent an angel to Noah to declare his will in response to Noah’s prayer (4:15) and similarly he heard and Baruch’s prayer and sent him a revelatory angel (1:6),⁴⁷ – there are still two intermediate stages in human interaction with God (see the sections on Angels and Retribution).

Any dualistic assumptions are implicitly rejected. Although the Tree of Knowledge, the primary source of evil, was planted by Sammael, the historical, as well as cosmic, evil is controlled by God. He is the one who permitted Nebuchadnezzar to destroy Jerusalem, so that nations can ask:

⁴⁶ G adds that Adam was “divested” of it, and all wine abusers “become far from it” (4:16G).

⁴⁷ Probably the later G adds that Abimelech was saved in the the destruction of the Temple “by the hand of God” (T:2G).

“Where is their God?” (1:1–2G). He brought the Flood about and destroyed the generation of giants (4:10). God created “alien spirits” (probably terrestrial demons; 2:1G) and possibly “banished” those of them who initiated the building of the “Tower of War against God,” from earth to the lower heaven (2:7).⁴⁸ He also cursed Sammael/Satanael and his plant (4:8). In the same manner, God is in full control over other celestial forces: he appointed the Sun Bird (6:5), created and punished the moon (9:8); celestial birds praise him (10:5S; 10:7G); Michael brings men’s virtues to God (11:9G; 14:2G) and intercedes before God for other angels (12:5).⁴⁹ God is the judge of the Day of Judgment (1:7).

2. Angels

Angels are very central in this apocalypse which is deprived of a theophany. The heavenly experience of Baruch focuses on angelic beings with its culmination in the encounter with Michael, who is the “commander-of-chief” of the celestial army, the gate-guard of the “Kingdom of Heaven,” the intercessor for humans and angels, and probably the high priest of the celestial liturgy (11–16). Four angels (of Presence), Michael, Gabriel, Uriel, and Raphael, heading 200,000 other angels and the angel Satanael among them, planted Eden (4:7S). Two other angels, Sarasael (Sar Rasael) and Panuel, transfer revelations (4:15; T:1S; 2:4). Panuel is not only a transmitter but also an “interpreter of the revelations” (11:6G).

Angels in zoomorphic form serve the luminaries, drawing their chariots. They are the forty fiery winged horses of the sun’s quadriga (6:2S) and the twenty oxen (and lambs in G) of the moon’s vehicle (9:3). Four angels renew the sun’s crown every night (8:4). The anthropomorphic lights themselves, although not defined thus, may be a kind of angelic beings, along with the three celestial Beasts (3–6). The birds of the celestial lake who praise God unceasingly, although defined in G as the souls of the pious (10:5G), could otherwise be regarded as angelic beings (10:3–7).

Among angelic orders there are the “angel of hosts [or “of powers”],” like Panuel (1:8G; 2:1S; 2:6G; 10:1S; 11:1S),⁵⁰ and the “angels over the principalities,” as the attendants of humanity are called (12:3G). “Virtues”

⁴⁸ He also “appeared” to the builders and “confused their languages” (3:6) and “smote them with blindness” (3:8).

⁴⁹ While human transgressions defiling the sun do not please God (8:5).

⁵⁰ He is also called “archangel” in 10:1G. Another detail we learn on him is that he is winged (7:6G; 8:6S).

(11:9G; 12:5G; 14:2G) are also treated as a name for an angelic class. The interceding angels are divided to groups assigned to the righteous and the sinners, and in the later redaction they are also assigned to average men (12–16). The angels of the sinners are “darkened” (13:1) and serve as a punitive force (16:3), but still are clearly distinguished from demonic forces (see Demons below).

Could 3 Baruch feature any angelolatric beliefs? Baruch calls his guiding angel “Lord” (5:1; 6:4, 9; 11:2, 3, 8; 12:2), the same title he uses in addressing God (T:1; 1:2). Panuel orders Baruch to stop direct communication with God (“be silent” of 1:3S), and below the seer is shown that there are two mediatory stages in human interaction with God, and even the low-rank angels are deprived of the direct contact with him: they bring men’s virtues (or prayers in S) before Michael, who transfers them further to God (12–16) and then returns them the recompense. According to its nature they serve as beneficial (15) or punitive angels (16). Although no human prayer to angels is mentioned, Panuel bows to Michael (11:6) and interceding angels pray him for reassignment (13:3). The special interest in luminaries can also be added to the indications of angelolatric tendencies (6–9).

All this may indicate that 3 Baruch either shared some of the angelolatric beliefs or at least developed from a context in which such ideas were being held.

3. Demons

Demonology, so significant in the worldview of the ancients, is almost absent from the explicit narrative of this apocalypse. However, the traces of the implied Enochic demonology, slightly developed, are recognizable throughout the book. The implicit demonology of 3 Baruch can be reconstructed as follows: Sammael-Satanael, who planted the Tree of Knowledge (4:7S; 4:8) is a fallen angel cursed because he seduced Adam (4:8). The gigantic progeny of the fallen angels has mostly perished in the Flood (4:10). The surviving giants or the demonic spirits of the deceased giants have initiated the building of the “Tower of War against God” (2–3). Their motive could be the incapability of the “alien spirits” to cross the border between earth and heaven (2:1G). As is typical for demons, in the course of the construction works they turned out to be especially harmful for women in childbirth and for newborns (3:5; the only demons named thus in 3 Baruch hurt children in 16:3). As a punishment they were blinded, transformed into the likeness of satyrs, and “banished” to the very heaven which they so wished to reach, but ironically to its lower and impure realm (2–3), just below Hades (4–5). They might have constituted one of the dangers of the lower stages of mystic or post-mortem ascents: just before meeting them, the guiding angel showed Baruch “means of safety” (according to one interpretation of 2:2S); the righteous bird-souls, whom we meet when they have reached the higher heaven (10:5G), must have passed through this lower realm as well. The locusts which punish the wicked (16:3) may also belong to the demonic locusts motif.

4. Physical World

The physical world consists of earth and heaven; no mention of the nether-world is made. Hades and the sources of fruitful waters are all in heaven. The rivers are mentioned, but their abyssal sources are not referred to, and the word “abyss,” even in a figurative sense, never appears. If 3 Baruch still reflects a tripartite cosmos, it is not the three realms of the Mesopotamian and ancient Israelite models as defined in Ex 20:4 and Deut 5:8: “heaven above,” “earth beneath,” and “water under the earth,” but rather the three realms of those Psalms that consistently have the “sea” instead of the “water under the earth” (Pss 8:7–8; 33:6–8; 36:5–6; 69:34; 96:11; 104:1–2; 135:5; 146:6). This “sea” is reachable from both earth (4:7G; 4:5S) and heaven (4:6G; 4:4S; 5:1), and must include the River (Oceanus) that divides the two (2:1G).

4.1. Earth. In distinction to 1 Enoch, 3 Baruch contains almost no geographic descriptions. Exceptions to this are the list of rivers (4:7G; 4:5S) which belong rather to the water system; a few topographic details about Jerusalem and the area (T:2G); and mention of Babylon (1:1S). There may possibly be an implicit reference to the three “kingdoms” of the terrestrial realm, i.e., earth, water, and air, in the introduction of the three cosmic beasts. These probably correspond, respectively, to the spheres of Hades (“Behemoth on thousand mountains”), the sea dragon (Leviathan), and the gigantic bird (Ziz-Phoenix).

We must also take into account that when Baruch observes something, it does not necessarily mean that the object is situated in the heaven in which he stands. In this case, Leviathan and Hades might have been on earth below, while the sun and Phoenix could have been higher in the third heaven (cf. esp. 7:2G), with Baruch himself in the second. Thus, in the Apocalypse of Abraham, the visionary from the seventh heaven explicitly observes earth and the contents of the lower firmaments (cf. Nag Hammadi Apocalypse of Paul; Cicero, Resp. 6.19).

4.2. Waters. Hydrology, and especially the water circle integrating terrestrial as well as celestial waters, is among the primary concerns of 3 Baruch. It includes the uncrossable River (Oceanus) which separates heaven from earth (2:1G). Being thus located between the two realms, the Sea is filled by earthly rivers from the one side while being drunk by the celestial Beasts from the other. The terrestrial rivers and the sea by themselves may constitute a closed cyclic system (as Eccl 1:7 and Aristotle's Meteorology), but it is rendered open by two supernatural factors. Rain and dew (or at least the fruitful ones) come from a celestial basin (10:6–9), so that in order to dispense superfluous water being accumulated this way (and thus probably to prevent a new deluge) the celestial Beasts must drink a regular portion from the Sea on a daily basis (4:6G; 4:4S; 5:1). The novelty of this system, probably implied also in the stories about the drinking beasts in rabbinic texts (Leviathan and Behemoth), is the fact that the ultimate water collector, the abyss-tehom, is located in heaven. Thus the terrestrial water system is integrated into the cosmic one.

4.3. Heaven. Heaven, especially in its connections to physical and moral life on earth, is the chief object of Baruch's exploration. It is not flat, but hemispheric, and the "foundations of heaven" are separated from the "ends of earth" by the River (Oceanus) encircling the earth (2:1).

The round line of the horizon, where the Oceanus and heaven meet, is holed with 360 "gates of heaven" (6:13). From the fact that the gates are said to open at the sunrise and must serve the sun's movements, we can infer that the hemisphere revolves horizontally and that the sun passes each day of the solar year through a different opening, in order to continue to rise and set constantly in the east and west. Another indication of the revolving of heaven is the fact that otherwise we would be unable to explain the visible motion of the fixed stars, which are "suspended" on it (9:8G).

The hemispheric firmaments are very thick: only the lower one is as thick as the distance from earth to heaven (G; or as the width of earth in S; 2:5), and Baruch has to travel through it for a month (2:2). Since his journeys through the subsequent heavens are longer (3:1; 4:2; 11:2), their firmaments must be even more massive. This makes the gates look rather like tunnels, well attested in mystic and clinical practices.

Everything Baruch observes is located between the hemispheres (cf. "airs" of the heavens in Asc. Isa. 8:1 and 9:1), which are thus not necessarily higher than the surface of the gates of the sun (which means that the tour could be also not a literal ascent but a horizontal motion between the gates at the lower "ends of heavens"). The original text must have had three (or even two) such spaces between the firmaments below the highest heaven inaccessible to Baruch (see comm. to ch. 11). The lower impure heavens contain demons and Hades (2–5). The realm of the luminaries (where defilement is still possible; see 8:4) separates the lower heavens from the higher pure heavens, known in other sources as “holy” or “incorruptible,” where probably the sun’s crown and the soul-birds are purified in the celestial lake (10). Every one of these heavens might contain one station in the celestial ascent of the soul-birds: Hades as a final stage for the wicked; the lake as a waiting abode for the righteous; and the eternal resting place in “the Kingdom of Heaven” behind the gate of the last firmament visited by Baruch.

5. History

The sequence of events of cosmic and national history appearing in 3 Baruch is as follows: The angels planted Paradise (4:7S). God forbade Adam to touch (4:8G) the Vine-Tree of Knowledge planted by Sammael-Satanael (4:7S; 4:8). The latter deceived Adam, disguising himself as the serpent (4:8; 9:7). The moon did not hide itself, as it was supposed to do (9:7). As a result, God cursed Sammael and his plant (4:8) and punished the moon (9:7). God caused the Flood, which destroyed the giants, entered Paradise and washed the vine from there (4:10). Noah, when his hesitations were resolved by revelation, replanted the vine together with other plants he found (4:11–15). The Tower of War against God was erected by cruelly enforced labor to the height of 463 cubits, but God punished the builders (3:4–8). God permitted Nebuchadnezzar to capture Jerusalem, his own vineyard (1:1–2). The latter fact is the only national event mentioned in 3 Baruch. Note that all the rest belong to the pre-Tower period of the universal undivided humanity.

6. Moral

While human vices are enumerated thrice (4:17; 8:5; 13:4), the content of positive moral demands is not mentioned at all, and virtues are mentioned without specification (and only in G: 11:9G; 12:5G; 14:2G). Prayer is mentioned in both versions in 11:4. S assigns a special weight to prayer, consistently putting it in place of “virtues” in G (11:9G; 14:2G). The interpolated fragments (one of which is in G) give special place to the neglect of public prayer as a basic sin (13:4G; 15:3S; 16:4S). The Vine excursus presents the abuse of wine as a “father” of the main sins (4:17). Human transgressions defile the sun (8:5) and darken angels (13:1–4).

The “virtues,” although not specified, may be symbolically loaded. Presented as flowers (12:5), in the allegoric language of Philo they may be connected to the four trees of Eden planted by four archangels (4:7S; “paradise of virtues”), and thus may also be identified with the Hellenistic four cardinal virtues also attested in Jewish literature.

7. Retribution

The retribution mechanism is symbolically presented as a liturgic service of the angels exchanging the flowers – human virtues in G or prayers in S – for a due recompense: oil (deciphered as “mercy” in S) for the righteous (15:1–2) and locusts with hail and thunder for the sinners (16:3; specifically only the plague of the children is mentioned). If the oil reward for the pious may refer to a protective chrismatic seal, and also to the anointing for the eternal life and/or resurrection, the sinners must be punished in their lifetime by plagues (16:3) and, eaten by Hades, be deprived from the afterlife (4:5G). The Day of Judgment (1:7) might have referred to this procedure. It is not specified whether this day denotes extra-chronological, annual (the New Year or the Day of Atonement), lifetime, or eschatological judgment.

8. Afterlife

The afterlife is treated explicitly only in those passages which are not shared by both versions (4:5G; 4:16G; 10:5G; 16:5–10S) and which must be later explanatory interpolations into the content probably implied (at least from the point of view of the editors) by the rich imagery of 3 Baruch.

G reports on three post-mortem abodes: Hades, the lake of birds, and the Kingdom of Heaven (S mentions also “the resting places of the righteous” [16:6S] probably identical to the latter). The souls of the deceased ascend in the form of birds to a higher heaven. Demons and Hades are located in the lower heavens which are probably on the way of the soul-birds (2–5). The wicked are eaten in corpore by Hades (4:5G), and thus are probably deprived of a further ascent, as well as of both immediate afterlife and resurrection. By contrast, the just arrive at the celestial lake (10:5G), probably their purification or transformation basin and temporary abode, where they praise God (10:7G; 10:5S) and await the ointment reward given to their angels (15:2). This chrism probably enables the just to ascend further and to enter the gate to the “Kingdom of Heaven” on which their names are already inscribed (11:2G).

9. Numeric Symbolism

God has “disposed all things by measure and number and weight” (Wis 11:20; on the importance of numbers, cf. Philo, Opif. 3 and passim; Origen, Hom. Num. 1; 4; 5.2.2–3; 7.4.4; 8.1.5; Augustine, Gen. ad Lit. 4.3.7–4.6.12). Numbers are abundant in 3 Baruch. Examining the following list, one should take into account that letters with numerical values are highly susceptible to corruption during both translation and transmission of manuscripts. In the Slavonic rescension the possible transliteration from Glagolitic to Cyrillic script could have been an additional factor of corruption. The numbers not mentioned in the text explicitly but derived from it through calculation are marked with an asterisk (*).

- 1 cubit of water per day is drunk by Serpent (4:6G; 4:4S; 5:1)
- *2 (2+1) heavens (see comm. to ch. 11)
- 3 primary rivers (4:7G; 9 in 4:5S)
- *3 (or 3+1) heavens (see comm. to ch. 11)
- *3 named angels of G (2:5; 4:15; 11:4ff)
- *4 angels of presence planting the Garden of Eden (4:7S)
- *4 trees of Eden planted by the angels of presence (4:7S)
- *4 virtues (see comm. to 11:9G)
- 4 – the chariot-of-four of the sun (6:2)
- 4 angels taking care of the sun’s crown (8:4)
- *4 kinds of locusts of the total of 7 plagues (16:3)
- *5 (4+1) total of named angels planting the Garden of Eden (4:7S)
- *5 (4+1) total trees of Eden (4:7S)
- 5 numbered heavens of the extant versions (11:1)
- *5 main vices of wine (4:17; cf. 13 vices in 8:5G; 13:4G)
- *7 named angels of S (1:1; 2:5; 4:15; 11:4ff)
- *7 plagues (16:3)
- 9 primary rivers (4:5S; 3 in 4:7G)
- 9 cubits away the sun the phoenix is circling (6:2G)
- *13 vices (8:5G; 13:4G; cf. 5 vices in 4:17)
- 15 cubits of water above the heights (4:10)
- 20 angelic oxen drive the chariot of the moon (9:3S)
- 30 days journey to the first heaven (2:2)
- 36 angels accompany the sun at the sunset (8:1S; 40 of 6:2 minus 4 taking care of the sun’s crown in 8:4)
- 40 days of Noah’s prayer (4:14)
- 40 angels drive the chariot of the sun (6:2)
- 60 days journey to the second heavens (3:2G; 7 in S)

- 185 days journey to the third heaven (4:2; 187 in S)
 *224 days of the whole journey according to S: 30 (2:2); 7 (3:2); 187 (4:2)
 *275 days of the whole journey according to G: 30 (2:2); 60 (3:2); 185 (4:2)
 300 men throw the plummet to the distance which measures the Hades' belly (5:3G; 255 in S)
 360 rivers of which 3 (9 in S) are primary ones (4:7G; 4:5S; 373 or 364 in S)
 365 gates of heaven (6:13; 65 in S)
 *365 days of the whole journey according to the reconstruction of Franson: 30 (2:2); 60 (3:2); *90 (10); 185 (4:2) (see comm. to 10:1)
 463 cubits height of the Tower of Babel (3:6)
 4,000 modia is the size of letters on the wings of the Sun Bird
 200,003 angels planted the Garden of Eden with Michael (4:7S; 200,000 plus Michael and three other angels of Presence)
 409,000 giants were destroyed by the Flood (4:10)

Noticeable is the lack of the basic typological numbers like 10, 12, and even such explicit use of 3 (except primarily rivers only in G) and 7. The low figures are all Babylonian divisors: 3, 4, 5, 9, 20, 36, 40, 60, 300, 360, while most higher figures are prime numbers: 463, 200,003, 409 (thousands) (except 185, 365).

Isopsephy-gematria techniques, although attested in general Hellenistic culture and abundant in Rabbinic sources,⁵¹ are presented in sole examples in Hellenistic Jewish literature (Syb. Or. 1:232–331; 5:12–51; Asc. Mos. 9:1; Rev 13:18; 21:17). 3 Baruch significantly supplements this list:

- 360, the number of rivers filling the sea drunk by the celestial dragon corresponds to the numerical value of the Hebrew loan word from Greek – דַּרְקִין;
- 409 thousands, the number of giants having perished in Flood, must be derived from the Gk κατακλυσμός in Hebrew letters – קַטְקִלִּיסְמִס* (unattested elsewhere).⁵²

Less obvious may be the following: 300 in measuring Hades is a gematria of Heb מַעְמָקִים “depths” (cf. “out of the depth of the belly of Hades” in Sir 51:5); 463 cubits, the height of the Tower of Babel, is a numeric value of זִנוּת “debauchery” (cf. “Babylon the great, mother of prostitutes and of earth’s abominations” in Rev 17:1–6).

⁵¹ Cf. Collins, “Numerical,” 116.

⁵² These two gematrias were noticed by Bohak (“Gematrias”).

XI. General Conclusions

The present treatment of 3 Baruch hopes to provide the key for interpretation of one of the most enigmatic Jewish Hellenistic texts. The main general conclusions that can be derived from the summary above would be the following:

- The textual evidence enables a stratification of 3 Baruch into at least four textual layers that bear witness to different stages of its editing. The differentiation of the content belonging to the Urtext (or at least the earliest reconstructable layer) makes possible the more efficient discussion of the points below.
- The elliptic and ekphrastic method of presentation, characteristic for the Urtext (and only partly compensated in later explanatory editorial layers) poses an obstacle for the understanding of 3 Baruch. However, this method does not conceal a skilful construction of the narrative involving sophisticated harmonization of diverse traditions, and provides enough hints to enable a convincing reconstruction of the implied content, structure and message of the book.
- The reconstruction of the implied content of 3 Baruch is corroborated by diverse and independent sources, and solves many problems of interpretation. The very feasibility of convincing reconstruction based mainly on parallels from Jewish sources, proves that the text has deep roots in early Jewish lore.
- 3 Baruch, properly read, significantly enriches our data on the history of motifs of early Jewish lore, at times providing missing links between different stages of their development, and preserves important evidence on proto-Gnostic and proto-Christian traditions.

XII. Bibliography

Abbreviations

ANET	Pritchard James B. Ancient Near Eastern Texts Relating to the Old Testament . 3rd ed. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1969.
ANRW	Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt . Berlin-New York, 1972–
BAR	Biblical Archaeology Review
BASOR	Bulletin of American Schools of Oriental Research
BETHL	Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologiarum Lovaniensium
BibInt	Biblical Interpretation
BLDR	Библиотека литературы Древней Руси . С.-Петербург: Наука, 1999
BSOAS	Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies
BZNW	Beihefte zur Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft und die Kunde der älteren Kirche
CAD	The Assyrian Dictionary of the Oriental Institute of Chicago . Chicago: Oriental Institute, 1956–.
CBQ	Catholic Biblical Quarterly
CEJL	Commentaries on Early Jewish Literature
CH	Corpus Hermeticum
CIG	Boeckh, August. Corpus Inscriptiones Graecae . Berlin: Ex Officina Academica, vendit G. Reimeri libraria, 1828–1877.
CT	Faulkner, Raymond Oliver. The Ancient Egyptian Coffin Texts . 3 vols. Warminster: Aris & Phillips, 1973–1978.
CTA	Herdner, Andrée. Corpus des tablettes en cuneiformes alphabétiques à Ras-Shamra-Ugarit de 1929 à 1939 . Paris: Imprimerie Nationale: P. Geuthner, 1963.
DK	Diels, Hermann and Walther Kranz. Die Fragmente der Vorsokratiker . Zurich: Weidmann, 1985.
DSD	Dead Sea Discoveries
EI	Eretz Israel
FGH	Jacoby, Felix. Die Fragmente der griechischen Historiker . Leiden: Brill, 1954–1964.
HR	Hatch, Edwin, and Henry A. Redpath. A Concordance to the Septuagint and other Greek Versions of the Old Testament . Grand Rapids, Michigan: Baker, 1998.
HSCP	Harvard Studies in Classical Philology
HTR	Harvard Theological Review

- IEJ Israel Exploration Journal
- IG Gaertringen, F. Hiller von et al., Inscriptiones Graecae. Berlin: Walter de Gruyter, 1913–
- JANESCU Journal of the Ancient Near Eastern Society of Columbia University
- JBL Journal of Biblical Literature
- JBQ Jewish Bible Quarterly
- JCS Journal of Cuneiform Studies
- JE Singer, Isidore et al., eds. The Jewish Encyclopedia. 12 vols. New York-London: Funk & Wagnalls, 1901–1905.
- JJS Journal of Jewish Studies
- JJTP Journal of Jewish Thought and Philosophy
- JNES Journal of Near Eastern Studies
- JQR Jewish Quarterly Review
- JRelS Journal of Religious Studies
- JSHRZ Jüdische Schriften aus hellenistisch-römischer Zeit, Gütersloh: Gerd Mohn, 1973–
- JSIJ Jewish Studies, an Internet Journal
- JSJ Journal for the Study of Judaism in the Persian, Hellenistic, and Roman Period
- JSOT Journal for the Study of the Old Testament
- JSP Journal for the Study of Pseudepigrapha
- KAR Ebeling Erich, Keilschrifttexte aus Assur religiösen Inhalts. Wissenschaftliche Veröffentlichungen der Deutsche Orient-Gesellschaft, Bd. 28, 34. Leipzig: J.C. Hinrichs'sche Buchhandlung, 1919, 1923.
- LPG Lampe, Geoffrey W. H. A Patristic Greek Lexicon. Oxford-New York: Clarendon Press, 1961.
- LSG Liddell, Henry G., Robert Scott, and Henry S. Jones. A Greek-English Lexicon (with a Revised Supplement). Oxford: Clarendon, 1996.
- MGWJ Monatsschrift für Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judentums
- Mikl Miklosich, Franz, Ritter von. Lexicon Palaeoslovenico-Graeco-Latinum. Vindobonae: G. Braumüller, 1862–1865.
- MMM Cumont, Franz, Textes et monuments figurés relatifs aux mystères de Mithra. Bruxelles: H. Lamertin, 1896–1899.
- NHC Robinson, James McConkey. The Facsimile Edition of the Nag Hammadi Codices. Leiden: Brill, 1972.
- NovT Novum Testamentum
- Or Orientalia (NS)
- Ostr Остромирово евангелие 1056–57 г.
- OTP Charlesworth, James H., ed. The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1983–1985.
- PG Migne, Jacques-Paul, ed. Patrologia Graeca. 162 vols. Paris: J.-P. Migne, 1857–1866.
- PGM Preisendanz, Karl et al. Papyri Graecae Magicae. Leipzig-Berlin: B.G. Teubner, 1928–1931.

- PRU Le Palais Royal d'Ugarit
 PVTG Pseudepigrapha Veteris Testamenti Graece
 RB Revue Biblique
 REJ Revue des études juives
 RHPR Revue d'histoire et de philosophie religieuses
 SBLSP Society of Biblical Literature Supplement Series
 Srezn Срезневский, Измаил Иванович. Материалы для словаря древнерусского языка по письменным памятникам. С.-Петербург: Тип. Имп. академии наук, 1893–1903.
 SVTP Studia in Veteris Testamenti Pseudepigrapha
 Supr Codex Supraslensis
 Syll Dittenberger, Wilhelm. Sylloge inscriptionum Graecarum. Leipzig: S. Hirzelium, 1915–24.
 TSAJ Texte und Studien zum Antiken Judentum
 TS 14th cent. Книга Бытия по рук. Троицко-Серг. лавры XIV в., Книга Исход по рук. Троицко-Серг. лавры XIV в.
 Upyr Списки с рук, Упыря Лихого 1047 г.
 UT Gordon, Cyrus H. Ugaritic Textbook. Analecta Orientalia 38. Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1965.
 Vasmer Фасмер, Макс. Этимологический словарь русского языка. С доп. О. Н. Трубачева, под ред. Б. А. Ларина. Москва: "Прогресс", 1986–87.
 VC Vigilae Christianae
 VT Vetus Testamentum
 WUNT Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament
 ZAW Zeitschrift für die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft
 ZNW Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft und die Kunde der älteren Kirche

3 Baruch: Editions, Translations, Commentaries, Monographs, Articles and Chapters

Editions

Greek Version

- Agourides, Savvas Chr. "ΕΛΛΗΝΙΚΗ ΑΠΟΚΑΛΥΨΙ ΤΟΥ ΒΑΡΟΥΧ (ΕΛΛΗΝΙΚΟΣ ΒΑΡΟΥΧ) (Εἰσαγωγή – Κείμενο καὶ Σχόλια)." Θεολογία 55 (1984): 149–168.
 Bauer, Johannes Baptist "Apocalypsis Baruchi." In: Christian Abraham Wahl. Clavis librorum Veteris Testamenti apocryphorum philologica. Leipzig, 1853; repr. Graz: Akadem. Druck- u. Verlagsanstalt, 1972, 629–645
 Denis, Albert-Marie with Yvonne Janssens. Concordance de l'apocalypse grecque de Baruch. Publications de l'Institut orientaliste de Louvain, 1. Louvain-la-Neuve: Université catholique de Louvain, Institut orientaliste, 1970.

- Denis, Albert-Marie with Yvonne Janssens. Concordance grecque des pseudépi-graphes d'Ancien Testament. Concordance, corpus des texts, indices. Louvain-la-Neuve: Université catholique de Louvain, Institut orientaliste, 1987, 866–868.
- James, Montague Rhodes. “Apocalypse of Baruch.” In: idem, ed. Apocrypha Anecdota: Second Series. Texts and Studies: Contributions to Biblical and Patristic Literature, 5.1. Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 1897, li–lxxi, 83–94.
- Penner, Ken M. and David M. Miller, eds. “3 (Greek Apocalypse of) Baruch.” Edition 1.0. No pages. In: The Online Critical Pseudepigrapha. Edited by Ken M. Penner, David M. Miller, and Ian W. Scott. 2006. Online: <http://www.purl.org/net/ocp/3Bar.html>
- Picard, Jean-Claude, ed. “Apocalypsis Baruchi Graece.” In: idem, Testamentum Iobi, Apocalypsis Baruchi Graece. (PVTG 2) Leiden: Brill, 1967, 81–96.

Slavonic Version

- Gaylord, Harry E. “Славянский текст Третьей книги Варуха.” (The Slavonic Text of the Third Book of Baruch). Полата книгописная 7 (1983): 49–56.
- Gaylord, Harry E. The Slavonic Version of III Baruch. Ph.D. Dissertation. The Hebrew University of Jerusalem, 1983.
- Hercigonja, Eduard. “Videnie Varuhovo u Petrisovu Zborniku iz 1468 godine.” Zbornik za filologiju i lingvistiku 7 (1964): 63–93.
- Ivanov, Jordan. Богомилски книги и легенды. Sofija: Pridvorna pechatnitsa, 1925, 193–200.
- Ivanov, Jordan. Livres et légendes bogomiles. Paris: Maisonneuve et Larose, 1976.
- Milkov, Vladimir Vladimirovich. “Откровение Варуха.” In: idem, ed. Древнерусские апокрифы: тексты, переводы, комментарии. Памятники древнерусской мысли: исследования и тексты, 1; С.-Петербург: Издательство Русского Христианского Гуманитарного Института, 1999, 476–498.
- Novaković, Stojan. “Otkrivenje Varuhove.” Starine 18 (1886): 203–209.
- Sokolov, Mikhail Jur'evich. “Апокрифическое откровение Варуха.” Древности: Труды Славянской Комиссии Императорского Московского Археологического Общества 4.1 (1907): 201–258.
- Speranskij, Mikhail Mikhailovich. “Рукописное собрание.” Известия историко-филологического Института князя Безбородко в Нежине 22 (1906): 27–28.
- Tikhonravov, Nikolaj Savvich. “Откровение Варуха.” Апокрифическія сказанія. Сборник отделения русского языка и словесности (SORJaS) 58 (1894): 48–54.

Translations

Parallel Versions

- Gaylord, Harry E. “Greek Apocalypse of Baruch.” In: OTP. Vol. 1, 653–679.

Greek Version

- Fernández Marcos, Natalio. "Apocalipsis griego de Baruc: Introducción, traducción y notas." Sefarad 50 (1990): 191–209.
- Hage, Wolfgang. Die griechische Baruch-Apokalypse. (JSRZ 5.1) Gütersloh: Gerd Mohn, 1974.
- Hartom, Eliyahu Shmuel. "Hazon Baruch Bet." In: Abraham Kahana, ed. Ha-Sefarim Ha-Hitzonim. 2 vols. Tel-Aviv: Meqorot, 1937. Vol. 1, 408–425.
- Hartom, Eliyahu Shmuel. "Hazon Baruch Bet." In: Eliyahu Sh. Hartom, ed. Ha-Sefarim Ha-Hitzonim. 9 vols. Tel-Aviv: Masada, 1958–1967. Vol. 8, no. 2.
- Hughes, Henry Maldwyn. "The Greek Apocalypse of Baruch." In: Robert Henry Charles, ed. The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament in English. 2 vols. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1913. Vol. 2, 527–541.
- Hughes, Henry Maldwyn. Revised by Aubrey William Argyle. "The Greek Apocalypse of Baruch." In: Hedley Frederik Davis Sparks, ed. The Apocryphal Old Testament. Oxford: Clarendon Press / New York: Oxford University Press, 1984, 897–914.
- Ryssel, Victor. "Die Apokalypsen des Baruch [syr. u. griech.]." In: Emil Kautzsch, ed. Die Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen des Alten Testaments. 2 Bd. Tübingen: Mohr, 1900. Bd. 2, 402–457.
- Vitkovskaja, Maria and Vitkovskij Vadim. "Откровение Варуха." In: Апокрифические апокалипсисы. (Античное христианство: источники) С.-Петербург: Алетейя, 2003, 140–155.

Slavonic Version

- Bonwetsch, Gottlieb Nathanael. "Das Slavisch Erhaltene Baruchbuch." In: Nachrichten von der Königl. Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen: Philologisch-Historische Klasse, 1896, 91–101.
- Gaylord, Harry E. "Redactional Elements Behind the Petrisov Zbornik of III Baruch." Slovo 37 (1987): 91–115.
- Gaylord, Harry E. The Slavonic Version of III Baruch. Ph.D. Dissertation. The Hebrew University of Jerusalem, 1983.
- Karpov, Aleksej Jurjevich. "Откровение Варуха." In: Аполлон Кузьмин and Алексей Карпов, eds. Златоструй: Древняя Русь X–XIII вв. (Дороги человеческой мысли, 1) Москва: Молодая гвардия, 1990, 276–282.
- Milkov, Vladimir Vladimirovich. "Откровение Варуха." In: Idem, ed. Древнерусские апокрифы. С.-Петербург: РХГИ, 1999, 476–498.
- Morfill, William Richard. "The Apocalypse of Baruch Translated from the Slavonic." In: Montague Rhodes James, ed. Apocrypha Anecdota: Second Series. (Texts and Studies: Contributions to Biblical and Patristic Literature, 5.1) Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 1897, 95–102.
- Petkanova, Donka. "Апокрифи." In: Стара балгарска литература 1. София, 1981, 71–76, 353–354.

Commentaries

Parallel Versions

Gaylord, Harry E. "Greek Apocalypse of Baruch." In: OTP. Vol. 1, 653–679.

Slavonic Version

Gaylord, Harry E. The Slavonic Version of III Baruch. Ph.D. Dissertation. The Hebrew University of Jerusalem, 1983.

Monograph

Harlow, Daniel C. The Greek Apocalypse of Baruch (3 Baruch) in Hellenistic Judaism and Early Christianity. (SVTP 12) Leiden: Brill, 1996.

Articles and Chapters

Andersen, Francis I. "The Sun in the Book of the Secrets of Enoch." Khristianskij Vostok 4 (2006): 380–412.

Bohak, Gideon. "Greek-Hebrew Gematrias in 3 Baruch and in Revelation." JSP 7 (1990): 119–121.

Dean-Otting, Mary. "III Baruch." In: Heavenly Journeys: A Study of the Motif in Hellenistic Jewish Literature. (Judentum und Umwelt 8) Frankfurt am Main/Bern/New York, 1984, 98–174.

Denis, Albert-Marie. Introduction aux pseudépigraphes grecs d'Ancien Testament. Leiden: Brill, 1970, 79–84.

Eissfeldt, Otto. Einleitung in das Alte Testament unter Einschluss der Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen sowie der Apokryphen- und Pseudepigraphenartigen Qumran-Schriften. (Neue theologische Grundrisse) Tübingen: Mohr, 1964, 854–855.

Ferrar, William J. "Greek Apocalypse of Baruch (III Baruch)." In: The Uncanonical Jewish Books; A Short Introduction to the Apocrypha and Other Jewish Writings 200 B.C.-100 A.D. London: Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge / New York: Macmillan, 1918, 92–93.

Fischer, Ulrich. Eschatologie und Jenseitserwartung im hellenistischen Diasporajudentum. (BZNW 44) Berlin-New York: Walter de Gruyter, 1978.

Frasson, Martina. "La struttura dei cielli in 3 Baruc: uno studio filologico." Henoch 14 (1992): 137–144.

Gaylord, Harry E. "Redactional Elements behind the Petrisov Zbormik of III Baruch." SLOVO 37 (1987): 91–115.

Gaylord, Harry E. "How Satanael lost his 'el'." JJS 33 (1982): 303–309.

Hage, Wolfgang. Die griechische Baruch-Apokalypse. (JSHRZ 5.1) Güterloh: Gerd Mohn, 1974, 15–44.

- Hahn, Ferdinand. "Frühjüdische und urchristliche Apokalyptik. Eine Einführung, Neukirchen-Vluyn." BThSt 36 (1998): 76–85.
- Jacobson, Howard. "A Note on the Greek Apocalypse of Baruch." JSJ 7 (1976): 201–203.
- Karpov, Aleksej Jurjevich. "О календаре славянской книги Откровение Варуха." Палестинский сборник 32 (1993): 81–83.
- Lavrov, Petr Alekseevich. "Заметка об апокрифах в рукописи Публичной библиотеки Греч. 70." Juzhnoslovenski Filolog 2 (1921): 61–64.
- Lods, Adolphe. Histoire de la littérature hébraïque et juive depuis les origines jusqu'à la ruine de l'état juif (135 après J.-C.) Genève: Slatkine, 1982.
- Lüdtke, Willy. "Beiträge zu Slavischen Apocryphen: 2. Apokalypse des Baruch." ZAW 31 (1911): 218–231.
- Nickelsburg, George W. E. Jewish Literature between the Bible and the Mishna: A Historical and Literary Introduction. Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1981, 299–303.
- Orlov, Andrei A. "The Flooded Arboretums: The Garden Traditions in the Slavonic Version of 3 Baruch and in the Book of Giants." CBQ 65 (2003): 184–201.
- Philonenko-Sayar, Belkis. "La version slave de l'Apocalypse de Baruch." In: La littérature intertestamentaire: Colloque de Strasbourg, 17–19 Octobre 1983. (Bibliothèque des centres d'études supérieures spécialisés: Travaux du Centre d'études supérieures spécialisés d'histoire des religions de Strasbourg) Paris: Presses universitaires de France, 1985, 89–97.
- Picard, Jean-Claude. "Je e montrerai d'autres mystères, plus grand que ceux-ci ..." Notes sur 3 Bar et quelques écrits apparentés." In: Histoire et anthropologie des communautés juives et chrétiennes dans les sociétés anciennes. Paris: Centre de recherches de l'École Pratique des Hautes Études section des Sciences Religieuses, 1991, 39.
- Picard, Jean-Claude. "Observationes sur l'Apocalypse Grecque de Baruch I: Cadre historique fictif et efficacité symbolique." Semitica 20 (1970): 77–103.
- Sokolov, Matvej Ivanovich. "Феникс в апокрифах об Енохе и Варухе," In: Новый сборник статей по славяноведению, составленный и изданный учениками В. И. Ламанского. С.-Петербург, 1905, 395–405.
- Stichel, Rainer. "Die Verführung der Stammeltern durch Satanael nach der Kurzfassung der slavischen Baruchapokalypse." Kulturelle Traditionen in Bulgarien. Bericht über das Kolloquium der Südosteuropa-Kommission 16.–18 (1987–1989): 116–128.
- Stone, Michael Edward. "Apocalyptic Literature." In: Idem, ed. Jewish Writings of the Second Temple Period: Apocrypha, Pseudepigrapha, Qumran Sectarian Writings, Philo, Josephus. (Compendia Rerum Iudicarum ad Novum Testamentum, II.2) Assen, Netherlands: Van Gorcum / Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1984, 383–441, 410–412, 440.
- Toy, Crawford Howell and Lous Ginzberg. "Apocalypse of Baruch." In: JE. Vol. 1. London, 1896, 549–551.

- Turdeanu, Emil. "Apocryphes bogomiles et apocryphes pseudo-bogomiles." RHPR 69 (1950): 176–218 (for 3 Baruch, see especially 171–181).
- Turdeanu, Emil. "L'Apocalypse de Baruch en slave." Revue des études slaves 48 (1969): 23–48.
- Turdeanu, Emil. "Les apocryphes slaves et roumains: leur apport à la connaissance des apocryphes grecs." Studi bizantini e neoellenici 8 (1953): 50–52.
- Zagrebin, Vjacheslav Michajlovich. "О происхождении и судьбе некоторых славянских палимпсестов Синая." In: Из истории рукописных и старопечатных изданий: Исследования, обзоры, публикации. Сборник научных трудов. Ленинград, 1979, 61–80.

Other References

- Abrahams, Israel. "The Words of Gad the Seer." In: Livre d'Hommage a la Memoir du Dr Samuel Poznański. Warsaw: Edit par le comité de la grande synagogue a Varsovie, 1927; reprint, Jerusalem: n.p., 1969, 8–12.
- Achelis, Elizabeth. The World Calendar. 2nd ed. New York: The World Calendar Association, Inc. 1931.
- Alexander, Philip S. "Enoch and the Beginnings of Jewish Interest in Natural Science." In: Charlotte Hempel, Armin Lange and Hermann Lichtenberger, eds. The Wisdom Texts from Qumran and the Development of Sapiential Thought. (BETHL 159) Leuven: Peeters, 2002, 223–243.
- Allison, Dale C. Testament of Abraham. (CEJL) Berlin-New York: Walter de Gruyter, 2003.
- Altmann, Alexander. "The Ladder of Ascension." In: Studies in Mysticism and Religion Presented to Gershom G. Scholem. Jerusalem: The Magnes Press, 1967, 1–32.
- Ameisenowa, Zofia. "Animal-Headed Gods, Evangelists, Saints and Righteous Men." Journal of the Warburg and Courtauld Institutes 12 (1949): 21–45.
- Ameisenowa, Zofia. "Das messianische Gastmahl der Gerechten in einer Hebräischen Bibel aus dem 13. Jarhundert." MGWJ 79 (1935): 409–422.
- Amiet, Pierre. Art of the Ancient Near East. New York: H. N. Abrams, 1980.
- Andersen, Francis. "2 Enoch." In: OTP. Vol. 1, 91–221.
- Anderson, Gary A. "The Cosmic Mountain: Eden and its Early Interpreters in Syriac Christianity." In: Gregory Allen Robbins, ed. Genesis 1–3 in the History of Exegesis: Intrigue in the Garden. Lewiston / Queenston: Edwin Mellen, 1988, 187–224.
- Anderson, Gary A. "The Exaltation of Adam and the Fall of Satan." JJTP 6 (1997): 105–134.
- Anderson, Gary A. "The Garments of Skin in Apocryphal Narrative and Biblical Commentary." In: James L. Kugel, ed. Studies in Ancient Midrash. Harvard: Harvard University Center for Jewish Studies, 2001, 101–143.
- Aptowitzer, Victor. "Die Seele als Vogel." MGWJ 69 (1925): 150–169.

- Armstrong, John H. S. The Paradise Myth. London-New York: Oxford University Press, 1969.
- Bar-Ilan, Meir. "The Date of the Words of Gad the Seer." JBL 109:3 (1990): 475–492.
- Bar-Ilan, Meir. "Prayers of Jews to Angels and Other Mediators in the First Centuries CE." In: Joshua J. Schwartz and Marcel J.H.M. Poorthuis, eds. Saints and Role Models in Judaism and Christianity. (Jewish and Christian Perspectives 7) Leiden: Brill, 2004, 79–96.
- Bauckham, Richard. "The Parable of the Vine: Rediscovering a Lost Parable of Jesus." NTS 33:1 (1987): 84–101.
- Bauckham, Richard. "Early Jewish Visions of Hell." JTS 41:2 (1990): 355–385.
- Bauckham, Richard. The Climax of Prophecy: Studies on the Book of Revelation. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1993.
- Bauckham, Richard. The Fate of the Dead: Studies on the Jewish and Christian Apocalypses. (Supplements to Novum Testamentum 93) Leiden: Brill, 1998.
- Baumgarten, Joseph M. "The Essene Avoidance of Oil and the Laws of Purity," Revue de Qumran 6 (1967), 183–192.
- Baumgarten, Joseph M. "Immunity to impurity and the Menorah." JSIJ 5 (2006): 141–145.
- Belova, Olga. Славянский бестиарий. Москва: Индрик, 2000.
- Bendlin, Andreas, Wolfgang Röllig and Alexandra von Lieven. "Moon deities." In: Hubert Cancik and Helmuth Schneider, eds. Brill's New Pauly. Antiquity volumes. Leiden: Brill, 2007, 199–202.
- Bergren, Theodore A. "The List of Leaders in 5Ezra 1:39–40." JBL 120:2 (2001): 313–327.
- Bezold, Carl, ed. Die Schatzhöhle. Aus dem syrischen Texte dreier unedirten Handschriften ins Deutsche übersetzt und mit Anmerkungen versehen. 2 vols. Leipzig: J.C. Hinrichs, 1883 and 1888.
- Bezold, Carl and Franz J. Boll, Reflexe astrologischer Keilinschriften bei den griechischen Schriftstellern. (Sitzungsberichte der Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften, Philosophisch-historische Klasse, Heft 7) Heidelberg: Carl Winter's Universitätsbuchhandlung, 1911.
- Bhatnagar, Arvind and William Livingston. Fundamentals of Solar Astronomy. Hackensack, NJ: World Scientific, 2005.
- Bickerman, Elias J. "The Warning Inscriptions of Herod's Temple." JQR 37, No. 4 (1947): 387–405.
- Bietenhard, Hans. Die himmlische Welt im Urchristentum und Spätjudentum. (WUNT 2) Tübingen: Mohr, 1951.
- Black, Matthew. The Book of Enoch or I Enoch. (SVTP 7) Leiden: Brill, 1985.
- Blackmore, Susan J. and Tom S. Troscianko. "The Physiology of the Tunnel." Journal of Near-Death Studies 8 (1989): 15–28.
- Bockmuehl, Markus. Revelation and Mystery in Ancient Judaism and Pauline Christianity. (WUNT 2. Reihe, 36) Tübingen: J.C.B. Mohr, 1990.
- Bogaert, Pierre-Maurice. "De Baruch à Jérémie. Les deux rédactions conservées

- du livre de Jérémie." In: Idem, ed. Le Livre de Jérémie: le prophète et son milieu, les oracles et leur transmission. (BETHL 54) Leuven: Peeters, 1981, 168–173.
- Bohak, Gideon. "Greek-Hebrew Gematrias in 3 Baruch and in Revelation." JSP 7 (1990): 119–121.
- Bonomi, Joseph and Samuel Sharpe. The Alabaster Sarcophagus of Oimeneptah I, King of Egypt, Now in Sir John Soane's museum, Lincoln's Inn Fields. London: Longman, Green, Longman, Roberts, and Green, 1864.
- Böttrich, Christfried. Weltweisheit, Menschheitsethik, Urkult: Studien zum slavisches Henochbuch. (WUNT 2. Reihe, 50) Tübingen: J.C.B. Mohr, 1992.
- Bousset, Wilhelm. "Die Himmelfahrt der Seele." Archiv für Religionswissenschaft 4 (1901): 136–169, 229–273.
- Bregman, Marc. "Mishna and LXX as Mystery: An Example of Jewish-Christian Polemic in the Byzantine Period." In: Lee I. Levine, ed. Continuity and Renewal: Jews and Judaism in Byzantine-Christian Palestine. Jerusalem: Dinur Center / Yad Izhak Ben Zvi / The Jewish Theological Seminary of America, 2004, 333–342.
- Broek, Roelof van den. The Myth of the Phoenix, according to Classical and Early Christian Traditions. (Études préliminaires aux religions orientales dans l'empire romain 24) Leiden: Brill, 1972.
- Brovarski, Edward. "Doors of Heaven." Or 46 (1977): 107–115.
- Buck, Abraham de and Alan Henderson Gardiner. The Egyptian Coffin Texts. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1935.
- Budge, Ernest Alfred Wallis. The Book of the Dead: An English Translation of the Chapters, Hymns, etc., of the Theban Recension. 3 vols (Books on Egypt and Chaldaea 6–8) London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., 1901.
- Budge, Ernest Alfred Wallis. The Book of the Cave of Treasures: A History of the Patriarchs and the Kings, Their Successors, from the Creation to the Crucifixion of Christ, Translated from the Syriac Text of the British Museum MS. Add. 25875. London: The Religious Tract Society, 1927.
- Bulgarelli, Valentino. L'immagine della rugiada nel libro d'Osea: Uso molteplice di una figura nella Bibbia ebraica e nella Settanta. (Supplementi alla Rivista biblica 39) Bologna: Edizione dehoniane, 2002.
- Bullard, Roger Aubrey, ed. The Hypostasis of the Archons: The Coptic Text with Translation and Commentary. (Patristische Texte und Studien 10) Berlin: Walter de Gruyter, 1970.
- Campbell, Bonner. Studies in Magical Amulets, Chiefly Graeco-Egyptian. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 1950.
- Casel, Odo. De philosophorum Graecorum silentio mystico. Giessen: Töpelmann, 1919.
- Chadwick, Henry. "The Silence of Bishops in Ignatius." HTR 43.2 (1950): 169–172.
- Chajes, Hirsch P., La lingua ebraica nel cristianesimo primitivo. Firenze: Galletti e Cassuto, 1905.
- Charles, Robert Henry. A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Revelation of St. John: With Introduction, Notes, and Indices, also the Greek text and English translation. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1920.

- Charles, Robert Henry. The Apocalypse of Baruch. London: A. and C. Black, 1896.
- Charles, Robert Henry. The Book of the Secrets of Enoch. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1896.
- Charles, Robert Henry. The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. London: Adam and Charles Black, 1908.
- Charlesworth, James Hamilton. "Jewish Astrology in the Talmud, Pseudepigrapha, the Dead Sea Scrolls, and Early Palestinian Synagogues." HTR 70.3–4 (1977): 183–200.
- Clermont-Ganneau, Charles Simon. "Une stèle du temple de Jérusalem," RAr 28 (1872): 214–34, 290–96.
- Clifford, Richard John. Cosmic Mountains in Canaan and the Old Testament: A Thesis. Cambridge, Mass., Harvard University Press, 1972.
- Collart, Paul and Jacques Vicari. Le sanctuaire de Baalshamin a Palmyre. Vol. 1. (Bibliotheca Helvetica Romana, 10). Rome: Institut Suisse de Rome, 1969.
- Collins, Adela Yarbro. "The History-of-Religions Approach to Apocalypticism and the "Angel of the Waters" (Apoc 16; 4–7)." CBQ 39 (1977): 367–81.
- Collins, Adela Yarbro. "Numerical Symbolism in Jewish and Early Christian Apocalyptic Literature." ANRW II.21.2 (1984): 1253–1257.
- Collins, Adela Yarbro. "The Seven Heavens in Jewish and Christian Apocalypses." In: John J. Collins and Michael Fishbane, eds. Death, Ecstasy, and Other Worldly Journeys. Albany, N.Y.: State University of New York Press, 1995, 62–66.
- Collins, Adela Yarbro. Cosmology and Eschatology in Jewish and Christian Apocalypticism. (Supplements to the Journal for the study of Judaism 50) Leiden: Brill, 1996.
- Collins, John Joseph. The Apocalyptic Imagination: An Introduction to the Jewish Matrix of Christianity. New York: Crossroad, 1984.
- Collins, John Joseph, "The Genre Apocalypse in Hellenistic Judaism." In: David Hellholm, ed., Apocalypticism in the Mediterranean World and the Near East: Proceedings of the International Colloquium on Apocalypticism (Uppsala, August 12–17, 1979). Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1983, 531–548.
- Conzelmann, Hans. 1 Corinthians: A Commentary on the First Epistle to the Corinthians. (Hermeneia: A Critical and Historical Commentary on the Bible) Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1975.
- Cook, Stanley. The Religion of the Ancient Palestine in the Light of the Archeology. London: British Academy, 1930.
- Cowton, Christopher J. "The Alms Trade: a Note on Identifying the Beautiful Gate of Acts 3.2." NTS 42.3 (1996): 475–476.
- Cross, Frank Moore. Canaanite Myth and Hebrew Epic: Essays in the History of the Religion of Israel. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1973.
- Cross, Frank Moore. "King Hezekiah's Seal Bears Phoenician Imagery." BAR 25 (1999): 42–45.
- Crowfoot, John Winter. Objects from Samaria. London: Palestine Exploration Fund, 1957.
- Crum, Walter Ewing. "Coptic Anecdota." JTS 44 (1943): 176–179.

- Culianu, Ioan Petru. Psychanodia: A Survey of the Evidence Concerning the Ascension of the Soul and its Relevance. (Études préliminaires aux religions orientales dans l'empire romain 99) Leiden: Brill, 1983.
- Culianu, Ioan Petru. Expériences de l'extase: Extase, Ascension et Récit Visionnaire de l'hellénisme au Moyen Age. Paris: Payot, 1984.
- Daiches, Samuel. Babylonian Oil Magic in the Talmud and in the Later Jewish Literature. (Jews' College Publications, 5) London: Jews' College, 1913.
- Deissmann, Adolf. Light from the Ancient East. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1927.
- Delcor, Mathias. "La nature du coq sacré (alektruôn iros) du De Dea Syra Section 48." Semitica 37 (1987): 57–61.
- Deutsch, Natanniel. "Dangerous Ascents." JJTP 8 (1998): 1–12.
- Deutsch, Natanniel. Guardians of the Gate: Angelic Vice Regency in Late Antiquity. (Brill's Series in Jewish Studies, 22) Leiden: Brill, 1999.
- Dever, William G. "The Silence of the Text: An Archaeological Commentary on 2 Kings 23." In: Michael D. Coogan, J. Cheryl Exum, Lawrence E. Stager, eds. Scripture and Other Artifacts: Essays on the Bible and Archaeology in Honor of Philip J. King. Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 1994, 143–168.
- Dieterich, Albrecht. Eine Mithrasliturgie. Leipzig: B.G. Teubner, 1903.
- Dillmann, August. Liber Henoch, aethiopice, ad quinque codicum fidem editus, cum variis lectionibus. Leipzig: F.C.G. Vogel, 1851.
- Drower, Ethel Stephana. The Mandaean of Iraq and Iran: Their Cults, Customs, Magic, Legends, and Folklore. 2nd ed. Leiden: Brill, 1962.
- Ebeling, Erich. Keilschrifttexte aus Assur religiöse Inhalt. Leipzig: J.C. Hinrichs, 1915–1923.
- Ehrenberg, Erica. "The Rooster in Mesopotamia." In: Eadem, ed. Leaving No Stones Unturned: Essays on the Ancient Near East and Egypt in Honor of Donald P. Hansen. Winona Lake, Ind.: Eisenbrauns, 2002, 53–61.
- Epstein, Abraham. From the Jewish Antiquities. Jerusalem, 1957. [in Hebrew]
- Faulkner, Raymond Oliver. The Ancient Egyptian Coffin Texts. 3 vols. Warminster: Aris & Phillips, 1973–1978.
- Faulkner, Raymond Oliver. The Ancient Egyptian Pyramid Texts. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1969.
- Fideler, David R. Jesus Christ, Son of God: Ancient Cosmology and Early Christian Symbolism. Wheaton, Ill.: Quest Books, 1993.
- Fishbane, Michael. Biblical Myth and Rabbinic Mythmaking. Oxford-New York: Oxford University Press, 2003.
- Fischer, Ulrich. Eschatologie und Jenseitserwartung im hellenistischen Diasporajudentum. (BZNW 44) Berlin-New York: Walter de Gruyter, 1978.
- Forsyth, Neil. The Old Enemy. Princeton: Princeton Univ. Press, 1987.
- Frankfort, Henri. Cylinder Seals: A Documentary Essay on the Art and Religion of the Ancient Near East. London: Macmillan, 1939.
- Fuchs, Gisela. Mythos und Hiobdichtung. Aufnahme und Umdeutung altorientalischer Vorstellungen. Stuttgart: W. Kohlhammer, 1993.

- Garner, Gordon. "Jerusalem: Another Golden Gate." Buried History 19 (1983): 28–31.
- García Martínez, Florentino and Eibert J.C. Tigchelaar, (eds.), The Dead Sea Scrolls Study Edition. 2 vols. Leiden: Brill, 1997–1998.
- Gaster, Moses. "The Sefer ha-Ma'asiyot." In: Appendix to Judith "Montefiore" College Reports for the Years 1894–5 and 1895–6. Ramsgate: Judith "Montefiore" College, 1896, 96–97.
- Gericke, Jaco W. "Injustice under the Sun? A New Perspective on Possible Allusions to Ancient Near Eastern Solar Mythology in Qohelet." Old Testament Essays 16:2 (2003): 244–258.
- Gilbert, Otto. Die meteorologischen Theorien des griechischen Altertums. Hildesheim: G. Olms, 1967 (Leipzig: Teubner, 1907).
- Gillmayr-Bucher, Susanne. "Wenn die Dichter verstummen: Das Schweigen in den Psalmen." Theologie und Glaube 93 (2003): 316–332.
- Ginsburger, Moise. "Les introductions araméennes a la lecture du Targoum." REJ 73 (1921): 14–26, 186–194.
- Ginzberg, Louis. The Legends of the Jews. Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society of America, 1909–1938.
- Goedicke, Hans. "The Egyptian Idea of Passing from Life to Death." Orientalia 24 (1955): 225–239.
- Goldstein, Jonathan A. "The Central Composition of the West Wall of the Synagogue of Dura-Europos." JANESCU 16–17 (1984/85): 99–142.
- Goldstein, Morris. Jesus in Jewish Tradition. New York: Macmillan, 1950.
- Golitzin, Alexander. "Recovering the "Glory of Adam": "Divine Light" Traditions in the Dead Sea Scrolls and the Christian Ascetical Literature of Fourth-Century Syro-Mesopotamia." In: James R. Davila, ed. The Dead Sea Scrolls as Background to Postbiblical Judaism and Early Christianity. Papers from an International Conference at St. Andrews in 2001. (Studies on the Texts of the Desert of Judah 46); Leiden: Brill, 2003, 275–308.
- Goodenough, Erwin Ramsdell. Jewish Symbols in the Greco-Roman Period. 13 vols. New York: Pantheon, 1953–68.
- Goodenough, Erwin Ramsdell. By Light, Light: The Mystic Gospel of Hellenistic Judaism. Amsterdam: Philo Press, 1969.
- Gordon, Richard L. "Selene." In: Hubert Cancik, Helmuth Schneider and Manfred Landfester, eds. Der Neue Pauly. Vol. 11. Leiden: Brill, 2001. Cols. 353–354.
- Green, Arthur. Keter: The Crown of God in Early Jewish Mysticism. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1997.
- Greenfield, Jonas Carl and Sokoloff, Michael. "Astrological and Related Omen Texts in Jewish Palestinian Aramaic." JNES 48:3 (1989): 201–214.
- Gruenwald, Ithamar. Apocalyptic and Merkavah Mysticism. (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des antiken Judentums und des Urchristentums 14) Leiden: Brill, 1980.
- Gura, Aleksandr Viktorovich. Символика животных в славянской народной традиции. Москва: Индрик, 1997.

- Hacham, Noah. "3 Maccabees: An Anti-Dionysian Polemic." In: Jo-Ann A. Brant, Charles W. Hedrick, Chris Shea, eds. Ancient Fiction. The Matrix of Early Christian and Jewish Narrative. (Society of Biblical Literature: Symposium Series 32) Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2005, 167–183.
- Hachlili, Rachel. "The Zodiac in Ancient Jewish Art: Representation and Significance." BASOR 228 (1977): 61–77.
- Hachlili, Rachel. Ancient Jewish Art and Archeology in the Land of Israel. (Handbuch der Orientalistik 7; Der Alte Vordere Orient 2/B/4) Leiden: Brill, 1988.
- Halperin, David J. The Faces of the Chariot: Early Jewish Responses to Ezekiel's Vision. (TSAJ 16) Tübingen: J.C.B. Mohr (Paul Siebeck), 1988.
- Halsberghe, Gaston H. The Cult of Sol Invictus. (Études préliminaires aux religions orientales dans l'empire romain 23) Leiden: Brill, 1972.
- Hannah, Darrell D. Michael and Christ: Michael Traditions and Angel Christology in Early Christianity. (WUNT 2. Reihe, 109) Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1999.
- Harris, J. Rendel. The Rest of the Words of Baruch: a Christian Apocalypse of the Year 136 A.D. London: C.J. Clay, 1889.
- Heidel, Alexander. The Gilgamesh Epic and Old Testament Parallels. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1949.
- Heimpel, Wolfgang. "The Sun at Night and the Doors of Heaven in Babylonian Texts." JCS 38.2 (1986): 127–151.
- Heinemann, Joseph. "Seridim Mi-yesiratam ha-Piyyutit shel ha-Meturgemanim ha-Qedumim (Remains of the Piyyutic Creativity of the Early Aramaic Translators)." Sifrut 4: 362–375 (1973): 363–365.
- Henning, Walter Bruno. "The Book of the Giants." BSOAS 11 (1943): 52–74.
- Herzer, Jens. 4 Baruch (Paraleipomena Jeremiou). (Writings from the Greco-Roman World 22) Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2005.
- Herzog, Zeev. Das Stadttor in Israel und in den Nachbarländern. Mainz am Rhein: Philip von Zabern, 1986, 89–156.
- Himmelfarb, Martha. Ascent to Heaven in Jewish and Christian Apocalypses. New York: Oxford University Press, 1993.
- Himmelfarb, Martha. Tours of Hell: An Apocalyptic Form in Jewish and Christian Literature. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1983.
- Hoffmann, Immanuel B. Die Anschauungen der Kirchenväter über die Meteorologie. München: Theodor Ackermann, 1907.
- Holland, Richard. "Zur Typik der Himmelfahrt." Archiv für Religionswissenschaft 23 (1925): 207–220.
- Horowitz, Wayne. Mesopotamian Cosmic Geography. (Mesopotamian Civilizations 8). Winona Lake, Ind.: Eisenbrauns, 1998.
- Horst, Pieter Willem van der. Ancient Jewish Epitaphs: An Introductory Survey of a Millennium of Jewish Funerary Epigraphy (300 BCE-700 CE). (Contributions to Biblical Exegesis and Theology 2) Kampen, the Netherlands: Kok Pharos, 1991.

- Horst, Pieter Willem van der. "Jewish Poetical Tomb Inscriptions." In: Jan Willem van Henten and Pieter Willem van der Horst, eds. Studies in Early Jewish Epigraphy. (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des antiken Judentums und des Urchristentums, 21). Leiden: Brill, 1994, 129–147.
- Horst, Pieter Willem van der. "Silent Prayer in Antiquity." Numen 41 (1994): 1–25.
- Huggins, Ronald V. "Noah and the Giants: A Response to John C. Reeves." JBL 114:1 (1995): 103–110.
- Hünemörder, Christian. "Apfel." In: Hubert Cancik and Helmuth Schneider, eds. Der Neue Pauly. Vol. 1. Leiden: Brill, 1996. Col. 831.
- Hurtado, Larry W. One God, One Lord: Early Christian devotion and ancient Jewish Monotheism. Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1988.
- Idel, Moshe. Ascensions on High in Jewish Mysticism: Pillars, Lines, Ladders. (Pastis Incorporated, 2) Budapest-New York: Central European University Press, 2005.
- Idel, Moshe. Kabbala: New Perspectives. Jerusalem-Tel Aviv: Schocken 1993.
- Iliffe, John Henry. "The θάνατος Inscription from Herod's Temple: Fragment of a Second Copy," Quarterly of the Department of Antiquities in Palestine 6 (1936): 1–3; pls. 1–2.
- Imhoof-Blumer, Friedrich and Otto Keller, Tier- und Pflanzenbilder auf Münzen und Gemmen des klassischen Altertums. Leipzig: B.G. Teubner, 1889, repr. 1972.
- Inowlocki, S., "'Neither Adding nor Omitting Anything': Josephus' Promise not to Modify the Scriptures in Greek and Latin Context," Journal of Jewish Studies 56:1 (2005), 48–65.
- Isbell, Charles D. Corpus of the Aramaic Incantation Bowls. (SBL Dissertation series, 17) Missoula: SBL and Scholars Press, 1975.
- Janowski, Bernard and Ute Neumann-Gorsolke. "Das Tier als Exponent dämonischer Mächte." In: Bernd Janowski, Ute Neumann-Gorsolke and Uwe Glessmer, eds. Gefährten und Feinde des Menschen. Das Tier in der Lebenswelt des alten Israel. Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener, 1993, 278–282.
- Jastrow, Morris, Kaufmann Kohler and Frank H. Knowlton. "Apple." In: JE. Vol. 1, 23–25.
- Jastrow, Morris, Wilhelm Nowack, Ginzberg Louis and Kaufmann Kohler. "Birds." In: JE. Vol. 2, 217–219.
- Jastrow, Morris. Religion of Babylonia and Assyria. Boston: Ginn, 1898.
- Jatsimirskij, Alexandr Ivanovich. Библиографический обзор апокрифов в южнославянской и русской письменности (Списки памятников), вып. 1: Апокрифы ветхозаветные. Петроград: Отделение русского языка и словесности Российской академии наук, 1921.
- Jensen, Peter Christian Albrecht. Die Kosmologie der Babylonier: Studien und Materialien. Strassburg: Karl J. Trübner, 1890.
- Jonge, Marinus de, ed. Studies in the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. (SVTP 3) Leiden: Brill, 1975.
- Kagan-Tarkovskaja, M. D. "О потопе." In: BLDR 3. 2000, 108–112.
- Kagan-Tarkovskaja, M. D. "Слово о крестном древе." In: BLDR 3. 2000, 284–291.

- Kahle, Paul E. Bala'izah; Coptic Texts from Deir el-Bala'Izah in Upper Egypt. London: Oxford University Press, 1954.
- Kaufman, Asher S. "Where the Ancient Temple of Jerusalem Stood." BAR 9:2 (1983): 40–59.
- Kee, Howard Clark. "Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs." In: OTP. Vol. 1, 775–828.
- Keel, Othmar. "Sturm-gott – Sonnengott – Einziger." Bible und Kirche 49:2 (1994): 82–92.
- Keel, Othmar. "Zwei kleine Beiträge zum Verständnis der Gottesreden im Buch Ijob." VT 31 (1981): 220–225.
- Keel, Othmar. Corpus der Stempelsiegel-Amulette aus Palästina-Israel: von den Anfängen bis zur Perserzeit. (Orbis Biblicus et Orientalis: Series Archaeologica 10) Freiburg, Schweiz: Universitätsverlag / Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Rupprecht, 1995.
- Keel, Othmar. The Symbolism of the Biblical World: Ancient Near Eastern Iconography and the Book of Psalms. New York: Seabury Press, 1978.
- Keel, Othmar, and Christoph Uehlinger. Gods, Goddesses, and Images of God in Ancient Israel. Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 1998.
- Kenyon, Frederic G. Greek Papyri in the British Museum: Catalogue. 5 vols. London: British Museum, 1893–1917.
- Kenyon, Kathleen. "The Mystery of the Horses of the Sun at the Temple Entrance." BAR (1978).
- Kenyon, Kathleen. Digging up Jerusalem. New York: Praeger, 1974.
- Kiperwasser, Reuven and Dan D. Y. Shapira. "Irano-Talmudica I: The Three-Legged Ass and Ridya in B. Ta'anith: Some Observations about Mythic Hydrology in the Babylonian Talmud and in Ancient Iran." AJS Review 32:1 (2008): 101–116.
- Klausner, Joseph. Jesus of Nazareth. New York: Macmillan, 1925.
- Klawans, Jonathan. Purity, Sacrifice, and the Temple: Symbolism and Supersessionism in the Study of Ancient Judaism. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2005.
- Knohl, Israel. The Sanctuary of Silence: The Priestly Torah and the Holiness School. Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 1995.
- Koch, Klaus. The Rediscovery of Apocalyptic: A Polemical Work on a Neglected Area of Biblical Studies and its Damaging Effects on Theology and Philosophy. Naperville, Ill.: A. R. Allenson, 1972.
- Kohler, Kaufmann. "The Pre-Talmudic Haggada." JQR 5:3 (1893): 399–419.
- Kulik, Alexander. The Apocalypse of Abraham: Towards the Lost Original. Ph.D. dissertation. The Hebrew University of Jerusalem, 2000.
- Kulik, Alexander. Retroverting Slavonic Pseudepigrapha: Toward the Original of the Apocalypse of Abraham. (Society of Biblical Literature: Text-Critical Studies 3) Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2004.
- Kulik, Alexander. "Apocalyptic Message and Method: The Case of 3 Baruch," He-noch. [forthcoming]
- Kulik, Alexander. "The Enigma of the Five Heavens and Early Jewish Cosmology," JSP. [forthcoming]

- Kulik, Alexander. "Genre Without a Name: Was There a Hebrew Term for 'Apocalypse'?", JSJ 40 (2009): 540-550.
- Kulik, Alexander. "The Mysteries of Behemoth and Leviathan and the Celestial Bestiary of 3 Baruch," Le Muséon 122:3-4 (2009): 307-345.
- Kulik, Alexander. "Veritas Slavica: On the Value of Slavonic Evidence for the Early Apocalyptic Tradition," Polata Knigopisnaia 38 (2009). [forthcoming]
- Lambden, Stephen N. "From Fig Leaves to Fingernails: Some Notes on the Garments of Adam and Eve in the Hebrew Bible and Select Early Postbiblical Jewish Writings." In: Paul Morris and Deborah Sawyer, eds. A Walk in the Garden: Biblical, Iconographical and Literary Images of Eden. (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series 136) Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1992, 74-90.
- Lambert, Wilfred G. "The Cosmology of Sumer and Babylon." In: Carmen Blacker and Michael Loewe, eds. Ancient Cosmologies. London: Allen & Unwin, 1975, 44-45.
- Lambert, Wilfred G. "Trees, Snakes and Gods in Ancient Syria and Anatolia." BSOAS 48 (1985): 435-451.
- Lampe, Geoffrey William Hugo. The Seal of the Spirit: a Study in the Doctrine of Baptism and Confirmation in the New Testament and the Fathers. 2nd ed. London: S.P.C.K., 1967.
- Lash, Christopher J. A. "Where Do Devils Live?" A Problem in the Textual Criticism of Ephesians 6, 12." VC 30:3 (1976): 161-174.
- Lease, G. "Jewish Mystery Cults since Goodenough." ANRW II 20.2 (1987): 858-80.
- Lewis, Jack P. A Study of the Interpretation of Noah and the Flood in Jewish and Christian Literature. Leiden: Brill, 1968.
- Liebermann, Saul. Hellenism in Jewish Palestine: Studies in the Literary Transmission, Beliefs and Manners of Palestine in the I Century B. C. E.-IV Century C. E. New York: Jewish Theological Seminary of America, 1950.
- Livingstone, Alasdair. Mystical and Mythological Explanatory Works of Assyrian and Babylonian Scholars. Oxford: Clarendon, 1986.
- Logan, Alastair H. B. "The Mystery of the Five Seals: Gnostic Initiation Reconsidered." VC 51.2 (1997): 188-206.
- Ludwich, Arthur. Maximi et Ammonis carminum de actionum auspiciis reliquiae. Leipzig: B.G. Teubner, 1877.
- Lunt, Horace. "Ladder of Jacob." In: OTP. Vol. 2, 401-411.
- MacKenzie, David Neil. "Zoroastrian Astrology in the Bundahišn." BSOAS 27:3 (1964): 511-529.
- Maier, Johann. Vom Kultus zur Gnosis. Studien zur Vor- und Frühgeschichte der "jüdischen Gnosis": Bundeslade, Gottesthron und Maerkabäh. (Kairos 1) Salzburg: O. Müller, 1964.
- Maksimovich, Kirill Alexandrovich. "Птица Феникс в древнерусской литературе. (К интерпретации образа)." In: Герменевтика древнерусской литературы XI-XIV вв. Сб. 5. Москва: ИМЛИ РАН, 1992, 316-335.

- Mandelkern, Solomon. Hekhal Haqqodesh. Leipzig: Veit et Comp., 1896.
- Margalioth, Mordecai. Sefer ha-Razim. Jerusalem: American Academy of Jewish Research, 1966.
- Marinatos, Nanno. "The Cosmic Journey of Odysseus." Numen 48.4 (2001): 381–416.
- Markoe, Glenn. Phoenician Bronze and Silver Bowls from Cyprus and the Mediterranean. (University of California Publications: Classical Studies, 26) Berkeley: University of California Press, 1985.
- Mattingly, Harold. "The Roman 'Virtues'." HTR 30.2 (1937): 103–117.
- Maunder, Edward Walter. Astronomy of the Bible: An Elementary Commentary on the Astronomical References in the Holy Scripture. New York: Mitchell Kennerley, 1908.
- Mayer-Opificius, R. "Die geflügelte Sonne. Himmels- und Regendarstellungen im alten Vorderasien." Ugarit-Forschungen 16 (1984): 189–236.
- Mazighi, Luca. "'Non c'è regno dell'Ade sulla terra': L'inferno alla luce di alcuni testi del Libro della Sapienza." Vivens Homo 6 (1995): 229–255.
- McNicol, Allan James. "The Heavenly Sanctuary in Judaism: A Model for Tracing the Origin of the Apocalypse." JReIS 13 (1987): 66–94.
- Mead, George Robert Stow. Pistis Sophia: A Gnostic Miscellany. London: John M. Watkins, 1955.
- Meijer, Diederik Jacobus Willem, ed. Natural Phenomena: Their Meaning, Depiction and Description in the Ancient Near East. Amsterdam: Royal Netherlands Academy, 1992.
- Mensching, Gustav. Das heilige Schweigen. Giessen: A. Töpelmann, 1926.
- Merkelbach, Reinhold. "Drache." In: Reallexicon für Antike und Christentum. Vol. 4. Stuttgart: A. Hiersemann, 1959. Cols. 226–250.
- Merkur, Daniel. "The Visionary Practices of Jewish Apoclyptists." Psychoanalytic Study of Society 11 (1989): 119–148.
- Milik, Jozef T. and Matthew Black, eds. The Books of Enoch: Aramaic Fragments of Qumrân Cave 4. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1976.
- Milikowsky, Chaim Joseph. "Gehenom." Tarbiz 55 (1986): 311–343. [in Hebrew]
- Min, Young-Ji. "How Do the Rivers Flow? (Ecclesiastes 1.7)." The Bible Translator 42 (1991): 226–231.
- Momigliano, Arnaldo. Alien Wisdom: The Limits of Hellenization. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1975.
- Montgomery, James A. Aramaic Incantaion Texts from Nippur. Philadelphia: The University Museum, 1913.
- Morgenstern, Julian. "The Calendar of the Book of Jubilees, its Origin and its Character." VT 5 (1955): 34–76.
- Morrison-Jones, Christopher R. A. "Paradise Revisited (2 Cor 12:1–12): The Jewish Mystical Background of Paul's Apostolate. Part 1: The Jewish Sources." HTR 86.2 (1993): 177–217.
- Mortley, Raoul. "The Theme of Silence in Clement of Alexandria." JTS 24 (1973): 197–202.

- Moulton, James Hope. A Grammar of New Testament Greek. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1963.
- Mylonas, George Emmanuel. Eleusis and the Eleusinian Mysteries. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1961.
- Netzer, Ehud and Zeev Weiss. "New Evidence for Late Roman and Byzantine Sepphoris." In: John H. Humphrey, ed. The Roman and Byzantine Near East: Some Recent Archaeological Research. (Journal of Roman Archaeology: Supplementary Series 14) Ann Arbor, Michigan: University of Michigan, 1995, 162–176.
- Nielsburg, George W. E. 1 Enoch: A Commentary on the Book of 1 Enoch. (Hermeneia). Minneapolis: Fortress, 2001.
- Niehoff, Maren. R. "The Phoenix in Rabbinic Literature," HTR 89.3 (1996): 245–265.
- Nock, Arthur Darby. "Pagan Baptisms in Tertullian." JTS 28 (1927): 289–290.
- Oblath Michael. "'To Sleep, Perchance to Dream ...': What Jacob Saw at Bethel (Genesis 28.10–22)." JSOT 26.1 (2001): 117–126.
- Orlov, Andrei. "The Face as the Heavenly Counterpart of the Visionary in the Slavonic Ladder of Jacob." In: Craig A. Evans, ed. Of Scribes and Sages: Early Jewish Interpretation and Transmission of Scripture. Vol. 1: Ancient Versions and Traditions. London: T&T Clark, 2004.
- Ostow, Mortimer. Ultimate Intimacy: The Psychodynamics of Jewish Mysticism. London: Karnac Books, 1995.
- Otto, Walter. "Meaning of the Eleusinian Mysteries." In: Joseph Campbell, ed. The Mysteries: Papers from the Eranos Yearbooks. (Bollingen Series 30.2) New York: Pantheon Books, 1955, 14–31.
- Panaino, Antonio. "Uranographia Iranica I: The Three Heavens in the Zoroastrian Tradition and the Mesopotamian Background." In: Rika Gyselen, ed. Au carrefour des religions. Mélanges offerts à Philippe Gignoux. (Res orientales 7). Bures-sur-Yvette: Groupe pour l'étude de la civilisation du Moyen-Orient, 1995, 205–225.
- Parot, Andre. Sumer: The Dawn of Art. New York: Golden Press, 1961.
- Parpola, Simo. "The Assyrian Tree of Life: Tracing the Origins of Jewish Monotheism and Greek Philosophy." JNES 52.3 (1993): 161–208.
- Patrich, Joseph. "The Golden Vine, the Sanctuary Portal, and its Depiction on the Bar-Kokhba Coins." Jewish Art 19–20 (1993–1994): 56–61.
- Pearson, Birger Albert. The Pneumatikos-Psychikos Terminology in 1 Corinthians: A Study in the Theology of the Corinthian Opponents of Paul and its Relation to Gnosticism. (Society of Biblical Literature: Dissertation Series 12) Missoula, Mont.: Scholars Press, 1973.
- Picard, Jean-Claude. "Trajets du corps, trajets célestes: éléments d'une cosmologie mystique juive." In: Alain Desreumaux and Francis Schmidt, eds. Moïse géographe: recherches sur les représentations juives et chrétiennes de l'espace. (Études de psychologie et de philosophie 24) Paris: J. Vrin, 1988, 31–54.
- Picard, Max. The World of Silence. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1952.

- Pines, Shlomo. "Hearot al Tiqbolet ha-Qayemet beyn Munahim Suriim u-veiyen Munahim shel Leshon hazal." In: Sefer Zikaron le-Yaakov Friedmann z"l: Qovetz Mehqarim. Jerusalem: Institute for Jewish Studies, 1974, 205–213.
- Poirier, John C. "The Ouranology of the Apocalypse of Abraham." JSJ 35.4 (2004): 391–408.
- Preisendanz, Karl et al. Papyri Graecae Magicae. Leipzig-Berlin: B.G. Teubner, 1928–1941.
- Przybylski, Benno. "The Role of Calendrical Data in Gnostic Literature." VC 34.1 (1980): 56–70.
- Puech, Henri. "Doctrines ésotériques et thèmes gnostiques dans l'Évangile selon Thomas." Annales du Collège de France 70 (1970): 275f.
- Quinn, Esther Casier. The Quest of Seth for the Oil of Life. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1962.
- Reeves, John C. "Utnapishtim in the Book of Giants?" JBL 112 (1993): 110–115.
- Reitzenstein, Richard. The Hellenistic Mystery-Religions: Their Basic Ideas and Significance. (Pittsburgh Theological Monograph Series 15) Pittsburgh: Pickwick Press, 1978.
- Rendsburg, Gary A. "The Egyptian Sun-God Ra in the Pentateuch." Henoch 10 (1988): 3–15.
- Richardson, N. "Athens' Festival of the New Wine." HSCP 95 (1993): 197–250.
- Ritmeyer, Leen and Asher S. Kaufman. "Where Was the Temple? The Debate Goes On." BAR 26.2 (2000): 52–59, 60–61, 69.
- Robertson, R. Graham. "Ezekiel the Tragedian." In: OTP. Vol. 2, 803–819.
- Robinson, James M., ed. The Nag Hammadi Library. Revised edition. San Francisco: HarperCollins, 1990.
- Robinson, Stephen E. "4 Baruch." In: OTP. Vol. 1, 413–425.
- Rohland, Johannes Peter. Der Erzengel Michael, Arzt und Feldherr: Zwei Aspekte des vor- und Frühbyzantinischen Michaelskultes. (Beihefte der Zeitschrift für Religions- und Geistesgeschichte 19) Leiden: Brill, 1977.
- Romanoff, Paul. "Jewish Symbols on Ancient Jewish Coins." JQR 33.1 (1942): 1–15; 34.3 (1944): 299–312.
- Rosen, Yaniv J. and Rosen, Steve A. "The Shrine of the Setting Sun: Survey of the Sacred Precinct at Ramat Saharonim." IEJ 53 (2003): 1–19.
- Roussin, Lucille Alice. "Helios in the Synagogue: Did Some Ancient Jews Worship the Sun God?" BAR 27.2 (2001): 52–56.
- Rubinkiewicz, Richard. "Apocalypse of Abraham." In: OTP. Vol. 1, 681–705.
- Ruinart, Theodorici. Acta martyrum opera ac studio. Ratisbonae [Regensburg]: G. Josephi Manz, 1859.
- Runia, David T. Philo of Alexandria and the Timaeus of Plato. (Philosophia Antiqua, 44) Leiden: Brill, 1986.
- Samuel, Alan Eduard. Ptolemaic Chronology. (Münchener Beiträge zur Papyrusforschung und antiken Rechtsgeschichte 43) München: C.H. Beck, 1962.
- Sandmel, Samuel. Philo of Alexandria: An Introduction. New York: Oxford University Press, 1979.

- Schäfer, Peter et al. Konkordanz zur Heikhalot-Literatur. (TSAJ 12–13), 2 vols. Tübingen: Mohr, 1986–1988.
- Schäfer, Peter et al. Synopse zur Heikhalot-Literatur. (TSAJ 2) Tübingen: Mohr, 1981.
- Schäfer, Peter. Geniza-Fragmente zur Hekhalot-Literatur. (TSAJ 6) Tübingen: Mohr, 1984.
- Schäfer, Peter, “From Cosmology to Theology: The Rabbinic Appropriation of Apocalyptic Cosmology.” In: Rachel Elior and Peter Schäfer, eds. Creation and Re-Creation in Jewish Thought: Festschrift in Honor of Joseph Dan on the Occasion of His Seventieth Birthday. Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2005, 39–58.
- Schechter, Solomon Z. “Notes on Hebrew MSS in the University Library at Cambridge.” JQR 6 (1894): 136–145.
- Schlüter, Margarete. Derāqôn und Götzendienst: Studien zur Antiken Jüdischen Religionsgeschichte, Ausgehend von einem Griechischen Lehnwort in mAZ III 3. (Judentum und Umwelt, 4) Frankfurt am Main: P. Lang, 1982.
- Scholem, Gershom Gerhard. Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism. New York: Schocken, 1961.
- Scholem, Gershom Gerhard. “Reste neuplatonischer Spekulation in der Mystik der deutschen Chassidim und ihre Vermittlung durch Abraham bar Chiya.” MGWJ 75 (1931): 172–191.
- Scholem, Gershom Gerhard. “To the Study of the Kabbalic Tradition of R. Yitshak ben Yaakov ha-Kohen in the Development of the Teaching on the Worlds in the Kabbalic Tradition of Rishonim.” [in Hebrew]. Tarbiz 3.1 (1931): 33–92.
- Shangin, Mstislav Antonini. Codices Rossicos descripsit Mstislav Antonini F. Šangin. Adiuvante Instituto Historiae Scientiarum et Artium Technicarum Academiae Scientiarum URSS. Bruxellis: Lamertin, 1936.
- Shorley Paul, Robert Gregg B., Fowler Howard North and Walter Rangeley Maitland Lamb. Plato in Twelve Volumes. (Loeb Classical Library) Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press / London: Heinemann, 1914–1937.
- Simon, Marcel. “Remarques sur l’angelolatrie juive au debut de l’ere chretienne.” In: Comptes Rendus de des Academie Inscriptions et bells letters (1971), 120–134.
- Smith, Mark S. “Goodenough’s Jewish Symbols in Retrospect.” JBL 86 (1966): 53–68.
- Smith, Mark S. “The Near Eastern Background of Solar Language for Yahweh.” JBL 109.1 (1990): 29–39.
- Smith, Morton. “Helios in Palestine.” EI 22 (1982).
- Smith, Morton. “On the History of ἀποκαλυπτω and ἀποκαλυψις.” In: David Hellholm, ed. Apocalypticism in the Mediterranean World and the Near East: Proceedings of the International Colloquium on Apocalypticism (Uppsala, August 12–17, 1979). Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1983, 9–20.
- Smith, Morton. “The Case of the Gilded Staircase.” BAR 10.5 (1984): 50–55.
- Smith, Morton. Studies in the Cult of Yahweh: New Testament, Early Christianity, and Magic. (Religions in the Graeco-Roman World 130), 2 vols. Leiden: Brill 1996.

- Sophocles, Evangelinus Apostolides. A Glossary of Later and Byzantine Greek. Cambridge, Boston: Welch Bigelow & Co, 1860.
- Spieckermann, Hermann. "Schweigen und Beten: Von stillem Lobgesang und zerbrechender Rede im Psalter." In: Frank-Lothar Hossfeld and Ludger Schwienhorst-Schönberger, eds. Das Manna fällt auch heute noch: Beiträge zur Geschichte und Theologie des Alten, Ersten Testaments. Festschrift für Erich Zenger. (Herders biblische Studien 44) Freiburg im Breisgau: Herder, 2004, 567–584.
- Stephani, Ludolf. Nimbus und Strahlenkranz in den Werken der Alten Kunst. (Mémoires de l'Académie des Sciences de Saint-Petersbourg, Series 6. Vol. 9) St.-Petersburg, 1859.
- Sterling, Gregory E. "Creatio Temporalis, Aeterna, vel Continua? An Analysis of the Thought of Philo of Alexandria." SPA 4 (1992): 16–21.
- Stökl Ben Ezra, Daniel. The Impact of Yom Kippur on Early Christianity: The Day of Atonement from Second Temple Judaism to the Fifth Century. (WUNT 163) Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2003.
- Stone, Michael Edward. "Lists of Revealed Things in Apocalyptic Literature." In: Frank Moore Cross et al., eds. Magnalia Dei, the Mighty Acts of God: Essays on the Bible and Archaeology in Memory of G. Ernest Wright. Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1976, 414–454.
- Stone, Michael Edward. "The Fall of Satan and Adam's Penance: Three Notes on the Books of Adam and Eve." JTS 44 (1993): 145–148.
- Stone, Michael Edward. A History of the Literature of Adam and Eve. (SBL Early Judaism and its Literature 3) Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1992.
- Stone, Michael Edward. Armenian Apocrypha Relating to the Patriarchs and Prophets. Jerusalem: The Israel Academy of Sciences and Humanities, 1982.
- Stone, Michael Edward. Fourth Ezra: A Commentary on the Book of Fourth Ezra. (Hermeneia) Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 1990.
- Stroumsa, Gedaliahu G. "Aher: A Gnostic". In: Bentley Layton, ed. The Rediscovery of Gnosticism: Proceedings of the International Conference on Gnosticism at Yale New Haven, Connecticut, March 28–31, 1978. Vol. 2: Sethian Gnosticism. (Studies in the History of Religions 41.2) Leiden: Brill, 1981, 228–238.
- Stroumsa, Gedaliahu G. Hidden Wisdom: Esoteric Traditions and the Roots of Christian Mysticism. (Studies in the History of Religions, 70) Leiden: Brill, 2005.
- Stuckenbruck, Loren T. "Angelic Refusal of Worship: The Tradition and its Function in the Apocalypse of John." SBLSP (1994): 679–696.
- Stuckenbruck, Loren T. The Book of Giants from Qumran: Texts, Translation, and Commentary. (TSAJ 63) Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1997.
- Stuckenbruck, Loren T. "The 'Angels' and 'Giants' of Genesis 6:1–4 in Second and Third Century BCE Jewish Interpretation: Reflections on the Posture of Early Apocalyptic Traditions." DSD 7.3 (2000): 354–377.
- Stuckenbruck, Loren T. "Giant Mythology and Demonology: From the Ancient Near East to the Dead Sea Scrolls." In: Armin Lange et al., eds. Die Dämonen:

- Die Dämonologie der israelitisch-jüdischen und frühchristlichen Literatur im Kontext ihrer Umwelt.* Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2003, 318–338.
- Stuckenbruck, Loren T. 1 Enoch 91–108. (CEJL) Berlin-New York: Walter de Gruyter, 2007.
- Stuckrad, Kocku von. “Jewish and Christian Astrology in Late Antiquity: A New Approach.” Numen 47 (2000): 1–40.
- Suhr, Elmer G. The Mask, the Unicorn and the Messiah. New York: Helios, 1970.
- Taylor, J. Glen. Yahweh and the Sun: Biblical and Archaeological Evidence for Sun Worship in Ancient Israel. (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series 111) Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1993.
- Taylor, Justin. “The Gate of the Temple called ‘the Beautiful’ (Acts 3:2,10).” RB 106.4 (1999): 549–562.
- Thomas, David Winton. “Beliyya’al in the Old Testament.” In: J. Neville Birdsall and Robert W. Thomson, eds. Biblical and Patristic Studies in Memory of Robert Pierce Casey. Freiburg im Breisgau-New York: Herder, 1963, 11–19.
- Tikhonravov, Nikolay Savvich. Памятники отреченной русской литературы. 2 т. Санкт-Петербург: “Общественная польза”, 1863.
- Toepel, Alexander. “Planetary Demons in Early Jewish Literature.” JSP 14.3 (2005): 231–238.
- Torresan, Paolo. “Silence in the Bible.” JBQ 31 (2003): 153–160.
- Torrey, Charles C. “Apocalypse.” In: JE. Vol. 1, 669–675.
- Turdeanu, Émile. “L’Apocalypse de Baruch en slave.” Revue des études slaves 48 (1969): 23–48.
- Turdeanu, Émile. Apocryphe slaves et roumains de l’Ancien Testament. (SVTP 5) Leiden: Brill, 1981.
- Uehlinger, Christoph. Weltreich und “eine Rede”. Eine neue Deutung der sogenannten Turmbauerzählung (Gen 11, 1–9). (Orbis biblicus et orientalis 101) Freiburg, Schweiz: Universitätsverlag, 1990.
- Urbach, Ephraim Elimelech. “The Rabbinical Laws of Idolatry in the Second and Third Centuries in the Light of Archaeological and Historical Facts.” IEJ 9 (1959): 149–165, 229–245.
- Uval, Beth. “The Dew of Heaven (Gen. 27:28).” JBQ 26 (1998): 117–118.
- Vasiliev, Athanasius. Anecdota Graeco-Byzantina. Mosquae: Universitas Caesarea, 1893.
- Vermes, Geza. “The Impact of the Dead Sea Scrolls on Jewish Studies.” JJS 26 (1975): 12–14.
- Vida, Yehuda Arie. “Commentary of R. Elahanan nem Yakar on the Sefer Yetzira.” Kovets al’ Yad 6.17 (1966): 145–199.
- Vogt, Ernst. “‘Mysteria’ in Textibus Qumran.” Biblica 37 (1956): 247–257.
- Wacholder, Ben Zion and Steven Bowman. “Ezechielus the Dramatist and Ezekiel the Prophet: Is the Mysterious ζῳον in the Ἐξᾱγωγὴ a Phoenix?” HTR 78.3–4 (1985): 253–277.
- Wacker, Marie-Theres. Weltordnung und Gericht: Studien zu 1 Enoch 22. (Forschung zur Bibel 45) Würzburg: Echter Verlag, 1982.

- Weiss, Zeev and Ehud Netzer. "Architectural Development of Sepphoris During the Roman and Byzantine Periods." In: Douglas R. Edwards and C. Thomas McCollough, eds. Archaeology and the Galilee: Texts and Contexts in the Greco-Roman and Byzantine Periods. (South Florida Studies in the History of Judaism 143) Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1997, 117–130.
- Weiss, Zeev. "The Sepphoris Synagogue Mosaic." In: BAR September/October (2000): 48–62.
- Welburn, Andrew J. "Reconstructing the Ophite Diagram." NovT 23.3 (1981): 261–287.
- Wernberg-Møller, Preben. The Manual of Discipline. Leiden: Brill, 1957.
- Whitney, Kenneth William. Two Strange Beasts: Leviathan and Behemoth in Second Temple and Early Rabbinic Judaism. (Harvard Semitic Monographs 63). Winona Lake, Ind.: Eisenbrauns, 2006.
- Whittaker, John. "Catachresis and Negative Theology: Philo of Alexandria and Basilides." In: Stephen Gersh and Charles Kannengiesser, eds. Platonism in Late Antiquity. (Christianity and Judaism in Antiquity 8) Notre Dame, Ind.: University of Notre Dame Press, 1992, 61–82.
- Widengren, Geo. The Ascension of the Apostle and the Heavenly Book. Uppsala (Universitets Årsskrift 1950:7) Uppsala: Lundequistska, 1950.
- Wiggins, Steve A. "Yahweh – the God of Sun?" JSOT 71 (1996): 89–106.
- Williams, Frank, tr. The Panarion of Epiphanius of Salamis. Books II and III (Sects 47–80, De Fide). (Nag Hammadi and Manichaean Studies 36) Leiden: Brill, 1994.
- Williams, Michael Allen. Rethinking "Gnosticism": An Argument for Dismantling a Dubious Category. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1996.
- Wilson, Robert R. "An Interpretation of Ezekiel's Dumbness." VT 22.1 (1972): 91–104.
- Winston, David. Philo, of Alexandria: The Contemplative Life; The Gants; and Selections. New York: Paulist Press, 1981.
- Wissowa, Georg. "Vermehrung der Götter durch Spaltung und durch Vergöttlichung abstrakter Begriffe." In: Idem, Religion und Kultus der Römer. (Handbuch der klassischen Altertums-Wissenschaft 5.4) München: C.H. Beck, 1902, 46–50.
- Wolde, Ellen J. van. "In Words and Pictures: the Sun in 2 Samuel 12:7–12." BibInt 11.3–4 (2003): 259–278.
- Wolfson, Elliot R. "Mysticism and the Poetic-Liturgical Compositions from Qumran." JQR 85.1–2 (1994): 185–202.
- Wolfson, Harry Austryn. "Negative Attributes in the Church Fathers and the Gnostic Basilides." HTR 50.2 (1957): 145–156.
- Wolfson, Harry Austryn. Philo: Foundations of Religious Philosophy in Judaism, Christianity, and Islam. 3rd print rev. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1974.
- Wright, Archie T. The Origin of Evil Spirits: the Reception of Genesis 6.1–4 in Early Jewish Literature. (WUNT, 2. Reihe 198) Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2005.

- Wright, J. Edward. Baruch ben Neriah: From Biblical Scribe to Apocalyptic Seer. (Studies on Personalities of the Old Testament) Columbia, S.C: University of South Carolina Press, 2003.
- Wright J. Edward. "Baruch, the Ideal Sage." In: Joseph Coleson and Victor H. Matthews, eds. Go to the Land I Will Show You: Studies in Honor of Dwight W. Young. Winona Lake, Eisenbrauns, 1996, 193–210.
- Wright, J. Edward. "Baruch: His Evolution from Scribe to Apocalyptic Seer." In: Michael E. Stone and Theodore A. Bergren, eds. Biblical Figures Outside the Bible. Harrisburg, Pa.: Trinity Press International, 1998, 264–289.
- Wright, J. Edward. The Early History of Heaven. New York: Oxford University Press, 2000.
- Yadin, Yigael et al. Hazor II. Jerusalem: Magnes Press, 1960.
- Young, Brad H. "The Ascension Motif of 2 Corinthians 12 in Jewish, Christian and Gnostic Texts." Grace Theological Journal 9 (1988): 73–103.
- Zaleski, Carol. Otherworld Journeys: Accounts of Near-Death Experience in Medieval and Modern Times. New York: Oxford University Press, 1987.
- Zandee, Jan. Death as an Enemy, According to Ancient Egyptian Conceptions. Leiden: Brill, 1960.

TRANSLATION AND COMMENTARY

A. Title

GREEK

SLAVONIC

¹ A narration and revelation of Baruch, about those ineffable things which he saw by command of God.

Bless Thou, O Lord!

[Cf. T:2S]

² A revelation of Baruch,

² A revelation of Baruch

when angel Panuel was sent to him by the command of the Lord on the holy mount Zion,

who was upon the river Gel weeping over the captivity of Jerusalem, when he was weeping over the captivity of Jerusalem upon the river.

when {also} Abimelech had been saved in Agrippa's estate by the hand of God, and {he} sat at the Beautiful Gates, where the Holy of Holies lay.

[Cf. T:1G]

Bless Thou, O Lord!

NOTES

T:1G. About ... God om. B.

T:1G/T:2S. Lord. In T:1–2S two different words are used. The first (T:1S) is ВЛАДЪИКА rendering Gk δεσπότης (also in 16:6S) as in the Greek blessing G (T:1G), while the Slavonic blessing (T:2S) has voc. ГОСПОДИ referring to Gk κύριος.

T:2S. Angel Panuel (АНГЕЛЪ ПАНОУИЛЪ). SN Phanuel L angel Rafael TB om. PVIDG. In 2:5S there are only the forms Phanael L and Phanuel β. The reading of mss SN in T:1S is less widely attested and is closer to the Semitic form (פְּנוּאֵל). The variants of L and of 2:5S are widely known, and thus may reflect emendation (see comm. ad loc.).

T:2G. Weeping. ΚΛΕΟΝ of both mss here interpreted as κλαίωv. Thus understood also by S: ПЛАКА СА “was weeping” (see comm. ad loc. and to “be silent” in 1:3S). Less probable: κλέωv “telling of.”

Estate (χωρίον). Also “place” in general. In LXX renders Heb כרם “vineyard” (1 Chr 27:17); in 4 Baruch the term is interchangeable with “vineyard” (3:10); cf. 1:2 and comm. ad loc.

COMMENTARY

In contrast to the rest of the book, the title is formulated in the third person, similarly to many other apocalypses (cf. 1 Enoch; 2 Enoch; Apocalypse of Abraham; 4 Ezra; 2 Baruch; Revelation). This convention appears to have its roots in biblical prophetic tradition (cf., e.g., Isaiah, Jeremiah, etc.). G has a double title, the first part of which (besides the blessing) has no parallel in S. The second section of the Greek title shows a certain acquaintance with the Temple topography and presupposes the reader’s knowledge of the Abimelech story as known from 4 Baruch.

T:1. Baruch. Why is the vision ascribed to Baruch? The choice of the protagonist as a witness of the destruction of the Temple and, probably, an archetypical survivor (especially if identified with Abimelech, see comm. to T:2G) is appropriate for the setting of the revelation. But is there a connection between the figure as he is known from early Jewish tradition and the content of the vision per se? The selection of Baruch may reflect a connection between the “incomplete” nature of the revelation in this work, which lacks theophany and apotheosis, on the one hand, and the dubiousness or second-rate status of Baruch as a prophet, on the other. In contrast to most other visionaries, our seer does not experience transformation or enthronement,¹ and does not even receive access to the “the highest heaven” (11:3S)²; nor does he see the Throne of Glory (on this issue in detail see introductory comm. to ch. 11 below). There is also no mention of Baruch having entered Paradise or having seen the Tree of Knowledge that he discusses with an angel (4:8G/4:6Sff.). He probably does not even ascend in corpore (see comm. to 17:3G).

Similarly, in contrast to other sources, only in 2 Baruch is the protagonist presented as a full scale prophet, even linked in his characteristics to Moses and overshadowing Jeremiah.³ Elsewhere, Baruch is either a non-visionary or at most a “minor” one. In distinction to most other visionaries, Baruch is more a sage, a successor to the prophets, than a prophet par ex- cellence.⁴ In Jer 45 and in 4 Baruch he receives an oracle only through the mediation of Jeremiah.⁵ In Jer 45:5, Baruch was warned not to seek “great things” (whatever this may mean). In 1 Baruch he is merely a sage and a community leader. Baruch does not figure in the Lives of the Prophets (although he was regarded as a prophet by Eusebius in Pr. Ev. 10.14.6 and by Origen in Hom. Jer. 8.5).⁶ He is mentioned in a probably negative (although vague) context together with another prophetic disciple, Gehazi, in CD 8.20. Rabbinic literature also indicates his semi-prophetic status. The Rabbis debated whether Baruch was a prophet at all: “Baruch was greatly distressed because he did not receive the prophetic spirit” (Mek. Bo Intr.), though some did recognize him as a prophet (Sifre Num 78; Sifre Zut. 75 on Num 10:29; y. Sot. 9.24b; b. Meg. 14b; Seder Olam 20). See also the conception of קִיְצָרִי הַנְּבוּאָה applied to minor prophets following Jeremiah, identified as the “last of all the prophets” (Pesiq. Rab Kah. 13.14).

¹ Similarly to other so called “quasi-mystical” apocalypses, which contain only descriptions of the celestial world (Wolfson, “Mysticism,” 194; Himmelfarb, Ascent, 91).

² Cf. the same term in 1 En. 72:5.

³ Wright, “Evolution,” 272.

Martha Himmelfarb states: “3 Baruch stands apart from the other apocalypses ... in its rejection of the possibility of the visionary’s achievement of angelic status.” In distinction to Enochic tradition or the Ascension of Isaiah, he is not even equal to angels; thus he addresses the angel “Lord.”⁷ However, in light of the above, it is most probable that we are not dealing here with a polemic against the Enochic tradition, but rather with a case of a minor hero co-existing with the tradition, a special kind of more modest and limited mystical experience. The exclusiveness of Enoch’s visionary experience is formulated as “no man will see as I have seen” (1 En. 19:3; cf. Dan 10:7). Note that 3 Baruch does not stipulate that more advanced ascent would be unfeasible: we may infer that it was possible for those whose names are written on the last gate (unless this refers to dead individuals; see comm. to 11:2S). The situation may be compared to higher and lower levels of initiation into practices of Hellenistic mysteries. See the use of the term “mysteries” in 3 Baruch, including “great” and “greater” mysteries promised (but probably not shown) to him (1:4S; 1:6; 1:8G; 5:3S;

⁴ Thus Wright, “Baruch the Ideal Sage.” In this he may be close to the figures of the later sages-visionaries of the Hekhalot literature, although their apocalyptic ambitions were less limited.

⁵ Although the placement of the oracle in LXX Jer 51 might hint that he was supposed to succeed Jeremiah (so Bogaert, “Baruch”).

⁶ It is difficult to judge whether the existence of a Gnostic Book of Baruch by Justin known from Hippolytus’ Refutatio 5.21 (where Baruch is a name of an archon) has anything to do with the popularity of Baruch as a mystic figure. Probably there is no connection.

⁷ Himmelfarb, Ascent, 87. Cf. comm. to ch. 12.

17:1S) and the “Lesser” and “Greater Mysteries” as known from Eleusis, as well as the use of these terms applied to Jewish revelatory activity by Philo (Leg. All. 3.33.100; Cher. 14.48–49; Sacr. 15.60; 16.62; see comm. to 1:6).⁸

Narration (διήγησις). Among early texts, this title (or genre definition) is attested only in Apocalypse of Moses and Testament of Abraham (some mss of the rec. B), though it is very common in later Christian compositions.⁹ Cf. biblical titles with Heb דְּבָרִי / Gk ῥῆμα or λόγοι like “Words of Jeremiah,” “Words of Amos,” etc. (cf. Neh 1:1; Eccl 1:1; Tob 1:1; 1 En. 1:1). Contrast Heb וִיזִן / Gk ὄρασις (“Vision of Isaiah,” “Vision of Obadiah”). In the Greek 3 Baruch both types of titles are combined: “Narration and Revelation.”

Revelation (ἀποκάλυψις). See also the verb ἀποκαλύπτω as “reveal” in 4:13 and 14. In Jewish literature, the noun is attested for the first time in Sir 22:22 in the meaning “revealing of the secret” (μυστηρίου ἀποκαλύψεως) where, however, the context is ethical rather than mystical. “Wonders” shown by God are called ἀποκάλυψις in T. Abr. 6:8. Paul already mentions “visions and revelations [ἀποκαλύψεις] of the Lord” (1 Cor 14:6, 26; 2 Cor 12:1, 7; cf. Luke 2:32 (φῶς εἰς ἀποκάλυψιν ἔθνων, based on LXX Ps 97:2 and T. Abr. 6:8).¹⁰ The use of any equivalent term as a title or genre definition is not attested in the present corpus of Hebrew or Aramaic texts. It appears in the titles of the Apocalypse of Abraham; Testament of Abraham (rec. B ms E); Apocalypse of Ezra; 2 Baruch; 3 Baruch; Revelation; Gnostic Apocalypse of Adam and later Christian apocalypses.¹¹ Among these only the Apocalypse of Abraham obviously had a Hebrew original, but it is possible that the title is a later addition, especially since it is absent in some versions of the text, or appears in modified forms, as it does in 3 Baruch. Nevertheless, there is some rudimentary evidence in favor of the existence of a Hebrew, or at least Jewish Aramaic, term for this genre.¹²

⁸ Cf. also the hierarchy of initiates in Mythraic mysteries. On Jews and Hellenistic mystery cults, see Goodenough, By Light; cf., e.g., Lease, “Jewish.”

⁹ For details on the use of the term see Harlow, Baruch, 183, n. 70 and 71.

¹⁰ In distinction to the noun, the verb ἀποκαλύπτειν (as in Ps 97:2 above) is widely attested in LXX, where it renders Heb גִּלָּה (Prov 11:13; cf. Sir 4:18; 41:23 (42:1); Amos 3:7; Num 22:31; 24:4, 16 (cf. 1 En. 1:2); cf. 1 Sam. 2:27; 3:21; etc.) or Aram גִּלָּה (Theod Dan 2:19, 22, 28 et seq., 47). In some of the above passages it refers to the revelation of mysteries about the future given by God (Torrey, “Apocalypse,” 669).

¹¹ Cf. Smith, “History;” Harlow, Baruch, 183.

¹² See Chajes, Lingua, 9; cf. Klausner (Jesus, 75) and Goldstein (Jesus, 72) referring to Chajes; Pines, “Hearot;” Kulik “Genre.”

Narration and revelation (διήγησις καὶ ἀποκάλυψις). Only in Greek. The combination is unique for early Jewish literature.¹³ The closest parallels are Λόγος καὶ ἀποκάλυψις (“treatise and revelation”) τοῦ ἁγίου προφήτου Ἐσδρα (Greek Apoc. Ezra 1; cf. also identical wording with the Apocalypse of Ezra in 3 Bar. 1:6) and Διήγησις καὶ πολιτεία Ἀδὰμ καὶ Εὐας (Apoc. Mos., Title). This compound title may conform to the most common structure for apocalyptic composition: first – introductory narration – prologue, and then an apocalypse per se. Note also the compound title of the Ascension of Isaiah: προφητεία ἀποκάλυψις καὶ μαρτύριον.

T:1G. Ineffable things (ἄρρητα). Probably, “unspoken, unnamed, unintelligible things.” Alternatively, “things not to be spoken, divulged” (as in 2 Cor 12:4; see below), but this is less likely since Baruch does share his vision upon his return (although only in S; cf. 17:1S); cf. comm. to 1:3S: “be silent.”

An equivalent Slavonic term – НЕИСПОВѢДЪЕМЪИ – is applied to God’s service (2 En. 22:2–3; and to the face of God according to Belgrade ms 321; cf. the same ms also in 1:1). God declares his own name “ineffable” in Apoc. Abr. 10:3 and 8. Philo mentions “revelation of his ineffable mysteries” (Leg. All. 3.8). In the third heaven,¹⁴ Paul heard “ineffable words/things [ἄρρητα ῥήματα], which it is not allowed for a man to utter” (2 Cor 12:4); cf. “far above of ... every title that can be given” (Eph 1:21). “Ineffable majesty” of God is mentioned in Latin Acts Pet. (Vercelli Acts) 2. The “ineffability” of God and his mysteries became a basic term for Gnosticism (e.g., Pistis Sophia 6; 10; 45),¹⁵ and a subject for philosophic discussion from Philo to Plotinus and Church Fathers.¹⁶

Understood literally, the term cannot refer to the whole vision, since some of its major objects are named and sometimes described in detail: seven named angels, Hades, Phoenix, luminaries. For the same reason, Michael can hardly be the ultimate object of the revelation, as suggested by some. The term could rather refer to the culmination of the vision – the Oil

¹³ Whereas it is found in late Christian texts, e.g., in the Apocalypse of Mary (Harlow, Baruch, 184, n. 72). In the Testament of Abraham both terms are found but in different manuscripts.

¹⁴ According to one interpretation, this is also the ultimate destination of Baruch (see comm. to ch. 11).

¹⁵ This is one of the most frequent terms of Irenaeus’ Adv. Haer., especially in characterizations of Gnostic teachings; see, e.g., “ineffable mysteries” that characterize aeons (1.3.2).

¹⁶ See, e.g., Wolfson, “Negative;” Whittaker, “Catachresis.”

Reward given for the righteous at the last gate (ch. 15), similarly to the “ineffable chrism” of Naassenes also received in the third celestial gate (Hippolytus, Ref. (5.9.22 [5.4]; see comm. to ch. 15). Alternatively, “ineffable” would be appropriate for a theophany, were one present in 3 Baruch (cf. the unnamed “Father” of Basilides opposed to named angels; Irenaeus, Haer. 1.24.3–7). The use of the term in this case could count in favor of the hypothesis that the extant 3 Baruch is the abridged version of an originally longer text including a theophanic climax (on this see comm. to ch. 11 below). The same form of the term (pl. abs.) is attested with the meaning of pagan mysterial practices (e.g., in Hippolytus, Ref. 1.1). In this sense it could have referred to Baruch’s initiation into celestial secrets and his visionary experience in general rather than to its specific images.

T:1S. Panuel. Or Phanuel (see Notes), rendering Gk Πανουηλ or Φανουηλ. Cf. CS Phnaul (ΦΑΝΟΥΗΛ) and Gk Phamael (Φαμαηλ) of 2:5 (which must be a corruption of Φανουηλ) and also CS Nopael/Koupael (ΝΟΠΑΗΛ/ΚΟΥΠΑΗΛ) of mss SZ in S 4:7 (as a variant to Uriel), which may also go back to a corrupted Panuel (ΠΑΝΟΥΗΛ). Note the same development of the form Panuel to Phanuel in LXX Judg 8:8–9 and in Philo, Conf. 26, where the Tower of Babel is named “Phanuel” on the basis of Judg 8.

Panuel is called “angel of host(s)/power(s)” (Gk ὁ ἄγγελος τῶν δυνάμεων; CS АНГЕЛЪ СИЛЪ) in 1:8G; 2:1S; 2:6G; 10:1S; 11:1S and “archangel” in 10:1G (cf. “angels over the principalities” of 12:3). The name Phanuel appears in 1 Enoch (40:9; 54:6; 71:8, 9, 13), where it substitutes for Uriel in the usual catalogue of the four angels of presence (1 En. 9:1; Apoc. Mos. 43:1; Pesiq. R. 46; Pirqe R. El. 4; Num. Rab. 2.10) and for Sariel of the War Scroll (1QM 9.12–16; in Tg. Neof. Gen 32:25–31 Jacob wrestles with Sariel). In mss of 3 Baruch 4:7S, also containing the list of four angels (Michael, Gabriel, Uriel/Phanuel, Raphael), both traditions – with Uriel and Phanuel – are represented. The name is most likely to be derived from Peniel/Penuel of Gen 32:30 (translated by LXX as εἶδος θεοῦ, “Image of God”).¹⁷ Phanuel of 1 Enoch is described as an angel of repentance: “the fourth, who is over all action of repentance unto the hope of those who would inherit eternal life, is Phanuel by name” (40:9; cf. 54:6; 71:8–12. Is he an angel of repentance also here? There may be a connection between repentance and revelation. Thus, weeping is a well-attested means of attaining revelation, implemented also by our seer (see comm. to “weeping” in T:2). In T. Gad 5:6–9 personified Repentance is connected to (revelatory?) knowledge and understanding: it “destroys ignorance, and drives away darkness, and enlightens the eyes, and gives knowledge to the soul, and leads the mind to salvation. And those things which are not learnt from man, are understood through Repentance.” In Herm. Vis. 5.8 “the Shepherd” who reveals commandments and parables to a visionary is identified as “the angel of Repentance.” See also personified Repentance in Jos. Asen. 15:7.

¹⁷ Cf. Vermes: “In the circles represented by the Simultudes of Enoch, Qumran and the Neofiti variety of Palestinian Targum, the angelic adversary of Jacob was recognized as one of the four celestial princes and called alternatively as Sariel and Phanuel” (“Impact,” 13).

Note that in 1 Enoch Phanuel’s voice “expels the demons and forbids them from coming to the Lord of the spirits in order to accuse those who dwell upon earth” (40:7). In 3 Baruch Panuel is defined as “an angel of powers” (see above), while “powers” are also known “to keep demons from destroying the creation of God” (T. Adam 4:5). These demonomachic functions of the guiding angel can be relevant for 3 Baruch, where the angel is to lead the visionary through the lower heaven which is probably inhabited by demons and the “impure” Serpent-Hades (chs. 3–5).

James has raised the possibility that Panuel/Phanuel/Phamael of 3 Baruch is an early corruption of Ramael/Remiel (*Ραμιηλ/Ραμαελ)¹⁸ appearing in 2 Bar. 55:3, 63:6; Greek 1 En. 20:8 (Ρεμειηλ); Syriac 4 Ezra 4:36 (Latin has Hieremihel); one of the versions of Sib. Or. 2.215 (here he also belongs to a group of five, probably fallen, angels); Apoc. Zeph. 6:15 (Eremiel). In LXX (B) Chr 2:33 and 3 Ezra 4:36 the name corresponds to Jeremiel/Jerahmiel. Both Ramael of 2 Baruch and Panuel/Phanuel/Phamael of 3 Baruch are defined as interpreting angels: “the angel who is set over true visions” (2 Bar. 55:3; cf. 63:6) and “the interpreter of the revelations” (3 Bar. 11:7G).

T:1G. Bless Thou, O Lord (εὐλόγησον δέσποτα). Cf. T:2S. If this is an interpolation, it is an early one, since it is found in both the Greek and Slavonic versions. See the glorification in the very conclusion of the writing (17:4). The blessing at the beginning and the glorification at the end together form a frame that is characteristic of scribal custom. The initial blessing occurs, e.g., in the title of Testament of Abraham (resc. B), in Apocalypse of Sedrach with the same wording although reversed, and at the end of the title in History of the Rechabites,¹⁹ in the expanded titles of Acts of Thomas, Acts of John, of the apocryphal Apocalypse of John, in the opening of the prayer in Apostolic Constitutions 3.1; and in many later Christian works.²⁰ Similar blessings occur in the opening chapters of several New Testament epistles.

¹⁸ James, “Baruch”, lvii.

¹⁹ Cf. Gaylord, Baruch, 662.

Perhaps the formula serves a specific ritual purpose, such as a benediction for writing or reading the text, in accordance with the Rabbinic concept “Whoever profits from this world without reciting a benediction defrauds it” (b. Ber. 35a)? The practice of writing down the benedictions was known and condemned by Rabbinic authorities: “Those who write down the benedictions are equal to such as burn the Torah” (כותבי ברכות כשורפי תורה); t. Shab. 13(19).4; y. Shab. 16.15c; b. Ber. 38a and 50a; b. Shab. 115b).

The Book of Watchers also begins and concludes with blessings: “The words of the blessing of Enoch, wherewith he blessed the elect and righteous” (1 En. 1:1; dependent on Deut 33:1); note the conclusion:

And as often as I saw [the portals of heaven and stars running through them] I blessed always the Lord of Glory, and I continued to bless the Lord of Glory who has wrought great and glorious wonders, to show the greatness of his work to the angels and to spirits and to men [or “of men”], that they might praise his work and all his creation, that they might see the work of his might and praise the great work of his hands and bless him for ever (1 En. 36:4).²¹

Here blessings may be an integral part of an apocalyptic experience: “I, Enoch, was blessing the Lord of majesty and the King of the ages” (1 En. 12:3); “then I blessed the Lord of Glory and said, ‘Blessed be my Lord, the Lord of righteousness, who rules for ever’” (22:14); “then I blessed the God of Glory, the Eternal King, who has prepared such things for the righteous, and has created them and promised to give to them” (25:7); “then I blessed the Lord of Glory and set forth his Glory and lauded him gloriously” (27:5); blessings continue in 81:3, 10; 83:11; 84:12. Sarah blesses God for the shown wonders defined as ἀποκάλυψις: “Glory to God who shows us wonders. And know, my Lord Abraham, that this means for us the revelation of some important matter, whether for good or for ill” (T. Abr. 6:8). This also finds a parallel in Rabbinic tradition, which prescribes the recitation of a blessing upon the sight of every remarkable phenomenon of nature, e.g., “Blessed be the Worker of Creation” (m. Ber. 9.2) or “Blessed is whose power fills the world,” etc., or at a place of wonders: “Blessed be the Worker of Wonders” (m. Ber. 9.1); cf. Sir 43:11: “Look upon the rainbow and praise him that made it.”

²⁰ Harlow, Baruch, 84.

²¹ Note that Nickelsburg regards chs. 34–36 as possibly being secondary in the Book of Watchers.

If 3 Baruch in general and this verse in particular had a Semitic prototype, this formula would have included the name of the protagonist: גליון ברוך ... ברוך אתה ה'.

T:2. Weeping. Baruch weeps also in 1:1 and 1:3. Baruch laments over the Destruction according to Jer 45:3 and 2 Bar. 6:2; 10:5; 35:1 (here also before the vision). Other visionaries usually weep before the revelation or other contact with God, as in Dan (10:2; cf. 7:15); 2 Enoch (1:3); 4 Ezra (5:13; cf. 3:1); and T. Levi (2:4; here just grieving). Moreover, Enoch weeps after his second vision (1 En. 90:41), and John weeps during the course of the revelation (Rev 5:4). The revelation was given to Ezra, because he “mourned greatly over Zion” (4 Ezra 10:38–39). Note also Noah, who weeps before his prayer (3 Bar. 4:13G/4:14S). Weeping and mourning as a technique of inducing mystical experience is attested in Jewish mystical practice.²² As for weeping in other circumstances in 3 Baruch, see Baruch weeping on behalf of sinners (16:9–10). Angels weep for the same reason (13:1; 16:1). The sun weeps for having been defiled by human sins (only in 8:5S β).

T:2G. River Gel. The name is unidentified. James assumes a corruption: Gk ΓΕΛ from abbreviated ΚΕΔ(ΡΩΝ), i.e., Kedron, since “the locality must be in or near Jerusalem, for we are told just after this that Baruch sat ‘at the beautiful gates.’ And further in 2 Bar. 5:5; 21:1; 31:2 he goes to the valley of Kedron.”²³

However, Gel must be located together with “the Beautiful Gates, where the Holy of Holies lay.” The only river which is suited to this location (if we understand that the place was at the Holy of Holies and not at the gate opposite to it; see comm. below) would have been a stream that is supposed to break forth in messianic times from under the Holy of Holies and flow towards the east (Ezek 47:1–12; Zech 14:8; Masekhet Kelim [Bet HaMidr. 88–91]). The Beautiful Gate was most probably located on the east side of the Temple mount as well (see comm. below).

Alternatively, if the last clause (“and sat at the beautiful gates, where the Holy of Holies laid”) refers to Abimelech and the two are not identical (on this issue see comm. below), Gel may be an unidentified or fictitious Mesopotamian river, such as Chebar of Ezek 1:1 or Gur of Apoc. Abr. 2:9, and the whole vision would then take place in Babylon (in accord with the tradition of 1 Baruch witnessing Baruch's descent to Babylon). Both lamenting (Ps 137:1) and revelations on Babylonian rivers are well attested: Ezekiel receives a vision on the river Chebar (Ezek 1:1,3; 3:23; 10:22), while Daniel does so "beside the Ulai River" (Dan 8:2) and on the Tigris (10:4). On the basis of these examples, there emerged a view in rabbinic literature that outside the Land of Israel revelations are possible only "in pure places," i.e., near rivers (Tan. Bo 5; cf. Bate Midr. 2.13.4), while according to Mekhilta (Bo, Intr.) revelations take place only in the Holy Land (cf. b. Moed Q. 25a; Gen. Rab. 74.1).

²² See Merkur, “Visionary;” Himmelfarb, Ascent, 107; Idel, Kabbalah, 76–77.

²³ James, “Baruch,” lv. Cf. also the late Words of Gad the Seer, where the first vision took place near Cedron too. This composition with a controversial dating has additional similarities to 3 Bar. like Sammael, vision of luminaries and animals. See Schechter, “Notes” and Abrahams, “Words,” both arguing for medieval dating, and Bar-Ilan, “Date,” dating it to early first centuries CE.

Whether in Palestine or elsewhere, rivers or other water reservoirs appear often in the setting of apocalyptic visions. In addition to the passages in Ezekiel and Daniel mentioned above, see Dan 7:2–3; 1 En. 13:7; 2 Bar. 21:1; T. Levi 2:7; cf. also 4 Ezra 11–13.²⁴ Besides purity, there may be an additional factor which contributed to the attachment of such significance to the rivers. It may be connected to certain mystical techniques involving the act of looking into the water, as mentioned in Reuoyot Yehezkel, where "Ezekiel was standing on the river Chebar looking down at the water and seven heavens were opened to him and he saw the Glory of the Holy One." Prophetic vision is compared to looking into mirrors in Lev. Rab. 1.14; b. Yeb. 49b. Such practices are attested also in other Hellenistic cultures.²⁵

When [also] Abimelech was saved in Agrippa's estate. This is an allusion to the story of Abimelech (Ebed Melech) the Ethiopian – a character from Jer 38:7–13; 39:15–18 who was promised by God to be spared in Jer 39:16–17 – as is known from 4 Bar. 3:9–5:30, where he is said to have fallen asleep in the estate of Agrippa at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem and not to have awakened for sixty-six years.²⁶ Abimelech does not appear anywhere else in our apocalypse and has no discernable function in the narrative. Moreover, it is not fully clear which of the two persons mentioned (Baruch or Abimelech) is the subject of the last clause of the ²⁴ Dean-Otting, "Baruch," 115.

²⁵ "Water-divination of this sort, using a vessel filled with water (often with oil added) as a mirror in which the medium can see divine images, seems to have been common enough in the ancient world. Greek magical papyri from Egypt give several prescriptions for it, and there is evidence that some Romans practiced it around the beginning of the Christian era" (Halperin, Faces, 231)

²⁶ Cf. a variant of the same story in the Apocryphon of Jeremiah.

sentence: καὶ οὗτος ἐκάθητο ἐπὶ τὰς ὡραίας πύλας ὅπου ἔκειτο τὰ τῶν ἁγίων ἅγια “and he sat at the beautiful gates, where the Holy of Holies lay.” Either figure could be the referent for Gk οὗτος, but the latter would be preferable. This reference might have been due to the fact that 3 Baruch was composed as a continuation of 4 Baruch, or that 3 Baruch (or at least its title) was somehow posterior to 4 Baruch.²⁷ However, in 4 Baruch we face similar problems: (1) until the beginning of the third chapter, Baruch is the only companion of Jeremiah; (2) in 3:12 the prophet asks God, how he can spare Abimelech the Ethiopian (who does not appear in the narrative before) from the sight of Jerusalem’s destruction; (3) in 3:18 Baruch again is mentioned as the only one who accompanies the prophet, while in 3:21–22 Jeremiah gives orders to Abimelech; (4) in 7:25–27 Baruch (and not Abimelech as in 3:12) is spared from having to see the destruction. The confusion between the two figures led Robinson to conclude that “the figure of Baruch is an intrusion here.”²⁸

The problems of both books might be solved if we assume that both texts go back to a common tradition identifying both characters, as it is found in a tannaitic midrash:

“And Abimelech [Ebed Melech] the Ethiopian has heard ...” [Jer 38:7]. Was he an Ethiopian slave? [No,] he was Baruch, son of Neria. As an Ethiopian differs by the color of his skin, so Baruch son of Neria differed by his deeds from all other courtiers, therefore he is called “Ethiopian.” (Sifre, Num 99 [Behaalotekha 41];

See also b. Moed Q. 16b; Pesiq. R. 26; Pirke R. El. 53; Abot R. Nat. B 43.122; Sifre Z. 12.²⁹ Abimelech, as well as Baruch (according to 2 Bar. 76:2), is among those who entered Paradise alive or “never tasted death” (Derekh Erets Zut. 1 (end); Gen. Rabbati, Haye Sarah [24.34]; cf. 2 Alpha-bet of Ben Sira 28b; Yalk. 2.367).

The whole situation is very similar to the identification of another visionary, Ezra, with another biblical figure, Salathiel (Shealtiel of Ezek 3:2; 5:2; Neh 12:1) in the very opening of the apocalypse in 4 Ezra (3:1). This opening also sets a location of a visionary after the destruction of Jerusalem: “In the thirtieth year after the fall of our City, I Salathiel, who am also called Ezra, was in Babylon ...” Cf. also identification of Ezra with Malachi (Tg. Mal 1:1; b. Meg. 15a) and other persons bearing two names: “Daniel ... who was named Balthesazzar” (Dan 4:5), “Saul who was also Paul” (Acts 13:9).

²⁷ Thus James, “Baruch,” liv-lv.

²⁸ Robinson, “4 Baruch,” 417.

²⁹ Ginzberg, Legends, 6.412

The proto-text of 3 Baruch might have lacked the word καί “and, also”: ὅτε {καί} Ἀβιμελὲς ἐπὶ Ἀγροίππα τὸ χωρίον τῇ χειρὶ θεοῦ διεφυλάχθη “when {also} Abimelech was saved in the Agrippa’s estate by the hand of God.” The verse was built according to a common model of biblical parallelism, mentioning two names of the same person; cf. “Do not fear O Jacob, do not be dismayed, O Israel” (Jer 46:27), “Who is this David, who is this son of Jesse” (1 Sam 25:10), etc.: “A revelation of Baruch, who is weeping ..., when Abimelech was saved ...”

Thus the long dream of Baruch-Abimelech in 4 Baruch might be a revelatory one. Revelations are often obtained in dreams (e.g., Gen 15:12; 1 En. 13; 4 Ezra 3:1 and 5:14; T. Levi 2:5). On the vision of 3 Baruch as a non-physical ascent, probably a dream, see comm. to 17:3G.

T:2G. In Agrippa’s estate (ἐπὶ Ἀγροίππα τὸ χωρίον). The toponym is known only from the Abimelech story in 4 Baruch (3:15; 5:5; interchanges with “vineyard” in 3:10). The name is obviously anachronistic for the First Temple period. Attempts to identify “Agrippa’s estate” with known locations have been quite arbitrary. Thus Rendell Harris identified it with Solomon’s Gardens and Etham of Josephus: “There was a certain place about fifty furlongs distant from Jerusalem, which is called Etham, very pleasant. It is in fine gardens, and abounding in rivulets of water; there he [Solomon] used to go out in the morning, sitting on high [in his chariot.]” (Josephus, Ant. 8.7.3; cf. Eccl 2:8).³⁰ Similarly, see Kohler’s identification of it with the parks of Agrippa (Bell. 5.142–183; cf. Ant. 19.326–327)³¹ and Herzer’s suggestion that it refers to “the plain of the king” (2 Sam 18:18; Ant. 7.243).³²

Beautiful Gates, where the Holy of Holies lay (τὰς ὡραίας πύλας ὅπου ἔκειτο τὰ τῶν ἁγίων ἅγια). Revelation experience in the Temple setting is known, e.g., from Luke 1:10–22 (Zechariah’s vision); Acts 22:17–21 (Paul’s vision); t. Sot. 13.5–6 (cf. Josephus, Bell. 1.69; Ant. 13.299–300); Hekh. Rabbati 13–23 (##198–250; Nehunyah b. ha-Qanah’s ascent in a trance). Temple gates and the Holy of Holies – although separately – are the places of Baruch’s lament and revelation, respectfully, in 2 Baruch: “I, Baruch, returned and sat before the gates of the Temple, and I lamented with the following lamentation over Zion ...” (2 Bar. 10:5) and “I will only go unto ³⁰ Harris, Rest, 12.

³¹ Kohler, “Pre-Talmudic,” 409.

³² Herzer, 4 Baruch, 68–69. See also a further discussion of the location in ibid., 69–70.

the Holy of Holies to inquire of the Mighty One concerning you [the people] and concerning Zion, if in some respect I should receive more illumination: and after these things I will return to you. And I, Baruch, went to the Holy Place, and sat down upon the ruins and wept” (2 Bar. 34–35:1). An alternative location for Baruch’s revelation (also following a lament) appears in 4 Baruch: first “Baruch put dust on his head and sat [it is not designated where] and wept this lamentation saying, ‘Why was Jerusalem made desolate?’” (4 Bar. 4:7), and then he went outside the city and “remained sitting in a tomb while the angels came to him and elaborated to him all the things that the Lord would reveal to him through them” (4 Bar. 4:12).

Does 3 Baruch conflate two different locations of 2 Baruch, or alternatively do all topographic references in 3 Baruch refer to the same location? It is possible to reconcile all three conflicting topographic references of 3 Baruch: the Beautiful Gate, the Holy of Holies, and the river Gel (understood as corrupted Kedron; see above). “The Temple gate called Beautiful” (τὴν θύραν ... τὴν λεγομένην ὡραίου) is known from Acts 3:2.³³ Josephus refers to one of the Temple gates as larger and more adorned than the others:

There was one gate, that outside the Sanctuary [ἔξωθεν τοῦ νεώ], which was of Corinthian brass, and greatly excelled those that were only plated with silver and gold ... The magnitudes of the other gates were equal one to another; but that over the Corinthian gate, which opened on the east over against the gate of the Sanctuary [ἐξ ἀνατολῆς ἀνοιγομένη τῆς τοῦ ναοῦ πύλης], was much larger; for its height was fifty cubits; and its doors were forty cubits; and it was adorned after a most costly manner, as having much richer and thicker plates of silver and gold upon them than the other (Bell. 5.5.3).

Gk νεός/νεώς frequently refers to the Sanctuary or even specifically to the Holy of Holies in LXX and NT (as well as to inner shrines in pagan temples in various sources).³⁴ Moreover, the Sanctuary (Heb הֵיכָל, דְּבִיר) and the Holy of Holies within it frequently metonymically interchange in the literature of the period. Gk ἔξωθεν τοῦ νεώ “outside the Sanctuary” must imply “beside, against” since all gates are outside the Sanctuary. The same gate must be the subject of the Mishna: “the eastern gate which is against the Holy of Holies” (שַׁעַר הַמִּזְרָח שֶׁהוּא מְכוּון כְּנֶגֶד בֵּית קֹדֶשׁ הַקְּדָשִׁים); m. Ber. 9.5; probably identical to the gate of Nicanor; see m. Mid. 1.4; t. Yoma 2.4). The gate is mentioned in the context of the prescription “not to act frivolously against the eastern gate which is against the Holy of Holies” (לֹא יִקַּל אָדָם ...). The reason for such precaution is clear from m. Mid. 2.4, which says that the inner space of the Sanctuary could be directly seen from the east (from the Mount of Olives) through an enfilade of gates.³⁵ Today there may be also some archeological corroboration for this, if we presume that the Holy of Holies was located not under the current Dome of the Rock but under the smaller cupola of Qubbat el-Arwah (Dome of the Spirits) or Qubbat el-Alouah (Dome of the Tablets): “This cupola is on a line directly perpendicular to the midpoint of the famous Golden Gate, itself shown recently to be above an earlier gateway,”³⁶ which might have been the Beautiful Gate.³⁷ The eastern gate close to the Sanctuary must have existed also in the First Temple period; cf. “entrance of the eastern gate of the House of the Lord [understood as Sanctuary]” (Ezek 10:19).

³³ On other possible meanings, possibly with reference to “hour” or to “light,” see Taylor, “Gate.”

³⁴ See LSJ, 1160; LPG 897.

There is also another (less convincing) way to reconcile “gate” with “Holy of Holies.” On the one hand, James suggests that these words, “where the Holy of Holies lay”, “allude to the hiding of the sacred vessels” narrated in 4 Bar. 3.³⁸ This suggestion however, requires an emendation: ὅπου ἔκειτο τὰ {τῶν ἁγίων} ἁγία “where the holy things [קֳדָשִׁים] lay.” This motif is also known from 2 Macc 2:4–8; 2 Bar. 6:7; 4 Bar. 3; probably Apoc. Abr. 27:3. 2 Macc 2 also mentions some “gate” (θύρα) closing the cave containing the Temple vessels. On the other hand, there is a Rabbinic tradition that the Temple gates were hidden: “All Temple vessels were exiled to Babylon ... but the Temple gates were hidden on their own place, as it is said: ‘Her gates have sunk into the ground’ (Lam 2:9)” (Tan. Behaalotekha 9); cf. b. Sotah 9a: “The enemy had no power over the things made by David, as it is written: ‘Her gates have sunk into the ground.’”

³⁵ For more recent attempts to identify the gate of Acts 3, see Cowton, “Alms;” Taylor, “Gate.”

³⁶ Kaufman, “Where;” Ritmeyer, Kaufman, “Where,” 52–59, 72 and 60–61, 69.

³⁷ Garner, “Jerusalem.”

³⁸ James, “Baruch,” liv.

B. Prologue (1)

GREEK

¹ O woe! I, Baruch, was weeping in my mind unceasingly about the people, and that Nebuchadnezzar the king had been permitted by God to destroy his city, saying,

² “Lord,

why have you set on fire your vineyard, and laid it waste?

Why have you done this?

And why, Lord, did you not requite us with another punishment, but delivered us to such nations, so that they upbraid saying, ‘Where is their God?’“

³ And behold, as I was weeping and saying such things,

I saw an angel of the Lord coming and saying to me,

“Understand,

O human being, a beloved man, and do not care so much for the salvation of Jerusalem, since thus says the Lord God, the Almighty,

⁴ for he sent me before you, in order to make known and to show to you all [the things] of God,

⁵ for your prayer

was heard before him, and entered into the ears of the Lord God.“

SLAVONIC

¹When Nebuchadnezzar the king captured Jerusalem and enriched Babylon, then I, Baruch, wept unceasingly and said,

² “O Lord, in what way was Nebuchadnezzar the king righteous? Why did you not spare your city Jerusalem, why have you set on fire your vineyard, and laid it waste?

What have you done, O Lord?

³ And behold, as I was weeping, and behold, an angel of the Lord appeared before me and told me,

”Be silent,

O his beloved man!

It came to Jerusalem to accept this.

But thus says the Lord, the Almighty,

⁴ and he sent me before you, in order to tell you all the mysteries of God,

⁵ for your tears and your voice entered the ears of the Almighty God.

⁶ And when he had said these things to me,
I became silent. And the angel told me:
“Cease to provoke God,

and I will show you other mysteries, greater than these.”

⁷ And I Baruch said,
“As the Lord God lives, if you show me,
and I hear
a word from you,

I will not continue speaking.

God shall add to me a judgment on the Day of Judgment,
if I say more!”

⁸ And the angel of hosts told me, “Come, and I will show you the mysteries of God.”

⁶ But tell me that you will neither add or omit [anything] and I will tell you great mysteries which no man had seen.

⁷ And I Baruch said to the angel,
”As the Lord God lives, if you show me,
and I hear,

I will neither subtract nor add a word.
If I do omit,

the Lord shall add to me a judgment on the Day of Judgment!”

NOTES

1:1G. Was weeping in my mind unceasingly about the people (κλαίων ἐν τῇ συνέσει μου καὶ ἔχων περὶ τοῦ λαοῦ). Here and below praesens historicum is translated by past tenses.

In my mind (ἐν τῇ συνέσει μου). Translated contextually, although the combination ἐν τῇ συνέσει means almost exclusively “in the understanding” (cf. LXX Job 39:17; Jer 28:15, where it renders Heb בִּינָה).

About (ἔχων περὶ). Usually translated contextually and with emendation: “[and] concerning the people.” Ryssel assumed here a corruption and proposed to add λύπην “grieve” or emend ἔχων to πενθῶν “grieving.”¹ Alternatively, if a Hebrew Vorlage is presumed, this might be a misunderstanding of Heb נְהִייתִי meaning both “be” and “be exhausted,” like in Dan 8:27: וְאֲנִי דְנִיַּאֲל נְהִייתִי וְנַחֲלִיתִי “and I Daniel was exhausted and became ill.”² In this case, the last part of the clause has to be read “and exhausted because [a regular meaning for περὶ] of the people.” Gk ἔχω περὶ may mean also “be engaged with” (“engaged with the people”).³ The new reading “weeping ... unceasingly” is based on the suggestion that we deal here with the Greek construction of praesens and a participle ἔχων adding “a notion of duration to the present action” (here of κλαίων).⁴ Gk περὶ τοῦ λαοῦ could mean either “about the people,” or “for the sake of the people,” or “before [“in the sight of” or “ahead”] the people” (as Heb לִפְנֵי הָעָם; cf. Exod 17:5; Deut 3:28; and passim; cf. Baruch’s communication with people in 2 Bar. 31–34; 77).

¹ Ryssel, “Baruch,” 448.

² Hartom, “Baruch,” 410.

1:3. O human being, a beloved man / O his beloved man (ὦ ἄνθρωπε ἄνερ ἐπιθυμιῶν / ѡѡжкоу желаниа ѿго). Biblical Gk ἄνερ ἐπιθυμιῶν, lit. “a man of desires,” goes back to Heb אִישׁ כְּמוֹדוֹת (cf. MT and LXX in Dan 10:11,19 and 9:23). Theod Dan 8:17 has the same Greek phrase referring to Heb בֶּן אָדָם “human being,” lit. “son of man” of MT, which corresponds to the first part of the Gk addressing here (ἄνθρωπε). S has the same calque ѡжкоу желаниа supplemented with pron. ѿго “his” unattested in this combination in other Greek or Slavonic versions of the book Daniel.⁵

1:3 and 5S. Almighty. CS вѣсѣдѣрѣжнтель from Gk παντοκράτορ, lit. “the one who governs over all.”

1:4. He sent me before you. πρὸ προσώπου σου / прѣдъ лицемъ твоимъ. One of many biblicisms found also in LXX, lit. “before your face” (Heb לִפְנֵיךָ).

1:5S. Voice. гласъ. Only S has here a biblicism meaning “sound of voice” (Gk φωνή; Heb קוֹל).

1:5. Entered into the ears. Biblicism (cf. Heb בָּא בְּאָזְנִי in Ps 18:7).

1:7. As the Lord God lives. Biblical formula of oath (Heb הַיְיָ; cf. Judg 8:19 and passim).

If you show me, and I hear a word from you / if you show me, and I hear. ἐὰν ὑποδείξῃς μοι καὶ ἀκούσω παρὰ σου λόγον / аще покажеш ми и слышаж. “Show” (ὑποδείξῃς / покажеш) without an object corresponds to the biblical usage of הִרְאֶה without acc. rei (cf. Ezek 40:3; Esth 4:8), while “I hear a word from you” (ἀκούσω παρὰ σου λόγον) in G might go back to a biblical idiom דְּבַר שְׁמַע “hear anything.” If 3 Baruch had a Hebrew original, it might have looked like this: אִם תִּרְאֵנִי וְאִשְׁמַע מִמֶּךָ דְּבַר.

1:7G. I will not continue speaking. God shall add to me a judgment on the Day of Judgment, if I say more. οὐ μὴ προσθήσω ἔτε λαλήσαι προσθήσει ὁ θεὸς ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῆς κρίσεως κρίσιν ἐμοί ἐὰν λαλήσω τοῦ λοιποῦ. Lit. “I will not add speaking” (προσθήσω λαλήσαι) corresponding to the following “God shall add ...” (προσθήσει ὁ θεός). The word-play is built of two elements: a calque of the biblical Heb הִסִּף sq. inf.: אוֹסִיף לְדַבֵּר “I will continue speaking” (cf., e.g., 2 Sam 7:20 and passim) and perhaps (with a slight emendation) an elliptic oath formula ... כֹּה יוֹסִיף, known also to LXX (τὸςδε προσθείη), lit. “thus shall God add [to my punishment]”; cf., e.g., 1 Sam 14:44; Ruth 1:17. Hebrew: אִם אוֹסִיף לְדַבֵּר כֹּה יוֹסִיף ה'.

³ See LSJ 750/1, s.v. B.4.

⁴ See LSJ, 750/2, s.v. B.IV.2.

⁵ Gaylord, Slavonic, 5.

COMMENTARY

In the prologue to the vision, similarly to other apocalypses attributed to Baruch, the destruction of the First Temple serves as a way of referring to the issues connected to the destruction of the Second Temple.⁶ The fact that the prologue reflects the author's concern for the fate of Jerusalem – a motif highly atypical for Christian literature – may count in favor of a Jewish provenance of the book.⁷ Jean-Claude Picard and Daniel Harlow treat in detail the coherence of the prologue and the subsequent revelation, which – according to Harlow's view – provide “an indirect, yet sustained and coherent response to the problem of Jerusalem's fate.”⁸ We will address possible connections between the sections of the book, each separately, in the comments below. A corroboration and interesting parallel to the connection between the lament on the destruction of Jerusalem and images central for our apocalypse (vine tree, the sun, the moon, rain and dew) is found in the fragment of Baruch's lamentation in 2 Baruch:⁹

2 Bar. 10:10–12¹⁰

3 Baruch

And you, O vine, why further do you give your wine, for an offering will not again be made from there in Zion, nor will first-fruits again be offered.

4:8/6–17

And you, O heavens, withhold your dew, and do not open the treasuries of rain.

10:9

And you, O sun withhold the light of your rays.

6–8

And you, O moon, extinguish the multitude of your light. For why should light rise again where the light of Zion is darkened.

9

The combination and even the order of the images are strikingly similar, while the thesis in the two works is opposite: according to 2 Baruch all these are no more relevant after the destruction of Jerusalem, whereas 3 Baruch adduces them in response and consolation to the tragedy. If a direct polemic is implied, this conceptual parallelism may count in favor of the posteriority of 3 Baruch to 2 Baruch.

⁶ Himmelfarb, Ascent, 87.

⁷ See the detailed analysis of Harlow (Baruch, 90–96).

⁸ Harlow, Baruch, 109. See Picard “Observationes,” 92–98; idem, “Autre mystères,” 23–35; Harlow, Baruch, 29–31; 109–163. Cf. Nickelsburg, Jewish Literature, 302–303; Collins, “Genre Apocalypse,” 538–540.

⁹ Cf. a similar list of natural phenomena in 4 Ezra 7:38–42 in the eschatological context (cited in comm. to 1:7).

¹⁰ All italics in quotes hereafter are mine.

1:1S. Captured Jerusalem and enriched Babylon. The same opposition (absent in G), mentioning the prosperity of Babylon appears also in 2 Baruch and 4 Ezra:

Moreover, I, Baruch, say this against you, Babylon, “If you had prospered, and Zion had dwelt in her glory, yet the grief to us had been great that you should be equal to Zion. But now, lo! The grief is infinite, and the lamentation measureless. For lo! You are prospered, and Zion desolate.” (2 Bar. 11:1–2)

“I was troubled as I lay on my bed, and my thoughts welled up in my heart, because I saw the desolation of Zion and the wealth of those who lived in Babylon.” (4 Ezra 3:1–2)

1:2S. In what way was Nebuchadnezzar the king righteous? Cf. “Are the deeds of those who inhabit Babylon any better? Is that why she has gained dominion over Zion?” (4 Ezra 3:28; cf. 5:28–30). The moral qualities of the destroyers of Jerusalem are discussed also in Isa 10:5–8; Jer 25:8–14; 50:17–18; 33–34.¹¹

1:2. Why have you set on fire your vineyard, and laid it waste / Why did you not spare your city Jerusalem, where is your glorious vineyard. Compare references to the desolation in 2 Bar. 3:5; 5:1; 4 Ezra 3:27–36; 5:28–30 and questions on its reason (2 Bar. 3:5; 4 Bar. 4:7; 4 Ezra 5:28).

“Vineyard” is a common biblical epithet for Jerusalem and Israel. For Jerusalem see Isa 27:2; Ezek 15:3–6; for Israel – Isa 5:1–7; Jer 2:21; Ezek 17:6–10; 19:10–24; Hos 10:1; Ps 80:8–16.¹² The reason as explained by 4 Ezra 5:23–27 is that each is chosen among its kind:

O sovereign Lord, from every forest of the earth and from all its trees you have chosen one vine [Lat vinea, also “vineyard”], ... and from all the cities that have been built you have consecrated Zion for yourself, ... and from all the multitude of peoples you have got for yourself one people.

Ezek 15:3–6 also uses the metaphor in the context of the Destruction:

What is the vine tree more than any tree, or than a branch which is among the trees of the forest? ... As the vine tree among the trees of the forest, which I have given to the fire for fuel, so will I give the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

¹¹ Stone, Fourth Ezra, 75.

¹² Harlow, Baruch, 88, n. 36. Note also the parable of the vineyard in Matt 21:33–46, Mark 12:1–12; Luke 20:9–19; cf. Sifre Deut. 312; Tanh. B. Qedoshim 6; Exod. Rab. 30.17.

Isa 5:7 was introduced to the same context by the Rabbis:

If a man has a vineyard, and robbers will come and cut it, who should be consoled, the vineyard or the vineyard's owner? You are my vineyard, "a vineyard of the Lord of Hosts is the house of Israel" [Isa 5:7], and Nebuchadnezzar came and destroyed it and exiled you and burned my house (Pesiq. R. 29.12).

In the context of the destruction of Jerusalem Jeremiah consoles Baruch for the fact that he did not receive the prophetic spirit: "Baruch, there is no need of a fence, when there is no vineyard; of what use is the shepherd, if there is no flock" (Mek. Bo [Intr.]); cf. Midr. Zut. Cant 8.9; Midr. Zut. Lam 1.17.

Although a negative, or at least ambiguous, account of the vine (planted by Satanael, a tree of deception cursed by God) plays a central role in 3 Baruch (see ch. 4), Israel is called "vineyard" in a positive context here ("your [God's] vineyard" of G; "glorious vineyard" of S). Although "vineyard" might serve also as a parable of Israel's degeneracy, like in the "song" on the vineyard which does not thrive despite the care bestowed upon it (Isa 5; the same chapter contains condemnations of wine abuse in 5:11 and 22), it is nevertheless difficult to accept Picard's creative hypothesis on isomorphic connections between the two images, argued in anthropologic and psychoanalytic terms.¹³ Rather, they may indicate a compilative nature of 3 Baruch or, more probably, the inconsistent use of very common and polysemantic imagery.

1:2G. Where is their God? This is a citation of Pss 79:10; 115:2; Joel 2:17; Mic 7:10, absent in S. The heavenly tour following the prologue might be an attempt to receive an answer to this question. The probable answer may be that although God is unseen (since Baruch, in contrast to other visionaries, does not see him), he manifests himself in his wondrous creations.¹⁴

1:3. Beloved man. See Notes ad loc.

1:3S. Be silent. CS оумлъчи. G has in its place more neutral σύνες "understand." Cf. 1:7G: "I will not continue speaking." The Slavonic word as well as its biblical Hebrew and Greek equivalents דָּמָם and σιγᾶν may mean both "be silent" and "be still." The call to silence may be interpreted in different ways:

¹³ Picard. "Observations," 96–98. See argumentation of Harlow, Baruch, 29–31; 128–130.

¹⁴ Thus Dean-Otting, "Baruch," 151–152; Nickelsburg, Jewish Literature, 302.

1. It may be an order to stop mourning. At the end of the vision Baruch has to ask for a special permission in order to weep for the sinners: “Order me, Lord, to weep on their behalf” (16:9S; probably not original). The identical God’s order “be silent” appears also in T. Job 33:1–2 (7:34–35) and means there “stop lamenting”:

And when Eliphaz had for a long time cried and lamented, while all the others joined him, so that the commotion was very great, I said to them, “Be silent and I will show you my throne, and the glory of its splendor.”

In Vita 41:1–42 the angel Michael orders Seth, whose request cannot be satisfied, in a very similar formula: “Seth, O man of God, do not weep” (cf. “Be silent, O his beloved man” of 3 Baruch).

The rejection of mourning can have different motives:

1.1. It may imply consolation, as in the following order to Jeremiah:

“Restrain your voice from weeping and your eyes from tears, for there is a reward for your work,” says the Lord, “They shall come back from the land of the enemy, there is hope for your future, says the Lord, your children shall come back to their own country” (Jer 31:16–17).

See T. Job 33:1–2 referred to above and also “Be not weary, for when the day of trouble and heaviness comes, others will weep and be sorrowful, but you will be merry and have abundance” (4 Ezra 2:27). The call to be silent and the motif of silence are found frequently with the promise of the rebuilding of the Temple. The exact wording may be found in the following verses:

And the Lord shall inherit Judah his portion in the Holy Land, and shall choose Jerusalem again. Be silent [Heb שָׁמָּה, Gk ἐλπίσθαι; also in the verses below], O all flesh, before the Lord, for he is raised up out of his holy habitation. (Zech 2:16–17)

But the Lord is in his holy Temple: be silent before him all the earth. (Hab 2:20)

Be silent at the presence of the Lord God: for the day of the Lord is at hand. (Zeph 1:7).¹⁵

In 3 Baruch, which contains no promises of the restoration, only the subsequent vision may serve as a consolation. Comparison with an analogous situation in Christian tradition may be productive. Similar to 3 Baruch the mourning over Jesus (the “temple of whose body” was destroyed; John 2:21) is interrupted by a revelation in John 20:11–17. In another

¹⁵ Torresan, “Silence.”

Christian text referring to the same event the rationale to stop the mourning is stated explicitly: “as they mourned and wept, the Lord showed himself unto them and said to them, ‘For whom do you weep? Weep no more, I am he whom you seek’” (Ethiopic Ep. Apostles 10), i.e., there is no real reason for a lament. The same logic may be in effect in 3 Baruch: the mourning over the earthly Temple is interrupted by the vision of the heavenly Temple.

Moreover, there may be an additional link between the rejection of mourning and the scenes of the celestial liturgy. The Oil Reward as the climax of the vision (ch. 15) may be regarded as a demonstrative breaking of the mourning rites,¹⁶ which according to Jewish customs included abstinence from anointing (2 Sam 14:2; b. Moed. Q. 21a).

1.2. An order to cease weeping may also imply a call to stop provoking God by complaining about God’s decision to destroy Jerusalem, as in the next command below: “I became silent. And the angel told me: ‘Cease to provoke God’” (1:6G). R. Akiba was committed to rejoice despite the destruction of Jerusalem and objected to the sages’ urging him: “while our holy city lies in ruins, weep, do not laugh” (Sifre Deut 43). Cf. the Rabbinic principle: “a man must bless [God] for bad things as he blesses for good ones” (m. Ber. 9.5).¹⁷ Ben Sira, although prescribing public mourning (“avoid not those who weep, but mourn with those who mourn” (Sir 7:34), calls for moderation in grief: “it will not help him [the deceased], but will harm you” (38:21; 17–23; cf. Ps.-Phoc. 97; Syr. Men. 458–467). Negative statements about sadness and excessive mourning are found in Rabbinic writings: God’s presence (Shekhina) does not descend into an atmosphere of sadness (b. Shab. 30b); there can be no sorrow in the presence of God (b. Hag. 5b); a man should not pray in a sorrowful mood (b. Ber. 31a). Cf. a Rabbinic interpretation of Jer 22:10:

“Weep not for the dead and do not bemoan him.” “Weep not” – that is, not more than sufficient; and “do not bemoan him” – that is, not more than prescribed ... the Holy One, blessed be He, says: “Be not more merciful than I am.” (b. Moed Q. 27b)

¹⁶ For oil closely associated with joy see Ps 45:8; Prov 27:9. The same with wine, moderate use of which is not opposed in ch. 4, while it does fall out of use in certain circles mourning the Temple after its destruction (t. Sot. 15.11).

¹⁷ The saying is immediately followed by the prescription “not to act thoughtlessly against the eastern gate which is against the Holy of Holies,” which is exactly the location of Baruch’s lament (see comm. to T:2 above).

2. The silence may also, on the contrary, be part of a mourning setting (as, e.g., in Job 2:13). In Jeremiah and Lamentation it is connected to the mourning over the Temple:

Assemble yourselves, and let us enter into the defended cities, and let us be silent there: for the Lord our God hath put us to silence, and given us water of gall to drink, because we have sinned against the Lord (Jer 8:14)

The elders of the daughter of Zion sit on the ground in silence (Lam 2:10)

Let him sit alone in silence when he has laid it on him; let him put his mouth in the dust, there may yet be hope (Lam 3:28–29)

In some of the fragments above, silence may indicate restraint from prayer or from mentioning God's name (as in Amos 6:10; 8:3) or from prophecy (as in Ezek 3:26: "I will make your tongue stick to the roof of your mouth so that you will be silent and unable to rebuke them;" cf. 23:21–22 and 24:25–27).¹⁸ See also Am 5:13. In some traditions, God, Metatron, and angels themselves weep and bewail the destruction of Jerusalem (Jer 13:17; y. Ber. 59a; Pesiq. R. 29.12; Lam. Rab. Intr. 24; etc.).

3. A call for silence might have some kind of cultic or ritual background (as it has probably in Zech 2:17 and Hab 2:20 above; cf. also Ps 62:1; Ep. Arist. 92 and 95; Rev 8:1; T. Adam 1.12; m. Tamid 5.1–6). Mary Dean-Otting supposes that it might be a reflection of Hellenistic mystery practices, where silence is a part of the ritual setting;¹⁹ see comm. to "mysteries" in 1:6. In the Mithras Liturgy 2.21–22 the initiate cries: "Silence, silence, silence, the sign of the living, incorruptible God."²⁰ On the role of silence in initiations into the mysteries, see Plutarch, De garrul. 505–6; Hippolytus Ref. 5.8.39. Cf. Exod. Rab. 29 (end):

When God revealed the Torah, no sparrow chirped, no bird flew, no ox lowed; the heavenly Ofanim moved not; the Seraphim did not chant the Sanctification; men spoke not; the sea roared not; no creature uttered a sound; and the world was silent.

Silence is also a symptom of trance during a revelation:

he [Isaiah] became silent, and he did not see the men who stood before him, though his eyes were open. Moreover his lips were silent, and the mind of his body was taken up from him, but his breath was in him (Asc. Isa. 6:10–12)

Silence is an important part of the prayer experience for both Greeks (Homer, Iliad 9.171; Aristophanes, Thesm. 295–97; Thucydides 6.32.1)²¹

¹⁸ Cf. Wilson, "Interpretation."

¹⁹ Mylonas, Eleusis, 233; Dean-Otting, "Baruch," 108–109.

²⁰ Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie, 6.2.21–22.

²¹ Mensching, Schweigen, 13–21.

and Jews (cf. 1 Sam 1:13 and the variety of terminology for “keeping silent” in the Pss 32:3; 37:7; 38:3, 13–14; 39:2; 65:2; etc.).²² For a similar tradition, see also the Georgian Book of Adam 6:1–2:

While you pray, let no sound come from your mouth, for we are not worthy to open our mouths, for our lips are impure because we transgressed the commandments, concerning the food of Paradise which God had forbidden us. Rather, be silent, only do penitence in the water for thirty-four days with all your heart and I will do the same in the Jordan river, until God hearkens and gives us food.

In 3 Baruch this may be connected to the concept of angelic mediation, central for this book. First, the angel might order Baruch to stop direct communication with God. From this point on, through the whole book, Baruch speaks only to angelus interpres. Second, his silence may be a necessary condition to enable an angelic prayer offering in the climax of the vision (chs. 12–14), since angels cannot serve while the people of Israel communicate with God: “The voice of Jacob [here ‘people of Israel’], this is the voice that silences both celestial and terrestrial beings” (Gen. Rab. 65.21; cf. angelic silence connected to the prayer activity of humans in Rev 8:1; T. Adam 1:12 [esp. Syriac]; b. Hag 12b).²³

Gnostic writings are preoccupied with “silence” in various meanings. Besides the ideas of the deity as the “Silent One” and the Dyad of the Ineffable (ἄρρητον) and the Silence (Σιγήν; see Irenaeus, Haer. 1.11.1; cf. CH 1.30; 31; 10.5; cf. comm. to “ineffable” in T:1), the pious must be silent in various senses:

He is perfect, the invisible God to whom one speaks in silence ... What is the way to sing a hymn through it [silence]? ... I am silent, my father. I want to sing a hymn to you while I am silent. ... For it is right before God that we keep silent about what is hidden. Return to [praising], my son, and sing while you are silent. Ask what you want in silence ... It is advantageous from now on, that we keep silent in a reverent posture. Do not speak about the vision from now on (Discourse on the Eighth and Ninth; Marsanes; Gospel of the Egyptians; passim).²⁴

Here, as in regard to the silent prayer, keeping silence on the things revealed is also mentioned.

²² Cf. Gillmayr-Bucher, “Schweigen”; Spieckermann, “Schweigen”; Horst, “Silent.”

²³ Cf. Hekh. Rabbati (ms Oxford 1531; #173). Cf. Bauckham, Climax, 70–83.

²⁴ Cf. Ignatius of Antioch: “It is better for a man to be silent and be [a Christian], than to talk and not to be one.” “The kingdom of God is not in word, but in power.” “He who possesses the word of Jesus, is truly able to hear even his very silence, that he may be perfect, and may both act as he speaks, and be recognized by his silence” (Eph. 15). See Chadwick, “Silence.” For different meanings of silence, see also Knohl, Sanctuary.

4. Also in 3 Baruch the command to be silent might have been understood as an order not to reveal the vision to others or at least not to divulge “mysteries” to “uninitiated” (see comm. to “mysteries” below). Apocalyptic mysteries are supposed to be kept (1 En. 9:6; 10:6; 16:3–4; 65:6; 69:15; Apoc. Abr. 14:4; T. Jud. 16:4; T. Job. 8:19; 2 Cor. 12:4) or to be shared only with chosen (1 En. 65:11; 4 Ezra. 8:62; 12:36–38); cf. Od. Sol. 8:10; Gen. Rab. 50.9; 68.12; 78.2; etc.) or shared only partim (4 Ezra. 14:26; 14:44–46). Similar statements were made by Philo:

Thus too, being admitted into the inmost mysteries, she [i.e., the soul] will learn not to blab or babble them thoughtlessly, but to store them up and guard them in secrecy and silence. For it is written “make buried cakes” [Gen 18:6], because the sacred story that unveils to us the truth of the Uncreated and His potencies must be buried, since the knowledge of divine rites is a trust which not every comer can guard aright (Sacr. 15.60)

These thoughts, ye initiated, whose ears are purified, receive into your souls as holy mysteries indeed and babble not of them to any of the profane. Rather as stewards guard the treasure in your own keeping, not where gold and silver, substances corruptible, are stored, but where lies that most beautiful of all possessions, the knowledge of the Cause and of virtue ... (Cher. 14.48)²⁵

The further advantages of silence are discussed by Philo several times, e.g., in Somn. 40 and Mut. 42. The Rabbis also limit the audience for some kinds of sacral knowledge:

One must not discuss the Work of Creation before two students, not the Work of Chariot before one student, unless [the student] be wise and able to speculate by himself. He who speaks of the things which are before, behind, above, and below, it were better he had never been born. (m. Hag. 2.1)

Just as a treasure is not revealed to every one, so also you are not allowed to discourse on the profundities of the Law except in the presence of worthy persons. (y. Abod. Zar. 2.8.41d)

The claim for secrecy is rare but found also in Hekhalot literature, as in Hekh. Zutarti, based upon Prov 25:2: “It is the Glory of God to keep a word secret,” – so that you will not be turned out of this world.” In the Gospel of Luke, Zechariah is also ordered to be silent by the angel Gabriel, although here as a punishment, a deprivation of an ability to share his revelation: “Be silent and unable to speak until the day when these things take place, because you did not believe my words, which will be fulfilled in their ²⁵ Here and below the quotes from Philo are based on Colson and Whitaker’s translation (Loeb edition), often revised and emended.

proper time” (Lk 1:20). Silence as a sign of penance was ordered to Eve by her husband in Vita 6:1.²⁶

However, the interpretation above would contradict 2:4 and 17:1S (if the latter verse is original), where Baruch is supposed to share his knowledge with “sons of men” without any limitation mentioned.

5. A very simple meaning of a call for attention is also possible, as in “be silent and listen” of Deut 27:9 or “teach me, and I will be silent;” “be silent before me so that I may speak;” “be silent, and let me speak;” “be silent, and I will teach you wisdom” of, respectfully, Job 6:24; 13:13; 33:31; and 33:33 (all of root שָׁחַח). Cf. Poimandres:

Thereon [I said]: “O Shepherd, ..., for now I am filled with great desire and long to hear; do not run off.” The Shepherd said: “Keep silence, for I have not yet unrolled for you the first discourse.” “Lo! I am still,” I said. (CH 1.16)

A general encomium on silence may be found in Prov 17:28; Sir 20:5; Monostichs of Menander 597; see also Syr. Men. 311–313: “There exists nothing better than silence. Being silent is at all times a virtue.”²⁷

1:3G. Salvation of Jerusalem (σωτηρίας ἱερουσαλήμ). The hope for restoration might be meant. The motif of earthly or heavenly restoration of Jerusalem is widely known in both Jewish and early Christian sources. However, a call “not to care so much for the salvation of Jerusalem” and Baruch’s promise “not to continue speaking” (1:7) on the matter appear only in G and may be one of the later Christian interpolations typical for the Greek version. At the same time, the position may be explained also in a purely Jewish context. “Not to care so much” means either that (1) the Temple is no longer important, or (2) its destruction has some positive aspects as well, or (3) its restoration is granted.

(1) The significance of the destruction of the earthly Temple is relativized as long as the heavenly Temple continues to function (as will be shown in the subsequent vision).²⁸ This idea is very clearly formulated in T. Job

²⁶ Although there may be a special reason for this: “Let not a word go forth from your mouth since we are unworthy to ask of the Lord, since our lips are unclean from the illicit and forbidden Tree.”

²⁷ More on silence in the ancient world see Mensching, Schweigen; Picard, Silence; Casel, Silentio; Mortley, “Silence.”

²⁸ Collins (Apocalyptic, 198–201) and Nickelsburg (Jewish, 299–303) agree with this interpretation.

36:3 (8:9): “My heart is not fixed on earthly things, since the earth and all that inhabit it are unstable. But my heart holds fast to heaven, because there is no upset in heaven.” In the post-destruction world, prayers take the place of sacrifices and go directly to the celestial spiritualized Temple (see 3 Bar. 11 and comm. there).

- (2) The destruction of the Temple is evidence of the smooth functioning of the reward mechanism as described in chs. 12–16. This is the understanding of S: “It came to Jerusalem to accept this.” Other positive aspects of the fall of the Temple may be found in dialectic conceptions of some Rabbinic sources, e.g., the destruction of “stone and wood” saved Israel from annihilation by God’s wrath; see b. Kid. 31b; Midr. Pss. 79.360; 92.408 (“songs and music at the erection of the Temple, songs and music in the destruction of the Temple”); Lam. Rab. 4.148; the Messiah is born on the day of the destruction (e.g., y. Ber. 2.5a; Lam. Rab. 1.89–90).
- (3) Restoration is promised in numerous sources. See, e.g., the dialogue of Michael and Sammael (both appear as opposing forces also in 3 Baruch), where Michael says: “Rejoice not against me, my enemy. When I fall, I shall rise ... Even if I sit in darkness owing to the destruction of the First and Second Temples, the Lord will be my light on the Day of the Messiah”²⁹ (Deut. Rab. 11.9); cf. Petirat Moshe 125; 2 Petirat Moshe 379.

1:6. Mysteries / great [or “many”] mysteries (μυστήρια / ТАИНЫ МНОГЫ). The concept, central for 3 Baruch, appears also in 1:4S (“all the mysteries of God;” “all [the things] of God” in G); 1:8G (“mysteries of God;” the verse is absent in S); 2:6 (“greater mysteries” in G); 5:3S (“mysteries greater than theses;” but “works greater than these” in G); 17:1S (“all the mysteries”); cf. also θαυμαστά “wonders” of 10:5G and ἄρρητα “ineffable things” of T:1G.

The collocation “mysteries of God” (as in 1:4S and 1:8G) appears in Wis 2:22 referring to retribution (see below). The same combination (Heb רִזִּי אֱלֹהִים) is found in Qumran texts with different meanings; see the Rule of the Community (1QS 3.23) and the War Scroll (1QM 3.9 and 16.16; cf. 14.14). Some manuscripts of 2 Enoch have a title “Book of the Mysteries of God, a revelation to Enoch.” In a similar apocalyptic context it is found also in Greek Apoc. Ezra 1:5: “And I saw the mysteries of God and His angels;" cf. "Lord, give the glory, in order that I may see your mysteries" (1:2).³⁰ For Rabbinic הקב"ה מסתורין של, see below.

²⁹ Cf. “the Day of Judgment” in 1:7 below.

The combination "great [or "many"] mysteries" (as in S here or similar to 2:6G) is known from 4 Ezra in a very similar context: "the Most High has revealed many mysteries to you. For he has seen your righteous conduct, that you have sorrowed continually for your people, and mourned greatly over Zion" (10:38–39). "Many mysteries" (Lat mysteria multa) may in fact go back to "great mysteries" (Lat multus may render Heb רב with both meanings); see also Apoc. Mos. 34:1, where Eve, witnessing an angelic liturgy, sees "two great and fearful mysteries [μεγάλα καὶ φοβερὰ μυστήρια] before the presence of God".

Philo uses both combinations: as θεοῦ μυστήρια: "for not to all must leave be given to contemplate the mysteries of God, but only to those who are able to hide and guard them" (Leg. All. 2.15.57; cf. 3.1.3); "Moses, the keeper and guardian of the mysteries of the Existing One, will be one called above" (Plant. 6.26), so also τὰ μεγάλα μυστήρια "great mysteries" distinguished of τὰ μικρά μυστήρια "minor mysteries" (Leg. All. 3.33.100; Cher. 44.49; Sacr. 16.62; cf. comm. below). The terms might be borrowed from the language of the mystery cults³¹ (cf. on "initiation" to mysteries in Sacr. 15.60; Cher. 14.48 in comm. to "be silent" in 1:3). Whereas minor mysteries present the indirect knowledge of God which may be achieved by practicing virtue/Law and learning of God's creation and actions, Philo's "great mysteries," the direct knowledge of God, may be obtained only through revelation.³²

The term "mysteries" may refer either to the entire vision or to its parts.³³ It is difficult to specify a content of the Greek term μυστήρια as it is used in 3 Baruch. It depends on the setting in which it is found. Biblical μυστήρια (Aram רזין or רזיא) refers to the future events hidden in a dream (Dan 2:8–29); cf. also נסתרות (Deut 29:28). In the Wisdom of Solomon it means the mechanism of retribution: "As for the mysteries of God, they [godless] knew them not, neither did they hope for a recompense of holiness nor discern the innocent souls' reward" (22:2). However, Wisdom also is "privy to the mysteries of the knowledge of God" (Wis 8:4). "Mysteries are revealed unto the meek" according to Sir 3:18–20. The word is frequent in ³⁰ Cf. the titles of 3 Baruch and the Apocalypse of Ezra, which are also very similar (see comm. to T:1).

³¹ See Sandmel, Philo, 143–145; Dean-Otting, "Baruch," 103.

³² Wolfson, Philo, 1.47–48. For an alternative interpretation see comm. to 6:3.

³³ See the survey of the term applied to 3 Baruch in Dean-Otting, "Baruch," 102–109. Cf. the general treatment of the term in Bockmuehl, Revelation.

1 Enoch: it refers to the celestial secrets to be kept in the Book of Watchers (1 En. 9:6; 10:6; 16:3; cf. Apoc. Abr. 14; etc.); in the Similitudes it defines wonders of the created world to be revealed to the righteous and among them the secrets of natural phenomena:

And there my eyes saw the secrets of the lightning and of the thunder, and the secrets of the winds, how they are divided to blow over the earth, and the secrets of the clouds and the dew, and there I saw from where they proceed in that place and from where they saturate the dusty earth. (1 En. 41:3–4)

See also 1 En. 41:1; 49:2; 51:3; 52:2 and 5; 59:1–3; 63:3; 65:6, 11; 69:15. In the Similitudes Michael (appearing in 3 Bar. 11 too) is the one who introduces the mysteries (69:15; 71:3–4), including “the chambers of all the stars, and all the luminaries.” The term may also refer to post-mortem existence (1 En. 103:2; cf. comm. to 3 Bar. 15). The term also occurs in 4 Ezra 10:38; 12:36, 38; 14:26; title of 2 Enoch; Apoc. Abr. 14:4. In Qumran texts the term relates either to (a) a hidden future,³⁴ or to (b) natural phenomena (especially in Hodayot; “luminaries for their mysteries” in 1QH^a 9.11), or to (c) “hidden knowledge, that leads to ethical behavior” (1QS 9.18–19; 11.3–6).³⁵ Philo uses the word with different meanings which are sometimes very similar to those of the Qumran sources (Leg. All. 3.21.71; 23.100) and sometimes borrowing from the language of the mystery religions (see above). The Rabbis use the semitized form of this Greek term – מסטורין של הקב“ה, appearing also in a combination מסטורין מסתרים (Gen. Rab. 50.9; 68.12) identical to θεοῦ μυστήρια of Philo and 3 Bar. 1:4S and 1:8G.³⁶ “God reveals them only to righteous” (Tan. Vayira 5). See the homophonic Heb מסתרים, מסתורין designating secret places of heaven in b. Hag. 5b; Lam. Rab., intr. 24. The angel Metatron (revealing heavenly secrets to visionaries) is called מסטורין, מסטורין in Gen. Rab. 5.2. “Mysteries of creation” are known to the Hekhalot literature (Hekh. Rabbati 6.170–171). Hekh. Zut. in its opening lines speaks about the revelation of “secrets of the world and the mysteries of wisdom.” Note also “mysteries of wisdom” opposed to “mysteries of the world” revealed to a visionary in 3 En. 11:1–2.

Of all the above the most appropriate for the content of our revelation are either the mechanism of retribution (taking the climactic part of the vision and probably being its main concern) as in Wis 22:2, or the angelic liturgy (enabling this mechanism in 3 Baruch) as in Apoc. Mos. 34:1, or natural phenomena as luminaries in 1 En. 69–71; 1QH^a 9.11 and meteorological phenomena of 1 En. 41:3–4.

³⁴ Vogt, “Mysteria,” 248; Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 104.

³⁵ Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 104–105; cf. Stuckenbruck, 1 Enoch, 519–21.

³⁶ See Liebermann, Hellenism, 119–120; Bregman, “Mishna.”

On the problem of distinction vs. synonymy between “mysteries” and “Glory of God” in 3 Baruch see comm. to 4:2S. See also comm. to “great and wonderful things” in 4:1.

And I will show you other mysteries, greater than these / and I will tell you great mysteries which no man had seen. “Greater mysteries” are mentioned also in 2:6G and 5:3S, where they are totally appropriate to the context, “great mysteries” – in 1:6S. Compare with Apoc. Abr. 9:6: “mysterious and great things,” and see comm. to “mysteries” above. The promise contrasts the warning given to Baruch not to seek “great things” in Jer 45:5. According to James, since Baruch has yet seen nothing, the mentioning of “greater” mysteries may be either a result of a lacuna or an assimilation of 2:6G.³⁷ It is more probable, however, that it is a technical term like “Greater Mysteries” of Hellenistic cults as opposed to “Lesser” ones. Another possible explanation may be that a “minor” mystery is the theological problem of the fall of Jerusalem, raised in the question of 1:2,³⁸ as opposed to “greater mysteries” of the whole creation shown to Baruch in the subsequent vision.

1:6–7S. You will neither add or omit [anything] ... I will neither subtract nor add a word (ни приложиши ни оуложиши ... не трѣбоуѣж не приложж словесе ѣдино҃го). The motif and expression, well attested in early Jewish literature (e.g., Deut 4:2; 12:32; Eccl 3:14; 1 En. 104:11; Ep. Arist. 311; Rev 22:18) and known in the same wording also in other Slavonic documents,³⁹ is absent in G. As Gaylord notes, CS приложити ‘add’ may mean also ‘change.’⁴⁰ Thus, an alternative interpretation would be: “I will neither subtract nor change a word. If I do omit, the Lord shall change my judgment on the Day of Judgment.” Harlow notices an irony here: the composition containing these words has obviously reworked versions. He tries to settle the contradiction: “May 1:7b reflect the attitude of a copyist on justifying the addition of material? The words ‘If I do omit ...’ suggest that ³⁷ James, “Baruch,” lvi.

³⁸ It is among central problems for 4 Ezra; 2 Baruch; 4 Baruch, Apoc. Abr.; see Harlow, Baruch, 91, n. 43.

³⁹ Gaylord, Slavonic, 7.

⁴⁰ Gaylord, Slavonic, 7.

omission is the more grievous wrong.”⁴¹ In fact, it might be an elliptic construction typical for the Bible: “If I do omit [“or add” – referring to 1:6], the Lord shall add ...” The same inconsistency characterizes Josephus in the same words promising to retell the biblical narrative “neither adding nor omitting anything” (οὐδὲν προσθεῖς οὐδ’ αὖ παραλιπών), and constantly violating the promise (Ant. 1.17).⁴²

1:7. Day of Judgment. Contra James, the expression cannot testify for Christian provenance.⁴³ The wording (Gk ἡμέρα τῆς κρίσεως going back to Heb יוֹם הַדִּין or Aram יוֹמָא דְדִינָא known in LXX (e.g., Isa 34:8; Prov 6:34 [Heb נֶקֶם יוֹם]; Esth 10:3) is common also for the early post-biblical literature,⁴⁴ including NT⁴⁵ and Rabbinic texts.⁴⁶ Normally, the day of a heavenly judgment of different kinds is meant (although sometimes, as in b. Sanh. 8a, it is just a regular “court-day”). The question is whether the universal eschatological finale or an individual one is implied. In light of the vision below – neglecting eschatology but referring to a personal afterlife – the latter might seem more probable.⁴⁷ In this case, 3 Baruch would belong to the group of early Jewish texts which presuppose that the afterlife reward is not postponed until the last judgment but is given already at death.⁴⁸ A court of heavenly judgment is known already in Dan 7:9, 10, 22, while individual judgment procedure is found associated with a specific day not earlier than in m. Rosh HaSh. 1.2 (“On the New Year Day all men pass before him [the Lord] like young lambs”). The ceremony witnessed by Baruch in chs. 12–16, probably bearing certain features of the Day of Atonement service, may belong to this kind of judgment session put in a liturgic setting (see comm. to ch. 14).

⁴¹ Harlow, Baruch, 40, n. 24.

⁴² See Inowlocki, “Neither Adding.”

⁴³ See James, “Baruch,” lvi. Thus Toy, Ginzberg, “Baruch,” 551.

⁴⁴ Tob (Sin.) 1:18; Pss. Sol. 15:12; Jdt 16:17; 1 En. 10:12 (cf. Greek En. 10:6; 22:13; 93:4; 97:5); 2 En. (A) 39:2; 2 Bar. 59:8; 4 Ezra 7:38, 102, 104, 113; 12:34; T. Levi (α) 3:3; Apoc. Ezra 2:26–32; Apoc. Mos. 12:1, ⁴⁵ Matt 10:15, 22, 24, 36; 2Pet 2:9; 3:7; 1 John 4:17.

⁴⁶ Tg. Ps.-Jon. Gen 3:15; γ. Ber. 61a.8.6; γ. Hag. 8b.2.1; γ. Erub. 30b.5.1; b. Sotah 3b; b. Taan. 8b; Tan. Vayira 3; Pequde 3; Exod. Rab. 23.6; etc.

⁴⁷ The only another reference to the eschaton may be the “end” τέλος of 13:2G (cf. note ibid.).

⁴⁸ On such documents see Bauckham, “Hell,” especially p. 357; cf. idem, Fate. This kind of annual or lifetime verdict may be meant in ch. 15 (see comm. ibid. and in chs. 4, 10, and 14).

At the same time, the Divine judgment at the end of time⁴⁹ is more widely attested in early Jewish sources as well as in Rabbinic literature. The expression “Day of Judgment” appears frequently in the literature of the Second Temple period and almost exclusively in a universal eschatological sense.⁵⁰ An instructive parallel occurs in 4 Ezra: it is the eschatological Day of Judgment, when all physical phenomena (almost all observed by Baruch in his vision) become irrelevant, while God’s Glory (which Baruch does not see) is shown:

The Day of Judgment will be thus: it has no sun or moon or stars, or cloud or thunder or lightning or wind or water or air, or darkness or evening or morning, or warm season [aestas] or spring or summer [aestus] or heat or winter or frost or cold or hail or rain or dew, or noon or night or dawn or shining or brightness or light, but only the splendor of the Glory of the Most High, by which all shall see what has been determined [for them]. (4 Ezra 7:38–42)

1:8G. Angel of hosts [or “of powers”] (ὁ ἄγγελος τῶν δυνάμεων). The expression appears again in 2:1S; 2:6G; 10:1S; 11:1S (in Slavonic – in sing. АНГЕЛЪ СИЛЪ or even corrupted СИЛНЪИ “powerful angel”). This angelic class is well attested; cf., e.g., LXX Josh 5:14 (reproducing Heb אַנְגֶּל־צָבָא); Greek 1 En. 20:1; 61:10; T. Abr. (A) 9:3; 14:12 (Michael as “a commander-in-chief of hosts”); 2 Thess 1:7; cf. “hosts/powers” in Col 1:16; Eph 1:21; Rom 8: 38; 1 Pet 3:22. The same angel is called “archangel” in 10:1G. See another (lesser?) rank of “angels over the principalities” (Gk ἄγγελοι ἐπὶ τῶν ἐξουσιῶν) as attendants of humanity in 12:3G. Hughes cites Philo’s reference to the “six highest Powers” known as angels (Conf. 34). Of them two of the highest – “Divine Logos” and “Creative Power” – may correspond respectively to Michael (identified by Philo with Logos in Her. 42) and angels of hosts.⁵¹ For more on angelic classes, see comm. to 4:7S and introductory comm. to ch. 11.

⁴⁹ Which is referred in MT as “that day” (Isa 17:7; 30:23; 38:5; Hos 2:18; Mic 2:4; 5:10; Zech 9:16; 14: 4, 6, 9), “those days” (Joel 3:1), “that time” (Jer 30:25; Zeph 3:19, 20), “the day” (Ezek 7:10; cf. Rom 13:12; Heb 10:25; 1 Thess 5:4), known also as “the Day of the Lord” (e.g., Joel 3:4 (2:31); Mal 4:23; and passim; cf. 1 Cor 5:5; 1 Thess 5:2 and passim).

⁵⁰ E.g., 1 En. 91:15; 94:9; 98:10; 104:5; 2 Bar. 24; T. Abr. (A) 10ff; 4 Ezra 6ff; Sifre Deut. 307; b. Sanh. 91b; b. Kid. 40b; Pesiq. R. 20; Tan. B. 1.21; Midr. Tannaim 187.

⁵¹ Hughes, “Baruch,” 534.

C. Vision

I. Builders or Abode of Demons

Builders: First Account (2:1–3)

GREEK

¹ And having taken me he brought me where heaven was set,

and where there was a river which no one can cross, nor any alien spirit of all those that God created.

² And having taken me he brought me to the first heaven, and showed me a very large door.

And he told me, “Let us enter through it.”

And we entered

as if [borne] on wings,

a distance of about a 30 days’ journey.

³ And he showed me within heaven a plain.

And there were men living thereon,

with the faces of cattle,

and the horns of deer,

and the feet of goats,

and the loins of sheep.

SLAVONIC

¹ And the angel of host took me and carried me where the firmament of heaven was.

² And there was the first heaven and in that heaven he showed me very large doors.

And the angel told me, “Let us enter through these doors,”

And we entered

about a 30 days’ journey.

He showed me means of safety.

³ And I saw a plain,

where men were living whose faces were those of cattle, with the horns of deer,

the feet of goats,

and the loins of sheep.

COMMENTARY

The revelation begins with the experience and visionary topography well attested in other apocalyptic works: the protagonist is brought by his guiding angel to the “river” (Oceanus surrounding earth), which prevents access to the place “where heaven was set” (a horizon, where heaven and earth meet). From there they fly into a gate of heaven (which may be one of the gates that facilitate the motion of the sun in 6:13, and thus be situated on the level of horizon) and after a long journey (which is conditioned by the extraordinary thickness of the firmament, of which we learn in 2:5) arrive at a celestial plain behind it. From this point, “Baruch’s” overall experience in the lower heaven finds no precedents. The first thing he finds in heaven are composite zoomorphic beings inhabiting the celestial plain. The identification of these creatures as given in 2:7 below (the builders of the Tower of Babel) does not seem to be comprehensive. It is discussed in detail in introductory comm. to ch. 3.

2:1G. And having taken me he brought me (καὶ λαβὼν με ἤγαγέν με). This formula is used regularly for transitions from heaven to heaven (2:2; 3:1; 6:1; 8:1) and for the return to earth (17:2). The formula is attested also in 2 Enoch (21:5); Apocalypse of Zephaniah; Gnostic Apocalypse of Paul (19:20–23); Sefer Eliyahu.¹ It must be of biblical origin; cf. Ezek 8:3; 11:1, 24, which has the same formula although in parataxis (ותבא ... ותשא) and (נשאתני ותביאתני) and is used in a similar context: Ezekiel is taken by a spirit (or a wind; Heb רוח) to celestial gates; see the comment immediately below.

2:1. Where heaven was set / where the firmament of heaven was. On the “foundations of heaven” see 2 Sam 22:8 (Heb מוסדות השמים); Job 26:11 (Heb עמודי שמים). The furthest ends of the earth touch the hemispheric heaven (Deut 4:32; cf. Deut 30:4; Is 13:5; Jer 49:36; Ps 19:7; Neh 1:9; cf. CAD I.240 and E.79). Enoch saw “the ends of earth whereon heaven rests, and the portals of the heaven open” (1 En. 31:1–2; cf. 1 En. 17–18; etc.; Apoc. Paul 21; 31; and passim). According to Rabbinic views, heaven and earth “kiss each other” at the horizon, and between the water above and that below there are but two or three fingerbreadths (t. Hag. 2.5; Gen. Rab. 2.4). Rava bar Hana was also shown where heaven and earth meet, and there also was, although not a door, a heavenly window

¹ Bauckham, “Hell,” 363.

(b. B. Bat. 74a). Similar to 3 Baruch the foundations of heaven are set on the Ocean River in Pirqe R. El. 3.6 (see comm. below):

Hooks of heaven are linked to the waters of the Ocean [אֲרֻכִּינִים], since the waters of the Ocean are between the ends of heaven and the ends of earth. And the ends of heaven are spread above the water of the Ocean, as it is written, “He sets the rafters of his lofts in the waters” [Ps 104:3]. From inside heaven is like a basket [קַוְפָּהא] and it goes up like a tent ...”

2:1S. Firmament of heaven (οὐτβεργαδενιε небеси). The same root as in твєрдь, твєрдьство/твєрдествє of the Apocalypse of Abraham (10:8; 19:6; 19:4,7), although there the highest heavens are meant. Here it must designate a construction supporting the lowest heaven (like in 1 En. 18:3, 5, 8, 13; 33:1), rendering Gk στερέωμα, στήριγμα (Heb רָקִיעַ רָקִיעַ). The combination as a whole is an exact equivalent of Gk τὸ στερέωμα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ / Heb רָקִיעַ הַשָּׁמַיִם of Gen 1:20, which is “separating water from water” (Gen 1:6). Here it probably separates the Ocean River from the heavenly waters above (on celestial waters see 4:6; 10:2).

2:1G. A river which no one can cross (ποταμὸς ὃν οὐδεὶς δύναται περᾶσαι αὐτόν). It must be “the river Ocean” preceding the celestial gates also in T. Abr. (B) 8:3. The most similar descriptions are found in the Apocalypse of Paul:

And he [angel] brought me down from the third heaven, and led me into the second heaven, and again he led me to the firmament, and from the firmament he led me to the gates of heaven. And the beginning of its foundation was upon the river that washes all the earth. And I asked the angel and said, “Lord, what is this river of water?” And he told me, “This is the Ocean.” And suddenly I came out of heaven. (Apoc. Paul 21)

He led me to the Ocean that bears the foundations of heaven ... And I went with the angel and he took me by the way of the sun setting,² and I saw the beginning of heaven founded upon a great river of water, and I asked, “What is this river of water?” And he told me, “This is the Ocean which compasses the whole earth about.” (Apoc. Paul 31)

In a damaged fragment of Apoc. Zeph. 8 the seer, most probably, has to cross a water reservoir in order to enter the abode of the just. A “kind of a river” (ποταμώδης) separates the worlds in Hist. Rech. 2:6. See also “the river of fire” and “the great sea” of 1 En. 17:6. In the first heaven there is “a vast ocean, much bigger than the earthly ocean” (2 En. (J) 3:3).³ In most cases these water reservoirs lie on the way from earth to heaven. In different traditions they divide earth and the dwelling place of the dead. In Sib. Or. 1:301 the souls of the dead cross Acheron in order to enter the realms of bliss. Ancient Babylonians believed that the dead crossed the river Hubur when entering “the great below.”⁴ Similarly, Josephus writes about the Essenes:

² Baruch most probably also begins his journey from the west; see comm. to 6:1 below.

Sharing the belief of the sons of Greece, they believe that for the virtuous souls there is reserved an abode beyond the Ocean, in a region that is neither oppressed with storms of rain or snow, or with intense heat, but that this place is such as is refreshed by the gentle breathing of a western wind, that is perpetually blowing from the Ocean. (Bell. 2.155)

These writings must reflect a very ancient motif already known to the Gilgamesh Epic (10–11), Babylonian Mappa Mundi (BM, No 92687), Homer (shield of Achilles as described in Iliad; cf. also Od. 10.513; 11.155; 24.11), and Herodotus (Hist. 4.36).⁵

The identification of the river of 3 Baruch with the “upper water” (Heb מִיִּם עֲלִיִּינִים) of Rabbinic tradition (Gen. Rab. 4.3; b. Hag. 15a), suggested by Ginzberg,⁶ is less probable, since Baruch has not reached heaven yet. On celestial waters see comm. to 4:6 and 10:2, where this identification is more appropriate.

Alien spirit (ξένη πνοή. Lit. “alien breath.” Different interpretations are possible. The understanding of this unique term may be illuminated by 1 En. 17–19; Hist. Rech. (Apoc. Zos.) 2:9; and Apoc. Abr. 19–21.

Profane. Gk πνοή means ‘living being’; below: οὐκ ἂν ἐσωθῇ πᾶσα πνοή “no living being would be preserved” (8:6). Also here it may be a common Semitized use of the Greek word, according to a metonymic use of Syr npš, Heb נִשְׁמָה, נֶפֶשׁ (cf., e.g., MT and LXX in Ps 150:6). In this case the verse reads: “no one can cross, nor anyone alien.” 1 Enoch has a similar description but applied to “flesh:” “I saw the great rivers and came to the great river and to the great darkness, and went to the place where no flesh walks” (1 En. 17:6). In the Bible the word “alien” (Heb זָר) regularly refers either to ³ Cf. the “water test” before the sixth gate in Hekhalot ascents (Hekh. Zutarti ## 345; 410).

⁴ Heidel, Gilgamesh, 172.

⁵ Cf. Bietenhard, Himmelsche, 34.

⁶ Toy, Ginzberg, “Baruch.”

profane Israelites (not belonging to Levites or priests; e.g., Exod 29:33; 30:33; Lev 22:10, 12, 13; Num 1:51; 17:5; 18:4) or to gentiles (e.g., Is 1:7; 25:2, 5; Jer 2:25; Ezek 11:9; Hos 7:9). Thus also here by the “alien soul/living being” a person not initiated or not worthy for revelatory experience may be meant. This could indicate a perception of the firmaments as hierarchic realms of the heavenly Temple, similar to the terrestrial Temple in that different groups were differently limited in their access to the inner spaces (see introductory comm. to ch. 11: Ouranology).

Wind. Another possible translation is “alien wind.” This meaning is found in a very close parallel from the History of Rechabites, where πνοή ἀνέμου “blowing of wind” also cannot cross the cloud over the river locking an entrance to another world:⁷ “Through me cannot pass nor a bird of this world,⁸ nor a blowing of wind, not the sun itself; nor the Tempter in this world cannot pass through me” (2:9). “The four winds ... that stand between heaven and earth” appear in 1 En. 18:2–3.⁹

Spirit. The meaning of the odd combination “alien wind” is illuminated by the following. Although the “four winds” of 1 Enoch 18:2–3 are defined as “pillars of heaven” (18:2), “bearing earth and the firmaments of heaven,” they must be more than that:

- (1) The meanings “wind” and “spirit” can be expressed by the same word in Semitic languages and in Greek (Heb רוּחַ; Gk πνεῦμα). Gk πνεύματα lit. “spirits” could designate even specifically “angels” or “demons.”¹⁰ Note also “the east wind which rages through the world like a demon [שַׁעִיר]” in b. B. Bat. 25a. Although in 3 Baruch we have πνοή instead of πνεῦμα, its use in the Semitized Greek of Jews and early Christians could be influenced by the wider semantic field of Heb רוּחַ.¹¹
- (2) The pillars of wind may be angelic creatures, exactly like the “pillars of fire” explicitly identified as fallen angels in 19:10–19–1 below. Spiritual and fiery angels form a regular pair in apocalyptic descriptions (e.g., Apoc. Abr. 19).

⁷ James, “Baruch,” lvii.

⁸ Or less probably “a bird [cannot pass] out of this world” (πετεινὸν ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου τούτου), cf. “the Tempter in this world” below.

⁹ Cf. also a “western wind” In the abode of the virtuous souls beyond the Ocean in Bell. 2.155 cited below.

¹⁰ LPG, 1104.

¹¹ See, e.g., Irenaeus, Haer., 1.6.1 and PLG 1106.

- (3) Both winds-spirits and pillars seem to have a special role in transportation between earth and heaven. Ezekiel's transfer to celestial gates by a wind or a spirit (Heb רוּחַ – Gk πνεῦμα; Ezek 8:3; 11:1, 24; etc.) is described with an almost identical expression: "the wind/spirit took me and brought me" (see comm. to "and having taken me" in 2:1G). Abraham and his guide-angel "ascended like great winds to the heaven" (Apoc. Abr. 15:4).¹² The winds-spirits-pillars of 1 Enoch are mentioned as being adjacent to "the paths of the angels" (18:5) and so probably also between earth and heaven,¹³ while the angelic pillars of fire are seen "descending" (18:11). Pillars as vehicles between heaven and earth are known to later Jewish mysticism: in the Zohar a similar image of a descending fiery pillar brings the Messiah from heaven and then takes him back (Zohar 2.7b); souls of the deceased ascend to the heavenly gate on a pillar (Midr. haNe'elam apud Zohar Hadash 21a); see also the term "median pillar" (העמוד העמצאי; Zohar Hadash 68c; et al.).¹⁴

Evil spirit. If wind-spirit may mean an angelic force, especially one moving between heaven and earth, what does this indicate about the nature of our "alien wind-spirit" which does not have access to heaven (or less probably from heaven to earth)? Heb זֵר may refer to demons, as in the Genesis Apocryphon, to distinguish between the "Aliens" and the "Watchers" and the "Sons of Heaven." Here Bitenosh tells her husband Lamech:

¹² ВЪИДОХОМЪ ІАКО МНѢНОГИ ВЕТРЫ НА НЕБО. Previous translators understood it as "as if [carried] by many winds", despite the fact that CS МНѢНОГИ cannot be instr. pl. Hence, CS ВЕТРЫ is also an East Slavic nom. pl. (derived from acc.) rather than instr. The interpretation of previous translators, which contradicts the linguistic data, was obviously provoked by contextual considerations: the comparison of two persons, Abraham and Yahoel, or two birds carrying them, to "many winds" is absurd. It was, however, not taken into account that CS МНѢНОГИ as well as Gk πολὺς was widely used in the meaning 'great, strong', frequently rendering Heb רב or גדול (HR, 1181–1185). See רוח גדולה "great wind" in Jon 1:4; Job 1:19; 1 Kgs 19:1. Cf. also similar usage of the same word in Apoc. Abr. 16:3: ВЪ МНОЗИ ГЛАС "in a great sound" (Heb בקול גדול) and 17:1: "like a voice of many/great waters" (Heb כקול מים רבים).

¹³ Thus Dillmann, Enoch, 117; see Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 285.

¹⁴ Cf. Idel, Ascensions, 110–112. These pillars must be equivalents of cosmic ladders with the same function (Gen 28:12; Ladder of Jacob; Quran 6.35; etc.; see Altmann, "Ladder;" Idel, Kabbalah, 88–96). Both concepts are probably not coincidentally linked, when Jacob has set a "pillar" (מצבה) on the place where he saw the "ladder" (Gen 28:22).

... this seed comes from you, this conception was by you, the planting of [this] fruit is yours. [It was] not by any Alien, neither by any of the Watchers, nor yet by any of the Sons of Heav[en] [ולא מן כול עירין ולא מן כול בני שמ[י]ן]. (1QapGen^{ar} 2.1)

The collocation “alien spirit” as ἀλλότριος πνεῦμα occurs in Iamblichus’ Egyptian Mysteries, speaking about “souls infected with extraordinary defilements and alien spirits” (ψυχὰι δὲ περισσῶν μολυσμῶν καὶ ἀλλοτρίων πνευμάτων ἀναπίμπλαται). Alternatively, in the plural form the combination “alien spirits” or “spirits of aliens” might have gone back to Heb רוּחוֹת מְמוֹזְרִים (רוּחוֹת (ה)זָרִים as a variant or distortion of רוּחוֹת מְמוֹזְרִים “spirits of bastards,” which designates the demonic offspring of the fallen angels in Shirot (4Q510 1.5 and 4Q511 35.7; cf. 1 En. 10:9 Cod. Pan.). The very term מְמוֹזֵר ‘bastard’ in Zech 9:6 is rendered as “alien” in ancient translations (ἀλλογενεῖς in LXX and נִכְרָאִין in Tg.).¹⁵

Not only the name, but also the role of the “alien spirit” in 3 Baruch – the fact that it cannot ascend to heaven is appropriate for terrestrial demonic forces. In the Apocalypse of Abraham “the earth ... and its spiritual ones” (CS אֲדָמָהאִיָּא probably rendering Gk πνεύματα; 21:3) are opposed to celestial “spiritual angels” (ἄγγελος πνευματικός; 19:6–7). This confirms the fundamental statement repeated twice in 1 Enoch: “The spirits of heaven, in heaven is their dwelling; but the spirits begotten on earth, on earth is their dwelling” (15:10; cf. 15:7–8).

Thus, the common ground of all these sources is the following conception of the ancient Jewish lore: while some winds-spirits do ascend to heaven or even serve as a means of transportation there, “alien” ones cannot do this. The border realm between earth and heaven is uncrossable for “alien” (demonic) spirits in contrast to angelic spirits.¹⁶

For other demonological motifs probably implied in 3 Bar. 3–4 see comm. to 3:5 and 16:3).

¹⁵ I thank Michael Schneider for the parallels from Iamblichus and translations of Zechariah.

¹⁶ A parallel in the History of the Rechabites above preserves rudiments of the conceptions which might lay behind 3 Baruch as well: (1) “the Tempter” (ὁ πειράζων) is distinguished from the “wind,” while in 3 Baruch, the wind-spirit defined as “alien” is also a demonic power. (2) “The birds of this world” also cannot cross, although nothing is said there about the birds of another world. In 3 Bar. 10, the latter successfully reach heaven.

2:2. He brought me to the first heaven, and showed me a very large door / and there was the first heaven and in that heaven he showed me very large doors. For a similar description, see 3:1–2. For the arrangement of heavens see introductory comm. to ch. 11 (Ouranology). “Being brought” to heaven at this stage of the ascent means apparently only the opportunity to see it from beneath, from the place “where heaven was set” (2:1G), after a “30 day’s journey” (see comm. below).

Very large door. Heavenly doors (Gk θύρα, CS Двери) are mentioned also in 3:1 (second heaven), 4:2S (third heaven). The entrance to the fifth heaven, inaccessible for Baruch, is named differently from the previous openings through which he passed. It is called “gate” (Gk πύλη, CS Врата) in 11:5 (in pl.) and 15:1. In 14:1 and 17:1 probably the same entrance is called “door” (see comm. ibid). In 11:2 the fifth gate is designated as “gate-tower” (Gk πυλῶν). In 6:13 we have “365 gates of heaven” (τὰς τριακοσίας ἐξήκοντα πέντε πύλας τοῦ οὐρανοῦ). Note also the “Beautiful” Temple gates (τὰς ὡραίας πύλας) mentioned in T2.

The terms “gates” and “doors” for heavenly openings are also interchangeable in the Bible.¹⁷ Doors of heaven are attested first in Gen 28:17 (שַׁעַר הַשָּׁמַיִם); Ps 78:23 (דַּלְתֵי שָׁמַיִם) and possibly in Gen 7:11, 8:2 as אַרְבּוּבֹת הַשָּׁמַיִם;¹⁸ Cf., e.g., also 3 Macc 6:18; 1 En. 9:2, 10; 34–36; 72–82; 2 En. 13–16; 4 Ezra 3:19; T. Levi 5:1; T. Abr. (A) 11–12; Apoc. Zeph. 3:5–9; Asc. Isa. 6:6–9; Rev 3:8; 4:1; 4Q213^a fr. 1 2.18. The explicit etymology of Babel is “the gate of god” (especially appropriate for the story of Gen 11:1–9; see on the Tower of Babel in 3 Bar. 3:5 below). Among the main function of the celestial gates¹⁹ must be enabling the travel of luminaries under the firmament (on this see comm. to “365 gates of heaven” in 6:13). The route of the spirits to the netherworld as described by Homer, also includes both Oceanus, and the gates of the sun:

Hermes, the Helper, led them down the dank ways. Past the streams of Oceanus they went, past the rock Leucas, past the gates of the sun and the land of dreams, and quickly came to the mead of asphodel, where the spirits dwell. (Od. 24.10–14)

¹⁷ Although the phrase “doors of the gates” in Judg 16:3; 1 Sam 21:14, etc. indicates that the two words might diverge in their meanings.

¹⁸ Oblath identifies also סֹלֶם of Gen 28, rationally translated as ‘ladder,’ with a celestial “vertical” gate (“To sleep”).

¹⁹ Although in 3 Baruch probably not of the gates of the lower heavens, since the sun passes here above the lower firmament (see comm. to 7:1).

Although single and multiple gates are mentioned in the sources above, 3 Baruch belongs to a very narrow group of documents that explicitly mention gates between heavens. Seven gates on the way from heaven to the netherworld appear in the Sumerian account on the descent of the goddess Inanna (ANET 56.218–72), and a gate of the high heaven is known to Adapa, Nergal and Ereshkigal, and Etana. The gate of the third heaven is mentioned in Apoc. Paul 19 (probably based on 3 Baruch or on common sources) and Asc. Isa. 10:24. Gates between heavens are found also in Nag Hammadi Apocalypse of Paul. Less clear is 4 Ezra 3:19, where God's Glory enters through four probably subsequent gates (see introductory comm. to ch. 11), and the Testament of Levi, where a gate of some heaven is mentioned only once (most probably of the third; 5:1), while for the first heaven it is said that it "was opened" (2:5). Gates regularly divide between Palaces in Hekhalot literature.

2:2G. As if [borne] on wings. Baruch's flight is mentioned again only in the journey to the second heaven (3:2 in G and S). There the part. ἀναπτερωμένοι is used, "raised" (lit. "raised on wings"). In contrast to other heavenly journeys no explicit means of transportation is mentioned. Here "wings" is used metaphorically in distinction to, e.g., Apoc. Abr. 12:10, where a seer is brought to heaven on the wings of a dove. Cf. a metaphorical use in Philo in a very similar context:

For the soul of the lover of God does in truth leap from earth to heaven and wing its way on high, eager to take its place in the ranks and share the ordered march of sun and moon and the all-holy, all-harmonious host of the other stars, marshalled and led by God ... (Spec. Leg. 1.38.207)

When on soaring wing it [i.e., the human mind] has contemplated the atmosphere and all its phases, it is borne yet higher to the ether and the circuit of heaven. (Opif. 23.70)

See also Praem. 11 and 14; Plant. 37. Holland sees in this mention of wings in 3 Baruch (and in 7:5, where Baruch hides under the wings of the angel) a reference to the heavenly journey of the soul.²⁰ The "flight of the soul" to heaven was a topos of the Hellenistic thought; see Plato, who stated that "the natural function of the wing is to soar upwards and carry that which is heavy up to the place where dwells the race of the gods" (Phaedr. 246d), and Cicero, who called heaven "its [soul's] proper home and permanent abode" ("Scipio's Dream" in Resp. 6.29; cf. his Tusc. 1.24; cf. also Plutarch, ²⁰ Holland, "Himmelfahrt," 217.

Rom. 28.6–7; etc.). For the flight of the souls of the deceased, see comm. to “birds” in 10:4 below.

Does the flight imply upward motion between heavens? There is no other designation of an upward travel of Baruch. Picard has suggested that Baruch’s movement might have been horizontal.²¹ In the two cases where vertical movements of angels are mentioned the terminology is equivocal. Michael supposedly comes up and down between the gate of the last mentioned heaven and some unmentioned destination behind it in order to bring angelic offerings there (κατέρχεται in 11:4; ἀπῆλθεν in 14:1; κατήλθεν in 15:1), and angels carry the sun’s crown up to heaven (ἀναφέρουσιν εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν in 8:4). The verbs κατέρχομαι, ἀπέρχομαι, and ἀναφέρω are the only indications of vertical movement between the heavens (and they are applied not to Baruch, but to angels). In fact, ἀπέρχομαι more frequently means “leave, depart,” κατέρχομαι may mean either “come” or “return,”²² and ἀναφέρω may mean “carry,” not necessarily with a connotation of a vertical motion. See also the biblical usage of Heb עָלָה “go up,” when the destination is a place of offering. Thus, the horizontal motion between the “walls” of hemispherical firmaments might be implied (on the form of the firmaments cf. comm. 2:2G). Baruch must have used one of the 365 gates on the horizon through which the sun proceeds in its rising and setting (see previous comm. and comm. to 6:13). This means that he entered heaven in the lowest point of the celestial vault over the horizon, and there was no need for a vertical flight. Probably the same is true for some other early apocalypses, e.g., the Apocalypse of Zephaniah. Horizontal motion is characteristic for Hekhalot texts, which might be also a rudiment of a single heaven conception known from 1 Enoch, etc.²³

2:2. 30 days’ journey. Long journeys of 30 (2:2–3), 60 (3:1–3) and 185/187 (4:2) days are mentioned only for the first three heavens. b. Hag. 13a speaks of journeys of 500 years between earth and heaven, as well as between heavens: “From earth to the firmament there is a journey of five hundred years, and the thickness of the firmament is a journey of five hundred years, and so too between all firmaments”; see also b. Pes. 94a; y. Ber. 9.12.13a (cf. further comm. to 2:4; 10:1).

²¹ Picard, “Observations,” 79.

²² LSJ, 925, s.v., I.4 and II.

²³ It is known also to Pesiq. Rabbati describing Moses’ tour in heaven: “Moses was walking in heaven like a person going on earth” (Halperin, Faces, 292).

The text does not clarify whether (1) the journey is after entering the door or (2) it is, similarly to the long journey of b. Hag. 13a cited above, the way to the heavenly door, which (being “very large”) is seen from beneath (see comm. above) or (3) most probably, it may be a journey inside the gate through the thickness of heaven estimated in 3 Baruch “as great as the distance from earth to heaven” (2:5G) or “as [the distance from east to west]” (2:5S). In light of these descriptions the door must be in fact a long tunnel resembling, on the one hand, straight tunnel-like gates in broad walls widely found in the land of Israel in different periods,²⁴ and, on the other hand, well documented mystical and clinical experiences of travel to the other world through a tunnel.²⁵

2:2S. He showed me means of safety (ПОКАЗА МИ СЪПАСЕНИЕ). Lit. “he showed me salvation.” Cf. “salvation of Jerusalem” (σωτηρίας Ἱερουσαλήμ) in 1:3G. However, the phrase is not set in the context. Eschatological salvation (not treated in 3 Baruch at all) is implausible here. Gaylord assumes a corruption, although the verse is well represented in manuscripts.²⁶ It may be rather a misinterpretation of Gk σωτήρια, which here should mean “means of safety” or “safe way.” The Slavic translator has chosen the meaning of the word widely known from LXX and NT. Cf. a guiding angel instructing Abraham on the means of safety against Azazel during the revelation (14:12–13). These means may be especially relevant, if the inhabitants of the lower heaven are to be identified as demonic creatures (see comm. to ch. 3).

2:3. Plain (πεδῖον / поле). Harlow believes that “the conception of the lower heavens as a plain, which is unique to 3 Baruch among the ancient apocalypses, apparently derives from a detail of the biblical account of the Tower of Babel in Gen 11, where the builders of the Tower, dwelling in 3 Baruch on the first and second heavens (see 2:7; 3:5), “found a plain” (also πεδῖον in LXX): “Here in 3 Baruch the earthly plain of the biblical story is projected into the heavenly realm and determines the basic geography of the four lower heavens.”²⁷ Actually, plain appears without allusion to Gen 11 in a similar vision of Hist. Rech. 3:6: “it [the land beyond the cosmic river] was like a large and vast island, without a mountain or height.” Further-

²⁴ See Herzog, Stadttor, 89–156.

²⁵ See, e.g., Zaleski, Otherworld, 36, 106, 121–22, 168; Blackmore, Troschianko, “Physiology.”

²⁶ Gaylord, Slavonic, ad loc.

²⁷ Harlow, Baruch, 110.

more, plains appear in all heavens visited by Baruch in the Greek version and on two heavens in the Slavonic version: first (2:3,4,5), second 3:3G (S here has “chamber”), third (4:3) and fourth (10:2, 4, and 5G; ‘mountain’ in S). These heavens are defined by Harlow as “lower,” since he assumes that Baruch entered also the fifth heaven (cf. comm. to ch. 11).

Celestial plains are widely presented in Egyptian sources, in both iconography and texts; cf., e.g., “the great celestial plain on which the gods rest” (Coffin Text 474).²⁸ 3 Baruch thus might conflate an archaic image of the flat sky with a relatively novel idea of (hemi)spherical heavens. See also post-mortem valleys of Jewish tradition and Elysian Fields of Greek mythology (see comm. to 10:2).

Men ... with the faces of cattle, and the horns of deer, and the feet of goats, and the loins of sheep. “These are those who built the tower of strife against God, and the Lord banished them” as we learn from 2:7. According to the extant redaction of 3 Baruch, another group of the Tower builders resides in the second heaven (3:5). See comm. to ch. 3.

In contrast to the list of zoomorphic features of the second group of Builders including “appearance like that of dogs / faces of dogs” (3:5), the description here corresponds to the beginning of the list of clean animals of Deut 14:4–5: “These are the animals which you shall eat: the ox, the sheep, and the goat, the deer ...” The issue of purity appears in 4:3 (impurity of Hades), 8:4 (purification of the sun), 10:5S (“pure birds”), and probably is implied in T:2 (river as a place for revelation); see comm. ibid.

Excursus: Dimensions of Heaven (2:4–7)

GREEK

⁴ And I Baruch asked the angel, “Tell me, I pray you, what is the thickness of heaven in which we journeyed, and what is its extent, and what is the plain, so that I can also tell the sons of men?”

⁵ And the angel whose name is Phamael told me: “This door which you see is [the door] of heaven,

SLAVONIC

⁴ And I Baruch asked the angel, “Tell me what is the thickness of heaven which we have crossed, and what is the plain, so that I can tell the sons of men?”

⁵ Phanuel told me, “The doors which you saw,

²⁸ Wright, Heaven, 10–16.

and as great as is the distance from earth to heaven, so great also is its thickness, and the same is the width of the plain which you saw.”

⁶ And again the angel of hosts told me, “Come, and I will show you greater mysteries.”

⁷ But I said, “I pray you, show me what are these men.” And he told me, “These are those who built the Tower of War against God, and the Lord banished them.”

as [the distance] from east to west, so great is the thickness of heaven, as the distance from earth to heaven, so great is its width – the plain where we are standing.”

⁶ He told me, “Go and I will show you the mysteries.”

⁷ I said to the angel, “Lord, who are these strangely shaped creatures?” And the angel told me, “These are those who built the Tower of War against God [and] the Lord banished them.”

NOTES

2:4G. I pray you (δέομαί σου). Occurs often in G (2:7; 3:4; 4:8,14), consistently lacking in S.

2:4S. Thickness (παχύτητα). It might have rendered also Gk πλάτος “plain.”²⁹ However, another word for “plain” appears in the same verse (πολιε), and in G “thickness” (πάχος) and “extent” (διάστημα) are clearly differentiated.

2:5S. The doors which you saw. The clause in S looks abbreviated. G finishes: “is [the door] of heaven.” Alternatively, lectio difficilior in S may mean, that the length of the gate’s tunnel through the firmament defines “the thickness of heaven.”

2:5G. And the same is the width of the plain (καὶ ὅσον πάλιν ἐστὶ καὶ τὸ τοῦ πεδίου μῆκος). Most previous translations emended the verse, inserting ἀπὸ βορρᾶ ἕως νότου τοσοῦτον “from north to south, so great” after ἐστὶ. According to this emendation the verse must be: “and again as is [the distance] from north to south, so great is the width of the plain.”³⁰ Hartom prefers to read “from east to west” in place of “from north to south,” in accordance with the Hebrew idiom כרחק מזרח ממערב (as in Ps 103:12).³¹ This comparison is used also in the same verse of S: “as [the distance] from east to west, so great is the thickness of heaven.” However, “from north to south” is also well attested (e.g., Gen. Rab. 8.1; 24.2). Moreover, any emendation seems unnecessary; see comm. to 2:4.

2:5. Phamael/Phanuel. The original form is either Panuel or Remiel; see comm. to T:1.

²⁹ Srezn, 3.1047.

³⁰ Cf. Hughes, “Baruch,” 534.

³¹ Hartom, “Baruch,” 412.

2:7S. Strangely shaped (иновѣразьнии). Lacking in G. It must reproduce Gk ἄλλόκοτος.³²

2:7. Tower of War against God. S has сѣлѣпѣ вѣотворѣны “God-made tower,” which is a corruption of сѣлѣпѣ вѣоборѣны rendering Gk τὸν πύργον τῆς θεομαχίας (as in G).

COMMENTARY

Baruch’s first question in heaven is about its dimensions. Such curiosity for celestial dimensions is well attested, although certain circles denied the very possibility of evaluating them: “The height of heaven, the breadth of the earth, the abyss, and wisdom – who can search them out?” (Sir 1:3). This should be regarded in the context of general “pious agnosticism” typical of Wisdom literature (cf., e.g., Job 11 and passim; Sir 9:13–18) and found also in early apocalyptic texts: “Is there anyone who can discern the length of heaven, and how great its height?” (1 En. 93:14; cf. 4 Ezra 4:5–6).³³ However, in a later book ascribed to the same visionary, he already “carefully measured the size of heavenly gates” (2 En. 13:2), “measured and described the stars” (2 En. 40:3) and “the sun’s circle and its rays” (2 En. 40:5) and also adjusted the measurements of earth and the distance from earth to heavens: “measured out the whole earth” and “wrote down the height from earth to the seventh heaven, and downwards to the very lowest hell” (2 En. 40:9). Similarly, another “Baruch” was shown “the height of the air” (2 Bar. 59:8). Cf. also the distances between different heavens and between heaven and earth in Asc. Isa. 7:18 and 28; b. Hag. 12b–13a; Masekhet Hekh. 2 and 4 (Bet HaMidr. 2. 41, 43); Reuyot Yehezkel (Bate Midr. 2.131); for more celestial measurements see 3 En. 22C:1–3.³⁴ Below Baruch expresses interest also in other measurements: of Hades (5:3), of the Tower of Babel (3:6), and of Michael’s liturgical bowl (11:8).³⁵

2:4. The thickness of heaven. According to G, the “thickness of heaven” = the height of the sky (“distance from earth to heaven”) = the width of heaven (“width of the plain”). S gives two independent equalities: “thickness of heaven” = the width of earth (“[the distance] from east to west”), ³² Srezn, 1.1104.

³³ On this issue see Stone, “Revealed Things,” 421ff. See also Stuckenbruck, 1 Enoch, 241–42.

³⁴ Cf. also Mesopotamian precedents of heaven measured in Etana and AO 6478.

³⁵ Cf. Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 153–155; Yarbrow Collins, Cosmology, 90ff.; Stone, “Lists.”

while the width of heaven = the height of the sky (S may imply that all four are equal).

By “thickness” (Gk τὸ πάχος, CS תַּלְבַּטוּתָא) either the interspace between the firmaments is meant, or, more probably, the literal thickness of the solid firmament separating these spaces (as Heb עובי הרקיע of Gen. Rab. 6.6. and b. Hag. 13a or Aram סומכא דרקיעא of b. Pes. 94a).³⁶ In many sources the heavens and the firmaments separating them are different phenomena and even created on different days (Gen. Rab. 4.2–7; cf. Mek. R. Shim. 100; Jerome, Quaest. Isa 64:1). In Asc. Isa. 7:18; 28 it is the lower interspace which is equal to the height of the sky: “the height of that [second] heaven is like that from heaven to earth” (Asc. Isa. 7:18), while “the height from the third to the fourth heaven was greater than from earth to the firmament” (Asc. Isa. 7:28).³⁷ In any case, one of the two dimensions – interspace or thickness – is lacking in both 3 Baruch and the Ascension of Isaiah. What we can learn about the missing parameter in 3 Baruch is that it must differ for different heavens: the fact is implied by the varying length of journeys to and between heavens (30, 60, [90?] and 185 days; see comm. to 10:1G) and probably by the dimensions of Michael’s bowl seen in a higher heaven, which is comparable in its size to the whole first heaven (11:8; see then end of this comm.). This progressive growth corroborates with Asc. Isa. 7:28 (cited above) and contrasts with the consistency of the dimensions in b. Hag. 13a (also measured by the journey length): “From earth to the firmament there is a journey of five hundred years, and the thickness (עבי) of the firmament is a journey of five hundred years, and from the first firmament to the next there is a journey of five hundred years” (Gen. Rab. 6.6; b. Hag. 13a adds: “so too between all firmaments; cf. y. Ber. 9.12.13a; b. Pes. 94a).³⁸ In all these sources the thickness of firmaments and the interspace between them are clearly discerned, and for the former the Heb

³⁶ In the latter case, our author must have held to the physical nature of heaven, in contrast with the view declared by Philo (Somn. 1.4 [21–24]; see comm. to 3:7). Philo would disagree with 3 Baruch also regarding the question of relative dimensions of the width of earth and its distance from heaven: “For these the lawgiver substitutes a tower which he represents as being built by the men of that day who wished in their folly and insolent pride to touch the heaven. Folly indeed; surely dreadful madness! For if one should lay a small foundation and build up upon it the different parts of the whole earth, rising in the form of a single pillar, it would still be divided by vast distances from the sphere of ether ...” (Conf. 2.5).

³⁷ Heaven exceeds the earth also according to Midr. Kohen 25–26.

³⁸ One more parameter, the distance from the sky to the Upper Waters, equated to the height of the sky, is found in Gen. Rab. 4.3.

עבי or Aram סומכא are used, which are appropriate equivalents for the Gk πάχος of 3 Baruch.

These dimensions are relevant also for the subsequent Tower of Babel story (2:7ff; these two issues were connected also by Philo in Conf. 2 cited in the note above). Firstly, if in 3 Baruch the literal thickness of the firmaments is meant, the account of the attempt of the Builders to transfix it with a bore (in 3:7 below) looks especially ironic.³⁹ Secondly, the “distance from the earth to heaven” is nothing else but the destined height of the Tower, which was built to the height of only 463 cubits (3:6). The magnitude of creation again contrasts with humble efforts of humans.

As noted, the dimensions of the bowl (Gk φιάλη / CS храненияница) of virtues held by Michael in 11:8 are comparable to the dimensions of the first heaven: “its depth was like [the distance] from heaven to earth, and its width like [the distance] from north to south [“from east to west” in S].” This means either that higher heavens are more spacious (cf. above), or that these dimensions are not precise measurements, but merely epithets of exaggeration.⁴⁰

2:5S. [The distance] from east to west. This reading of S (absent in G), comparing “[the distance] from east to west” to the “distance from the earth to heaven,” finds a strikingly close parallel in the Rabbinic exegesis of Ps 103, in which the both dimensions are mentioned:

What distance is longer, from heaven to earth or from east to west? Some said, “From east to west, because when the sun is at east or west, everyone can look at it, while when it is in the middle of the firmament, one cannot.” But the Sages said, “Both dimensions are equal, because it is said, ‘As heavens are high above earth,’ etc. ‘As east is far from west’” [כרחק מזרח ממערב; Pss 103:11 and 12].” (b. Tamid 32a)

This debate witnesses that the question was of scientific interest not only for our visionary. The rabbinic text argues for the primacy of textual authority over empirical observations in addressing the matter. 3 Baruch represents an additional methodology – revelatory experience.

³⁹ Alternatively it may debate with the views that the lower firmament is only “three fingers thick” (t. Hag. 2.6; Gen. Rab. 2.4; 4.3–5; y. Hag. 2.77a; b. Hag. 15a).

⁴⁰ Picard supposed that the inversion of the definition “from earth to heaven” here to “from heaven to earth” with the bowl (11:8) must indicate that Baruch’s journey has reached its limit and made a full circle in ch. 11 (Picard, “Observations,” 93; “Autres mystères,” 28–29).

Builders: Second Account (3:1–5a)

GREEK

¹ And having taken me the angel of the Lord brought me to the second heaven, and showed me there also a door like the previous and said, “Let us enter through it.”

² And we entered, being borne on wings, a distance of about a 60 days’ journey.

³ And he showed me there a plain, and it was full of men, whose appearance was like that of dogs, and whose feet were like those of deer.

⁴ And I asked the angel, “I pray you, Lord, say to me who are these?” ^{5a} And he said, “These are those who conspired to make the Tower.

SLAVONIC

¹ And the angel took me and brought me to the second heaven and showed me large open doors, and the angel told me, “Let us enter through them.”

² And we entered flying about a 7 days’ journey.

³ And he showed me a great chamber, and there were strangely shaped creatures living in it, with the faces of dogs, the feet of deer, and the horns of goats.

⁴ And I asked the angel of the Lord, “Who are these?” ^{5a} And he told me, “These are those who planned to build the Tower.

NOTES

3:1G. And he showed me there also a door (καὶ ὑπέδειξέν μοι ἐν κακῇ θύρᾳ). Gk ὑποδεικνύω/νυμι must govern a direct object in acc., without prepositions. For this reason Picard inserted ἐν in brackets.⁴¹ In fact, Gk ὑπέδειξεν + ἐν probably goes back to a calque of Heb הָרָאָה בִּי; cf. MT and LXX in Ps 59(58):11(10).⁴²

3:5. Who conspired / who planned (τὴν συμβούλην δόντες / πομπιλικισμῳ). In G lit. “giving counsel.” Cf. συμβούλιον ἔλαβον (Matt 12:13); συμβούλιον ἐποπτεύουσιν (Mark 3:6) and cf. δότε ... βουλήν (LXX Judg 20:7); φέρετε ... βουλήν (LXX 2Sam 16:20). It may be a biblicism going back to Heb הָבִיא עֲצָה / שָׁח / עֲשֵׂה / הָב, lit. “give/make/put/bring counsel” meaning “plan, plot, conspire” or “decide” (Judg 20:7; 2Sam 16:20; Isa 30:1; Ps 13:3; probably Isa 16:3; a similar calque is found also in Apoc. Abr. 5:8). It might mean also “advised.” “Counsel” in the same context appears in Midrash Psalms commenting on the passage “who did not walk in the counsel of the wicked of Ps 1:1: “[This means –] who did not follow the advice of the generation of the Separation [הַפְּלָגָה] הלך בעצת דור הפלגה], who said ‘Let us build a town.’ [Gen 11:4] ‘Let us’ [הָבָה]

⁴¹ Picard, “Observationes,” 83.

⁴² Cf. similar calques in Apoc. Abr. 12:10; 31:4; see Kulik, Retroverting, 70.

supposes ‘counsel’ [עצה] as said, ‘Discuss and make counsel here [הבו לכם דבר ועצה]” (Midr. Pss. 1.13). The text continues with the story about the differentiated punishment for three groups of builders, known from b. Sanh. 109a; Tan. Noah 28; Sefer HaYashar 9.26 (see comm. to 3:5 below). The latter interpretation would contradict the following narrative, where this group is described as directly managing the construction.

CS помыслити has a very wide semantic field including “think (over),” “imagine,” “decide,” “desire,” “plan” and rendering inter alia Gk λογίζεσθαι, ἐπιθυμεῖν, βούλεσθαι. Thus, its Vorlage might well be identical to G.

COMMENTARY

Duplication Theory

In the next heaven Baruch finds similar hybrid creatures again. The division of Tower builders into groups is attested in Rabbinic tradition as well. Usually there are not two but three groups:

They split into three groups. One said, “Let us ascend and live there,” and the second said, “Let us ascend and worship idols,” and the third said, “Let us ascend and fight.” Those who said “Let us ascend and live there,” the Lord scattered them; and those who said “Let us ascend and fight,” turned to apes, spirits, demons, and night-demons; and those who said “Let us ascend and worship idols,” – for there the Lord confused the language of all the earth. (b. Sanh. 109a)

See also Tan. Noah 28; Midr. Pss. 1.13; Midr. Agg. Gen 11:8; Sefer HaYashar 9.26. On the basis of this text, rich with many close parallels to 3 Baruch, James and Ühlinger suggested that 3 Baruch contains traces of the original division into three classes too.⁴³ The two groups of Builders in 3 Baruch may also resemble two groups of Watchers in the second and fifth heavens of 2 Enoch (7 and 18). The first group is “imprisoned” and “tormented”, while the second is only banished from the heavenly liturgy.⁴⁴

However, in 3 Baruch the appearances of the two groups are almost identical, and their identifications differ only in the delicate distinction between “those who built the Tower” versus “those who conspired” to build ⁴³ James, “Baruch,” lix. They may be classified either according to the type of their punishment (banishing of 2:7; confusion of languages of 3:6 and 3:8G; and blindness of 3:8G; thus Uelinger, Weltreich, 150), or of their function in the building process (builders of 2:7; “planners” of 3:5a; and forced builders of 3:5b; thus Harlow, Baruch, 112–113).

⁴⁴ On the connections between Builders and Watchers see in this comm. below (Builders and Giants).

it. There are good grounds to believe that this is not an apocalyptic déjà vue, but rather the result of an editorial elaboration. Cf. both subsequent accounts:

2:2–3, 7a

3:1–5a

Greek

² And having taken me he brought me to the first heaven, and showed me a very large door. And he told me, “Let us enter through it.” And we entered as if [borne] on wings, a distance of about a 30 days’ journey. ³ And he showed me within heaven a plain. And there were men living thereon, with the faces of cattle, and the horns of deer, and the feet of goats, and the loins of sheep. <...> ⁷ But, I said, “I pray you, show me what are these men.” And he told me, “These are those who built the Tower of War against God ...”

¹ And having taken me the angel of the Lord brought me to the second heaven, and showed me there also a door like the previous and he said, “Let us enter through it.” ² And we entered, being borne on wings, a distance of about a 60 days’ journey. ³ And he showed me there a plain, and it was full of men, whose appearance was like that of dogs, and whose feet were like those of deer. ⁴ And I asked the angel, “I pray you, Lord, say to me who are these?” ⁵ And he said, “These are those who conspired to make the Tower.”

Slavonic

² And there was the first heaven and in that heaven he showed me very large doors. And the angel told me, “Let us enter through these doors,” And we entered about a 30 days’ journey. He showed me salvation. ³ And I saw a plain, where men were living whose faces were those of cattle, with the horns of deer, the feet of goats, and the loins of sheep. <...> ⁷ I said to the angel, “Lord, who are these strangely shaped creatures?” And the angel told me, “These are those who built the Tower of the War against God ...”

¹ And the angel took me and brought me to the second heaven and showed me large open doors, and the angel told me, “Let us enter through them.” ² And we entered flying about a 7 days’ journey. ³ And he showed me a great chamber, and there were strangely shaped creatures living in it, with the faces of dogs, the feet of deer, and the horns of goats. ⁴ And I asked the angel of the Lord, “Who are these?” ⁵ And he told me, “These are those who planned to build the Tower.”

These texts look like two slightly edited variants of the same account, in the first case interpolated by the treatment of celestial measures (2:4–6; it is rather an interpolation than an excursus, since it clumsily cuts the verse 2:7 from the first account). The duplication of the vision of the Builders must be the result of compilation. Two versions of the same description could have been placed successively, according to the model well known in biblical criticism and attested in other pseudepigrapha. See also two similar Phoenix descriptions, where 7:3–5 is an abridged version that duplicates 6:1–5 (see comm. ibid.). The same most probably happened also with two different versions of Enoch's tour in the Book of Watchers (chs. 17–19 and chs. 21–36, also separated only by an excursus – the list of the archangels in ch. 20).⁴⁵ The duplication theory, which posits a reduction of one heaven from the total calculation, concords with the numbering of heavens in 7:2S and 10:1G and solves numerous problems of inconsistency in the ouranological picture of 3 Baruch (see comm. to ch. 11: Ouranology).

Whether 3 Baruch presupposes two groups of the Builders or one, the cosmology of the book appears unbalanced and unprecedented in reserving one, or even two, of the total of five⁴⁶ heavens exclusively for the Builders. This can hardly be justified by the role of the Tower account in early Jewish or Christian theology or sacral history.⁴⁷ Possible solutions for this problem are proposed below.

Identifying the Builders

The identification of the two groups of chimeric creatures that exclusively occupy the lower heavens as the builders of the Tower satisfies “Baruch” and thus probably the originally intended audience of the work. However, for a reader from another epoch it is difficult to see the connection between such remote images. This implies that an authentic audience might have known something else – some self-evident connotations of both images that helped to reconcile the seemingly disconnected features of the “chimeric Builders in heaven” and integrate this unique invention into an allegedly logical and coherent context of the common knowledge of that time and milieu.

1. Physical transformation of the wicked. The Builders of 3 Baruch were either struck by lycanthropy or changed into demonic beings. Both kinds of transformation of the wicked are known to early Jewish literature. According to 2 Baruch in the last judgment “the shape of those who now act wickedly will be made more evil than it is now” (2 Bar. 51:2) and “those ⁴⁵ See Black, Enoch, 15–16.

⁴⁶ Or whatever their number, from three to seven, would be (see introductory comm to ch. 11: Ouranology).

⁴⁷ The only other vision, where the building of a tower is a central image, is Herm. Sim. 9, where the tower symbolizes the Church. The tower of Hermas is built by angels, while in 3 Baruch, according to the interpretation below, it is erected by the fallen angels progeny. The understanding of Pentecost as the reversal of the tower of Babel is explicit in Gregory Nazianzen, Oration 41.15–16 and must be implied in the miracle of tongues on the day of Pentecost in Acts 2:1–11. Cf. also קריה מתבניה “a city to be built” in the vision of Michael (4Q529 1.9).

will be changed ... into startling visions and horrible shapes" (2 Bar. 51:5), and "they will depart to be tormented" (2 Bar. 51:5; cf. 3 Bar. 2:7: "the Lord banished them"). Sinful generations since Enosh in general have lost the Divine likeness and resembled centaurs and apes (Gen. Rab. 23.6–7). Specifically the Tower builders turned to "apes, spirits, demons, and night-demons" in b. Sanh. 109a and parallels (see above). The builders will live in cliffs "like beasts of the field" (Bib. Ant. 7:3), "God divided their speech, and changed their likeness" (Bib. Ant. 7:5).⁴⁸ Similar ideas were developed by Plato, assuming reincarnation of men to beasts: "if he does not still refrain from wickedness he will be changed every time, according to the nature of his wickedness, into some bestial form after the similitude of his own nature" (Tim. 42b–c; cf. 91e); "a human soul may pass into the life of a beast, and a soul which was once human, may pass again from a beast into a man" (Phaedr. 249b); cf. Phaed. 81e–82a.⁴⁹ Origen taught that "one who is now a man may in another world become a demon" (so Jerome, Ep. Avitum 3).

2. Identification of the Builders. Several creative suggestions were proposed in order to find implications to later realities in the image of the Builders. Thus, Picard recognizes them as an allegory of the Hellenistic sophists concerned with the physical nature of heaven (see 3:7 and comm. ibid.).⁵⁰ George Nickelsburg identified the Builders as Babylonian or Roman destroyers of the Temple.⁵¹ However, all these suggestion do not help to explain their appearance and their (exclusive) occupation of the lower heaven.

2.1. Builders and demons. Demons appear explicitly in 3 Baruch only in 16:3 (where the children of the wicked are hurt by demons). However, we may posit the presence of a developed implied demonology behind

⁴⁸ Nebuchadnezzar was also punished by a transformation to an animal (Dan 4:33). "The spine of a man after seven years turns into a snake, should he not bow while reciting the benediction 'We give thanks unto Thee'" (b. B. Qam. 16a). On zoomorphic creatures in Jewish and Christian iconography see Ameisenowa, "Animal-Headed." Men with animal heads are well known in medieval Jewish and Christian iconography; see Ameisenowa, "Gastmahl."

⁴⁹ Here and in most cases below the translations are based on Shorley et al., Plato, often revised.

⁵⁰ Picard, "Autres Mystères," 14, 33–39; idem, "Observationes," 79.

⁵¹ See Nickelsburg (Jewish Literature, 302–303) basing on the contamination of Gen 11 and Dan 3 in Bib. Ant. 6. Cf. also Nebuchadnezzar who was punished with lycanthropy too (Dan 4:33).

the narrative on the basis of the references to “alien spirit” (1:1), demolished giants (4:10), and probably demonic locusts (16:3), as well as multiple features ascribed to Builders and their direct identification with demons in some parallels (Paraph. Shem 24–25; b. Sanh. 109a).⁵²

2.1.1. Demonic zoomorphism and satyrs. Zoomorphism and especially chimeric appearance are widely known as demonic features. Evil spirits look like frogs (Rev 16:13) or like locusts with human faces (Rev 9:7). Zoomorphic feet betray demonic impostors (b. Ber. 6a; b. Git. 68b). Cf. also the list of three features in which demons are likened to animals: “they eat and drink like animals, multiply like animals, and excrete like animals” (b. Hag. 16a). The archons of the Ophite Gnostics, “seven ruling demons” described by Celsus, are also zoomorphic: lion-like Michael, bull-like Suriel, serpent-like Raphael, eagle-like Gabriel, bear-like Thauthabaoth, dog-like Erathoele, ass-like Onoele (Origen, Cels. 6.30). Celsus adds that “certain persons return to the shapes of the archons, so that some are called lions, others bulls, others dragons, or eagles, or bears, or dogs” (Cels. 6.33). Cynocephali, dog-faced creatures (as in the description of the second group in 3:3), were met in heaven also by Isaac (T. Isaac 5:8; see below). Dog-headed demons appear in Egyptian iconography.⁵³

While Rabbinic demons usually have rooster feet (e.g., b. Ber. 6a), the Builders have feet of goats (2:3) or deer (3:3). This gives the creatures of the first heaven (at least the first group) the appearance of silenes or satyrs. Satyr-like demons (with asses’ legs) appear also in Test. Sol. 4; cf. 18:1–2. Cf. especially Roman satyrs (fauns) described as goat-like from the haunches to the hooves, and often with horns. These images, universally known in the Hellenistic world, might have their counterparts in Jewish and other Near Eastern legacy as well. The Biblical seirim, “hairy beings” or “goats” worshipped by the Israelites (Lev 17:7; 2 Chr 11:15), and described as dancing in the place of the destroyed Babylon (Isa 13:21 and 34:14; rendered as ὀνοκένταυροι in LXX), were interpreted as such ⁵² Demonic creatures are part of a very similar mourning setting in 2 Baruch, which also takes place in the Temple gate: “But as for us who live, woe unto us, because we see the afflictions of Zion, and what has befallen Jerusalem. I will call the Sirens from the sea, and you Lilin, come you from the desert, and you Shedim and Dragons from the forests: awake and gird up your loins unto mourning, and take up with me the dirges, and make lamentation with me” (2 Bar. 10:7–8).

⁵³ Keel, Symbolism, 80–81.

satyr-like demons.⁵⁴ They were consistently rendered as demons in Tgs. Lev 17:7; Isa 13:21; 34:14; 2 Chr 11:15; Sifra Lev 17:7; cf. Gen. Rab. 65.15; Lev. Rab. 22.5; b. Ber. 62a-b; b. B. Bat. 25a). The same in Vulgata for Lev 17:7 and 2 Chr 11:15 (daemones). In his commentary on seirim of Isa 13:21 (translated there as pilosi ‘hairy’), Jerome adds that they are “either incubi or satyrs or a certain kind of wild men” and “belong to the race of demons” (Comm. in Isa. 5). See also probably demonic satyrs described in his Vita Pauli 6:

a dwarf [homunculus], whose nostrils were joined together, with horns growing out of his forehead, and with the legs and feet of a goat ... a mortal being, one of the inhabitants of the desert, whom the pagan race, confused by various errors, worship and call fauns, satyrs, and incubi ...

A desert demon Azazel also had certain goat connections (Lev 16:10). Seirim have no iconographic representation and their appearance was never described (except probably by Jerome).⁵⁵ Thus, if the proposed identifications are accepted, 3 Baruch may present the only physical depiction and detailed treatment of seirim-satyrs in ancient Jewish literature.⁵⁶

2.1.2. Builders and demons identified. Whereas according to a developed Rabbinic tradition the builders or the whole “generation of the Separation” were transformed into demons (b. Sanh. 109a and parallels cited above),⁵⁷ a Gnostic tradition considers the Tower building as a demonic plot, i.e., states that the builders were demons in the first place (italics are mine):

⁵⁴ Cf. Janowski, Neumann-Gorsolke, “Tier.”

⁵⁵ Another exception may be the parody testimony of the new moon in the Tosefta: the frightening chimerical creature was reported to be seen in the Judean desert not far from Jerusalem (and thus possibly connected to Azazel): “When I was going up to Ma’ale Adumim, I saw him laying between two rocks, and his head was like of cattle, his ears were like of goat, his horns were like of deer, and his tail was between his legs. When I saw him, I was frightened and fell backwards” (עולה הייתי במעלה אדומים) וראיתיו רבוע בין שני סלעים ראשו דומה לעגל אזניו דומות לגדי קרניו דומות לצבי וזנבו מונחת לו בין יריכותיו ראיתיו נבעתתי ונפלתי לאחריו (t. Rosh HaSh 1.15).

⁵⁶ In Jewish iconography, some recognize a figure of a satyr holding a lyre in a graffito in a burial cave at Bet Lei probably dated to the Persian period (see Smith, Studies, 1.232, n. 21).

⁵⁷ This motif reappears in medieval midrash identifying werewolves and woodmen of German folklore as descendants of the Tower builders (Sefer Ziyroni, end of Noah; Ginzberg, Legends, 5.204).

And in order that the sin of Nature might be filled, I made the womb, which was disturbed, pleasant – blind wisdom – that I might be able to bring (it) to naught. And at my wish, he plotted with the water of Darkness and also the Darkness, that they might wound every form of your (pl.) heart. For by the will of the light of the Spirit they surrounded you; they bound you in Faith. And in order that his plan might become idle, he sent a demon that the plan of her wickedness might be proclaimed. And he caused the Flood, and he destroyed your (pl.) race, in order to take the light and to take from Faith. But I proclaimed quickly by the mouth of the demon that a Tower come to be up to the particle of the light, which was left in the demons and their race – which was water – that the demon might be protected from the turbulent chaos. And the womb planned these things according to my will in order that she might pour forth completely. A Tower came to be through the demons. The Darkness was disturbed by his loss. He loosened the muscles of the womb. And the demon who was going to enter the tower was protected in order that the races might continue and might acquire coherence through him. For he possesses power from every form. (Paraph. Shem 24–25; italics are mine)⁵⁸

This tradition not only states that the Tower “came to be through the demons,” but further states that demonic powers “plotted” and “planned” the events, similar to the second account of the Builders in 3 Baruch (3:5). Note also “blind wisdom” and the blindness of the Builders in 3 Baruch (3:8G).

2.1.3. Heaven as an abode of demons. Heaven is not the most common abode for demons. However, this notion is not unique to 3 Baruch. Pythagoras believed that “the whole air is full of souls which are called demons or heroes” (Diogenes Laertius 8.32; cf. Plato, Epin. 984d–985b; Philo, Gig. 2–4[6–18]). According to Plutarch “in the intermediate regions between gods and men there exist certain natures susceptible to human emotions and involuntary changes, whom it is right that we, like our fathers before us, should regard as demons” (Def. Or. 10–15 [415a–418a]). In the Testament of Solomon demons reside in heaven, and particularly in “stars,” constellations, and the moon (2:2; 4:6, 9) or even identified with heavenly bodies. In 8:2 they are seven (in 18:2 – thirty six) as seven bound stars of 1 En. 21:3, seven archons of Gnostics (Origen, Cels. 6.30), and seven planets as malevolent demonic powers in Mandaean mythology.⁵⁹ Some of them are zoomorphic at the same time (18:1–2). “Sammael and his hosts,” i.e., “angels of Satan,” dwell below the first heaven (in the “firmament”) according to Asc. Isa. 7:9. “The spirits of the retributions for vengeance on men” are found in the lower heaven in T. Levi 3:2. They are probably identical to “the spirits of deceit and of Beliar” of the next verse (T. Levi 3:3). Eph 6:12 speaks of the “spiritual forces of evil in the heavenly realms” (πνευματικὰ τῆς πονηρίας ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις), and some Church Fathers explain this as a reference to demons dwelling in heaven.⁶⁰ Some demonic creatures reside in heaven in T. Isaac 5 (see below). Cf. also David Halperin’s attempt to reconstruct a lost Jewish tradition of the identification of the celestial Living Creatures/Beasts (חַיִּוִּת) with demons.⁶¹

⁵⁸ The translations of Hag Hammadi texts here and below are based on Robinson, Nag Hammadi.

⁵⁹ Cf. Toepel, “Planetary.”

Demons can also occupy the lower heaven, being perceived as pagan gods (cf. Deut 32:8; Sir 17:17; Test. Sol. 5:5; 1 Cor 10:20; Acts John 41; 43; Justin, 1 Apol. 5; 41; Dial. 58; 73; Tatian, Ad Gr. 8; 29; Origen, Cels. 7.69; Theophilus, Ad Autol. 1.10; Tertullian, Ad Scap. 2; Idol. 1; 15; etc.).⁶²

The idea that “on earth is [or “shall be”] their dwelling” is repeated thrice in three successive verses in the account of the evil spirits begotten from the dead giants (1 En. 15:8–10; see below). The same impenetrability of the border between the two realms must be meant in 3 Bar. 2:1, which states that the River Ocean separating the celestial realm cannot be crossed by “any alien spirit of all those that God created” (see comm. ibid.). Thus, the trespassing of this border could have been a motive for the building of the Tower (on demons causing the building of the Tower see Paraph. Shem 24–25 cited above). By introducing demons into the Tower story, 3 Baruch uniquely proposes a harmonization between two traditions: demons limited to terrestrial realm, on the one hand, and demons as celestial inhabitants, on the other.

The punishment for this attempt comes as ironic fulfillment of their wish. The Builders here “wanted to get to the firmament” (thus in Tan. B. Noah 22), and that is what they got. The heaven may not only be an abode of demons, but also a place of punishment both for the Watchers (their fathers according to 1 En. 18–19; 2 En. 7 and 18) and for other wicked souls (see 3 Bar. 4:3, 6; 5:3; Gnostic Apoc. Paul 20–22, where souls are tortured in the fourth and fifth heavens; b. Tamid 32b locating Gehenna in heaven; cf. comm. to ch. 4: Celestial Bestiary: Hell in heaven).

⁶⁰ See Lash, “Where.”

⁶¹ Halperin, Faces, 151–154.

⁶² Cf. the gods ascending to heaven in order to escape the Flood in Gilgamesh 11.11–14.

2.1.4. Zoomorphism and celestial demonic functions. Why would zoomorphic creatures, probably demons, be situated in heaven? Their zoomorphic appearance may be connected to the function of the celestial afterworld doorkeepers and probably “angels of punishment” (1 En. 53:3; cf. “spirits of retribution” of T. Levi 3:2, etc.). This understanding would better correspond to the second account of the Builders, where they have the “appearance of dogs” (3:3). The guarding of the Gates of the afterworld by beasts is a universal motif cf., e.g., in Greek and Roman traditions: Cerberus, Eurynomos of Pausanias (10.28.7), beasts and snakes (Aristophanes, Ran. 143; 278), Hydra (Virgil, Aen. 6.560; cf. Ovid, Met. 4.451–52 and passim). See also the serpent-like gate keepers of Hades in 2 En. 42:1; etc. Although normally the netherworld is meant, in 3 Baruch Hades is located in heaven (for other traditions locating Hades in heaven, see comm. to ch. 4). According to T. Isaac 5:8 in the beginning of his heavenly tour the patriarch sees creatures whose “faces were like faces of camels and some were like the faces of dogs; others were like the faces of lions and hyenas and tigers.” Their function is to torment the sinners who pass there (to higher heavens?): “They tore him apart, dismembered, and chewed, and swallowed him. After that they ejected him from their mouths and he returned to his original state” (5:12–16). Very similar appearance and function are attributed to the angels of Apocalypse of Zephaniah: near the gate of heaven (3:9) Zephaniah finds a “myriad of myriads of angels” with “faces like a leopard, their tusks being outside their mouth like the wild boars” (4:3). They are defined as “the servants of all creation who come to ungodly men and bring them and leave them in this place,” where they wait three days before being cast into their eternal punishment (4:6).⁶³ Note also that Baruch proceeds to heaven accompanied (and defended?) by the “angel of powers/hosts” (cf. 3 Bar. 1:8G; 2:1S; 2:6G; 10:1S; 11:1S), whose angelic order according to T. Adam 4:5 is supposed “to keep demons from destroying the creation of God.”

2.1.5. Blindness as demonic feature. The Builders were “smitten with blindness” (3:8G). “Blind” is a common characteristic of archons and evil powers in Gnostic literature (Hyp. Arch. 86.27; 87.3–4; 89.25; and passim; Gos. Phil. 38). The name of the chief demon Sammael (appearing in 4:8G below) is derived from Aram סַמְמַא “blind” in Acts Andr. Matt. 24 and Hyp. Arch (“Sammael which is, ‘god of the blind’”).⁶⁴

⁶³ Cf. the Ozhayah Fragment from Geniza comparing heavenly dangers with the attack of wild animals (Schäfer, Geniza, 2a:27–32). “Angels of destruction” guarding celestial gateways is a common place of the Hekhalot literature; see, e.g., Hekh. Rabbati 15.8–16.2 (## 213–15).

2.2. Builders and giants. According to Richard Bauckham, the Builders of 3 Baruch “perhaps substituted for the two groups of angelic Watchers which Enoch saw in the second and fifth heavens” (2 En. 7; 18). It is remarkable that 3 Baruch, which throughout chapters 2–5 is preoccupied with the stories of Gen. 2–11, makes no reference to the Watchers. The author is perhaps engaged in a polemical rejection of the Enoch tradition so that in addition to substituting Baruch for Enoch he also substitutes the human Builders for the angelic Watchers.”⁶⁵ Harlow develops this idea, stating that we deal here with “human invasion of the divine realm as a paradigmatic sin of humanity. The message that emerges is quite the obverse of that conveyed by the myth of the Watchers (of which only 4:10 retains a vestige). This myth depicts the origin of evil in the world as an invasion of earthly realm by divine beings. The archetypal sin according to 3 Baruch is the invasion of the divine realm by human beings.”⁶⁶

In fact, the demonic creatures of the lower heaven, introduced as the Tower builders, are not a substitution of the Watchers or their opposite. On the contrary, our text most probably implicitly identifies them with the Watchers’ offspring, the giants (4:10).⁶⁷ The Builders are identified with the surviving giants according to a tradition known to Pseudo-Eupolemus cited by Alexander Polyhistor:

Babylon was first founded by those who escaped the Flood. They were giants, and they built the Tower well known in history [εἶναι δὲ αὐτοὺς γίγαντας οἰκοδομεῖν δὲ τὸν ἱστορούμενον πύργον]. When it was destroyed by God’s power, these giants were scattered over the whole earth. (Eusebius, Pr. Ev. 9.17.2–3)

Another fragment of the same origin speaks about Belos, a survivor of the destroyed giants, who built for himself a tower in Babel (Eusebius, Pr. Ev. 9.18.2). The brief evidence of these two fragments brings to-⁶⁴ For the analysis of this name see Bullard, Hypostasis, 51–54.

⁶⁵ Bauckham, “Hell,” 372. For more on “Enochic materials” in 3 Baruch see also comm. to ch. 4; Himmelfarb, Ascent, 93; Orlov, “Flooded Arboretums.”

⁶⁶ Harlow, Baruch, 59.

⁶⁷ For a detailed analysis of the identification of the builders of the Tower of Babel and the giants see Stuckenbruck, “‘Angels’ and ‘Giants’;” see also Reeves, “Utnapishtim;” Huggins, “Noah;” Wright, Origin.

gether and identifies both enigmatic images of 3 Baruch, the Builders and the Giants, of which, as we learn below, 409,000 were destroyed by the Flood (4:10). Nimrod, who was known as an instigator of the building of the Tower (Josephus, Ant. 1.4.2–3; Gen. Rab. 23.7; 26.4; 42.4; b. Hul. 89a; Abod. Zar. 53b; Pesah. 94b; Erub. 53a; Pirque R. El. 24), is called “giant” (γίγας) in LXX Gen 10:8 and 9.⁶⁸ Giants Otus and Ephialtes of Odyssey 11.305–20 were involved in a similar attempt to build a mountain in order to ascend heaven. Philo refers to this story and compares it to the biblical account (Conf. 2). The motif of the identification of the Tower builders with Nephilim has survived till the ninth century in the work of Hiwi al-Balkhi (Saadia, Polemic Against Hiwi al-Balkhi 31–34).

See also the mention of the giants in the context of an assertion about the inaccessibility of celestial Wisdom:

In it [God’s house] were born the giants, renowned at the first, stalwarts, skilled in war. Not these did God choose, nor did he give them the way of understanding. They perished for lack of prudence, perished through their folly. Who has gone up to the heavens and taken her [Wisdom], or brought her down from the clouds? Who has crossed the sea and found her ... (1 Bar. 3:26–30)

2.3. Demons and giants. The two identifications of the Builders proposed above – with demons and with giants – do not necessarily contradict each other. As noticed by Loren Stuckenbruck, “the implications of the giants traditions for concepts of demonology at the turn of the Common Era have until now been insufficiently recognized.”⁶⁹ In fact, according to Enochic etiology of demons they may be the dead giants, i.e., the demonic spirits released from the bodies of the giants:

You [Watchers] have defiled yourselves with the daughters of men and taken to yourselves wives and acted like the sons of earth, and begotten giants ... But now the giants, who were begotten of spirit and of flesh, shall be called evil spirits upon earth, and on earth shall be their dwelling. The spirits that have gone forth from the body of their flesh are evil spirits, because they came into being from men, and from the holy Watchers is the origin of their creation. They shall be evil spirits on earth, and evil spirits shall they be called. As for the spirits of heaven, in heaven shall be their dwelling, but as for the spirits of the earth begotten upon earth, on earth shall be their dwelling. (1 En. 15:3–10)

⁶⁸ Cf. Stuckenbruck, “‘Angels’ and ‘Giants’,” 356.

⁶⁹ Ibid., 365.

The identification of demons and giants must have been widely known. Very similar conceptions appear in Jubilees (chs. 5 and 10); the Testament of Solomon (5:3; 17:1); Shirot (4Q510 1.5 and 4Q511 35.7).⁷⁰ Many early Christian writers also identified the antediluvian giants as demons (Justin Martyr, 2Apol. 2–6; Athenagoras, Leg. 24–25; Tertullian, Apol. 22.3–4; Lactantius, Div. Inst. 2.14; Ps.-Clementine Hom. 7.18–20).

Both of these conceptions of the origin of demons combined in Jewish lore – as inter-worldly bastards, and as spirits of the deceased ancient and mighty men – were known to Greeks, although separately and without negative connotations: Greek daemons are either the bastards of gods and nymphs (Plato, Apol. 15 [27b–e] or they are the spirits of the deceased heroes and the first generations of men (Hesiod, Op. 110–139; Plutarch, Def. Or. 38 [341b] and Gen. Socr. 24 [593d]).

3. Harmonizing traditions. Summarizing the data discussed above, we can state that 3 Baruch tries to combine two contradicting traditions: (1) on the giants that perished in the Flood (as in 4:10; this tradition explains why these legendary creatures no longer exist; see below comm. to “giants” in 4:10), and (2) on the giants that survived the Flood (see above and Tg. Ps.-Jon. Deut 3:11; b. Nid. 61a; b. Zeb. 113a–b; Pirqe R. El. 23; etc.). The latter tradition explains why some giants still coexisted with Noah’s posterity (Num 13:33; Deut 3:11; LXX Gen 10:8, 9) as well as the legends about their involvement in the Tower building (Pseudo-Eupolemus and par.; see above). The harmonizing narrative of 3 Baruch reconciles the two myths assuming that although the giants perished, they have survived but in a different quality and location – not in flesh, but as spiritualized beings inhabiting the lower heaven.

Thus 3 Baruch also conflates the two motifs of the imprisonment of the fallen Watchers in heaven (1 En. 18–19; 2 En. 7; 18) and of their demonic offspring in the underworld (Jub. 10:7–11), postulating the imprisonment of the demonic offspring in heaven.

3:1. To the second heaven. I.e., to the entrance to the second heaven; see comm. to 2:2.

3:1S. Open doors. This is the only direct mentioning of open doors in the whole text. Gaylord supposes the word “open” to be “an addition under the influence of 11:1[2].”⁷¹ Verse 11:2 of both versions mentions closed gates of the fifth heaven in distinction to the presumably open doors of other heavens.

⁷⁰ Ibid., 371–74.

3:2. Being borne on wings / flying. On the flight of the visionary see 2:2G and comm. ibid.

3:2. 60 / 7. The letters for 60 (CS 𐌺 < Gk ξ) and 7 (CS 𐌷 < Gk ζ) are similar. The reading of G seems to be more authentic. The journey to the first heaven takes 30 days, to the third – 185/187 days. Thus, the way to the second heaven is twice as long as to the first, and the journey to the third is approximately three times as long as to the second (progression with a growing coefficient). The duration of the journey to the fourth heaven is not mentioned. For an alternative interpretation see comm. to 10:1G.

3:3S. Chamber (𐌺𐌱𐌳𐌹𐌲, 𐌱𐌾𐌻𐌹𐌸𐌹 TB). The most common meaning of the CS word is “cell,” “chamber,” “house” (never “prison” as in Gaylord’s translation).⁷² G instead has πεδίον “plain” as in all heavens according to G: first (2:3,4,5), second (G 3:3), third (4:3) and fourth (10:2, 4, 5). That is why, apparently, Gaylord supposes a corruption of the Greek uncial ΠΕΔΙΟΝ to ΚΕΛΛΙΟΝ “cell,” “prison.”⁷³ However, S has “plain” (CS 𐌱𐌾𐌻𐌹𐌸) only twice: in the first (2:3, 4, 5) and the third (4:3) heavens. In the fourth heaven, it is “a mountain” which corresponds to “plain” in G (10:1, 2, 4), and here, in the second heaven, to an enigmatic “great chamber.” Thus, G may be suspected as having arisen as a result of harmonization. Moreover, CS 𐌺𐌱𐌳𐌹𐌲 might render not only Gk κελλίον and κέλλα but also οἰκία (like in TS 14th cent. Gen 24:31, going back to Heb בֵּית), οἶκος (Upr Dan 5:5, Aram הֵיכָלָא), ταμιεῖον (TS 14th cent. Gen. 8:3 (7:28) and Exod 43:30, Heb חֶדֶר; cf. Ostr Matt 6:6). The form οἰκία (as pl. of τὸ οἰκίον) is attested in early Greek sources as an “abode of a deity” (Homer, Od. 12.4; Hesiod, Theog. 744) or even “abode of the dead,” “netherworld” (Homer, Il. 20.64). The term might resemble celestial buildings of the apocalyptic literature (cf., e.g., Ezek 40–48; 1 En. 14; 2 Bar. 59:4; Pr. Azar. 31–34; Philo, Spec. Leg. 1.66ff; 4QShirShabb; Rev 21:9–27; etc.) and later Hekhalot imagery; cf. especially Dan 5:5 where CS 𐌺𐌱𐌳𐌹𐌲 renders Gk οἶκος reproducing Aram הֵיכָלָא (Upr Dan 5:5). Cf. also “The Holy One has shown himself above the angels and opened the firmament, and Isaac has raised his eyes and saw the chambers of the Chariot [חדרי המרכבה]” (Tan. B. Toledot 22).

⁷¹ Gaylord, Baruch, 665.

⁷² Ibid., 664.

⁷³ Gaylord, Slavonic, 19.

Builders Continued (3:5b–8)

GREEK

^{5b} For they whom you see drove forth multitudes of both men and women to make bricks. Among them, one woman, who was making bricks at the time of her delivery, was not allowed to be released, but, making bricks, she gave birth and carried her child in a cloth, and made bricks [again].

⁶ And the Lord appeared to them and confused their languages, when they had built the Tower [to the height of] 463 cubits. ⁷ And having taken a bore, they were eager to bore heaven, saying, “Let us see whether heaven is [made] of clay, or of copper, or of iron.”

⁸ When God saw this he did not allow them, but smote them with blindness and confusion of languages, and rendered them as you see.”

SLAVONIC

^{5b} For at that time they drove forth a multitude of men and women to make bricks. Among them was one woman who was near to give birth, and they did not release her, but stirring [the clay for breaks] she gave birth, and having taken her cloak she wrapped her child, and left her child, and made bricks again.

⁶ And the Lord God appeared to them and confused their languages. And they built the Tower [to the height of] 463 cubits. ⁷ And having taken a bore they came to pierce heaven in order to see what is in heaven, whether heaven is [made] of glass or of copper.

⁸ And God saw them and did not hearken to them, but smote them invisibly.”

NOTES

3:5G. Drove forth a multitude of men and women (ἐξέβαλλον πλῆθη ἀνδρῶν τε καὶ γυναικῶν / изгнаша мѣжа и женѣ мѣножество). Despite Gaylord⁷⁴ in ms L “multitude” governs both “men” and “women,” and мѣжа is a standard acc. pl. Thus, G and S fully correspond. Family β adds here a long interpolation describing labor division. 3:5S. Who was near (πρὸ γένου ἐστίν). Gaylord reconstructs here Gk πληροῦσα τὴν ὥραν instead of πλινθεύσα ἐν τῇ ὥρᾳ in G.⁷⁵

⁷⁴ Ibid., 21; Gaylord, Baruch, 664.

⁷⁵ Ibid.

Stirring [the clay for breaks] (מַטְאִי). Or “travailing.” Cf. מַטְאִי בַרֵּךְ “stirring pitch” in the interpolation in the family β. CS מַטְאִי might reproduce Gk ταρασσω, which here may mean “stir” or alternatively περιεργάζομαι “take more pain than enough,” ἀσχαλῶ “be distressed.”⁷⁶ “Stirring” corresponds to the parallel in Tg. Ps.-Jon. Exod 24:10 (see in comm. ad loc.).

3:5. Cloth / cloak (λέντιον / οκριλῶ). Ms T has ΛΕΟΝΤΙΝΙ (corrupted CS ΛΕΝΤΙΝΙ corresponding to Gk λέντιον). CS ΟΚΡΙΛῶ of other mss must render rather Gk χλαμύς or χιτῶν than λέντιον.⁷⁷

3:6S. Confused their languages. Ms L adds: “and made 72 languages.” Family β lacks the whole verse here and expands its content in 1:8.

463 Cubits. This reading, identical to G, occurs only in ms T. Most mss of both families have: “80,000 cubits in height, and in width 520.”

3:7S. What is in heaven. Lacks in family β. Of glass or of copper. Family β: “of stone, or of glass, or of copper.”

3:8. When God saw this he did not allow them / And God saw them and did not hearken to them. The same verb (Gk συγχωρέω) is used as in 3:5 (where a woman “was not allowed to be released”). S has CS ΠΟΛΟΥΣΑΤΙ “listen, hearken, obey” (like Gk ἀκούω or Heb שָׁמַע) instead.

With blindness / invisibly (ἐν ἀορασίᾳ / НЕВИДИМО). S misinterpreted Gk ἐν ἀορασίᾳ in adverbial meaning (like ἀοράτως or ἀορασίτως “invisibly”). Family β has in place of this the following verse: “And having seen their folly, he smote them with an invisible staff and divided their languages into 72 languages. And they went each with his language. For previously they spoke one language – Syriac – from Adam and until the building of the Tower.”⁷⁸

COMMENTARY

Here we learn an exemplum of the Builders’ cruelty, the goals of their project, and their punishment. This passage could have been a conclusion of the second version of the Builders Account. In this case, it is an expanded variant of the words “and the Lord banished them” at the end of the first version (2:7b). However, more probably the passage is a continuation of the narrative common to both versions.

⁷⁶ See Mikl, 393–394.

⁷⁷ Mikl, 335, 499; Srezn, 2.648.

⁷⁸ The notion of Syriac as the primeval language appears in Slavic cultural milieu as early as the 9th–10th century – in On the Letters of Chrabr the Monk.

3:5. Among them, one woman, who was making bricks at the time of her delivery, etc. A very similar story, pertaining to brick-making (although during the Egyptian enslavement based on Exod 1:14), is found in Tg. Ps.-Jon. Exod 24:10: “there were women treading clay with their husbands; a delicate young pregnant woman was also there, and made abortive and the embryo was beaten down with the clay;” cf. Pirqe R. El. 24; 48; Sefer HaYashar, Noah.⁷⁹ The only example of the Builders’ cruelty in 3 Baruch is against a woman in travail. This may count in favor of the identification of the Builders with demons, who are known as especially harmful for children (particularly newborns) and pregnant women (1 En. 15:12; Test. Sol. 2; 13; Apoc. Dan. 12:1–2; Acts Thom. 12; Justin Martyr, 1 Apology 5.2; etc.). Demons also hurt the children of the wicked in 3 Bar. 16:3 below. The motif of the demonic attack against women in childbirth and newborn children was allegorically developed in Rev 12:1–6.

3:6. They had built the Tower [to the height of] 463 cubits. On diverse extraordinary dimensions of the Tower, see Jub. 10:21; Gen. Rab. 38.8; Tan. B. 1.54; Tan. Noah 1; Pirqe R. El. 24; Seder Eliyahu Rab. 21, 118; and Aseret Dibrot 46.

3:7. And having taken a bore, they were eager to bore heaven, saying, “Let us see whether heaven is [made] of clay, or of copper, or of iron / they came to pierce heaven in order to see what is in heaven, whether heaven is [made] of glass or of copper.” They ignorantly planned to transfix heaven, the thickness of which is “as great as is the distance from earth to heaven” (see 2:5 above, and comm. ibid.)

Other accounts also associate the building of the Tower with sharp tools: an idol on the top of the Tower held a sword (Gen. Rab. 38.7; Tan. B. Noah 27); they cast arrows towards heavens (Sefer HaYashar 9.29; cf. b. Git. 56a). This motif might originate from the exegesis of the Heb דברים אחדים “one speech” (Gen 11:1) as דברים חדים “sharp things.” This direction is traced through Gen. Rab. 38.7, where דברים חדים is interpreted as “sharp words.”

Picard maintains that the account of the Builders in 3 Baruch is an allegorical representation of Hellenistic sophists, concerned with the physical nature of heaven, and opposed to Philo’s position of the incomprehensibility of heaven (Somn. 1.4 [21–24]).⁸⁰ As noted by Harlow, this is hardly convincing in light of Baruch's own consistent interest in physical dimensions and mechanisms of heaven throughout the book.⁸¹ We deal here not with the problem of forbidden knowledge, but rather with the esoteric limitation of access to this knowledge: celestial mysteries are forbidden for the wicked but revealed to chosen pious. This position is well articulated in 1 En. 65:11; 4 Ezra 12:36–38; 14:26; Philo, Sacr. 15.60; Cher. 14.48; m. Hag. 2.1 (cf. comm. to “be silent” in 1:3S).

⁷⁹ Cf. Picard, “Autres,” 30–35.

⁸⁰ Picard, “Autres,” 14, 33–39; idem, “Observationes,” 79.

As for the material of which the heaven is made, this was a natural object of human curiosity from very ancient times. According to the Akkadian KAR 307, the floors of all three firmaments are of different kinds of stone (the lowest is green, followed by blue and red).⁸² Paved floors of heaven (usually of sapphire) or of the heavenly Temple might be meant in Exod 24:9–10; Ezek 40–42; 1 En. 14:10; 3 En. 24:10. In 3 Baruch stone appears as a possible material only in S, in the mss of the family β (see Notes). The upper firmament of crystal appears in Ezek 1:22 and b. Hag. 12 (cf. 3 Bar. S). Mountains of different materials – iron, copper, silver, gold, soft metal, and lead – are found in heaven by Enoch (1 En. 52:2).

B. Sanh. 109a ascribes to the Builders another motif: they were interested to get to the celestial water supply. It also is one of the main elements of our revelation and treated in ch. 10 below (see comm. ibid.).

3:8G. Smote them with blindness. S has a corrupted reading: “smote them invisibly” (see Notes). The wicked did not get to celestial secrets and “their own wickedness has blinded them. As for the mysteries of God, they knew them not” (Wis 2:22), whereas to Baruch were revealed “the mysteries of God” (3 Bar. 1:4S; 1:8G). Blindness may also be caused by looking at the exalted things: either at the Divine Presence, as with Isaac: “he had seen the Throne of Glory, and from that time his eyes had begun to darken” (Tg. Ps.-Jon. Gen 27:1; cf. Deut. Rab. 11.3; Pirke R. El. 32), or at the fiery chariot in which the pious ascend to heaven (b. B. Mes. 85b). Notice that God “appeared” to Builders in 3:6.

In the afterlife sinners are punished by blindness in Apoc. Zeph. 15–16; Apoc. Paul 40; Ethiopic Apoc. Pet. 12. This kind of punishment may corroborate the demonic identification of the Builders: demons may be blind (evil powers are “blinded by the Holy Spirit” in Gos. Phil. 38; for “blind” archons and Sammael as “god of the blind” see introductory comm. above) and can cause blindness: “The god of this age has blinded the minds of unbelievers” (2 Cor 4:4). See further “the prince of deceit sent forth the spirit of jealousy and blinded my mind” (T. Sim. 2:7); “the prince of deceit blinded me” (T. Jud. 19:4); “spirit of anger encompasses him with the nets of deceit, and blinds his natural eyes, and through lying darkens his mind, and gives him a sight of his own making” (T. Dan 2:4).

⁸¹ Cf. also Harlow's criticism of Picard based on rather mystic-realistic than allegorical and emblematic understanding of 3 Baruch (Harlow, Baruch, 115).

⁸² Ebelung, Keilschrifttexte; Wright, Heaven, 35.

The Sodomites were also punished with blindness (Gen 19:11; Wis 19:17). This is one of the punishments of Israel, if the nation will not hearken unto the voice of the Lord (Deut 28:28). Pharaoh’s troops were stricken with blindness (Cant. Rab. 1.31 and passim). Amorites were stricken with blindness, when they were fighting Kenaz (Bib. Ant. 27:10) as well as Canaanites fighting Israel (b. Sot. 36a). Balaam was blinded for his impure thoughts or intentions (b. Nid. 31a; Num. Rab. 20.6–12). The Angel Nathaniel did the same to the servants of Jair, in order to save the seven righteous (Bib. Ant. 38:3). Samson was blinded by Philistines but as a punishment by God’s judgment (Bib. Ant. 43:5; m. Sot. 1.8). Darius was blinded for keeping Daniel imprisoned (Maase Daniel 121–122). “They that accused him [Jesus] were smitten with blindness” (Infancy Gos. Thom. (Gk A) 5:1).

II. Beasts or Abode of Demons

Beasts: Serpent and Hades (4:1–5G; 4:1–3aS)

GREEK

¹ And I Baruch said, “Behold, Lord, you have shown me great and wonderful things;

and now show me all things for the Lord’s sake.”

² And the angel told me, “Come, let us go through.”

[And we entered] with the angel from that place about a 185 days’ journey.

³ And he showed me a plain and a serpent, which looked like a rock.

And he showed me Hades, and its appearance was dark and impure. ⁴

And I said, “Who is this dragon, and who is this monster around him?”

SLAVONIC

¹ And I Baruch said, “The Lord has shown me great things.”

² And the angel said, “Come and let us go through these doors;
you will see the Glory of God.”

And we entered with the angel about a 187 days’ journey.

^{3a} And he showed me a plain, and there was a serpent on a mountain of rock.

and can cause blindness: “The god of this age has blinded the minds of unbelievers” (2 Cor 4:4). See further “the prince of deceit sent forth the spirit of jealousy and blinded my mind” (T. Sim. 2:7); “the prince of deceit blinded me” (T. Jud. 19:4); “spirit of anger encompasses him with the nets of deceit, and blinds his natural eyes, and through lying darkens his mind, and gives him a sight of his own making” (T. Dan 2:4).

The Sodomites were also punished with blindness (Gen 19:11; Wis 19:17). This is one of the punishments of Israel, if the nation will not hearken unto the voice of the Lord (Deut 28:28). Pharaoh’s troops were stricken with blindness (Cant. Rab. 1.31 and passim). Amorites were stricken with blindness, when they were fighting Kenaz (Bib. Ant. 27:10) as well as Canaanites fighting Israel (b. Sot. 36a). Balaam was blinded for his impure thoughts or intentions (b. Nid. 31a; Num. Rab. 20.6–12). The Angel Nathaniel did the same to the servants of Jair, in order to save the seven righteous (Bib. Ant. 38:3). Samson was blinded by Philistines but as a punishment by God’s judgment (Bib. Ant. 43:5; m. Sot. 1.8). Darius was blinded for keeping Daniel imprisoned (Maase Daniel 121–122). “They that accused him [Jesus] were smitten with blindness” (Infancy Gos. Thom. (Gk A) 5:1).

II. Beasts or Abode of Demons

Beasts: Serpent and Hades (4:1–5G; 4:1–3aS)

GREEK

¹ And I Baruch said, “Behold, Lord, you have shown me great and wonderful things;

and now show me all things for the Lord’s sake.”

² And the angel told me, “Come, let us go through.”

[And we entered] with the angel from that place about a 185 days’ journey.

³ And he showed me a plain and a serpent, which looked like a rock.

And he showed me Hades, and its appearance was dark and impure. ⁴

And I said, “Who is this dragon, and who is this monster around him?”

SLAVONIC

¹ And I Baruch said, “The Lord has shown me great things.”

² And the angel said, “Come and let us go through these doors;
you will see the Glory of God.”

And we entered with the angel about a 187 days’ journey.

^{3a} And he showed me a plain, and there was a serpent on a mountain of rock.

⁵ And the angel said, “The dragon is he who eats the bodies of those who pass through life wickedly, and he is nourished by them.

NOTES

4:1G. Great and wonderful things / great things (μεγάλα καὶ θαυμαστά / ΒΕΛΗΙΑ). Gaylord supposes that G “may be a Christian addition reflecting Rev 15:1, 3.”⁸³ Actually, the same word-combination occurs in LXX Job 42:3, while MT there has only נפלאות. The exact equivalent of the combination – Heb נפלאות גדולות – MT has in Ps 130:1; cf. also Gk θαυμασία μεγάλα for Heb נפלאות גדולות in Ps 136:4. The same expression appears also in the short rescension of Tob 12:22; and similar “mysterious and great things” in Apoc. Abr. 9:6. “Great (things)” of S, found elsewhere, has a close parallel in the similar context in T. Job 8:19 also with respect to natural phenomena. Cf. comm. to “mysteries” in 1:6 above.

And now show me all things for the Lord’s sake. Lacking in S most probably as a result of homoeoteleuton (in distinction to G, the verse of S ends with the word “Lord”).

Harlow supposes that this verse originally concluded with the regular formula for previous transitions to the next heaven, which has been omitted as a result of a parablepsis: “And having taken me the angel brought me to the third heaven. And he showed me there also a door like the previous ones.”⁸⁴

4:2. Go through. CS прондеѡъ/прондеѡѣ of mss TB corresponds to Gk διέλθωμεν of the extant Greek mss, while ms L has вѣнуиѡѣѡѣ “we (dual.) will enter;” cf. 3:1–2, where CS вѣнуиѡѣѡѣ corresponds to Gk εἰσῆλθομεν.

4:2G. [And we entered]. G has lit.: “Come, let us go through with the angel ...” Since the angel is the one who is speaking, and since S here, as well as a similar description in 3:1–2, offers a better reading, we can suppose that G might omit these words as a result of homoeoteleuton (εἰσέλθωμεν ... εἰσῆλθον). The restored words comprise the minimal emendation; it is possible that G contained the whole text preserved in S from “these doors” to “we entered.”

4:2S. 187 days’ journey. “187” is the reading of ms L; mss TB have “40”; ms K – “85”; mss SZ – “32”; mss PVID – “70”. Gaylord refers to M. Veder suggesting that “187” emerged as a misreading of original “185” (identical to G) in the hypothetical Glagolitic fore-text;⁸⁵ cf. a similar assumption of the misreading of “6” as “8” in a Cyrillic transliteration of possibly originally Glagolitic text in Apoc. Abr. 19:6.⁸⁶

⁸³ Gaylord, Baruch, 666.

⁸⁴ Harlow, Baruch, 118–119.

⁸⁵ Gaylord, Slavonic, 31.

⁸⁶ Rubinkiewicz, Lunt “Apocalypse,” 698, n. 19f.

4:3G. A serpent, which looked like a rock (ὄφιν ὡς ὁράσεως πέτρας). Or “appeared to be a rock.” Mss AB both have a form πέθρας. That might be the reason why James (referring to J. A. Robinson) emends the phrase to ὡς ὁράσεως πλέθρα “200 plethra [in length].”⁸⁷

4:3S. A serpent on a mountain of rock (ζαμνια на горѣ каменеѣ). Gaylord suggests that the Vorlage of S had ἐπὶ ὄρους πέτρας similarly to G (see previous note and comm. ad loc.).⁸⁸

4:3–5G. All the description of Hades is lacking S. See comm.

4:3G. Appearance. Gk ἡ εἰδέα is supposed on basis of η εἰδία A and οἱ ηδία B.

4:5G. Those who pass through life wickedly [κακῶς]. Cf. “those who pass through life rightly [καλῶς]” in 11:7G.

COMMENTARY

*Celestial Bestiary

As is typical of many apocalypses, 3 Baruch is rich with animalistic and botanic imagery: chimeric creatures of the lower heavens, gigantic celestial beasts, angelic horses, oxen, and lambs, celestial birds, trees and flowers.⁸⁹ The author of 3 Baruch was apparently “like the many, who impiously suppose that the celestial and divine intelligences are many-footed or many-faced beings, or formed with the brutishness of oxen, or the savageness of lions, or the curved beaks of eagles, or the feathers of birds ...” (Ps.-Dionysius Areopagite, Cael. Hier. 2). After meeting zoomorphic creatures in the lower heaven(s), the protagonist proceeds to three Great Beasts of the next firmament:

- (1) Serpent (4:3), called also “Dragon” (4:4; 5:2), drinking from the sea and feeding upon the bodies of the wicked (according to G). It is unclear whether this is identical to the Serpent that seduced the first humans (4:8S and 9:7).
- (2) Hades or Monster (ἄπτηνής), which “also drinks from the sea” (only in G), surrounds or interlaces with Serpent in 4:4G, but is identified with the Serpent’s belly in 5:3.

⁸⁷ James, “Baruch,” lix.

⁸⁸ Gaylord, Slavonic, 33.

⁸⁹ Cf., e.g., Dan 7–8; 1 En. 85–90; 2 En. 12; 15:1; 19:6; 42:1; 4 Ezra 11:1–12:2, 11–32; Rev 4:6ff; 9:7–10, 17–19; 13:1–18; 17:3, 12; Herm. Vis. 4.1; etc.

* The commentary is based on my article Kulik, “Mysteries.”

- (3) Sun Bird (Phoenix), “a bird large as nine mountains,” accompanying the sun’s chariot and “guarding the world” from its rays (6:2–12; 6:14S; 7:3G; 8:1–2, 6).

As in the case of the Builders in the previous chapters, the placement of these images in the ancient lore must be examined in conjunction with the textual history of the book. The descriptions of the three beasts are separated only by the excursus on the vine in 4:8–17G; 4:6–17S (possibly interpolated; see comm. ibid.). If this passage is omitted, we have a coherent account of three creatures. Genesis (1:20–25; cf. Ps 8:7–8), as well as Plato (Tim. 39e–40a; 92c–d), Ovid (Met. 1.72–75) and Philo (Opif. 20.62–21.64), divided living beings into three classes: water-creatures, birds, and land-animals. Gigantic beasts representing each of the environments or ruling them are well attested almost universally (e.g., Bundahishn 18–19), but especially close are the motifs connected to the triad of Leviathan, Behemoth, and Ziz, all mentioned together in the Rabbinic interpretation of Ps 50:10–11 (and adjacent to the discussion of the Behemoth’s drinking habits):

As a recompense for what I have forbidden you [says God], I have allowed something for you. As a recompense for the prohibition of fish – Leviathan, a clean fish; as a recompense for the prohibition of birds – Ziz, which is a clean bird ... As a recompense for animals [Heb בְּהֵמוֹת] – “Behemoth [Heb בְּהֵמוֹת] on thousand mountains.” [Job 50:10] (Lev. Rab. 22.10; cf. Pesiq. R. 16.4; 48.3; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 6.1 and 3; Tan. Pinehas 12; Beshalah 24; Num. Rab. 21.18)

The supposedly unsystematic description of these creatures in 3 Baruch is among the main factors which led scholars to speak of the “naïve childishness” of this work.⁹⁰ Mary Dean-Otting called these descriptions “trivial invention” and a “somewhat confused picture.”⁹¹ Both the message, and even the place of these figures in different traditions, remain unclear. The images of the Serpent and Hades are especially enigmatic (the bird will be treated separately in ch. 6). The set of features ascribed to the Serpent and Hades or an integrated Serpent-Hades in 3 Baruch is unique, but every separate characteristic (or sometimes several characteristics combined) may be traced in diverse traditions. In order to understand the images in the context of ancient lore, we will examine classified elements of the beasts descriptions against main relevant parallels. The table is followed by the commentary.

⁹⁰ Ferrar, “Baruch,” 93.

⁹¹ Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 120.

G	S	Main Parallels
1		Identity
1.1	Celestial or Cosmic Serpent	CTA 23.61–62 (Mot); Plato, Tim. 33 (living being); Rev 12 (great dragon); Pistis Sophia 3.126 (great dragon); Origen, Cels. 6.25 (Leviathan and Behemoth); Philo of Byblos, On Snakes (Eusebius, Pr. Ev. 1.10.45–53; hawk-shaped serpent); Acts Thom. 32 (reptile); Jerome, Isa 27:1 (Leviathan)
1.2	Sea Dragon	Isa 27:1; Ps 104:26; Job 41 (Leviathan); Ezek 29:3 (great tanin); 1 En. 60:7; 2 Bar. 29:4; 4 Ezra 6:52 (Leviathan and Behemoth)
1.3	Personified Hades	Isa 5:14; Hab 2:5; Hos 13:14 (= 1 Cor 15:55); Ps 141:7; Prov 1:12; Rev 6:8; 20:13–14
1.4	Celestial Hades	Plato, Phaedr. 246d; 247c; Plutarch, Fac. 27–29; Sera 563d; Gen. Socr. 590b; 1 En. 18–19; 2 En. 10; Gnostic Apoc. Paul 20–22; b. Tamid 32b
1.5	Serpent and Hades as a pair (4:3–4)	Job 41:8–9; 1 En. 60:7; 2 Bar. 29:4; 4 Ezra 49–52; b. B. Bat. 74b (Leviathan and Behemoth); Apoc. Abr. 10:10 (Leviathans); 21:4 (Leviathan and his spouse); Lad. Jac. 6:13 (Leviathan and Falkon); Rev 6:8; 20:13–14 (Hades and Death)
1.6	Serpent and Hades as a bipartite being (4:3–4)	Job 41:8–9; 1 En. 60:7; cf. caduceus
1.7	Hades as Serpent's belly (5:3)	Apoc. Abr. 31 (Hades as a belly of Azazel); Pistis Sophia 3.126; cf. 3.2
1.8	Serpent as Hades (5:1–3)
2		Names
2.1	Serpent (Gk ὄφης; 4:3) and Dragon (Gk δράκων; elsewhere)	Serpent (CS змиа/змин) Passim

	G	S	Main Parallels
2.2	Hades (Gk Ἅδης) and Monster (Gk ἄπηνής; 4:4)	Hades (CS אֲדַם)	Passim
3			Functions
3.1	Hades also drinks from the sea (4:6), and rivers fill the sea again (4:7)	Serpent drinks from the sea (5:3), and rivers fill the sea again (4:5) “if the Serpent did not drink one cubit from the sea, there was no dry land on earth” (β 4:5)	b. B. Bat. 74b (Prince of the Sea); 72b; 75a (Leviathan); Lev. Rab. 22.9–10; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 6.58a; 48.3; Tan. Pinehas 12; Num. Rab. 21.18 (Behemoth) b. B. Bat. 74b (Prince of the Sea/Rehab); Pesiq. R. 48.3 (Leviathan)
3.2	Serpent eats the bodies of the wicked (4:5)		Devouring serpent: Enuma Elish 4.97 (Tiamat); CTA 4.7.47–52; 5.2.2–4; 23.61–62 (Mot); Jer 51:34 (tannin /dragon); T. Jud 21:7; Jos. Asen. 12:11 (sea monsters) Great eaters: CTA 4.7.47–52 (Mot); Lev. Rab. 22.10; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 6; Pesiq. R. 16.4 and 48.4; Num. Rab. 21.18 (Behemoth) Devouring Satan: Apoc. Abr. 30 (Hades as a belly of Azazel) Devouring Hades: see Isa 5:14; Hab 2:5; Ps 141:7; Prov 1:12 Belly of Hades: Sir 51:5; 1 En. 63:14; 4 Ezra 4:42 Cf. 1.7; 4.3
3.3		Serpent “eats earth like grass” (4:3)	Gen 3:14 (serpent) CTA 4.7:47–52 (Mot)
3.4		“Hades is insatiable” (5:3)	Prov 30:20; Hab 2:5

	G	S	Main Parallels
4			Descriptions
4.1	Serpent looks like a rock (4:3)	Serpent is on a mountain of a rock (4:3S)	PRU 2.3.8–10; Ps 50:10 (acc. to Pesiq. Rab Kah. 6, etc.; Behemoth); 1 En. 60:8 (Behemoth); 2 Alphabet of Ben Sira 27–28 (Leviathan)
4.2	Hades is dark and impure (4:3)		ANET 107; Descent of Ishtar 1; Epic of Gilgamesh 7.4.33; Hesiod, Theog. 729; Job 10:21–22; 1 En. 10:4; 82:2; 103:8; 2 En. 7:1–2; Matt 8:12; 22:3; 25:30; Exod. Rab. 14; b. Yeb. 109b et pass.
4.3		God kindled Serpent's heart (or belly β) (4:7)	Job 41:13, 23 (Leviathan); Apoc. Abr. 31 (Azazel); b. B. Bat. 75a (Leviathan)
4.4	Hades'/Serpent's belly dimensions (5:3)		Apoc. Paul 32; b. Pesah. 94a; b. Taan. 10a; Cant. Rab. 6.9; Pesiq. R. 41; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 71

1. Identity

1.1. Celestial or cosmic serpent. Among archaic monsters of the ancient Near East, Ugaritic Mot and Egyptian Apep (Apopis, Apophis) share several features of the Serpent of 3 Baruch, with regard both to location and to the close association with the personified devouring Hades. Ugaritic Mot had “[one lip to ea]rth, one lip to heaven. [... t]ongue to the stars. Baal entered his mouth, descended to his belly” (CTA 23.61–62).⁹² Plato has described the primeval self-sufficient living being encircling the universe and “created without legs and without feet” (Tim. 33), based most probably on the well known Ouroboros imagery.⁹³

According to Rev 12, the celestial “Great Dragon,” “ancient Serpent, who is called the Devil and Satan,” has been cast down during the angelic rebellion and “their place was not found any longer in heaven” (Rev 12:8–9). If 3 Baruch also identifies the Serpent with Satan(iel), it must represent an alternative tradition (see below). Certain similarity was found also between the Serpent of 3 Baruch and celestial and cosmic serpents of some marginal ⁹² Cf. “his [dragon’s] tail has swept a third of the stars out of the sky” (Rev 12:4).

⁹³ Our text does not enable to designate whether we deal here with a serpent as axis mundi, a foundation of the earth, or circuitus mundi, Ouroboros (cf. Whitney, Beasts, 114).

groups either sharing the legacy of early Judaism, or of common Mediterranean lore, e.g., the Gnostic cosmic serpent of Pistis Sophia, who is a place of the afterlife torment:

The outer darkness is a Great Dragon, whose tail is in his mouth, outside the whole world and surrounding the whole world. And there are many regions of chastisement within it. (Pistis Sophia 3.126)⁹⁴

See the description of Leviathan from the Ophitic cosmological schema used by Celsus:

There was a diagram of ten circles, each separated from the other, yet joined together by one circle which is said to be the soul of the universe and which is named Leviathan ... Instead of the word “dragon,” the term “Leviathan” is in the Hebrew ... We also find a being named Behemoth in it, as if he were something placed below the lowest circle. The one who invented this horrid diagram inscribed Leviathan on its circumference and at its center, setting the name twice. Moreover, Celsus says that the diagram was “divided by a thick black line,” and this line he asserted was called Gehenna, which is Tartar. (Origen, Cels. 6.25)⁹⁵

See also Philo of Byblos, On Snakes:

The Egyptians still describe the world according to the same idea. They draw an encompassing sphere, of the color of the sky and of fire, and a hawk-shaped serpent stretched across the middle of it, the whole shape is like our letter theta. They indicate that the circle is the world, and they signify that the snake in the middle holding it together is Good Daemon. (Eusebius, Pr. Ev. 1.10.45–53)

Mandaeen Ur also separates heaven from the netherworld and holds impure souls in his belly.⁹⁶ The Acts of Thomas distributes these functions between two serpents, father and son:

I am a reptile of the reptile nature and noxious son of the noxious father, of him that hurt and smote the four brethren which stood upright. I am son to him that sits on a throne over all the earth that receives back his own from them that borrow. I am son to him that girds about the sphere, and I am kin to him that is outside the Ocean, whose tail is set in his own mouth. I am he that entered through the fence into Paradise and spoke with Eve the things which my father bade me speak with her ... I am one that inhabits and holds the Abyss of Hades. (Acts Thom. 32)

These Gnostic and Mandaean witnesses may be especially relevant for 3 Baruch. If we accept that Baruch travels horizontally through the sun gates located on the horizon just above the surface (constituting “plains” between ⁹⁴ Translations from Mead, Pistis Sophia.

⁹⁵ Cf. Welburn, “Ophite Diagram.”

⁹⁶ Drower, Mandaeans, 253; Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 124–127.

the gates?) that divides higher and lower realms (see comm. to “as if [borne] on wings” in 2:2G), then the Serpent with Hades may not so much be celestial beings as they are geographical dividers separating heaven from the netherworld (or at least located on the separation point between them), like the cosmic serpents of Celsus and Philo of Byblos in the sources above.⁹⁷

Among later sources, celestial Leviathan is known to Jerome (on Isa 27:1), who, referring to judaica fabula, mentions that Leviathan lives not only under the ground, but also in the air. In late midrash Leviathan is identified with the vault of heaven to which the signs of Zodiac are affixed; see Kimhi on Isa 27:1 (referring to Pirque R. El.): “And this is also in Pirque de R. Eliezer Teli [Zodiac of Draco] moves the luminaries, and it is stretched from one end to another as a Pole of the Crooked Serpent” (cf. Kalir on Isa 27:1; Kaneh 30c and 32c–32d; Rokeah to Yetsirah 14c; Zohar 2.34b).⁹⁸

1.2. Sea dragon. Our Serpent is also a sea dragon, an almost universal image found mutatis mutandis in diverse Drachentraditionen, including Near Eastern, Hellenistic, and particularly Jewish. Biblical תנין (Gk δρόκων of LXX) is known as a “dragon that is in the sea” (Isa 27:1), “the great dragon that lays in the midst of his rivers” (Ezek 29:3; cf. rivers in the Serpent’s description in 3 Bar. 4:7/5 and in Leviathan accounts in b. B. Bat. 74b; see below); cf. “who [God] smashed the heads of the dragons on the waters” (Ps 74:13). See also sea, abysses, and “dragons” (Heb תנינים, Gk δρόκοντες) mentioned together in Ps 148:7; Job 7:12 (and Gen 1:21, where the same Hebrew word is rendered in LXX as “the great fish [pl.]”); Rahab of Isa 51:9–10. The “Crooked/Pole Serpent” Leviathan is located in the sea, sometimes even rules it or controls the sources of water (Isa 27:1; Ps 104:26; Job 41; 1 En. 60:7; 2 Bar. 29:4; 4 Ezra 6:52). For Leviathan and Behemoth drinking from the sea, see 3.1 below.

1.3. Personified Hades. For Sheol/Hades as a personified figure see Isa 5:14; Hab 2:5; Ps 141:7; Prov 1:12; Rev 6:8; 20:13–14; cf. Hos 13:14 cited in 1 Cor 15:55 אהי קטבך שאול / ποῦ τὸ κέντρου σου Ἄδῃ, “Where, ⁹⁷ Cf. also Paradise “between corruptibility and incorruptibility” in 2 En. 8:5.

⁹⁸ Ginzberg, Legends, 5.45. Cf. also Dragon, the sun and the moon united in the Rabbinic prohibitions referring to pagan practices in Palestine: “If one finds utensils upon which is the figure of the sun or moon or a dragon, he shall cast them into the Dead Sea (m. Abod. Zar. 3.3; cf. t. Abod. Zar. 6); cf. “[Images of] all the planets are permissible except that of the sun and moon; of all faces are permissible except that of a human face; and of all figures are permissible except that of the dragon” (b. Abod. Zar. 42b).

O Hades, is your sting?”). In some of these sources it is paired with Death. For the development of the personification of both these images, see the Gospel of Nicodemus.

1.4. Hell in Heaven. An abode of souls, whether Greek Hades or Jewish Sheol, is normally located “below.” Greek views which may stand behind the placement of Hades in heaven were analyzed by Dean-Otting and Harlow.⁹⁹ Plato considered heaven to be a post-mortem abode of all kinds of souls (Phaedr. 246d; 247c). Stoics believed that souls go eventually to the sun and stay for an interim period of purification close to the sun and the moon. This cosmology, “new” for the Hellenistic world, is probably of Oriental origin, having coexisted with the traditional conception of the afterdeath realm in the underworld. It is attested in Plutarch (Fac. 27–29; Sera 563d; Gen. Socr. 590b).¹⁰⁰ In the former dialogue souls are punished or purified in the sphere of the moon exactly as in 3 Baruch, where Hades is located in the same heaven with the sun and the moon.¹⁰¹ See a description of Egyptian astrologist Teukros (1st cent. CE), where the heavenly serpent is standing over Zodiac scorpion, in whose claws Hades lies.¹⁰²

In Jewish tradition only the righteous normally deserve to be placed in heaven (Philo, Sacr. 2.5; b. Ket. 104a; b. Hag. 12b; Midr. HaG. Gen 50:26; and passim). However, in some Jewish sources the place of “eternal recompense” for the wicked is located in heaven. This is most probably the case of the “prison house” for heavenly powers in 1 En. 18–19. In 2 En. 10 it is even the same third heaven as in the extant redaction of 3 Baruch. Two lowest heavens of a total of three, or seven in different versions of the Testament of Levi, are also connected with punishment: “In it [the lowest heaven] are all the spirits of those dispatched to achieve the punishment of mankind” (T. Levi 3:3). Souls are tortured in the fourth and fifth heavens in Gnostic Apoc. Paul 20–22 or inside the Great Dragon surrounding the world (Pistis Sophia 3.126). According to one of the opinions presented in b. Tamid 32b, Hell may be found above the firmament (גיהנם למעלה מן הרקיע).

In 3 Baruch both Hell and Paradise are probably in the same heaven, since the story of the Tree of Knowledge is adjacent (even intervenes) to the Hades account. Hell and Paradise are situated side by side in 2 En. 8–10;

⁹⁹ See Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 122–24; Harlow, Baruch, 1996, 125, n. 50.

¹⁰⁰ Yarbro Collins, Cosmology, 45.

¹⁰¹ Rabbis also connected Hell and the sun: the sun on its setting passes through Hell in order to receive there its fire (b. B. Bat. 84a; cf. “fire of the west” in 1 En. 17:4–6).

¹⁰² Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 124.

Pesiq. Rab Kah. 30.191b; Eccl. Rab. 7.14; Midr. Tannaim 224. Paradise of the third heaven in 2 En. 8:5 divides between “corruptible” and “incorruptible.” In T. Levi 3 heavens are probably divided to two realms: two lower and the higher heaven of “holy ones” (see below in the comm. to ch. 11: Ouranology). This recalls ancient cosmologies which distinguish between irregular ouranos and higher kosmos.¹⁰³ Likewise, also in 3 Baruch the lower heavens serve as an abode of the demonic Builders and even of “impure” Hades. On demons in heaven, see comm. to ch. 3 (Implied Demonology 2.1.3).

1.5. Two together. The main obscurity in the description of the Beasts in G is whether (1) there are two beasts, Serpent and Hades, or (2) these are two names of the same creature, or (3) the latter is the belly of the former. The problem was regarded as resulting from textual corruption, and most commentators supposed that S reflected the more coherent version.¹⁰⁴ Gaylord considers the whole description of Hades to be an intrusion, since it conflicts with 5:3G, where Hades is identified with the Serpent’s belly, and since “the Slavic here in vv. 3–5 represents a tightly knit, consistent sequence of questions and answers.” He believes that “the Greek version has resulted from a reworking of basically cosmological and ouranological work by inserting theological material,” as in G 4:3, 4–5, 15; 10:5; and 11:7 (see comm. ibid.).¹⁰⁵ Dean-Otting assumes an intentional puzzle and speaks of Beasts as “separate entities but intertwined to the extent that Hades is the belly of the dragon.”¹⁰⁶

However, the “duality” of the celestial beast, or its bipartite nature, or simply the existence of a couple of such monsters can be supported by the parallels below. A similar problem characterizes Leviathan and his rival or spouse (Tanin, Behemoth, or female Leviathan) in some sources. The tradition may be connected or at least likened to other serpentine pairs: Egyptian chaotic adversary of the sun Apopis and the world-encircling Ouroboros, bounding between the ordered cosmos and chaos around it; Babylonian Tiamat (“Abyss”) and Kingu (“Serpent”) of Enuma Elish 1; Greek pair of Ophion and Eurynome initially ruling the sky and then thrown into Oceanus or Tartarus (Apollonius of Rhodes, Argon. 1.498ff; Nonnus of Panopolis, Dionys. 8.110ff). Behemoth, identified in early sources with ¹⁰³ Andersen, “2 Enoch,” 116, n. 81.

¹⁰⁴ Cf., e.g., Fischer, Eschatologie, 79ff; Harlow, Baruch, 1996, 121.

¹⁰⁵ Gaylord, Slavonic, 33; Gaylord, Baruch, 666.

¹⁰⁶ Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 120–121.

Wild Ox (Heb שׁוֹר הַבֶּרֶךְ/תּוֹר בֶּר; cf. Tg Ps 50:10), often appears together with Leviathan, as a pair or even an indivisible unity. Compare “this dragon and this monster around him” (ὁ δράκων οὗτος καὶ τίς ὁ περὶ αὐτὸν ἄπτηνῆς) of 3 Bar. 4:4 with Leviathan and Behemoth in the battle: “One is so close to the other [אֶחָד בְּאַחַד יִגְשׁוּ] that even air cannot enter between them. One joins the other [אִישׁ בְּאַחֵיהוּ יִדְבֶּקוּ], they cling together and cannot be parted [וְלֹא יִתְפָּרְדּוּ]” (Job 41:8–9); cf. Pesiq. Rab Kah. Suppl. 2.4 where this image is developed. Leviathan and Behemoth are undivided until the Judgment Day:

On that day two monsters will be separated, a female monster named Leviathan, to dwell in the abysses of the sea over the sources of the waters; and the male is named Behemoth, who occupied with his breast a waste wilderness named Debdayn, on the east of the garden where the elect and righteous dwell. (1 En. 60:7–8)

Or, on the contrary, the pair was initially separate:

Then you preserved two living creatures which you created; the name of one you called Behemoth and the name of the other Leviathan. And you separated one from the other, for the seventh part where the water had been gathered together could not hold them both. And you gave Behemoth one of the parts which had been dried up on the third day, to live in it, where there are a thousand mountains, but to Leviathan you gave the seventh part, the watery part [thus in Latin; “of the watery part” in other versions]. (4 Ezra 6:49–52)

See further: “Leviathan the slant serpent and Leviathan the tortuous serpent he created male and female; and had they mated with one another they would have destroyed the whole world” (b. B. Bat. 74b).

The pair is a regular element of all major Jewish apocalyptic works, except 2 Enoch. In addition to 1 Enoch and 4 Ezra it is found also in 2 Baruch:

And Behemoth shall be revealed from his place and Leviathan shall ascend from the sea, those two great monsters which I created on the fifth day of creation, and shall have preserved until that time; and then they shall be for food for all that are left. (2 Bar. 29:4)

Similarly, in the Apocalypse of Abraham a unique plural “Leviathans” (10:10) and especially a reconstructed reading of 21:4¹⁰⁷ may refer to Leviathan and his spouse. Moreover, Leviathans and Hades appear in sequence in 10:10–11: “I [Yahoel] am made in order to rule over the Leviathans, since the attack and the threat of every reptile are subjugated to me. I am ordered to unlock Hades and to destroy those who worship the dead.” Leviathan is mentioned in a pair with an enigmatic “lawless Falcon” in Lad. Jac. 6:13:

¹⁰⁷ “Leviathan and his spouse (קניעֶתוֹ)” instead of “and his possession [קניינו].” A conjecture proposed by Ginsberg (Legends, 5.45, n. 127).

And the Lord will pour out his wrath against Leviathan the sea-serpent (and) will kill the lawless Falcon [cf. kfalkona gargailyuy{a} in 5:15] with the sword, because he will raise by his pride the wrath against the God of gods.

The CS ΦΑΛΚΟΝ “falcon” (?) – was interpreted by Horace Lunt as going back to Gk *θαλκον, an anagram of *ακλαθον, a transliteration of Heb עקלָתוֹן “crooked,” a common epithet for Leviathan (Isa 27:1; passim).¹⁰⁸

Cf. also pairs of Sheol/Hades and Abbadon (Prov 27:20); Hades and Death (Rev 6:8; 20:13–14); Hades and Beliar (Gos. Bart. 1); a pair of serpents in Acts Thom. 32.

1.6. Two in One. The pair may be a bipartite description of one Chaos-monster.¹⁰⁹ The accounts of two interlaced monsters in Job 41:8–9 or inseparable until “that day” in 1 En. 60:7–9 (see above) may refer not to a pair, but to a bipartite monster. The obscure account of 3 Baruch may derive from this archaic motif.

The description of 3 Bar. 4:4 which mentions “this dragon and this monster around him” (ὁ περὶ αὐτὸν ἀπηνήης) may refer to intertwined creatures, Serpent and Hades (also serpentine – “which also is similar to him [Serpent],” ὅστις καὶ αὐτὸς παρόμοιός ἐστιν αὐτοῦ as 3 Bar. 4:6). This image, caduceus, a figure of two (sometimes one) serpents intertwined around one another (or around a pole), is almost universally attested from Sumer to Rome.¹¹⁰

1.7. Hades as Serpent’s belly. “His belly is Hades” (5:3). Hades is a belly of a Serpent Azazel in Apoc. Abr. 31:5 (cf. below): “And those who followed after the idols and after their murders will rot in the womb of the Evil One – the belly of Azazel, and they will be burned by the fire of Azazel’s tongue.” Gnostic celestial dragon also is a place of afterlife torment (Pistis Sophia 3.126; see citation in 1.1 above).

1.8. Serpent as Hades. In 5:3S, the only instance where Hades is mentioned in S, it is either (1) identified with Serpent’s belly (as in G) or (2) only compared to Serpent's belly (as in the reading of ms L; see Notes ibid.),¹¹¹ or (3) identified with entire Serpent.¹¹² In the second case, the whole motif of Hades would be absent in the redaction reflected by S, though probably implied in it, and later clarified on the basis of the additions found in G.

¹⁰⁸ Lunt, “Ladder,” 404.

¹⁰⁹ Cf. Fuchs, Mythos, 225–264.

¹¹⁰ See below for the connection of the image to the Celestial Tree (comm. to 4:8–17). It may also resemble a serpent coiling about Mithraic Aion-Kronos (James, “Baruch,” lxi) and Ouroboros encircling the world.

2.1. The names "Serpent" and "Dragon." The beast is called "serpent" – Gk ὄφης, CS fem. змийа in 4:3 and masc. змийи in 5:1), and also "dragon" – δράκων; only in G). The latter name in Hebrew (דֶרָקוֹן) in its numerical value accords with the number of 360 rivers in 4:7G (see comm. to "rivers" in 4:7G-5S).¹¹³ The same word is used by LXX for Heb תנין for a "great dragon [ὁ δράκων ὁ μέγας] that lies in the midst of his rivers" (Ezek 29:3).

2.2. The names "Hades" and "Monster." The Greek term Ἅδης was widely used in Hellenistic Jewish sources, conflating the features of the Hebrew Sheol, Gehenna, Tofet with Greek concepts of the afterlife abode.¹¹⁴ Greek Tartarus was similarly adopted (LXX Job 40:15; 41:23; 2 Pet 2:4).

Hades is called "monster," Gk ἀπηνής (4:4). As a noun it is almost unique. As an adjective it appears in Wis 17:19: ἀπηνηστάτων θηρίων φωνή "a voice of monstrous beasts." Gk θηρίον in LXX is a constant equivalent for the Heb בַּהֲמוֹת "Behemoth" and it is also "the Beast" of Rev 13:18.

3.1. Sea Drinking

Ultimate basin. On Sea Serpents see 1.2 above. Serpent and Hades of 3 Baruch share their main function with Rabbinic Leviathan and Behemoth, who are both known to drink from the world hydrosystem (or sometimes only of Mediterranean or of Palestine) and thus serve as an ultimate basin for it:

Where does Behemoth drink from? R. Yohanan and R. Shimon b. Lakish give different answers. R. Yohanan says, "He makes a single draught of what the Jordan pours down in six months. What is his reason? Because it says, 'Behold if a river overflow, he does not tremble' [Job 40:23]." R. Shimon b. Lakish says, "He makes a single draught of what the Jordan pours down in twelve months. What is his reason? 'He is confident, for the Jordan rushes forth to his mouth' [ibid.]. And they contain but sufficient to moisten the beast's mouth." R. Huna in the name of R. Yose said, "They do ¹¹¹ In both cases его "its" of чрева его "its belly" in 5:3 would refer to the Serpent.

¹¹² In this case "its" refers to Hades.

¹¹³ Observation of Bohak ("Gematrias").

¹¹⁴ Cf. van der Horst, "Tomb Inscriptions"; Mazzinghi, "Non c'è regno."

not [even] contain sufficient to moisten its mouth.” Then where does it drink from? R. Shimon b. Yohai learned, “A river goes forth from Eden whose name is Yubal¹¹⁵ and from there it drinks. What is his reason? Because it says, ‘That spreads out its roots by Yubal’ [Jer 17: 8].” (Lev. Rab. 2.10)

See also Pesiq. Rab Kah. 6.1; Pesiq. R. 16.4; 48.3; Tan. Pinehas 12; Num. Rab. 21.18.¹¹⁶ Similarly to our Hades, Greek Tartarus is also a part of the cosmic hydrosystem: rivers originate there and return to it (Plato, Phaed. 111c–112e).

Some texts view this function as having an ecological purpose – it aims to prevent a new Flood.¹¹⁷ Thus, in some Slavonic mss: “if the Serpent did not drink one cubit from the sea, there would be no dry land on earth” (4:5S, family β; see Notes). This conception contradicts a theory of a cyclical hydrosystem represented in Eccl 1:7: “All the rivers run into the sea, but the sea never overflows. To the sources from which the rivers come, there they flow to run again.”¹¹⁸ The non-cyclical nature of the water system in 3 Baruch is clarified in ch. 10: the clouds (apud S – all of them; apud G – only those with “fruitful” waters) originate not from the sea, but from a supernatural celestial source (10:8–9S); thus there is no alternative way to balance a system, but by the canalization of the superfluous water into another supernatural destination.

Regulating the world water system by swallowing superfluous waters is known also as a function of primeval sea monsters. During the creation God ordered “the Prince of the Sea” (identified with Rehab of Job 26:12): “Open your mouth and swallow all the waters which are in the world!” Having refused, he has been slain by God (b. B. Bat. 74b). Cf. “When God created the Sea, it was expanding and expanding, until God has rebuked it and dried it” (b. Hag. 12a). However, the contemporary water monsters of 3 Baruch are more obedient than their primordial counterparts; they readily drink from the sea and do so with regular amounts (see below). Exactly the same function is ascribed to Leviathan who dwells “in the abysses of the Ocean over the fountains of the waters” (1 En. 60:7), although here Leviathan does not so much drink as he plugs the water source:

¹¹⁵ On Yuval as possibly a primary source of all waters on earth, see Whitney, Beasts, 104–108.

¹¹⁶ Cf. Whitney, Beasts, 112–113.

¹¹⁷ This makes an additional connection with the “vine excursus,” also dealing with the Flood in 4:6/8–17 below.

¹¹⁸ For this conception in Ecclesiastes, see Young-Ji Min, “Rivers.”

Were it not that he [Leviathan] lies over the abyss [תהום] and presses down upon it, it would come up and destroy the world and flood it. But when he wishes to drink, he is not able to drink from the waters of the Ocean, since they are salty. What does he do? He raises one of his fins and the abyss comes up, and he drinks, and after he drinks, he returns his fin to its place, and it stops up the abyss. (Pesiq. R. 48.3)¹¹⁹

Concern for the lack of water. An opposite concern appears in 3 Bar. 4:4S (cf. 4:6G): “he [Serpent] drinks one cubit from the sea. How is it that the sea does not sink?” The same with Leviathan: “when he is thirsty, he makes many furrows in the sea” (b. B. Bat. 75a), as a result, “the deep does not recover [חוזר לאיתנו] for seventy years” (b. B. Bat. 75a).¹²⁰

One or two drinking beasts? Similar accounts referring to Leviathan and Behemoth have led to a discussion about which of the two actually drank from the Jordan. Cf. a statement of 3 Baruch that Hades is similar to the Serpent “in that he also drinks ...” (4:6):

R. Yehudah said, “The Jordan comes from the cave of Pamias [Paneas].” It is also taught thus, “The Jordan comes from the cave of Pamias and it flows into the Sea of Sibkhai [Samachonitis] and into the Sea of Tiberias, and it rolls on and descends into the Great Sea and rolls on and descends into the mouth of Leviathan, for it is said, ‘He is confident that the Jordan will burst into his mouth’ [Job 40:23].” Rabba b. Ulla objected, “Behold, this is written about Behemoth on a thousand hills.” However, Rabba b. Ulla said [in order to harmonize both views], “When cattle [בהמות], but with an adj. in pl.] on a thousand hills are confident? At the time when the Jordan bursts forth into the mouth of Leviathan.” (b. B. Bat. 74b)

List of rivers. As in 3 Bar. 4:7, giving a list of rivers, the Rabbinic discussion above is immediately followed by the list of Palestinian “seven seas and four rivers:”

¹¹⁹ In Slavic folklore (which is known to be in mutual influence with the literary pseudographic tradition), serpents are often connected to celestial and terrestrial waters. The rainbow is considered a serpent drinking water from the sea or rivers in order to transform it to the rain (thus enabling a cyclic system); see Belova, Slavjanskij, 285; cf. Gura, Simvolika, 289–93. Cf. also another model for the monster regulating the cosmic hydrology: “Rabah bar Bar Hanah said, ‘I saw that Ridya;’ he resembles a heifer of three years old, his lip is split and he is stationed between the upper and the lower deep, to the upper deep he says, ‘Pour down your water,’ and to the lower deep: ‘Let your water spring up’” (b. Taan. 25b).” On this creature see Kiperwasser, Shapira, “Irano-Talmudica.”

¹²⁰ Heb חוזר לאיתנו, lit. “returns to its strength,” here is sometimes interpreted as “recovers its calm.” However, in the light of parallels the capacity of water is rather meant.

When R. Dimi came he stated in the name of R. Yohanan, “The verse ‘for he has founded it upon the seas and established it upon the floods’ [Ps 24:2] speaks of the seven seas and four rivers which surround the land of Israel. And these are the seven seas: the Sea of Tiberias, the Sea of Sodom, the Sea of Helath [Elat?], the Sea of Hiltha [Ulatha], the Sea of Sibkay, the Sea of Aspamia and the Great Sea. The following are the four rivers: the Jordan, the Jarmuk, the Keramyon and Pigah. (b. B. Bat. 74b)

Water abyss and Hades. The bipartite Serpent-Hades as a living being eats and drinks (4:5–6; like Phoenix eats and drinks in 6:11). By the former activity it helps to get rid of sinners,¹²¹ and by the latter it disposes of superfluous water. It is one of several examples of the consistent integration of moral and cosmological issues elegantly united by mythopoeic images.

This most probably was not the innovation of 3 Baruch. There are some traces of ancient connections between the “water abyss” and Hell. These topics are united in Job 38:16–17: “Have you entered into the springs of the sea? Or have you walked in the recesses of the depth? Have the gates of death been opened to you? Or have you seen the doors of deepest darkness?”¹²² The same term – Heb תהום / ἄβυσσος – may designate either a “water abyss,” or “Hell.” See the “mouths of the abyss” in the water system of 1 En. 17:8 and “abyss” as Hell there (1 En. 54:5; 90:26). For Gk ἄβυσσος as Hell, see Rev 9:1; Acts Phil. 3; 24; Acts Thom. 32; Acts Andr. Matt. 12; 24; and passim. “Lower waters” are located “opposite the gates of the Death Shadow [Heb צלִמוֹת] and the gates of Gehenna” (Seder Rab. deBereshit 17 in Bate Midr. 27–28). In accordance with this may be an idea that the “Prince of the Sea” (cf. b. B. Bat. 74b) is in charge of Gehenna:

The [Prince of] Gehenna said to the Holy One, “Sovereign of the Universe! To the sea let all be consigned ... the Gehenna cried out before him, “Sovereign of the Universe! My Lord! Sate me with the seed of Seth ... I am faint [with hunger].” (b. Shab. 104a)

The insatiability of the sea and of Hades are connected (or at least comparable): “All the rivers run into the sea, [but the sea never overflows]; Eccl 1:7]. All the dead go only to Sheol, but Sheol is never full, as it is said, ‘Sheol and Abaddon are insatiable’ [Prov 27:20]” (Eccl. Rab. 1.7).

¹²¹ Only in G. In S, the Serpent eats earth instead (4:3 S); see 3.3 below.4. Thus in S, its extra-ecological functions are only hinted in 5:2, where it or its belly is identified as Hades.

¹²² Cf. 4 Ezra 4:7: “How many dwellings are in the heart of the sea, or how many springs [“streams,” venae in Latin] are at the source of the deep [principio abyssi], or how many ways [“streams” in Latin] are above the firmament, or which are the exits of Hell, or which are the entrances of Paradise?”

3.2. Eating the Wicked

“The dragon is he who eats the bodies of those who pass through life wickedly, and he is nourished by them” (4:5G). Thus, the Serpent either serves as an abode (purgatory or eternal) for the souls of sinners or it destroys them, depriving them of eternal life. The notion of the “bodies” (τὰ σώματα) eaten by the Serpent is similar to the bodily post-mortem punishment in t. Sanh. 13.4 and par., where the sinners “descend to Gehenna in their bodies,” and “their body is consumed” (cf. b. Ber. 18b–19b; b. Shab. 33b; b. Rosh HaSh. 16b–17a; b. Sanh. 64b). The conception of bodily descent to Hell is known to Matt 5:29–30; 18:8 and Mark 9:43–48, and even the destruction “of both soul and body in Hell” is mentioned (Matt 10:28). This must imply that not an immediate but a post-resurrection judgment is meant,¹²³ unless we deal with a mythopoeic paradox of a spiritual body (cf. an early Christian conception developed on the basis of 1 Cor 15:42).

On the afterlife and eschatological conceptions only vaguely implied in 3 Baruch, see comm. to ch. 15.

Devouring serpent. Cosmic serpents swallow their rivals in Enuma Elish 4.97 (Tiamat and Marduk), CTA 5.2.2–4; 23.61–62 (Mot and Baal). Mot (“Death”) feeds on humans (CTA 4.7.47–52; see below).¹²⁴ Sea-monsters “swallow men like fishes” (T. Jud 21:7). Aseneth prays that a sea-monster would not swallow her (Jos. Asen. 12:11).

Jeremiah compares Nebuchadnezzar with some devouring and rinsing dragon probably known to his audience: “He swallowed us like a dragon [Heb תנין, Gk δράκων], he filled his belly with our dainties, then he rinsed us out” (Jer 51:34). See the purgatory torments in the Testament of Isaac: “They [zoomorphic celestial creatures] tore him apart, dismember, and chewed, and swallowed him. After that they ejected him from their mouths and he returned to his original state” (5:16). A serpent-like angel wished to swallow the seer near Hades in the Apocalypse of Zephaniah (6:1–8). This role may be connected also to a function of a celestial or infernal gate keeper (see comm. to ch. “Tree of Knowledge” [4:8–17G; 4:6–17S]).

Great eaters. Both Mot (“Death”, the Ugaritic ruler of the netherworld depicted sometimes in a serpentine form) and Behemoth are known as great eaters. Mot’s diet also includes humans: he “becomes fat [feasting] on gods and humans” and “becomes sated on the masses of earth” (CTA 4.7.47–52). For Behemoth: “a thousand mountains yield cattle for it and it eats” (Lev. Rab. 22.10; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 6); “thousand mountains yield for him all kinds of food for the meal of righteous in the world to come” (Pesiq. R. 16.4 and 48.4; Num. Rab. 21.18).

¹²³ Cf. Milikowsky, “Gehenom,” 317–318.

¹²⁴ Wright, Heaven, 49.

Devouring Satan. In Apoc. Abr. 23:7–11 Azazel (Satan) and the Serpent are identified (Azazel is described as a serpent with hands, feet, and twelve wings). His fiery belly serves as Hades too. Here a number of critical details conform to 3 Baruch (italics are mine):

And I shall burn with fire those who mocked them ruling over them in this age and I will commit those who have covered me with mockery to the reproach of the coming age. Since I have destined them to be food for the fire of Hades, and ceaseless soaring in the air of the underground depths, the contents of a worm’s belly. For those who do justice, who have chosen my will and clearly kept my commandments, will see them. And they will rejoice with joy at the destruction of the abandoned. And those who followed after the idols and after their murders will rot in the womb of the Evil One – the belly of Azazel,¹²⁵ and they will be burned by the fire of Azazel’s tongue. (Apoc. Abr. 31:2–5)

See also “your adversary, the Devil”, who “as a roaring lion, walks about seeking someone to devour” (1 Pet 5:8); he is identified with “great Dragon” and “ancient Serpent” in Rev 12:9. One of the names applied to Satan, Belial/Beliar (from Heb בלִיעַל), might have been connected to its swallowing function: “swallower” derived from the root בלע followed by affirmative lamed.¹²⁶ Bartholomew fears that Beliar will swallow him in Gos. Bart. 1:20.

Devouring Hades. In the Bible, personified Sheol/Hades is hungry for humans. It has a mouth, which “swallows them alive”; see Isa 5:14; Hab 2:5; Ps 141:7; and Prov 1:12. The earth can also “open its mouth” and swallow people (Exod 15:12; Num 16:30–32; 26:10; Deut 11:5; Ps 106:17); cf. also the “mouths of the abyss” in 1 En. 17:8. This swallowing ability of the “gates of Hades” must be meant in Matt 16:18, when Jesus says that it will not prevail over his assembly.

¹²⁵ The extant text has въ оутрѣбѣ лоукаваго черви азазила. The South Slavic proto-text apparently had черви/чрѣви “belly” in place of черви/чръви “worm” (the form may be interpreted both as gen. and loc.) and contained possibly a gloss doublet: “in the womb of the Evil One – the belly of Azazel.” In this case, in 31:3 above a usual grave worm is most probably meant.

¹²⁶ Mandelkern, Hekhal, 202; Thomas, “Beliyya’al,” 18.

Belly of Hades. See “the depths of the belly of Hades” (Sir 51:5); “flaming womb of Hell” (1 En. 63:14); and “Hell [infernium] and the storerooms of souls [promptuaria animarum] are like the womb” (4 Ezra 4:42). Jonah calls “the belly of the fish” (Heb מַעֵי הַדָּגָה; 2:2) “belly of Sheol/Hades” (Heb בֶּטֶן שְׂאוֹל, Gk κοιλία ᾧδου; 2:3). Cf. 1.7 and 4.3.

3.3. Eating earth. “It eats earth like grass” (4:3S) according to the punishment of the serpent in Gen 3:14. Cf. also “the serpent’s food is earth” (Isa 65:25; the same in Mic 7:17 and Philo, Opif. 56.157). In both Genesis and Isaiah the Greek text of LXX contains a word γῆς “earth” (CS земли) in place of Heb עֶפֶר “dust.”

This characteristic may link our cosmic Serpent to the “serpent that deceived Adam and Eve” (4:8S; cf. 9:7), also appearing only in S. This feature contrasts with Phoenix that feeds on “the manna of heaven” (6:11). Similarly, Philo likens “the lover of pleasure” who “feeds not on heavenly nourishment” to the serpent that “takes clods of earth as food” (Opif. 56.157–158).

In S, the Serpent eats earth instead of sinners. Thus in S, its extra-ecological functions are only hinted at in 5:2, where the Serpent or its belly is called “Hades.” Ugaritic Mot eats both, humans as well as earth (CTA 4.7.47–52; see 3.2 above), thus combining characteristics of the Serpent in G and S.

“Grass” here may also mean “stubble” (CS сѣно has the both meanings). The discrepancy between G and S might go back to a simile of eating sinners like stubble, alluding to Exod 15:7: “your Fury will eat them like stubble.”

3.4. Insatiability

“Hades is insatiable” (אֲדָם עֵסֶת נֶעֱשִׂיתִי; 5:3S). Only in S. This is a biblical citation: “Sheol [“Hades” in LXX] and Abaddon are insatiable” (Prov 27:20). See Habakkuk’s parable of the “arrogant man, who made wide his soul as Sheol [Hades], and who is insatiable as Death” (Hab 2:5).

4. Descriptions

4.1. Rock. G reads: “a serpent, which looked like a rock” or “appeared to be a rock” (see Notes). “The rock becomes a dragon,” when the Antichrist fails to transfer “the flinty rock” to bread (Apoc. Dan. 13:8).¹²⁷

¹²⁷ Cf. “living stones” in Jos. Asen. 12:2.

S has “a serpent on a mountain of rock” (4:3). Diverse sources probably preserve remnants of a tradition connecting a serpent or other gigantic beast to a rock/mountain. In Rabbinic writings the development of this tradition relies on the well attested midrashic exegesis of Ps 50:10: “Behemoth on a thousand mountains” is interpreted as “a single beast lying upon a thousand mountains” (Lev. Rab. 22.10 and par.; cf. b. B. Bat. 74b). It might also be based on an exegesis of the “serpent on the rock” (Heb נחש עלי צור) of Prov 30:19, where the unrecognizable “way of a serpent [unseen] on a rock” (דרך נחש עלי צור) might have been interpreted as “the ways of the Serpent [sitting] on a rock.” The Dragon is “bound to the heights of Lebanon” by Anat (PRU 2.3.8–10; = UT 1003.3–10). According to the reconstruction of Cross and Whitney, Behemoth “is held on a mountain [instead of “occupies with his breast”] in an immense desert, named Dendayn” (1 En. 60:8).¹²⁸ Leviathan has a throne standing upon a huge rock according to a late midrash (2 Alphabet of Ben Sira 27–28); cf. “the mount of the she-dragon, the mother of snakes” (Acts Phil. 8 [97]). See also a toponym “Serpent Stone” (Heb אבן הזוחלת) at En-Rogel (1 Kgs 1:9).¹²⁹

4.2. Dark and impure. In 4:3G Hades is described as “dark and impure,” while the Serpent is not defined thus. Similarly, in tannaitic tradition: of the two beasts, only Leviathan is declared pure (Sifra 11.10; or Leviathan and Ziz as in Lev. Rab. 13.3). In later midrash Behemoth is also sometimes regarded as a clean animal (this is the fact that enables it to be eaten at the Messianic banquet) or, alternatively, both Leviathan and Behemoth are unclean (Lev. Rab. 13.3; Midr. Ps 146; 537).

The “great dragon” of the Pistis Sophia is identified with “the outer darkness” (3.126; see above). Personified Darkens has the likeness of a bull in Pesiq. R. 20 and is connected to Hades in Paraph. Shem passim. Most commonly it is a characteristic of the abode of the dead. The Mesopotamian abode of the dead is “the dark house,” where the dead “see no light, ¹²⁸ Cross, Canaanite, 54; Whitney, Beasts, 53.

¹²⁹ “Rock” may be also connected to Hades. The two are given in opposition in Matt 16:18: “You are a Rock [Gk πέτρος going back to Aram כִּיפָא], and upon this rock [Gk πέτρα] I will build my community; and the gates of Hades will not prevail against it.” This conversation takes place in Caesarea Philippi (Paneas), where the sources of lower waters were believed to be located (on the association of the “water abyss” with Hades see comm. to 4:1–5: Water abyss and Hades). The location of the “foundation stone” is linked to the location of the sources of the deep in b. Yoma 77b–78a; Midr. Jonah (Bet HaMidr. 1.98).

residing in darkness” (ANET 107). The realm of the dead is described as “house of darkness” in the Descent of Ishtar 1 and Gilgamesh Epic 7.4.33. Greek Tartarus is also dark (Hesiod, Theog. 729). The same holds for the netherworld in Job 10:21–22 (“land of darkness and deadly shadow,” etc.). See, similarly, 1 En. 10:4; 82:2; 103:8; Matt 8:12; 22:3; 25:30; Exod. Rab. 14; and passim. The abode of the sinners in the third heaven of 2 Enoch is also dark: “And those men took me and led me up on to the second heaven, and showed me darkness, greater than earthly darkness, and there I saw prisoners ...” (2 En. 7:1–2).

Darkness is mentioned two more times below (6:13; 13:1). On the separation of the light from the darkness mentioned in 13:1 and the possible opposition of “dark and impure” inhabitants of lower heavens to light and pure forces of higher ones, see comm. to 6:13.

Darkness and fire are combined in Sheol (1 En. 103:8); Gehenna is dark despite of the immense masses of fire (b. Yeb. 109b).

4.3. Fire. “He [“God” in mss BT] kindled his heart” (РАЖДЕГЪ СРЪДЦЕ ЕГО; 4:5S). Family β has “God has kindled the belly [instead of “heart”] of the serpent.” The motif appears only in S. Eating and fire are connected (cf. “eating fire” of Deut 4:14). The images of fiery serpents as well as the fire of the netherworld are both well known and sometimes combined. The huge serpent Khet, named by Horus “Great fire,” breathes fire in the faces of human souls tormented in a fiery lake (Egyptian Book of the Gates). See also the Leviathan of Job 41:13, 23 and b. B. Bat. 75a. Sinners will be “burned by the fire of Azazel’s tongue” (Apoc. Abr. 31:5), while Azazel appears as a serpent in Apoc. Abr. 23. Impure and unbelievers are drawn to the belly of Ur, the Mandaean fiery serpent of the underworld.¹³⁰ Fiery Hell is very well attested in Jewish sources.¹³¹

However, nothing is said here about burning the sinners. The text explicitly states that the Serpent’s heart/belly is inflamed only in order to make him drink. “Eternal fire” for the sinners is mentioned in 4:16G below, but this verse is most probably interpolated.

¹³⁰ Drower, Mandaeans, 253; Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 124–127.

¹³¹ See Isa 66:24; Ezek 38:22; Mal 4:1; 4 Macc 9:9; 12:12; 1 En. 10:6; 18:11–16, 19; 21:1–6; 54:1–2, 6; 63:14; 90:21–25; 90:26–27; 91:9; 98:3; 100:9; 102:1; 103:8; Jub. 9:15; Pss. Sol. 15:4–5; 2 Bar. 44:15; 48:39; 59:2; 4 Ezra 7:36; 13:10–11; Apoc. Abr. 31:5; Sib. Or. 2:303–305; 3:53–54, 672–74; 4:159–61; T. Zeb. 10:3; T. Jud. 25:3; Jos. Asen. 12:11; 1QS 2.8, 15; 1QpHab 10.5, 13; Josephus, Ant. 1.20; Matt 3:10, 12; 13:42, 50; 18:8; 25:41; Mark 9:43; Luke 1:7; 3:9, 17; 2 Pet 3:10; Rev 19:20; 20:10; Gen. Rab. 4; b. Er. 19a; b. Pes. 54a.; b. Hag. 15b; etc.

4.4. Hades' (= Serpent's belly) dimensions (5:3). Hades is measured in Apoc. Paul 32 and b. Pesah. 94a; cf. b. Taan. 10a; Cant. Rab. 6.9; Pesiq. R. 41.173b; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 71. See comm. to 5:3 below.

Conclusions. As we can see from the above, the “triadic” appearance of the Beasts is not the only motif that links them to the bestial trio of early Jewish tradition and its counterparts in the Near Eastern lore. The Serpent and Hades share with Leviathan and Behemoth their serpentine form, ambivalent celestial and aquatic assignments, emphasized pairness or even bipartite nature, rabelaisian appetite, and especially the important function of balancing the cosmic water system. Another important feature, devouring men or even serving the abode of the wicked, is shared with archaic serpentine monsters, like Mesopotamian Tiamat, Ugaritic Mot, biblical tannin, who in turn have much in common with Leviathan, on the one hand, and with Sheol-Hades and dragon-like Satan, on the other. The parallels are even more clear for the third member of the triad, the Sun Bird (Ziz, Field Rooster, Ben Nez, and Bar Yokni of Rabbinic aggada; see comm. to ch. 6).

However, two basic features of Leviathan-Behemoth traditions – Eschatological or Primordial Combat (Chaoskampf) and Messianic Banquet – present in all other pseudepigrapha where these two creatures are mentioned together (1 Enoch, 2 Baruch, 4 Ezra and later Rabbinic sources; see above) are absent in 3 Baruch. Here the Beasts are neither fighters, nor food.¹³² Their main function here is just the opposite: they are rather eaters and drinkers than food. They eat sinners and earth, and drink sea waters. If our document preserves an old tradition, it may shed light on the origin of the Banquet idea: cosmic eaters will be eaten by men, their potential food, i.e., the Death mechanism will be destroyed by men released from it (the model reinvented by Shakespeare in Sonnet CXLVI: “So shall thou feed on Death, that feeds on men, and Death once dead, there’s no more dying then”). In this case, the later Jewish tradition would have proposed an ironic and optimistic reversal of an archaic myth.¹³³

¹³² Cf. Whitney, Beasts, 59–83, 114–155.

¹³³ This reversal is well set with the very ambiguous role that serpents and serpentine creatures play in ancient Near Eastern and Mediterranean cultures (more than in the Hebrew Bible, where negative accounts still prevail; cf. the seducing serpent of Gen 3; helpful magic serpents of Exod 4 and 7; healing bronze serpent of Num 21 and 2 Kgs 18:4; a crooked serpent Leviathan of Isa 14:29 and Job 41; Dan’s symbol in Gen 49:17; etc.).

An additional question is whether the Beasts of 3 Baruch rule celestial spheres or corresponding environments as their angelic patrons. This is very probable at least for the Sun Bird. According to the principle of the progressive order of creation, animals created on the fifth day rule celestial spheres created on the fourth, and specifically the superiority of Ziz to the sun is mentioned:

Whatever was created after another governs it ... The luminaries were created on the fourth day, while the birds in the fifth. R. Yehudah b. Shimon said, "Ziz is a clean bird, when it flies, it covers the orb of the sun." And man created after all in order to rule all. (Gen. Rab. 19.4)

This interpretation may be corroborated by the fact that the sun needs a command or the permission of the Sun Bird in order to rise (3 Bar. 6:14, especially S; on angelic features of Ziz see comm. to ch. 6). The Serpent (Leviathan, Rehab, Rabbinic "Prince of the Sea"), and Hades (Behemoth), depicted in 3 Baruch as regulating the sea level and eating earth correspondently, might have dominated these spheres. This may explain why according to some witnesses, knowledge about the Beasts was an integral part of mystic teaching. "The mysteries of Behemoth and Leviathan" are mentioned in a line with "the mysteries of the Chariot" in Cant. Rab. 1.28. Some of the traditions on Behemoth (similar to those of 3 Baruch) are transmitted in the name of R. Shimon bar Yohai (Pesiq. Rab Kah. 6; Bet HaMidr. 3.76).

4:2. G here says nothing about the transition to the next heaven (S ceases to mention any heaven after the second). The following arguments stand in favor of the suggestion that the transition did take place: (1) In 3 Baruch, doors, a long journey and a plain designate an entry to the next heaven (doors/gates for first, second, and fifth heavens; journey for first and second; plain – first, second and fourth). (2) In 7:2G (though not in S) it is stated clearly that it is already the third heaven, although a transitional moment is not mentioned. (3) In 2 Enoch Hades (as well as Paradise in 8:1) is located in the third heaven (ch. 10). James assumed that the lack of a clear designation of the entry to the third heaven (a result of corruption?) brought the scribe in 10:1G to change the number of the next heaven from fourth to third, "it is confirmed by the fact that in 11:1 we hear of the fifth heaven, although the fourth being nowhere mentioned."¹³⁴ For an alternative view see introductory comm. ch. 11: Ouranology.

¹³⁴ James, "Baruch," lix.

4:2S. You will see the Glory of God. G omits due to parablepsis (see Notes). The same promise occurs in both versions below, see 6:12; 7:2; 11:2 and in 16:6S. From G (possibly late fragment) we learn also that Adam was “divested of the Glory of God, so also the men who now drink insatiably the wine which is begotten of it, make a transgression worse than Adam, and become far from the Glory of God, and offer themselves to the eternal fire” (4:16G). CS СЛАВА БОЖИЯ / Gk δόξα θεοῦ / Heb כְּבוֹד ה' normally designates the vision of the Glory of God, often enthroned (Exod 24:16–17; 33:18; Isa 6:1–3; Ezek 1:28; 43:1–4; 1 En. 14:20; 102:3; 104:1; T. Levi 3:4; etc.), or even God himself (4Q405 22.7; Apoc. Abr. 19:4; 4 Ezra 3:19; Asc. Isa. 9:37; 1 Clem. 9:2).¹³⁵ If this is the meaning here, the promise is not fulfilled, and the fact counts in favor of the hypothesis that the extant text of 3 Baruch is not complete (see comm. to chs. 11 and 16).

However, the biblical “glory of God” may have another meaning: it could be something produced by God that is distinct from him. Thus, an alternative interpretation is that here the “glory of God” refers not to a revelation of God himself but rather to a disclosure of his works,¹³⁶ namely, Serpent, Hades, Phoenix, luminaries, celestial waters, birds, Michael, and probably subsequent visions; according to S also the afterlife reward (16:4). This view may be supported by Baruch’s words after seeing the sun chariot and Phoenix: “Seeing such great glory, I became overwhelmed with a great fear” (7:5G). In this case it would be difficult to distinct between “glory” and “mysteries” (1:6; 1:8G; 2:6; 5:3S; 17:1S; see comm. to 1:6). Less probable would be that only Michael is the referent of the “glory of God,” although he is called “the Glorious One” in 12:4S; Exod. Rab. 2.5 says that “every place where Michael appears is the Glory of the Presence” (כל מקום שמיכאל נראה שם הוא כבוד השכינה; cf. Exod. Rab. 32.9);¹³⁷ cf. Metatron called “Great Glory” in 3 En. 48D:1.

A similar problem of interpretation occurs in Exod 33:18, where Moses asks God: “Show me your Glory.” In different versions of LXX this is translated either literally or as “Reveal yourself to me” (so also Philo, Spec. Leg. 1.8.41ff).

Bauckham and Harlow suppose that this is not a promise at all, but rather a warning not to confuse “the glories of the lowest heavens with the Glory of God in the highest heavens.” Similar preparatory notes may be recognized in Asc. Isa. 7:7–8; 17, 21–22; 8:7–9 and T. Levi 2:9–10

¹³⁵ See also Stone, Fourth Ezra, 72; Harlow, Baruch, 50–51. n. 66.

¹³⁶ So Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 51; 109–110; GC:1.678.

¹³⁷ Harlow, Baruch, 52, n. 69.

(“Do not be amazed about this, for you will see another heaven more brilliant and incomparable”). Thus, the location of the text and the wording of the promises of “Glory,” on the one hand, and of “mysteries,” on the other, underline the difference between them: “glory,” mentioned closer to the end and often with the word “wait” (6:12; 7:2; 11:2), refers to the promised climax of the tour, while “mysteries,” used mostly in the beginning and combining with the word “come,” refers to “usual” cosmic sights.¹³⁸ Similar opposition of lower glories (luminaries) and highest Glory (Shekhinah) is attested also in Rabbinic sources:

As the sun, which is but one of the countless servants of God, gives light to the whole world, so in a much greater degree does the Shekhinah. (b. Sanh. 39a)

The emperor [Hadrian] said to R. Yehoshua b. Hananiah, “I desire greatly to see your God.” Yehoshua requested him to stand facing the brilliant summer sun, and said, “Gaze upon it.” The emperor said, “I cannot.” “Then,” said Yehoshua, “if you are not able to look upon a servant of God, how much less may you gaze upon the Shekhinah.” (b. Hul. 60a)

Excursus: Cosmic Hydrology (4:6–7G; 4:3b–5S)

GREEK

⁶ And this is Hades, which also is similar to him, in that also he drinks about a cubit from the sea, and nothing lacks from it [the sea].”

⁷ Baruch said, “And how [is that]?”

And the angel said, “Listen, the Lord God made 360 rivers, of which the primary of all are Alphias, and Abyros, and Gērikos;

SLAVONIC

^{3b} And it drinks one cubit of water from the sea every day, and it eats earth like grass.

⁴ And I Baruch said to the angel, “Lord, he drinks one cubit from the sea.

How is it that this sea does not sink?”

⁵ The angel told me, “Listen, Baruch, the Lord made 373 rivers, and the first river is Alphaia[s], the second Abyr[os], the third Agērenik[os],¹³⁹

¹³⁸ Bauckham, “Hell,” 373–74; Harlow, Baruch, 52.

¹³⁹ ē is used here to designate Gk η and CS ѡ, in the Middle Ages pronounced as [i].

the fourth Dounab,
 the fifth Ephrat,
 the sixth Zēphon,
 the seventh Ēzētius,
 the eighth Indus,
 the ninth Thourēselos.
 And there are 364 others.

and because of these the sea does not sink.”

They fall into the sea, and thus it is washed, and this way it does not sink.
 That is why he kindled his heart.”

NOTES

4:6G. Hades. In S “Hades” is mentioned only in family β 4:5; see comm. ibid.

4:6G. Similar. Gk παρόμοιος, also “comparable in size.”

4:6G. In that. ἐν ᾧ. Or “in which.” In this case it may be an interpolated allusion to 5:3, where Hades is a part of the dragon.

4:4S. Lord, he ... Ms T has: “Lord, if he ...”

How is it that this sea does not sink from the drinking of this serpent? According to mss TSN and, with a light variation, to family β. These words lack in ms L. Ms B adds: “from the drinking of this serpent”

Sink. Or “be finished.” CS оуѣдѣтъ must render Gk ἐκλείπω (cf. 4:6 and 7G). In Slavonic Bible versions and in LXX these equivalents correspond to Heb נִכַּח.¹⁴⁰

4:7G. 360 rivers. G seems to have a primary reading here, since 360 is a gematria for Heb דַּרְקִין (from Gk δράκων);¹⁴¹ see comm. ad loc.

4:5S. 373 rivers. There are discrepancies between the mss and between the two parts of the verse: In 4:5a there are [?]6 rivers and 353 L 373 rivers BT β² 343 rivers S 364 Z 333 rivers N. Cf. at the end of the verse (4:5b): 354 L 353 BT 53 β² 343 S 363 Z many great rivers N. The discrepancies of 4/3, 60/40 and 70/50 must be due to the differences in numeration between Glagolitic and Cyrillic, while designations for 300 remain identical in both alphabets. Thus, all variants with 3, 40 and 50 may be secondary. Therefore, in 4:5a Glagolitic fore-texts of ms L might have 374 or 373 like BT and DIPV of family β; of ms S – 363 or 364 (as well as the only extant Glagolitic ms Z). At the same time in 4:5b: 353 of mss BT (and 53 of family β²) will go back also to 374/373 (as in BT β² at 4:5a and the Glagolitic fore-text of L at 4:5a); and 343 of S – to 364 (as in Z at 4:5a and the fore-text of S at 4:5a). Since in 4:5b “other rivers” have to be nine (or according to mss TB – ten) less than in 4:5a, the most probable original numbers are 373 or 374 for the beginning and 364 for the end of the verse.

¹⁴⁰ Srezn, 2.722.

¹⁴¹ Bohak, “Gematrias.”

4:7G/5S. Alphas/Alpheia ..., etc. There are three rivers in G and nine or ten (mss BT) in S. Whereas G has only one variant (Ἀλφίας καὶ Ἄβυρος καὶ ὁ Γηρικός), discrepancies abound in the Slavonic versions, mostly obvious corruptions (see comm.).

4:5S. And it [the sea] does not sink. That is why he kindled his heart (Занеже раждєгъ срѣдѣе его). “God kindled his heart [belly β]” according to BTβ. CS занєжє here has to be translated not as “because,” but according to its rare meaning “that is why” (Gk ἐφ’ οἷς; cf. Supr 480.4). S especially emphasizes the Serpent’s dependence on God, the motif missing in G. Family β also contains an expansion, explaining that “if the serpent did not drink one cubit from the sea, there was no dry land on earth”. It also says that “as deep as the depth of Hades is the depth of the belly of that serpent.” Hades is not mentioned in S above, thus this latter addition must be a rewriting of 5:2–3S.

COMMENTARY

The ecological function of Serpent-Hades is the only expanded element of its description. The issue is examined in detail in the commentary to the previous chapter.

4:6–7G; 4:4–5S. Sea. Several bodies of water are mentioned in 3 Baruch: river (2:1G), sea (4:3S/4:6G), lake (10:2, 6–9). See “the vast Ocean, much bigger than the earthly Ocean” in the first heaven of 2 En. (J) 3:1–2; “much water suspended” in the first heaven of T. Levi 2:7; and the “upper waters” (Heb מִיִּם עֲלִיוֹנִים) of Rabbinic tradition (Gen. Rab. 4.3; b. Hag. 15a; b. Taan. 10a) which derive from the biblical “waters above the firmament” (Gen 1:7; Ps 148:4; cf. Jub. 2:4; 1 En. 54:8; T. Levi 2:7; Rev 4:6; 15:2; 2 En. 3:3 (J), 4:2).¹⁴² Cf. b. Hag. 12b: “What is meant by ‘heavens’ [Heb שָׁמַיִם]? R. Yose bar Hanina said, ‘It means, the place where there is water [Heb מִיִּם שָׁשֵׁם].’” The motif of celestial water was also central for Gnostic, Hekhalot, and Mandaean visionary practices.¹⁴³

However, all these must probably be relevant for the celestial “lake” of 10:2 and 6–9, while here a terrestrial or cosmic sea must be meant, since it is filled by terrestrial rivers. The supposed contradiction in the image of the celestial Serpent-Hades drinking from the earthly sea can be resolved, if the unified cosmic water system is meant (see Introduction: Cosmology). See the following:

¹⁴² Cf. Enuma Elish 4.139–140. Heavenly ocean may be meant also by מְבוּל in Ps 29:10; cf. 104:13; 148:4, the idea paralleled in Egyptian and Mesopotamian sources (Keel, Symbolism, 36).

¹⁴³ See Morray-Jones (Transparent, esp. 34–53), referring also to Stroumsa “Aher,” 2.817; Deutsch, “Dangerous” and idem, Guardians, 111–123.

The waters of the Jordan are to give him [Behemoth] drink, since the waters of the Jordan surround the whole earth [some mss have a secondary reading: “land of Israel”], the half above the earth and the half below. (Pirqe R. El. 11.5)

This sea may also be identical to the uncrossable River-Ocean of 2:1G, which is located between celestial and terrestrial realms. Rivers flow to it from earth, while the celestial Serpent drinks from the other coast. Other models are also plausible; cf. earthly Paradise connected directly to the third heaven (2 En. 8:4 and 42:3) or a visionary observing terrestrial realia from the seventh heaven (as in Apoc. Abr. 19ff; Apoc. Paul 13; 15; 21; Gnostic Apoc. Paul 19–20; cf. Cicero, Resp. 6.19).

Cubit. Gk πῆχυς / CS ΛΑΚΥΤΛ is normally a measure of length and not of volume (cf. 3:6). Thus, here it may mean not any specific measure but just “a small amount” as is the case in Matt 6:27. Anyway, this reading is also problematic, since the question of the next verse supposes an amount large enough to “finish the sea.” The only reasonable interpretation would be that the sea diminishes in one cubit along the whole length of the coastline (in this case, it is a length measure). In 6:7 modius, a length measure, is also used as a surface measure (see comm. ibid.).

4:7G-5S. Rivers. G has “360 rivers.” 360 is a gematria for Heb רקקן (from Gk δράκων).¹⁴⁴ There is no need to assume “numerical value of Greek words transliterated into the Hebrew alphabet,”¹⁴⁵ since this Greek loan-word is well attested already in tannaitic Hebrew (m. Abod. Zar. 3.3; t. Abod. Zar. 5.6).¹⁴⁶ For other gematrias in 3 Baruch, see comm. to 4:10 and 5:3. Evidence for the use of Hebrew letters may be found also in the list of rivers in 4:7G/4:5S (see below). See the Hebrew-Greek notariqon/gematria techniques in Rev 13:18 and possibly 21:17; Sib. Or. 1:326–330; 5:12–51; Asc. Mos. 9:1. This method was popular also in general Hellenistic culture (for a parody on isopsephy-gematria see Lucian, Alex. 11).¹⁴⁷

The reconstructed reading of S most probably has a total number of 373 or 374 rivers (with many discrepancies; see Notes) consisting of 9 or 10 (mss TB) named and 364 “others.” The numbers in both G and S are close to the number of celestial gates (365) in 6:13G. All must be connected to the number of days in a solar year, which might differ in different systems. The ¹⁴⁴ Bohak, “Gematrias,” 119.

¹⁴⁵ Ibid.

¹⁴⁶ Cf. Schlüter, Deraqon.

¹⁴⁷ Cf. Collins, “Numerical,” 116.

ancient Near Eastern solar year of 360 days (consisting of twelve months of thirty days each) conforms to G. The year of 1 Enoch, Jubilees, and Qumran has 364 days as a number of “other” rivers in S (1 En. 72–75; 82:11; Jub. 6:32; cf. the Psalms Scroll from Cave 11 [11Q5] 27.6–7 and Levi Apocryphon [4Q540] 1.2). The number 354 of ms L corresponds to the number of days of a lunar year.

Some rivers that are “primary of all” (Gk οἱ πρῶτοι πάντων)¹⁴⁸ are named. There are three such rivers in G and nine in S. See also the “seven rivers on the earth larger than all the rivers,” which pour their waters to the Great and Erythrean Seas (1 En. 77:5–7).¹⁴⁹ There are characteristics that may have connected the “primary” rivers to the rivers of Paradise of Gen 2:10–14 (cf. Josephus, Ant. 1.13; Philo, Quaest. Gen. 1.12–13; Jerome to Gen 2:12; Gen. Rab. 16.1–4), since (1) they are followed by the description of the Tree of Paradise (see introductory comm. to “Tree of Knowledge” [4:8Gff; 4:6Sff]), and (2) the whole account of extant 3 Baruch here refers to the third heaven, where Paradise is located according to 2 En. 8:1; Apoc. Mos. 37:5; and 2 Cor 12:2, 4. However, they are hardly identical to the rivers of Paradise which are four and have other names.

Below I adduce extant names from the Greek version (G), significant variants of Slavonic (S)¹⁵⁰ and, when possible, a reconstruction of their Greek Vorlage, designating the manuscripts upon which they are based (*G). If we ignore the initial alpha in some Slavonic names, which is absent in their G counterparts, we can presume that the list may go back to a Greek acrostic.¹⁵¹ However, it is difficult to find a Greek alphabetic order for the last two names, unless they were interchanged. Howard Jacobson assumed that in the Hebrew alphabetical order, alpha could be added to Greek transliterations of original Hebrew forms (cf. MT and LXX in Josh 20:28; 1 Kgs 11:8; Ezek 20:29), while initial waw and het expected in the sixth and eighth names could be omitted according a well attested pattern of transliteration (Esth 1:9 and passim).¹⁵² In this case, the original acrostic must have been emended: a Hebrew equivalent to the fifth name (Ephrat) is not found, while it perfectly corresponds to the Greek order.

¹⁴⁸ Either in time of creation or in importance (Gaylord, Baruch, 666).

¹⁴⁹ Cf. a medieval source on the “great dragon” lying between nine rivers (התנים הגדול) חשע יאורין אינון דאיהו רביץ בנייהו; Zohar 2.34b).

¹⁵⁰ Based on the table prepared by Gaylord (Slavonic, 37).

¹⁵¹ So Turdeanu, “Baruch.” The conclusion is not due only to multiple discrepancies which enable to choose a name with an appropriate initial letter in every case.

¹⁵² Jacobson, “Note,” 201–2.

G	S	*G
Ἀλφίας	αλῆφεια LS αλφουβαρα T та φα B αφια N αλπιη Z ελφα PVID	*Αλφειας LT	A 𐀀
Ἄβυρος	ависъ L авоуръ T авириа S авариа N авиръ Z авири PVID	*(A)βυρος T	B 𐀁
Γηρικός	агирѣникъ L тигръ TB горника S агореникъ N горникъ Z сиринакъ PVID	*(A)γηρενικος LSNZ	Γ 𐀂
	доунавъ LTNPID доуна B доунаи SZ	Δανούβιος al.	Δ 𐀃
	ѣφратъ/εφратъ al. жратъ B епратъ Z	Ἐυφράτης al.	E 𐀄
	аризъ L зифонъ T жиχонъ B азафа S азаватъ N заѡъ/затъ PVID	*Ζηφον T or *Αζαφα S / Αζαβατ B	Z 𐀅
	матипоуъ L зифис T зови B зетеоуъ S зетноуъ N изитиоуъ P изитноуъ V D изитноуъ I	*Ηεζητιους PVID or *Ζητιους SN	H 𐀆
	аринеоуъ L аринесе T ариса" B неоуъ SN индоуъ Z ниринесъ P норинесъ V носиринесъ Z норию I	Ινδός or *Αρινεους LT	Θ 𐀇
	пелкоури L φοуреселъ T ѡурисел B перикоула S тигръ N проколъ Z ферепоъ PD ферепотъ V фερεω" I	*Θουρισελος TB or Τιγρις N	I 𐀈
	перегоуъ T пероучи" B

The numerous discrepancies indicate that we have a corrupted text; this, in turn, makes it difficult to identify the rivers. Among known rivers there are Euphrates and Danube (it is not called Istros here); some versions (probably secondary) have Indus and Tigris.

The first river Alphias/Alpheia[s] corresponds to Alpheios of Peloponnesus which appears in similar Greek and Roman lists. Gēricos/Agērenik[os] may refer to Anatolian Grēnikos of the same lists. Hesiod mentions both Alpheios and Grenikos, as shown below. The former also appears at the beginning of the list, immediately after the Nile. Structurally the lists are similar too (italics are mine):

3 Bar. 4:5S

Hesiod, Theogony 334–70

the Lord made 373 rivers:

and the first river is Alpheia[s] [Alphias G], the second Abyr[os] [Byros G], the third Agerenik[os] [Gerikos G],¹⁵⁴ the fourth Dounab, the fifth Ephrat, the sixth Zēphon, the seventh Ēzētius, the eighth Indus, the ninth Thourēselos.

And there are 364 others.

See also Hyginus:

From Oceanus and Tethys [were born] the Oceanides ... Of the same descent are Rivers: Strymon, Nile, Euphrates, Tanais, Indus, Cephisus, Ismenus, Axenus, Achelous, Simoeis, Inachus, Alpheus, Thermodon, Scamandrus, Tigris, Maeandrus, Orontes. (Fabulae, Intr.)

Both Alpheios and Grenikos would only have been considered “primary” in the Greek world. The Nile and Jordan and other major rivers known also to Greeks do not appear in the list at all. It is possible that these facts attest to the location of at least one of the editorial stages of the book. Alternatively, our author or an editor may refer to what he considers mythological rivers in the outmost parts of earth, like Plato’s four main rivers, Ocean, Acheron, Pyriphlegethon, and Stygian (Phaed. 111c–113c). Note James’ idea that the third river is “γυρικός, which might mean the Ocean surrounding the earth.”¹⁵⁵ It is a form unattested elsewhere, probably derived by James from Gk γυρόω. Following this model, ms L’s reading for the second river Abyros – אביסל “Abyssos” may reflect the original Gk Ἀβυσσος “abyss.”¹⁵⁶

Tethys bare to Ocean swirling Rivers:¹⁵³

Nile, and Alpheios, and deep-swirling Eridanus, Strymon, and Meander, and the fair stream of Ister, and Phasis, and Rhesus, and the silver eddies of Achelous, Nessus, and Rhodius, Haliacmon, and Heptaporus, Grenikos, and Aesepus, and holy Simois, and Peneus, and Hermus, and Caicus fair stream, and great Sangarius, Ladon, Parthenius, Euenus, Ardescus, and divine Scamander < ... >

[the list contains totally 75 rivers]

These are the eldest daughters that sprang from Ocean and Tethys; but there are many besides. For there are 3,000 neat-ankled daughters of Ocean ...

¹⁵³ Potamoi, river-gods.

¹⁵⁴ ē is used here to transliterate Gk η and CS и, in the Middle Greek pronounced as [i].

¹⁵⁵ “Baruch,” lx.

¹⁵⁶ So Turdeanu, “Baruch,” 28.

Excursus: Tree of Knowledge (4:8–17G; 4:6–17S)

GREEK

⁸ And I said,

“I pray you, show me which is the tree that led Adam astray.”

And the angel said, “It is the vine, which the angel Sammael planted, for which the Lord God became angry and cursed him and his plant.

That is why he did not permit Adam to touch it, and that is why the devil being envious deceived him through his vine.”

⁹ And I Baruch said, “Since also the vine has been the cause of such great evil, and is under the judgment of the curse of God, and [was] the destruction of the first created, how is it so in use now?”

¹⁰ And the angel said, “Rightly you ask. When God caused the Flood on earth, and destroyed all flesh and 409,000 giants, and the water rose 15 cubits above the heights, the water entered Paradise and destroyed every flower; but it removed the shoot of the vine completely and brought it outside.

¹¹ And when earth appeared out of the water, and Noah came out of the ark, he began to plant [some] of the found plants.

¹² And he found also the shoot [of the vine]; and having taken it, he considered in his mind, ‘What is it?’

SLAVONIC

⁶ And I Baruch said to the angel, “Show me the tree which deceived Adam.”

⁷ And the angel told me, “When God made the Garden and commanded Michael to gather 200,003 angels to plant the Garden, Michael planted the olive and Gabriel, the apple; Uriel, the nut; Raphael, the quince; and Satanael, the vine. And similarly all the angels planted the Garden in order.”

⁸ And I Baruch said to the angel,

“Show me the tree through which the serpent led Eve and Adam astray.”

And the angel told me, “[It is] the vine, which Satanael planted. Because of this God cursed him and his fruit.”

⁹ And I Baruch said to the angel, “If God cursed the vine, then how can it be in use now?”

¹⁰ And the angel told me, “Rightly you ask me. When God made the Flood on earth, and he destroyed 409,000 giants, and the water rose above the high mountains, 15 cubits above the mountains, and the water entered Paradise and took all flowers, and brought out one shoot from the vine.

¹¹ And when the water of the Flood withdrew, and the dry land appeared, and Noah went out from the ark

¹² and found the vine lying on the ground,

And I came and spoke to him about it.

¹³ And he said, "Shall I plant it, or what [shall I do]? Since Adam was destroyed because of it, let me not also encounter God's anger because of it." And saying these things he prayed that God would reveal to him what he should do about it.

¹⁴ And when he had completed the prayer of 40 days, and having begged much and wept, he said,

'Lord, I entreat you to reveal to me what I should do about this plant.'

¹⁵ And God sent his angel Sarasaël, and told him, "Arise, Noah, and plant the shoot [of the vine], for thus the Lord says, 'Its bitterness shall be changed into sweetness, and its curse shall become a blessing,

{and that which is begotten from it shall become the blood of God; and as the human race obtained condemnation through it, so again through Jesus Christ the Emmanuel [and] in him is the receipt of the future invocation, and the entry into Paradise.}

¹⁶ Know therefore, Baruch, that as Adam through this tree obtained condemnation, and was divested of the Glory of God, so also now the men drinking insatiably the wine which is begotten of it, make a transgression worse than Adam, and become far from the Glory of God, and commit themselves to the eternal fire. For [no] good comes through it.

¹⁷ For those who drink it in excess do these things: brother does not have mercy on his brother, nor father on his son, nor children on their parents, but through the calamity of wine come into being all [these]: murders, adulteries, fornications, perjuries, thefts, and such like. And nothing good is established through it."

¹³ he thought to himself, saying, "Shall I plant it in the ground? I know that Adam ate from this and was exiled from the Garden. If I plant it, what if God will become angry with me?"

¹⁴ And he knelt down and fasted 40 days praying, and he wept and said,

'Lord, if I plant from this, what will happen?'

¹⁵ And God sent his angel Sarasaël, and he told him, "Arise, Noah, and plant the vine, and alter its name, bitterness to sweetness;

and for that one it was for death, but for you it will be for life.'

¹⁶ "But beware, Baruch: The tree still possesses its evil.

¹⁷ If they drink wine in excess, they do all evil: brother does not have mercy on his brother, nor father on his son, nor son on his father. And from the evil of wine come into being murder and adultery, fornication and [false] oaths, and theft. And how much evil comes into being because of wine!"

NOTES

4:6–7S. This important episode must have been omitted in G due to homoeoarchon.

Mss LT most probably begin with an interpolation derived primarily from Gen 2:7; 21–22:¹⁵⁷ “And having come down, the Lord stood in the midst of Paradise, where he ordered four angels to bring dust of earth. And when they brought [it] to him, he received the dust and created a man from ground. And God said, “What does the creation of my hands lack?” And he breathed in him the breath of life, and he became alive. And having caused him to sleep again, he took out of him one rib and made Eva to be for him for help.” East Slavic mss TB add the story of Sataniel’s refusal to venerate Adam at the end of 4:7: “And he said to Michael, “Sound the trumpet for the angels to assemble and bow down to the work of my hands which I made.” And the angel Michael sounded the trumpet, and all the angels assembled, and all bowed down to Adam order by order. But Sataniel did not bow down and said, “To mud and dirt I will never bow down.” And he said, “I will establish my throne above the clouds and I will be like the highest.” Because of that, God cast him and his angels from his face just as the prophet said, “These withdrew from his face, all who hate God and the glory of God.” And God commanded an angel to guard Paradise. And they ascended in order to bow down to God. Then having gone, Sataniel found the serpent and he made himself into a worm.¹⁵⁸ And he said to the serpent, “Open (your mouth), consume me into your belly.” And he went through the fence into Paradise, wanting to deceive Eve.¹⁵⁹ But because of that one I was cast out from the glory of God. And the serpent ate him and went into Paradise and found Eve and said, “What did God command you to eat from the food of Paradise?” And Eve said, “From every tree of Paradise we eat; from this tree God commanded us not to eat.” And having heard Sataniel told her, “God begrudged the way you live lest you be immortal; take and eat and you will see and give it to Adam.” And both ate and the eyes of both were opened and they saw that they were naked.”¹⁶⁰ Similar accounts appear in the Armenian and Georgian Life of Adam and Eve; Vita 13–15; Gos. Bart. 4; Coptic Enthronement of Michael; Cave of Treasures 2.10–24; Quran 2:31–39; 7:11–18; 15:31–48; 17:61–65; 18:50; 20:116–123; 38:71–85.¹⁶¹

4:7–14S. The text of ms L cuts off in the middle of the word “Michael” (changing the sense from “ordered Michael” to “ordered me” – повелѣ ми) and reflects these verses only fragmentarily.

4:7S. 200,003 angels. Reading of the family β (SNZ); 200,000 PVI; 10,000 D. om. L; 353 B; 350 T.

¹⁵⁷ Gaylord, Slavonic, 45.

¹⁵⁸ Cf. Apoc. Abr. 31:5 where Azazel (Satan) is called “warm.”

¹⁵⁹ Cf. the serpent entering through the “fence of paradise” with the same purpose in Acts Thom. 32.

¹⁶⁰ Translation by Gaylord (“How Satanael,” 305).

¹⁶¹ See Gaylord, “Satanael;” Stone, “Fall of Satan;” Anderson, “Exaltation of Adam;” Orlov “Flooded,” 194.

4:7S. Michael planted the olive. Ms T: “Michael brought the olive and planted it. That is why Michael was called merciful” (word-play of ἔλατιον and ἔλεος; cf. 15:1S and comm. ibid.).¹⁶² Michael is called “merciful and long suffering” in 1 En. 40:9.

4:7S. Raphael, the quince. CS КИДОНИЕ – Gk κυδωνιον μῆλον or κυδωνεα “quince tree.” The Greek word is attested to be rendered also by CS ГДЮНІА, used also for “fig” (see next note).¹⁶³

4:7S. Mss of the family β have Raphael and Phanuel as the last two angels. Mss S and Z insert one more angel before Satanael. S has: “Sarazael, pomegranate [CS КАЛИНА]” (on Z see below). CS КАЛИНА here must not be identical to its modern Russian meaning (“guelder rose,” “snowball bush”). All trees mentioned are Mediterranean fruit-trees. CS КАЛИНА is attested at least once as the equivalent of pomegranate in the list of three fruits brought by the spies in Num 13:24: ПЛОДЪ ДРЕВНѢИ КАЛИНЫ ГДЮНІА И ГРОЗДІА “tree fruits of pomegranate, fig and grape.”¹⁶⁴ The species were probably identified because both trees are characterized by red flowers and fruits. Ms Z adduces “Rasael, НАРАНЧА.” The fruit name here is a hapax. Other hapax legomena probably of the same root are attested: (1) НАРАНДЖА “orange,”¹⁶⁵ and (2) НАРАНѢ, rendering Gk κόλλα “glue.”¹⁶⁶

Vine. Family β adds: “For at first his name in former times was Satanael.”

Planted Paradise in order. Family β has instead: “planted Paradise and various trees.”

4:8. The tree that led Adam astray / the tree through which the serpent deceived Eve and Adam (τὸ ξύλον τὸ πλανήσαν τὸν Ἀδάμ / ДРЪВО ЕЖЕ ПРѢЛЪСТИ ЗМІИА ІЕВГОУ И АДАМА). Gk πλενάω is translated by its constant equivalent CS прѣлѣщати. Cf. “The great Dragon, the old Serpent, he that is called Devil and Satan, who leads the whole world astray [ὁ πλανῶν τὴν οἰκουμένην ἴλην]” (Rev 12:9).

4:8G. That is why ... and that is why ... (ἐν ᾧ καὶ διὰ τοῦτο ... καὶ διὰ τοῦτο ...). Both Gk ἐν ᾧ and διὰ τοῦτο are translated here in causal and not temporal meaning, which is also plausible: “when ... when ...” In the former case, the devil and plant were cursed initially, and that was the reason of the prohibition. In the latter, they were cursed as a result of Adam’s transgression. Gk ἐν ᾧ καὶ διὰ τοῦτο may also mean “because of this [devil] and because of that [his plant].” With a different sentence division the phrase ἐκατηράσατο αὐτὸν καὶ τὴν φυτείαν αὐτοῦ ἐν ᾧ may be read also as “cursed him and his plant with him.”

4:8G. Sammael. Emended from Σαμουηλ “Samuel” (in both mss) according to 9:7. These two forms interchange also in Acts Andr. Matt. 24 (see comm. ad loc.).

4:8S. The vine, which Satanael planted. Family β has instead: “Listen, Baruch. Firstly, the tree is the vine, secondly, the tree is sinful desire which Satanael spread over Eve and ¹⁶² Gaylord, Slavonic, 47.

¹⁶³ Mikl, 286.

¹⁶⁴ Srezn, 1.1182.

¹⁶⁵ Vasmer, Etimologicheskij, 3.43.

¹⁶⁶ Srezn, 2. 317.

Adam, and because of this God has cursed the vine because Satanael had planted it, and by that he deceived the first created Adam and Eve.”

4:8. Cursed him and his plant / cursed him and his fruit. In contrast to English both Greek and Slavonic do not distinguish between animate and inanimate pronouns. Thus, S may have: “it [vine] and its fruit.”

4:10S. Earth. T adds: “he drowned every firstling.”

All flowers. ВЕЧЕ ЦВЕТЪ. Or “all blooming.”

4:13S. Shall ... garden. Family β has instead: “This is truly the vine which Satanael planted in the middle of the garden, by which he deceived Eve and Adam; because of this God cursed it and its seed.”

4:13–14S. If ... knelt down. Om. L.

4:15S. Alter its name, bitterness to sweetness; and for that one it was for death, but for you it will be for life. So according to ms T (and ms B with slight variations). Ms L and the best readings of family β have “and [I will – β] alter its name, and change it for the good one.” The former variant is the most similar to G. Since, in distinction to G, the verse in S has no Christian elements, it, very probably, reflects a better Greek version. Gaylord proposes a reconstruction of the first clause based on both main variants: “its bitterness is changed to sweetness” (if CS прѣмѣни нма “change name” was a corruption of a CS participle прѣмѣнима “be changed” rendering Gk μεταβληθήσεται of G), thus, even more close to G.¹⁶⁷

4:16G. So also now the men drinking insatiably the wine which is begotten of it (καὶ οἱ νῦν ἄνθρωποι τὸν ἐξ αὐτοῦ γεννώμενον οἶνον ἀπλήστως δρῶντες). Ryssel emends Gk δρῶντες to πίνοντες “drinking.”¹⁶⁸ Gk δράω may mean “do” substituting a previous verb in order to avoid a repetition. In this case, it may attest to a lacuna in the verse. The verb may also mean “sacrifice,” and thus the idolatrous wine would be meant (cf. b. Abod. Zar. 30b and passim).

4:17G. Through the calamity of wine (διὰ τῆς πτώσεως τοῦ οἴνου). Ryssel suggests “drinking of wine:” Gk πτώσεως instead of πόσεως.¹⁶⁹ However, there is no need for an emendation: the mirror combination “wine of calamity” is known from LXX Ps 60(59):5(3); cf. “cup of calamity” (Isa 51:17, 22). An intentional word-play on the meanings of πτώσεως and πόσεως is also possible.

4:17G. For [no] good comes through it. Gk πᾶν γὰρ ἀγαθὸν δι’ αὐτοῦ [οὐ] γίνεται. The conjecture was suggested by James.¹⁷⁰ Gk οὐ has probably dropped out. Otherwise the verse reads: “For all good comes through it.” In fact, both readings raise contradictions with the context: the former with 4:9, and the latter – with its immediate continuation.

¹⁶⁷ Gaylord, Slavonic, 63.

¹⁶⁸ Ryssel, “Baruch,” 451.

¹⁶⁹ Ryssel, “Baruch,” 452.

¹⁷⁰ James, “Baruch,” lxii.

4:17. Brother does not have mercy on his brother. Cf. Mark 13:12. The phrase may go back to the biblical use of “brother” as “another” in combinations like Heb אִישׁ אֶת אֶל־בִּ-אָחִיו / Gk ἄνθρωπος ... τὸν ἀδελφόν αὐτοῦ (cf., e.g., MT and LXX in Exod 32:27; Lev 25:5; and passim): “One man does not have mercy on another.” See further 1 En. 100:1–2; Hesiod, Op., 181–189.

COMMENTARY

Interpolation Theory

The story of the Tree of Knowledge as the Vine is an intrusion in the description of the Beasts. This may indicate that it was interpolated (although at some early stage, since both G and S have it).¹⁷¹ However, whether the decision to insert this account here has been made by the author or a later editor, there are some justifications for uniting the images of the Beasts with the Tree of Knowledge and the subsequent narrative including the deceiving serpent, wine, etc.¹⁷² In addition to considerations of the narrative structure (1–2), the Cosmic Serpent and the deceiving serpent of Eden, both closely associated with Satan, may be identified (3); Beasts are known to be connected to Eden where the Tree is located (4), probably even as its guards (5); there are special connections between serpents and vine (6); both Beasts and wine are elements in depictions of the eschatological banquet (7).

1. Rivers and Tree. Harlow suggests that rivers (if these are recognized as rivers of Paradise; see comm. to “rivers” in 4:7G–5S above) may serve as a connection, following the narrative order of Gen 2, where the account of the Tree is adjacent to the description of the four rivers.

2. The Serpent and the Flood. There is a connection between the Flood mentioned below and the Serpent with its role in the cosmic hydrosystem. The celestial Serpent prevents a new flood from happening in 4:5Sβ above ¹⁷¹ For interpolation theories for separate fragments of the account – 4:10–15; 4:15 or 4:15b – see comm. ibid.

¹⁷² Cf. Himmelfarb’s proposal to connect the Adamic account to the prologue: “the destruction of the temple is intimately connected to larger questions of God’s expectations of humanity and human failure from the beginning of history”; in both Apoc. Abr. and 3 Bar. “the sin of Adam figures ... another response to the destruction of the temple” (Himmelfarb, Ascent, 66).

(as Leviathan does in Pesiq. R. 48.3; see introductory comm. to the previous chapter, 3.1).¹⁷³

3. Cosmic Serpent and Deceiving Serpent. Probably the image of the serpent, either the Cosmic Serpent-Hades of 4:3–6; 5:1–2, or the “serpent that deceived Adam and Eve” (4:8S; cf. 9:7) is the unifying factor in two narratives. Both may be identified with Sammael/Satanael. On the one hand, Serpent-Hades shares many features with “devouring Satan” (cf. Azazel of Apoc. Abr. 31:2–5) and on the other, it “eats earth like grass” (4:3S) according to the punishment of the deceiving serpent in Gen 3:14. The serpent of Paradise was identified with Satan in Wis 2:24; 2 En. 31; Apoc. Abr. 23; Apoc. Sedr. 4; Vita 12; Rev 12:9; 20:2; etc. When not identified completely, they are usually very closely associated (as in 3 Bar. 9:7; see comm. to 4:8). The identity of all three figures appearing in 3 Baruch – Cosmic Serpent, serpent of Paradise, and Satan – is made explicit in Revelation: “The great dragon, the old serpent, he that is called Devil and Satan, who leads the whole world astray” (Rev 12:9; cf. the same wording in 3 Bar. 4:8G). The same with the Crooked Serpent Leviathan. “O Belial, dragon, apostate, Crooked Serpent, rebel against God” (Ignatius, Phil. 11). Leviathan is an evil angel in medieval Jewish tradition (Eliyahu Rab. 2.61–62; Moreh Neb. 3.23; Kimhi to Isa 27:1). It is identified with “Evil”/Satan in mystical works (Maarekhet 8.102–103b; Nefesh Ha-Hayyim 1.17; Zohar passim). Satan was identified with the Serpent even through etymological speculations: Gk σατανάς from Heb סָטָן (sata) and נָחָשׁ (naas), “deviative serpent” (Justin Martyr, Dial. 103; cf. Irenaeus, Haer. 21.2).

4. Beasts and Paradise. Moreover, Leviathan and Behemoth are also connected to Paradise in various other sources: “Behemoth, who is held on a mountain a waste wilderness named Duidain, on the east of the Garden where the elect and righteous dwell” (1 En. 60:8). Leviathan inserts his head to Paradise: “If he did not put his head in to the garden of Eden, not a single creature could stand his smell” (b. B. Bat. 75a). Behemoth drinks from the river of Eden (Lev. Rab. 22.9–10; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 6.1; Pesiq. R. 16.4; 48.3; Tan. Pinehas 12; Num. Rab. 21.18; cf. above). God sports every day with Leviathan (b. Abod. Zar. 3b) or with Behemoth and Wild Ox in Eden (Midr. Kohen 26).

¹⁷³ The next image introduced in the vision, the sun screened by the Sun Bird, may also be connected to the Tree. Cf. so called Late Assyrian Tree iconography with its constant core element: the Tree and a winged sun disk above it; see Lambert, “Trees,” 438f; Parpola, “Assyrian,” 164f. All three elements are united in the “tree-eagle-serpent theme” of the Mesopotamian Etana myth (esp. Tablet II); see ibid., 197.

Notice also that Hell and Paradise are situated side by side in 2 En. 8–10; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 30; Eccl. Rab. 7.14; Midr. Tannaim 224.

5. Guardians of the Tree. The connection of the World Tree with serpents is a universal motif. Serpents guard trees in numerous mythological accounts. In a Sumerian myth Gilgamesh has to kill “the snake that knows no charm” in order to gain access to the Hullupu-Tree of the goddess Inana. A great serpent guards the tree of the golden apples of the Hesperides (Hesiod, Theog. 333ff; Euripides, Herc. Fur. 394ff; Apollonius of Rhodes, Argon. 4.1396ff; Ovid, Met. 4.631–48; and passim). Another serpent-guarded tree appears in the accounts of the Argonauts (Apollonius of Rhodes, Argon., 4.121–66; Ovid, Met. 7.149–56). Herodotus mentions winged serpents as divinely appointed guardians of the spice-bearing trees of Arabia (Hist. 3.110). Dragon guards the Peridexion tree in the Greek Physiologus. The motif of snake-encircled trees is well attested in Hellenistic iconography.¹⁷⁴

The Beasts of 3 Baruch may be located near Paradise in order to prevent access to the Tree of Eden and higher abodes (as Cherubs “guard the way to the Tree of Life” in Gen 3:2). Similarly a beast (“serpent” in Vita) threatens Seth and Eve on their way to the Tree of Life in Paradise (Vita 37–39; Apoc. Mos. 10–12). The Serpent of Eden is in fact its guard in Gos. Barn. 40.

Some lost exegetical motifs based on Gen 49:17 and Eccl 10:8 might have been conflated with the mythological images of guarding serpents: “who breaches a fence, will be bitten by a serpent” (Eccl 10:8; for the “fence of Paradise,” cf. Sataniel’s account in 3 Bar. 4:7S (Notes) and Acts Thom. 32; for another hypothetical proof-text from Eccl 10 see comm. to 6:16G). “A serpent by the way, a viper by the path,” to whom Dan had been compared (Gen 49:17), was interpreted in medieval mystical tradition as an ambivalent figure of a guard and a source of demonic forces, somehow connected to the wine as well:

... a minor serpent above, a rear-guard of all camps [מאסף לכל המחנות], which lurks in the ways and the paths. And from it issue armies and hosts which lurk for the sons of men on account of the sins which they ignore [כחפייהו] להו לאחורא בחר כחפייהו]. R. Hiya said, “The primeval serpent above [נחש הקדמוני לעילא], before it was tempered with gladdening wine is a ‘serpent by the way’ [Gen 49:17].” (Zohar, Vayehi 704).

On infernal serpent-like gate keepers see in comm. to 3:5: 3.1.4 above.

¹⁷⁴ See, e.g., Armstrong, Paradise, 26–27, pls. 4a–d.

6. Serpent and Vine. “Wine ... bites like a snake” (Prov 23:32). Angel Naas (from Heb שָׂרָפָן “serpent”), that seduced Eve and Adam, was identified with the Tree of Knowledge by Justin the Gnostic in his Book of Baruch (Hippolytus, Ref. 5.21; cf. below). Serpent and vine/wine are also linked together in some mythical discourses and cult practices. In the caduceus figures sometimes one or two serpents entwine around the tree.¹⁷⁵ The Sumerian libation vase of Gudea (circa 2025 BCE) has such an image as well as an inscription to the (probably chthonic) deity Ningizzida, entitled “Lord of the True Tree [or Tree of Life]” and known also as a master of the watery abyss, whose guardians were the serpent and the serpent dragon and whose consort was Geshtinanna, the “Celestial Vine.”¹⁷⁶ Dionysus, the god of wine and the vine had chthonic origins having been born to Persephone in the form of a serpent. Both snakes and vine are among his main attributes (cf. also satyr-like creatures in 3 Bar 2–3 above). As the Serpent above, he is known as a “man-destroyer” (ἀνθρωπορροαίστης) or “raw meat eater” (ὠμῆστής; raw flesh of victims was supposedly eaten during the Bacchic orgies). The Greek serpent-god known as Good Daemon (ἄγαθὸς δαίμων) was closely associated with a wine drinking ritual (see Theophrastus, On Drunkennes [Peri Methēs] and Philonides, De Unguentis et Coronis apud Athenaeus, Deipn. 15.48). The snakes’ addiction to the undiluted wine is discussed in b. Abod. Zar. 30a. Both motifs, the snake-encircled tree and the drinking snake, are united in the a Samos relief where “the feasting hero holds up a drinking horn to a snake, as it stretches down from the tree.”¹⁷⁷

7. Menu of Eschatological Banquet. Although 3 Baruch lacks the explicit motif of the eschatological banquet, it does feature common elements of this banquet – a pair of Beasts (if identified with Leviathan and Behemoth) and the “fruit of vine”. The two are united explicitly in 2 Baruch:

And Behemoth shall be revealed from his place and Leviathan shall ascend from the sea, those two great monsters which I created on the fifth day of creation, and shall have kept until that time; and then they shall be for food for all that are left. The earth also will yield its fruit ten-thousandfold and on each vine there will be a thousand branches, and each branch shall produce a thousand clusters, and each cluster produce a thousand grapes, and each grape produce a cor of wine. (2 Bar. 29:4–5)

¹⁷⁵ Similar image is widely known as snake-staffs of Hermes and Asclepius.

¹⁷⁶ Amiet, Art, 141; Parot, Sumer, 236.

¹⁷⁷ Armstrong, Paradise, 29 and pt. 4d.

“Fruit of vine” is destined for the eschatological feast promised by Jesus:

I tell you I will not drink again of this fruit of the vine until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father’s kingdom. (Matt. 26:29; cf. Mark 14:25; Luke 22:18)

He [Jesus] promised to drink of the fruit of the vine with his disciples, thus indicating both these points: the inheritance of the earth in which the new fruit of the vine is drunk, and the resurrection of his disciples in the flesh. For the new flesh which rises again is the same which also received the new cup. And he cannot by any means be understood as drinking of the fruit of the vine when settled down with his [disciples] above in a super-celestial place; nor, again, are they who drink it devoid of flesh, for to drink of that which flows from the vine pertains to flesh, and not spirit. (Irenaeus, Haer. 5.33.3)

Rabbinic texts feature wine “preserved in its grapes from the six days of Creation” (b. Ber. 34b; cf. Lev. Rab. 12, end), most probably in order to feed the righteous in the future world.

Vine Revealed

1. Vision or Conversation? The conversation takes place – at least according to the final redaction of the book – in the third heaven, where Paradise is located according to 2 En. 8:1; Apoc. Mos. 37:5; 2 Cor 12:2, 4;¹⁷⁸ and also the Syriac version and one Armenian ms (332 = Martenadaran 1500) of Jos. Asen. 22:13. Baruch is known to be “preserved until the consummation of time” (2 Bar. 76:2), and thus probably entered Paradise alive. See the same on Abimelech (Derekh Erets Zut. 1 (end); Gen. Rabbati, Haye Sarah [24.34]; cf. 2 Alphabet of Ben Sira 28b; Yalk. 2.367), who is identified with Baruch (Sifre Zut. 12; b. Moed Q. 16b; Pesiq. R. 26; Pirque R. El. 53; Abot R. Nat. B 43.122).

However, nothing is said here about Baruch entering or even watching Paradise or the Tree in it. Probably, as he was denied an access to the “highest heaven” (11:3) and did not behold the Throne of Glory (see comm. to “Baruch” in T:1 and to ch. 11), so also he only heard about the Tree. His journey to the east (where Paradise should be located according to Gen 2:8; 1 En. 32:1–3; 2 En. (J) 42:3; T. Job 40:3; 52:10; b. B. Bat. 84a) also takes place only later, in 6:1 below. The oil, which could very probably be a product of another Tree of Eden, is brought by Michael from the inaccessible higher heaven (see comm. to ch. 15). Moreover, according to 4:10G (but not S), the Tree probably does not exist any more having been “removed completely” by the Flood (see comm. ibid.).

¹⁷⁸ Although there are alternative interpretations, like that Paradise was only seen from the third heaven in 2 Enoch, or that in 2 Corinthians the unmentioned seventh heaven is meant; etc.

The verb Baruch uses in his request concerning the Tree – Gk δείκνυμι / CS показати “show” – may mean also “teach, explain,” as in both versions of 6:4, where the same verbs are used for the request followed by a verbal explanation (on the functions of Phoenix). At the same time, in 9:2, where the request about the functions of the moon is followed by a visual experience in G, Gk imperative δείξόν corresponds to CS сѣкажи “tell” (family β; probably corrupted покажи “show”) and наоучи “teach” (family α), and the subsequent revelation in S is verbal and not visual. In the Prologue Gk ὑποδείκνυμι correspond to CS сѣказати “tell” in 1:4 and 6, but to показати “show” in 1:7. This word usage of S is in accordance with the general tendency of S, which sometimes has verbal descriptions instead of visions in G: the main function of Phoenix – the view of stretching the wings before the sun – is only described in 6:4 (both G and S) and actually observed only in 7:3–5G (probably interpolated; see comm. to 7:1); moon seen in 9:1–3G is only described in 9:3S.

2. Why the Tree? In any case, the first specific thing Baruch asks to see or to hear about is the Tree (previously he asks to be shown “all things” in 4:1G). It is also the only topic proposed by Baruch himself (and not as a request for explanations to the things shown to him). This resembles Enoch’s curiosity: “I wish to know about everything, but especially about this tree” (1 En. 25:2; although there the Tree of Life is meant; cf. 25:4–6).

The knowledge of a specific plant/tree ascribed to a deity was among primary signs for a proper communication with that deity. A prayer to Hermes says: “I know your name shining in heaven, and I know all your images. I know your plant, and I know your tree ...” (Pap. London 122.1–2).¹⁷⁹ The Demeterian mystae were shown a wheat-ear: “the Athenians, when they initiate in the Eleusinia exhibit in silence to the epoptai the mighty and marvelous and most complete epoptic mystery, an ear of a cut-wheat” (Hippolytus, Ref. 5.38–41). Similarly, the vine miraculously growing in a few hours was a part of the revels of Dionysus (cf. below).¹⁸⁰

Another reason may be Baruch’s curiosity with regard to the origin of evil. The Tree account is put in the section devoted to the description of ¹⁷⁹ Kenyon, Greek Papyri, 1.116. Cf. also the Akkadian Erra Epic: “Where is the mēsu-tree, the flesh of the gods, the emblem of the King of the Univ[erse], the pure tree ... whose crown in heaven leans on the heaven of [Anu]” (Cagni 74.10–52).

¹⁸⁰ Otto, “Meaning,” 25.

heaven inhabited by Hades, an abode of the wicked. The matter of the origins and nature of evil is of primary interest in apocalyptic experiences. As the Tree is the only image requested by Baruch, the reasons for evil is the only topic introduced by Abraham (Apoc. Abr. 20:6–7; 23:14; on the origin of evil inclination see 4 Ezra 3:21; 4:30; Tg. Ps.-Jon. Gen 2:7; b. Ber. 61a; b. Kidd. 30b). Whereas in the Apocalypse of Abraham an allegorical explanation is given in a theological framework of the concept of the free will (26:1–7), 3 Baruch remains on mythological ground.¹⁸¹

3. Why the Vine? The identification of the Tree of Knowledge with the vine is not unique for 3 Baruch. However, it is the only composition that connects it with the abuse of wine and speaks about its diabolic origin.

3.1. Tree of Knowledge as Vine. In 1 Enoch the fruit of the “Tree of Wisdom” is only “like clusters of vine,” and the Tree itself is high “like the fir, and its leaves are like the carob” (32:4 Gr). The Tree of Knowledge is the vine in Apoc. Abr. 23:5. The setting there also includes a dragon (the serpent of Gen 2 identified with Azazel, whose belly serves as Hades in 31:5). The Tree was defined as the vine by R. Meir (b. Sanh. 70a) and R. Yehudah b. Ilai (Gen. Rab. 15.7; 19.8; Esth. Rab. 5); see also Epiphanius, Haer. 3.45.1.2; Palaea Historica.¹⁸² In other sources the forbidden fruit is identified with fig, apple, citron (ethrog), wheat, nut, and palm (Apoc. Mos. 20:5; b. Ber. 40a; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 20; Pesiq. R. 43; Lev. Rab. 12.1; Num. Rab. 10.2 and 8; Tg. Cant. 7:9; Tertullian, Marc. 2.2; Methodius, Symp. 2; Origen, Gen 9:20; Ps.-Tertullian, Gen. 86; Commodianus, Instruct. 3). Ginzberg suggested that the vine identification belongs to the oldest view, as the most widely spread and going back to a mythological idea that wine is the beverage of the gods.¹⁸³

There is also a connection between wine and knowledge or wisdom; the divine drink can even be a tool to intensify cognition processes:

¹⁸¹ A special interest in the Tree might have belonged to a Christian editor acquainted with a legend that the tree of the cross originated from the Tree of Knowledge (cf. Gos. Nicod 23 [= Descent 7]). However, for obvious reasons, the tree of the cross is never the vine, and the Tree of Life is more commonly found in this role (Cave of Treasures 4.2–3 et al.). Thus, our story would rather contradict this tradition.

¹⁸² Vasiliev, Anecdota, 190; see Ginzberg, Legends, 5.190–91. Cf. also Michael bringing “wine from the Garden of Eden” to Jacob in Tan. Toledot 16.

¹⁸³ Ginzberg, Legends, 5.97.

R. Hanina said, “He who allows himself wine possesses some of the characteristics of his Creator, for it is written ‘And the Lord smelled the sweet savour; and ... said ... ‘I will not again curse the ground any more for man’s sake’” [Gen 8:21]. R. Hiya said, “He who retains a clear mind under the influence of wine possesses the characteristics of the seventy elders; for the numerical value of ך” is seventy and so is also the numerical value of סוד so that when wine goes in the secret comes out.” (b. Erub. 65a; cf. b. Sanh. 38a; etc.)¹⁸⁴

“Raba said, ‘Wine and spices have made me wise’” (b. Hor. 13a-b). See also the practices of Greek philosophic symposia (ridiculed in Aristophanes’ Eq. 85–99 “bring me a jug of wine, so that I can say something smart”) and the connection, also sometimes ironic, between wine and revealing the truth in Greek and Roman sources from Alcaeus (Fr. 366) to the proverbial in vino veritas (cf. vulgoque veritas jam attributa vino est in Pliny, Nat. Hist. 14.28[22] and passim).

3.2. Significance of Vine. Vine is the “chosen tree,” as Israel is the chosen people: “from every forest of the earth and from all its trees you have chosen one vine” (4 Ezra 5:23). The Messiah is allegorized as the Vine in another vision of Baruch (2 Bar. 36–40); cf. Jesus as “the true vine” (John 15:1) and numerous vineyard and wine parables in the Gospels. The vine, as a symbol for Israel and Jerusalem (see comm. to 1:2) and Messiah, was a central motif for early Jewish and Christian iconography.¹⁸⁵ The golden vine, “the largeness and fine workmanship of which was a surprising sight to the spectators,” was among the most notable adornments of the Temple (Josephus, Ant. 15.11.3; cf. Bel. 5.5.4; Tacitus, Hist. 5.5; Ep. Arist. 70; m. Mid. 3.8). According to Josephus, Strabo describes “a golden vine of the value of five hundred talents” presented by Aristobulus to Pompey, as a specifically Jewish artifact called: “vine or garden; they call this work of art ‘Delight’” (εἴτε ἄμπελος εἴτε κῆπος τερπωλὴν ὠνόμαζον τὸ δημιουργημα; Josephus, Ant. 14.3.1[35]; cf. Pliny, Nat. Hist. 37.14). Vine leafs and grape clusters (as well as chalices and amphorae) appear on some Jewish coins from the period¹⁸⁶ as well as in the decoration of synagogues.¹⁸⁷ A vine tree is depicted on the central panel (reredos) in the synagogue of Dura-Europos. See also “a synagogue of the vine” כְּנִישְׁתָּא דְּגֻפְנָא in Sepphoris (y. Naz. 56a; or probably “a synagogue of Gophnites”).

¹⁸⁴ I thank Shani Tzoref for this parallel.

¹⁸⁵ Cf. Goodenough, Jewish, 5.102–103, n. 5; Patrich, “Golden.”

¹⁸⁶ Romanoff, “Jewish”; Goodenough, Jewish, 3.no 677–99.

¹⁸⁷ Goodenough, Jewish, 3. no. 24, 232, 477, 487–89, 516, 537, 550, 564, 619, 620, 622, etc.

3.3. Mysterial Vine. The attention paid by 3 Baruch to the vine and its fruit may be related to some Dionysian or, alternatively, anti-Dionysian context. The images of the vine (4:7–17), satyrs (2:3–3:8), serpents (4–5), and bowl (11:8–9), central for 3 Baruch, are fundamental also in Dionysian iconography.¹⁸⁸ Sataniel and Noah are Jewish counterparts of other first vine planters and inventors of wine, like Egyptian Osiris, Greek Dionysus, Roman Bacchus and Liber, and Phrygian Sabazius. Noah is also known as a recipient of mystic traditions, sometimes even as the first one (Jub. 10:10–14; Sefer HaRazim, Intr.). The similarities in cultic imagery and some practices between Jewish rituals and the cults of Dionysus and Sabazius were so noticeable that ancient authors frequently identified the two (Tacitus, Hist. 5.5; Plutarch, Quaest. Conv. 4.6.1–2; Valerius Maximus 1.3.2; Claudius Iolaus, FGH 788 F 4; Cornelius Labeo apud Macrobius, Saturanlia 1.1.8.19ff; John Lydus, De mensibus 4.53). These identifications are best understood within the framework of the known tendency of interpretatio graeca of foreign cults, but they may also attest to actual syncretistic practices of Hellenized Jews, especially before the Maccabean revolt. Several Palestinian coins from the fifth-fourth century BCE combine Dionysiac attributes with overtly Jewish imagery or inscriptions.¹⁸⁹ It is known that Dionysian mysteria, in which the vine was a primary symbol, were forced upon Jews by Hellenistic rulers: “When the feast of Dionysus came, they [the Jews of Jerusalem] were compelled to march in the procession in honor of Dionysus, wearing wreaths of ivy” (2 Macc 6:7); “Any of them [the Alexandrian Jews] who prefer to join those who have been initiated into the mysteries [of Dionysus], they will have the same civic rights as the Alexandrians” (3 Macc 2:29–30).¹⁹⁰ Some find Dionysiac influence or anti-Dionysiac polemics in the Cana story of John 2:1–11 (closely paralleled by Achilles Tatius’ account of the Dyonisiac traditions of Tyre in Adventures of Leucippe and Clitophon 2.2.1–3.3).¹⁹¹ Note also the overtly ¹⁸⁸ Cf. Goodenough, Jewish, 6.126–127.

¹⁸⁹ Cook, Religion, pl. 32, pp. 147ff; cf. Goodenough, Jewish, 1.270f and 3. no. 670.

¹⁹⁰ Cf. Picard’s ideas on the mysterial initiation as a setting of 3 Baruch, basing on the imagery of cinnamon (“Observations,” 90–91, 96; “Jet te,” 39; “Trajets,” 46). The features like crossing the river, passing the gates, groups of satyrs and choirs of birds, darkness (of Hades), frightening (of the Sun Bird), purificative ablution (of soul-birds), processions, terminology of “greater mysteries” could have also indicated some relations to Hellenistic mysterial rites.

¹⁹¹ Smith, Studies, 1.227–37.

Dionysiac iconography in the possibly Jewish “House of Dionysos” of the 3rd century CE in Sepphoris.¹⁹²

* * *

4:7S. And the angel told me, “When God made the Garden and commanded Michael to gather 200,003 angels to plant the Garden, Michael planted the olive and Gabriel, the apple; Uriel, the nut; Raphael, the quince; and Satanael, the vine. For at first his name in former times was Satanael. And similarly all the angels planted the Garden in order. The account of the angelic planting of Eden in S, although absent from G, shows evident connections to the rest of the narrative and is deeply rooted in Jewish lore as witnessed by other texts from the period.

1. Angels

1.1. Number. Mss of the family β have either 200,003 or of 200,000 angels; the numbers of family α seem to be have been corrupted (see Notes). Angelic hosts are innumerable: “thousands of thousands,” “myriads of myriads” (Dan 7:10); “can his troops be numbered?” (Job 25:3); “more than twelve legions of angels” (Matt 26:53); “myriads of his holy ones” (Jude 14); “there are twelve Zodiacs, each of thirty armies; each army, of thirty camps; each camp, of thirty legions; each legion, of thirty cohorts; each cohort, of thirty corps; and each corps of 365,000 myriads of stars entrusted to it” (b. Ber. 32b). The number of angelic hosts even “an arithmetician [Aram סופיסטא; Gk σοφιστής] cannot calculate” (Pesiq. R. 12).

The number here is unprecedented. A similar figure, but one order of magnitude below, is 22,000. This number of ministering angels, angelic hosts, and heavenly chariots is known from, e.g., Pesiq. Rab Kah. 12; Pesiq. R. 12; 21; Tan. B. 76; Mek. Bahodesh 3.¹⁹³ Orlov notes that “three” in the number 200,003 must refer to the three primary angels gathered by Michael and mentioned by name below, while a round number 200,000 resembles the number of the fallen Watchers in some Enochic accounts: 200 of 1 En. 6:6; 200 myriads in 2 En. 18:3 (here also Satanael is mentioned as their leader).¹⁹⁴ Orlov’s hypothesis is corroborated by the reading of ms ¹⁹² Netzer, Weiss, “New Evidence” and “Architectural Development.” The issue of Jewish Dionisism was recently treated by Noah Hacham (“3 Maccabees”).

¹⁹³ The Shekhinah does not rest on less than 22,000 Israelites (b. Yeb. 64a); cf. Solomon offering 22,000 cattle in 1 Kgs 8:63.

¹⁹⁴ Orlov, “Flooded,” 191–92.

B (GIM Barsov) of 2 En. 18:3, which gives a clue, containing a similarly compound number – 202 – but explaining its rationale: “Two princes [of fallen angels] and 200 following them.”¹⁹⁵

1.2. Angelic Staff. Four angels of presence appear in 1 En. 9:1 (Michael, Gabriel, Suriel, and Uriel; while the corresponding Aramaic text of 4QEn^a 1.4.6 has Michael, [Sariel/Uriel?], Raphael, and Gabriel); 40:8–9; 54:6 (Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, and Phanuel); 71:8, 9 and 12 (Michael, Raphael, Gabriel, and Phanuel); 1QM 9.12–16 (Michael, [Gabriel], Sariel, and Raphael); 1QNoah 2.4 ([Michael, Uriel/Sariel?, Ra]phael, and Gabriel); cf. Life of Adam and Eve (Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, and Uriel in Vita 56:1; Michael, Gabriel and Uriel in Apoc. Mos. 40:2).

Mss of the family β have Raphael and Phanuel (appears also in T:1) as the last two angels. Thus, this list conforms to 1 En. 40:8; 54:6. The list of the family α is typical for the Rabbinic tradition: the totally identical list appears in Pesiq. R. 44 and 46; Pirqe R. El. 4; Num. Rab. 2.10; Midr. Pss 17; 68. In Abot R. Nat. A 12 the first two names are interchanged.

Some mss have five angels instead of four (in addition to Satanael): mss S and Z insert one more angel before Satanael: Sarasael (ms S; Rasael in ms Z); he appears again in 4:15.¹⁹⁶ Five angels appeared to Hagar (Gen. Rab. 45.7; 75.4; Exod. Rab. 3.16; Tan. B. 2.10); five “ministering angels” helped R. Hanina (Cant. Rab. 1.4); five angels of destruction are mentioned (Deut. Rab. 3.11; Eccl. Rab. 4.3; Exod. Rab. 41.7; 44.8; Pirqe R. El. 45); and five angelic orders are known to Derekh Erets 2 and Midr. Konen 25 (cf. “Five Helpers” and “Five Archons” of Pistis Sophia 1.1; 5.136 et pass, possibly connected to the universally known five planets scheme¹⁹⁷ and possibly referring to the proof-text “five men of them that saw the king’s face [מראי פני המלך] of 2 Kgs 25:19). See “seven men of them that saw the ¹⁹⁵ Similarly a rationale was found in the number 318 of Gen 14:14. Abraham’s army of 318 is interpreted as three “hundreds” plus one “commander of hundred” and five “commanders of twenties” within each division of a hundred (see comm. to 5:3 below).

¹⁹⁶ On possible Uriel/Sariel/Phanuel connection, see Orlov, “Face.”

¹⁹⁷ The astronomical connection is supported by the fact that these five archons rule over 365 subordinate rulers: “He bound eighteen-hundred rulers in every aeon, and set three hundred and sixty over them, and he set five other great rulers as lords over the three hundred and sixty and over all the bound rulers, who in the whole world of mankind are called with these names: the first is called Kronos, the second Ares, the third Hermes, the fourth Aphrodite, the fifth Zeus” (Pistis Sophia 5.136). Cf. 365 gates of heaven in 6:14 below.

king's face" (Jer 52:25) and the more widespread motif of a team of seven angels.

The total number of named angels appearing in the main version of S throughout the whole book is seven: five planting angels (four angels and Satanael; 4:7S), Panuel (T:1S), and Sarasael (4:15S). The tradition of seven angels is attested in Ezekiel (9:2; cf. also seven eyes in Zech 3:9; 4:10); 1 En. 20; 81:5; 90:21–22; T. Levi 8; Apoc. Mos. 40:7; Rev 5:6; Herm. Vis. 3; Sim. 9; Origen, Cels. 6.30; Pirqe R. El. 4. Seven angelic orders are known to 1 En. 61:10; T. Levi 3.

Thus, 3 Baruch – like 1 Enoch, Apocalypse of Moses, and Revelation – may reconcile two traditions: of four (or five) angels of Presence and seven angels as heads of angelic orders. The latter number in the majority of mss includes Satanael; mss SZ add one more angel probably in order to exclude Satanael from the seven. Similar combination of the two numbers is known from other sources: a four plus three angelic team in 1 En. 87:2; four Living Creatures of Rev 4:6–8 and seven spirits in 1:4; 4:5; primary four of seven archons in Origen, Cels. 6.30 (Michael, Suriel, Raphael, Gabriel).

For three or two groups of angels conveying men's prayers and virtues to Michael and their possible connections to the angels here, see introductory comm. to ch. 12.

1.3. Angels and Trees. The story of angels planting Paradise is unique. It may have an implied biblical prooftext in Isa 51:16: "I sheltered you with the shadow of my hand, planting the skies [Heb לִנְטַע שָׁמַיִם]." The verse also contains the idea of a protective shadowing, which is central in the account of the Sun Bird (3 Bar. 6–8). A remote echo of traditions standing behind 3 Baruch may possibly be traced in Justin the Gnostic's Book of Baruch, where angels are identified with the trees of Paradise, with angel Baruch being the Tree of Life, and Naas (from Hebrew "serpent"), the Tree of Knowledge:

And the multitude of all these angels together is Paradise, he says, concerning which Moses says, "God planted a garden in Eden towards the east" [Gen 2:8], that is, towards the face of Eden, that Eden might behold the garden – that is, the angels – continually. Allegorically the angels are styled trees of this garden, and the Tree of Life is the third of the paternal angels – Baruch. And the Tree of the Knowledge of good and evil is the third of the maternal angels – Naas. (Hippolytus, Ref. 5.21)

Another interesting parallel is adduced by Orlov, who compares the account of 3 Baruch to the description found in the Book of Giants from Qumran:

... Then two of them dreamed dreams, and the sleep of their eyes fled from them and they ar[ose ...] from them and they arose [...] their eyes and come to [...] their dreams. And he said in the assembly of [his frien]ds, the Nephilin, [...] in] my dream; I have seen in this night [...] gardeners and they were watering [...] numerous roo[ts] issued from their trunk [...] I watched until tongues of fire from [...] all the water and the fire burned in all [...] Here is the end of the dream. (4Q530 II 3–12)¹⁹⁸

and to its possible parallels, the late *Midrash of Shembazai and Azael*¹⁹⁹ and the Manichean Book of Giants.²⁰⁰ Orlov convincingly notices that “both accounts seem to have three similar events that follow one another in the same sequence: the planting of the garden, the destruction of the garden, and the escape of one tree from the destruction.”²⁰¹ The “Gardeners” of these sources might have been recognized as angelic (or fallen angelic) beings too.²⁰²

2. Trees

The account of the Five Trees may be connected to two other topics, central for the book: (1) the cosmology of five heavens (especially in light of Gnostic and Manichean elaborations of the image; see comm. to ch. 11); (2) “virtues” brought by angels to Michael (11:9G and 12:5G):

2.1. Five Trees of Eden and “Incurable Folly.” There are five trees planted in the garden of Eden. According to Rabbinic law, five fruit trees (“and even of five different species” וּאִפִּילוּ מִחֻמֶּשֶׁת מִיָּנִין) are minimal for a legal defini-

¹⁹⁸ Transalction from García Martínez and Tigchelaar, Dead Sea, 2.1063.

¹⁹⁹ “... One night the sons of Shemhazai, Hiwwa and Hiyya, saw (visions) in dream, and both of them saw dreams. One saw the great stone spread over the earth ... The other (son) saw a garden, planted whole with (many) kinds of trees and (many) kinds of precious stones. And an angel (was seen by him) descending from the firmament with an axe in his hand, and he was cutting down all the trees, so that there remained only one tree containing three branches. When they awoke from their sleep they arose in confusion, and, going to their father, they related to him the dreams. He said to them: “The Holy One is about to bring a flood upon the world, and to destroy it, so that there will remain but one man and his three sons” (Milik, Enoch, 325).

²⁰⁰ “Nariman saw a gar[den full of] trees in rows. Two hundred ... came out, the trees ...” (Henning, “Book,” 52–74).

²⁰¹ Orlov, “Flooded,” 191.

²⁰² Stuckenbruck, Book, 114; and Orlov, “Flooded,” 190. For further similarities see comm. to 4:7.

tion of “garden” (m. Sot. 8.2; cf. b. Sot. 43b).²⁰³ There are significant parallels to the motif of the Five Trees ignored in previous research. Our unique account may disclose a lost “mythological” background of the theological conceptions developed by Philo, Gnostics, and Manicheans. The same number of the Trees of Eden is known to Philo:

For we read, “God planted a garden in Eden facing the sun-rising, and placed there the man whom he had moulded” (Gen 2:8). To imagine that he planted vines and olive and apple and pomegranate trees or the like, would be serious folly, difficult to eradicate. ... For they [i.e., sacred oracles] say that in the garden there are trees in no way resembling those with which we are familiar, but trees of Life, of Immortality, of Knowledge, of Apprehension, of Concept of Understanding of good and evil [ζωῆς, ἀθανασίας, εἰδήσεως, καταλήψεως, συνέσεως καλοῦ καὶ πονηροῦ φαντασίας]. (Philo, Plant. 8.32–9.36; cf. Quaest. Gen. 1.6)²⁰⁴

Gk συνέσεως φαντασία means rather “the concept of understanding” (or vice versa), than two different “plants” (as it is usually translated). In the latter case, there would be six plants. Whatever the number, the passage appears to be a polemic to the tradition behind 3 Baruch, which is defined as “incurable folly” (δυσθεράπευτος εὐθήθεια). Even the list of species is similar: “vines, or olive trees, or apple trees, or pomegranates” (“pomegranate” appears in ms S; see Notes).

The motif occurs most explicitly again in a Gnostic fragment from Deir al-Bala’izah²⁰⁵ and in the Coptic Gospel of Thomas: “For there are five trees in Paradise for you. They do not change in summer or winter, and their leaves do not fall. Whoever knows them will not taste death” (19:3–4).²⁰⁶ A hierarchy of aeons is called “Five Trees” in Pistis Sophia 1.1 and 10; 2.86; 3.95; and passim, cf. also the Untitled Text in the Bruce Codex 4. Series of five, pentads, were especially popular among Manicheans.²⁰⁷ Orlov finds a parallel to “Five Trees” in the fragments of the Manichean Book of Giants:

²⁰³ Cf. also “five trees” on which Amorite kings were hanged (Josh 10:26). For alternative numbers, cf., e.g., twelve trees of Paradise in 4 Ezra 2:18; thirty kinds of trees, which Adam took with himself leaving Paradise (Midr. Pss. 104, 445).

²⁰⁴ Cf. the righteous compared to trees: “they [mourners of Zion] might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord” (Isa 61:3) and “those that be planted in the house of the Lord will flourish in the courts of our God” (Ps 92:13).

²⁰⁵ See Kahle, Bala’izah, 1.437–477; Crum, “Coptic.”

²⁰⁶ “Five members: mind, thought, reflection, consideration, reason of the mind,” reminding the Philo’s list, appear in another text ascribed to Thomas (Acts Thom. 27). On the “five trees” in the Gospel of Thomas and the pentads of Gnostics, see, e.g., Puech, “Doctrines.”

²⁰⁷ Reitzenstein, Hellenistic, 339–340.

“... evil-intentioned ... from where ... he came. The Misguided fail to recognize the five elements, [the five kinds of] trees, the five (kinds of) animals” (frg. h).²⁰⁸ The Manichaean Psalm Book 161.17–29, introducing various pentads, opens with the statement: “For [five] are the trees that are in Paradise [...] in summer and winter” (cf. the wording of the Gospel of Thomas above). “Five Trees” along with “Five Glories from the Five Worlds” appear also in Theodore Bar Konai’s Book of Scholia.

2.2. Paradise of Virtues. The Trees of Paradise were identified as virtues in the continuation of the same fragment of Philo, the motif well developed in his works:

We must conceive therefore that the bountiful God plants in the soul as it were a garden of virtues [παράδεισον ἀρετῶν] and of the modes of conduct corresponding to each of them, a garden that brings the soul to perfect happiness. (Plant. 9.37)

Moses now indicates what trees of virtue God plants in the soul. These are the several particular virtues, and the corresponding activities, and the complete moral victories, and what philosophers call καθήκοντα or common duties. These are the plants of the garden. (Leg. All. 1.17.56–57)

But in the divine park of pleasance all plants are endowed with soul or reason, bearing the virtues for fruit ... and by the tree of life he [Moses] signifies reverence toward God, the greatest of the virtues, by means of which the soul attains to immortality; while by the tree that is cognisant of good and evil things he signifies moral prudence, the virtue that occupies the middle position, and enables us to distinguish things by nature contrary the one to the other. (Opif. 54.153–154)

“From every tree that is in the garden you may freely eat” [Gen 2:16]. He moves the soul of the man to get benefit, not from a single tree or from a single virtue but from all the virtues: for eating is a figure of soul-nourishment: and the soul is nourished by the acquisition of things noble, and the practice of things rightful. (Leg. All. 1.31.97)

See also Leg. All. 1.31.97; Gig. 1.3; Agr. 4.17.

Another case of botanic imagery that is unique in 3 Baruch is the “virtues” of 12:5G. Whereas Philo allegorizes virtues as “trees,” in 3 Baruch they are presented as “flowers.” As the trees were planted by four/five chief angels, so also the flowers (probably of these trees “bearing their fruit in the form of the virtues”, as in Opif. 56.153) are brought by “angels over the principalities” (12:3), whose names and number are not designated. For the sets of four virtues and further details, see comm. to 11:9G.

²⁰⁸ Henning, “Book,” 63; Orlov, “Flooded,” 194.

2.3. Species of Trees. As known from 2 En. 8:7, in Paradise “there is no tree without fruit.” Creation of earthly trees is mentioned separately and in connection with Eden in the Genesis accounts of Jub. 2:7; cf. 1 En. 30–32. Lists of tree species similar to 3 Baruch occur in different encounters. The olive-tree, the fig-tree, and the vine refuse to be king over the trees (Judg. 9: 8–16). The Torah is likened to the fig, the vine, flax, and wheat, while Israel is compared to all the nobler trees: the vine, fig, walnut, myrtle, olive, apple, palm, willow, and cedar (Exod. Rab. 36.1). Vine, apple, and nut nominate themselves to serve as a cross for Haman, contending that they are symbolic for Israel (Esth. Rab. 5.11; Abba Gorion 41–41; Panim Aherim 47–48; Yal. 2.1054; Aggadat Esther 60–61). The opposition of the vine to other, more “useful,” trees is found also in Gen. Rab. 36.3: “Should he [Noah] have not planted something of use [דבר אחר של תקנה], such as a young fig-shoot [יחור] or a young [olive-]shoot [גרופית]?”

Olive. CS μασλινα (Gk ἐλαία, Heb זית). The olive of Paradise is known to 2 En. (A) 8:5; Apoc. Mos. 9–12; Vita 36–39. It is identified with the Tree of Life in Apoc. Mos. 28:4; Gos. Nicod. 19 (= Descent of Christ 3); Ps.-Clementine Rec. 1.45; Hippolytus, Ref. 5.2; Origen, Cels. 6.27). Israel is compared to the olive (Jer 11:16; b. Menah. 53b). On the product of this celestial olive see comm. to ch. 15.

Apple. CS ябланы. It is not clear what fruit the so called “apple” – Heb תפוח, Gk μῆλον, Latin malum – designates in early sources. The terms may refer to any of a variety of species such as the quince, plum, peach, apricot, pomegranate, and citrus (medica malus).²⁰⁹ In 3 Baruch it is at least differentiated from quince. Most symbolic interpretations of “apple” are based on Cant 2:3 and 5; 8:5 (Cant. Rab. ad loc.; Yal. Cant. 986; Exod. Rab. 17; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 12). In distinction to 3 Baruch it was widely identified with the Tree of Knowledge (Tg. Cant. 2:5 and 7:9; Cant. 8:5).²¹⁰ Cf. Vulgate Cant 8:5 (Lat malum means both “evil” and “tree fruit,” “apple”).

Nut. CS орехъ (Gk κάρυον, Heb אגוז or בוטן). It also has a wide symbolic spectrum; see, e.g., Pesiq. R. 11; b. Hag. 15b; Cant. Rab. 6.11.

²⁰⁹ Hünemörder, “Apfel.”

²¹⁰ Although in Gen. Rab. 15 an ethrog is also called “paradise-apple.”

Quince. CS κιδωνιη (Gk κυδωνέα). Houghton argued that Biblical Heb תפוח refers to “quince.”²¹¹ However, 3 Baruch and the Mishna, already distinguish “apple” (תפוח) from “quince” (which is called in the Mishna פריש; see m. Maas. 1.3; t. Suk. 2.9).

Vine. See comm. above.

4:8. Serpent. Only in S. It appears again in both versions in 9:7. There he does not deceive Adam by himself, but Sammael “took the serpent as a garment” (G) or “disguised himself in the serpent” (S). The same allegorical interpretation of the biblical serpent appears in Philo: “the Devil proceeds with great art, speaking by the mouth of the serpent” (Quaest. Gen. 1.36) and in Apoc. Mos. 16:1–7, where the devil says to the serpent: “Become my vessel and I will speak through your mouth a word to deceive him [or “them”]” (16:4). Sammael is a “Serpent – rider” that makes Eve pregnant in Pirque R. El.: “As for the serpent, every act that he performed and every word that he spoke, he spoke and did only at the will of Sammael” (13; cf. Pirque R. El. 21). Serpent is used for transportation of Satan inside the garden:

And when Satan saw that Adam and Eve were happy and joyful in Paradise, that Rebel was smitten sorely with jealousy, and he became filled with wrath. And he went and took up his abode in the serpent, and he raised him up, and made him to fly through the air to the skirts of Mount [Eden] whereon was Paradise. Now, why did Satan enter the body of the serpent and hide himself therein? Because he knew that his appearance was foul, and that if Eve saw his form, she would betake herself to flight straightway before him. (Cave of Treasures 4.4–7)²¹²

Satan said [to the serpent]: “You are great: therefore open your mouth, and I will enter into your belly, and so you entering into paradise will place me near those two lumps of clay that are newly walking upon the earth.” Then the serpent did so, and placed Satan near to Eve. (Gos. Barn. 40)

At the same time, Satan and the serpent are often identified: the fallen angel Gaderel seduces Eve in 1 En. 69:6; Satanael causes the fall in 2 En. 21:4; Tg. Ps.-Jon. Gen 3:15 identifies the punishment of the serpent and of Satan; in a late midrash Satan appears to Moses in the guise of a serpent (Midr. Vayosha 43–44 in Bet HaMidr. 1.35–57; cf. Origen, Princ. 3.2.1). On the possible identity of the seducing serpent of Eden to the Cosmic Serpent, on the one hand, and to Satan, on the other, see comm. above.

²¹¹ See the reference to Houghton in Jastrow, Kohler, Knowlton. “Apple,” 24.

²¹² Translation by Budge (Book, 63). I am grateful to Sergey Minov for noticing this parallel.

The vine, which the angel Sammael [Satanael S] planted. Noah plants the first vine in partnership with Satan or a demon (Gen. Rab. 36.3–4; Midr. Agg. on Gen 9:21; and par.). A similar belief about the vine was known to Gnostics. Thus, one finds the following description of the origins of vine in the mythological system of Severian Encratites, as it was described by Epiphanius: “After descending in the form of a serpent he [the devil] went wild and lay with the earth as with a woman, and as he ejaculated the seed of its generation, the vine was begotten of him” (Haer. 3.45.1.2).²¹³ See also “a grapevine has been planted apart from the Father” (Gos. Thom. 40). These vines, however, have nothing to do with the Tree of Knowledge. The idea that the Tree of Knowledge was planted by Sammael/Satanael is unique.²¹⁴ Moreover, it contradicts the most common understanding of Gen 2:8–9, that both Trees were planted by God, and other famous sayings: “vine [= Israel], the stock planted by your [God’s] right hand (Ps 80 (81):15–16) and “I [= Jesus] am the true vine, and my father is a planter” (John 15:1); see also the texts cited from Philo above.

Sammael. Only in G; S has Satanael instead (see comm. below). This is one of the names for the leader of evil forces. Diverse etymologies have been proposed: “The one who made himself a god” (שם + אל), “poison of God” (אל + סומא/סם; based on b. Abod. Zar. 20b), or a form connected to the root סומא “blind” (Acts Andr. Matt. 24; Hyp. of Arch. 135 and passim; cf. comm. to “blindness” in 3:8G above). Sammael appears in 2 Enoch; Ascension of Isaiah; Testament of Solomon; 3 Enoch; Apocryphon of John; Tg. Ps.-Jon Gen 3:6; 4:1; Job 28:7; Gen. Rab. 56.4; 77; b. Abod. Zar. 28b; b. Sanh. 89a; b. Sot. 10b; Lev. Rab. 21.4; Deut. Rab. 11.9; Abot R. Nat.; Pirke R. El. 12–13; 26; 32; Bet HaMidr. 1.12, 125; 2.66; 3.87; 6.31, 129.²¹⁵

²¹³ Williams, Panarion, 346.

²¹⁴ It can shed light on a possible aggadic background of the parable in Matt 13:24–30. There tares, “false wheat” (Gk ζιζάνια – lolium temulentum), are planted by “the Adversary” (ὁ ἐχθρός; a common title for Satan, interpreted thus also in 13:39 below) of a man during the man’s sleep (cf. Adam’s sleep in Gen 2:21). The forbidden fruit is wheat in some Rabbinic traditions as well (cf. Gen. Rab. 15.7; b. Ber. 40a; b. Sanh. 70a). Its very name, Heb חטה, is almost homographic to חטא “sin” (b. Ber. 61a; on later exegesis cf. Ginzberg, Legends, 5.97). As in 3 Baruch also there “the harvesters are angels” (Matt 13:39).

²¹⁵ Cf. Ginzberg, Legends, 5.121; Urbach, Sages, 2.761; Scholem, “Samael,” 14.719.22; Forsyth, Old, 209, 223–224, 323–324; Bullard, Hypostasis, 51–54; Harlow, Baruch, 125, n. 51.

Here he is placed in opposition to the four angels headed by Michael, who appears again in ch. 11 as a heavenly commander-in-chief, key holder, and probably as a heavenly high priest. The opposition of the two figures is a well developed motif in Rabbinic literature. “R. Yose said: “To what can Michael and Sammael be compared? To a defending counsel and prosecutor standing in court” (Exod. Rab. 18.5; cf. Pesiq. R. 44). Michael and Sammael struggle over the body of Moses according to Deut. Rab. 11.10 (cf. the same with Satan in Jude 9; Asc. Mos. 10; 2 Petirat Moshe 381f). During his fall, Sammael tried to bring down Michael with him (Pirqe R. El. 26). Michael saved Jacob from being killed by Sammael (Midr. Abkir in Yalk. Gen. 110).

Satanael. Only in S. Cf. 4:7S and 9:7S (also instead Sammael). According to 2 Enoch, Satanael (CS Satanail, САТАНАИЛЪ) was the seducer and the paramour of Eve; he is, as such, the chief of the angelic rebellion, and upon fleeing from heaven he has lost the theophoric suffix and “became Satan” (2 En. 18:3; 29:4–5; 31:4). The name is used also in other Palaea accounts of the angelic revolt; see Notes for one of such stories interpolated in 3 Baruch.²¹⁶ In non-Slavic sources the name Satanael appears in Greek Gos. Bart. 4:25, and in Coptic Encomium on the Archangel Michael attributed to Theodosius of Alexandria and Encomium on the Archangel Raphael attributed to John Chrysostom. The Christian Arabic translator of the Syriac Cave of Treasures (3.6) modified the regular Syr “Satan” (ܫܬܢܐ) into “Sātānāīl” (ساطاناييل) in order to transpose the etymological word-play present in Syriac text into Arabic.²¹⁷

4:8G. He did not permit Adam to touch it. So only according to Eve’s testimony (Gen 3:3), while the wording of God’s order did not prohibit touching the tree, only eating from it (Gen 2:17). In the interpretation of Gen 3:3, 3 Baruch parallels Josephus: “God foretold to them, that if they touched it, it would prove their destruction” (Ant. 1.1.4; cf. Philo, Quaest. Gen. 1.35 [to Gen 3:1]). However, others have understood the discrepancy between Gen 2:17 and 3:3 as a deliberate expansion of the divine prohibition either by archons or by Eve, which actually helped to deceive the first humans. The motif was developed by Gnostics (Hyp. Arch. 88–90) and in Rabbinic tradition (Gen. Rab. 19.3–4; b. Sanh. 29a; Pirqe R. El. 13; Abot R. Nat. 1.4–5 and 151).

²¹⁶ See Gaylord, “Satanael,” 308. On Satanael, in addition to the work of Gaylord, see Turdeanu, Apocryphe, 17–31; Stichel, R. “Verführung;” Stone, History, 116.

²¹⁷ See Bezold, Schatzhöhle, v. 2, 16*–17*. I thank Sergey Minov for these parallels.

Baruch says above: “I will neither subtract nor add a word” (1:7S). The two topics are united in b. Sanh. 29a: “Hezekiah said: Whence do we know that he who adds [to the word of God] subtracts [from it]? – From the verse, “God has said, you shall not eat of it neither shall you touch it [Gen 3:3].”

The devil being envious. Only in G. For jealousy as a cause of the serpent’s deed see Wis 2:24: “God created man for immortality, but through the envy of devil death entered the world”; see also Josephus, Ant. 1.1.4; Vita 12:1; t. Sot. 4.17; Gen. Rab. 18 and 19; b. Sanh. 59b; b. Sotah 9b; Abot R. Nat. 1.

4:9–15. James considers this whole passage on Noah the Vine Planter, containing the second question of Baruch with a reply to it, to be another later insertion into a major insertion (4:8–17), because (1) the passage glorifies wine in contrast to 4:8 and 4:16–17, which both condemn it; (2) it has Christian elements (4:15b); (3) it differs in wording: Gk κλῆμα (4:10, 15) comes here in place of Gk ἄμπελος (4:8).²¹⁸ This argument may be weakened by the following observations: (1) as far as the first argument is concerned, (a) the condemnation applies only to “the men who drink insatiably” (4:16), to “those who drink it in excess” (4:17); (b) if the original text is supposed only to condemn vine products, how then Israel can be called in both versions “your [+ glorious S] vineyard” (1:2), unless this too is a later addition? (2) S does not have the obviously Christian passage in 4:15b, while still containing the most of the fragment. (3) A combination κλῆμα τῆς ἀμπέλου, uniting both terms, occurs in 4:10G.

A story about Noah planting the vine – developing Gen 9:20 – appears in Jub. 7:1; Tg. Ps.-Jon. Gen 9:20; Gen. Rab. 36.3–4; cf. Tan. B. 1.46; Tan. Noah 13; Pirke R. El. 23; etc.²¹⁹ Noah’s vine is an offshoot of the Tree of Knowledge and comes from Paradise according to Tg. Ps.-Jon. Gen 9:20:

he found a vine which the river had brought away from the garden of Eden, and he planted it in a vineyard, and it flourished in a day, and its grapes became ripe, and he pressed them out, and he drank of the wine and was drunken.

See further Pirke R. El. 23; Origen, Gen 9:20. Noah has found the vine that Adam took with him from Paradise (Tan. B. 1.46). Other alternative views are found in Tan. B. 1.46–48 and Tan. Noah 13–15. A similar story was ascribed to the olive: whereas in 3 Baruch a shoot of the vine planted by ²¹⁸ James, “Baruch,” lxii.

²¹⁹ Noah himself is compared to “a plant,” that “shall be planted and established for all generations for ever” (1 En. 10:3 apud Syncellus; Orlov, “Flooded,” 198).

Sammael has been washed out by the Flood from Paradise and planted by Noah, a branch of the olive tree (planted according to the same story by Michael; see 3 Bar. 4:7S) was brought to Noah by a dove from Paradise, who has preferred “the bitter from there to the sweet from your [Noah’s] hand” (דך מוטב מר מזה ממחוק מחתך ידך; Gen. Rab. 33.6; Pirqe R. El. 23; cf. 4:15 below: “its bitterness will be changed into sweetness”).

Orlov notices, that the structure, as well as the content, of the story of Noah and the vine may connect it to the Enochic tradition:

the events taking place in heaven and on earth are depicted as if they were to mirror each other: the destruction of “all flesh,” including the giants on earth, “mirrors” the destruction of “all flower” in the heavenly garden. Both accounts also mention survivors, the patriarch Noah from the flooded earth and one plant from the flooded heavenly garden. This parallelism resembles the one in the Book of Giants, where the dream(s) about the destroyed “vegetation” of the garden and the single preserved shoot symbolized the drowned giants and Noah’s miraculous escape.²²⁰

4:10. When God caused the Flood on earth, and destroyed all flesh and 409,000 giants. As noticed by Bohak, this unprecedented number must be a gematria of Gk κατακλυσμός (used as in 3 Baruch, so also as a constant equivalent for the Heb מְבֹל ‘Flood’ in LXX) written in Hebrew letters – קטקליסמוס* (unattested elsewhere; for the transliteration of the Greek ending – os with Heb – ס without waw as mater lectiones, cf., e.g., Heb פנס for Gk φανός, etc.).²²¹

See the number of angels above: 200,003 implying three leading angels not included in the round number (4:7S). The number here might have been a corruption of 400,009, also including nine leaders. Nine leaders of the fallen angels are listed in 1 En. 8,²²² while the giants are their progeny. Cf. also nine archons of Athens.

Giants. Giants (Nephilim, Refaim, Anakim) were born as a result of the intercourse of the “sons of God” (Watchers, the fallen angels of pseudepigraphic and Rabbinic traditions) with the daughters of men (Gen 6:4; developed in 1 En. 15; Jub. 5:1–2; Philo, Gig.; Gen. Rab. 26.7; Deut. Rab. 1.24; Tan. B. 5.6; Pirqe R. El. 22; and passim). They were compared to the Greek “giants” by Josephus (Ant. 1.3.1–2).

Giants (“bulls and elephants and camels and asses”) perished in the Flood according to the Animal Apocalypse (1 En. 89:6); the Qumranic ²²⁰ Orlov, “Flooded,” 196.

²²¹ Bohak, “Gematrias,” 120.

²²² Although 1 En. 6:7 has more.

Book of Giants;²²³ 4QExhortation (4Q370 1.6), Sib. Or. 2:283; 3 Macc 2:4; Wis 14:6; CD 2.19–20.²²⁴ Many other sources refer to the mass destruction of Giants, without referring to the Flood explicitly (e.g., Jub. 20:5; 1 Bar. 3:26–28; Sib. Or. 1:145). Cf. also T. Reub 5:6; Apoc. Pet. 230; Acts Andr. Matt. 18; Tg. Ps.-Jon. Deut 3:11; b. Nid. 61a; Tan. B. 4.130; Tan. Hukat 25; Num. Rab. 19.32.

According to some Rabbinic traditions, the whole antediluvian generation was gigantic, so that they had no fear of the Flood (Tg. Ps.-Jon. Gen 7:10; y. Sanh. 10.29b; b. Sanh 108b; b. Rosh HaSh. 12a; b. Zeb. 113b; Lev. Rab. 7.6; Eccl. Rab. 9.4; Tan. B. 3.13; Tan. Zav 2; Pirke R. El. 22; Midr. Pss. 11.100; Aggadat Bereshit 4.10). Antedeluvian giants who “did not want to glorify God” and laughed at Noah are mentioned in the fragment On Enoch Tablets of Palaea Historica.²²⁵

The Giants can be connected with the Builders of chs. 2–3 above. On the souls of the Giants (or surviving Giants) having transformed to demons and initiating the building of the Tower of Babel, see comm. to ch. 3.

The water rose 15 cubits above the heights. Thus in Gen 7:20. Rabbinic aggadah connects the number with giants account. The rationale of this height is explained by the fact that fifteen cubits high or less were the giants of the Flood generation; this way they could not save themselves even on the mountains (Midr. HaG. to Genesis 1.159). Cf. Jub. 29:9: “the Rephaim were born, giants whose height was ten, nine, eight down to seven cubits.”

The water entered Paradise and destroyed every flower. This tradition is unique to 3 Baruch and the Slavonic Word on the Cross Tree.²²⁶ Does it mean that Paradise is terrestrial? According to 3 En. 5:5–6 there were two of them (celestial and terrestrial).²²⁷ Does it mean that Paradise was destroyed by the Flood?²²⁸ The Flood enters Hell,²²⁹ but not Paradise. Rabbis ²²³ So Stuckenbruck: “the Book of Giants retains the dual motif of internecine fighting (1Q23 9+14+15?; 4Q531 4) with their destruction through the flood (2Q26; 4Q530 2:4–7; 6Q8 frag. 2)” (“Angels,” 367); “If 2Q26, 6Q8 frag. 2 and 4Q530 2:4–7 represent dreams of the giants about their punishment, the allusions to the flood of these texts may imply that their destruction would occur during the deluge” (ibid., 369).

²²⁴ Stuckenbruck, “Angels,” 369–376; cf. idem, “Giant.”

²²⁵ Vasiliev, Anecdota, 196–98.

²²⁶ Kagan-Tarkovskaja, “Slovo.”

²²⁷ The notion of terrestrial Paradise located on a high mountain was popular in Syriac Christian tradition; see Anderson, “Cosmic.”

²²⁸ This was Luther’s idea (Genesisvorlesung).

²²⁹ See Ginzberg, Legends, 5.178.

insisted that the Flood did not reach Eden (Gen. Rab. 33.6; Lev. Rab. 31.10; Cant. Rab. 1.15.4; 4.1.2).²³⁰

It removed the shoot of the vine completely and brought it outside / brought out one shoot from the vine. According to G the Tree was “removed completely” (ἐξώρισεν εἰς τὸ παντελές), while in S only one shoot of it was taken. Branches of the trees planted by Satanael were brought out from Paradise, one by the Flood and another by the Tigris, and eventually became trees of the cross in the Slavonic Word on the Tree of Cross.

The uprooting of the vine may be connected to the fact that it was planted not by God, but by Sammael: “Every plant which my heavenly Father has not planted will be rooted out” (Matt 15:13); a vine that “has been planted apart from the Father,” according to Gos. Thom. 40, “is not strong, it will be pulled up by its root and will perish” (cf. Ignatius, Trall. 11.1; Phld. 3.1; Gos. Philip 133:29–231; Gos. Truth 36:35–37).²³¹ In these Christian texts the use of this motif is most probably confined to the reference to antagonistic religious groups, but this metaphoric usage might well reflect the motif of the Jewish lore witnessed by 3 Baruch.

Flowers. The Flood started “on the seventeenth day of the second month [Ziv/Iyyar]” (Gen 7:11), i.e., in the spring time of blooming. Flowers of Paradise are known also from the Life of Adam and Eve (Apoc. Mos. 22:3; Georgian Book of Adam 38:4).

The text refers to “flowers” again in 12:1G (“angels came carrying baskets full of flowers”). There flowers are among the central images of 3 Baruch signifying “virtues” (12:4G; or “prayers” in secondary 14:2S and passim). This recurrence may not be coincidental. On the angels planting trees, on the one hand, and offering (their?) flowers, on the other, see comm. to 4:7S and 12:4G.

4:11G. Noah came out of the ark, he began to plant [some] of the found plants.

Only in G. In a Rabbinic parallel, Noah plants different species of trees that he kept with him in the ark (Gen. Rab. 36.3). There was even a tradition that some of the trees he planted were preserved in Palestine to the days of the Exodus (Midr. Eccl. 3.11).

²³⁰ Cf. Lewis, Study, 23.

²³¹ Cf. Bauckham, “Parable,” 91.

4:13. Since Adam was destroyed because of it, let me not also encounter God's anger because of it. The idea that Noah was warned by Adam's failure with the vine is known to the Talmud: "The Holy One told Noah, 'Noah, why did you not learn from the first Adam that all the troubles he had were caused by wine?'" (b. Sanh. 70a).

Scholars have tried to find implied connections between the figures of Adam and Noah, on one the hand, and Noah and Baruch, on the other. All three endure a catastrophe (Fall, Flood, Destruction). Vine/vineyard (in Greek the words are very similar: ἡ ἀμπελος and ὁ ἀνπελών) imagery links the Temple and the condemned (or at least ambiguous) vine (1:2; 4:8, 9): while the "vineyard" is burnt (1:2), the "vine" brings its abusers to eternal fire (4:16).²³² If this parallelism is authentic, it would be, as Collins noticed, "a definitive rejection of Jerusalem, unparalleled in Jewish literature."²³³ However, even if the images are connected, we have more to do with an opposition than with a likening of Jerusalem to "God's vineyard" and the vine planted by Sammael.

Orlov finds similarities between the Noachic account of 3 Baruch and a parallel to the story of the planting of Paradise in 4:7S (4Q530 3–12, etc.; see comm. to 4:7S above), comparing them also to 6Q8 line 2.²³⁴ Orlov states:

The Noachic tradition found in 3 Baruch 4 is closely connected with the fragments of the Book of Noah found in 1 Enoch, Jubilees, the Dead Sea Scroll fragments, and Syncellus [see comm. to 4:15 below]. It appears, however, that the Noachic materials found in 3 Baruch 4 have also undergone the "Adamic" revisions. H. E. Gaylord observes that "a strong typological relation is set up between Adam and Noah, who discovers a piece of the vine through which Adam and Eve sinned washed out of the garden by the receding flood waters."²³⁵

4:14. He had completed the prayer of 40 days / And he knelt down and fasted 40 days praying. Forty days is a standard period for both prayer and fast. Cf. fast and prayer of Moses in Exod 34:28; Deut 9:9 and 25ff (here also a prayer is mentioned), Elijah (1 Kgs 19:8), Jesus (Matt 4:2;

²³² See Picard, "Obseravtionnes," 96–100; idem, "Je te montrai," 23–24; Collins, Apocalyptic, 200; Harlow, Baruch, 128–30. Picard also suggests that the typology between the Flood and Destruction may be based on Jer 45:5b alluding to Gen 6:7. Harlow adds that both Baruch and Noah are described as contemplating (1:1; 4:12), weeping (1:1, 3; 4:14), and eventually met with an angelic response (1:4; 4:15); see Harlow, Baruch, 128.

²³³ Collins, Apocalyptic, 200 (250 in the second edition).

²³⁴ "Its three roots [...] and] while I was [watching] came [...] all this orchard, and [...]."

²³⁵ Orlov, "Flooded," 200–201; Gaylord, "Baruch," 659.

cf. Mark 1:13; Luke 4:2); see also Jonah 3:4. In post-biblical documents, Adam (Vita 6:1) and Abraham fasted for forty days (Apoc. Abr. 9:7; 12:1). For other periods of forty days, cf. Num 14:33; 4 Ezra 14:23; 2 Bar. 76; Acts 1:3 (in some of these sources the fasting may be implied); cf. Origen, Hom. Num. 8.1.5.

4:15. Sarasaël (Σαρρασάηλ / Σαρασαηλα [acc.]). The Slavonic ms Z has “Rasaël” (ρασαελα in acc.) instead.²³⁶ Mss S and Z have subsequently “Sarazael” and “Razael” as an additional planting angel in 4:7S (see note ibid.). This unique name, appearing in both versions, may be either a corruption of Sariel or Razael, or a contamination of the both, or rather the scripto continua of * σαρρασάηλ – * שר רזאל “Prince [a common Hebrew substitute to “angel”] Razael/Raziel.” Angelic revelation to Noah is known to Jub. 10:11–14, and in later Jewish traditions Noah learns from the angle Raziel or from the book given by Raziel to Adam.²³⁷

Less probably, the name Sarasaël, if derived from the Hebrew root סרם, might have to do with the well developed tradition of the castration of Noah (Gen. Rab. 36.7; Tan. B. 1.49; Tan. Noah 15; Pirqe R. El. 23). Cf. also a similar Saraqael (Sariel in Greek) in 1 En. 20:6.

4:15. Its bitterness shall be changed into sweetness, and its curse shall become a blessing / and alter its name, bitterness to sweetness and for that one it was for death, but for you it will be for life. The bitterness of the grapes of the Vine Tree of Knowledge are mentioned in Esth. Rab. 5 referring to Deut 32:32: “their grapes are filled with poison, and their clusters with bitterness.” See the similar wording: “Woe to those who ... put bitter for sweet and sweet for bitter” (Isa 5:20) in the context including condemnation of wine abuse (5:11 and 22). In the context of parousia “the sweet water will become salty, and the salty sweet in the great light of the joy of God” (4 Bar. 9:18). See also comparable wording and even imagery although in different context (italics are mine):

But there are some men of diligence and effort, who at first think the way leading to virtue rough and steep and difficult, but for whom later on the all-bountiful God renders it a highway, transforming the bitterness of their toil into sweetness. ... the Saviour, anticipating us, taken pity on us and cast into our soul a sweetening tree like a medicine, producing love of labour instead of hatred of labour. (Philo, Post. 45.153–56)

²³⁶ Sic! – ρασαελα and not ρασαηλα.

²³⁷ Sefer Raziel 2a; 34a; Sefer HaRazim, Intr.; Ginzberg, Legends, 1.154; 5.177.

A very similar idea appears in Talmud. Here fermentation must be meant. But probably, in the light of 3 Baruch, a more profound “change” may also be implied:

Why is a difference made for wine [it has a special benediction, different from other fruit]? Shall I say that because it has been changed for the better [אֲשַׁחֲנִי לְעֹלִיּוֹת], therefore the blessing is different? (b. Ber. 35b)

According to many commentators the whole fragment 4:9–15 has to be Christian, due to the obviously Christian 4:15b, and, more generally, since its redactor “felt it necessary to modify the condemnation of wine, on account of its use in the Eucharist.”²³⁸ However, wine also has sacral use in Jewish tradition, including sacrificial practices (see, e.g., on libation in Num 28:14; cf. b. Ber. 35a above). Jewish literature is abundant with positive references to wine. “Wine which cheers God and man” (Judg 9:13; cf. Ps. 104:15; Eccl 10:19). The vine tree is the chosen one (Ezek 15:2). The fig-tree is next in rank to the vine (Deut 8:8; cf. 4:7S above). On Israel and Jerusalem likened to the vine see comm. to 1:2 above. Cf. also Gen 49:11; 1 Kgs 5:4 [4:25]; Ps 128:3. Vine is among “desirable trees” in 1 En. 10:19. It is kept for the eschatological feast (Lev. Rab. 12; b. Ber. 34b). Wine has healing powers (Philo, Aet. 12.63). “Foremost among all life[-giving things] am I, Wine” (b. B. Bat. 58b). “Wine is the greatest of medicines. Where wine is lacking, drugs are necessary” (b. Ber. 35b and 58b). “Old wine is good for the whole body” (b. Pes. 42b; cf. b. Ab. Zar. 40b). It also can assist in making someone wise (b. Hor. 13a-b; Erub. 65a). “?A person in whose house wine is not poured like water has not attained the state of blessedness” (b. Erub. 65a). Wine was declared as “the mightiest thing there is” by one of Darius’ guards (Josephus, Ant. 11.3.3; cf. 1 Ezra 3:17b–24) or as one of ten “mighty things existing in the world” (b. B. Bat. 10a).

Although these verses 4:16–17 contain one of the most severe condemnations of excessive drinking that we find in early Jewish literature, 3 Baruch is not unique in this concern. Isaiah condemns excessive drinking (5:11, 22) and is worried about the drinking habits of priest and prophets (Isa 28:7); wine “bites like a snake” (Prov 23:32); “nor for kings to drink wine, nor any strong drink for princes” (Prov 31:4); etc. Among post-biblical texts preoccupied with wine abuse is the Testament of Judah. It allots three chapters to the problem and ties it closely to the sin of fornication (14–16). According to Judah, wine obtains “four evil spirits: lust, hot desire, profligacy, filthy lucre” (16:1; cf. list of vices below). Wine “turns the mind away from the truth, and inspires the passion of lust, and leads the eyes into error, for the spirit of fornication has wine as a minister to give pleasure to the mind” (14:1). The one who drinks “serves the sin, and is not ashamed” and “reverences no man” (14:3). “Wine causes the mysteries of God and men to be revealed [to strangers]” (16:4).²³⁹ “Wine is a cause both of war and confusion” (16:5). However, “a man may drink so long as he preserves modesty” (14:7) and observes “the right limit in wine” (16:1), “but if you would live soberly do not touch wine at all” (16:3). Tob 4:17 and Ahiqar 2 also warn against drinking with evil men. Drunkenness is included in the list of the vices in Sib. Or. 1:154. Rabbinic writings contain multiple positive references to wine (see above), but also feature occasional statements describing excessive drinking as a cause of many sins (see below). A Pauline author urges not to drink wine, because it “leads to debauchery” (Eph 5:18). In Poimandres drunkenness functions as a metaphor for the “ignorance of God” (1.27). The Therapeutae abstained from wine (Philo, Contempl. 73–74). Later, and on other grounds, complete abstinence from wine was adopted by some groups as an extreme expression of mourning for the destruction of the Temple (a custom opposed by R. Yehoshua; t. Sot. 15.11–12). Among the most extreme opponents to wine were different kinds of Encratites (Abstainers). These included Manichaeans and some ascetic groups of Gnostics, as well as the sects of Hydro-parastatae or Aquarians, who even used water instead of wine for the Eucharist (so Theodoret, Irenaeus, Clement of Alexandria, Cyprian, and John Chrysostom; see Philastrius, Haer. 77; Augustine, Haer. 64; Praedest. 64; the practice was forbidden by Theodosius’s edict of 382). Some rejected wine, because it was born of the dragon-like Satan and earth, who had had relations (Epiphanius, Haer. 3.45.1.2; cf. the vine planted by Satanael in 4:8S).

²³⁸ Hughes, “Baruch,” 536.

Our text, in providing a balanced treatment of the issue, might have served in polemics against such views. In the Slavonic On the Flood Noah similarly defines the contradicting features of his product: “For a clever man it is for joy, wedding, gossipship [КОУМОБСТВО], and brotherhood, and all good deeds, but for a fool – for fighting, rivalry, and all evil deed.”²⁴⁰ Ambivalent evaluation of wine appears in Sir 31:27–30:

²³⁹ Cf. b. Erub. 65a cited above referring to the revealing of mysteries by means of wine but in positive sense.

²⁴⁰ Kagan-Tarkovskaja, “O potope,” 111.

Wine is like life to men, if you drink it in moderation. What is life to a man who is without wine? It has been created to make men glad. Wine drunk in season and temperately is rejoicing of heart and gladness of soul. Wine drunk to excess is bitterness of soul, with provocation and stumbling. Drunkenness increases the anger of a fool to his injury, reducing his strength and adding wounds.

See Gen. Rab. 36.3–4; b. Ber. 51a; b. Yoma 76b; Tan. Noah 18; Tan. B. 1.48; Pirque R. El. 23. Wine is not only permitted but even recommended in moderate use (Gen. Rab. 36.4; b. Erub. 65a; b. Ket. 65a; b. Sanh. 70a; Tan. B. 1.58, 50–51 and 3.24–26; Lev. Rab. 12.1; Tan. Shemini 11; Midr. Prov. 23.95–96).²⁴¹ On two kinds of vines, good of Ps 104:15 and evil of Deut 32:33, see Methodius, Discourse 10.4.

4:15G. And that which is begotten from it shall become the blood of God; and as the human race obtained condemnation through it, so again through Jesus Christ the Emmanuel [and] in him is the receipt of the future invocation, and the entry into Paradise. Only this fragment of the chapter may be considered as an obviously Christian interpolation (see introductory comm. above), due to the unequivocally Christian terminology: “blood of God” (cf. Acts 20:28) and “Jesus Christ the Emmanuel.”²⁴² It is not clear whether we ought to consider the line “and its curse shall become a blessing” (καὶ ἡ κατάρα αὐτοῦ γενήσεται εἰς εὐλογία) above as a part of the Christian interpolation: the line does not occur in S, but there is nothing specifically Christian about it. It may be an allusion to Isa 65:8, where blessed wine is compared to the righteous sons of Israel: “Thus the Lord says, ‘As when fresh wine is found in a grape, and men say, ‘Do not destroy it, since a blessing is in it.’”²⁴³ See also, “As you were a curse among the heathen, O house of Judah, and house of Israel, so will I save you and you will be a blessing” (Zech 8:13) and “Let the plant of righteousness and truth appear, and its produce become a blessing” (1 En. 10:16[21]).

²⁴¹ Ginzberg, Legends, 5.190.

²⁴² Cf. also the phrase “invocation of God in Christ Jesus” (Phil 3:14).

²⁴³ Harlow, Baruch, 123, n. 38.

4:16G. Adam ... was divested of the Glory of God. Eve also said that she “was naked of the righteousness with which I had been clothed” and “deprived of the glory with which I was clothed” (Apoc. Mos. 20:2) and caused Adam to see his nakedness and his being “deprived of the glory of God” (Apoc. Mos. 21:5–6; cf. Gen. Rab. 19.6; Pirque R. El. 14). Enoch on the contrary was clothed “with the raiment of my [God’s] Glory” (2 En. 22:8). The first couple’s “garments of honor” (Aram לבושין דיקר) are mentioned also in Tgs. Gen 3:21; cf. Pesiq. R. 37.2; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 6.5. References to the glory of Adam are found in both versions of Testament of Abraham; 2 En. (J) 30:11–12, and are especially abundant in Qumran (Heb כבוד אדם; CD 3.20; 1QS 4.23; 1QH 17.5; cf. 1QS 4.16, 24; 4Q171 3.1–2). For the “garment of glory” in general see 1 En. 62:15; 108:12; 4 Ezra 2:39, 45; Asc. Isa. 9:9; 2 Cor 5:3–4; Rev 3:4, 5, 18; 4:4; 6:2; 7:9, 13, 14; Herm. Sim. 8.2.²⁴⁴

This means that the first humans were not naked before the transgression, in contradiction to the plain meaning of Gen 2:25 (“the man and his wife were both naked”) and probably as a response to Gen 3:21, mentioning “garments of skin” of the pre-Fall period. The latter verse was interpreted similarly, as referring to supernatural glorious or garments of light, as in Ezek 28:13, so also by Rabbis (Gen. Rab. 20.12; Pirque R. El. 14.20; Abot R. Nat. B). Exegesis of Gen. Rab. 20.12 applies to the textual version featuring “garments of light” (Heb כתנוה אור) in place of MT “garments of skin” (Heb כתנוה עור). The former are considered priestly in Tan. Gen 3:21; Num. Rab. 4.8.

4:17G. Brother does not have mercy on his brother, nor a father on his son, nor children on their parents. The verse is considered to be Christian due to the textual similarity with NT: “Brother will betray brother to death, and a father his child, children will rebel against their parents” (Mark 13:12). A similar formula is found in Greek Apoc. Ezra 11: “neither brother has mercy towards his brother, nor man to wife, nor children to parents, nor friends, nor a slave to his master.” See Notes ad loc.

4:17. Murders, adulteries, fornications, perjuries, thefts, and such like / murder [or “robbery”] and adultery, fornication and [false] oaths, and theft. This is the first of three lists of vices: 4:17; 8:5; and 13:4.

²⁴⁴ More on this exegetical motif, see Lambden, “From Fig Leaves”; Anderson, “Garments”; Golitzin, “Recovering.”

Five vices of wine (4:17)		Thirteen/five vices of mankind (8:5)		Thirteen/three vices of mankind (13:4)
G	S	G	S	G	S
murders, adulteries, fornica- tions, per- juries, thefts,	murder and adultery, for- nication, and [false] oaths, and theft	fornications, adulteries, thefts, extor- tions, idol- atries, drunken- nesses, murders, strifes, jeal- ousy, slanders, murmur- ings, whis- perings, divi- nations,	fornication, adultery, jealousy, rivalry, theft, murder,	fornications, adulteries, thefts, slanders, perjuries, malices, drunken- nesses, strifes, jeal- ousy, mur- murings, whispering, idolatry, divi- nation,	jealousy and fornication and to envy, ²⁴⁵
and such like		and such like, which are not pleasing to God	all which does not pleasing to God.	and such like	and they strive to many other things

The most similar list occurs in Matt 15:19: “evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false testimonies, blasphemies.” However, three of the seven vices in this list do not appear in 3 Baruch – evil thoughts, false testimonies (3 Baruch has ἐπιτορκεῖαι, as compared to NT – ψευδομαρτυρίαι), and blasphemies. Apoc. Paul 6 has seven vices: “fornications, adulteries, murders, thefts, perjuries, divinations, and witchcrafts of men, and all the evils that they do.” Col 3:2–8 has two lists of five (like 3 Bar. 4:15) but different vices: “anger, wrath, malice, slander, abusive speech” and “immorality, impurity, passion, evil desire, and greed, which amounts to idolatry” (these lists adduce rather inclinations than deeds). Gal 5:21 concludes a list of seventeen vices with “and such like.” Mark 7:21–22 and 1 Tim 1:9–10 have thirteen vices (like 3 Bar. 8:5G and 13:4G, although the lists are different).²⁴⁶ Twelve vices appear in CH 13.7. Ep. Barn. 20:2–8 contains fourteen vices, while Didache (5) and Apostolic Constitutions

²⁴⁵ CS НА РЕВНОСТИ [like ζήλος] и НА БЛЖДѢ И НА ЗАВИСТИ [like φθόνος].

²⁴⁶ In Mark these are “defiling” sins. The conception shared most probably also by other Jewish circles; cf. Klawans, Purity, 148ff.

(7.18 and passim) have much longer lists (cf. the long lists of Rom 1:29–31 and 1QS 4.9–11 quoted below). The three last sources must have had a common tradition.

The popularity of such lists in Christian literature does not necessarily indicate a Christian origin of the list in 3 Baruch. Hos 4:2 has also five and almost identical vices although in another order: “[False] oath [Heb אלה], and lying [or “perjury,” Heb כחש], and murder, theft and adultery.” Almost the same list has Jer 7:9 in addition to idolatry. See the list of Wis 14:25–26:

confusion-blood and murder, theft and guile, corruption, faithlessness, turmoil, perjury, disturbance of good men, neglect of gratitude, besmirching of souls, unnatural lust, disorder in marriage, adultery and shamelessness “Fornication and uncleanness and all iniquity” appear in Jub. 7:20 (cf. 20:3, 6). In Apoc. Abr. 24–25 there is a vision of murder, fornication, theft, and jealousy. Seven demonic heavenly bodies personify vices in Test. Sol. 8:2–4 (Deception, Strife, Fate, Distress, Error, Power, the Worst). See also the seven bound stars of 1 En. 21:3, the seven archons of Gnostics (Origen, Cels. 6.30), and the seven planets as malevolent demonic powers in Mandaean mythology (cf. introductory comm. to 3:1–5a; 2.1.3).²⁴⁷ T. Reub. 2–3 also speaks of “seven spirits of deceit” (of a total of ten, including derivative spirits): fornication, greed, strife, obsequiousness (and chicanery), pride, lying, injustice (“with which are thefts and acts of rapacity”); see T. Dan 1:6; 2:4; T. Sim. 3:1. T. Iss. 7:2–4 speaks consequently of fornication, wine, coveting of a neighbor’s belongings, guile, lying. T. Benj. 7:2 enumerates seven evils: bloodshed, ruin, tribulation, exile, dearth, panic, destruction. Sib. Or. 1:150–70; 174–98 speaks of faithlessness (150, 177), drunkenness (154), violence (154–57, 176), deceit (177), adultery and slander (178), lack of reverence for God (179); cf. Sib. Or. 2:67–77, 255–281; 4:27–39. One of the lists there is also associated with Noah (1:173–180). Philo gives ten kinds of transgressions (Conf. 12.46). Lists of vices are attested also in Qumran literature:

greed, neglect of righteous deeds, wickedness, lying, pride and haughtiness, cruel deceit and fraud, much hypocrisy, impatience and much folly, black envy, vile deeds of debauched desire, defiled ways in impure service, abusing speech, blindness of eyes, deafness of ears, stiffness of neck, and hardness of heart (1QS 4.9–11)

Similar lists are found in Plato’s works: “gluttony and violence and drunkenness” (Phaed. 81e), “injustice and tyranny and robbery” (ibid. 82a), “greatness of their wrongdoings, because they have committed many great deeds of sacrilege, or wicked and abominable murders, or any other such crimes" (ibid. 113e); cf. Gorg. 525a-c; Rep. 10.443a, 560e. "Three nets of Belial" of CD 4.15–19 include fornication, wealth and defilement of the Temple (cf. three sins of 13:4S adjacent to the enigmatic reference to the wives brought out of the Temple).

²⁴⁷ Toepel, “Planetary.”

Names of vices and virtues were inscribed on the counters of a popular ancient "checkers" game.²⁴⁸ Reitzenstein shows that the systematizing of the numbers of vices and virtues was accomplished under the influence of cosmology: for example, expanded list of five elements; seven planets, twelve signs of the zodiac.²⁴⁹

Similar to 3 Bar. 4:17, the Testament of Judah connects wine with the list of vices: "Observe, therefore, my children, the right limit in wine; for there are in it four evil spirits: of lust, of hot desire, of profligacy, of filthy lucre" (16:1). R. Yohanan connects a long list of vices associated with wine to a biblical passage through a word-play: "Beware of a passion for wine, because in this passage on wine [Gen 9:20–25] way- [a beginning of waw-consecutive verbal forms presented here as "woe"] is written fourteen times" (Gen. Rab. 36.4).

Beasts Continued: Dimensions of Hades (5)

GREEK

¹ And I Baruch told the angel, "Let me ask you one thing, Lord. ² Since you told me that the dragon drinks one cubit from the sea, tell me also, how great is his belly?"

³ And the angel said, "His belly is Hades; and as far as lead is hurled by 300 men, so great is his belly.

Come, then, so that I may show you also works greater than these."

SLAVONIC

¹ And I Baruch told the angel, "Let me ask you, Lord, one more thing. ² Since you told me, that the serpent drinks one cubit of water from the sea a day, how great then is its belly that it drinks so much?"

³ And the angel told me, "Hades is insatiable. As far as 255 [?] of lead come, so great is its belly."

And he told me, "If you wish, come and I will show you mysteries greater than these."

²⁴⁸ See Deissmann, Light, 320ff.; Hughes, "Baruch," 529.

²⁴⁹ Hellenistic, 338–351. On the lists of vices in Hellenistic Jewish writings, see also Conzelmann, 1 Corinthians, 100.

NOTES

Family β of S places this chapter in 4:4, before the “vine excursus.” Since the text there is obviously revised, its transmission must be an editorial contribution to the coherency of the story.

5:1S. Thing. Lit. “word,” CS ΛΟΓΟ (Gk λόγος).

5:3G. As a lead is hurled [by] 300 men (ὅσον ἀνδρῶν τριακοσίων μόλιβδος ἄκοντίζεται). Lit. “as a hurled lead of 300 men.” Preposition ὑπό might have been dropped.²⁵⁰

5:3S. As far as 255 [?] of lead come, so great is its belly. Reading of ms T conforming G. Ms L has instead an explanatory reading: “As great is its belly, so great is Hades.” Ms T has probably a hapax НЕСЪКОВИН (ОЛОВА) “[?] of lead” (or “of tin”). It seems to be a verbal noun with a negative prefix НЕ- from the verb СЪКОВАТИ “forge.”

COMMENTARY

The narrative returns from the excursus on the Vine back to the heavenly Beasts. Whereas some commentators assumed the previous digression to be interpolated,²⁵¹ others suggested that ch. 5 is a later addition. Turdeanu argues this on the basis of the parallels in the Apocalypse of Paul and the Apocalypse of John, both giving the measurements of the subterranean abyss.²⁵² However, in 3 Baruch there are many other parallels with these works, and the question of mutual dependence remains open.²⁵³ On the Beasts see introductory comm. to ch. 4.

5:3. And as far as lead is hurled by 300 men, so great is his belly / As far as 255 [?] of lead come, so great is its belly. Since days of yore it is known that “A Tophet is prepared of old ... his firepit was made deep and wide” (Isa 30:33). A similar description is found in Hesiod:

a brazen anvil falling from earth nine nights and days would reach Tartarus upon the tenth ... It is a great gulf, and if once a man were within the gates, he would not reach the floor until a whole year had reached its end. (Theog. 713–48)

²⁵⁰ Ryssel, “Baruch,” 452.

²⁵¹ Like Wright, Heaven, 331.

²⁵² Turdeanu, “Baruch,” 24–26.

²⁵³ See Harlow, Baruch, 123; esp. on relative dating of these works in n. 43.

Hell is measured by throwing a stone:

And I inquired and said, "Lord, if these souls continue thus, thirty or forty generations being cast one upon another, if they be cast down yet deeper, I believe the pits would not contain them." And he said to me, "The abyss has no measure: for beneath it there follows also that which is beneath. And so it is that if a strong man took a stone and cast it into an exceeding deep well and after many hours it reaches the earth, so also is the abyss. For when the souls are cast therein, hardly after five hundred years do they come to the bottom." (Apoc. Paul 32)

As big a stone as a man of thirty years old can roll, and let go down into the depth, even falling down for twenty years it will not arrive at the bottom of Hades. (Apoc. John)

It has enormous dimensions or even cannot be measured:

The earth is one-sixtieth of the garden, the garden one-sixtieth of Eden, Eden is one-sixtieth of Gehenna. Hence the whole world is like a lid for Gehenna. Some say that Gehenna can not be measured. (b. Pesah. 94a; cf. b. Taan. 10a; Cant. Rab. 6.9; Pesiq. R. 41; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 71)

It is also a "womb:"

O womb [Hades] larger than a city! O womb wider than heavens! O womb that held the one whom seven heavens could never contain! Painlessly you held within your bosom him who was able to change into the smallest of things! O womb that hid the Messiah who became visible to many! O womb that became greater than the space of the entire creation! (Gos. Bart. 1:17)

Our text might be corrupt: the weight of the plummet is missing. It is possible that ἀνδρῶν τριακοσίων μόλιβδος "lead of 300 men" (see Notes) somehow goes back to its weight designation.

"Lead" of 3 Baruch corresponds to "stone" of the Apocalypse of Paul and the apocryphal Apocalypse of John. Heb אֵנֶךְ of Am 7:7–9 may refer to the lead plummet of the plumb line with which God tests his people. In LXX it was translated as Gk ἄδαμας "adamant," which may refer as to "steel" so also to "diamond." In Rabbinic Hebrew it means "plummet" (Lev. Rab. 33) as well as a kind of stone, "onyx." A combination of both, "stone of lead" (Heb אֵבֶן הַעֲפָרָה; Gk λίθος τοῦ μόλιβδου), is also attested. In Zech 5:8, the angel throws it into the mouth of Iniquity (Heb הַרְשָׁעָה). "Lead" and Gehenna are explicitly connected by Origen in his comment to this verse:

It is in the precincts of Jerusalem [where Gehenna is located], then, that punishments will be inflicted upon those who undergo the process of purification, who have received into the substance of their soul the elements of wickedness, which in a certain place is figuratively termed "lead," and on that account Iniquity is represented in Zechariah as sitting upon a "talent of lead." (Origen, Cels. 6.26)

The imagery of Flood, trees of Eden, abyss, the sun, and lead are united in a poetic fragment from Hodayot:

... they will become a f[llood for any ...] [למי מן] green and dry [tree]; an abyss for every wild animal and bi[rd ... as] lead in mighty water[s] [עפרת במים אדיר] fire and they dry up. But the planting of fruit [...] eternally, to a glorious Eden and frui[t] ... And by my hand you have opened their spring with streams [...] turning in accordance with the proper line, and the planting of their trees according to the plumb line of the sun ... (1QH^a 16[8].18–22)

Three hundred men. This might be the size of a regular military detachment, as in Judg 7:6ff. See the three hundred men killed by Abishai (2 Sam 23:18; 1 Chr 11:11) and by Jews in Susa (Esth 9:15); three hundred shields made for Solomon (1 Kgs 10:17); three hundred angels who “keep the Garden” in 2 En. (J) 8:8. The three hundred and eighteen warriors of Abraham in Gen 14:14 were interpreted as a regiment consisting of three “hundreds” with a commander and five “commanders of twenties” in each. Three hundred is a typological “exaggeration number” in Rabbinic literature. It is also a numerical value of Heb מעמקים “depths;” cf. “out of the depth of the belly of Hades” (Sir 51:5).

On obvious gematrias in 3 Baruch, cf. comm. to 4:7G; 4:10.

Come, then, so that I may show you also works greater than these / If you wish, come and I will show you mysteries greater than these (ἐλθέ οὖν ὅπως δείξω σοι καὶ μείζονα τούτων ἔργα / хоишеши ли приди и покажѣ ти таинѣ болюа чихѣ). The wording is almost identical to John: “For the father loves the son, and shows him all things that he does, and will show him works greater than these [καὶ μείζονα τούτων δείξω αὐτῷ ἔργα], so that you will marvel” (John 5:20).²⁵⁴ Both texts may allude to a pre-Christian source, like the verse of Ben Sira: “many things greater than these [μείζονα τούτων] lie hidden, for we have seen but few of his [God’s] works [ἔργων]” (Sir 43:32). On “greater mysteries” vs. “lesser” ones in Hellenistic mysterial terminology used also by Philo, see comm. to 1:6. However, “great, large” is a basic attribute of super-sized descriptions throughout Baruch’s journey: “door of great size” (2:2; cf. “large doors” in 3:1S; “large gates” on 11:2S); the thickness of heaven is “as great as is the distance from earth to heaven” (2:5); Builders dwell in a “great cell” (3:3S); Baruch is shown “great (and wonderful) things” (4:1); vine is a cause of “great evil” (4:9G); dragon’s ²⁵⁴ Cf. also “But unto the virgins, and unto them that hunger and thirst after righteousness and afflict themselves for the name of the Lord, God will give things seven-fold greater than these, which now I will show thee” (Apoc. Paul 22).

belly is “great” (5:1–3); letters on Phoenix’s wing are “very large,” “like the area of a threshing-floor, having the size of about 4,000 modia” (6:7); even the noise of celestial gates is “great as that of thirty cows” (6:13S; cf. Michael descending in “great sound” in 11:3); lightening sun is called “great glory,” which causes “great fear” (7:3G); there is a celestial “large lake of water” (10:2S) and a crane there is as big “as great oxen, and all the birds were bigger than those in the world” (10:3). Thus, also here the expression “greater works/mysteries” may simply indicate physically larger phenomena (sun, Phoenix, lake, birds, Michael’s bowl, etc.).

III. Lights or Interim Region

Sun, Sun Bird and Sun Protection (6:1–12)

GREEK

¹ And having taken me he brought me where the sun goes forth. ² And he showed me a chariot-of-four,

which was with a fire underneath.

And upon the chariot was sitting a man, wearing a crown of fire. The chariot was drawn by forty angels.

And behold, a bird was circling in front of the sun,

about nine [cubits] away.

³ And I told the angel, “What is this bird?” And he told me, “This is the guardian of the inhabited world.” ⁴ And I said, “Lord, how is it the guardian of the inhabited world? Show me!” ⁵ And the angel told me, “This bird goes before the sun, and stretching out its wings receives its fire-shaped rays. ⁶ For if it did not receive them, the race of men would not survive, nor any other living creature; though, God appointed this bird.”

⁷ And it stretched out its wings,

SLAVONIC

¹ And the angel took me and brought me from where the sun goes forth. ² And he showed me a chariot-of-four, and there were fiery horses, and the horses were winged angels.

And upon this chariot was sitting a man wearing a fiery crown. And the chariot was drawn by forty angels.

[And] behold, one bird is flying,

like one great mountain.

³ I told the angel, “Lord, what is this bird?” And he told me, “This is the guardian of the inhabited world.” ⁴ And I said, “How is it the guardian of the inhabited world? Show me!” ⁵ And the angel told me, “This bird, which goes before the sun, stretches out its wings and hides the fiery rays of the sun. ⁶ For if it did not hide the rays of the sun, the race of men and every creature on earth would not survive because of the flames of the sun. But God has commanded this bird to serve the inhabited world.

⁷ But look what is written on the right wing.” And he commanded the bird to stretch its wings, belly is “great” (5:1–3); letters on Phoenix’s wing are “very large,” “like the area of a threshing-floor, having the size of about 4,000 modia” (6:7); even the noise of celestial gates is “great as that of thirty cows” (6:13S; cf. Michael descending in “great sound” in 11:3); lightening sun is called “great glory,” which causes “great fear” (7:3G); there is a celestial “large lake of water” (10:2S) and a crane there is as big “as great oxen, and all the birds were bigger than those in the world” (10:3). Thus, also here the expression “greater works/mysteries” may simply indicate physically larger phenomena (sun, Phoenix, lake, birds, Michael’s bowl, etc.).

III. Lights or Interim Region

Sun, Sun Bird and Sun Protection (6:1–12)

GREEK

¹ And having taken me he brought me where the sun goes forth. ² And he showed me a chariot-of-four,

which was with a fire underneath.

And upon the chariot was sitting a man, wearing a crown of fire. The chariot was drawn by forty angels.

And behold, a bird was circling in front of the sun,

about nine [cubits] away.

³ And I told the angel, “What is this bird?” And he told me, “This is the guardian of the inhabited world.” ⁴ And I said, “Lord, how is it the guardian of the inhabited world? Show me!” ⁵ And the angel told me, “This bird goes before the sun, and stretching out its wings receives its fire-shaped rays. ⁶ For if it did not receive them, the race of men would not survive, nor any other living creature; though, God appointed this bird.”

⁷ And it stretched out its wings,

SLAVONIC

¹ And the angel took me and brought me from where the sun goes forth. ² And he showed me a chariot-of-four,

and there were fiery horses, and the horses were winged angels.

And upon this chariot was sitting a man wearing a fiery crown. And the chariot was drawn by forty angels.

[And] behold, one bird is flying,

like one great mountain.

³ I told the angel, “Lord, what is this bird?” And he told me, “This is the guardian of the inhabited world.” ⁴ And I said, “How is it the guardian of the inhabited world? Show me!” ⁵ And the angel told me, “This bird, which goes before the sun, stretches out its wings and hides the fiery rays of the sun. ⁶ For if it did not hide the rays of the sun, the race of men and every creature on earth would not survive because of the flames of the sun. But God has commanded this bird to serve the inhabited world.

⁷ But look what is written on the right wing.” And he commanded the bird to stretch its wings, and I saw on its right wing very large letters, like the area of a threshing-floor, having the size of about 4,000 modia. And the letters were of gold.

⁸ And the angel told me, “Read them.” And I read and they said thus: “Neither earth nor heaven give me birth, but wings of fire give me birth.”

⁹ And I said, “Lord, what is this bird, and what is its name?” ¹⁰ And the angel told me, “Its name is called Phoenix.” ¹¹ [And I said], “And what does it eat?” And he told me, “The manna of heaven and the dew of earth.” ¹² And I said, “Does the bird excrete?”

And he told me, “It excretes a worm, and the excrement of the worm becomes to cinnamon, which kings and princes use.

But wait and you will see the Glory of God.”

and I saw letters, like a threshing floor on earth, of 4,000. Those letters were purer than gold.

⁸ And he told me, “Read them!” And I read them and they said thus: “Neither earth nor heaven give me birth, but wings of fire give me birth.

And the birds seek me.”

⁹ I Baruch said, “Lord, what is the name of this bird?” ¹⁰ And he told me, “Phoenix.” ¹¹ I Baruch said, “What does it eat?” And the angel told me, “Heavenly manna.” ¹² And I said, “Does it produce excrement?”

He told me, “Yes, it produces. Its excrement becomes the black cumin, with which kings are anointed.

And again he told me, “Wait, Baruch, and you will see the Glory of God; see what will happen to this bird outstripping the sun.”

NOTES

6:2G. Chariot-of-four (τετραέλαστος). Hapax legomenon; cf. Heb (י)טַרְמָנוּלִי from also unattested elsewhere Gk τετράμουλος referring to God’s quadriga (Tan. Ki Tissa 21; Exod. Rab. 3; 42; 43).

6:2G. Circling before (περιτρέχον). Or “outstripping.” Cf. прѣтєкѣши “outstripping” in 6:12S below.

6:2. About nine [cubits] away / like one great mountain (ὥς ὅρει ἐννέα / ἰακο βεληια γορα ιεληια). This probably corrupted and elliptic reading is similar to ὥς ἀπὸ πηχῶν ἐννέα “about nine cubits” of Disp. Panagiot (most probably based on 3 Baruch). Cf. 2 En. 12, where the size of phoenixes and chalkydri is “nine hundred measures.” James proposes to read in 3 Baruch: ὥς ὅρη ἐννέα “like nine mountains.” In this direction the text was understood also by a Slavic translator: “like one great mountain,” which might be either a misreading of Gk ὥς ὅρη [ὅρει] ἐννέα or rendering of original Gk ὥς ὅρος ἐν. Moulton proposed to reconstruct Gk ὥς ὄρεύων “as a guard,” although this use of the word is very rare.²⁵⁵

6:5G. Goes before (παρὰτρέχει). Thus it is translated in S: прѣдѣ сѣньицѣмѣ ходитѣ. Also possible: “accompanies,” “outstrips.” Cf. περιτρέχον in 6:2G and прѣтекжши in 6:12S.

6:7. Like the area of a threshing-floor, having the size of about 4,000 modia (ὥς ἄλωνος τόπον ἔχων μέτρον ὥσει μωδίων τετρακισχιλίων). Why to compare letters’ size to a threshing-floor? Heb יָרֵג may mean also “plaza” (1 Kgs 22:10; 2 Chr 18:9); cf. 1 En. 56:6: “And the land of his elect ones shall be before them a threshing-floor and a highway.” In early Greek ἄλωϛ/ἄλων may mean also “sun disk” or “shield.”

6:10. Phoenix (Φοῖνιξ / φοῦνικς LB финицъ S фoуницъ N поуниза Z финикосъ PVID).

6:12S. Its excrement becomes the black cumin ... anointed. This passage occurs only in ms B. CS кoуманѣ “cumin” instead of кинamonѣ is used, probably as a result of corruption. Ms B continues with probably an interpolation: “There was a king, and he had no cumin in the vessel [or “weapon,” CS сѣсѣдѣ]. When the king rose to a war, another struck, and there was a great tumult [CS звѣжкѣ “sound,” and also “clamor, tumult” like Gk θόρυβος].” Family β has a variation: “This bird produces excrement of quince [κιδони, in place of кинamonѣ “cinnamon”]. Because this bird wakes up the kings, and the king does not reign without cinnamon, but he is anointed with it, when 40 armed guards guard the king near the throne.” Both versions look corrupt; however, only they, in distinction to ms L, mention cinnamon (although corrupted) in accordance with G.

COMMENTARY

Solar Motifs

The author of 3 Baruch assigns to the sun more lines than to any other phenomenon described in the work. Almost a quarter of the whole vision (chapters 6–8) deals with the sun and the Sun Bird which here is named Phoenix. The sun is mentioned in G fifteen times (while in the whole work God is referred to thirty-five times). There are ten question-answer sequences in the section devoted to the sun, more than in any other section. The explanation of such extreme interest may lie in the special role of heliolatry in the surrounding society, its elements in Jewish cult, and possibly implied polemics with it.²⁵⁶

²⁵⁵ Hughes, “Baruch,” 536; Broek, Myth, 252

²⁵⁶ Cf. Harlow, Baruch, 131. This is the view of Dean-Otting (“Baruch,” 137–48). Himmelfarb, on the contrary, regards 3 Baruch as providing “a way of integrating reverence of the sun into a monotheistic system” (Ascent, 143).

A vision of the sun could be a central point of pagan mystical revelations as well. Moreover, the proximity of the images of Hades and the sun is not unique to 3 Baruch. See the description of the Isis mystery in Corinth:

I approached Death, the gates of Proserpine, and after that, I was ravished throughout all the Elements and returned to my place. In midnight I saw the Sun shining. I saw likewise the gods celestial and gods infernal, before whom I presented myself, and worshiped them. (Apuleius, Metam. 11.23)²⁵⁷

1. Sun and cultic practices. Conceptions of the sun as animated and divine being are widely known, from early Near Eastern and Mediterranean cults to syncretic solar pantheism and philosophical traditions of the late antiquity. In ancient scientific (philosophical) tradition since Plato (e.g., Tim. 30b) and Aristotle, heavenly bodies were also considered animated and divine. This idea, unorthodox for later Christianity, was developed by Origen (Princ. 1.7; Cels. 5.11). In the Hellenistic world there were first of all Stoics who believed in the absolute supremacy of the sun which, in their view, actually ruled the world. Similarly, in 3 Baruch the sun is crowned (6:2; 7:4; 8:3–4) and compared to “the king” (9:8). Solar cults became popular in late Rome, and their elements were incorporated into the cult of emperors. The sun-like crown became an emperor’s attribute from the time of Caligula (as with the Seleucids and Ptolemies).²⁵⁸ Aurelian founded a temple of Sol Invictus (374 CE).²⁵⁹ The image of Mithras, closely associated with the cult of the sun and light, also included a chariot drawn by four horses. These developments, alien to early Greek and Roman beliefs, possibly took place owing to the influence of the immediate neighbors of the Jews in the East.²⁶⁰

As for solar motifs in late Jewish sources, they were not necessarily borrowed from the Hellenistic environment. Early internal roots for Jewish interest in the celestial bodies, and specifically the sun, should not be neglected. Mythological (most probably more than poetic or allegorical) personification of both luminaries is widespread in early Jewish thought.²⁶¹

²⁵⁷ Cf. Papyrus Rhind I (after the second half of the 1st cent. BC) which lists the following as objects of veneration: sun, moon, three elements (without earth), and the dead (Reitzenstein, Hellenistic, 274).

²⁵⁸ Philo, Leg. 14. See comm. on “crown” in 6:2.

²⁵⁹ See Halsberghe, Cult, 27–54.

²⁶⁰ See Dean-Otting’s excursus on “the role of the sun in antiquity” (Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 137–148).

²⁶¹ See 1 En. 2:1–5; 3; Pss. Sol. 18:10–12; Philo, Plant. 3.12; Somn. 1.4; 2.16; Opif. 24.73; Gig. 2.8; Apoc. Paul 4–6; Tg. Ps.-Jon. Gen 1:16 and Num 28:15; Gen. Rab. 6.3; Mek., Bo 1, 3a; b. Sanh 42a; b. Hul 60b; b. Sheb 9a; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 5.54a; Pesiq. R. 15.78a; Tan. B. 2.47; Pirque R. El. 4 and 51.

Solar imagery was integrated in Jewish cult practices long before an encounter of Jews with the Hellenistic civilization and was probably shared with Babylonian and Assyrian cultures. Dangers of the worship of luminaries are known to the biblical texts; see, e.g., Deut 4:19; 17:3 (cf. Temple Scroll [11Q19] 55.15–21; 2 Kgs 21:3–5; 23:11; Ezek 8:16 (cf. Jer 2:27); Job 31:26 (esp. LXX); and probably Isa 24:23. Even the specific image of the sun chariot is attested: “He [king Josiah] removed from the entrance to the Temple of the Lord the horses that the kings of Judah had dedicated to the sun [...] Josiah then burned the chariots dedicated to the sun” (2 Kgs 23:11). Archeological findings from the period of Israeli monarchy may corroborate this evidence: small figures of horses with a disk between their ears have been interpreted as “sun horses;”²⁶² note, in addition, sun disks with winged scarabs on the seals from the same period.²⁶³ Later tannaim forbade the use of solar images even for non-cultic purposes; so m. Abod. Zar. 3.3 (cf. t. Abod. Zar. 6; b. Abod. Zar. 42b), which adduces images of the sun and moon together with the image of dragons. See further the sun worship witnessed in Gen. Rab. 50.12; b. Ber. 7a; b. Abod. Zar. 4a–b; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 2.13. At the same time, solar images appear in positive contexts in Isa 60:1–3; Mal 3:20; Ps 19 and pass.; LXX 1 Kgs (3 Kgs) 8:53. Some even believe that the sun was an integral part of early Israelite/Canaanite religion with its rudiments preserved in the Jerusalem Temple cult.²⁶⁴ See also Qumranic practice of praying towards the sunrise (i.e., turning backs to the Temple located to the west of Qumran; cf. Josephus on the Essenes’ reverence of the sun in Bell. 2.128, 148).²⁶⁵ Helios and Jewish divine epithets appear together also in the later magical texts (PGM IV.1484). The eclectic combination of Jewish and heliolatrous elements is also attested in abundance in other Greek magic papyri.²⁶⁶ The solar cult might be implied as a dominant one in the image of the most superior golden God Zoukhe of Apoc. Abr. 6:7. The same name (Gk Ζουχῆ) occurs in a prayer to Helios in magic papyri (PGM IV.1983).²⁶⁷ A Greek prayer to Helios transliterated with Hebrew letters is found in Sefer HaRazim 4.²⁶⁸ Christian authors described Christ as

²⁶² See Kenyon. Digging, 142; idem, “Mystery.”

²⁶³ Cross, “King.”

²⁶⁴ See Taylor, Yahweh; Wiggins “Yahweh”; Smith, “Helios”; id. “Case”; Rendsburg, “Egyptian”; Smith, “Near Eastern”; Dever, “Silence”; Keel “Sturmogott”; and Rosen, “Shrine.” Cf. also Wright, Heaven 235–236, nn. 43–46.

²⁶⁵ See Smith, “Case.”

²⁶⁶ See the survey in Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 141–145.

²⁶⁷ See Preisendanz, Papyri, 3.222–223; Kulik, Retroverting, 89–90.

²⁶⁸ Margalioth, Sefer, 71; Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 139–40.

“the sun of the world” and opposed the “sun of righteousness/victory” (Heb שמש צדקת; Gk ἡλίου δικαιοσύνης) of Mal 3:20 (4:2) to sol invictus of pagans (Leo, Serm. 27; Nativ. Dom. 7.3; Eusebius of Alexandria, Or. 6).²⁶⁹

2. Solar imagery. Whatever the attitudes to the sun and sun worship in different Jewish milieus, the topic remained ever actual and important. Early Jewish sources contain abundant evidence of solar imagery without explicit cultic references. Solar images, and specifically the sun chariot, are known from 1 En. 72:4–5; 75:4 (also on the moon – 73:2 and stars – 75:3, 8), where the chariots are driven by the winds (or “spirits,” i.e., angels). Many parallels to the sun and moon chariots of 3 Baruch are found in 2 En.: their chariots are driven and accompanied by angels (2 En. 11:3–5; 12 (A):2; 14 (J):3; see the “chariot” in place of “wheels” in some mss of 2 En. 11:2 and (14:4) and the wheel-derived names of angels Galgaliel and Ofaniel); the sun’s crown is taken away and brought back by four (or four hundred in J) angels (2 En. 14:2–3). Phoenixes and chalkydri sing: “The light-giver is coming to give radiance to the whole world” (2 En. (J) 15:2; as in 3 Baruch 6:14). Whereas in the extant version of 3 Baruch the sun and moon are located (together with the Serpent and Hades) in the third heaven,²⁷⁰ in 2 Enoch these luminaries are located in the fourth heaven; on the other hand, in Midr. Pss. 19.13 and Pesiq. R. 19 they are located in the second (see comm. to 6:6 below).²⁷¹ Joseph is likened to “the sun coming to us from heaven in his chariot” (Jos. Asen. 6:5).

But the closest parallels to the description of 3 Baruch come from iconography. The crowned sun riding on the chariot-of-four, widely known from Greek tradition, is found on mosaic pavements in at least seven late antique Palestinian synagogues (Hammam Tiberias, Khirbet Susiya, Na’aran, Husifa, Yafia, Beit Alpha and Sepphoris) and also on Jewish amulets. Such pavements are not found in the decoration of churches or in synagogues of the Diaspora and are extremely rare in pagan buildings throughout the world (only three have been found).²⁷² They contain the elements

²⁶⁹ See Fideler, Jesus.

²⁷⁰ Although it is never stated explicitly, it may be derived from 7:2 and from 4:2 understood as a journey to the third heaven (although the number is not mentioned). Thus the reading of 10:1 speaks on a journey to the fourth heaven; see comments to 4:2, 10:1; and introductory comm. to ch. 11.

²⁷¹ As probably in an older version of 3 Bar., see introductory comm. to ch. 11.

²⁷² Roussin, “Sun,” 53. Cf. Goodenough, Jewish, 2.121 ff.; 4.3–62; Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 146–147; Hachlili, Ancient, 301–309, pls. 71–78 (cf. eadem, “Zodiac”); Weiss, “Sepphoris.”

included also in the description of 3 Baruch, like a four-horse chariot, a nimbus (crown of 3 Baruch) above the head of a human figure riding on it, and rays emanating from the figure.²⁷³

There were different attempts to explain such an introduction of the well known idolatrous images into Jewish cultic context. Some supposed actual worship.²⁷⁴ However, this theory is based upon evidence that belongs mostly to the First Temple period (see above). The appearance of the same images in the clearly monotheistic contexts of 3 Baruch and 2 Enoch show that the pavements have nothing to do with an actual solar cult. Another suggestion ascribes the images to angelic worship (cf. comm. to ch. 12: Angelic Intercession). Also for some Greek sources Helios is not a god but a titan (Anacreontea, Fr. 46; Ovid, Her. 15.135; Seneca, Herc. Fur. 1060ff; etc.) and is only “like the deathless gods” (Homeric Hymn 31). Luminaries were often equated with angels (e.g., Ps 148:1–4). It was believed that the sun was commanded by God not directly but “by the command of his servants” (ἐν ἐπιταγῇ δούλων αὐτοῦ; Pss. Sol. 18:12). The figure of Helios is found on Jewish amulets together with the names of angels.²⁷⁵ Jewish angelic worship integrating luminaries is witnessed by Clement of Alexandria: “they adore angels and archangels, the months and the moon” (Strom. 6.5.41). Astrological beliefs could also have been a factor. Astrological texts are found, for example, in Qumran and Geniza (4Q186; 4Q318; 4Q561; Cambridge Geniza MS T-S H 11.51; T-S K 21.95.L).²⁷⁶ They are also attested in Treat. Shem 2 and 8:12. Abraham taught astrology to Egyptians and Enoch founded this discipline (Artapanus, En. tois Ioudaikois in Eusebius’ Pr. Ev. 9.18; Ps.-Eupolemus in ibid. 9.17.8). R. Hanina recognized planetary influence on Jews (b. Shab. 156a–b). Twelve “zodiacs” are mentioned in 2 En. 21:7; 30:5–6 (cf. twelve “portals” in 1 En. 72 and 75). On the other hand, astrology is condemned in 1 En. 8:3; Jub. 12:16–18. Abraham was commanded to reject astrology, opposed to prophecy, in Gen. Rab. 44:8–12; cf. b. Shab. 156a–b.²⁷⁷ How-

²⁷³ Dean-Otting mentions a winged chariot which appears on a coin from the Persian period with inscription yhd (Judea), but there can be no certainty that it is a sun-chariot (“Baruch,” 169, n. 91; Momigliano, Alien, 80).

²⁷⁴ “Helios on synagogue pavements represents a minor deity to whom some members of the congregation might have addressed prayers – not to the image itself, but to the deity it represents” (Roussen, “Sun”); cf. Smith, “Goodenough’s,” 61.

²⁷⁵ Goodenough, Jewish, 2.258f; 3. 1116–17; Bonner, Magical, 148ff., 291, n. 227.

²⁷⁶ See Greenfield, Sokoloff, “Astrological.”

²⁷⁷ For ambivalent references to astrology in Rabbinic literature, see Ginzberg, Legends, 1.235; 5.227; Urbach, Sages, 1.277.

ever, modern terminology may be misleading; the interest in celestial bodies and even in their personification does not always reflect a belief in their influence on human destiny on earth; it could be an interest in what we today would call “astronomy,” which was not distinguished from “astrology” in the period under discussion.²⁷⁸ Such an interest, which is far from astrology or religious syncretism, is evident in 1 En. 72–82; 2 En. 11–15.

Most probably, we are dealing with universal imagery of late antiquity, an element of a meta-language used even by those who condemned syncretism or monotheistic deviations such as astrology or angel worship. Thus, Philo (Migr. 32) and probably Josephus (Bell. 5.5.4; 6.5.3) explicitly reject astrology while widely using its imagery (Philo, Quaest. Gen. 4.164; Quaest. Exod. 2.75–78.109, 112–14; cf. also Somn. 1.214; Her. 176; Praem. 65; Josephus, Bell. 5.5.5). As this imagery decorated the language and narrative of Hellenistic authors, so also it decorated their physical environment. Tg. Ps.-Jon. Lev 26:1 refers to the halachic permissibility of such imagery in mosaic pavements (as opposed to “figured stone”) in “places of worship” on the condition that they are not venerated (cf. m. Abod. Zar. 4.4 on a “profaned idol” losing its religious significance).²⁷⁹

The image of a crowned sun charioteer was adopted also in Rabbinic thought (Pirke R. El. 6; Num. Rab. 12; Baraita deMaase Bereshit 50), although it is difficult to distinguish between the Greek image of a crowned figure riding the chariot and a Jewish image of a wreathed groom sitting on the throne, since the sun is likened to a groom in Ps 19:6(5) (for the Jewish custom of wreathes for bridegrooms, see m. Sotah 9.14).²⁸⁰ This brings us to a more general problem of discerning between the sun chariot and the throne of Glory.

3. Sun Chariot vs. Throne of Glory. Quadriga was an attribute not only of Helios but also of Zeus/Jupiter and other deities. Heavenly chariots (sometimes of fire) – however, not as sun chariots, but as a means of transportation of visionaries and angels to heaven – appear in 2 Kgs 2:11 (“chariots of fire and horses of fire”); 1 En. 70:2; T. Abr. 9; 11; 15; Apoc. Mos. 33:2 (“a chariot of light, born by four bright eagles”); and Jos. Asen. 17:6 (an angelic fiery chariot-of-four returns into heaven towards the east).

²⁷⁸ See Charlesworth, “Jewish”; Stuckrad, “Jewish.”

²⁷⁹ See Charlesworth, “Jewish,” 199. Charlesworth also refers to the conception of Urbach’s argument for purely a decorative function of such images based on m. Abod. Zar. 4.4 and Tg. Ps.-Jon. to Lev 26:1. See Urbach, “Rabbinical,” 149–65, 229–45.

²⁸⁰ Cf. Ginzberg, Legends, 5.36.

Chariot (and especially fiery or chariot-of-four), or the fiery Throne, is in fact an important divine attribute. “God of heaven” rides in a chariot (often fiery) in Isa 66:15; Hab 3:8; Ps 68:18(17); etc. Fire burns under the Divine Throne in 1 En. 14:19 (as in 3 Bar. 6:2G). The Throne itself is fiery in Dan 7:9 and Apoc. Abr. 18:3. The image of God’s chariot was adopted by Philo (Somn. 1.25; Her. 42; 48; Fug. 19; Conf. 28; Monarch. 1.1; cf. Plato, Phaedr. 2.46). On the four faces of the Living Creatures carrying the Throne-Chariot, see b. Hag. 13b. Heb טַטְרָאוּלִי (from Gk τετραμούλος, unattested elsewhere) designating God’s quadriga appears in Tan. Ki Tissa 21; Exod. Rab. 3; 42; 43. Dean-Otting proposes a connection between God’s chariots and those of the sun in 3 Baruch: “the group of forty angels drawing the chariot is a parallel to the ever-present heavenly host which serves the Deity in the highest heavens. That Baruch has been promised a view of the δόξα θεοῦ and immediately looks upon the sun-chariot instead has elevated the tension of this passage.”²⁸¹ Thus, according to this interpretation, it is almost a Merkavah vision. Gruenwald goes even further, suggesting that “the vision of the sun in the third heaven actually is an allegorical Merkavah vision.”²⁸²

Sun Bird

The image of the Sun Bird in 3 Baruch presents a unique combination of Jewish and Hellenistic traditions, some of which may have common oriental roots.

1. Non-Jewish Phoenix. The phoenix as a resurrecting bird or a sun bird is normally attributed to Egyptian provenance; however, the motif is known from India to Greece. Most Greek sources indeed refer to Egyptian tradition (Hesiod, Frag. 204 apud Plutarch, Def. Or.;²⁸³ Herodotus, Hist. 2.73;²⁸⁴ Antiphanes, Frag. 175 apud Athenaeus, Deipn. 14.655b; Pliny, ²⁸¹ Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 128.

²⁸² Gruenwald, Apocalyptic, 69.

²⁸³ “The cawing crow lives for nine generations of young [var: “old”] men, but the deer four times longer than the crow; the raven reaches the age of three deer, but the phoenix of nine ravens; we, however, the fair-haired nymphs, daughters of aegis-bearing Zeus, reach the age of ten phoenixes.”

²⁸⁴ “Another bird also is sacred; it is called the phoenix. I myself have never seen it, but only pictures of it; for the bird comes but seldom into Egypt, once in five hundred years, as the people of Heliopolis say. It is said that the phoenix comes when his father dies. If the picture truly shows his size and appearance, his plumage is partly golden but mostly red. He is most like an eagle in shape and bigness. The Egyptians tell a tale of this bird’s devices which I do not believe. He comes, they say, from Arabia bringing Nat. Hist. 10.4; etc.). Core elements of the image of the phoenix are: it is normally solitary and unique in its kind;²⁸⁵ eternal life or resurrection (sometimes through burning); its home or origin is in the east (close to the sun's rising) or some other kind of relation to the sun; no or ephemeral nourishment; a bed of spices (on which the phoenix immolates itself); a worm which, rising out of the cinders of the old phoenix, becomes a new one. The phoenix became an emblematic image for some Gnostic groups, and was closely connected to Gnostic baptismal concepts.²⁸⁶ Very popular in Christian iconography, in patristic tradition, the phoenix signified the resurrection of Jesus (Clement of Rome, 1 Ep. Cor. 1.25–26; Tertullian, Res. Carn. 1.13; Lactantius, Carmen de ave phoenice 169–70; etc.).²⁸⁷

1.1. Resurrection. The motif of resurrection, which seems to be the raison d'être of the Hellenistic image, is absent from 3 Baruch. The rebirth in fire may be only implied in 6:8: “Neither earth nor heaven give me birth, but wings of fire give me birth.”²⁸⁸ The dew on which Phoenix feeds (with manna; see 6:11G; in S – only manna), may also be connected to resurrection motifs (see comm. on “dew of heaven” in 10:9).

Two other motifs common to our Phoenix and the Hellenistic one are the worm and cinnamon excreted by it (6:12; (in S – only cinnamon)).

1.2. Worm. The question of Baruch, whether the Bird excretes at all, following the description of its unsubstantial diet of manna and dew, resembles Pliny's notion that “nobody ever saw the phoenix taking any food” (Nat. Hist. 10.4) and especially Plutarch's account of a little Persian bird, “with no excrement in its guts, so that it is thought that it lives by air and dew” (Artax. 19.3). The phoenix's excretion of worms seems unique for 3 Baruch. The phenomenon of excrement producing worms is known in Rabbinic his father to the Sun's temple enclosed in myrrh, and there buries him. His manner of bringing is this: first he moulds an egg of myrrh as heavy as he can carry, and when he has proved its weight by lifting it he then hollows out the egg and puts his father in it, covering over with more myrrh the hollow in which the body lies; so the egg being with his father in it of the same weight as before, the phoenix, after enclosing him, carries him to the temple of the Sun in Egypt. Such is the tale of what is done by this bird.”

²⁸⁵ Except Antiphanes and 2 Enoch, where pl. “phoenixes” are mentioned, and Nag Hammadi On the Origin of the World, speaking on three phoenixes (161–79).

²⁸⁶ Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 130.

²⁸⁷ See Broek, Myth, 31–43, 119–132.

²⁸⁸ Angelic rebirth of Enoch also happens through fire (3 Enoch).

zoology, where the excrement of young ravens abandoned by their parents is said to produce worms upon which the young feed during the first days of their lives (Lev. Rab. 19; Pirke R. El. 21; Midr. Sam. 5.57). However, other ways to generate worms are attested for the phoenix: a worm is generated from the dead phoenix as a larva for a new one (Pliny, Nat. Hist. 10.2);²⁸⁹ in the Nag Hammadi On the Origin of the World the “worm that has been born out of the phoenix is a human being.” At the same time, the Rabbinic counterpart to the Phoenix, Ziz, is homonymic to Rabbinic Hebrew “worm, insect” (Tg. Ps.-Jon. Deut 14:19; Sifra, Shemini 10.12; y. Ter. 8.45b; b. Hul. 67b).

1.3. Cinnamon. There are many fabulous accounts about the origin of cinnamon in antiquity (Herodotus, Hist. 3.110f.; Pliny, Nat. Hist. 12.89–94; Arrian, Anab. 7.20; Theophrastus, Hist. Plant. 9.5.1f.). The phoenix is the one who brought cinnamon to men and is consecrated to the sun (Theophrastus, Hist. Plant. 9.5.6; Pliny, Nat. Hist. 12.89). In many sources it is an element of the phoenix’s nest (Ovid, Met. 15.385; cf. the same but with “cinnamon birds” in Herodotus, Hist. 3.11; Aristotle, Hist. Anim. 9.13; Pliny, Nat. Hist. 10.97) or it is among the funeral bed of spices for the phoenix’s self-conflagration.²⁹⁰

In Jewish lore cinnamon might have a celestial origin: Enoch finds cinnamon in heaven (1 En. 30:3 and 32:1). Adam brings it among other species from Paradise (Apoc. Mos. 29:6). Its use was prescribed for making the anointing-oil (Exod 39:23). Whereas some mss of S speak definitely of the use of cinnamon for coronation anointing, in G the purpose for which “kings and princes use” it is not mentioned (besides anointing, it could have been used also for embalming, as it was in ancient Egypt).

The name, birth of fire, worm, and cinnamon are details which may be regarded as common to our Sun Bird and Hellenistic phoenix. It is notable, however, that all these are concentrated in a small fragment at the very end of the description of the Bird (6:8–12) and thus might have been added in the process of the Hellenization of the story.

The differences between our Phoenix and the typical Hellenistic descriptions (see 3.1–2 below) prompted scholars to trace its origin to gigantic or ²⁸⁹ See Broek, 187, 214–216.

²⁹⁰ See Broek, 164–170. Cinnamon was used to aromatize sacrificial fires and smoke (Ovid, Fast. 3.731).

sun birds of India²⁹¹ or Persia.²⁹² However, (1) there are no convincing arguments of such direct influence on 3 Baruch, while (2) almost every motif common to 3 Baruch and oriental traditions appears also in other Jewish, mainly Rabbinic, texts. Thus, for the period of creation of 3 Baruch we may consider these non-Hellenistic motifs as Jewish, whatever their oriental sources may ultimately have been.

2. Early Jewish Phoenix. So called “phoenixes and chalkydri” (in plural; in fact, according to some mss of 2 Enoch (ms R = NLB 321) they are just “like phoenixes and chalkydri”) accompany the sun in 2 Enoch. After the vision of the sun and its route in the fourth heaven, Enoch is shown “flying spirits:”

the solar elements, called phoenixes and chalkydri, strange and wonderful, for their form was that of a lion, their tail was that of a [?], and their head that of a crocodile. Their appearance was multi-colored, like a rainbow. Their size was 900 measures. Their wings were those of angels, but they have twelve wings each. They accompany and run with the sun, carrying heat and dew, and whatever is commanded them from God. (2 En. (J) 12:1–2)

When the sun rises, they greet it (as in 3 Bar. 6:14S):

the elements of the sun, called phoenixes and chalkydri break into song, herefore every bird flutters with its wings, rejoicing at the giver of light, and they broke into song at the command of the Lord. (2 En. (J) 15:1)

In 2 En. (J) 15:2 they also pronounce, “The Light giver is coming to give radiance to the whole world” (as in 3 Bar. 6:14S).

Among the angels of the sixth heaven there are more phoenixes:

six phoenixes and six cherubim and six six-winged ones continually with one voice singing one voice, and it is not possible to describe their singing, and they rejoice before the Lord at his footstool. (2 En. 19:6)²⁹³

²⁹¹ James, “Baruch,” xliii; cf. Toy, Ginzberg: “It is perhaps the one Jewish work which undoubtedly betrays Indian influence. The phoenix, referred to in this Apocalypse as the companion of the sun, and the wonderful description of it, are probably of Indian origin; for Indian mythology relates much that is similar concerning the bird Garuda, the companion of the sun-god Vishnu (“Mahabharata Adi Parva,” xvi.-xxxiv).” (“Baruch,” 551).

²⁹² Broek, Myth, 267–68; Ginzberg traces Rabbinic cosmic birds to the sacred rooster of Avesta (Ginzberg, Legends, 5.48).

²⁹³ Cf. also Lactantius, Carmen de ave phoenix 33–54, probably in dependence on 2 Enoch. Similar traditions are preserved in texts posterior to 3 Baruch, of which at least some may be dependent on it (Laevius, Pterigion Phoenixis; Byzantine Physiologus; Disputatio Panagiotae). In some of these sources magic birds also moderate

Very similar description appears in the Slavonic About all Creation:

There is a Rooster that has a head up to heaven, and the sea is up to its knees.²⁹⁴ When the sun bathes in the Ocean, then the Ocean surges and waves start to beat the Rooster's feathers. And having felt the waves it says, "Kukoreku," which means, "Light giver, give light to the world." When it sings, then all the roosters sing at the same hour in the whole inhabited world.²⁹⁵

Ezekiel the Tragedian in his Exagoge (254–69; apud Eusebius, Pr. Ev. 9.29) describes in detail the appearance of a very special bird, which was "full wondrous, such as man has never seen; it was near in scope to twice the size of an eagle"; "its voice pre-eminent of every other winged thing"; and "it seemed to be the king of birds, for all the birds, as one, in fear did haste to follow after him, and he before, like some triumphant bull, went striding forth with rapid step apace."²⁹⁶ Since the description might be connected to the palms of Elim in Exod 15:27, and LXX there uses a homonym Gk φοῖνιξ for a palm-tree (Heb תמר), it is very probable that the name "Phoenix" is implied. The fragment appears also in Pseudo-Eustatius, Commentarius in Hexaemeron (PG 18.729D), where the bird is presented as "Phoenix."²⁹⁷

3. Rabbinic phoenix and sun birds. Many of the "universal" traditions on the phoenix or the Sun Bird, and associated images were well known to Rabbis. It has been recognized that the mythic birds Ziz, Ben Nets, Field Rooster (תרנגול ברא), Bar Yokni, Hol (of Job 28:18), Urshina, and Malham the sun's radiation (see James, "Baruch," lxiv; Ryssel, "Baruch," 452; Broek 261f; 287–297). Griffin of Byzantine Physiologus (52) shares also the unique motif of the inscription on the bird's wings (3 Bar. 6:7–8). Moreover, these words are almost identical to 3 Bar. 6:14: "O Light giver, give light to the world!" (Harlow, Baruch, 137; cf. also in Slavonic versions of Physiologus; Belova, Bestiarij, 92; 283). Phoenix was supposed to speak on himself on his wings in the technopaegnic poem by Laevius Pterygion Phoenicis (apud Charisius, Ars Grammatica 4.6; see Broek 268–269). An untitled astrological work also mentions griffin which screens the rays of the sun, defending earth. It loses its feathers from much heat and has to purify itself each day in the Nile. It also carries a rooster, which announces the hours of the day. This work contains also the account of the 365 gates of heaven, mentioned in 3 Baruch close to Phoenix (6:13), and explaining that the sun enters a different gate each day (the explanation which is lacking in 3 Baruch). The same work mentions that the sun receives its light from God's throne (Shangin, Codices, 107; Broek, Myth, 273).

²⁹⁴ Cf. "A bird standing up to its ankles in the water while its head reached the sky" (b. B. Bat. 73b).

²⁹⁵ Tikhonravov, Pamiatniki, 2.349f.

²⁹⁶ Translation by R. G. Robertson, "Ezekiel," 819.

²⁹⁷ Cf. Wacholder, Bowman ("Ezechielus") who argue against this identification.

of Rabbinic aggadah share many features with the Hellenistic phoenix, and with Phoenix of 3 Baruch.²⁹⁸ In fact, these images must represent two clearly distinct traditions which seem to fuse only in late sources. These are the traditions of the Resurrecting Bird and of the Gigantic Bird.

3.1. Bird of Resurrection. Rabbinic sources clearly distinguish between the two phenomena, consistently using different names for the Gigantic Bird, on the one hand, and, on the other, for the immortal or resurrecting bird known as Hol (Gen. Rab. 19.5 referring to Job 29:18; the same must have been a tradition underlying LXX Job 29:19; Tan. Intr. 155; Midr. Sam. 12.81), Urshina (b. Sanh. 108b) or Malham/Maltam (2 Alphabet Ben Sira 27a–29b; Bet HaMidr. 6.12).

Both Hol and Ziz are treated in adjacent chapters of Genesis Rabba, both in connection with the fall of the first humans (including the images of the Tree and the serpent), but not identified with each other. Hol refuses to eat from the Tree of Knowledge (in distinction to other animals) that gave him an eternal life:

... it lives a thousand years and at the end of thousand years a fire issues from its nest and burns it until as much as an egg is left of it. Then it grows limbs again and lives. (Gen. Rab. 19.5; cf. Tan. Intr. 155; Midr. Sam. 12.81)

In distinction to Phoenix of 3 Baruch and the Gigantic Bird of Rabbinic tradition, these birds are not gargantuan at all:

Father [Noah] found Urshina lying in the back of the ark. He asked it, “Do you not want any food?” It replied, “I saw that you were very busy and I did not want to burden you.” He [Noah] said, “May it be his will that you may never die, as it is written, “I thought I shall die with my nest and multiply my days as Hol [Heb חול “sand”; Job 29:18].” (b. Sanh. 108b)

This accords with the Greek phoenix that is “like an eagle in shape and bigness” (Herodotus, Hist. 2.73) and with the phoenix-like bird in Ezekiel the Tragedian that is “twice an eagle’s size” (see above).

3.2. Gigantic Bird. Rabbinic Gigantic (or Cosmic, Protective, Solar) Birds known as Ziz, Ben Nets, Bar Yokni, Field Rooster, are often listed with other cosmic beasts, just as our Phoenix comes after the heavenly Serpent and Hades, and is located together with them. For a possible connection of “Phoenix” of 3 Baruch with the trio of cosmic beasts, see introductory comm. to ch. 4 (Celestial Bestiary).

²⁹⁸ Ginzberg, Legends, 1.28–29; 5.46–48, nn. 129–39; Broek, Myth, 264–68.

In distinction to the Greek phoenix, who is normally a small bird (see above), the Bird of 3 Baruch and Rabbinic birds are enormously large, e.g., “the Field Rooster, whose ankles rest on the ground and whose head reaches the sky” (Tg Ps 50:11; identified here with Ziz). See a story by Rabbah b. Bar Hanna:

Once we traveled on board a ship and we saw a bird standing up to its ankles in the water while its head reached the sky. We thought the water was not deep and wished to go down to cool ourselves, but a bat kol called out: “Do not go down here, for a carpenter’s axe was dropped seven years ago and it has not yet reached the bottom. And this, not [only] because the water is deep but [also] because it is rapid.” R. Ashi said, “That was Ziz of the fields, for it is written, “Ziz of the fields is with me” [i.e., its head is in heaven; Ps 50:11]. (b. B. Bat. 73b)

Note the similarity with “a Rooster that has a head up to heaven, and the sea is up to its knees” in the Slavonic About All Creation cited above. Another story of the same genre is mentioned by R. Judah: “Once an egg of Bar Yokni fell and drowned sixty towns and broke three hundred cedars” (b. Bek. 57b). In one version of Gen. Rab. 19.4 (ms London 370) Ziz is called “a huge bird.”

As in 3 Baruch the Bird’s main function – like the ozone layer in modern conception – is to protect all the living from solar radiation.²⁹⁹ Ziz (or Nets) also does it by stretching the wings: “R. Yudan son of R. Shimon says, ‘Ziz is a clean bird, and when it spreads its wings, it darkens the orb of the sun’” (Gen. Rab. 19.4). The fuller account is found in Lev. Rab.:

As a recompense for the prohibition of [certain] birds [you will eat] Ziz, which is a clean [or “huge” in ms London 370] bird. Hence it is written “I know all the birds of the mountains, and Ziz [Heb זִיז, ‘moving things’] of the fields is mine” [Ps 50:11]. R. Yudan son of R. Shimeon says, “When it [Ziz] spreads out its wings, it darkens the orb of the sun, as it is said, “does Nez [Heb נֶזֶז ‘hawk’] soar by your wisdom and stretch his wings toward the south?” [Job 39:26] (Lev. Rab. 22.10)³⁰⁰

Whereas without the Phoenix’s protection “the race of men would not survive” (3 Bar. 6:5), the reason for the darkening of the sun by Rabbinic birds is explained in the following:

²⁹⁹ For other means of sun protection in ancient Jewish lore, see comm. to 6:6.

³⁰⁰ In Genesis Rabba Ziz is defined as “clean bird” without any contextual justification. The definition must go back to a thus presumably older tradition presented in Leviticus Rabba, where Ziz is destined for food of the righteous. This motif is totally lacking in 3 Baruch. Is our “Phoenix” also pure? Cf. Hades, whose appearance was defined “impure” in 4:3G above.

South wind is the hardest of all, and were it not that Ben Nez stays it with its wings, it would destroy the world, as it is said, “does the hawk [Heb זר] soar by your wisdom and stretch his wings toward the south?” [Job 39:26] (b. Git. 31b; b. B. Bat. 25b)

This protective function of Ziz is in accordance with another meaning of the Rabbinic Heb זר, “shed” (usually over an entrance or window; m. Ohol. 8.2; 14.1, 4; m. Erub. 10.4; B. Bat. 3.8). The connection between the concepts of “protection” and “shadowing” may also be rooted in the idiomatic use of biblical Hebrew (see comm. to 6:3 below).³⁰¹

Whereas 3 Baruch states, that “God appointed this bird” / “God has commanded this bird to serve the inhabited world” (6:6), the biblical prooftext of Lev. Rab. (as interpreted there) says: “Ziz of the fields is mine” (Ps 50:11; Lev. Rab. 22.10), and at the end of the account of three beasts in Leviticus Rabba R. Meir stresses: “Who does not know of all these, that the hand of God made this [Job 12:9]?” (Lev. Rab. 22.10, end).

In 3 Baruch Phoenix is nourished by manna and dew (6:11). In most sources that mention the feeding habits of the phoenix, the bird is described as not eating at all, or as feeding upon the vapor of the air and the heat of the sun. Only the Coptic Sermon on Mary mentions that it eats “the dew of heaven and the flowers of the trees of Lebanon” (frg. U, p. 42, col. a, II. 31–32).³⁰² The nourishment of heavenly beings (and Behemoth among them) is discussed in Pesiq. Rab Kah. 6; Pesiq. R. 16; 48; Num. Rab. 21.16–19. 3 Baruch also treats the nourishment of the Serpent-Hades (4:5G; 4:3S; 5:3S). Manna eaten by Phoenix is known as “angelic food” (LXX Ps 78(77):25); b. Yoma 75b; see comm. to 6:11 below).

Is Phoenix of 3 Baruch an angelic being? A tradition preserved in late midrash and ascribed to R. Alexander may support the suggestion: “It [the sun’s wheel] has eight angels: four in front of it, and four behind it. In front of it – so that it will not burn the world, behind it – so that the it will not cool down” (Eccl. Zut. 1; Yal. Eccl 967).³⁰³

³⁰¹ Cf. also Rev 7:15–16, where the pious are protected by the “tent,” so that “the sun will not beat upon them.” Maksimovich (Ptitsa, 322) offered an explanation of a connection between the name and function of the “protecting Phoenix,” comparing it to “wide palm [φοῖνιξ] leaves in which shadow the Egyptian oases are protected from the heat.” The elaboration of what is probably the same image of the giant bird spreading its wings and shadowing “all the earth,” but in a negative sense, is found in 4 Ezra 11.

³⁰² On the phoenix diet as “the food of eschaton” see Broek, Myth, 345.

³⁰³ Or rather it confuses the two phenomena, the sun bird(s) and the angels serving the sun, which are often four; on this see comm. to 8:4.

As Phoenix “wakes up the roosters on earth” (6:16), so also the birds hear the voice of Ziz in late midrash:

During the month of Tishre God gives Ziz of the fields strength, and strains oneself, and rises its head, and rises on its feet, and raises its voice, and the birds hear its voice, and its fear falls on a bird of prey and vulture every year. (Be-Hokhma Yasad Erets 6 in Otsar HaMidr. 5)

The same procedure is described in the Slavonic About All Creation (see above) and in T. Adam 1:10 (see comm. to 6:16).

Conclusions. The Sun Bird of 3 Baruch is “Phoenix” only in name. It bears the Greek name, but lacks the main features of the phoenix of Hellenistic and Christian traditions. At the same time, there is a striking similarity between “Phoenix” as described in 3 Baruch and Rabbinic traditions about Ziz, Ben Nets, Field Rooster, and Bar Yokni (distinct from the traditions of Hol, Urshina, Malham). In its main functions – and, first of all, protecting the earth from the sun’s radiation – it is identical to gigantic birds of Jewish lore as preserved by Rabbinic sources. The name “Phoenix” here is misleading and appeared only in order to “translate” the image from one culture to another. This model of interpretatio graeca is well attested in the substitution of the names of deities and heroes in Greek and Latin texts depicting barbarian cults (examples are innumerable; cf., e.g., Herodotus, Hist. 4.59; Origen, Cels. 6.39). According to the same model Sheol is rendered as Hades in 3 Baruch, as elsewhere in Jewish Hellenistic literature beginning with LXX (along with Tartarus). See also Jewish texts featuring “Titans” for Nephilim and Rephaim (LXX 2Sam 5:18, 22; Jdt 6:16; cf. Josephus, Ant. 7.71).

Thus, 3 Baruch hardly contains a “monotheistic redaction of the phoenix myth,” nor does it represent a mediatory stage in “the transformation of the Hellenistic phoenix myths into specifically rabbinic myths.”³⁰⁴ In distinction to Rabbinic stories about Hol, Urshina, and Malham, features common to “Phoenix” of 3 Baruch and to Rabbinic gigantic birds have nothing to do with the Greek phoenix³⁰⁵ and must be rooted in other traditions probably older than Hellenistic ones. 3 Baruch, as well as “phoenixes” of 2 Enoch, may instead represent the superficial Hellenization (or pure intercultural translation) of an image belonging to the Jewish lore that underlies both apocalyptic and Rabbinic sources.

³⁰⁴ As Niehoff, “Phoenix,” 262 and 265.

³⁰⁵ With the exception of probably interpolated fragment of 6:11–12 alluding to secondary and modified motifs of Hellenistic Phoenix.

As far as it is possible to trace the remote origins of these motifs of Jewish lore, it may be not only helpful to compare them with Persian³⁰⁶ or Indian³⁰⁷ images, but also – and especially – with local Near Eastern and specifically ancient Palestinian, including Israelite, traditions abundantly reflected in the iconography: the heavenly bird whose giant wings are spread protectively over the earth³⁰⁸ and the wide spread image of the winged sun.³⁰⁹ Winged solar disks and winged protective powers are found frequently in combination with solar images also in ancient Israelite and Phoenician iconography of the pre-exilic period.³¹⁰ Among other “protective creatures” linked to sun deities, some pre-exilic seals have “a falcon with spread wings on the lower part and a winged solar disk in the upper section.”³¹¹ The same image must be meant by “the sun of righteousness,” which also has “wings” according to Mal 3:20.³¹² This imagery, probably of Egyptian origin or influence, might have inspired the idea of a bird spreading its wings to protect the earth from the sun’s rays. Moreover, some students of ancient astronomy attempt to connect the origin of these symbols, especially of the winged sun, with visual experiences of total solar eclipses with their “equatorial streamers of the solar corona stretching out on either side of a ‘Black Sun.’ The image bears a striking resemblance to the outspread wings of a glorious celestial bird.”³¹³

Below, the main elements of the description of Phoenix in 3 Baruch are synoptically aligned with the most relevant parallels discussed both above and in the next chapters below (presented in the order of appearance; the parallels that are most probably dependant on 3 Baruch are not adduced).

³⁰⁶ As Broek, Myth, 267–68

³⁰⁷ As Ginzberg, Legends, 5.48.

³⁰⁸ Keel, Symbolism, 26–27, pl. 19; Collart, Vicari, Sanctuaire, pl. XCVII 1; CI 1; CV, 1.

³⁰⁹ Keel, 28; Mayer-Opificius, “Geflügelte,” 189–236.

³¹⁰ Keel, Uehlinger, Gods, 248–257. From the period of Hezekiah’s reign alone, there are several hundred jars stamped with winged suns; see Keel, Corpus; Keel, “Sturm-gott,” 88; and Wolde, “Words.”

³¹¹ Keel, Uehlinger, Gods, 251; Yadin et al., Hazor, pls. 67.13; 162.6; Crowfoot et al., Objects, 393 fig. 92.81.

³¹² Cf. also heaven and the spirit of God in the ornimorphic simile of Ben Zoma: “Between the upper and the nether waters there is but two or three fingerbreadths ... for it is not written here, “and the spirit of God” blew, but “hovered” [Gen 1:1] like a bird flying and flapping with its wings, its wings barely touching [the nest over which it hovers] (Gen. Rab. 2.4).

³¹³ Bhatnagar, Livingston, Fundamentals, 10–11. Cf. Maunder, Astronomy, 121–129; Suhr, Mask.

Position: “circling in front of the sun” (6:2).

Size: “about nine [cubits] away” or “like nine mountains” G / “like one great mountain” S (6:2).

Function: “the guardian of the inhabited world” (6:3).

Method: “goes before the sun, and stretching out its wings receives its fire-shaped rays” (6:5).

Reason: “if it did not receive them, the race of men would not survive, nor any other living creature” (6:6).

“God appointed this bird” (6:6).

Inscription: “and I saw on its right wing very large letters, like the area of a threshing-floor, having the size of about 4,000 modia. And the letters were of gold” (6:7).

Origin: “Neither earth nor heaven give me birth, but wings of fire give me birth” (6:8).

Name: Phoenix (Gk Φοῖνιξ;
CS фoуникъ LB финиъъ S фoунизъ
N поуниза Z финикoъъ PVID).

Diet: “the manna of heaven and the dew of earth” (6:11).

Excrement: “It excretes a worm, and the excrement of the worm becomes to cinnamon, which kings and princes use” (6:12).

Greeting the sun: “flapped its wings and there was a sound like thunder, and the bird cried out saying, “O Light giver, give light to the world!” (6:14S; cf. “noise of the bird” in 6:15G).

“phoenixes and chalkydri ... accompany and run with the sun” (2 En. 12:1).

“the Field Rooster, whose ankles rest on the ground and whose head reaches the sky” (Tg. Ps 50:11); cf. b. B. Bat. 93b.

–

“when it spreads its wings, it darkens the orb of the sun” (Gen. Rab. 19.4; cf. Lev. Rab. 22.10).

“South wind is the hardest of all, and were it not that Ben Nez stays it with its wings, it would destroy the world” (b. Git. 31b; b. B. Bat. 25b).

“Ziz of the fields is mine” [Ps 50:11] ... “does Nez [= Ziz here] soar by your [God’s] wisdom and stretch his wings toward the south?” [Job 39:26] ... “Who does not know of all these, that the hand of God made this [ibid. 12:9]” (Lev. Rab. 22.10).

–

Multiple Greek and Roman sources; Rabbinic Hol (Gen. Rab. 19.5; etc.).

Multiple Greek and Roman sources; possibly implied in Ezekiel the Tragedian’s Exagoge (254–69).

Manna is “angels’ food” (LXX Ps 78(77):25); b. Yoma 75b; cf. “Nobody ever saw the phoenix taking any food” (Pliny, Nat. Hist. 10.4).

Worm larva (Pliny, Nat. Hist. 10.2 and passim).

Nest of cinnamon (Ovid, Met. 15.385 and passim).

”The Light giver is coming to give radiance to the whole world” (2 En. (J) 15:2); “the sound of the wings of the Seraphim” (T. Adam 1:10).

Additional function: “wakes up the roosters on earth” (6:16).

“at the sound of the wings of the Seraphim at that time the roosters crow and praise God” (T. Adam 1:10).

“and the birds seek me” (6:8S).

“It seemed to be the king of birds, for all the birds, as one, in fear did haste to follow after him” (Ezekiel the Tragedian, Exagoge 254–69).

Result: “because of restraining the rays of the sun, [and] because of the fire and of the whole day’s burning it is humbled” (8:6).

* * *

6:1. And having taken me he brought me where the sun goes forth. That is, Baruch travels to the east, exactly as Enoch also in the middle of his vision: “And those men [angels] carried me away to the east of heaven, and they showed me the solar gates through which the sun goes out” (2 En. [J and A] 13:1). Does it mean that Baruch began his tour in the west, similarly to Apoc. Paul 31 and in distinction to T. Abr. (A) 11:1, where “the first gate of heaven” is located in the east?³¹⁴ Hades, which was among Baruch’s first visions, was thought to be located in the west (1 En. 1:5; 22:1; Apoc. Paul 31; b. B. Bat. 84a; Hebrew Sefer Eliyahu), as well as the Islands of the Blessed.³¹⁵ The connection of the abode of the dead with the west appears to have been a common motif in the ancient world.³¹⁶

Baruch is taken back to the west again explicitly in 8:1. See Gilgamesh who also moves “along the route of the sun” towards the place where the sun rises (Gilgamesh Epic 9). Gates for luminaries in the eastern and western horizons appear in Egyptian and Mesopotamian sources (see comm. to 2:2 above).

6:2. A chariot-of-four, which was with a fire underneath (G) / A chariot-of-four, and there were fiery horses, and the horses were winged angels (S). Gk ὁ ἦν ὑπόπυρον is an emendation from ο ἦν υποπυρος of both mss. Gaylord convincingly suggests the original ἵππων πυρός rendered by CS кони пламѣни “fiery horses.”³¹⁷ Both versions are corroborated by paral-

³¹⁴ In fact the whole description of the Testament of Abraham must belong to a very different tradition, more similar to the one of Plato’s “Myth of Er” (Rep. 10.614).

³¹⁵ Josephus, Bell. 2.155; cf. Homer, Od. 4.561–69; Hesiod, Op. 167–73; Pindar, Ol. 2.69–71; Herodotus, Hist. 3.26; and Lucian, Ver. Hist. 2.6–13.

³¹⁶ See Wacker, Weltordnung.

³¹⁷ Gaylord, Slavonic, 67.

lels. Helios' chariot is drawn by "fire-darting steeds" (Pindar, Ol. 7.71) and chariots of fiery horses appear in 2 Kgs 2:11 and Sir 48:9. Fire underneath the Throne is found in 1 En. 14:19; cf. Apoc. Abr. 18:3.

On the tradition of the image see introductory comm. to this chapter. Both versions agree below that "the chariot was drawn by forty angels." In addition to the chariot motifs discussed above, special angels appointed to serve or accompany the sun and other luminaries are known: "The fourth order [of angels], which is principalities. This is its service: the administration of the lights, of the sun and of the moon and of the stars" (T. Adam 4:4). Often they are four or four hundred; see comm. to "four angels" in 8:4.

A crown of fire (στέφανον πυρός / вѣнецъ огньнъ). This was a common royal symbol, in the Orient and in Hellenistic kingdoms,³¹⁸ as well as in the Roman empire since Caligula, whose crown featured solar symbolism. Philo attests: "He wears a crown adorned with rays, for the craftsman has managed to make a good copy of the rays of the sun" (Leg. 14.103).³¹⁹ Crowns and wreaths were also common attributes of idols as found in Jewish literature (Ep Jer 9; Acts 14:13; γ. Abod. Zar. 3.42c, 43d) and were widely attested in non-Jewish sources. The many representations of Helios include a halo with seven rays. Mithras is frequently depicted crowning the Sun.³²⁰ For the crowned sun among other solar imagery in Jewish iconography, see introductory comm. to this chapter. Crowns are also well known as Jewish royal and divine attributes since the Bible.³²¹ In Rabbinic sources, God's crowns could be made or held by his angels (b. Hag. 13b; b. Ber. 7a). Angels may also be adorned with crowns, sometimes fiery (Jos. Asen. 14:9; 2 En. (A) 14:2 A; Apoc. Zeph. (Clement of Alexandria, Strom. 5.11.17); 3 En. 12:4; 16:2; 17:8; 18:23, 25; 21:4; Seder Rabba diBereshit 28–30 and 3 Hekh. 161–163). See the twenty-four elders on celestial thrones with "crowns of gold" on their heads (Rev 4:4, 10) and the "crown of light" on the head of Pistis Sophia (Pistis Sophia 1.59; 2.66).

6:3. This is the guardian of the inhabited world (ὁ φύλαξ τῆς οἰκουμένης / хранитель вѣселенѣи). This is a unique attestation of the phoenix. In Egypt the sun god Ra was called "the guardian of the earth" (Egyptian Book of the ³¹⁸ Although in this meaning Gk διάδημα is more common than στέφανος.

³¹⁹ Cf. Stephani, "Nimbus."

³²⁰ MMM, 1.172ff. See Notes to 7:3G.

³²¹ As well as a regular festive attribute (Sir 32:1–2; Jub. 14:30; 3 Macc 7:16; Josephus, Ant. 19.9.1).

Dead 16; 28 [40; 46]),³²² while here it is on the contrary an epithet of the sun's moderator. The connection between the concepts of "protection" and "shadowing" may be rooted in an idiomatic use of the biblical Hebrew; see, e.g., Isa 18:1; 30:2, 3; 51:16; Ps 36:10; 57:2; and 61:3. "R. Yohanan said: He [God] is also a protector of the whole world [Heb מַגִּין עַל כָּל הָעוֹלָם כּוֹלֵל], as it is written, 'with the shadow of my hand have I sheltered you' [Isa 51:16]" (b. Sanh. 99b).

6:6. For if it did not receive them, the race of men would not survive, nor any other living creature / For if it did not hide the rays of the sun, the race of men and every creature on earth would not survive because of the flames of the sun. This is repeated with reference to 6:6 (ὡς προείπομενον) in 8:6–7. The sun is thought to be dangerous (Isa 49:10; Jonah 4:8; Ps. 19:7; 121:6; Sir 43:3, 4). Its heat is regulated by twelve openings on the sun's disk (2 En. 75:4). The need to screen it was widely known. In addition to giant birds discussed above, other diverse means were known:

(1) Cool air:

When God extended the sun's rays from heaven to the boundaries of earth, He mitigated and abated with cool air the fierceness of their heat. He tempered them in this way, that the radiance drawn off from the blazing flame, surrendering its power of burning but retaining that of giving light, might meet and hail its friend and kinsman, the light which is stored in the treasury of our eyes. (Philo, Quod Deus 17.79)

(2) Hail stored in heaven: "Sun faces the top of hail. And were it not for the hail, which extinguishes the fire, the world would have been burned by fire; as it is said: 'Nothing is hidden from its heat' [Ps 19:7]" (Pirqe R. El. 6).

(3) *Sheath*³²³ and water:

The sun orb has a sheath [נִרְתִּיק], as it is said, "He placed in them a tent for the sun" [Ps 19:5] and a lake of water [בְּרִיכָה שֶׁל מַיִם] before it. When it goes forth, God weakens its strength in the water, lest it burn the world. But in the future God will take it from its sheath and burn with it all the wicked, as it is said, "The day that is coming will burn them" [Mal 3:19 (4:1)]. (Gen. Rab. 6.6; cf. Pesiq. R. 29; Tan. B. Tetsaveh; Midr. Pss. 19.3) ³²² For another possible parallel with the Book of the Dead see comm. to 6:8; cf. also T. Abr. 12:9.

³²³ Special receptacle or cover – Heb נִרְתִּיק from Gk νάρτηξ or ναρθήκιον.

(4) Firmament(s): God did not place the sun in the lower firmament, because it had been close to earth, all would have been consumed by its heat (Pesiq. R. 29 and Midr. Pss. 19.13; cf. Gen. Rab. 6.6).

(5) Angels: Four angels are before the sun, “so that it will not burn the world” (Eccl. Zut. 1; Yal. Eccl 967, cited in the introductory comm. above). This may go back to the Ziz/Phoenix motif.

There were also some ethical developments of these ecological motifs. Luminaries testify against humans regarding their sins (1 En. 100:10; Pss. Sol. 2:13–14 [11–12]; 8:8; cf. Num 25:4; 2 Sam 12:11–12; cf. heaven and earth as the witnesses of the covenant in Deut 4:26; 30:19; 32:1). The very position of the celestial charioteer enables the sun to observe all abundance of the earthly wickedness (as Helios Panoptes does; cf., e.g., Homer, Od. 8.300ff; 11.102ff; Aeschylus, Prom. 88ff; etc.; cf. “Pardon, O Phoebus, if any unlawful sight thine eyes have seen” in Seneca, Herc. Fur. 592ff) and even to be defiled by it (as in 3 Bar. 8:4–5). This may tempt the sun to destroy the lower world. The sun’s heat is in fact destined to consume the wicked at the end of days, when its light “will become sevenfold” (Isa 30:26); see Gen. Rab. 6.6 and par. above. The sun and then other luminaries and waters ask to destroy humankind whose transgressions they have to observe:

The sun, the great light, often appealed to the Lord, saying, “O Lord God Almighty, I look on the ungodliness and unrighteousness of men. Suffer me, and I will do to them according to my power, that they may know that you are God alone.” (Apoc. Paul 4)

The same urge was expected from another heavenly charioteer:

A voice came from heaven to the commander-in-chief, saying thus, “O commander-in-chief Michael, command the chariot to stop, and turn Abraham away that he may not see all the inhabited world, for if he behold all that live in wickedness, he will destroy all creation.” (T. Abr. (A) 10:12–14)³²⁴

In this case, the sun and Phoenix represent a dialectic balance not only of physical forces but also of heavenly judgment. A similar balance of opposite powers must be meant in the Apocalypse of Abraham, where Yahoel is responsible for reconciling “the rivalries of the Living Creatures of the Cherubim against one another” (10:9). See Job 25:2 which mentions celestial balance adjacent to the all penetrating light: “He imposes peace in his heights. Can his troops be numbered? On whom does his light not shine?”

³²⁴ Harlow, Baruch, 132.

6:7. Wings. Sun could also be thought to have wings: “And the sun of righteousness will rise for you, who fear my name, with healing in its wings” (Mal. 3:20 [4:2]). On the possible connection between winged sun-disks, the image of the Sun Bird and ornithomorphic character of a “winged sun” during the total eclipse, see introductory comm. above.

The letters were of gold / Those letters were purer than gold. Paul finds golden letters on the celestial gate of gold with “two pillars of gold full of golden letters” with names of the righteous (Apoc. Paul 19; cf. Ethiopic 5 Baruch). Three letters of God’s name are written on the sun’s heart (Pirqe R. El. 6; cf. Baraita Maase Bereshit 50). “Laws” written in letters of gold are mentioned by Josephus (Ant. 12.2.11).

4,000 modia (μοδίων τετρακισχιλίων). This is a Roman (Lat modius) and late Greek dry measure. It is also a measure of length equal to 200 ὀργυαί, with ὀργυια a Greek fathom equal to the length of the outstretched arms (appr. six feet or 182 cm). Here it appears to be used as a surface measure. The height of the Tower of Babel (3:6) and the sea drunk by the Serpent (4:6G; 4:3S) are measured in cubits. According to 2 En. 12:2 the size of “phoenixes and chalkydri” is 900 “measures” (CS מִטְרָא).

6:8. Neither earth nor heaven give me birth. Dean-Otting views this as a riddle-like formula, which may resemble the earlier description of Serpent-Hades.³²⁵ See heaven (i.e., the goddess Nut) that gives birth to the sun (Book of the Dead 79).

6:11. The manna of heaven and the dew of earth / heavenly manna. This is one of the unambiguously Jewish elements in the description of Phoenix in 3 Baruch. Manna and dew are adduced together in Exod 16:13–14 and especially in Num 11:9: “When the dew came down on the camp at night, the manna came down with it.” According to LXX Ps 78(77):25, manna is “angels’ food” (Gk ἄρτον ἁγγέλων; in Hebrew לֶחֶם אֲבִירִים “bread of the mighty”). R. Akiba also interprets thus in b. Yoma 75b (לֶחֶם אֲבִירִים אֵכֵל אִישׁ לֶחֶם שְׂמֵלֵאכִי הִשְׁרַת אוֹכְלִין אוֹתוֹ); cf. Tan. B. 2.67; Midr. Pss. 78.345. Sib. Or. 7:148–149 says (probably arguing with 1 En. 10:18–19) that “dewy manna” would be the food of the members of the messianic kingdom: “there will be no vine branches or ear of corn, but all at once will eat the dewy manna with white teeth.” The same in 2 Baruch:

³²⁵ Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 129.

And those who have hungered shall rejoice: moreover, also, they shall behold marvels every day. For winds shall go forth from before me to bring every morning the fragrance of aromatic fruits, and at the close of the day clouds distilling the dew of health. And it shall come to pass at that self-same time that the treasury of manna shall again descend from on high, and they will eat of it in those years, because these are they who have come to the consummation of time. (29:6–8)

According to b. Hag. 12b the dew and the manna are stored in adjacent heavens: manna in the third (named Shehaqim) and dew in the sixth (Mak-bon). Compare this with the “hidden manna” which is to be given to the penitent in Rev 2:17. The origin of the “dew of heaven” (most probably distinct from the dew of earth) from the celestial lake is explained in 10:9G (see comm. ibid). In 2 En. 12:2 “phoenixes and chalkydri” bring heat and dew (see introductory comm. above).

6:12. Wait and you will see the Glory of God. Compare with 7:2; 11:2; 16:4S. See comm. to 4:2S.

Sunrise and Predawn Call (6:13–16)

GREEK

¹³ And while he was talking, there was a thunder like a sound of thunder, and the place where we were standing was shaken.
And I asked the angel, “My Lord, what is this sound?” And the angel told me, “The angels are now opening the 365 gates of heaven, and the light is being separated from the darkness.”

¹⁴ And a voice came saying, “O Light giver, give light to the world!”

¹⁵ And when I heard the noise of the bird,
I said, “Lord, what is this noise?”

SLAVONIC

¹³ And while we were singing, there was a great sound, like [bellowing] of 30 oxen,
and the place where we were standing shook.

And I Baruch said, “What is this sound, my Lord?” And he told me, “The angels are opening the 65 doors of heaven, and the light is being separated from the darkness.”

¹⁴ And the sun entered [the chariot?], and the bird came saying, “O Light giver, the sun, give light to the world,” [and] spread its wings and covered the rays of the sun and it flapped its wings and there was a sound like thunder, and the bird cried out saying, “O Light giver, give light to the world!”

¹⁵ When I heard the sound of the bird,
I said, “What is that sound?”

¹⁶ And he said, “This is what wakes up the roosters on earth.

For as [others do] through the mouth, so also the rooster signifies to those in the world, in its own speech. For the sun is made ready by the angels, and the rooster crows.”

¹⁶ And he said, “This is to wake up the roosters which are on earth in peace.

When they hear the first sound they say that the sun is rising, and the roosters cry out.”

NOTES

6:14. Voice. Here and in some other instances in translation both “sound” and “voice” stand for the same Greek and Slavonic words: Gk φωνή and CS гласъ (cf., e.g., 11:3 and 5).

6:14S. Also possible: “and it [“voice” as in or even “sun”] came saying, ‘O Light giver, the sun, give light to the world!’ The bird spread its wings ...” (cf. comm. ad loc.). Verse 6:14b has been omitted by G probably due to homoeoteleuton.

6:16G. And the rooster crows. καὶ φωνεῖ ὁ ἄλέκτωρ. Lit. “produces a sound.” The verb is used with roosters also in Matt 26:34.

COMMENTARY

The sunrise is the first of the solar functions shown to Baruch. In this context, he learns about the 365 gates of heaven which serve the sun’s motions (which must imply a rotating celestial sphere). He also learns about the pre-dawn sounds, which explain the awakening of roosters on earth before the dawn. The unique motif of the daily separation of the light from the darkness must imply the idea of creatio aeterna.

6:13S. While we were singing. This reading only occurs in ms L. No singing is mentioned before. Gaylord suggests that ms L had a corruption of CS стоѧма “standing” to поѧма “singing,” based upon ms B, containing the former, and family β with a possible conflation: “standing and singing.”³²⁶ However, this lectio difficilior has intertextual corroboration. Singing, which was part of the Temple service, is a well known element of the celestial service in many apocalyptic descriptions (1 En. 40; 2 En. 7–9; 17; Apoc. Abr. 18; Apoc. Zeph. 8; Asc. Isa. 7–9; T. Levi 3; cf. the Qumranic Songs of the Sabbath Sacrifice and Hekhalot literature, passim). Celestial choirs are mentioned in 10:5 below (for the parallels see ibid.). A song of a visionary taught by an angel could be a central element of a vision (Apoc. Abr. 17). It may take place particularly before the sunrise. The angel Yahoel “teaches those who bear him [i.e., Cherubim and Living Creatures] the Song in the middle of man’s night, at the seventh hour” (Apoc. Abr. 10:9), i.e., immediately after midnight. Similarly, the sun “stands seven great hours of night, and spends half its course under the earth” and then “comes to the eastern approach at the eighth hour of the night, it brings its lights, and the crown of shining, and the sun flames forth more than fire” (2 En. (J) 14:3). According to the horarium of Testament of Adam the angelic praise takes place even closer to the sunrise, at the ninth hour of the night (although the Armenian horarium has also the seventh hour instead),³²⁷ and precedes the events described in our chapter:

³²⁶ Gaylord, Slavonic, 81.

And at the ninth hour the angels perform their service of homage to God, and the prayer of the children of men comes into the presence of God the Most High. And at the tenth hour the gates of heaven are opened, and God hears the prayer of the children of the believers, and the petition which they ask from God is granted unto them. And at the sound of the wings of the Seraphim at that time the roosters crow and praise God. And at the eleventh hour there is joy and gladness on all the earth, for the sun enters into the Garden, and its light rises in all the ends of the world, and illumines every created thing. (T. Adam 1:9–10)

For angels singing or praising at night see also b. Hag. 12b; Abod. Zar. 3b; cf. Luke 2:8–14.

6:13G. A thunder like a sound of thunder / a great sound, like [bellowing] of 30 oxen (βροντή ὡς ἤχος βροντῆς / глас великъ яко воловъ :λ:). A combination ἤχος βροντῆς for Heb קול הרעם “sound of thunder” appears in Sim. Ps 77:19(18) (cf. Eusebius on Ps 77:18; while LXX, Aq. and Theod. have φωνή τῆς βροντῆς; cf. Ps 104:7) and in T. Abr. 17:15 (among other terrible things “shown” to Abraham by Death).

Gk ἤχος may mean also “voice” or “echo,” while Heb קול rendered by it may mean “sound,” and “voice” as well as “thunder.” The voice of the Babylonian weather god Adad is described as an “echo from heaven” in Greek sources.³²⁸ See φωνή ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ “a voice from heaven” in Matt 3:17; Mark 1:11; Luke 3:22; and John 12:28. Rabbinic Heb בּת קול “echo,” serves also as a term for the divine voice from heaven (e.g., b. Yoma 9b and passim).

³²⁷ Stone, Armenian, 65.

³²⁸ Noticed by Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 111, who refers to Bezold, Boll, “Reflexe,” 20–21.

S has instead “a great sound, like [bellowing] of 30 oxen.” See “and there was a thunder, like [bellowing] of 40 oxen” in 13:1S below. Only S measures volume in “oxen.” G uses this unit to measure only dimensions: “a crane [as large] as great oxen” (10:3G).

Can the “sound of thunder” here be God’s voice (cf. b. Hul. 59b telling of its great strength)? Possibly so. However, special celestial noises are mentioned in 3 Baruch on the following occasions:

- 1) When angels opened 365 gates of heaven and the light was separated from the darkness: “there was a thunder like a sound of thunder, and the place where we were standing was shaken” (6:13G), “there was a great sound, like [bellowing] of 30 oxen, and the place where we were standing shook” (6:13S).
- 2) According to S, when the sun entered [the chariot?], Phoenix after a greeting formula “spread its wings and covered the rays of the sun and flapped its wings and there was a sound like thunder” (6:14S). This sound also “wakes up the roosters on earth” (6:16). According to G, this is not a thunder, but “noise of the bird” (κτύπος τοῦ ὀρνέου; 6:15G), and it is not clear whether the Phoenix’s voice or anything else is meant.
- 3) When Michael came down to receive the virtues/prayers of men “there was a great sound like thunder” (11:3G), or “there was a sound from the highest heaven like a threefold thunder” (11:3S). S may render Gk τρισμὸς ὡς βροντῆς “shriek like thunder” as in 11:5G, understood as ὡς τρις βροντῆς.³²⁹ Alternatively the qedusha/trisagion may be implied (see comm. ibid.).
- 4) When the gates of the fifth heaven opened, “there was a shriek like thunder” (11:5G), “there was a great sound, greater than the first” (11:5S).
- 5) When Michael left for a higher heaven and the gates of the fifth heaven closed, “there was a sound like thunder” (14:1G) or “there was a thunder, like [bellowing] of 40 oxen” (14:1S). The angel explains that this sound designates that in this moment “Michael is presenting the virtues [“prayers” S] of men to God” (14:2).

See also in S: “clouds of thunders and hail” (or “a thunder of a cloud”) (16:3S); “when a king rises to a war, another strikes, and there is a great sound [or ‘tumult’]” (6:12S).

In cases 1 and 3 the “voice” follows the thunder (cf. also “voice from heaven” in 17:1S); in case 1 it is also accompanied with shaking of the ground. Dean-Otting notices that these three elements “can be the evidence of nothing less than revelation of Deity; there are many Biblical parallels for these phenomena found in the context of a theophany;" see, for example, Exod 19:16–19; Isa 29:6; Ps 18:6–16; Ps 29:3–4; Ps 77:18; Job 37:2–5; Rev 16:18; and Apoc. Abr. 8:6.³³⁰ However, there is no direct theophany in 3 Baruch, and the sounds must be caused by secondary celestial factors:

³²⁹ Gaylord, Slavonic, 121.

The noise in case 1 must be of solar origin: the sun is known to make an extraordinary noise while grating against its wheel: "You may think that it glides in heaven, but it is not so, being rather like a saw which saws through wood" (Gen. Rab. 6.7; cf. b. Yoma 20b–21a; Cant. Rab. 5.9; Pirqe R. El. 34; Eccl. Zut. 86; Midr. Sam. 9.74; cf. the noise of the Wheels in 3 En. 19:5–7). See the sound of rotating spheres (Plato, Rep. 10.617; Aristotle, Cael. 2.290. It is also "so loud that men's ears cannot take it in" (Cicero, Resp. 6.18 ["Scipio's Dream"]). Heb בַּח קוֹל may also sometimes mean a sort of music of spheres (as in Exod. Rab. 29.9).

The noise in case 2 is caused by the Bird. S, which attributes the origin of the noise to the clapping of the Bird's wings, must have the authentic version, as is well confirmed by parallels. Angels are known to praise God by clapping their wings, a motif based on Ezek 1:24 (cf. LXX ad loc. translating "their wings were singing" instead of "... straight") and 3:12–13; 24–25 (cf. expansion in Targums) and is developed in Hekhalot literature.³³¹ Roosters crow when Seraphim clap their wings (T. Adam 1:10).³³²

The noises 3–5 may be caused by opening and closing celestial gates: the ascent through a heavenly door is also accompanied by thunder in Rev 4:1.

6:13. Place where we were standing was shaken (καὶ ἐσαλεύθη ὁ τόπος ἐν ᾧ ἰστάμεθα / и потресе ца же мѣсто идеже стоиашовѣ). Revelatory experiences are often accompanied by such phenomena: "the place where you are standing is greatly shaken" (4 Ezra 6:13); "while he [God] spoke to me, behold, little by little, the place where I was standing began to rock to and fro" (4 Ezra 6:29); "the place of elevation on which we both stood sometimes was on high, sometimes rolled down" (Apoc. Abr. 17:3). See also Acts 4:31 and Rev 16:18.

³³⁰ Dean-Otting, "Baruch," 110–114. See there also on Mesopotamian roots of the connection between the voice of a deity and thunder.

³³¹ Halperin, Faces, 52ff.

³³² Unbearable noise was caused by the wings of Gabriel, who according to Jerome (on Isa 10:3) referring to Jewish lore is called Hamon "noise."

365 gates of heaven / 65 doors of heaven. On celestial and inter-celestial gates in general see comm. to 2:2 above. Their main function must be to enable the travel of luminaries under the firmament.³³³ The sun enters through the gate in Ps 19; cf. “outgoings of mourning” in Ps 65:8 (as in 3 Bar. 6:13). Ancient and common Near Eastern beliefs underlie this conception. Both in Egypt and Mesopotamia people believed that luminaries needed gates to enter the sky. Doors for luminaries in eastern and western horizons appear in both Egyptian sources (e.g., Coffin Text 696; cf. “doors of the horizon” in Pyramid Text 246),³³⁴ and Mesopotamian ones (e.g., “great gates on both sides” opened by Marduk in Enuma Elish 5; Shamash opening “the portals of the sky” at his rising;³³⁵ Akkadian cylinder seal BM 89110).³³⁶ See “the gates of the sun” of Homer (Od. 24.12). Such gates are known to other apocalypses as well: “And they showed me the calculation of the movement of the sun, and the gates through which it goes in and out. Since these are the great gates which God created to be an annual horologe” (2 En. 15:3).

Ms B has “50 doors of [or “and”?] five heavens.” Karpov, relying upon the evidence of Origen concerning the treatment of seven heavens in the Book of Baruch (see below introductory comm. to ch. 11: Ouranology), supposes that this reading may go back to the original “50 doors of seven heavens,” i.e., 50x7, according to 350 days of a Pentecontad calendar including seven periods of 50 days.³³⁷

However, it is more probable that G here has the original version. The solar year of 365 days (based on the addition of five epagomenal days to the ancient solar year consisting of twelve months of thirty days each) was known already in early Babylon and Egypt.³³⁸ Greeks knew it at least since Thales (Diogenes Laertius 1.27) and it was part of the official Roman calendar from the time of Caesar. It is mentioned in early Jewish sources (e.g., Philo, Quaest. Gen. 1.84) and referred to by Gnostics: 365,000 years in the world are a single year in the realm of light, while one day in the realm of light is a 1000 years in the world (Pistis Sophia 99); see the five great arch-

³³³ Another function, to receive the virtues/prayers of men in mentioned in 11:5 below (cf. T. Adam 1:10).

³³⁴ Faulkner, Coffin, 2.261; idem, Pyramid, 1.59, 6; 1.281, #667; Brovarski, “Doors,” 107–10; Keel, Symbolism, 24; Wright, Heaven, 19–20.

³³⁵ Frankfort, Cylinder, 58; Wright, Heaven, 34.

³³⁶ Keel, Symbolism, 23. Cf. Heimpel, “Sun,” 132–40; Frankfort, Cylinder, pt. 18a; Wright, Heaven, 33–34.

³³⁷ Karpov, “O kalendare;” cf. Morgenstern, “Calendar.”

³³⁸ Samuel, Ptolemaic, 76.

ons in charge of 360 other archons (ibid. 136; 139) and the 365 angels of Nag Hammadi Apocryphon of John 11:25; 19:3. “365 days of the sun” (שש”ה ימות החמה) were well known to Rabbis (t. Nazir 1.3; Sifra Behar 4; Lev. Rab. 51; b. Ar. 9b; etc.). The solar year of 1 Enoch, Jubilees, and Qumran has 364 days (1 En. 72–75; 82:11; Jub. 6:32; cf., e.g., 11Q Ps (11Q 5) 27.6–7; 4Q540 1.2).

Not only the full solar year, but even the same number of heavenly openings is known to Rabbis: “The Holy One created 365 windows for the world to use: 182 in the east, 182 in the west, and one in the middle of the firmament, from where [the sun] went out in the beginning of the Creation” שלש מאות וששים וחמש חלונות ברא בקה”ה שישתמש בהן העולם מאה) ושמונים ושנים במזרח ומאה ושמונים ושנים במערב ואחת באמצעו של רקיע (שממנו יצא מתחילת מעשה בראשית y. Rosh. HaSh. 2.58a). Pirke R. El. 5 explicitly links the number of the gates and the length of the solar year, stating that in the firmament there are “366 windows, through which it [the sun] emerges and retires” (ובשש”ו החלונות יוצא ונכנס) “according to 366 days of the solar year” (כנגד שש”ו ימות שנת החמה).³³⁹

Why would the sun need a separate gate for every day? The rationale of 365 gates will become clear when we consider that the points of the sunrise and the sunset are constant only from the human point of view and only in relation to the earth. In the heavenly sphere these points, circulating around the static earth, would differ every day. This was a conception of “the learned of the nations” as defined in the following Baraita:

The learned of Israel say, “The sphere stands firm, and the zodiacs revolve.” The learned of the nations say, “The sphere revolves, and the zodiacs stand firm” חכמי ישראל אומרים גלגל קבוע ומזלות חוזרין וחכמי אומות העולם אומרים גלגל חוזר [ומזלות קבועין]. (b. Pesah. 94b)³⁴⁰

So Plato (Rep. 10; Tim. 38c–e) and Aristotle (e.g., Cael. 2.8 [289b–290b]). Moreover, the rotation of 3 Baruch’s heaven may be deduced from the statement that the stars are fixed to heaven (9:8; see comm. ibid.), while their motion relative to earth is obvious. This conception also accounts for ³³⁹ Cf. the sun likened to a ship with 365 ropes (solar year) and to a ship with 354 ropes (lunar year; Midr. Pss. 19.3); cf. Eccl. Zut. 1; Yal. Eccl. 967. Biblical Enoch is taken to heaven on his 365th birthday (Gen 5:21–24).

³⁴⁰ In the continuation of this passage, R. Judah the Patriarch objects to the latter view: “We have never found the Bull in the south nor the Scorpion in the north, and were it as the learned of the nations declare, the position of the constellations would constantly change” (b. Pesah. 94b).

the change in the sun's position relative to the stars. Thus, 365 gates must be located along the moving circle of the horizon.

Wright supposed that "although the text does not mention it, there are presumably 365 corresponding gates on the western horizon through which the sun exits each evening."³⁴¹ There is no need for such a presumption since, according to the reconstruction above, all gates are distributed evenly around the horizon, and thus all gates in turn serve both purposes. In distinction to the Enochic system of six or twelve gates, defined by Wright as "more economical and sophisticated" than the "rather amateurish" system of 3 Baruch,³⁴² the system of 3 Baruch better harmonizes the daily motion of the stars with the constant location of sunrise and sunset.³⁴³

It is still unclear why all the gates must be opened every day. This prompted Gaylord to suggest that "the sun passes through all 365 gates every day."³⁴⁴ This would have been plausible if there were 365 firmaments.

³⁴¹ Wright, Heaven, 168. Compare this idea with y. Rosh HaSh. 2.58a cited above.

³⁴² Ibid.

³⁴³ The astronomy of 360 solar gates (of which, as in y. Rosh. HaSh. 2.58a and par. above, 180 are in the east and 180 on the west) combined with the conception of the fixed stars (as in 3 Bar. 9:8) and 365 days of the year, is elaborated in detail in Bundabishn 5 B, probably based on early Babylonian astrology: "... For there are 180 windows [rōzan] in the East and 180 in the West, (put) in Harburz. Every day the Sun comes in through one window and goes out by one window. The bonds and the movement of the Moon and the fixed stars and planets are all to it. Every day it shines on three and a half continents (at any one time). As is obvious to the eye, twice each year day and night are equal, for at the Primordial Battle, when (the Sun) went forth from the first asterism of the Lamb, day and night were equal, at the time of spring; and afterwards, when it reaches the first asterism of the Crab, the days (are) longest, at the beginning of summer; when it reaches the (first) asterism of the Balance, day and night (are) equal, at the beginning of fall; when it reaches the first asterism of the Goat, the nights (are) greatest, at the beginning of winter; when it reaches the Lamb anew, day and night are again equal. As, from when it goes forth from the Lamb until it reaches the Lamb again, in 360 days and those five intercalary days, it comes in and goes out through the same windows. The (exact) window is not stated (here), for if it had been stated, the demons would have known the secret and could planned (their) damage ..." (5 B.3–6). I thank Dan Shapira for this new translation with comments, and Reuven Kuperwasser for the reference. See also MacKenzie ("Zoroastrian," 517–18) and the scheme of the revolution of the sun on p. 519 ibid. The cosmology of Bundabishn shares also other, more or less universal, motifs with 3 Baruch (celestial dragon, celestial demons, sun chariot, etc.).

³⁴⁴ Gaylord, Slavonic, 81.

See Basilides' teaching about 365 heavens and their archon Abrasax (Gk Ἀβρασαξ; the numerical value of this name also is 365; Irenaeus, Haer. 1.24.3–7; cf. 11.16.2 and Hippolytus, Ref. 7.26.6).³⁴⁵

The light is being separated from the darkness. This light here is called φῶς, while the sun's light in the next verse (as well as in 7:2 below) – φέγγος (although the sun is called φωτοδότης.) Here it is definitely not the sunlight, but a primordial upper light, by which God illuminated all that he created even before the luminaries had been made (Aristobulus, Fragment 3; 4 Ezra 6:40; Josephus, Ant. 1.27.2; 2 En. (J) 25:3; Gen. Rab. 3.6; 11.2; b. Hag. 12a; Pirqe R. El. 3). Some of these sources are based on Isa 30:26 and Isa 60:19, 20 mentioning Heb אור עולם “eternal light.” The luminaries receive a spark from this much stronger light (Tan. B. Behaalotekha 10) and they even need it to see their routes (Midr. Pss. 19).

In Gen 1:4 God already “separated the light from the darkness” on the first day of creation, while in 3 Baruch the light and darkness are separated on a daily basis. The idea of the everlasting or continuous creation, i.e., an ontological dependence of the cosmos on God, may be implied; see “[God] renews every day the work of creation” (b. Hag. 12b; cf. Midr. Pss. 96.1; etc.). The concept of creatio aeterna or creatio continua might also be implied by Philo in his treatment of the non-temporal character of the creation (Opif. 7.26–28).³⁴⁶ Alternatively, the regular mechanism of introducing the boundaries between the two may be meant, as in Philo's Opif. 9.33–34:

God, in his perfect knowledge of their [i.e., of the light and the darkness] mutual contrariety and natural conflict, parted them one from another by a wall of separation. In order, therefore, to keep them from the discord arising from perpetual clash ... he not only separated light and darkness, but also placed in the intervening spaces boundary-marks, by which he held back each of their extremities ... These barriers are evening and dawn. The latter gently restraining the darkness, anticipates the sunrise with the glad tidings of its approach; while evening, supervening upon sunset, gives a gentle welcome to the oncoming mass of darkness.

³⁴⁵ Przybylski, “Role.”

³⁴⁶ See Winston (Philo, 13–21) and Sterling (“Creatio,” 21–41) on creatio aeterna in Philo. Cf. alternative views of Wolfson on Philo holding to creatio ex nihilo (Philo, 1.295–324) and of Runia on creatio continua (Philo and the Timaeus, 96–103, 140–57, 215–22, 280–83, 287–91, 416–20, 426–33, 451–56, 505–19). See the summary of the debate in Sterling, “Creatio.”

In 3 Baruch the procedure of the separation is not explained. The separation of the light from the darkness by means of water is described in 2 En. (J) 27:3–4. Animated darkness – “Prince of Darkeners similar to the bull” – was banished, because God wanted “to create the world in the light” (בשעה שברא הקב"ה את עולמו אמר לו לשר החושך סור מלפני מפני שאני מבקש את העולם לבראות באורה ושרו של חושך דומה לשר; Pesiq. R. 20). The separation of the light from the darkness is the main concern of the Nag Hammadi Paraph. Shem 40. See the following fragment, which is even structurally similar to 3 Baruch:

Paraphrase of Shem

and at that time the Light was about to separate from the Darkness. And a voice was heard in the world, saying, “Blessed is the eye which has seen you, and the mind which has supported your majesty at my desire.”

3 Baruch

and the light is being separated from the darkness.” And a voice came saying, “O Light giver, give light to the world!”

Personified Darkness of the Paraphrase of Shem is connected to Hades. Personified and zoomorphic “outer darkness” is identified with the “great dragon” in Pistis Sophia (3.126). In 3 Baruch Hades is defined as “dark and impure” (4:3) and located in a lower heaven (first or second; see comm. to ch. 11). At the same time, the sun is the “light giver,” explicitly concerned with purity (8:4–5) and according to 7:2 passes through the third heaven.³⁴⁷ It is not clear how this separation between light and darkness relates to the opposition between “dark and impure” Serpent-Hades, located on the lower heaven, and light and other pure images of the higher heavens. Such a distribution is known to T. Levi 3 with its dark lowest heaven (cf. comm. to 3:5: Heaven as abode of demons). It is dark because “it beholds all the unrighteous deeds of men” (T. Levi 3:1), while the sun is defiled exactly for the same reason: “because it beholds the lawlessness and unrighteousness of men” (3 Bar. 8:5). This is reminiscent of the dichotomy between sublunary chaotic and superlunary cosmic heavenly spheres in the Greek cosmology (see introductory comm. to ch. 10).

The fact of the daily separation of the light, reported exclusively by 3 Baruch, clarifies a verse of the celestial song of Abraham, speaking about the light kindled “before the morning light:”

³⁴⁷ The lake of ch. 10 may also have some implicit purificational functions and its birds are called “pure” in 10:5S; see comm. ibid.

You make the light shine before the morning light upon your creation [ТЪ (S ТЪ al.) СВѢТЪ СИЯЕШЕШ ПРЕДЪ ОУТРЕНИМЪ (SU ВНОУТРЕНИМЪ al.) СВѢТОМЪ НА ТВАРЬ СВОЮ] from your face in order to bring the day on the earth [ДНЕВАТИ НА ЗЕМЛИ]. And in your heavenly dwellings there is an inexhaustible other light of an inexpressible splendor from the lights of your face. (Apoc. Abr. 17:18–19)³⁴⁸

See the retroverted text: המאיר אור עד אור הבוקר על יצירך מלפניך להביא יום על פני הארץ: ובמשכנות מרומיך שפעת אור אחר מזיו נגהות פניך. In the Rabbinic Hebrew יום “day” means also “the sun” (b. Shab. 134a; b. Hul. 60a; b. Ket. 106a; etc.).³⁵⁰ Thus, the sequence of events in the Apocalypse of Abraham is identical to 3 Baruch, first the “light” is made to shine, and then the sun (or its light) is brought on earth.

6:14. O Light giver, give light to the world (φωτῶδοτα δὸς τῷ κόσμῳ τὸ φέγγος / СВѢТОДАВЬЧЕ ДАИ МНРОУ СВѢТЪ). In 2 En. (J) 15:2 phoenixes and chalkydri sing: “The Light giver is coming to give radiance to the whole world.” The same formula in similar circumstances is recited by the Rooster of the Slavonic About all Creation (cited in the introductory comm. to ch. 6: Sun Bird).

The sun is called “light giver” also in the so-called Mithras Liturgy (PMG IV.585; cf. I.596). Here also the sun must be meant, although Justin uses the same epithet for God: “the author of all his own forces and works, the giver of light in heaven, and father of all, the mind and vital power of the whole world, the mover of all things” (2 Apol. 6).

In S the motto is recited twice, either by the Bird itself or, according to an alternative interpretation of the text (see Notes), the Bird repeats what it has heard (from God’s or the angelic “voice” of G). G also may imply that the words are pronounced by the Bird, if one understands “the noise of the bird” in 6:15 as referring to “a voice” of 6:14. In any case, it is not clear whether this call is a petition or an order to the sun. The latter would be more probable, if Phoenix-Ziz were an angelic patron of the sun (on this see introductory comm. to ch. 4: Celestial Bestiary).

³⁴⁸ CS СИЯЕШЕ СВѢТЪ must reproduce Gk φαίνω φῶς and Heb הַמְאִיר אֹר, both well attested (cf., e.g., MT and LXX in Ezek 32:7); cf. also Gk ἀνατέλλει translated as СИЯЕШЕ in Slavonic versions of Matt 5:45 (e.g., Ostr.). For an interpretation and Hebrew retroversion of the verse, see Kulik, Retroverting, 78.

³⁴⁹ Ibid.

³⁵⁰ CS ДНЕВАТИ НА ЗЕМЛИ (with hapax legomenon translated here as “[in order] to bring the day”) may be explained by infinitivus finalis in Hebrew. Cf. להאיר על הארץ “in order to bring light upon the earth” (Gen 1:15). The infinitive of purpose used alone (i.e., without ὕνα, ὥς, etc.) is attested also in Jewish Greek texts; cf. Moulton et al., Grammar, 3.134–135.

6:16. This is what wakes up the roosters on earth / This is to wake up the roosters which are on earth in peace. The Rooster as a celestial singer foreseeing the dawn and wakening men was known to Iranian mythology (e.g., Avesta, Vendidad 18).³⁵¹ Greeks knew it as a bird of the deity of light, announcing the coming of the morning (Theognis 863f.; Pliny, Nat. Hist. 10.46). As the bird of light, it also was an attribute of Christ (Prudentius, Liber Cathemerinon 1). The rooster's image was among the most popular in pre-exilic Jewish iconography.³⁵² One of the gigantic birds of Jewish lore is known as the Field Rooster (תרנוול ברא of Tg. Ps 50:11 and par.) to Rabbis and as Rooster (רוס) in Slavonic About All Creation.

The wakening of earthly roosters by a cosmic Rooster is also found in About All Creation:

There is a Rooster that has a head up to heaven, and the sea is up to its knees.³⁵³ When the sun bathes in the Ocean, then the Ocean surges and waves start to beat the Rooster's feathers. And having felt the waves it says, "Kukoreku," which means, "Light giver, give light to the world." When it sings, then all the roosters sing at the same hour in the whole inhabited world.³⁵⁴

In T. Adam 1:10 Seraphim are those who, by beating their wings, cause the roosters to crow: "[at the tenth hour of the night] at the sound of the wings of the Seraphim at that time the roosters crow and praise God."³⁵⁵ Rooster foresees the day in the morning benediction of b. Ber. 60b (based on Job 38:36). Late mystical tradition tells of a heavenly fire wakening the rooster and causing him to praise God and wake others to do it (Zohar Lev 3.22b; 23a; 49b).

The motif of the Bird causing the sun to rise and the earthly roosters to crow in response might have a textual basis in the verse "it will rise at the voice of the bird" from Eccl 12:4:

³⁵¹ It must be connected to light and fire also in earlier Mesopotamian traditions; see Ehrenberg, "Rooster."

³⁵² See, e.g., Sass, "Pre-Exilic." In 3 Baruch, the rooster is not a rain-bringer, in distinction of some other traditions; cf. Keel, "Zwei" and Delcor, "Nature."

³⁵³ Cf. "a bird standing up to its ankles in the water while its head reached the sky" (B. Bat. 73b).

³⁵⁴ Tikhonravov, Pamiatniki, 2.349.

³⁵⁵ Ms E (British Museum ms Arund Oz 53) has "wheels" instead of "wings"; cf. 3 En. 19:5–7 on the noise of Wheels; on the music of spheres see comm. to 6:13 above.

And the doors to the streets will be shut,	וסגרו דלתים בשוק
when the sound of the grinding becomes low,	בשפל קול הטחנה
and it will rise at the voice of the bird,	ויקום לקול הצפור
and all the daughters of singing will bow down	וישחו כל-בנות השיר

[or “will be brought low”].

Here, the celestial gate is closed behind the sun going forth to its route (“the doors to the streets will be shut”), the noises of the rotating solar wheel come down (“when the sound of the grinding becomes low”),³⁵⁶ the sun rises at the voice of the Sun Bird (“it will rise at the voice of the bird”), and the lower earthly birds greet it (“all the daughters of singing will bow down”). See also “a bird of the air shall carry the voice” (Eccl 10:20).

6:16G. For as others do through the mouth, so also the rooster (ὥς γὰρ τὰ δίστομα οὕτως καὶ ὁ ἀλέκτωρ). In Greek, this reading only occurs in ms A, which is obscure and possibly corrupt: lit. “For as double-mouthed [do?], so also the rooster.” James suggests: “For as articulate-speaking beings do, so do the roosters.”³⁵⁷ However, Gk δίστομος is not attested in this meaning, unless we turn to interpretatio hebraica: Gk δίστομος means “double-mouthed, with two entrances,” “double-edged (on swords)” and in LXX it renders Heb פִּיפִּיּוֹת with the same meaning. The latter, however, means also pl. “mouths” (see, e.g., Hebrew Sir 9:4: פֶּן יִשְׁרָא פֶּךְ בְּפִיפִּיתָם; cf. b. Ber. 11b: בְּפִיפִּיּוֹת עֵמֶךְ בֵּית יִשְׂרָאֵל). In this case, the hypothetic Hebrew verse would read: “For as mouths [do], so also the rooster ...” The translation here is based on the emendation proposed by Ryssel: ὥς γὰρ τὰ δῖα] στόμα[τος], but the message remains unclear. It may mean that they converse in the language peculiar to them.

³⁵⁶ Cf. Gen. Rab. 6.7; b. Yoma 20b–21a; Cant. Rab. 5.9; Pirqe R. El. 34; Eccl. Zut. 86; Midr. Sam. 9.74; see comm. to “a thunder like a sound of thunder” in 6:13 above.

³⁵⁷ James, “Baruch,” xvii.

Sun's Route (7)

GREEK

¹ And I said, “And where does the sun begin its labors after the rooster cries?”

² And the angel told me, “Listen, Baruch: all I have showed you is in the first and second heaven.

And in the third heaven

the sun passes through and gives light to the world.

But wait, and you will see the Glory of God.”

³ And while I was talking with him, I saw the bird, and it appeared in front [of the sun], and grew little by little, and returned to its full size.

⁴ And behind it [there was] the shining sun, and with it the angels carrying [it], and a crown upon its head – [it was] a sight we were not able to look directly into it and see [anything]. ⁵ And as soon as the sun lighted up, Phoenix also stretched out its wings.

But I, seeing such great glory, became overcome with a great fear, and fled and hid in the wings of the angel. ⁶ And the angel told me, “Do not be afraid, Baruch, but wait and you will see their setting also.”

SLAVONIC

¹ I Baruch said, “How much does the sun rest?” And the angel told me, “From when the roosters cry out until the light comes.”

² And the angel told me, “Listen, Baruch: what I have shown you is in the first and second heavens, in these places

the sun goes through heaven; then it gives light to the world.”

And he told me, “Wait and you will see the Glory of God.”

[Cf. 8:6]

NOTES

7:3G. It appeared in front [of the sun] (ἀνεφάνη ἔμπροσθεν). Cf. “I saw again the bird coming in front and the sun coming with the angels” (8:1). Hartom understood ἔμπροσθεν as “at the beginning” (7:3) or as ἔμπροσθεν [μου] “before [me]” (8:1).³⁵⁸ However, 6:2 states clearly ὄρνεον περιτρέχον ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ ἡλίου “a bird circling in front of the sun.” Cf. also 9:3, where ἔμπροσθεν is used with the third person pronoun: ἔμπροσθεν αὐτῆς “in front of it [the moon].”

³⁵⁸ Hartom, “Baruch,” 418–419.

Grew little by little, and returned to his full size (πρὸς μικρὸν μικρὸν ηὔξανε καὶ ἀνεπληροῦτο). Hughes understands it as “grew less and less,” and even brings an Indian parallel on the bird Gadura diminishing its size.³⁵⁹ In fact, πρὸς μικρὸν μικρὸν is a biblicalism, meaning “little by little; gradually”; cf. Gk κατὰ μικρὸν μικρὸν, Heb מְעַמְעֵם מְעַמְעֵם “little by little” (cf. LXX Deut 7:22); CS по малому по малому (ms B of Apoc. Abr. 5:11).

7:4G. And behind him [there was] the shining sun, and with it the angels carrying [it], and a crown upon its head (καὶ ὀπισθεν τούτου τὸν ἥλιον ἐξαστράπτοντα καὶ τοὺς ἀγγέλους μετ’ αὐτοῦ φέροντας καὶ στέφανον ἐπὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ). Gk φέροντας lacks an object. Hughes understands Gk μετ’ αὐτοῦ φέροντας as lit. “carrying along with it.” Another possibility is a slight emendation: τοὺς ἀγγέλους μετ’ αὐτοῦ φέροντας [καὶ] στέφανον ἐπὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ “the angels carrying a crown over its head.” The image would be similar to Mithras holding a crown over the sun’s head.³⁶⁰ 7:5G. Became overcome with a great fear (ἐταπεινώθη φόβῳ). The same verb – Gk ταπεινώ – is used again with Phoenix in 8:2, 3, and 6 (twice). It means “lessen, reduce, humble, abase” also in the moral sense (cf. Gen 16:9; Lev 23:27; Sir 18:21; Isa 40:4; 58:10; Matt 23:12; 1 Pet 5:6). With “fear” it is used by Hesychius of Alexandria in his Lexicon explaining the word κατεπτήχασιν as τῷ φόβῳ ἐταπεινώθησαν.

COMMENTARY

The two versions differ regarding the character of Baruch’s next inquiry, whether it concerns the sun’s route (G) or a pause in its motion (S). Both versions can be corroborated intertextually.

7:1. “And where does the sun begin its labors [or “labors”] after the rooster cries?” / “How much does the sun rest?” And the angel told me, “From when the roosters cry out until the light comes.”” (καὶ ποῦ ἀποσχολεῖται ὁ ἥλιος ἀφ’ οὗ ὁ ἀλέκτωρ φωνεῖ / много ли почитается солнце и рече ми ангелъ о тнѣли когдѣ възгласаетъ дождеже свѣтъ [бываеъ б]). According to G Baruch shows interest in the sun’s route. The constant course (πορεία) of luminaries is among the most magnificent works of God:

Great is our God and glorious, dwelling in the highest, who established in [their] course [ἐν πορείᾳ] the lights for determining seasons from year to year, and they have not turned aside from the way [ὁδοῦ] which he appointed them. In the fear of God (they pursue) their way [ὁδός] every day, from the day God created them and forever. And they did not err since the day he created them. Since the generations of old they have not withdrawn from their ways [ὁδῶν], unless God commanded them by the command of his servants. (Pss. Sol. 18:10–12)

³⁵⁹ Hughes, “Baruch,” 538.

³⁶⁰ MMM, 1.172ff.

The routes of luminaries are known to Judg 5:20; 1 En. 14:11, 17; 1QH 1.13.³⁶¹ “Ways above the firmament” belong to the hidden knowledge according to 4 Ezra 4:7. Curiosity for the moves of celestial bodies was considered pious by the Rabbis:

R. Shimeon b. Pazzi said in the name of R. Yehoshua b. Levi on the authority of Bar Kappara: “He who knows how to calculate the cycles [of the sun and the moon] and planetary courses, but does not, of him the Scripture says, ‘But they regard not the work of the Lord, neither have they considered the operation of his hands’ [Isa 5:12].” R. Shemuel b. Nahmani said in R. Yohanan’s name, “How do we know that it is one’s religious duty [מצוה על האדם] to calculate the cycles and planetary courses? Because it is written, ‘For this is your wisdom and understanding in the sight of the nations’ [Deut 4:6]. What wisdom and understanding is in the sight of the nations? That it is the calculation of cycles and planets.” (b. Shab. 75a)

On the interest specifically in the sun’s route, see the following:

How do the orbs of the sun and the moon set? R. Yehudah b. R. Lai and the Rabbis disagree. R. Yehudah said, “Behind the vault and above it” [מאחורי הכיפה ולמעלה]. The Rabbis maintained, “Behind the vault and below it.” R. Yonathan said, “The view of R. Yehudah b. R. Lai that it is behind the vault and above it is preferable in respect of summer, when the whole world is hot while the wells are cold; and the opinion of the Rabbis that it is behind the vault and below appears correct in respect of winter [lit. “days of the rain”], when the whole world is cold and the wells are warm.” R. Shimeon b. Yohai said, “We do not know whether they fly through the air, glide in the heaven, or travel in their usual manner [אם פורחין הן באויר, ואם שפין ברקיע ואם מהלכין הן כדרךן]. It is an exceedingly difficult matter, and no person can fathom it.” (Gen. Rab. 6.8)

We have learned in a Baraita, R. Nathan said, “In the summer time the sun moves in the zenith of the sky, hence all the earth is warm and the springs are cool; but in the winter the sun moves in the base of the skies, hence all the earth is cold and the springs are warm.” The Rabbis taught: “The sun moves in four different paths. During the months of Nissan, Iyar, and Sivan it moves over the top of the mountains, in order to melt the snow. During Tamuz, Ab, and Elul it moves in the cultivated portions of the earth, in order to ripen the fruit. In Tishri, Mar-Cheshvan, and Kislev it moves over the seas, in order to dry up the lakes. And in Tebeth, Shebat, and Adar it moves in the desert, in order not to parch the seed sown.” (b. Pesah. 94b) ³⁶¹ Cf. the “paths of luminaries” in Mesopotamian texts (Horowitz, Mesopotamian, 256–8).

The discrepancies between G and S in 7:1 are very instructive. Either S did not understand its Greek Vorlage properly, or, on the contrary, it reflects an older Greek version as is often otherwise the case. Greek Vorlage of S might have: καὶ εἶπον ἐγὼ καὶ ποῦ ἀποσχολεῖται ὁ ἥλιος [Καὶ εἶπέν μοι ὁ ἄγγελος] ἄφ' οὗ ὁ ἀλέκτωρ φωνεῖ ... "And I said, 'And where does the sun begin its labors?' [And the angel told me,] 'After the rooster cries.'"³⁶² The original dialogue could be presented also without the remark "And the angel told me." (Such dialogues, without remarks between repliques, do occur in G in 6:10–11; 9:5–6, while all parallel texts in S always contain the introducing remarks. Here G could be the one that erroneously united the dialogue into one repique.) S understood Gk ποῦ as "how," and not "where," and either misinterpreted Gk ἀποσχολέομαι "be busy, occupied"³⁶³ as ἀποσχολάζω "rest," or as said, its Vorlage in fact had it instead ἀποσχολέομαι, and it was misinterpreted by G.

In the latter case, S could preserve an original version. The question as it is presented in S may imply the concept of the permanent motion of the sun, even by night. The "tireless Helios" is known to Homeric Hymn 31; the sun moves at night (although sometimes slumbering) in Athenaeus, Deipn. 11.469–70; Ps.-Apollodorus, Bibl. 2.5.10; Eustath. ad Hom. 1632; Virgil, Georg. 1.246ff; and Apuleius, Metam. 9.22ff.³⁶⁴ Moreover, in Jewish sources "the sun goes down from heaven and returns through the north in order to reach the east" (1 En. 72:5; cf. Eccl 1:5).³⁶⁵ It must pass from west to east either beneath the earth or above the firmament:

The learned of Israel say, "The sun moves by day beneath the firmament, and by night above the firmament." The learned of the nations say, "The sun moves by day beneath the firmament, and by night beneath the earth."³⁶⁶ Rabbi said, "The assertion of the learned of the nations seems to be the more reasonable, for during the day the springs are all cold and at night they are all warm." (b. Pesah. 94b).³⁶⁷

³⁶² Thus Gaylord, Slavonic, 87.

³⁶³ LPG, 215.

³⁶⁴ For similar Babylonian traditions on the sun that "remains sleepless," see Great Shamash Hymn 41–44 (cf. Heimpel, "Sun," 146–47).

³⁶⁵ Thus in the land of Laistrygonians, located in the extreme north, "the pathways of day and night [i.e., of the routs of the sun at day and night] come close together" (Homer, Od. 10.80 ff).

³⁶⁶ Thus already Anaxagoras (5th cent. BCE): "The revolution of the stars takes them beneath the earth" (apud Hipp. Phil. 8; Dox. 561); cf. "Sol has glided down beneath Oceanus, and was giving light to the regions of the world below the earth" (Apuleius, Metam. 9.22ff; cf. Virgil, Georgics 1. 246ff).

³⁶⁷ This passage comes before another fragment from b. Pesah. 94b cited in this comm. above.

The sun's nightly motion under earth and its rest are connected in one of the versions of 2 Enoch in a very similar context that describes the sunset and the nightly removal of the sun's crown (see the next chapter): "And the sun goes under the earth [J; "revolves" A] in its chariot and rests [J; "goes without lights" A] for seven complete hours in the night" (2 En. 14:3). The reading with "rest" is more plausible with "seven hours," since otherwise not seven but twelve hours of night should have been mentioned. However, in 3 Baruch the "rest" of the sun is much shorter: "from when the roosters cry out until the light comes." Both writings contradict 1 Enoch, where the sun "does not rest," although it "runs day and night" as well (1 En. 72:37). The "rest" meant in 3 Baruch must be a short phase of the dawn until the actual sunrise. The length of this period, defined as מעלות השחר עד נץ החמה, was of halachic interest for Rabbis as well (b. Pesah. 93b).

Our text must also stick to the opinion of "the learned of the nations," R. Yehudah the Patriarch, and 2 Enoch, since it "gives light to the world" while not going under the firmament but passing above lower firmaments through the third (or second in S) heaven. This brings us to another important distinction between the versions concerning the location of the daytime routes of the luminaries: the third in G and the second in S (7:2). The rationale of placing the sun and the moon in the second heaven was explained by the Rabbis:

Where are the spheres of the sun and the moon set? In the second heaven, as it is said, "And God set them in the Raqia רָקִיעַ "firmament"] of the heaven" [Gen 1:17].³⁶⁸ R. Pinehas said in R. Abbahu's name, "This verse is explicit, and the men of the Great Assembly further explained, 'You are the Lord, even you alone, you have made the heaven, the heaven of heavens, with all their host' [Neh 9:6]. Thus where are all their hosts set? In the second Raqia which is above the heaven [i.e., in "the heaven of heavens"]" ... R. Yehoshua b. R. Bun quoted, "The heavens declare his righteousness" [Ps 50:6] – In the future the heavens will declare the righteousness which the Lord did for his world in not setting them in the first Rakia, for had he set them in the first Raqia, no creature could have endure the fire of the sun. (Gen. Rab. 6.6; cf. Eccl. Zut. 1)³⁶⁹

Additional evidence for the secondary nature of G in this chapter may be found in verses 3–5a, absent in S, which give a variant of 6:2–5a and must have been interpolated into the extant version of the writing as a result of compilation:

³⁶⁸ Raqia "firmament" is the name of the second heaven according to b. Hag. 12b.

³⁶⁹ For the hypothesis of the three-heaven structure (with the luminaries in the second heaven) in the Urtext of 3 Baruch, see introductory comm. to ch. 11 (Ouranology).

6:2–5aG

And he showed me a chariot-of-four, which was with a fire underneath. And upon the chariot was sitting a man, wearing a crown of fire. The chariot was drawn by forty angels. And behold, a bird was circling in front of the sun, about nine [cubits] away. And I told the angel, “What is this bird?” And he told me, “This is the guardian of the inhabited world.” And I said, “Lord, how is it the guardian of the inhabited world? Show me!” And the angel told me, “This bird goes before the sun, and stretching out its wings receives its fire-shaped rays ...”

7:3–5aG

I saw the bird, and it appeared in front [of the sun], and grew little by little, and returned to its full size. And behind it [there was] the shining sun, and with it the angels carrying [it], and a crown upon its head – [it was] a sight we were not able to look directly into it and see [anything]. And as soon as the sun lighted up, Phoenix also stretched out its wings ...

See the duplication of the “Builders account” in 2:2–3,7 and 3:1–5a (see introductory comm. to ch. 3). The only justification for a duplication of the description of Phoenix here might have been an actual eye-witnessing of Phoenix stretching its wings only discussed in 6:5 above (on verbal vs. visual revelations cf. comm. to 4:8 and introductory comm. to ch. 9).

7:2. All I have showed you is in the first and second heaven. And in the third heaven the sun passes through / what I have shown you is in the first and second heavens, in these places the sun goes through heaven. Here is another important discrepancy between the versions. Although both versions do not number the transfer to the third heaven in 4:2 (in distinction to the two previous transfers, which were numbered), they may imply it, mentioning most other indications of the inter-celestial transition (like the journey and the plain in both versions, and the gate only in S). Nevertheless, S here ignores it, as if Baruch is still in the second heaven. Either this means that the sun descending from the third heaven passes through the gates of the lower two heavens, or this could be a rudiment of the original structure, according to which Beasts and Lights are located in the second heaven. In the latter case, differing from its Greek counterpart (7:2G), 7:2S concurs with another verse of G (10:1G), which numbers the heaven beyond the luminaries as “the third” (the problem is discussed in detail in comm. to ch. 11: Ouranology; see also comm. to ch. 3: Interpolation Theory and to 10:1G).

7:5G. I, seeing such great glory, became overcome with a great fear, and fled and hid in the wings of the angel. Compare this text with 8:6S. The sun is the only celestial phenomenon that frightens Baruch. Extreme fear or fainting is a regular element of visionary experience, especially when seeing or hearing God (Dan 8:17–18; 1 En. 60:3; 65:4; Apoc. Abr. 10:2; Lad. Jac. 2:1), but also with other visions (Dan 5:6; 7:15; 27; 1 En. 14:9, 13–14; 4 Ezra 10:30; Rev 1:17).

Sunset and Earthly Wickedness (8)

GREEK

¹ And having taken me he brought me to the west. And when the time of the setting came, I saw again the bird coming in front and the sun coming with the angels. And as soon as it came I saw the angels, and they took the crown off its top. ² But the bird stood weary and it folded its wings.

³ And having seen these things, I said, “Lord, why did they took off the crown from the head of the sun, and why is the bird so weary?”

⁴ And the angel told me, “The crown of the sun, when it has run through the day, four angels take it, and carry up to heaven and renew it, because it and its rays have been defiled on earth; and then it is renewed this way each day.”

⁵ And I Baruch said, “Lord, and why are its rays defiled on earth?”

And the angel told me, “Because it beholds the lawlessness and unrighteousness of men, that is to say: fornications, adulteries, thefts, extortions, idolatries, drunkennesses, murders, strifes, jealousy, slanders, murmurings, whisperings, divinations, and such like, which are not pleasing to God.

Because of these things it is defiled, and because of this it is renewed.

⁶ And about the bird, how it becomes weary: because of restraining the rays of the sun, [and] because of the fire and of the whole day’s burning it is weary.

SLAVONIC

¹ And the sun came without a crown and 36 angels [with it],

² and also the bird [came] slack.

³ And I said, “Lord, where is the crown of the sun gone, and [why] is the bird slack?”

⁴ And the angel told me, “The crown of the sun, when the day is over, four angels take it and carry up to heaven, because its rays are defiled from earth.”

⁵ And the angel told me, “The sun seeing all the lawlessness in the world does not endure fornication, adultery, jealousy, rivalry, theft, murder, all which is not pleasing to God.

⁶ And the bird is slack, like one of the birds of the world, since it takes up the fiery rays of the sun, and that is why it is slack.”

⁷ For unless its wings, as we said before, were screening the rays of the sun, no living creature would survive.“

And the four the angels brought the crown of the sun again.

[Cf. 7:5–6]

And when I saw such glory, I was frightened and fled under the wings of the angel. And the angel said, “Do not fear, Baruch, the Lord is with you, but be bold.”

NOTES

8:1G. Off its top (ἀπὸ τῆς κορυφῆς αὐτοῦ). In 7:4 and 8:3 there is Gk κεφαλή instead. Gk κορυφή, although used with a man or god, often denotes inanimate entities.

8:1S. Ms B: “I saw 230 angels removing the crown off the sun.” Family β has instead: “And angels carried up the crown to the Throne of God, and I saw the sun coming, and it was like a man, slack and sad.”

8:2, 3, 6G. Weary (τεταπεινωμένον). Also “humble,” “dejected,” contextually probably “exhausted, faint.” S translated it as σπινθη “slack.” In Hebrew both words may be similar: עוף “bird” and עיף “faint, weary.” The word play on the similarity of the two roots is found in Exod. Rab. 38: כחיב ארץ עיפחה כמו אופל זה גיהנם שהרשעים כחיב ארץ עיפחה כעוף, ד, א “A land efathah as darkness” [Job 10:22] – it is Gehenna, in which the wicked flit about like birds. Another explanation: efathah – the place where the wicked become weary.”

It folded its wings (συστέλλον τὰς πτέρυγας αὐτοῦ). Or: “it contracted/reduced its wings.” The same word is used also in 9:1: τούτων συσταλέντων “when they withdrew.”

8:5G. Because of these things it is defiled, and because of this it is renewed (διὰ ταῦτα μολύνεται καὶ διὰ τοῦτο ἀνακαινίζεται). Or “By these it is defiled, and that is why it is renewed.”

8:5S. Family β adds: “And the sun weeps, since it defiles its crown. For this reason it is cleansed at the Throne of God.”

8:6–7S. Ms S has instead of these verses: “And the angel told me: ‘It is sad because of the heat and warmth of the sun.’” Cf. “because of the fire and of the whole day’s burning” of G.

8:7G. As we said before (ὡς προείπομεν). I.e., as said in 6:6. The expression is used by Greek historians (and esp. Josephus) and is widespread in documentary papyri but not typical for pseudepigrapha. The whole verse, absent in S, must belong to a later editorial layer.

COMMENTARY

The sight of the sunset from the celestial point of view focuses on the nightly renewal of the sun's crown defiled by earthly wickedness. This enables another demonstration of the interactive character of the relations between celestial and terrestrial realms, on the one hand, and of the physical and moral issues, on the other.

The procedure of removing of the sun's crown at night is attested also in 2 En:

When it [sun] goes out from the western gates, [+ it takes off its light, the splendor which its radiance and J] the four [+ hundred J] angels take away its crown, and carry it [+ up A] to the Lord." (2 En. (A) 14:2–3)

Then J proceeds on the sun's journey under the earth at night, while A has "But the sun turns its chariot around and goes without light; and then they place the crown on it." In the Slavonic About All Creation the crown is removed by three hundred angels.

Pirqe R. El. 7–8 gives the reason for this practice: as in 3 Baruch the crown is taken in order to purify it after it being defiled by men's sins. From the Life of Adam and Eve it is possible to deduce an alternative rationale for the crown removal. Both the sun and the moon are seen by Eve as "two Ethiopians" (Apoc. Mos. 35:4), because "they cannot shine before the Light of all things, the Father of Light" (Apoc. Mos. 36:3); see the same logic applied to minor lights in 3 Baruch below: "as before a king, his household cannot speak freely, so the moon and the stars cannot shine before the sun" (9:8). However, this consideration must be relevant only for the school of "the learned of Israel" who believed that at night the sun passes above the firmament and thus possibly close to the Throne of Glory (see b. Pes. 94b cited in comm. to 7:1; cf. 2 En. (A) 14).

Through what procedure is the sun "renewed?" We are told only that it happens in some higher heaven, since the angels "carry it up to heaven" (8:4). In the next heaven, probably the last one before the heaven of the Throne of Glory, there is a celestial "lake of water" (10:2). It is an abode of the pious souls (10:5G), apparently on their way to other "resting places of the righteous" (16:6S), and although it is not stated, it must be their final purification basin, which could serve the sun as well (see comm. to "lake of water" in 10:2). The sun is known to set into the "water of life": "he lifted me up to the water of life and to the fire of west which receives every setting of the sun" (1 En.

17:4).³⁷⁰ Ritual purificatory ablution as prescribed in biblical texts also becomes effective mostly after sunset (see t. Shabb. 2.9; t. Para 3.8; m. Neg. 14.3; Sifre Deut. 256; b. Ber 2a-b; on ablution see comm. to 10:2). The very idea of the daily purification of the sun after the sunset might have found its proof-text in וּבֹא הַשֶּׁמֶשׁ וְטָהַר of Lev 22:7, taken out of context and read literally as “and the sun sets and is purified” (instead of “when the sun sets, he [the unclean person] is purified”). The procedure of bathing the sun in a celestial “lake of water” (בְּרִיכַת שֶׁל מַיִם) is also associated with another purpose, not for cleaning but for chilling it (see Gen. Rab. 6.6 cited in comm. to 6:6). Similarly the setting Shamash is supposed to calm his heart “with cool water” in the Babylonian “Sunset Prayer.”³⁷¹

8:1S. 36 angels. 36 angels accompany the sun at the sunset (only in S). There were 40 angles at the sunrise (6:2), but four of them left to take care of the sun’s crown (8:4). The resulting number may also correspond to the 36 “decans” well known to Egyptian and Hellenistic astronomy.

8:4. Four angels. These “four angels” who take care of the sun’s crown must differ from the four angels of presence in 4:7S (see comm. ibid.). The sun’s crown is taken away and brought back by four (or four hundred in J) angels also in 2 En. (A) 14:2–3.

According to Pirqe R. El. 6 the angels must be different at day and night, i.e., a total of eight.³⁷² Similarly, there are two groups of four “great stars” attending the sun: “Four great stars, holding on the right side of the sun’s chariot, four on the left side [going] with the sun perpetually” (2 En. (A) 11:4). See “It [the sun’s wheel] has eight angels: four in front of it, and four behind it. In front of it – so that it will not burn the world, behind it – so that the it will not cool down” (Eccl. Zut. 1; Yal. Eccl 967).

Its rays have been defiled on earth. On luminaries witnessing the impiety of the lower world, see comm. to 6:6. Celestial entities can not only witness but even be defiled by earthly wickedness. Human sins darken heavenly waters ³⁷⁰ The belief in the purificatory immersion of the sun may be referred by the Sadducees mocking the Pharisees: “It once happened that they immersed the [Temple] candelabrum on a festival, and the Sadducees said: ‘Come and see the Pharisees who immerse the orb of the sun’” (so in y. Hag. 22.1: the Tosefta and the Babylonian Talmud have “the orb of the moon” instead). See Baumgarten, “Immunity.” Cf. Num. Rab. 12.13 associating the Temple candelabrum with the luminaries.

³⁷¹ Heimpel, “Sun,” 129.

³⁷² Toy, Ginzberg, “Baruch,” 550.

in 2 Bar. 58:1 and 60:1. “The lowest [heaven] is dark, since it sees all the injustices of mankind” (T. Levi 3:1). The defilement of the sun was known to the Rabbis: “‘And it is like a groom going out from his chamber’ [Ps 19:6]. As a groom enters in purity and exits defiled, so also the sun’s wheel enters in purity and exits defiled [כך גלגל חמה נכנס בטהרה ויוצא בטומאה]” (S. Eli. Rab. 2.17; cf. Midr. Pss. 19.12, which adds that the sun like a groom “enters strong and exits weak, because of the human sins [מעוונות של בריות]”). See also Lev. Rab. 31.9; Midr. Hag. Gen 1:42; Midr. Alphabetot 118; Baraita de-Maase Bereshith 50.³⁷³ The idea may go back to the biblical concept that sins may defile the land (Num 35:34) well developed in Rabbinic literature.

However, some did not agree with this idea: “For the sun [shines] on every impure place, and yet it is not defiled. So it is with Christ ...” (Nag Hammadi Teaching of Silvanus 101.31–33). Tertullian, quoting a source, states, “Only recently I heard a novel defense offered by one of these devotees of games. ‘The sun,’ he said, ‘nay, even God himself, looks from heaven and is not defiled!’” (Spect. 20).

8:5. Fornications ..., and such like. This is the second list of vices in 3 Baruch. See comm. to 4:17.

8:6G. No living creature would survive (οὐκ ἄν ἐσώθη πᾶσα πνοή). For πᾶσα πνοή in similar contexts, cf. LXX Ps 150:6; T. Abr. (A) 13:6; and Acts John 8. See ξένη πνοή in 2:1G and comm. ibid. Very similar phrasing is found in Matt 24:22 and Mark 13:20: οὐκ ἄν ἐσώθη πᾶσα σὰρξ “no flesh will survive.” Another phrase from these verse ἐκολόβωσεν τὰς ἡμέρας “he shortened the days” appears in 9:7 below.

³⁷³ Ginzberg, Legends, 1.25; 5.37–38, n. 105.

Moon and Heavenly Disobedience (9)

GREEK

¹ And when they had withdrawn, at the same time the night also overtook, with the moon and with the stars.

² And I Baruch said, "Lord, show me it also, I entreat you, how it goes out, where it goes, and in what shape it walks."

³ And the angel said,
"Wait and you will see it shortly."

And on the morrow I saw it in the shape of a woman, and sitting on a wheeled chariot.

And in front of it there were oxen and lambs [harnessed] in the chariot, and a multitude of angels likewise.

And I said, "Lord, what are the oxen and the lambs?" And he told me, "They also are angels."

⁵ And again I asked, "Why is it that at one time it waxes, but at another time wanes?"

⁶ [And he told me], "Listen, Baruch, this which you are looking at was depicted by God beautiful as no other.

⁷ And at the transgression of the first Adam, kindled [its light] for Sammael, when he took the serpent as a garment.

And it [the moon] did not hide itself but waxed, and God was angry with it, and afflicted it, and shortened its days."

⁸ And I said, "And how is it that it does not also shine always, but only at night?" And the angel said, "Listen, as before a king his household cannot speak freely, so the moon and the stars cannot shine before the sun. For the stars are suspended, but they are outshined by the sun, and the moon, [although] being intact, is exhausted by the heat of the sun."

SLAVONIC

² And I said to the angel, "Lord, tell me about the movement of the moon, so that I know what it is."

³ And he told me,

"It is similar to a woman, sitting on an armed chariot, and the oxen drawing the chariot are 20,

and also the oxen are angels.

The form of the moon is like a woman."

⁵ And I Baruch said, "Lord, when is it extinguished and when does it change?"

⁶ And he told me, "Listen, Baruch, when it was beautiful,

⁷ when the first-created Adam transgressed, having listened to Satanael, when he disguised himself in the serpent, it [the moon] did not hide itself but shone, and God was angry with it and opened to it days to mourn."

NOTES

9:1G. When they had withdrawn (τούτων συσταλέντων). Or “when they contracted,” see note to 8:2.

At the same time the night also overtook, with the moon and with the stars (καὶ ἡ νύξ κατέλαβεν καὶ ἅμα ταύτῃ μετὰ καὶ τῆς σελήνης καὶ μετὰ τῶν ἀστέρων). Ryssel emends: καὶ ἅμα ταύτῃ [τὸ ἄρμα] [μετὰ καὶ] τῆς σελήνης καὶ μετὰ τῶν ἀστέρων (“and at the same time [came] the chariot of the moon with the stars”).³⁷⁴

9:2G. Shape (σχῆμα). Some translate as “pattern, route.” However, (1) in the next verse the same word is used unambiguously: ἐν σχήματι γυναικὸς “in the shape of a woman,” and (2) nothing is said on the route of the moon below.

9:2S. Tell ... is. Translation follows β, which is closer to G. Family α has an abridged reading: “teach me what the moon is.” The verbal use in the family β is also closer to G. It has CS сѣкажи “tell,” which may be a corruption of покажи “show, explain,” corresponding to Gk δεῖξόν (like in 6:4; cf. 4:8S and comm. ibid.), while α has a contextual наοучи “teach.”

9:3. On a wheeled chariot / on an armed chariot (ἐπὶ ἄρματος τροχοῦ / на оржнихъ колесыничи). The translation is based on the assumption that Gk τροχός here is a noun “wheel.” This way it was understood also by S: CS на оржнихъ колесыничи (only in L; other mss omit оржнихъ), lit. “on an armed chariot” (*Gk ἐπὶ ἄρματος ἐνόπλου), must be a distortion of на оржнихъ колесыномъ; cf. 6:2S, where the word оржние, and not колесыница is used for “chariot.” Hartom notes that “all chariots are wheeled,” and proposes to interpret Gk τροχός as an adjective “running, tripping.”³⁷⁵ However, cf. Gk τροχῶν ἄρματος rendering Heb אֶרֶץ הַמַּרְכָּבִים in 1 Kgs 7:33.

9:3S. Drawing. Ms L has мѣстѣмъ meaning “revenge” or “vindicate” as in Gk ἐκδικέω (Ostr Luke 18:3). A gloss in L and readings of mss Bβ contextually emend it to different forms of the verb возвѣти “draw.” The verb might be added in S, since from Gk καὶ ἦσαν ἔμπροσθεν αὐτῆς βόες καὶ ἄμνοι ἐν τῷ ἄρματι it may be concluded that “oxen and lambs” are inside the chariot.

9:5S. When is it extinguished and when does it change. Family β has “why the moon does not have light as the sun, but all the time is extinguished or begotten?”

9:6. Depicted (γεγραμμένη). Also “written” or “ordained, prescribed.” See comm. ad loc.

9:7. Of the first Adam / first-created Adam (τοῦ πρώτου Ἀδάμ / прѣвостъзѣданъ адамъ). Greek Ἀδὰμ ὁ πρῶτος “the first Adam” (e.g., Sib. Or. 3:24; Apoc. Ezra 2:10; etc.; cf. 4 Ezra 3:21) is a Hebraism going back to Heb אָדָם הָרִאשׁוֹן, Aram אָדָם קְדָמָא “first man” (t. Ber. 6.2; t. Hul. 3.20; t. Sot. 6.5; Sifra Lev. 12; Gen. Rab. 20.11; etc.). Cf. 1 Cor 15:45 emending it to “the first man Adam.” For the “first-created ³⁷⁴ Ryssel, “Baruch,” 454.

³⁷⁵ Hartom, “Baruch,” 420.

Adam” of S, cf. Wis 7:1; Jub. 3:28; 10:1; Sib. Or. 1:285; Bib. Ant. 13:8; Apoc. Ezra 2:10; Apoc. Sedr 4:4; and Philo, Quaest. Gen. 1.32; Quaest. Exod. 2.46.

9:7G. Kindled [its light] for Sammael (παρῆψε τῷ Σαμαήλ). The root of Gk παράπτω has also semantics of “transgression,” as in παράπτωμα/παράπτωσις. An intentional word-play is possible: “kindled [its light] for / transgressed to Sammael”; cf. the next note. The verb may mean “be near, approach, touch” (as translated by some) only in Medium. The meaning “give light” is given by Lampe basing on our text.³⁷⁶

And compressed it (καὶ ἔθλιψεν αὐτήν). Probably also a word-play on the polysemy of Gk θλίβω “compress, reduce in size” and “oppress, afflict, distress.”³⁷⁷

Shortened its days (ἐκολόβωσεν τὰς ἡμέρας αὐτῆς). “Shortened life” (reduced the number of its days) must be meant. Cf. the same phrase: “He has broken my strength in midcourse, he has shortened my days [Heb יָמַי קָצַר]” (Ps 102:24[23]); “The fear of the Lord prolongs days, but the years of the wicked will be shortened” (Prov 10:27); “pray that your days may be few, that they may be shortened” (4 Ezra 2:13). The identical phrase (ἐκολόβωσε τὰς ἡμέρας) refers to the days of eschaton (Mk 13:20).

9:7S. Opened. S has οὔτηκρυ for ἐκολόβωσεν “shortened” of G.

9:7S. When ... serpent. Family β expands: “When the serpent deceived Eve and Adam, they bared themselves, having eaten the vine and wept bitterly on their nakedness, and all of creation wept with them: heavens, and stars, and the sun, and all of creation shook up to the Throne of God. The angelic powers were greatly shaken by Adam’s transgression, but the moon alone laughed.”

9:8G. Household. In Gk pl. οἰκέται “household members.”

Outshined. σκεδάζονται. Lit. “scattered, dispersed” (applied also to rays). This must refer to the dispersed light of the stars.

COMMENTARY

In 3 Baruch, as well as in some other Jewish sources, the solar and lunar tracks are both in the same heaven (cf., e.g., 2 En. 11 and Sefer HaRazim 4). This differs from the Ptolemaic and most other Hellenistic systems, which posit independent spheres for each luminary (as also 2 En. 30 does in conflict with the previous account in chs. 3–21).

Just as the Bible addresses sun-worship (see introductory comm. to ch. 6), it also treats the issue of moon-worship: it was forbidden (Deut 17:3) but still practiced (Jer 7:18; 44:17). Kissing one’s hand upon seeing the moon, ³⁷⁶ LPG, 1024.

³⁷⁷ Harlow, “Baruch,” 10.

as an act of adoration, is mentioned in Job 31:26–27. The moon symbolized beauty (Cant 6:10) and eternity (Ps. 72:5, 7; 89:37).

In S, Baruch does not see the moon, but is told about it by the guiding angel. Gk δεῖξόν “show” in 9:2 corresponds to CS НАУЧИ “teach” in family α and СЪКАЖИ “tell” in family β. The latter might have been a corrupted ПОКАЖИ “show,” but the next verse confirms the verbal nature of the subsequent revelation. The tendency to present verbal excurses in place of actual visions is characteristic for S: the main function of Phoenix, the magnificent view of stretching the wings before the sun, is only described in both versions of 6:4 and is actually only observed in 7:3–5G (probably interpolated; see comm. to 7:1). See also comm. to 4:8.

9:3G. On the morrow. In G Baruch already sees “the moon with the stars” (probably in their usual form) in 9:1, when the sun has withdrawn and “the night also overtook.” However, the visionary situated in heaven can see the vision of the moon only “on the morrow” (τῇ ἐπαύριον), that is, during the daytime. This would concur with the view that after the sun’s setting, the luminaries continue their route above the celestial vault (Gen. Rab. 6.8; the Baraita from b. Pes. 94b, cited in the comm. to 7:1). Following this logic, we can infer that the sun should have been shown at night; however, it was shown during the day too.

9:3. Shape of a woman / similar to a woman. See “the form of the moon is like a woman” in S below. This must be an answer to the question of 9:2: “in what shape it walks.” This likening is rare in Jewish sources (cf., e.g., b. Hul. 60b). The notion of a female moon deity seems to have been a relatively late invention. In the ancient Orient (apart from in Egypt) the moon deities are exclusively male: Sumerian Nanna, Semitic Suen/Sin (although Nanna-Sin was known as a ruler of women, probably due to the connection to menstrual circles), Hurrite Kushuh, Hittite Arma, Syrian Sanugar (Ebla) or Shaggar, Sheger (Emar) or Yarih, Arabic Shahr, etc. The moon goddess appears only in Egypt from the time of Ramses II onwards (1290–1224 BC); in Hellenistic period it is sometimes associated with Isis. Greek mythology has both masculine Men and feminine Selene. The clear dichotomy between masculine Sun and feminine Moon (as in 3 Baruch) is found in Rome, where Luna was subordinate to Sol.³⁷⁸

³⁷⁸ Bendlin, Röllig, Lieven, “Moon.”

9:3. A wheeled chariot. And in front of it there were oxen and lambs [harnessed] in the chariot / an armed chariot, and the oxen carrying the chariot are 20. In 1 En. 72:3 and in 2 En. (A) 16:7 the moon in a chariot is carried by wind, and in 2 Enoch it is also accompanied by angels. On the angel Ofaniel (from אֹפֶן “wheel”) as responsible for the moon, see 3 En. 14:4.³⁷⁹

The Greek female moon deity Selene, who drives a biga chariot of two horses or oxen (in distinction to the sun’s quadriga), is well known in Greek iconography and written sources. The same representation of Roman Luna must also go back to Greek models (cf. Plautus, Bacch. 255);³⁸⁰ cf. also Suidas, s.v. ταυροπόλος. All these elements – likeness of woman, oxen and chariot – appear in a Mythraic depictions of the moon chariot carried by white oxen.³⁸¹

G has “oxen and lambs,” while S has only “oxen.” The visual similarity of a new moon to bull horns probably gave rise to multiple associations of the moon deities with images of oxen. The moon appears as a horned bull in Akkadian myths. In Palmyra and among the Lihyan, the moon deity Shahr was called Aglibol (“young bull of Bol”); in Hatra he was referred to as Barmaren and represented as a bull. In Egypt, the full moon was called the “rutting bull,” the new moon – the “ox.”³⁸² Late tradition connected Apis with the moon (Plutarch, Is. et Os. 43). In the Jewish context, the list of animals in G, including lambs as well as oxen, is almost identical to the list of sacrificial animals prescribed for the New Moon service: “And in the beginnings of your months you shall offer a burnt offering to the Lord: two young bulls, and one ram, seven yearling lambs, without blemish” (Num 28:11; cf. Ezek 46:6; Josephus, Ant 3.10.1). Pagan sacrificial practices also included a pair of bulls for the moon:

they offered to the Sun four white horses, the swiftest creatures to the most rapid of the gods; to the Moon a pair of oxen, giving her who is nearest to the earth those animals that work the earth ... At the altar of the Moon stood two bulls, and at the altar of the Sun four white horses ready to be sacrificed. (Heliodorus, Aethiopica 10.6)

Tertullian, when referring to circus games, notes: “concerning the chariot, the four-horse team was consecrated to the Sun; the two-horse team, to the Moon” (Spect. 9).

S is the most consistent in agreeing with these traditions: similar to 3 Baruch having a quadriga with forty “fiery horses” for the sun (6:2S; just “an-³⁷⁹ Cf. Goodenough, Jewish, 8.202–05.

³⁸⁰ Gordon, “Selene.”

³⁸¹ MMM, 1.126.

³⁸² Bendlin, Röllig, Lieven, “Moon.”

gels” in G) and a chariot with twenty oxen for the moon (9:3S; no number in G), the sources above speak of quadriga or four horses for the sun and biga and two bulls (or horses) for the moon.

9:6. Depicted (γεγραμμένη). Also “written” or “ordained, prescribed.” This lexical choice may hint at the concept of a celestial archetypical “picture” of creation. This Platonic idea is probably intended in Apocalypse of Abraham and is developed in Rabbinic sources:

And I said, “Eternal Mighty One! What is this picture of creation?” And he said to me, “This is my will for existence in design, and it was pleasing to me. And then, afterward, I gave them a command by my word and they came into being. And whatever I had determined to be had already been previously depicted and stood before me in this, as you have seen, before they were created.” (Apoc. Abr. 21:2–3)

The Torah declares, “I was the working tool of the Holy One. In human practice, when a mortal king builds a palace, he builds it not with his own skill but with the skill of an architect. The architect moreover does not build it out of his head, but employs plans and diagrams to know how to arrange the chambers and the wicket doors. Thus God consulted the Torah and created the world.” (Gen. Rab. 1.1)

Serpent. See comm. to ch. 4.

9:7. And it [the moon] did not hide itself. But did the sun did hide itself? The moon was probably expected to eclipse at the fall of the first humans as the sun did during the crucifixion (Matt 27:45) following Joel 2:10: in the day of the Lord “the sun and the moon will darken, and the stars will withdraw their shining” (cf. Ps 72:5). Both luminaries are supposed to withhold their light, “where the light of Zion is darkened” (2 Bar. 10:12). During the Flood the moon did not give light together with the sun (Gen. Rab. 25.2; 31.11; 33.3; 34.11; b. Sanh. 108b; Pirqe R. El. 23; Tg. Ps.-Jon. Gen 6:16). Both luminaries refused to rise, when Korah was disputing with Moses (b. Ned. 39b; b. Sanh. 110a). On the sun’s eclipse as a sign of grief, see also b. Suk. 29a.

Rabbinic sources also tell of the “fall” of the moon that happened for diverse reasons (Gen. Rab. 6.3; Mek. Bo 1; b. Hul. 60b; b. Sheb. 9a; Tg. Jer. Gen 1:16 and Num 28:15; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 5; Pesiq. R. 15; Pirqe R. El. 4–6 and 51; Tan. B. 2.47; Midr. Kohen 25–26). However, the connection between the moon’s “fall,” its diminishing and periodical disappearance, and the fall of the first humans – and even the cooperation of the moon with Sammael³⁸³ are unique for 3 Baruch. In human transgressions the sun and the moon are normally not collaborators but witnesses (1 En. 1:7; 100:10; Sifre Deut. 306; b. Abod. Zar. 3a; etc.; cf. with Helios Panoptes). For the stars punished for disobedience in 1 En. 18:15–16, see comm. to 9:8 below.

³⁸³ Especially according to G, where it not only continued to shine as in S, but even waxed. According to the family β of S it laughed alone when all luminaries wept together with first men (see note to 9:7S).

3 Baruch says nothing about the widely known motif of the moon as a symbol of Israel (the moon became such a symbol as a compensation for its reduction; cf. sources above and especially Mek. Bo 1, 3a; Pesiq. Rab Kah 5, 54a; Pesiq. R. 15; Tan. B. 2.47).³⁸⁴ 2 Baruch connected the destruction of Jerusalem with the moon's eclipse: "And do you, O moon, extinguish the multitude of your light; for why should light rise again where the light of Zion is darkened (2 Bar. 10:12), while Isaiah connected the restoration of Israel to the magnification (also restoration to the former state?) of the moon: "The light of the moon will be as the light of the sun" (Isa 30:26). Rabbinic exegesis also adds to the story of the moon's punishment a promise for its increase in future (see references in the next comm.). Can the fall and punishment of the moon allude to the fall and destruction of Jerusalem in the prologue? The only hint for such an implied comparison might have been found in 9:8G below: as Israel survives, though injured, so also "the moon, [although] being intact, is exhausted by the heat of the sun" (see comm. below).

God was angry with it, and afflicted it, and shortened its days / God was angry with it and opened to it days to mourn (καὶ ὠργίσθη αὐτῇ ὁ θεὸς καὶ ἔθλιψεν αὐτήν καὶ ἐκολόβωσεν τὰς ἡμέρας αὐτῆς / и прогнѣва са на нь богъ и отъбръи ѿмоу дъни да скръбѣитъ). The nature of the punishment in G is not fully clear. Gk θλίβω may be taken literally as “reduce, compress, crash” or metaphorically “afflict, oppress.” The latter meaning is widely attested in LXX, rendering Heb גָּחַל (LXX Judg 4:3; 2 Kgs 13:4; Ezek 18:18; Ps 56:1; 106:42; Job 36:15). Thus, either (1) God “compressed” the moon from its former size, which was equal to the sun and thus “shortened its days” or (2) he “afflicted” it by “shortening its days.” The author probably was aware of both meanings, and it is one more intentional word-play in this verse (see note to “kindled [its light]/transgressed for Sammael” above; see also the word-plays in 1:7G; 4:7S; 4:17G; 9:7G; 15:1S). The first suggestion is in accord with the widely known tradition that initially both luminaries were of the same size, and only later the moon was diminished (Gen. Rab. 6.3; Mek. Bo 1; b. Hul. 60b; b. Sheb. 9a; Tg. Jer. Gen 1:16 and Num 28:15; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 5; Pesiq. R. 15; Pirqe R. El. 4–6 and 51; Tan.

³⁸⁴ The only link may be the definition of the moon as “beautiful” (9:6) like the bride “beautiful as the moon” in Cant 6:10.

B. 2.47). However, the second option may be confirmed by an older tradition which states that “his [the sun’s] light is sevenfold brighter than that of the moon, but as regards size they are both equal” (1 En. 72:37). Moreover, the verse 9:8 below, which says that “the moon, [although] being intact is exhausted by the heat of the sun” (ἡ σελήνη σῶα οὕσα ὑπὸ τῆς τοῦ ἡλίου θερμῆς ἐκδαπανᾶται), may be interpreted also as “the moon being undiminished ...,” since Gk σῶς means not only “intact, safe, well,” but also “whole, undiminished.” And finally, the second interpretation aligns well with the question of the visionary, who did not ask, why the moon is smaller than the sun, but “why is it that at one time it waxes, but at another time wanes” (9:5). The phases of the moon are discussed also in 1 En. 73–74 and 2 En. 16.

The reading of S (ms L) is also not clear (explanatory reading of mss Bβ must be secondary). It does not refer to any reduction of the moon’s size or light, but probably only to the moonless days as the “days to mourn” (cf. previous comm. on eclipse as a sign of mourning).

9:8G. Stars. “The moon and the stars cannot shine before the sun,” just as the sun and the moon “cannot shine before the Light of the Universe, the Father of Light” (Apoc. Mos. 36:3). Does this imply that the stars were also punished? The stars were known to receive a punishment for disobedience:

This place is the end of heaven and earth; this has become a prison for the stars and the hosts of heaven. And the stars which roll over in the fire are ones which transgressed the command of the Lord in the beginning of their rising, because they did not come out at their appointed time. And he was angry with them, and bound them until the time of the consummation of their sins – ten thousand years. (1 En. 18:14–16)

And there I saw seven of the stars of heaven bound and cast together in it, like great mountains and burning with fire. Then I said, “For what reason [or “sin” in Ethiopic] are they bound, and for what reason have they been cast here?” Then Uriel, one of the holy angels who was with me, and he was their leader, told me, “Enoch, why do you ask, and why are you eager for the truth? These are the stars of heaven, which have transgressed the commandment of the Lord, and are bound here until ten thousand years, the time of their sins, are consummated.” (1 En. 21:3–6; cf. 88; 90:24; cf. “rebellious stars” in b. Moed Q. 16a)

As the stars are “bound” in 1 En. 18:15–16 and 21:6, so also “the stars are suspended” (οἱ ἀστéρες κρέμονται) in 3 Baruch. Aetius tells that the Pre-Socratic Anaximenes held that the stars were fastened like “nails” in the “crystalline” sphere of the sky (2.14.3; DK 13 A14), and Empedocles believed that the fixed stars were attached to the sky in distinction to “wandering” planets (2.13.11; DK 31 A54). “Fixed star” in Greek and Latin became a technical term (Gk ἀπλανής; Lat stellae inerrans/inerabilis), which was known also to Jewish authors of Pr. Jac. 16 and b. Pes. 94b (מזלות קבועין). The assumption of the fixed stars must go together with the concept of rotating celestial spheres (in order to explain the visible motion of stars): “The learned of the nations say, ‘The sphere revolves, and the zodiacs are fixed [וחכמי אומות העולם אומרים גלגל חוזר ומזלות קבועין]’ (b. Pesah. 94b); cf. Plato (Rep. 10; Tim. 38c-e) and Aristotle (passim; e.g., Cael. 2.8 [289b–290b]). On the connection of this conception to the rationale of 365 celestial gates, see comm. to “365 gates of heaven” in 6:13 above.

IV. Birds or Abode of Just

Lake of Birds (10:1–7)

GREEK

¹ And when I had learnt all these things
from the archangel,

he took and brought me into the {third} [fourth] heaven.

² And I saw an even plain, and in the middle of it a lake of waters.

³ And there were in it multitudes of birds
of all species,
but not similar to [those] here [on earth].

But I saw a crane [as large] as great oxen;
and all were larger than those in the world.

⁴ And I asked the angel, “What is the plain, and what is the lake, and what is the multitude of birds around it?”

⁵ And the angel said,

“Listen, Baruch! The plain that has in it the lake and other wonders [is the place] where the souls of the righteous come, when they assemble, living together choir by choir.

SLAVONIC

¹ And the angel of host took me to a large [and] wide mountain,

² and in the midst of the mountain there was a large lake of water.

³ And there were birds
from all heaven,
but not similar to these [on earth], [but]
very large,

similar to a crane.

And there were other birds larger than those.

⁴ And I asked the angel, “What is this lake in the midst of the mountain and what are these birds?”

⁵ And he told me,

came a technical term (Gk ἀπλανής; Lat stellae inerrans/inerabilis), which was known also to Jewish authors of Pr. Jac. 16 and b. Pes. 94b (מזלות קבועין). The assumption of the fixed stars must go together with the concept of rotating celestial spheres (in order to explain the visible motion of stars): “The learned of the nations say, ‘The sphere revolves, and the zodiacs are fixed [וְחַכְמֵי אֻמוֹת הָעוֹלָם אוֹמְרִים גִּלְגַּל חֹזֵר וּמִזְלוֹת קְבוּעִין]’ (b. Pesah. 94b); cf. Plato (Rep. 10; Tim. 38c-e) and Aristotle (passim; e.g., Cael. 2.8 [289b–290b]). On the connection of this conception to the rationale of 365 celestial gates, see comm. to “365 gates of heaven” in 6:13 above.

IV. Birds or Abode of Just

Lake of Birds (10:1–7)

GREEK

¹ And when I had learnt all these things
from the archangel,

he took and brought me into
the {third} [fourth] heaven.

² And I saw an even plain, and in the middle of it a lake of waters.

³ And there were in it multitudes of birds
of all species,
but not similar to [those] here [on earth].

But I saw a crane [as large] as great oxen;
and all were larger than those in the world.

⁴ And I asked the angel, “What is the plain,
and what is the lake, and what is the multitude of birds around it?”

⁵ And the angel said,
“Listen, Baruch! The plain that has in it the lake and other wonders [is the place] where the souls of the righteous come, when they assemble, living together choir by choir.

SLAVONIC

¹ And the angel of host took me to a large [and] wide mountain,

² and in the midst of the mountain there was a large lake of water.

³ And there were birds
from all heaven,
but not similar to these [on earth], [but]
very large,
similar to a crane.
And there were other birds larger than those.

⁴ And I asked the angel, “What is this lake in the midst of the mountain and what are these birds?”

⁵ And he told me,

[Cf. 10:7]

“There are pure birds praising God unceasingly day and night.

⁶ But the water is that which the clouds receive and rain upon earth, and the fruits grow.”

⁶ And the clouds take the water from there and rain upon earth, and a fruit grows.”

⁷ And I said again to the angel of the Lord,
“And the birds?”

And he told me, “They are those which continually sing praise to the Lord.”

[Cf. 10:5]

NOTES

10:1S. Angel of host/power (ΑΓΓΕΛΉΣ ΣΙΛΛΗΤΗΝ). This definition, in distinction to ΑΓΓΕΛΉΣ ΣΙΛΛΗΤΗΣ of 2:1S; 11:1S (cf. Gk ὁ ἄγγελος τῶν δυνάμεων of 1:8G; 2:6G) may be understood also as “strong angel.” Cf. comm. to T:1S.

10:4S. Translated according to ms B. Ms L adds an address “Lord” and omits the words “what is this lake in the midst of the mountain.” Ms B corresponds to G, while ms L goes better with the continuation of S, which, in distinction to G, lacks the first explanation on the lake given in 10:5. Slavonic 10:5–7 correspond to Greek 10:6–7, but in reverse order. Thus, 10:5G, giving an additional explanation on both the lake and the birds, was either omitted in S or interpolated in G.

Lake of waters / large lake of water (λίμνην ὑδάτων / ѿзеро велико водѣ). A biblicism found also in LXX (Heb מִיָּם מְרִיָּם; Ps 107:35; 114:8; cf. Isa 14:23; 41:18).

10:5. When they assemble, living together choir by choir (ὅταν ὁμιλῶσι συνδιάγοντες χοροὶ χοροί). Gk ὁμιλέω may be also used as “hold converse.” Gk χορός means “band of singers” (and/or “dancers”); it cannot be used for a “flock” of birds. Cf. Heb (ה)קָרָם as “assembly” and possibly “choir” (Ps 26:12; 68:27). See comm. below.

10:7G. And I said again to the angel (καὶ εἶπον πάλιν τὸν ἄγγελον). Cf. καὶ λέγει καὶ τοὺς ἀποκένους φέροντας τοὺς κανίσκους (15:3). In both case λέγω is used with acc. in place of dat. with preposition.

COMMENTARY

Whereas in the lower heavens the punishment of the wicked was shown (the Builders and Hades of chs. 2–5),³⁸⁵ here, in the higher heaven, there is a description of the abode for the righteous souls.³⁸⁶ Its placement in the narrative and in the structure of heavens is meaningful: the account of the luminaries appears between the descriptions of the two realms (chs. 6–9), and the report on the higher realm follows the account of the moon (ch. 9), i.e., this abode is “beyond the moon” (cf. lower impure and higher “holy” heavens in 2 En. 8:5; T. Levi 3:3; Quest. Ezra (A) 19–20). Although the world view of 3 Baruch does not have much in common with Greek cosmologies (see Introduction: Cosmology), this detail may agree with the views known to the Greek philosophers who believed that the superlunary sphere was substantially different from the sublunary one. The idiomatic use of these terms in modern languages goes back to a literal structural and functional differentiation of the two realms in ancient science: according to the Pythagorean and Platonic determination the sphere beyond the moon is the region of immutable eternal order.³⁸⁷

The superlunary abode of pious souls is located together with the storage place of celestial waters. Parallels show that in accord with the “multi-functionalist” approach of 3 Baruch (ascribing to physical phenomena metaphysical functions), these waters probably not only serve for “fruitful” rain and dew, but also for purification of the souls during their heavenly ascent, a purification which might precede their anointing necessary for their final transformation (see on the Oil Reward in ch. 15). Thus, the Lake must be a transition station in the migration of soul-birds to a higher and eternal “resting places of righteous” (16:6S).

10:1G. A {third} [fourth] heaven. The translation follows the logic of the extant redaction. Both mss have τρίτον “third.” However, the entrance to the third heaven was implied in 4:2, although in the extant mss no number is provided (in contrast to 2:2; 3:1; 7:2G and 11:1, where the numbers of the first, the second; the third and the fifth heaven are explicitly mentioned). This might be the reason that here original Gk τέταρτον “fourth” could have been changed due to scribal conjecture to τρίτον “third.” So it reflects an (inconsistent) logic of the extant redaction. Otherwise, if τρίτον here is not a corruption, but a remnant of the original version, the whole division into heavens in 3 Baruch would appear to be a result of an inaccurate late elaboration of a proto-text which initially held a three heavens cosmology (on this see introductory comm. to ch. 11: Ouranology).

³⁸⁵ On heaven as a place of punishment see introductory comm. to ch. 4 (Celestial Bestiary 1.4: “Hell in Heaven”).

³⁸⁶ At least according to G (see below). The issues of the afterlife of the righteous are probably raised again in ch. 15:2 (see comm. ibid).

³⁸⁷ See Gilbert, Meteorologischen, 83.

There is an alternative way to argue for the originality of the “third” here. A witty attempt to reconstruct the original structure of the text was made by Martina Frasson.³⁸⁸ Here (in 10:1) the regular description of the intercelestial journey in G (cf. 2:1–3; 3:1–3; 4:1–3) is lacking, while the number of the heaven (“third”) is given. In the previous transfer in 4:2, in contrast, the journey is described, but the number of the heaven is absent. The “fourth” heaven is never mentioned (while the fifth is; 11:1). The total number of days for all three journeys is 275: 30 (2:2); 60 (3:2); 185 (4:2). Assuming that Baruch’s journey lasted 365 days (basing on the number of solar gates in 6:13), Frasson proposes to insert into 10:1 the notion of a 90-day journey. If we would like to put the numbers in ascending order, we would have to relocate the current chapter to between ch. 3 and 4: 30 (2:2); 60 (3:2); *90 (10:1); 185 (4:2). Thus, the visions of the second heaven (Serpent, Hades, Tree, the sun and the moon) would be related to the fourth heaven, the structure of which fits well with the cosmology of 2 En. 11.³⁸⁹

10:1. Archangel / angel of host. The angelic guide is called “archangel” only here. Elsewhere in 3 Baruch only Michael merits such a title (11:8; 12:4). Philo’s “archangel,” described as the “eldest Logos” (Her. 42.205) in all his works, normally refers to an angel of Israel, although the name “Michael” is not mentioned (Somm. 1.15.157; Conf. 28.146; Mos. 1.29; 166).³⁹⁰

10:2. Even plain / mountain (πεδῖον ἀπλοῦν [acc.] / ὄρη [gen.]). S has “mountain” instead of “plain.” Heavenly mountains are known from Is 14:13 and Ezek 28:13–19. Among the many mountains seen by Enoch, most are located on earth, but some are explicitly defined as “secret things of heaven” (1 En. 52:2) and are destined to become “as a fountain of water” (1 En. 53:7; cf. “lake of water” in 3 Baruch). More frequently in apocalyptic literature mountains are only conduits to heaven, i.e., they are not located there (e.g., Jub. 4:6; 1 En. 17–19; Apoc. Abr. 9:8; 12; Apoc. Zeph. 3:2; Nag Hammadi Apocalypse of Paul; etc.).³⁹¹ In 3 Baruch the celestial mountain is a dwelling place for the birds, interpreted in G as the souls of the pious dead. A mountain in the west is the abode of the deceased also in 1 En. 22, and it has “a fountain of water in the midst of it” as well.³⁹² Soul is called a bird fleeing to the “mountain” (Heb רכס) in Ps 11:1. “Birds of mountains” are adjacent to the celestial “archetypical” bird Ziz according to the Rabbinic reading of Ps 50:11 (Lev. Rab. 22.10; b. B. Bat. 73b; cf. comm. to “birds” below).

³⁸⁸ Frasson, “Struttura.”

³⁸⁹ Alternatively, the three journeys may reflect the original three heavens scheme (for additional arguments in its favor see comm. to ch. 11: Ouranology).

³⁹⁰ See Goodenough, Light, 79–80; Wolfson, Philo, 1.378.

In G there are no mountains in heaven. Heaven is a plain, as are the other heavens (on celestial plains in 3 Baruch see comm. to 2:2). However, only this one is defined as “even, monotonous, unbroken” (πεδῖον ἀπλοῦν). Gk adj. ἀπλός (or contr. ἀπλοῦς) means not only physically “even,”³⁹³ but also “simple, plain, sincere,” as well as being a moral virtue.³⁹⁴ In this sense it could render Heb חם “simple, innocent, perfect” (LXX Prov 10:9; Job 22:3). In Patristic literature the adjective was often used to define the nature of God, Logos, divine wisdom, light, beauty, etc.³⁹⁵ This may be linked to the function of this plain as a place of assembly for the pious souls (see 10:5G and comm. below). The proto-text could contain Gk πεδῖον ἀπλῶν “valley of innocent [souls]” (Heb גִּיאַת הַתְּמִימִים; unattested elsewhere).

Afterlife plains were known to Greeks (Elysian Fields and Isles of the Blessed; see Homer, Od. 4.561–69; Hesiod, Op. 167–73; cf. Pindar, Ol. 2.69–71; Herodotus, Hist. 3.26; Plato, Phaed. 113a; and Lucian, Ver. Hist. 2.6–13). In Sib. Or. 2:413–14 the “Elysian plain” is a location of “Acherusian lake” (cf. next. comm.). Different sorts of post-mortem valleys are known also to the Bible (although mostly with negative connotations): valley (Heb בקעה; Gk πεδῖον) of resurrection of Ezek 37:1–2; “valley (Heb גִּיאַ) of the death shadow” in Ps 23:4, and “valley of weeping” in Ps 84:7. See the “deep valleys” of 1 En. 10:2; 52:1, 53:1; and passim. Gehenna, which in 3 Baruch and some other sources located in heaven (see comm. to ch. 4), is also described as a “plain” in 2 En. (A) 40:13 (“plain like a prison”). Elijah testifies in the apocryphal Latin Epistle of Titus: “The angel ³⁹¹ On mountains in early Jewish literature cf. Clifford, Cosmic.

³⁹² For non-Jewish parallels see Wacker, Weltordnung, 146–77.

³⁹³ Cf., e.g., τῶν ἀφελῶν πεδίων “open plains” in Aristophanes, Eq. 527.

³⁹⁴ LPG 187, B1. Theoretically Gk ἀπλοῦν may also be a part. praes. acc. sg. from ἀπλῶ “unfold, stretch out” or even “open, reveal,” also in theological contexts (see multiple examples in LPG 188, B2): “revealing plain”?

³⁹⁵ Ibid. 187, A.

of the Lord showed me a deep valley, which is called Gehenna.” The word “valley” is in fact a part of the etymology of the term (Heb גֵּיאַ (בֶּן) הַנוֹם “valley of Hinom”). However, another Hebrew word for “plain,” מִישׁוֹר, is found in the contexts reminding the descriptions of 3 Baruch: “Your spirit [or “wind”] is good. Lead me to the plain land [חֲנַחֲנִי בְּאֶרֶץ מִישׁוֹר] (Ps 143:10); this term even relates to praise in assemblies: “My foot stands on a plain,³⁹⁶ I will bless the Lord in assemblies” (Ps 26:12).

Lake of water. The lake of birds is a unique image in Jewish apocalypticism, not counting a negative definition in 1 En. 18:12: “There was neither water, nor birds” (pl. in Ethiopic and sg. in Greek). The most similar is the Acherusian lake (Ἀχέρουσα λίμνη), which is also an abode of righteous or of immortal souls in Apoc. Mos. 37:3; Sib. Or. 2:334–338; Apoc. Paul 22–23; Apoc. Pet. 14; cf. Plato, Phaedo 113a). Sometimes “lake” and “river, stream” are not distinguished: “And behold, a river, and the waters of it were white exceedingly, more than milk, and I told the angel, ‘What is this?’ And he told me, ‘This is the lake Acherusia’” (Apoc. Paul 22–23). The sources of water seem to be a regular accessory to the abodes of the pious: “Such a division has been made for the spirits of the righteous, in which there is the bright spring of water” (1 En. 22:9). Cf. “fountain of life” (Heb מְקוֹר חַיִּים) of Ps 36:10.³⁹⁷

Why are these waters necessary there? Although it is not stated in 3 Baruch, parallels show that the lake must be a purgatory basin or even fons vitae for the souls as they transform into eternal and celestial beings.³⁹⁸ In Egypt the righteous is “washed in the Lake of Perfection”³⁹⁹ or “bathed in the celestial waters.”⁴⁰⁰ The idea was adopted by Plato (Phaedo 113a; cited below). The Lake of Acherousia has the same function in Jewish and Christian sources:

³⁹⁶ LXX understood it here as “straightness.” The word can mean also “uprightness” as in Isa 11:4; Ps 67:5; etc.

³⁹⁷ Here it follows “men shelter in the shadow of your wings” (Ps 36:8); on the protective “shadowing” in 3 Baruch, see comm. to 6:2 and introductory comm. to ch. 6. Greek Hades also had springs of water (see Charles, Enoch, 49).

³⁹⁸ As probably also in Rev 7:17, where the pious in their afterlife are led to “the springs of living water.” Heb מַיִם חַיִּים lit. “living water,” referring only to “running water” in the Bible, could be midrashically interpreted as “water of life” (as in Rev 22:1, 17); for the same term see 1 En. 17:4 (cf. comm. to ch. 8) and “water of life” of Babylonian mythology (ANET 108, l. 34).

³⁹⁹ Book of the Dead 172; Wright, Heaven, 23.

⁴⁰⁰ Coffin Text # 293; Faulkner, Coffin, 1.218; Wright, Heaven, 23.

There came one of the seraphim with six wings and snatched up Adam and carried him off to the Acherusian lake, and washed him thrice, and led him before God. And he stayed there three hours, lying down, and thereafter the Father of all, sitting on his holy throne stretched out his hand, and took Adam and handed him over to the archangel Michael saying, "Lift him up into paradise unto the third heaven, and leave him there until that fearful day of my reckoning, which I will make in the world." (Apoc. Mos. 37:3–5)

He [Adam] is delivered by the commandment of the Lord to Michael the angel, and he washes him in the lake Acherusa and so brings him in to the city of Christ with them that have done no sin. (Apoc. Paul 23)

Then I will give to my elect and righteous the washing and the salvation for which they have besought me, in the field of Akroseya which is called Aneslasleya. They will adorn with flowers the portion of the righteous, and I shall go [...] I shall rejoice with them. I will cause the peoples to enter into my everlasting kingdom, and show them that eternal thing. (Apoc. Pet. 14)

A similar function is attributed to the streams of balsam in which souls bathe before entering Paradise (Bet HaMidr. 3.31 and 139; 5.183; 2.29). Baptismal and ablutionary practices were well established in Jewish and Christian circles where, in addition to effecting purification, they could also signify a rebirth (especially for proselytes; cf., e.g., b. Yeb. 48b; John 3:5). Immersion into water could also have regenerative meaning in Hellenistic mysterial initiations:

Washing is the channel through which they [the nations] are initiated into some sacred rites – of some notorious Isis or Mithras ... At all events, at the Apollinarian and Eleusinian games they are baptized; and they presume that the effect of their doing that is their regeneration and the remission of the penalties due to their perjuries. (Tertullian, Bapt. 5; cf. Philo, Somm. 14)⁴⁰¹

Note that in 3 Baruch the lake waters are also a source of "the dew of heaven" (10:9G), which is frequently described as having resurrective qualities (see comm. ibid.)

There are two more indirect confirmations of the purificatory function of the lake within the text of 3 Baruch itself: (1) the birds dwelling on it are called "pure [or "clean"] birds" in 10:5S (see comm. ibid.) and (2) the sun's crown is said to be carried from one heaven below the heaven of the lake somewhere "up to heaven" (8:4) for a daily purification (for details see introductory comm. to ch. 8). In 3 Baruch the Lake account immediately follows the vision of the Lights, and in Rabbinic lore the "lake of water"

⁴⁰¹ Cf. Nock, "Pagan."

[ברִיכָה שֶׁל מַיִם] was known to be set before the sun in order to chill it in its rise “lest it burn the world” (Gen. Rab. 6.6; see comm. to 6:6).

Below we learn that the righteous are rewarded with oil (ch. 15). If this oil reward is a reward of the afterlife, 3 Baruch must present two kinds, or rather two stages, of the postcarnate transformation of the pious: ablution and anointing. Deceased Adam was subjected to both procedures: his soul was washed (Apoc. Mos. 37:3–5 cited above) and his body anointed (40:2). So, too, Levi’s consecration into the priesthood, during his lifetime, underwent both processes in heaven, although in reverse order: “And the first [angelic “man in white”] anointed me with holy oil, and gave to me the rod of judgment; the second washed me with pure water” (T. Levi 8:4–5). In 3 Baruch the Tree of Life is most probably an olive and a source of anointing oil (see comm. to 4:7S and ch. 15). “Waters of life” and the “Tree of Life” are united in the concluding chapter of Revelation (22:1–2) and both are used subsequently: “who wash their robes, they may have the right to the Tree of Life” (Rev 22:14; cf. 22:17):

Then he showed me a pure river of the water of life, clear as crystal, coming from the throne of God and of the Lamb, in the middle of its street. On either side of the river was the Tree of Life, bearing twelve [“crops of” or “kinds of”] fruit, yielding its fruit every month; and the leaves of the Tree were for the healing of the nations (22:1–2) ... Blessed are those who wash their robes, so that they may have the right to the Tree of Life, and may enter by the gates into the city. (22:14)

Both procedures are united in the resurrection process of Gos. Nicod. 19:

Then the most beloved Son of God will come upon earth to raise up the body of Adam and the bodies of the dead, and he will come and be baptized in Jordan. And when he comes forth of the water of Jordan, then he will anoint with the oil of mercy all that believe in him, and that oil of mercy will be for all generations of them that will be born of water and of the Holy Ghost, for eternal life.

The same order of the rite occurs in Acts Thom. 25: “cleansing them with your washing and anointing them with your oil from the error that encompasses them.” The ablution and anointing in different orders were combined in many Gnostic and Christian baptismal practices (Apost. Const. 7.22; Ps.-Clementine Rec. 3; Pseudo-Justin, Quaest. ad Orthodoxos 137), and both are attested for the dead or dying with obvious connotations to the reward of the life after death; see baptism of the dead (1 Cor 15:29), Gnostic “sealing” of the dead with oil (Origen, Cels. 6.27, 34), and the rite of unction (cf. comm. to ch. 15).

The verse 10:5G says: “where the souls of the righteous come, when they assemble ...”. Does it mean they only come, occasionally, from other abodes? Or do they rather “assemble” from earth and reside there temporarily before going to other abodes? In accordance with 16:6S, which employs the plural “the resting places of the righteous,” the lake might not be the only place for righteous souls. The idea of the multiplicity of such abodes is not unique: “In my Father’s house there are many mansions” (John 14:2; cf. Origen, Princ. 2.11.6); “Many shelters have been prepared for people, very good houses, [and] bad houses without number” (2 En. 61:2; cited according to A). The Apocalypse of Paul mentions three places: the Land of the Blessed (14), the paradise of the third heaven (45), and the terrestrial paradise (45–51). See also 1 En. 22 on three “hollow places” for different categories of souls. Plato’s Acherusian lake is also just a transition point:

This is the lake to the shores of which the souls of the many go when they are dead, and after waiting an appointed time, which is to some a longer and to some a shorter time, they are sent back to be born again into living beings. (Phaedo 113a)

At the same time, “these, all who have duly purified themselves by philosophy live henceforth altogether without bodies, and pass to still more beautiful abodes which it is not easy to describe” (Phaedo 114c). In 3 Baruch, the lake also may be a gathering and transition point, while the ultimate destination of the birds-souls must be the “the kingdom of Heaven” (11:2G) or “the resting places of the righteous” (16:6S), achieved probably in the Day of Judgment (1:7) due to the Oil Reward (ch. 15). The image of the soul-birds as “multitudes of birds of all species” residing on the lake shores on their way to their eternal abode could have been inspired by magnificent views of huge migratory birds flocks (often including cranes, as in 10:3)⁴⁰² stopping on the water reservoirs of Palestine and other lands of the south-eastern Mediterranean on their way to Africa, as can still be seen even today. These views are also a well attested iconographic motif in these regions (cf. comm. to “crane” in 10:3 below).

The most striking parallels to the destiny of the dead as presented in 3 Baruch are provided by the “the speech of the deceased” from the Egyptian Papyrus of Nu (BM 10.477.24):

⁴⁰² “Of birds, the crane, as has been said, migrates from one end of the world to the other” (Aristotle, Hist. Anim. 12).

“the dragon is he who eats the bodies of those who pass through life wickedly, and he is nourished by them” (4:5G)

“blackened” angels of sinners bringing punishment on their charges (13:1; 16:2–3)

the celestial lake, most probably the purification basin of the souls of the deceased (10:2–5) and the sun’s crown brought by its angels at night (8:4)

Before the gate to the Kingdom of Heaven, the flowers-virtues of humans are exchanged in the heavenly liturgy for the oil (probably the Olive Tree of Life planted by Michael; 15:1–2; 4:7S)

The deceased asks to deliver him from “the god Baba who feeds on the entrails of the mighty ones upon the day of the great reckoning” and from “divine messengers who cause dire deeds to happen, and who cause calamities to come into being, and who are without coverings for their faces.”

He says, “I have purified myself and my breast with libations ... and my hinder parts with the things which make clean, and my inward parts have been [immersed] in the Pool of Right and Truth. There is no single member of mine which lacks right and truth. I have been purified in the Pool of the South, and I have rested in the City of the North, which is in the Field of the Grasshoppers, wherein the divine sailors of Rā bath at the second hour of the night and at the third hour of the day.”

In order to enter the “city,” he adds, ‘My name is he who is provided with flowers, and dweller in his olive tree.’ Then let them say unto me straightway, ‘Pass on,’ and I would pass on to the city to the north of the Olive tree”

10:3–5. Birds here are a complex image, which may be connected variously to the souls of the deceased (thus explicitly in G), to celestial praise (in both versions), and probably to the archetypal giant Bird of chs. 6–8. The aquatic connections of birds, both terrestrial and celestial, may be traced in different traditions.

1. Birds as Souls. Souls of righteous are identified as birds only in G, and even there not explicitly: the text states that “the plain that has in it the lake and other wonders [is the place] where the souls of the righteous come,” never saying that the birds are the souls. However, there are two arguments in favor of the identification: (1) the statement is made as an answer to the question “What is the plain, and what is the lake, and what is the multitude of birds around it?” (thus, the following question “And the birds?” relates only to the function of the soul-birds, since the function of the lake is explained above); and (2) souls are “living together choir by choir,” while the birds similarly “continually sing praise to the Lord.” The identification is lacking in S. However, as we will see below, it was so widely and universally known, that the laconic Greek Vorlage of S did not see a need for the explanation added in the later version reflected by G.

The bird flight of the souls of the deceased was a common heritage of Jews and their neighbors (probably rooted in a universal animalistic motif). Egyptians knew of the journey of the soul of the deceased passing through numerous gates in its ascent (e.g., CT 44.492).⁴⁰³ In Egyptian mythology the human soul – ka – leaving the body takes a form of a human-headed bird – ba, so that the soul can ascend “into the company of the gods, being alive in the bird-shape.”⁴⁰⁴ The souls live in the “Field of Rushes” (cf. our lake located in an “even plain” in 10:2).⁴⁰⁵ The soul goes up “as a swallow” and cackles “as a goose” while ascending to the “great plateau” in the “eastern corner of the sky.”⁴⁰⁶ In ancient Mesopotamia the dead in “the dark house” are “clothed like birds, with wings for garments” (ANET 107). The souls of the kings of Egypt, Assyria and Persia were pictured with birds’ wings; similarly the Arabs regarded the soul as a bird, and believed that after death it hovered around the body (Al-Mas’udi, Golden Meadows 3.310).⁴⁰⁷ These views were shared by at least some Greeks and Romans:

It [soul] traverses the whole heaven, appearing sometimes in one form and sometimes in another; now when it is perfect and fully winged, it mounts upward and governs the whole world; but the soul which has lost its wings is borne along until it gets hold of something solid. (Plato, Phaedr. 246b-c)

Plato also believed in “man to bird” metempsychosis, although prepared not for the righteous but for the “light minded” and empiric students of cosmology:

And the tribe of birds are derived by transformation, growing feathers in place of hair, from men who are harmless but light-minded – men, too, who, being students of the worlds above, suppose in their simplicity that the most solid proofs about such matters are obtained by the sense of sight. (Plato, Tim. 91d)

See also Plato’s idea of the pending period for such souls waiting for rebirth on the lake shores (Phaedo 609; cited in the previous comm.). As the birds of 3 Baruch are defined as “pure” in 10:5S, so also Plato’s souls return from ⁴⁰³ See Zandee, Death, 25–31, 112–25; Goedicke, “Egyptian;” cf. Bonomi and Sharpe, Alabaster; Buck and Gardiner, Egyptian.

⁴⁰⁴ Faulkner, Pyramid, 1.281, #667A; Book of the Dead, #78; see Budge, Book of the Dead, 2.295; Wright, Heaven. 20.

⁴⁰⁵ Coffin Text #159 and see 161; Wright, Heaven, 22.

⁴⁰⁶ Coffin Text #190; Wright, Heaven, 22.

⁴⁰⁷ Jastrow Jr., Nowack, Ginzberg, Kohler, “Birds.”

their postcarnate journey “descending out of heaven clean and bright” (Rep. 10.614). The post-mortem “flight” of the human spirit to heaven, “its proper home and permanent abode,” was known to Cicero (“Scipio’s Dream,” Resp. 6.29), Plutarch (Rom. 28.6–7), and others (cf. comm. to “as if [borne] on wings” in 2:2 above). Note also a Hellenistic (probably Jewish) epitaph: “This grave hides in its bosom my chaste body, but my soul has flown to the holy ones.”⁴⁰⁸

Jews also believed that the soul had the form of a bird and often the flight of the soul is mentioned. The soul is a “bird:” “How will you say to my soul, ‘A bird, wander [נודר] to your mountain!’” (Ps 11:1; cf. a mountain in place of the lake in S). False prophets “trap souls like birds” (Ezek 13:20). “And the soul may say, ‘The body has sinned; for since I am separated from it, I fly in the air like bird’” (b. Sanh. 92b). If these might have been considered not more than poetic comparisons, the following gives a more detailed picture:

The words of Job, “Though he goes up as high as heaven, and his head reaches a cloud” [Job 20:6], refer to the day of death. When a man even reaches heaven and receives wings like a bird, because his death has come, his wings break, and he falls before the angel of death as a cattle before a butcher. (Tan. B. Vaethanan 6)

See “Gehennah, in which the wicked flit about like birds” (Exod. Rab. 38). Ornimorphic souls, similar to Egyptian ba, are known to 3 En. 44:3: “their faces looked like human faces, but their bodies were like eagles.” Moses asks to transform to a bird instead of dying in Deut. Rab. 11.9; cf. y. Moed Q. 3.82b; y. Yeb. 15.15c; Gen. Rab. 93.8 and 100.7; Lev. Rab. 18.1; and b. Ket. 62b. See also “the bird of this world” that cannot pass the river preventing an access to another world (Hist. Rech. 2:9; cf. comm. to 2:1).

In light of these parallels the problematic saying of R. Hanina in b. Moed. Q. 28b–29a (קשה יציאת נשמה מן הגוף כציפורי בפי הוושט), may be understood literally: “The way out of the body is difficult for the soul like the [fluttering of the] bird in the narrow place [or “gullet”].”⁴⁰⁹ This interpretation goes well with the Hebrew term צפור נפש, lit. “bird of soul” designating the cartilage at the end of the sternum (cartilago ensiformis; t. Sanh. 12.3; b. B. Qam. 90b). According to t. Mak. 5.15 the whip “should not reach the ‘bird of his soul,’ lest the man dies” (שלא תגיע לציפור נפשו וימות).

⁴⁰⁸ Epitaph of Arsinoe of Leontopolis (Horst, Ancient, 51).

⁴⁰⁹ And not “like whirling waters ...” or as Rashi: “like the rope [passing] at the loop-hole of the mast” (in distinct of the following naval simile of R. Yohanan: כפטירי בפי הוושט “like the top-sail at the loop-hole of the mast”).

In late mystical texts the dwelling place of the Messiah's soul until his advent is known as "the Bird's Nest" (Seder Gan Eden in Bet HaMidr. 3.131–140; Zohar, Exod. 2.7b–9a; 3.196b). This might be rooted in a Rabbinic concept of "Guf," a celestial treasure-house of unborn souls (b. Yeb. 62a, 63b; b. Nid. 13b).⁴¹⁰

2. Angelic Birds. Alternatively, it is possible that S preserves an older reading here, and that the identification of the birds with souls in G is a later misinterpretation (based in its turn as we have seen on the well developed tradition). The birds might initially have been understood as another kind of celestial, probably angelic, beings. Ornimorphic angels (with human faces) are known, e.g., to 3 En. 2:1; 24:11; 26:3, 47:4. A unique and not fully clear interpretation of Ps 104 ascribed to R. Akiba may refer to an aggadic tradition which could stand behind 3 Baruch as well. The psalm speaks about the waters that "stood above the mountain" (104:6), bounded to prevent a new Flood (104:9), in connection to the "heavenly birds" (Heb עוף-השמים) dwelling on the springs of water (104:11–12). These birds are explicitly identified with angels:

"You have set a bound that they may not pass over ... He sends the springs into the valleys ... Above them dwell the birds of the sky." R. Ishmael and R. Akiba [disagreed]: R. Akiba maintained that "springs" referred to pools in which lepers, whose presence under a roof brings the same degree of uncleanness as a dead body, are required to immerse themselves [when they are healed], and "the birds of the sky" are the ministering angels. But R. Ishmael said to R. Akiba, "You ought to give up this kind of exegesis, and turn to the study of the treatises Signs of Leprosy and Tents." (Midr. Pss. 104: 9–12)

3. Praising Birds. The birds "assemble, living together choir by choir" (10:5G) and "continually sing praise to the Lord" (10:7G), also according to S they are "praising God unceasingly day and night (10:5S). If the birds are the souls of the just (10:5G), this is in a contradiction to Ps 115:7: "The dead do not praise Lord, nor all those who go down to silence." Singing in heaven and celestial choirs are well attested as a part of the celestial liturgy, but performed by angels rather than by souls or birds (e.g., 1 En. 40; 60; 2 En. 7–9; 21; Apoc. Abr. 18; T. Levi 3:8; Apoc. Zeph. 8; Asc. Isa. 7–9; and Qumranic Songs of the Sabbath Sacrifice). Ornimorphic and probably angelic beings in this function are found in 2 Enoch, where "phoenixes and chalkydri” of the sixth heaven “sing in unison” to delight the Lord (2 En. 19:6); lower phoenixes and chalkydri also “broke into song at the command of the Lord” to praise the sun (2 En. 15:1; 19:6).⁴¹¹

⁴¹⁰ Soul-birds appear in Disputatio Panagiotae (probably dependent on 3 Baruch). Cf. Aptowitz, "Seele."

4. Birds and Phoenix. These birds may be connected to the archetypical Bird of heaven, “Phoenix” of chs. 6–8. See “and the birds seek me” (6:8S; probably only earthly birds awaiting for a signal for the morning song are meant). Phoenix feeds on “the dew of earth” (6:11G), while the birds reside on the source of celestial dew (10:9G; see comm. ibid.). The phoenix-like bird is “the king of birds, for all the birds, as one, in fear did haste to follow after him” (Ezekiel the Tragedian, Exagoge 254–69). The Rabbinic counterpart of Phoenix, Ziz, is mentioned as “Ziz of the field and every bird of the mountains” (Rabbinic reading of Ps 50:11; see Lev. Rab. 22.10; b. B. Bat. 73b; LXX has “birds of heaven,” τὰ πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, instead). “Phoenixes and chalkydri” of 2 Enoch combine the functions of Phoenix and the birds of 3 Baruch: like Phoenix, they accompany the sun (2 En. 12:1–2) and like the birds of the lake, they are connected to dew water (2 En. 12:2) and sing praises to God (2 En. 15:1; 19:6).

5. Birds and water. Birds of ancient lore are closely connected to water. “He made all kinds of birds, as sister kinds to those in the waters” (Philo, Opif. 20.63). The birds are created from water mixed with ground (cf. b. Hul. 27b; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 4.35a; Tan. B. 4.112; Tan. Hukkat 6; Eccl. Rab. 7.23; Num. Rab. 19.3). The birds of 3 Baruch are set on the lake of the heavenly dew and productive rain. The task of the multiple “phoenixes and chalkydri” of 2 Enoch (12:1–2) is to “carry heat and dew.”

10:3. Crane (γέρανος / жеравъ). Among the birds of “all species” Baruch specifically mentions the crane. The crane (probably Biblical Heb ענור or סוס; Rabbinic כורכיא) is not listed among the birds forbidden for food (Lev 11; Deut 14), and it accords with the definition “pure birds” of 10:5S (see comm. below). “These birds [cranes] migrate from the steppes of Scythia to the marshlands south of Egypt where the Nile has its source” (Aristotle, Hist. Anim. 12); they gather in large flocks and reside in Palestine only in summer (cf. comm. to 10:2, end). Jeremiah noticed that the crane, with some other bird species, “observe the time of their coming” (Jer 8:7). It is the largest bird seen in Palestine, and it is its size which is stressed in 3 Baruch: “a crane [as large] as great oxen” in G and “very large [birds], similar to a crane” in S. The crane was known for its strong voice (cf. Isa 38:14), which became proverbial (cf. “cry like a crane” in y. Dem. 2.22c; b. Kid. 49a). This feature may be connected to the main function of the birds, “continually singing praise” (10:7G/10:5S) or to the cry of the departing soul which is so strong that it overthrows trees (“it breaks down cedars, it breaks down oaks;” Gen. Rab. 6.7). Images on coins and ancient gems demonstrate the popularity of the bird.⁴¹²

⁴¹¹ Cf. earthly birds uttering verbal praise to their Creator (as well as other creatures) in Perek Shira.

There are South Slavic folklore accounts (according to Gura, of Greek origin), where men may transform into cranes and vice versa. This metamorphosis takes place when they bathe in a special lake.⁴¹³

10:5S. Pure birds. The reading occurs only in S. Previously translated as “shining,”⁴¹⁴ CS יאֵלֵךְ (יֵלֵךְ) “clear, clean” might render Gk καθαρὸς “pure.”⁴¹⁵ Gk ὄρνεον καθαρὸν renders Heb צִפּוֹר טָהוֹרָה of Deut 14:11 and Gk πετεινὸν καθαρὸν comes for Heb עוֹף טָהוֹר in Deut 14:20. This combination is rare in Greek and appears mainly in sources influenced by Jewish and Christian traditions,⁴¹⁶ Heb pl. עוֹפוֹת טָהוֹרִים for ritually clean birds is widely used in Rabbinic sources (m. Makshir. 6.3; t. Ohal. 12.3; Hul. 2.14; 8.11; Kel. 7.5; etc.). Philo considered clean birds to be of especially noble and pure nature comparable to that of celestial bodies:

But the fifth substance only is made unmixed and pure, for which reason it is not of a nature to be divided. Wherefore it is well said that “the birds he did not divide” [Gen 15:10] since, as in the case of birds, it is the nature of celestial bodies ... to be elevated and to resemble both [kinds of] clean birds, the turtle-dove and the dove, which do not admit of cutting or division, since they belong to the simpler and unmixed fifth substance ... (Philo, Quaest. Gen. 3.6)

A subtext of a talmudic saying that “the clean birds dwell with the righteous” may belong to the tradition presented in 3 Baruch:

⁴¹² Imhoof-Blumer, Keller, Tier, pls. 6.3; 6.6, 7; 22.2, 12, 17, and 24.8.

⁴¹³ Gura, Simvolika, 647, 658.

⁴¹⁴ Gaylord, Slavonic, 111.

⁴¹⁵ Srezn, 3.1668. Cf. LPG, 684–5.

⁴¹⁶ Cf. Apollonius who calls pigeons “pure birds of God” – ὄρνεα καθαρὰ τοῦ θεοῦ (Apotelesmata 1389.1; the same work has Hebrew forms on 1384.7). Cf. τὰ καθαρὰ ὄρνεα ἢν τί σημαίνει ἕκαστον τῶν ζῳδίων καὶ τῶν ἀστέρων καὶ τίνων δεσπόζουσιν (e cod. Laur. plut. 28, 34, fol. 155), l. 64 (Ludwich, Maximi, 119–122); cf. also Jerome, Adv. Luc. 22.

Also he [Noah] sent out a dove from him, to see if the waters had receded [Gen 8:8]. R. Jeremiah said, "This proves that the clean birds dwell with the righteous [מבאן שדירחן של עופות טהורים עם הצדיקים] (b. Sanh. 108b)⁴¹⁷

A Rabbinic equivalent of Phoenix, Ziz is also known as a "clean bird" fit for the eschatological banquet (זיז עוף טהור הוא; Gen. Rab. 19.4 and par.). The late account on the Hebrew tribes living beyond the Sambation river probably preserves an echo of the tradition of a remote lake with "all species" (cf. 10:3G) of "pure birds" on it:

And they [the tribes] assembled to the lake, and saturated their land from them [springs and lake]. And that lake teemed with all kinds of fish, and all species of clean birds flew on the springs and the lake [ועל המעינות ועל האגם יפרחו כל מיני עופות טהורים] (Gen. Rabbati, Vayetse).

Excursus: Cosmic Hydrology Continued (10:8–9)

GREEK

⁸ And I Baruch said, "Lord, and how is that men say that the water that rains is from the sea?"

⁹ And the angel said,

"There is rain also from the sea, and from the waters upon earth, and this one; but that which produces the fruits is from here. Know, thus, from now on that from this comes what is called the dew of heaven."

SLAVONIC

⁸ And I said, "How is it that men say that clouds come down to the sea and take water and rain?"

⁹ And the angel told me,

"The race of men is mistaken, for all the water of the sea is salty, so that if it rained by the sea [water], a fruit would not grow on earth. But know [pl.] that clouds are from that lake and they rain."

NOTES

10:9G. From here (ἐκ τούτου). Or "from this [place]." Cf. ἀπὸ τούτου "from there" (11:1).

⁴¹⁷ This is deduced from the words "from him," which is not mentioned in connection with the raven.

COMMENTARY

The sources of rain and dew are of common interest for apocalyptic visionaries. Enoch was shown “the secrets of the clouds and dew, and there I saw from where they proceed in that place and from where they saturate the dusty earth” (1 En. 41:3). Moses also was shown “the place from which the clouds draw up water to water the whole earth, and the place from which the river takes its water” as well as “the place in the firmament from which only the Holy Land drinks” (Bib. Ant. 19:10; it is unclear whether the first two sources are located in heaven, as the last one, or on earth, as “the land of Egypt” mentioned inbetween).

Rain. This might be a Mesopotamian idea that the rainwater is kept in special celestial reservoirs.⁴¹⁸ The idea of “heavenly waters” appears in Greek and Roman writings until the relatively late times (from War of Titans 4 [apud Athenaeus, Deipn. 7.277D] to Ovid, Fast. 4.386). It is also found in the Bible (Gen 1:6–7; Job 38:37; Deut 28:12). Other meteorological elements are also stored in heaven (Jer 10:13; 51; 16; Ps 135:7; 1 En. 41:3–4; 76; 2 En. 3–6; T. Levi 3:2; b. Hag. 12b). Similarly to our lake, the “upper water” (מים עליונים) of Rabbinic tradition was known as a source of the rain: “There is something like a box [קובה] in the firmament from which the rains issue” (b. Taan. 8b); “The upper water is suspended by the word,⁴¹⁹ and their fruit is rain water, as it is said, ‘the earth is sated from the fruit of your work’ [Ps 104:13]” (b. Taan. 10a). This water treasury was the objective of the Tower builders according to b. Sanh. 109a: “They said, ‘Let us build a tower, ascend to heaven, and cleave it with axes, that its waters might gush forth.’” Some Church Fathers also held to this biblical conception (Isidorus, Nat. 14.1–2).⁴²⁰ Cf. comm. to “sea” in 4:3S/4:6G.

However, the conception that the heavenly water is the one “which the clouds receive and rain upon earth” (3 Bar. 10:6) contradicted the new Hellenistic views (which must have become popular – as indicated by the expression “men say” in 10:8), according to which “the water that rains is from the sea” (10:8G), or more in detail, “clouds come down to the sea and take water and rain” (10:8S). The latter theory was known already to the Pre-Socratics:

⁴¹⁸ Cf. Enuma Elish 4–5; see Jensen, Kosmologie, 5.344.

⁴¹⁹ Cf. “much water suspended” in the first heaven (T. Levi 2:7).

⁴²⁰ Cf. Hoffmann, Anschauungen, 5–13.

The sea is the source of water and the source of wind; for neither would blasts of wind arise in the clouds and blow out from within them, except for the great sea, nor would the streams of rivers nor the rain-water in the sky exist but for the sea; but the great sea is the begetter of clouds and winds and rivers. (Xenophanes, Frag. 11; DK 1.125, 20–23).

Aristotle even argues with the people “supposing that water, snow, and hail existed all along and were produced when the time came and not generated at all, as if the atmosphere brought each to hand out of its stock from time to time” (Meteor. 2.9.). His water cycle is completely terrestrial (ibid. 1.3). On the origin of clouds and rain see also Lucretius 6.495–523; Vitruvius 8.2.1–4; Pliny, Nat. Hist. 2.111; Isidorus, Orig. 13.7.1–2; 13.10.2–3; Nat. 32.1–2; 33.1–3.

The conflict between the traditional and new views is documented by the Rabbis. Here both sides resort to the textual authority of the Bible:

And from where does the earth drink? R. Eliezer and R. Yehoshua [disagreed]. R. Eliezer said, “From the waters of the Ocean, as it is written, ‘But there went up a mist from the earth and watered, etc.’ [וַיֵּלֶךְ מִן הָאָרֶץ וַהֲשִׁקָהּ; Gen 2:6].” R. Yehoshua told him, “But are not the waters of the Ocean salty?” He [R. Eliezer] said, “They are sweetened in the clouds, as it is written, ‘Which the clouds distil’ [שְׁחָקִים יִזְלוּ שְׁחָקִים; Job 36:28]. Where are they distilled? In the clouds [שְׁחָקִים]. R. Yehoshua said, “[The earth drinks] from the upper waters [מִמֵּי הַעִלְיוֹנִים], for it is written, ‘And [the land] drinks water from the rain of heaven [לְמַטֵּר הַשָּׁמַיִם תִּשְׁתַּח מֵיָם; Deut 11:11]. The clouds, however, mount up to heaven and receive them [the waters] as from the mouth of a bottle [כַּמִּפִּי הַנּוֹד]; as it is written, ‘They gather up rain into its cloud’ [יִזְקֹק מִטֵּר לְאִידוֹ; Job 36:27]? They distil it as from a sieve, not one drop touches another, as it is written, ‘Distilling waters [from] the thick clouds’ [חֲשֶׁרֶת מֵיָם עֲבִי שְׁחָקִים; 2 Sam 22:12].” Why are they [the clouds] called shehaqim? Resh Lakish said, ‘Because they break up [shohaqim] the water [into drops].’ R. Abba b. Kahana said, “They do this like the entrails of an animal.” R. Yohanan and Resh Lakish [disagreed]. R. Yohanan said, “Clouds come from above, as it is written, ‘And behold, with the clouds of heaven’ [וַיָּאֲרוּ עִם עַנְנֵי שָׁמַיָא; Dan. 7:13]. Resh Lakish said, “Clouds come from below, as said, ‘Who causes the vapors [clouds] to ascend from the end of the earth [מַעֲלֶה נְשִׂאִים מִקְצֵה הָאָרֶץ; Ps 135:7]?” (Gen. Rab. 13.10–11; cf. Eccl. Rab. 1.7; b. Taan. 9b)

Targum Pseudo-Jonathan agrees with the Aristotelian views of R. Eliezer and Resh Lakish:

And a cloud of glory descended from the Throne of glory, and was filled with waters from the Ocean, and afterward went up from earth, and gave rain to come down and water all the face of the ground. (Tg. Ps.-Jon. Gen 2:6)

See also Gen. Rab. 12.3 (R. Joseph: “though the rain falls from heaven, its creation is from the earth”); b. Menah. 69a; and b. Erub. 45b. The origin of clouds from the sea is especially obvious for Palestine, where rain clouds are often seen arising “from the west,” that is, from the sea (1 Kgs 18:44; Luke 12:54; 2 Bar. 53:1).

The idea of the salt waters distilled in clouds (as in Genesis Rabba above) was known already to Hippocrates (who provides the first detailed description of the theory of rain):

Rain waters, then, are the lightest, the sweetest, the thinnest, and the clearest; for originally the sun raises and attracts the thinnest and lightest part of the water, as is obvious from the nature of salts; for the saltish part is left behind owing to its thickness and weight, and forms salts. (Hippocrates, Aer. 8).

The Greek version of 3 Baruch aims to harmonize the traditional doctrines of heavenly waters with new Hellenistic meteorological science. It solves this problem in a creative way: resorting to a traditionally known Jewish dichotomy of productive and non-productive waters, G claims that both doctrines are right, since there are three kinds of rain: “There is rain also from the sea, and from the waters upon earth, and this one; but that which produces the fruits is from here” (10:9G). The idea that only rain water is productive might have been derived from Gen 2:5: “And no shrub of the field was yet in the earth, and no plant of the field had yet sprouted, for the Lord God had not sent rain upon the earth.” Cf. “R. Hiyya taught: In both places [Eden and earth] nothing grew until rain descended upon them” (Gen. Rab. 13.1). The problem of productive (or masculine waters from heaven) vs. unproductive (or feminine waters from the abyss) irrigation is widely known in early Jewish science:

And in those days the punishment will come from the Lord of Spirits, and he will open all the chambers of waters which are above the heavens, and of the fountains which are beneath the earth. And all the waters shall be joined with the waters: that which is above the heavens is the masculine, and the water which is beneath the earth is the feminine. (1 En. 54:7–8)

Cf. t. Taan. 1.4; y. Taan. 1.64b; b. Taan. 6b; y. Ber. 9.14a Gen. Rab. 13.14; 32.7; and Pirqe R. El. 5; 23. Ginzberg suggested that the whole idea of sexual dichotomy of waters must go back to the Babylonian conception of Apsu and Tiamat.⁴²¹ However, the development of this concept into the belief that only the rain water can be productive, which is plausible in Palestine with agriculture based on rain watering, could hardly be applied to the irrigation cultures of Mesopotamia or Egypt.

Rains of blessing were believed to come only from the south (Pesiq. R. 46; Pirqe R. El. 1; Num. Rab. 2.10). Some believed that the rains from the “Good Treasury” (אוצר טוב) ceased to exist after the destruction of Jerusalem (b. B. Bat. 25b), so Baruch's vision could have been intended to prove the opposite (cf. comm. to ch. 11 on similar beliefs on the "Gate of Prayers" supposed to be closed since the destruction and Baruch's witnessing of its openings).

⁴²¹ Ginzberg, Legends, 5.182.

In S there is no trace of an attempt to compromise between the two schools: "The race of men is mistaken, ... know [pl.] that clouds are from that lake and they rain" (10:9S). Not only its position, but even its argumentation are identical to what R. Yehoshua states: "All the water of the sea is salty, so that if it rained by the sea [water], a fruit would not grow on earth" (Gen. Rab. 13.10 cited above).

Both S and even compromising G reject the Greek idea of the closed water circle. Rain water or at least some of it (as in G) is constantly added from a heavenly store. This makes it necessary to introduce a mechanism for getting rid of the superfluous water, which is indeed enabled by the drinking Serpent of chs. 4–5, since "if Serpent did not drink one cubit from the sea [each day], there would be no dry land on earth" (4:5S, family β; see Notes and cf. introductory comm. to ch 11: Celestial Bestiary 3.1).

Dew. In addition to the rain, "from this [celestial lake] comes what is called the dew of heaven." The dew of heaven (10:9G; as well as "the dew of earth" in 6:11G) is mentioned only in G. The word combination occurs in Gen 27:28, 39; Dan 4:12; 20; 22; 30; and 5:21. The dew was known to be stored in heaven: "The spirit of the dew dwells at the ends of heaven, close to the chambers of the rain, and its course is in winter and in summer" (1 En. 60:20). See 2 En. 5–6 on the celestial treasures of snow, ice, clouds, and dew. The revenue of the sun and celestial birds of praise, phoenixes and chalkydri, are those who "carry heat and dew" (ibid. 12:2). "The dew is descending from heaven" causing the grass to spring from the earth in the eighth hour of the night (T. Adam 1:8), just before angelic praise and human prayer (ninth and tenth hours; ibid. 1:9–10). Abraham sees dew most probably under the highest fiery heaven together with "a fire spread out and light," and "a multitude of angels, and a power of the invisible glory from the Living Creatures" (Apoc. Abr. 19:4). The storehouses of dew are unlocked on Passover (Tg. Ps.-Jon. Gen 27:1–6; Pirqe R. El. 36).

There may be a connection between the dew here and the oil of ch. 15G.⁴²² They both play a role in the destiny of the righteous: the pious souls reside on the lake of dew (10:5G), and the oil is the reward of the pious (probably posthumously). This must be due to the fact that the both are known to be means of resurrection. Concerning the resurrective “oil of life,” see comm. to 15:1. As for the dew, in Rabbinic sources it must be an equivalent of the “oil of life” in its resurrective and healing power; see y. Ber. 5.2.9b; y. Taan. 1.63d; b. Shab 88b; b. Hag. 12b; b. Ket. 111b; Cant. Rab. 5.6; Mek. Bahodesh Yitro 9; Midr. HaG. 1.430 to Gen 27:28; Pesiq. R. 20; Pirque R. El. 32–34; Tan. B. Toledot 19, some with reference to Isa 26:19 interpreted as “a dew of herbs [or “lights”] is your dew, and the earth will cast off the spirits of the dead [כִּי טַל אֹרֶחַ טַלְךָ וְאֶרֶץ רַפְאִים תְּפִיל].”⁴²³ Healing dew is known to Hos 14:6 and 2 Baruch:

⁴²² Both dew and oil are consistently absent in S everywhere: "dew of earth" as a food of Phoenix in 6:11 (only manna is mentioned); "dew of heaven" in 10:9 (only rain); oil in 15:1 and 2 (substituted by mercy).

For winds will go forth from before me to bring every morning the fragrance of aromatic fruits, and at the close of the day clouds distilling the dew of health (29:7) ... And then healing will descend in dew, And disease will withdraw. And anxiety and anguish and lamentation pass from amongst men. And gladness proceed through the whole earth. And no one shall again die untimely ... (73:2–3)

Dew and oil are likened in 2 Enoch: in order to be transformed into a heavenly being, Enoch is anointed by the oil which “ointment is like sweet dew” (2 En. 22:9). Heavenly dew also is like oil and is similar to flowers: “They [angels] showed me the treasure-house of the dew, like oil of the olive, and the appearance of its image, as of all the flowers of the earth” (2 En. 6:1; cf. “flowers” exchanged to oil or mercy in 3 Bar. 12:1, 5; 15:2–3). See also “mercy like dew upon earth” (1 En. 39:5; “mercy” replaces “oil” in S; on “oil” and “mercy,” Gk ὄλαιο and ὄλεος, see comm. to 15:1).⁴²⁴

In 3 Baruch, Phoenix, a symbol of immortality in Greek tradition, feeds on manna and dew (6:11G). However, there it is called “dew of earth” (6:11G). Does the terrestrial dew differ from the celestial one? Are there two kinds of dew? If it was the same, Phoenix could belong to the birds of the fourth heaven (or as Harlow carefully formulates, “that has access to the lake in the fourth heaven”;⁴²⁵ cf. comm. to “birds” in 10:3–5: “Birds and Phoenix”). However, the parallels show that the dichotomy of two sorts of dew was well known. Jub. 26:23 even modifies the verse of Gen 27:28 in order to discern two kinds of dew: “And may the Lord give you of the dew of heaven and of the dew of the earth [instead of “richness of earth” of Gen 27:28 and 39], and plenty of corn and oil [instead of “wine”].” See the ⁴²³ Rain and resurrection are also frequently juxtaposed; see, e.g., y. Ber. 5.2.9a; y. Taan. 1.1.63c; b. Ber. 33a; Taan. 7a; Deut. Rab. 7.6.

⁴²⁴ Cf. also oil and dew united in Ps 133:3.

⁴²⁵ Harlow, Baruch, 145.

text, “And Esau lifted up his voice and wept. And Isaac answered and said to him: ‘Behold, your dwelling will be far from the dew of the earth and far from the dew of heaven from above” (Jub. 26:33). “The dew of the earth” is adduced among created terrestrial “gatherings of waters:”

And on that day He created for them all the seas according to their separate gathering-places, and all the rivers, and the gatherings of the waters in the mountains and on all the earth, and all the lakes, and all the dew of the earth. (Jub. 2:7)

There was also a similar dichotomy of “good” and “bad” dews. Enoch saw “winds coming from the middle of the twelve portals bringing beneficial dew of prosperity; from other portals, hurtful dew accompanied by locusts and other calamities” (1 En. 76:8). Also in the Talmud, there is a distinction between “harmful dews” of the sixth heaven (“Makhon is that in which are the treasures of hail, and the high dwelling-place of harmful dews and the high dwelling-place of round drops [עליית טללים רעים ועליית עגלים]”) and “the dew with which the Holy One is about to quicken mortals” of the seventh heaven, Arabot (b. Hag. 12b). The prayers against hurtful dews are mentioned in Lev. Rab. 28 and b. Suk. 37b.⁴²⁶

V. Angelic Service or Retribution Mechanism

Where Prayers Go (11)

GREEK

¹ And having taking me from here the angel brought me to the fifth heaven.

² And he showed me large gates, and names of men were written [on them],

² And the gate was closed. And I said, “Lord, this gate-tower is not opening so that we can enter?” And the angel told me, “We cannot enter until Michael, the key-holder of the Kingdom of Heaven, comes. But wait and you will see the Glory of God.”

SLAVONIC

¹ And the angel of host took me and carried me to the fifth heaven, and they were closed. And I said, “Will these gates be opened so that we can enter them?” And the angel told me, “We cannot enter them until Michael, the key-holder of the Kingdom, comes.” And the angel told me, “Wait and you will see the Glory of God,”

³ And while we were waiting,

⁴²⁶ God’s favor is often is pictured as the dew. For a survey of the image of dew in the Bible, see Bulgarelli, L’immagine. Cf. Uval, “Dew.” Dew was also one of the signs of Baal’s beneficent rule (CTA 19.41–46; 3.2.38–41; cf. Deut 33:28; Isa 26:29).

text, “And Esau lifted up his voice and wept. And Isaac answered and said to him: ‘Behold, your dwelling will be far from the dew of the earth and far from the dew of heaven from above” (Jub. 26:33). “The dew of the earth” is adduced among created terrestrial “gatherings of waters:”

And on that day He created for them all the seas according to their separate gathering-places, and all the rivers, and the gatherings of the waters in the mountains and on all the earth, and all the lakes, and all the dew of the earth. (Jub. 2:7)

There was also a similar dichotomy of “good” and “bad” dews. Enoch saw “winds coming from the middle of the twelve portals bringing beneficial dew of prosperity; from other portals, hurtful dew accompanied by locusts and other calamities” (1 En. 76:8). Also in the Talmud, there is a distinction between “harmful dews” of the sixth heaven (“Makhon is that in which are the treasures of hail, and the high dwelling-place of harmful dews and the high dwelling-place of round drops [עליית טללים רעים ועליית עגלים]”) and “the dew with which the Holy One is about to quicken mortals” of the seventh heaven, Arabot (b. Hag. 12b). The prayers against hurtful dews are mentioned in Lev. Rab. 28 and b. Suk. 37b.⁴²⁶

V. Angelic Service or Retribution Mechanism

Where Prayers Go (11)

GREEK

¹ And having taking me from here the angel brought me to the fifth heaven.

² And he showed me large gates, and names of men were written [on them],

² And the gate was closed. And I said, “Lord, this gate-tower is not opening so that we can enter?” And the angel told me, “We cannot enter until Michael, the key-holder of the Kingdom of Heaven, comes. But wait and you will see the Glory of God.”

SLAVONIC

¹ And the angel of host took me and carried me to the fifth heaven, and they were closed. And I said, “Will these gates be opened so that we can enter them?” And the angel told me, “We cannot enter them until Michael, the key-holder of the Kingdom, comes.” And the angel told me, “Wait and you will see the Glory of God,”

³ And while we were waiting,

⁴²⁶ God’s favor is often is pictured as the dew. For a survey of the image of dew in the Bible, see Bulgarelli, L’immagine. Cf. Uval, “Dew.” Dew was also one of the signs of Baal’s beneficent rule (CTA 19.41–46; 3.2.38–41; cf. Deut 33:28; Isa 26:29).

³ And there was a great sound, like thunder.

And I said, "Lord, what is this sound?"

⁴ And he told me, "Now Michael,
the commander-in-chief,

is coming down to receive the prayers of
men."

⁵ And behold, a voice came, "Let the gates be opened!" And they opened, and there was a shriek [as loud] as thunder.

⁶ And Michael came, and the angel who was with me went to meet him and bowed to him and said, "Hail, my commander-in-chief, and that of all our order!" ⁷ And the commander-in-chief Michael said, "Hail you also, our brother, and the interpreter of the revelations to those who pass through life rightly!"

⁸ And having greeted one another thus, they stood still.

And I saw the commander-in-chief Michael, holding a very large flat bowl. Its depth was like [the distance] from heaven to earth, and its width like [the distance] from north to south. And I said, "Lord, what is it that Michael the archangel is holding?"

⁹ And he told me, "This is where the virtues of the righteous enter, and the good works that they do, which are brought through it before the heavenly God."

there was a sound

from the highest heaven

like a threefold thunder.

And I Baruch said, "Lord, what is this sound?"

⁴ And he told me, "Michael is coming down to receive the prayers of men."

⁵ And then a voice came, saying that the gates should open, and they opened. And there was a great sound, greater than the first.

⁶ And Michael came, and the angel who was with me met him and bowed to him.

⁸ And I saw him holding a very large receptacle, and its depth was like [the distance] from heaven to earth, and its width like [the distance] from east to west. And I said,
"Lord, what is Michael holding?"

⁹ And he told me, "This is where the prayers of men enter."

To this may be added also the consolatory message of the unceasing existence of the heavenly Temple liturgy, which is immune to destruction, in contrast to the earthly Temple service.⁴³⁰

This scene takes place at the ultimate point of Baruch's ascent. The uniqueness of 3 Baruch's ouranology among other early Jewish and Christian writings lies in the fact that the visionary reaches the fifth heaven as his final destination, and does not mention any additional firmaments. At the same time, while referring to different stages of the ascent and the heavenly structure in general, the text abounds with inconsistencies and contradictions, both between the two versions, and internally within each.

- (1) There is an inconsistency in the numbering of the heavens: G speaks of the first (2:2), second (3:1), third (10:1), and then the fifth heaven (11:1), omitting the fourth. S gives numbers to the first two heavens (2:2; 3:1) and then the fifth (11:1), but omits both the third and fourth.
- (2) Other indications of intercelestial transfer do not conform to the numbering and are not consistent between the versions. These indications are: celestial gates, a journey through the gates, and a plain behind the gates. Celestial gates or doors signal ascents in G and S: the first (2:2), the second (3:1); the fifth (11:2; the same gate is mentioned also in 11:5; 14:1; 15:1; 17:1) and in S also the third (4:2; the heaven unnumbered). Journeys appear three times in both versions: the first (2:2), the second (3:1) and the third ascent (4:2; the heaven unnumbered). Plains signal four ascents in G – the first (2:3), the second (3:3), the third (4:3; the heaven unnumbered) and the fourth (10:2, 4, and 5; the heaven numbered as the third). S has “plain” only twice: in the first (2:3, 4, 5) and the third (4:3) ascents, while on the second there is “great chamber” and in the fourth “mountain” instead of “plain.”

	Ascent ⁴³¹		Number		Gate		Journey		Plain
	S	G	S	G	S	G	S	G	S
2:2–3	*1	*1	1	1	+	+	+	+	+	+
3:1–2	*2	*2	2	2	+	+	+	+	+	–
4:2	*3	*3	–	–	–	+	+	+	+	+
10:1	*4	–	3	–	–	–	–	–	+	–
11:1	*5	*4	5	5	+	+	–	–	–	–

⁴³⁰ Wright, Heaven, 174.

Additional confusion in numbering, and in the order of transitions, is caused by 7:2, where G says that “the sun passes in the third heaven” (7:2G; only the heaven of the “lake of birds,” beyond the luminaries, is numbered as “third” below; 10:1G), while S relates the route of the sun to “what I have shown you is in the first and second heavens” (7:2S), although previously the three inter-celestial transitions are mentioned in both versions.

At least some of these problems could be explained by negligence during editorial interventions. It looks as though the ouranology presented in the proto-text was not satisfactory or detailed enough for later redactors. The situation could be complicated by the fact that some of the larger fragments, containing among other things indications of intercelestial transitions, may be suspected as having been interpolated. In this case, the subsequent editorial emendations could come to compensate for the problems that arose as a result of these interpolations. Fortunately, the emendations were not consistent enough, and rudiments of the initial text have been preserved. Moreover, the two extant redactions (Greek and Slavonic) present different stages of this elaboration. These two factors enable us at least to glimpse into the original cosmology of the writing. The main questions we are trying to answer are as follows: (a) how many firmaments were in the heaven of 3 Baruch; (b) to what point has the visionary ascended; and (c) how do these data vary between the late redactions (reflected in the extant texts of G and S) and their proto-text (to the extent we can reconstruct its elements)? As we will see below, depending on different interpretations, the extant versions may reflect seven- or fivefold celestial structures, while the proto-text must have referred to another, probably older, model of three heavens (or “two plus one”).⁴³²

1. Non-complete Ascent

Did Baruch enter the last mentioned heaven, whatever the original number of heavens may have been? As we can see from the table above, the description of Baruch’s ascent to the last heaven offers no indications of an intercelestial transfer, such as those that appear after his entry into the other heavens: only the gate is mentioned but neither a journey through it, nor a plain or anything behind it.⁴³³ Although these indications are not consistently used with other heavens as well, this is the only case in which both indications are absent in both versions. One more difference between the last heaven from the previous ones is the term used to designate its opening. It is the only one called “gate” (Gk πύλη; CS ВРАТА) or even “gate-tower” (Gk πύλων) in distinction to “doors” (Gk θύρα, CS ДВЕРИ) above (cf. comm. to “very large door” in 2:2).

⁴³¹ In these columns the ascents are numbered in the order of appearance of any indication of an ascent.

⁴³² More on cosmology, including ouranological issues, see Introduction.

⁴³³ Thus Wright (Heaven, 172).

Harlow suggests that “although Baruch’s passage is not explicitly noted, it is nevertheless clearly implied in 11:5–8.”⁴³⁴ In fact, this assumption is not necessary. According to the plain meaning of the text, Baruch does not enter the fifth gate, which must be the final limit of Baruch’s ascent. A rationale of the non-complete ascent may be found in the conceptions of inaccessible supercelestial realm and/or inner shrine of the celestial Temple.

God is known to reside above the heavens (Ps 57:6, 12; 108:6; 113:4; Job 11:8; 22:12). An extra heaven exceeding the typological number of seven is found mainly as the eighth heaven added to the most popular sevenfold structure (see “Alternative Cosmologies” below), but the idea could be applied to any number of heavens. The authenticity of this popular concept was defended by Origen:

Celsus in the next place alleges that “certain Christians, having misunderstood the words of Plato, loudly boast of a ‘supercelestial’ God, thus ascending beyond the heaven of the Jews.” ... nor was the philosopher the first to present to view the ‘supercelestial’ place; for David long ago brought to view the profundity and multitude of the thoughts concerning God entertained by those who have ascended above visible things, when he said in the book of Psalms: “Praise God, you heaven of heavens and you waters that be above the heavens, let them praise the name of the Lord.” I do not, indeed, deny that Plato learned from certain Hebrews the words quoted from the Phaedrus [27], or even, as some have recorded, that he quoted them from a perusal of our prophetic writings, when he said, “No poet here below has ever sung of the supercelestial place, or ever will sing in a becoming manner,” and so on. (Cels. 6.19)

The concept of the supercelestial world could be interlaced with the idea of the celestial Sanctuary and its inner shrines. The supercelestial “intelligible world” as opposed to “sense-perceptible heaven” were regarded by Philo as counterparts of accessible and inaccessible areas of the terrestrial sanctuary:

The simple holy [parts of the tabernacle] are classified with the sense-perceptible heaven, whereas the inner [parts], which are called the Holy of Holies, [are classified] with the intelligible world. (Philo, Quaest. Exod. 2.94)

Josephus also states that the Tent was “an imitation of the nature of the universe” with its “heaven set apart to God”:

⁴³⁴ Harlow, Baruch, 147 (cf. 36). The view is shared among others by James (“Baruch,” li); Hughes (“Baruch,” 527); Ryssel (“Baruch”); Collins, Apocalyptic, 199.

It happened that such an arrangement of the Tent was also an imitation of the nature of the universe [μίμησιν τῆς τῷ βῆλων φύσεως]. For its third part, which is within the four pillars, which was inaccessible to the [ordinary] priests like heaven set apart to God [ὡς οὐρανὸς ἀνείτο τῷ θεῷ], while the twenty cubits, just as earth and sea are accessible to men, were thus consigned to the priests alone. (Ant. 3.123)

On the Tent or Temple as a kind of microcosm, see also Philo, Spec. Leg. 1.12.66; Josephus, Ant. 3.181; Pesiq. R. 5; and Num. Rab. 12.13. On angels as priests and celestial Yom Kippur service in 3 Baruch, see the introductory comm. to chs. 12 and 14 respectively.

As noticed by Harlow, there are a number of dramatic elements in this scene, such as (1) dialogues (not only between Baruch and his guide, but also between angels), (2) entrances and departures of Michael and three groups of angels (some signaled by different sounds; see 11:5; 14:1), (3) pre-supposed off-stage reality, for which Michael leaves and from where he comes back.⁴³⁵ This dramatism is also characteristic of liturgical performances. The Temple imagery and semi-priestly activity are obvious in this scene, and the writing must refer to the widely known motif of the celestial Temple.⁴³⁶ Baruch receives his revelation at the gates of the destroyed earthly Temple (T:2), and its ultimate scene takes place at the gates of the indestructible celestial Temple.⁴³⁷ This may explain why, in contrast to the previous heavens, when the gate opens here, Baruch and his guide do not pass through it, but wait for the chief angel to descend and greet them. Just as restrictions apply to attendants of the earthly Temple, the protagonist does not have access to the inner shrines of the heavenly Temple to which only the priests (angels), or even only to the high priest (Michael), are permitted entry. Not only the Temple of Jerusalem had forbidden areas (for gentiles, women, profane Israelites, ordinary priests, and even the high priest for the most of the year), but also many pagan temples had their sacra inaccessible for the profane or impure.⁴³⁸ Celestial sites inaccessible to humans, or to most humans, are mentioned in Gen 3:24 and 1 En. 19:3 (see also comm. to 11:2S: Michael the Gatekeeper). Even the visionaries of a higher level of initiation, who in distinction to Baruch were allowed to ⁴³⁵ Harlow, Baruch, 147.

⁴³⁶ For the widely developed motif of the heavenly Temple see, e.g., Philo Spec. Leg. 1.12.66; 2 Bar. 4; T. Levi 5; Rev 7:15; t. Yoma 4.6; Mek., (Bahodesh, Yitro 9); Gen. Rab. 1.4; 69.7; b. Yoma 54b; b. Sanh. 94b; Pesiqta R. 20.4; Tan. Naso 19; Tan. Qedoshim 10; Tg. Isa 1:1-6; Tg. 1 Chr 21:15. Cf. McNicol, "Heavenly." See also introductory comm. to ch. 12 and the commentaries below.

⁴³⁷ Thus Wright, Heaven, 174.

⁴³⁸ Bickerman, "Warning," 389, n. 12.

ascend higher or at least to see the Glory, are said to have stopped at some earlier stage. Enoch stops before the gate of the “second house,” although observing the Divine Glory dwelling in it from outside (1 En. 14:25). Moses does not reach the Throne, probably visiting only the lower heaven from where, like Baruch, he is shown the celestial sources of water (Bib. Ant. 19:10). Angels prevent Moses’ ascent (b. Shab. 88b–89a; Pesiq. R. 20; cf. an Aramaic poem ‘Angele Meroma’ describing how Moses is trying to enter the gates of heaven, but is kept out by angels.⁴³⁹ Ministering angels “sought to thrust away” R. Akiba during his ascent (b. Hag. 15b). Paul stops in the gate to the third heaven, which similarly to our gate has inscriptions – “golden letters” – on it. The gate restricts entrance to those “who have goodness and purity of body” (Apoc. Paul 19; cf. 24). Hekhalot tours are known to be aborted before the gate of the sixth or seventh Palaces, the most dangerous points for those who are “unfit to see the King and his Throne” (Hekh. Zut. ##408–409; Hekh. Rab. #259). Indeed, “at the entrance to the seventh Palace stand and rage all heroes” (Hekh. Rab. #213). All these may witness that the “gate standing” could be a topos of describing apocalyptic experience and moreover could define the status of a visionary; see “R. Akiba said, ‘Ben Azai was found worthy and stood at the gate of the sixth Palace’” (Hekh. Zut., ms New York 23a). In the following parable a Palestinian Amora R. Yudan might imply and even polemicize against such a “gate standing” pending angelic intercession:

If a human has a patron, and then he finds himself in trouble, he does not enter his [patron’s] house suddenly, but he comes and stands in his patron’s door and calls his servant or a member of his household [אלא בא ועמד לו על פתחו של פטרונו וקורא] [לעבדו או לבן ביתו] and says, “So-and-so is standing at the door of your court.” He may be let in, and he may be not. But the Holy One is not so. If trouble comes upon a person, let him cry neither to Michael or to Gabriel, but let him cry unto me, and I will answer him. This is the meaning of the verse: “Whoever calls on the name of the Lord will be delivered” [Joel 2:32]. (y. Ber. 9.13a)⁴⁴⁰

However, our author seems not to share this conception, and the visionary is deprived of direct communication with God. His ultimate vision is the “gates of prayer,” an image also well attested in Jewish literature. Lamentations ascend to the “gate of heaven” in 1 En. 9:10. Heavenly gates open in the constant time (the 10th hour of night) to receive the prayers of men (T. Adam 1:10 cited in 6:13S).

⁴³⁹ Ginsburger, “Introductions,” 15–16, 186–194; Heinemann, “Seridim,” 363–365.

⁴⁴⁰ The parable must be regarded in a wider context of the customary prayer to and worship of angels. On this and on angelic intercession see in comm. to ch. 12. and to 11:4.

The theme of the “gates of prayer” (Heb שַׁעֲרֵי הַתְּפִלָּה), their opening and closing, is well developed in Rabbinic sources. These gates are also known to be periodically opened and closed (cf. 3 Bar. 11:2 and 5), and the schedule of their opening hours was an object of talmudic discussion (y. Ber. 4.7c; b. Ber. 32b; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 24.2; Pirqe R. El. 35; cf. תְּפִלַּת נְעִילָה of the Day of Atonement service in b. Yoma 87b and “the gates of light and prayer” in Sefer Raziel 441). Baruch’s evidence on the openings of the gate is not superfluous since some, as R. Eleazar, even believed that “from the day on which the Temple was destroyed the gates of prayer have been closed” (b. Ber. 32b).⁴⁴¹

Harlow suggests that the abrupt ending of the ascent is designed intentionally to frustrate the readers’ expectations of a climactic Throne theophany. It is prepared in the previous narrative by the “aborted theodicy” of the Prologue, the aborted ascent of the Builders (chs. 2–3), the declared distance of sinful humanity from God’s Glory and even from the Glory of the sun (chs. 4 and 6). The purpose of the abrupt termination of the ascent, according to Harlow, is to polemicize against the conceptions of anthropomorphic depictions of God and angelic transformations of visionaries,⁴⁴² and against anticipation of the restoration of the Temple service. “The abrupt ending functions to subvert and thereby reorient the religious expectations of the readers.”⁴⁴³ Harlow compares the conclusion of Baruch’s tour to the abrupt ending of the Gospel of Mark, where the expectation of arisen Jesus is frustrated.⁴⁴⁴ Although the text itself hardly contains any hints to the dissatisfaction of the visionary, in the context of other major apocalypses Harlow’s interpretation is plausible. Alternatively, it may be that the “gates of prayer” and the retribution mechanism connected to it were the intentionally ultimate objects of the ascent, which is thus not “abrupt,” but just less advanced in comparison to theophanic and apotheotic mystic experiences. This understanding would be in complete accordance with the text, on the one hand, but a unique motif for the genre, on the other. On Baruch as a “modest” visionary, see comm. to T:1.

⁴⁴¹ Altogether this and similar sayings – as “Since the day that the Temple was destroyed, a wall of iron has intervened between Israel and their father in heaven” (b. Ber. 32b) – might have given an alternative explanation for the abruptness of the ascent in the post-Destruction world. For other celestial gates in 3 Baruch, see 2:2; 6:13 and comm. ibid.

⁴⁴² Cf. Himmelfarb, Ascent, 87.

⁴⁴³ Harlow, Baruch, 76; 53–76.

⁴⁴⁴ Ibid., 55.

2. Number of Heavens

2.1. Seven Heavens

2.1.1. Seven heavens and abrupt ascent. The cosmology of seven heavens is the most developed model in early Jewish and Christian traditions.⁴⁴⁵ This idea might be rooted in different ancient traditions and could be also linked to the sevenfold structure of the Temple of Jerusalem as described in m. Kel. 1.6–9, which lists ten areas of increasing holiness in the Land of Israel, of which seven refer to the Temple: (1) heyl, an area on the Temple mount forbidden to gentiles and to those defiled by the dead (שׂאִין עֹבְדֵי כֹכָבִים); (2) the court of women; (3) the court of Israel; (4) the court of priests; (5) area between the altar and ulam (בֵּין הָאוֹלָם וְלַמִּזְבֵּחַ); (6) Sanctuary (הַיִּכָּל); (7) the Holy of Holies.⁴⁴⁷ The celestial Temple also has a sevenfold structure in the Qumranic Songs of the Sabbath Sacrifice. The seven palaces of the Hekhalot literature must also be rooted in these traditions.

Theoretically 3 Baruch could imply a sevenfold celestial structure, where Baruch was allowed to reach only the gate before the fifth heaven. This hypothesis would accord with a schema of a three-chambered celestial Sanctuary, parallel to the terrestrial one, consisting of ulam, hekhal, and devir. In this scenario, Baruch would have reached the fourth heaven, the last before the celestial Sanctuary including three more heavens. See the series of seven divided into groups of four and three in Rev 6:1–8 and 8:13.

In a similar manner, the visionary of the Apocalypse of Paul travels only to the third heaven, though the texts speaks of additional ones (at least seven, see ch. 29).⁴⁴⁸ The same model is found in b. Hag. 12b: “Till this ⁴⁴⁵ See 2 En. (A) 3–31; T. Levi (β) 3; Apoc. Mos. 35:2; Asc. Isa. 9; Quest. Ezra A 19–21; T. Hez.; Apocalypse of Paul; 3 En. 17:1–3; 18:1–2; Gen. Rab. 6; 19.7; Lev. Rab. 29.11; Num. Rab. 12.6; 13.2; Deut. Rab. 2.32; b. Hag. 12b; b. Shab 156a; Abot R. Nat. (A) 37.110; Cant. Rab. 5.1; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 1; 24; Pesiq. R. 5; 15; 20.4; Tan. B. 3.37–38; Tan. Pequde 6; Naso 15; Pirqe R. El. 19; Midr. Pss. 9.88; 109.471; 148.538; Midr. HaG. 1.14–15 (Exod 7:1); Masekhet Hekh. 4.5 (Bate Midr. 2.42); Reuyot Ezekiel (Bate Midr. 2.129–30); Midr. Konen (Bet HaMidr. 2.53); Seder Rab. deBereshit 5–6; 21–26. (Bate Midr. 1.29); and Sefer Raziel 343. Cf. also Quran 17:44; 65:12; 78:12.

⁴⁴⁶ Cf. the River that bounds the first heaven and “which no one can cross, nor any alien breath” (3 Bar. 2:1).

⁴⁴⁷ See Morray-Jones, “Paradise Revisited.”

⁴⁴⁸ Yarbro Collins, Cosmology, 109.

place [seventh heaven] you may discourse, from here onwards you have no permission to discourse.” The highest “holy” heavens are explicitly distinguished from the low ones (two in the rescension α , and three in the rescension β) in the both versions of T. Levi 3:3 (see below). Similarly to 3 Baruch only on these lower firmaments is it said that they were seen by Levi (2:7–8), while the rest are probably only described by the guiding angel (3:1–8). In the Ascension of Isaiah the five lowest heavens have characteristics which differ from those of the higher two. Only in the lower five does Jesus have to disguise himself during his descent: “And you shall make your likeness like that of all who are in the five heavens” (10:9). There are more differences: “And he [angel] said to me, ‘From the sixth heaven and upwards there are no longer those on the left, nor is there a throne placed in the middle, but [they are directed] by the power of the seventh heaven, where the One who is not named dwells’” (8:7).

2.1.2. Seven heavens and abridged version. Another alternative is to suppose that the initial text of 3 Baruch did include seven heavens, and described a complete ascent to that ultimate seventh heaven. Several points may be adduced in favor of this hypothesis, but they are not conclusive:

- (1) Origen attests to the existence of a “book of the prophet Baruch,” in which there are “very clear indications of the seven worlds or heavens” (septem mundis uel caelis; Princ. 2.3.6). However, we cannot be sure that our text is meant, and moreover, the term “world” never appears in 3 Baruch.
- (2) The vision of “the Glory of God” is repeatedly promised (4:2S; 6:12; 7:2; 11:2; 16:6S), but not fulfilled, if “the Glory of God” is to be considered as referring to a Throne theophany. It could have been contained in the lost conclusion. For counterarguments see comm. to 4:2S.
- (3) The last promise to see the Glory occurs in S at the very end of the vision, along with other unfulfilled promises (16:6S; in previous translation – 16:4S). It has been suggested that this is part of an abridged ending completely omitted in G.⁴⁴⁹ This interpretation derives from a mistake in translation. On this see comm. to 16:6.
- (4) Michael’s movements to and from higher heaven(s) (11:6; 14:1–15:1) demonstrate that there are more heaven(s) beyond Baruch’s ultimate stop before (or according to some interpretations – in) the fifth heaven. This argument would count in favor of the existence of heaven(s) beyond the fifth, only if Baruch is considered to have entered the fifth heaven, which seems to contradict the plain meaning of the text (see above for parallels). Otherwise, Michael's movements attest only to the existence of the fifth heaven beyond Baruch's standpoint before its gate.

⁴⁴⁹ So Bauckham, “Hell,” 372–74.

- (5) The concluding chapters have more Christian interpolations than the earlier sections, which could be taken as an indication of a more thorough reworking (including abridgement).⁴⁵⁰ Moreover, there is a total lack of an eschatological agenda (including issues of national concern, as restoration, etc.), contrary to expectations for the conclusion of a work in this genre. In combination with obvious interpolations of Christian passages in the last chapters, this may speak in favor of abridgement due to a "Christianization" of the text. However, "Christianization" of the text need not be taken as an indication of abridgement; in most other Jewish apocalypses preserved by Christians such materials have successfully survived.
- (6) The only textual argument in favor of the abridgement theory is verse 11:2: "We cannot enter until Michael, the key-holder of the Kingdom of Heaven, comes (οὐ δύναμεθα εἰσελθεῖν ἕως ἔθῃ Μιχαήλ ...). The use of the word ἕως "until" presupposes that the entrance to at least the fifth heaven is expected or at least possible for Baruch."⁴⁵¹

2.2. Alternative Cosmologies

Although the cosmology of seven firmaments is the most widely attested in Jewish tradition, various deviations from this number are also attested. Even though the plural form of Heb שמים, rendered by the plural also in LXX, could give an idea of the plurality of heavens, many ancient sources are not aware of this or ignore it altogether (thus all texts of the Bible, 1 Enoch; 4 Ezra; Testament of Abraham; Apocalypse of Ezra; Vision of Ezra; Revelation). Structures of two heavens (שמים ושמי שמים) were known to b. Hag. 12b (according to R. Yehudah bar Ilai, as opposed to the seven-fold model of Resh Lakish); Deut. Rab. 2.32 (6:4); and Midr. Pss. 114:2. Three heavens are found in T. Levi (α) 2:6–10; 2 Cor 12:2 (if it is a full ascent); and Apoc. Sedr. 2:3–5. Eight heavens, known to Apoc. Abr. 19:6⁴⁵² and b. Hag. 13a (cf. eight celestial spheres of Plato, Rep. 10.614–621), were especially popular with Gnostics (cf. Poim. 26; Hip. Arch. 95.13–96.3; Apocryphon of John 11:4; Irenaeus, Haer. 1.30.4–5; Epiphanius, Haer.

⁴⁵⁰ So James, "Baruch," lxx.

⁴⁵¹ For the detailed survey of the hypothesis see Harlow, Baruch, 36–41.

⁴⁵² See Kulik, Towards, 143; Poirier, "Ouranology."

1.5.2; 40.2.3; 26.10.1–4; Clement of Alexandria, Strom. 4.162.1; Origen, Cels. 6.21–22). There are eight heavens in Reuyot Yehezkel, where the eighth it is called “the Throne of Glory.” These cosmologies, stressing the extra-transcendental character of God even in relation to the celestial realm, are in fact a modification of the schema of the seven heavens plus one supercelestial firmament as an abode of God (although in some sources above there is one more additional realm beyond the eighth). Ten heavens appear in 2 En. (only J) 22; 20:3; Gnostic Apoc. Paul 22–23; cf. Poim. 26 (similar to 2 Enoch in many aspects); Origen, Cels. 6.25 (Ophitic diagram). Seventy two firmaments are mentioned in Gnostic 1 Apoc. James 26. Basilides taught on 365 heavens (Irenaeus, Haer. 1.24.3–7; cf. 11.16.2; Hippolytus, Ref. 7.26.6). The number may rise to as many as 955 (3 En A48:1; Masekhet Hekh. 7 [Bet HaMidr. 2.45]).

2.2.1. Five (or four plus one) heavens. Picard suggested an original five heavens cosmology in 3 Baruch, based upon structural literary analysis.⁴⁵³ Harlow objects: “The proposal that 3 Baruch envisions a five-heaven cosmology falters for the lack of a convincing precedent or analogy, the absence of any rationale for the number five ...”⁴⁵⁴ The only parallel was proposed by Wright: a fragmentary Apocalypse of Zephaniah A (cited in Clement of Alexandria, Strom. 5.11.77), which also does not mention any higher heaven than the fifth (at least as far as we can judge from the preserved fragment).

In fact, additional parallels and analogies for the proposed cosmology of five heavens (or a reference only to five lower heavens) can be adduced, along with a plausible rationale. In Coptic-Ethiopic Ep. Apost. 13⁴⁵⁵ Jesus ascends directly to the fifth heaven and does not proceed any higher.⁴⁵⁶ However, the Apocalypse of Zephaniah and Epistola of the Apostles may both depend upon the sevenfold model similar to Asc. Isa. 8–10, which clearly divides between the five low and two high heavens (cf. above). The model of five plus an additional “highest of all [heaven], where dwells the Great Glory, far above all holiness” may be ascribed to T. Levi (α) 3:1–8 ac-⁴⁵³ Picard, Apocalypsis, 76–77; “Obseravariones,” 94; “Autres,” 28–29. Cf. Wright, Heaven, 340–42.

⁴⁵⁴ Harlow, Baruch, 75; see 44–46; cf. “A weakness in his [Picard’s] theory is that he does not explain why five rather than three or seven heavens are enumerated” (Yarbro Collins, Cosmology, 105).

⁴⁵⁵ Dated by the 2th–3rd cent.; probably used by Commodianus (3rd cent).

⁴⁵⁶ Similarly Abraham was taken directly to the highest seventh heaven (before the supercelestial eighth heaven) (Apoc. Abr. 19:4ff).

cording to one possible interpretation (see below). Notice also that in b. Hag 12b–13a the description of the first five heaven, containing inter alia ministering angels and Michael, is separated by a digression from the highest two.

Whereas the number “seven” does not feature in any numerical symbolism in 3 Baruch, “five” plays an important role in the account of the “Five Trees” in 4:7S. There are five trees of Eden planted by five (chief?) angels (4:7S; four angels of Presence and the fallen angel Sataniel; see comm. to 4:7S: Angelic staff). An hierarchy of aeons called “Five Trees” is mentioned in Pistis Sophia 1.1 and 10; 2.86; 3.95; and passim; cf. also the Untitled Text in the Bruce Codex 4. On this and on Gnostic and Manichaean pentads, referring also to the heavenly realm, see comm. to 4:7S: Five Trees of Eden and ‘Incurable Folly.’ Sometimes the number of angelic classes and/or archangels corresponds to the number of heavens; cf. seven classes and seven heavens in 1 En. 61:10; ten heavens and classes in 2 En. (J) 20:1 (here interchanging with five and nine), 20:3; 22; three and three formula in Midr. Konen 26–27.⁴⁵⁷

Origen refers to a “Book of Baruch” in order to demonstrate that the terms “heaven” and “world” are synonymous (Princ. 2.3.6).⁴⁵⁸ In addition to the universally known scheme of five planets, modifications preserving the number five are known in later periods, from the “five worlds” of Proclus (Theol. 7.1–2; see below) to medieval concepts of hierarchical five worlds or celestial spheres. Maimonides spoke of “five spheres” (kurra) referring to a tradition of “early mathematicians (Moreh Nev. 2.9). Other kinds of hierarchies of five worlds are attested in Sephardi mystical cosmography and, independently, in the works of Hasidei Ashkenaz. See Abraham bar Hiyya, Megillat ha-Megalleh (p. 22–23); Elhanan ben Yakar, Commentary to Sefer Yetsira 183–198 (ascribing the concept to “the tradition from the days of ancient prophets” המסורת מימי הנביאים הקדמונים),⁴⁵⁹ and ⁴⁵⁷ There may also be a connection to the Builders’s account in chs. 2–3. At some stage the fifth heaven became an abode of God’s Presence as a result of the Builders’ transgression according to the Rabbinic story about the gradual departure of the Presence from the first to the seventh heaven in the course of history (Gen. Rab. 19.7; Num. Rab. 13.2; Pesiq. R. 5.7).

⁴⁵⁸ Unde quidam volunt globum lunae vel solis ceterorumque astrorum, quae πλανήτας vocant, per singula mundos nominari; sed et ipsum supereminens quem dicunt ἀπλανή globum, proprie nihilominus mundum appellari volunt < ... > Denique etiam Baruch prophetae librum in assertinis huius testimonium vocant, quod ibi de septem mundis uel caelis euidentius indicator.

⁴⁵⁹ Vida, “Commentary,” 192.

Pseudo-Saadia Commentary on the Sefer Yetsira 94d.⁴⁶⁰ Cf. also the “five worlds” of the Sufis as witnessed by Qashani (FN 3). Gershom Scholem suggested that the independent kabbalistic traditions must have gone back to some “lost pseudepigrapha.”⁴⁶¹

The hierarchy of sacral areas modeled according to the Temple structure may accommodate a scheme of five areas even better than one of seven (see Seven heavens: abrupt ascent in this comm. above), if the celestial world is divided according to the five groups which had their own areas on the earthly Temple mount: (1) gentiles, (2) women, (3) men, (4) priests, and (5) the high priest. In 3 Baruch angelic priests appear only in the fourth heaven (court of priests), and only Michael has access to the fifth heaven (Holy of Holies). The heavenly Temple is found in the fifth heaven (named Shehaqim) according to Reuyot Yehezkel (cf. b. Hag. 12b cited below).⁴⁶²

The proposed system of five heavens could actually reflect a “four plus one” scheme, involving an additional supercelestial realm similar to the eightfold schemes discussed above. The number “four” is attested in celestial divisions of 1 En: “four quarters of heaven” (76:12) and “four hollow places” where the souls dwell (ch. 22). “The heaven [created on the fourth day] was afterwards duly decked in a perfect number, namely four” (Philo, Opif. 15.47). The quadriads may be connected to the concept of the four elements.⁴⁶³ Philo, as well as other Hellenistic scientists, adds the “fifth element,” “a wonderful and divine essence” (i.e., ether or quinta essentia of the Greco-Roman science), of which heaven is made (Quaest. Gen. 3.2). The whole world is divided according to these elements: “The universe also receives a division into five parts. For the world is one and quintuple, and is appropriately divided by celestial, empyreal, aerial, aquatic and terrestrial figures and presiding Gods” (Proclus, Theol. 7.1–2). The same could have ⁴⁶⁰ See Scholem, “To the Study;” Epstein, From the Jewish Antiquities, 231–37.

⁴⁶¹ “... fast sicher angenommen, daß beide Zuegen von einander unabhängig und daher auf eine ältere gemeinzame Quelle zurückgeführt seien” (Scholem, “Reste,” 182), “Ich möchte die Vermutung aussprechen, daß dieses Stück aus demselben Buch stammt wie das Schema der fünf Lichtwelten, und daß wir als diese Quelle eines der für uns verlorenen Pseudepigraphen ... zu betrachten haben” (ibid., 188). Note also certain similarities in the compound of the “worlds” in the above sources and the heavens of 3 Baruch, like the location of Hades in the second, sources of light in the third, angels in the fourth, and God’s Glory in the fifth heaven.

⁴⁶² See Gruenwald, Apocalyptic, 128ff.

⁴⁶³ Cf. also a hierarchy of four metals, from Hesiod’s four ages (Op. 106–201) to the four kingdoms of Dan 2, or the four as a Pythagorean perfect number (Collins, Cosmology, 92).

been applied to heaven alone: God's "Glory passed through the four gates of fire and earthquake and wind and ice, to give the Law to the seed of Jacob" (4 Ezra 3:19). If the subsequent gates are meant, there may be four heavens corresponding to fire, earth, air, and water.⁴⁶⁴ The elements may be connected to the hierarchy of heavens and their angels in Apoc. Abr. 15–19, although in a different order: earth, air, water (as dew?), fire. The lowest heaven Abraham can see from the seventh heaven above is the fifth one with "the elements of earth" that obey "the incorporeal spiritual angels" of the sixth heaven, who in turn "carry out the orders of the fiery angels who were on the eighth firmament." The seventh heaven contains also dew, as well as fire and light (19:4–9). The hierarchy of earth, water, fire, air, and ether may correspond in the same order to the accounts of the Builders (first heaven), Sea Serpent, sea and rivers (second heaven), luminaries (third heaven), soul-birds (fourth heaven), and the inaccessible realm (fifth heaven).⁴⁶⁵ The tetrad of elements in the same order integrated into seven plagues of Rev 16, beginning with earth (16:2), salt and fresh waters (16:3–4); the sun and fire (16:8), and finishing with air (16:17). See the angels responsible for different elements in Rev 14:18 ("the angel in charge of the fire") and 16:6 ("the angel in charge of the waters").⁴⁶⁶

2.2.2. Three (three plus one) heavens and textual history of 3 Baruch. It is possible that the original version of 3 Baruch had a scheme of three or "three plus one" heavens, which was corrupted or intentionally changed during the transmission of the text.

Textual arguments. The suggestion helps to settle several textual problems: (1) In G the last heaven visited by Baruch is numbered as "the third" (10:1G), while the next heaven is designated as "the fifth" (11:1 in both versions). At least one of the numbers must have been emended, ⁴⁶⁴ Although here the four portals for the phenomena of weather may be meant (as in 1 En. 36:1; 76), since different meteorological phenomena and/or luminaries can be found in the same heaven (T. Levi 3:2; 2 En. 3:3–6; 5:1–2; 6:1; 1 En. 76); see Stone, Fourth Ezra, 72.

⁴⁶⁵ Cf. the idea of Apuleius that every element must have a creature proper to it (Deo Socr. 8). Cf. further Philo: "Our name for those which have the power of locomotion is animals. These took to the several main divisions of our universe, land animals to earth, to water those that swim, the winged creatures to air, and to fire the fire-born" (Plant. 3.12).

⁴⁶⁶ On the plagues of Rev 16 and the Hellenistic motif of the four elements, see Collins, Cosmology, 106; eadem, "History."

or alternatively both were inconsistently interpolated to the previously unnumbered descriptions (on the parallels for the phenomenon see below). The following considerations support the hypothesis that the reading of 10:1G is a remnant of an older structure.

- (2) The numbering of 10:1G accords with the hypothesis of the duplication of the Builders account (see introductory comm. to ch. 3), which duplicates also the description of the lower heaven. Without the second account of the Builders, the number of the heavens before the last gate reduces to three.
- (3) This numbering is corroborated by 7:2S, stating that all previous visions including the sun took place in the lower two heavens. In this case, the words “in the third heaven” of 7:2G might be either interpolated (in order to harmonize with the duplication of the account of the Builders) or, less probably, they may imply that Baruch sees the luminaries of the third heaven from his observation point in the second one (as Abraham sees different heavens from the seventh in Apoc. Abr. 19).
- (4) The inconsistent (probably interpolated) numbering of heavens throughout the book contradicts other indications of the intercelestial transfer of the visionary (see the table above): both versions mention only three celestial journeys (2:2; 3:1; 4:2) and three gates (three before the last in S and a total of three in G; 2:2; 3:1; 4:2; 11:2). However, taking into account also the duplication of the account of the Builders (including 3:1), there will be a “secondary” indication to the ascent only for the first (Builders-Demons) and the second (Beasts and luminaries) heavens, while the transfer to the third heaven (Lake of Birds) is indicated only by the “plain” and a number in G, and is not indicated at all in S (see Two heavens below).

To summarize: (1) lectiones difficiliores of 7:2S and 10:1G both witnessing two heavens instead of three until 10:1 are the rudiments of the proto-text; (2) the second account of the Builders (3:1–5a) is a duplication; and (3) the inconsistent numbers – “third heaven” of 7:2G and the “fifth heaven” of 11:1 – are interpolated, probably with other numbers of heavens throughout the book.

In this case, the Builders occupy only one lower heaven, while Lights and Beasts are in the second heaven (in accordance with 7:2S), and the Lake of Birds is in the third (in accordance with 10:1G). Both the Serpent and Lights (especially the moon) situated in the middle heaven are known to divide between higher and lower realms in different sources (for the moon see introductory comm. to ch. 10; for the Serpent see Origen, Cels. 6.25; and Eusebius, Pr. Ev. 1.10.45–53 cited in the introductory comm. to ch. 4).

Precedents for original form. The system of three heavens is attested in Jewish sources: in T. Levi (α) 2:6–10; Midr. Pss. 114:2; and probably in 2 Cor 12:2 and Apoc. Sedr. 2:3–5, where visionaries arrive to the third heaven, and no higher heaven is mentioned.⁴⁶⁷ For the Apocalypse of Sedrach it is probable that the third heaven is the highest, since there the visionary can “speak to God face to face” (2:4). The three stages of the ascent probably also appear in 1 En. 14 (the fiery wall of 14:9 and two concentric houses in 14:10–17). Another trace of the “three plus one” heavens cosmology may occur in 4 Ezra 3:19 (cf. another interpretation above), where the Sinai theophany is described as a gradual descent of God’s Glory through four subsequent gates. It may mean that it comes (a) from the highest fourth heaven, or (b) from the supercelestial abode above the highest third heaven, or (c) from the middle of heaven viz. the fourth heaven (of total seven; cf. the heavenly Temple on the fourth heaven in b. Hag. 12b; b. Zeb. 62a; b. Menah. 110a).⁴⁶⁸

Bousset tried to trace the threefold celestial system back to the Persian model of the three firmaments with the Paradise located above them.⁴⁶⁹ Zoroastrians believed that a just soul crosses three levels (even called “heavens”) in order to reach the highest divine realm.⁴⁷⁰ The scheme may even be older, since although the typical ancient Near Eastern systems normally had only one heaven, Enuma Elish has more than one level above the sky, and the three heavens system (parallel there to three terrestrial surfaces) is also attested among other multicelestial systems in Mesopotamia (see Akkadian texts in KAR 307 and OA 8196). Some interpret the biblical expression שמי השמים “heaven of heavens [in dual. tant.]” as referring to the Babylonian conception of the celestial realm divided to “the upper,” “the middle,” and “the upper heavens” inhabited by Anu (cf. the terminology of T. Levi 2:7, 3:1, and 3:4 below).⁴⁷¹ A Hellenistic Egyptian depiction ⁴⁶⁷ On 2 Corinthians see Young, “The Ascension Motif,” 90.

⁴⁶⁸ Cf. Moses in Rabbinic sources, who ascends through the gates of seven heavens in order to receive the Torah (Pesiq. R. 96b–98a [ed. Friedmann]; Chr. of Jerahmeiel).

⁴⁶⁹ Collins, Cosmology, 22; Bousset, Himmelreise 136–69; 229–73.

⁴⁷⁰ Panaino, “Uranographia.”

⁴⁷¹ Collins, “Seven,” 64; Lambert, “Cosmology,” 58–59; and Livingstone, Mystical, 82–86. Cf. also late Bronze or early Iron Age cultic stands from Taanach that have several registers one above the other. The sequence of four registers of one of them “could be interpreted as a way of using a three-dimensional piece to portray graded sacredness that become more intense as on progresses from < ... > chaos to an ordered cosmos < ... > the topmost register portrays the shrine itself with its inner sanctum, the cella” (Keel, Uehlinger, Gods, 158–159, fig. 184). Among other images the stand of the goddess Nut and the god Geb dated by the Ptolemaic period presents a structure of three hemispheres (two of Nut and one Geb).⁴⁷² Wright considers it a product of “Egypto-Greek symbiosis” of the Hellenistic period (analogous to the Jewish-Hellenistic synthesis of our text).⁴⁷³

The contents of the first four heavens of a total of seven described by Resh Lakish in b. Hag. 12b is very similar to the heavens of 3 Baruch, if it has been correctly interpreted above. In both sources the luminaries are located in the second heaven, “in which sun and moon, stars and constellations are set;” the rain and dew of the third heaven in 3 Baruch correspond to manna in Talmud; and the inaccessible realm beyond the last gate, where Michael brings the angelic offerings corresponds to the fourth heaven, “in which [the heavenly] Jerusalem and the Temple and the altar are built, and Michael, the Great Prince, stands and offers up thereon an offering.”

Precedents for reworking. The tendencies of (1) numbering previously unnumbered heavens, and (2) the standardization of the number of heavens according to the most common sevenfold models may be traced in the textual history of the Testament of Levi and 2 Enoch. Similarly, in the Life of Adam and Eve we have a version that is reticent about the number of heavens (Vita), and another that gives the number seven (Apoc. Mos. 35:2).

There are several ways to calculate the amount and numbering of heavens in T. Levi 2–3. Two rescensions α and β have two different amounts which are widely recognized as three and seven correspondently. However, two verses 3:5 and 7 begin with Gk ἐν τῷ μετ’ αὐτόν, which may be read either as “in the one next to it,” and thus as introducing an additional heaven each, or as “in the same [heaven] with it”, thus referring to the heaven already introduced above.⁴⁷⁴ The picture is complicated even more, since the two lowest heavens in 3:1–2 α may appear again at the end of the next list (we call it the “repetition version” below). Alternatively, the next list may refer to additional heavens above the two lower ones (as in the rescension β ; we refer to this as the “differentiating version”). Thus, these two alternatives create four different ways to count the heavens in the rescension α and two in the rescension β .

has a tree (ashera?) and a winged solar disk. Some find a griffin in its upper tier, together with the sun (Taylor, “Yahwe,” 35).

⁴⁷² See Keel, Symbolism, 34, fig. 30.

⁴⁷³ Wright, Heaven, 103.

⁴⁷⁴ See Wright, Heaven, 261.

Rescension αT. Levi (α) 3:1–8

	Repetit ion versio n “in the same [heave n] with it”	Repetit ion versio n “in the one next to it”	Differ entiati ng versio n “in the same [heave n] with it”	Differ entiati ng versio n “in the one next to it”
(3:1) Hear, therefore, regarding the heavens which have been shown to thee. The lowest is for this cause dark unto thee, in that it beholds all the unrighteous deeds of men. (3:2) And it has fire, snow, and ice made ready for the day of judgment, in the righteous judgment of God; for in it are all the spirits of the retributions for vengeance on men. [cf. 2:7: “And I entered from the first heaven, and I saw there a great sea hanging”]	1	1	1	1
(3:3) And in the second are the hosts of the armies which are ordained for the Day of Judgment, to work vengeance on the spirits of deceit and of Beliar. [cf. 2:8: “And further I saw a second heaven far brighter and more brilliant, for there was a boundless light also therein”]	2	2	2	2
And above them are the holy ones.	Division between the lower and the higher realms (“holy heavens,” kosmos)
(3:4) And in the highest of all dwells the Great Glory, far above all holiness.	3	4	4	6
(3:5) ἐν τοῖς μετ’ αὐτόν there are the arch-angels, who minister and make propitiation to the Lord for all the sins of ignorance of the righteous; (3:6) offering to the Lord a sweet-smelling savor, a reasonable and a bloodless offering.	3	3	4	5
(3:7) And in the one below this [ἐν δὲ τοῖς ὑποκάτω] are the angels who bear answers to the angels of the presence of the Lord.	2	2	3	4
(3:8) ἐν τοῖς μετ’ αὐτόν there are thrones and dominions, in which always they offer praise to God.	2	1	3	3

The schema in the third column (presenting the “three plus one” heavens cosmology) looks the most logical: (1) different (even contradictory) descriptions refer to different heavens, and (2) ἐν τοῖς μετ’ αὐτόν of 3:5 and 8 functionally differs from ἐν δὲ τοῖς ὑποκάτω of 3:7.⁴⁷⁵ The description of specifically higher heavens in descending order is not unique: it is also attested in Apoc. Abr. 19 (describing heavens from the seventh to the fifth); see also the descent of Jesus in Asc. Isa. 10.

The redactor of β must have slightly emended the text above in order to adjust it to the seven heavens scheme.

Rescension β (main discrepancies with α are put in italics)

T. Levi (β) 3:1–8

	“in the same [heaven] with it”	“in the one next to it”
(3:1) Hear, therefore, regarding the seven heavens. The lowest is for this cause dark, in that it is near all the unrighteous deeds of men.	1	1
(3:2) The second has fire, snow, and ice made ready for the day of judgment, in the righteous judgment of God; for in it are all the spirits of the retributions for vengeance on the wicked . [cf. 2:7: “And I entered from the first heaven into the second, and I saw there a great sea hanging between the one and the other”]	2	2
(3:3) In the third are the hosts of the armies which are ordained for the day of judgment, to work vengeance on the spirits of deceit and of Beliar. [cf. 2:8: “And I saw a third heaven far brighter than those two, for there was in it a height without bounds.”]	3	3
And [the heavens] up to the fourth above these are holy.	Division between the lower and the higher realms (“holy heavens,” kosmos)
(3:4) For in the highest of all dwells the Great Glory, far above all holiness.	7	7
(3:5) ἐν τοῖς μετ’ αὐτόν there are the angels of the pres- ence of the Lord , who minister and make propitiation to the Lord for all the sins of ignorance of the righteous; (3:6) They offer to the Lord a reasonable sweet-smelling savor and a bloodless offering.	7	6

⁴⁷⁵ Cf. Wright (Heaven, 461) suggesting the latter argument in order to reject the scheme of the second column.

(3:7) And in the heaven below this are the angels who bear answers to the angels of the presence of the Lord.	6	5
(3:8) ἐν τῷ μετ' αὐτόν there are thrones and dominions, in which always they offer praise to God.	6	4

The numbering of heavens in verses 3:1 and the end of 3:3 indicate that β, by declaring the seven heavens scheme (1) did not hold to the “repetition reading” (proposed by modern scholars for α) and (2) most probably understood ἐν τῷ μετ' αὐτόν as “in the one next to it” (otherwise, it would lack the description of the fourth and the fifth heavens). Both assumptions must give six heavens also in α (cf. the fourth column of the previous table) and they enabled the emendation of α in accordance with the popular sevenfold scheme by just two changes: inserting numbering inside coherent descriptions and splitting the description of the first heaven into two. Rescension α was considered original by Charles, Bietenhard, and Kee, among others,⁴⁷⁶ while De Jonge suggested an opposite development: from seven to three, corrupted under the influence of 2 Cor 12).⁴⁷⁷ Despite De Jonge, it would be more difficult to imagine why and how β could be emended to α (except the possible influence of 2 Cor 12).

The Testament of Levi, in contrast to 3 Baruch, has been preserved in both earlier and later versions. It provides us with a model of a redactional process similar to that proposed for 3 Baruch. There is the same tendency (of multiplication of heavens) and the same method (of inserting numbering). In both cases, editors have left their fingerprints, although in 3 Baruch the redactors' technique is more transparent, because it is less consistent (for the obvious reason that the emendation involved not a short chapter, but an entire book).

A similar relationship is observed between the two rescensions of 2 Enoch: the longer rescension (J) has ten heavens, and a shorter one (A) has seven. Also there seem to have been some intentional correction in this text, from ten heavens, which is rather rare (although attested also in Gnostic Apoc. Paul 22–23; cf. Poim. 26; Origen, Cels. 6.25 (Ophitic diagram); Num. Rab. 14) to a more common seven. An inconsistent interpolation of an ordinal number of a heaven most probably took place in the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra: at the beginning, “the first heaven” is mentioned, although there is no further evidence of the multiple heavens system.

⁴⁷⁶ Charles, Testaments, 27; Bietenhard, Himmliche, 3–4; Kee, “Testaments,” 1.788.

⁴⁷⁷ Jonge, Studies, 45–62.

Rationale of three heavens. Both the Testament of Levi and 2 Enoch share the conception of the division of heavens to two groups, shared probably with the Hellenistic cosmologies distinguishing between the irregular ouranos and higher *kosmos*⁴⁷⁸ and in accordance with the concept shared by Jews and Greeks that “the impure is not meet and right to be in contact with the pure” (Plato, Phaed. 67b).

In 2 Enoch, the Paradise of the third heaven divides between “corruptible” and “incorruptible” (8:5), while the seven “stars” have their spherical routes in the middle zone of water dividing between the upper light and the lower darkness (2 En. 27:3; see “the light is being separated from the darkness” and the middle position of the luminaries in 3 Bar. 6:13). The highest heavens are explicitly distinguished from the low ones in both versions of T. Levi 3:3 (two heavens in the rescension α , and three in the rescension β). The first heaven is “dark,” because “it beholds all the unrighteous deeds of men” (3:1). In 3 Baruch the sun is similarly defiled, “because it beholds the lawlessness and unrighteousness of men” in 3 Bar. 8:5. In the Testament of Levi both lower heavens are inhabited by the demonic “spirits of the retributions for vengeance,” “spirits of deceit and of Beliar” (3:2–3). Similarly, in 3 Baruch the lower two heavens are inhabited by chimeric Builders and “dark and impure” Hades (3 Bar. 2–3). In the Testament of Levi above the lower heavens “there are the holy ones” (3:3).⁴⁷⁹ In 3 Baruch the superlunary heaven has “pure” birds and probably purificatory waters (see comm. to chs. 9 and 10). Note that in all three compositions the lower group consists of two heavens.

Three heavens and Temple areas. As well as other divisions discussed above, the threefold division could well be modeled according to either (a) the four elements or (b) the Temple areas:

- (1) In the former case, (1) earth corresponds to earth, while the rest “three plus one” elements correspond to the “three plus one” celestial structure: (2) air: the firmament of the demonic Builders – demons, “spiritual ones” – abiding in the lower heaven known as “air” (Gk ἀήρ “air” means also “lower visible sky;” in LXX it renders exclusively Heb שָׁמַיִם “cloud,” “sky;” cf. אֵרֶץ in this meaning on Apoc. Abr. 15:5); (3) fire:

⁴⁷⁸ Andersen, “2 Enoch,” 116, n. 81.

⁴⁷⁹ “The holy ones,” Gk ἁγιοὶ may also be not קְדוּשִׁים as angels, but “holy heavens” in distinct of lower two heavens; cf. Wis 9:10: “O send her [Wisdom] out of thy holy heavens, and from the throne of thy glory, that being present she may labor with me, that I may know what is pleasing unto thee.” “High, holy, and eternal heaven” appears in 1 En. 15:3.

firmament of Lights and fiery Hades; (4) water: the Lake of Birds, the source of the celestial rain and dew; (5) aether – the inaccessible firmament beyond the last gate.

- (2) In the latter case, the firmaments correspond to (1) the Women's Court, (2) the Court [of Israel] (עֲזֻרָה), and (3) the Court of Priests or (1) the Court, (2) the Sanctuary, and (3) the Holy of Holies.⁴⁸⁰ The latter partition would also be consonant with the “two plus one” model described below.

2.2.3. Two (two plus one) heavens. If to accept the hypothesis that (1) the second Builders account was interpolated (see introductory comm. to ch. 3) and that (2) the numbering of heavens was added to previously unnumbered descriptions (see above), then the Slavonic rescension, which in many cases reflects an earlier stage of the text development than the extant Greek one, witnesses only two heavens before the last gate and the supercelestial realm beyond it. The table below summarizes all the indications of inter-celestial transfers throughout the book, ignoring ch. 3 and the numbering of the heavens:

	Ascend ⁴⁸¹		Gate		Journey		Plain
	G	S	G	S	G	S	G	S
2:2–3	*1	*1	+	+	+	+	+	+
4:2	*2	*2	–	+	+	+	+	+
10:1	(*3)	–	–	–	–	–	(+)	–
11:1	*4	*3	+	+	–	–	–	–

Even for G, the transfer to the “third” heaven is signaled only by the “plain” (which could substitute for “mountain” of S). For S there are consistently only two lower heavens: two gates, two journeys, and two plains. Moreover, 7:2S explicitly speaks only of two heavens: “what I have shown you is in the first and second heavens.”

⁴⁸⁰ Cf. different divisions of the Temple area juxtaposed to the celestial world proposed by Morray-Jones, “Paradise,” 204; cf. Maier, Kultus, 127; Milik, Black, Enoch, 40–41 and 231–36. Cf. also a threefold division of Paradise in Abot R. Nat. B 43 and Maase deR. Yehoshua b. Levi (Gaster, “Sefer”).

⁴⁸¹ In these columns the ascents are numbered in the order of appearance of any indication of the ascent.

This scheme may go back to a biblical conception of שמי השמים, which may refer to two or three heavens understood as “heaven of heaven” or “heaven of heavens” (Deut 10:14; 1 Kgs 8:27; Neh 9:6; Ps 148:4; 2 Chr 2:5; 6:18).⁴⁸² Thus it was interpreted by R. Yehudah bar Ilai: “There are two heavens, as it is written, ‘Heaven, heaven of heaven, earth and everything in it, all belong to God’ [Deut 10:14]” (b. Hag. 12b; cf. Deut. Rab. 2.32 [6:4]). Midr. Pss. 114:2 knows of both variations: the concept of two heavens based on Ps 68:34(33): “who rides upon the heaven of ancient heaven,” and the alternative view that there are three heavens, referring to “the heavens [understood as dual] and the heaven of heavens [above them]” of 1 Kgs 8:27. The same conception may be ascribed also to T. Levi (α) if interpreted according to the scheme of the first column (see the table above). The stages of Enoch’s tour in 1 En. 14:8–18 can also be interpreted according to this model: heaven, “house,” and the second “house” with the Throne corresponding to the supercelestial realm. In the Ethiopic Apoc. Pet. 17 Jesus ascends to the second heaven with Moses and Elijah (however, there are may be more heavens). The scheme most similar to this understanding of 3 Baruch is brought in the Nag Hammadi Apocryphon of James, where disciples follow Jesus through the first two heavens and are not allowed to the third.⁴⁸³

A cosmology of “two plus one” heavens may serve an additional raison d’être of 3 Baruch’s within the Christian tradition where it would have provide Christian readers with the detailed descriptions of the first two heavens, thereby complementing 2 Corinthians and Apocalypse of Paul, where the first two heavens are entirely ignored.

* * *

⁴⁸² See Collins, Cosmology, 23–24.

⁴⁸³ Cf. Josephus who discusses the symbolism of the Tent divided into three areas according to the structure of the whole universe (but just heaven), among which the third is inaccessible to humans: “For by dividing the Tent, which is thirty cubits long, into three parts, and designating two of them for all the priests as a place accessible and in common, he signifies the earth and the sea, for these also are accessible to all. But he earmarked the third part for God alone because of the fact that the heaven also is inaccessible to men” (Ant. 3.181).

Summarizing table of alternative ouranological schemes implied in 3 Baruch

3 Baruch	Heavens			Main Parallels			Elements		Temple
	4+1	3+1	2+1	T. Levi 3 (a)		b. Hag. 12b	Earth	Air	Gentiles	Women's Court	Court
	1	1	1	Dark heaven	Dark heaven	Veil
Demons	2	1	1	Great sea	Spirits of retribution	Fighting angels	Fire	Water	Court of Israel	Court of Israel	Sanctuary
[Demons] ⁴⁸⁴				Light	Spirits of retribution
Beasts Lights	3	2	2		Praising angels	Manna	Air	Fire	Court of Priests	Court of Priests	Holy of Holies	Holy of Holies
Celestial Waters Praising Birds Angelic Priests	4	3			Praising angels
Celestial Temple Michael	5	4	3		Great Glory	Celestial Temple Michael	Ether	Ether	Holy of Holies	Holy of Holies	Holy of Holies	Holy of Holies

⁴⁸⁴ Probably interpolated.

11:2S. And he showed me large gates, and names of men were written [on them]. Only in S. Family β explains: “And the angel told me: ‘The names of those, who are to enter here, are written here.’” So in the Apocalypse of Paul, where the names of the righteous are written on the gates as well:

And I followed the angel and he took me up unto the third heaven and set me before the door of a gate; and I looked on it and saw, and the gate was of gold, and there were two pillars of gold full of golden letters. And the angel turned again to me and said, “Blessed are you, if you enter in these gates, for it is not permitted to enter to anyone except those who have kept goodness and pureness of their bodies in all things.” And I asked the angel and said, “Lord, tell me why are these letters set upon these tables?” The angel answered and told me, “These are the names of the righteous who dwell on earth and that serve God with their whole heart.” (Apoc. Paul 19)

The last formula alludes to “Who will ascend to the mountain of the Lord? ... He that has clean hands and a pure heart” (Ps 24:3). The entrance to the Temple in Jerusalem also had inscriptions (in Greek and Latin), although referring to those who are not supposed to enter beyond the soreg (i.e., gentiles; see Philo, Leg. 31.212; Josephus, Bell. 5.193–94., cf. 6.124ff.; Ant. 15.417; m. Mid. 2.3).⁴⁸⁵ Similar warnings are attested also for pagan temples.⁴⁸⁶ The names of those who are destined to be “delivered” are also written (although in a celestial book): “At that time your people will be delivered, everyone whose name is written in the book” (Dan 12:2).

The names here must be either of visionaries of a “higher rank” than Baruch, or rather of the righteous deserving eternal life in celestial resting places.⁴⁸⁷ Thus, Baruch eventually stays outside, either since he is a “minor visionary” (see comm. to T:1) or because he makes his ascent while he is alive. The latter explanation has two arguments in its favor:

- (1) It may be well integrated into the hypothesis of the developed conception of the afterlife contained in 3 Baruch, according to which the Birds can be understood as souls ascending to their resting places in a higher abode (see ch. 10), and the Oil Reward can be interpreted as the gift of eternal life (see ch. 12).
- (2) The only additional detail that we can learn about the forbidden realm guarded by Michael is its name: it must be “Kingdom” (S) or “Kingdom of Heaven” (G), of which Michael is a “key-holder” (Μιχαήλ ὁ ⁴⁸⁵ Two such tablets were discovered and published by Clermont-Ganneau (“Une stèle”) and Iliffe (“The θάνατος Inscription”). A similar proclamation was posted by Antiochus III on the gates of Jerusalem (Josephus, Ant. 12.145).

⁴⁸⁶ See Bickerman “Warning.”

⁴⁸⁷ Cf. “he [God] raised him up men called by name” (CD 2.9); “elect of Israel called by the name” (קריאי השם; ibid. 6.1).

κλειδοῦχος τῆς βασιλείας τῶν οὐρανῶν). The term “Kingdom of Heaven” is known from Ps 103:19; Dan 4:34; Matt 3:2, and elsewhere in different meanings including the abode of the righteous: “Many shall come from the east and the west and sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the Kingdom of Heaven” (Matt 8:11).

11:2. Michael. Michael was mentioned above in 4:7S. There he was commanded “to gather 200,003 angels to plant the Garden,” and planted the olive himself (cf. comm. to 15:1S). In many and diverse sources Michael is a Prince of Israel and sometimes also “of all the righteous” (which is sometime a synonym for Israel) or of “the best part of mankind” or of “believers” (in Christian sources), sometimes combining this function with being the chief angel (see, e.g., Dan 7:1; 10:13, 21; 12:1; 1 En. 20:5; 2 En. 33:10; 4 Bar. 9:5; As. Mos. 10:2; 1QM 17.6–8; Herm. Sim. 3.3.; b. Hag. 12b; Yoma 77a; Tg. Cant. 8:9; cf. a Michael-like figure in T. Levi 5:6). However, in 3 Baruch these roles may be only implied by the action of bringing the Oil Reward for the righteous. Explicitly in 3 Baruch Michael is only a “commander-in-chief,” a gate-keeper, and probably the celestial high priest.

1. Michael the commander-in-chief. Below Michael is called ἀρχιστράτηγος (11:4; 11:6, 7, 8; 13:3). Only in G (in 13:3S the angels call him “our chief” – НАЧАЛЬНИЧЕ НАШЕ). Usually Michael is called “archangel” (1 En. 71:3; 2 En. (A) 22:6; 33:10; Apoc. Mos. Intr.; 3:2 and passim; T. Abr. (B) 2:2; 4 Bar. 9:5; Apoc. Ezra 1:3; Apoc. Sedr. 14:1; Jude 9; PGM VII.257), but in 3 Baruch he is called this only in 11:8G and 12:4G, while this title is assigned also to the guiding angel (10:1G). Since, despite the title “commander-in-chief” no military function is assigned to Michael in this work (nor in 2 Enoch and in many other parallels below), Rohland supposed the title to be a result of later Christian redaction of 3 Baruch on the background of the Byzantine cult of Michael as a distinctively military figure.⁴⁸⁸ However, this title and military function are both well attested in many other Jewish and early Christian works. Michael is called by the Gk ἀρχιστράτηγος or CS архистратигъ also in 2 En. (J) 22:6; 33:10; T. Abr. (A) passim; T. Abr. (B) 14:7; Asc. Mos. 10:2. Similar titles ἄρχων “prince” and ὁ ἄρχων ὁ μέγας “great prince” appear in Dan 10:13; 21 and in Dan 12:1. Cf. the Coptic Fall of Satan; Apoc. Paul 43; Ep. Apost. 13; Gos. Bart. 4:28. Michael overcomes the Kittim in War Scroll (1QM), and in Rev 12:7–9 he is a military commander “fighting with his angels” against the Dragon “who leads the whole world astray.” The Rabbinic title מִיכָאֵל שַׁר צְבָא הַגָּדוֹל “Michael the Great/Chief Commander” (and not “Prince of the Great Host” as sometimes translated) is identical to the Greek term, whatever their mutual dependence may have been (e.g. t. Hul. 2.18; cf. b. Abod. Zar. 41b; Exod. Rab. 32.9).

⁴⁸⁸ Rohland, Michael, 55–57; cf. Böttrich, Weltweisheit, 11–116; Harlow, “Baruch,” 154, n. 143.

In the context of the astronomic interests of 3 Baruch, this epithet could also have some astronomic meaning: “commander-in-chief” שַׁר (הַ)צְבָא, ἀρχιστράτηγος in Josh 5:14; Dan 8:11) stands at the head of the starry host. However, 3 Baruch mentions stars only very briefly in 9:8G, and has no traces of the well known motif of their identification with angels.

2. Michael the Gatekeeper. “The key-holder of the Kingdom [S: + “of Heaven” G]” (ὁ κλειδοῦχος τῆς βασιλείας τῶν οὐρανῶν) Michael is “the archangel of righteousness, opens the gates for the righteous” in 4 Bar. 9:5. An unnamed angel is a key-holder or a gate-guardian in T. Levi 5:1 (like Michael, he “intercedes for the nation of Israel” according to T. Levi 5:6). Peter inherits this function from Michael (cf. the wording in Matt 16:19, where Peter is given “the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven” – κλεῖδας τῆς βασιλείας τῶν οὐρανῶν; cf. also a gatekeeper in John 10:3). Michael in his turn is a successor of ancient Near Eastern heavenly beings also guarding celestial gates; cf. Adapa in the similar context: “And he [Adapa] went up to heaven. When he came to heaven, when he approached the Gate of Anu, Dimmuḫi and Gizzida were standing in the Gate of Anu.”⁴⁸⁹ Celestial gatekeepers appear in Asc. Isa. 10:23–31, where even Jesus has to give them a password in order to descend (cf. gatekeepers of the Gnostic Apoc. Paul 2–23; 1 Apoc. James 33:7–15). Similarly, in Hekhalot literature the extent of ascension is often conditioned by the test of a visionary’s worthiness before every gate (cf., e.g., Hekh. Zut., ms New York 23a; Hekh. Rabbati 17–23) and thus it may be interrupted at any stage, sometimes by the “angels of destruction” guarding the gateways (see, e.g., Hekh. Rabbati 15.8–16.2).⁴⁹⁰ As in 3 Baruch, in the Ascension of Isaiah (9:1–5) and in the Ozhayah Fragment (2b/8–10)⁴⁹¹ the gatekeepers prevent the visionary from entering or are mentioned only before the last (there seventh) gate or palace.

Heavenly doorkeepers are ascribed to the beliefs of Ophites by Origen (Cels. 6.31; 7.40). Scholem suggested that the motif of gatekeepers in ⁴⁸⁹ Dally, Myths. Cf. also beasts guarding king palace gates in Mesopotamia (Wright, Heaven, 44, 83).

⁴⁹⁰ Schäfer, Synopse, #213–15.

⁴⁹¹ Ibid., #2a/23–2b/24.

Hekhalot literature is “a Jewish variation” of a Gnostic and Hermetic tradition.⁴⁹² However, the motif is more widely known.

The two roles of Michael in 3 Baruch, (1) the gatekeeper standing on the boarder of the “the higher heaven” and (2) the priest interceding for men (see below), are united in “the archangel and most ancient Logos” of Philo:

To His Word, His chief messenger, highest in age and honour, the Father of all has given the special prerogative, to stand on the border and separate the creature from the Creator. This same Word both pleads with the immortal as suppliant for afflicted mortality and acts as ambassador of the ruler to the subject. He glories in this prerogative and proudly describes it in these words ‘and I stood between the Lord and you’ [Deut 5:5], that is neither uncreated as God, nor created as you, but midway between the two extremes, a surety to both sides; to the parent, pledging the creature that it should never altogether rebel against the rein and choose disorder rather than order; to the child, warranting his hopes that the merciful God will never forget His own work. (Her. 42.205–206; cf. Somm. 1.25; Fug. 19)

3. Michael the High Priest. If the previous two functions appear in 3 Baruch only in Michael’s titles, his role as a priest is described in detail through five chapters: Michael transfers the offerings brought by the angels representing men to the higher heaven and from there brings their reward in return (chs. 12–16). Eschatological purification, assigned to Michael in 1 En. 10:20–22, may be a priestly function too. Michael is explicitly a heavenly priest in b. Hag. 12b: “Zebul [the fourth heaven] is that in which [the heavenly] Jerusalem and the Temple and the Altar are built, and Michael, the Great Prince, stands and offers up thereon an offering;” the same image of Michael offering on the altar is found in b. Zeb. 62a and b. Men. 110a. Even the establishment of the tithe was ascribed to Michael (Tg. Ps.-Jon. Gen 32:25).

On Michael as an angel of prayer, on angels as priests in the heavenly Temple, and for worship and prayer to Michael, see introductory comm. to ch. 12.⁴⁹³

11:4. To receive the prayers of men (δέξεται τὰς δεήσεις τῶν ἀνθρώπων / да приметъ молитвы чловѣка). The practice of regular prayer is witnessed as early as in Dan 6:11; Ps 55:18. The commandment of prayer or praise was derived from Deut 10:20–21 (cf. Philo, Spec. Leg. 1.57.311–312). Philo defines prayer as one of the most important “virtues” (ἀρεταί; Plant. 40.126). Rabbis ascribed the establishing of fixed prayers to “the Great Assembly” (b. Ber. 33a), “early sages” (Sifre Deut 343; b. Meg. 18a), and ⁴⁹² Major, 49.

⁴⁹³ For general bibliography on Michael see esp. Hannah, Michael.

“early hasidim” (Midr. Pss. 17). It is an act of piety prescribed by Jesus (Matt 6:5–13; 7:7–1; Luke 11:1–3).

Below we find angels bringing men’s prayers through the ceremony which has much in common with different sacrificial rites (see comm. to ch. 12). Prayers were likened to sacrifices already in Hos 14:3 (“we will render the offerings of our lips for bullocks;” cf. LXX, where “bullocks” were substituted by καρπὸν “fruit”) and Ps 141:2 (“let my prayer be set forth before you as incense”); cf. Ps 50:14; 69:31–32; 107:21–22; 141:2; Prov 15:8; Pr. Azar. 15–18; and 11QPs^a 18.10–11. Prayers were considered as a substitute or analogy of sacrificial offerings both by Jews (CD 11.20–21; 1QS 9.3–5) and by early Christians (see, e.g., Tertullian, Scap. 2).

For the context of Baruch’s revelation given on the ruins of the recently destroyed Temple,⁴⁹⁴ it is relevant to mention the conception of prayers taking place of sacrifices specifically after the destruction of Jerusalem (Sifre Deut 41; y. Ber. 5.5d; b. Ber. 26b; b. Meg. 31b; b. Taan. 27b; Lev. Rab. 7.3; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 6). On the one hand, the view of the prayer offering of the subsequent chapters may be the ultimate purpose of the vision, its promised “greater mystery” and also an answer to why Baruch should not “care much for the salvation of Jerusalem” (1:3), when the celestial Temple takes place of the terrestrial one, and prayers (as in S; or more general – “virtues” and “good deeds” as in G) take place of the sacrifice.⁴⁹⁵ On the other hand, the acceptance of prayers may promise a restoration of the Temple service, like in the plea for the restoration of the Temple in Dan 9:17 and many Rabbinic prayers, following the logic of the saying, “When prayer comes, the Temple service will come” (b. Meg. 18a).

Altogether, verse 11:4 is the only instance where G and S agree on what angels bring to Michael. Whereas G varies between “prayers of men” (11:4), “virtues of men and good works” (11:9), “virtues of the righteous” (12:5), “virtues of men” (14:2), “good deeds” (15:2), S sticks consistently to “prayers of men” in all these verses (11:4; 11:9; 14:2; 15:2; the verse 12:5 lacks in S). The importance of prayer is mentioned again also only in S (15:3S and 16:4S; see below). The discrepancy between G and S might go back to an actual identification of the two concepts, “prayers” and “virtues”: Gk ἄρεται, in fact, may mean also “praises” of God rendering in ⁴⁹⁴ Which according to many Rabbinic sources is placed opposite to the celestial sanctuary (Mek. Shira 10; y. Ber. 4.8a; b. Taan. 16a; Gen. Rab. 55.7; Cant. Rab. 3.10 and 4.4; Pesiq. R. 40; Tan. B. 1.112; Tan. Pequde 1–2; Midr. HaG. 1.454; Midr. Pss. 30.233; Midr. Sam. 1.45).

⁴⁹⁵ Thus Wright: “ascent whose purpose is to convince “Baruch” that God does attend to human prayer” (“Baruch, his evolution,” 279).

LXX Heb תהילה (Isa 42:8 et al.), the meaning of which is not very far from “prayer.” Prayer is one of the most important “virtues” for Philo (he uses the same word as in 3 Baruch – ἀρεταί; Plant. 40.126).

The tendency of S may be integrated into the widely known motif of angelic intercession for human prayers (chs. 11–14; for parallels see comm. to ch. 12). The gate opening in order to receive the prayers is also well known (11:5; T. Adam 1:10; cf. γ. Ber. 4.7c; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 24.2; b. Yoma 87b). However, the very prevalence of the motif and especially the similarity of the accounts of the Prayer Offering in 3 Bar. 12–15 and Rev 5 and 8 could have influenced the Slavic editor and led him to harmonize the text in this direction, emending “virtues” to “prayers” (see comm. to 12:1). Bauckham proposed an explanation of why prayer would be so central an issue between God and men in 3 Baruch. In light of the Deuteronomicist paraphrases in Prologue and ch. 16 referring to the fate of Israel (see comm. ibid.), he regards the final scene to be a prayer for mercy in the context of the Destruction: “as God has punished his people in response to their evil, so he will have mercy in response to their prayers.”⁴⁹⁶

The offering of celestial prayer is connected to the topic of attendance at public prayer presented in three passages of dubious authenticity, one in G and two in S. Neither passage appears in both versions, but all three passages share a common topic and terminology, which must indicate that this topic was somehow represented also in the common proto-text of G and S:

13:4G	15:3S	16:4S
For we do not see them ever entering into assembly [or “church”], either into spiritual fathers or into any good thing ⁴⁹⁷	Be not idle, but prostrate yourself in prayer in the holy Temple [or “church” or “assembly”]	They do not fear God and they do not come to the Temple [or “church” or “assembly”] and to the place of prayers ⁴⁹⁸
οὐ γὰρ εἶδομεν αὐτοὺς εἰσελθεῖν ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ ποτέ οὐδὲ εἰς πνευματικῶς πατέρας οὐδὲ εἰς ἀγαθὸν ἔν	НЕ ЛѢНИТЕ СѦ НЖ МОЛИТВОЖ ВЪ СВАТЫѦ ЦРКВИ ПРИПА- ДАЮЩЕ	НЕ БОЯТЪ СѦ БѦ И НЕ ПРИХОДАТЪ БЪ ЦРКВѦ И НА МОЛИТВѦ МѢСТО

⁴⁹⁶ “Apocalypses,” 185.

⁴⁹⁷ S has instead: “For their wives flee to the Temple, and from there they bring them out to jealousy and to fornication and to envy, and they strive to many other things, which you, O Glorious One, know” ѦКО ВЪ ЦРКВѦ ПРИЕѦГАЮТЪ ЖЕНЫ НХЪ ОТЪТЖДОУ ИЗВОДАТЪ Ѧ НА РЕВНОСТИ И НА БЛЖДЫ И НА ЗАВИСТИ(И) И НА ИНА МНОГА ТЪЩАТЪ СѦ ѦЖЕ ТЫ ВЕСИ ПРѢСЛАВНЕ. What is meant remains enigmatic.

⁴⁹⁸ 13:4G also mentions either “assemblies” or “churches,” but adjacent to “priests,” which make the latter meaning more plausible there.

In the Apocalypse of Paul, the only fault of the sinners mentioned specifically is that they are “not making so much as one pure prayer out of their whole heart all the time of their life” (10). The account most similar to the three passages of 3 Baruch (especially to 16:4S) appears in Apoc. Sedr. 14:10. In both writings angels are saddened by men (13:1S) because of their neglect of communal prayer (13:4G); “assemblies” and “churches” are mentioned as probably different phenomena (cf. “Temple/church” and “the place of prayers” in 16:4S), and the need for “prostrating” is mentioned (15:3S):

They [baptized but wicked] cause sorrow to my angels, and of certainty in my assemblies and in my services they do not heed my angels and they do not stand in my holy churches; [and when they do] they stand and do not prostrate themselves in fear and trembling, but they pronounce long words which neither I nor my angels accept.

All three passages were usually considered as Christian interpolations, due to the use of two terms – Gk ἐκκλησία / CS цркви (in all passages) and πνευματικοὶ πατέρες (of 13:4G). If the latter combination is overtly Christian,⁴⁹⁹ the former term is less obvious. It was understood as “church,” although the primarily meaning of Gk ἐκκλησία as a regular equivalent of Heb קהל “assembly,” “community” (cf., e.g., 1 Kgs 8:65; Joel 2:16; Ps 40:10) is also plausible here. Cf. especially εἰσελθεῖν ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ “enter an assembly” in 13:4G and a common Biblical and Rabbinic idiom לבוא לבקהל, lit. “enter an assembly,” i.e., “to become a part of the community,” literally rendered in LXX: οὐκ εἰσελεύσεται εἰς ἐκκλησίαν κυρίου (Deut 23 pass.; Lam 1:10). The combination “holy community” (Aram קהל קדישא) is well known to Jewish sources as well (b. Ber. 9b and passim). The idea of ⁴⁹⁹ Gk πνευματικοὶ πατέρες “spiritual fathers” is the late Christian term referring to monks, church leaders, especially bishops, or godparents. However, the title “father” was attested among Jews (e.g., Matt 23:9) and the substantivized adj. “spiritual” with Gnostics. Cf. a Valentinian term πνευματικοὶ referring to chosen “spiritual” Gnostics opposed to those called “psychic” and “material” (Irenaeus, Exc. Theod. 56.2; Haer. 1.4–7; see Pearson, Pneumaticos-Psychikos, xii, 147.). Cf. also Mythraic initiation grade of patres sacrorum (MMM, 2.535). Michael Schneider suggests to understand πνευματικοὶ πατέρες as denoting guarding angels themselves, basing on the regular rendering of angels as “spiritual [beings]” and on the readings מלאך אבות משמרו of 4Q369 2.1 as “angel of intercession is guarding” and אוחזי אבות of 1QS 2.9 as “intercessors” (see Wernberg-Møller, Manual, 53–54). He states that angelic guardians must be especially interested in the performance of the earthly liturgy (“entering into assembly” of the same verse), which is necessary to enable celestial liturgy and intercession according to many Jewish and Christian traditions (e.g., Sifre Deut. 306).

a permanent place for a prayer – public and even individual – must be old (some base it on Isa 26:20). See “Jacob had a secluded place where he entered to offer his prayers before the Lord in the night and in the day” (T. Jacob 1:9). The duty to attend synagogue and pray there is well attested in Rabbinic texts:

R. Huna said, “Anyone who does not enter the synagogue in this world will nor enter the synagogue in the afterlife” ... R. Yohanan said, “One who prays at home is as if surrounded with the iron wall” ... R. Abba and R. Hiyya said in the name of R. Yohanan, “A person must pray in a place designated for prayer [מקום שהוא מיוחד לתפילה] ... R. Pinehas said in the name of R. Yohanan Hoshaya, “One who prays in the synagogue it is as if he offers a pure offering [מנחה טהורה].” (y. Ber. 5.5d)

R. Helbo said in the name of R. Huna, “Everyone who has a fixed place for his prayer [כל הקובע מקום לתפילה] has the God of Abraham as his helper. And when he dies, people will say of him, ‘Alas, the pious man! Alas, the humble man, one of the disciples of our father Abraham!’ And how do we know that our father Abraham had a fixed place [for his prayer]? For it is written, ‘And Abraham got up early in the morning to the place where he had stood’ [Gen 19:27], and “standing” means nothing else but prayer, as said: ‘Then stood up Phineas and prayed’ [Ps 106:30]. (b. Ber. 6b; cf. 7b–8a)

Note also the vision of the torments of the sinners in Gedulat Moshe, some of which were hanged by their feet, because among other transgressions “they did not walk to the synagogue to offer prayer to their Creator” and others because they “despised the sages.”⁵⁰⁰ For possible opposition to public prayer or at least reservation about it see Matt 6:5–8.

With the Slavonic counterpart of Gk ἐκκλησία – CS црква – the range of possibilities is even wider. It may mean not only “church” or “assembly, community” but also “temple” rendering not only Gk ἐκκλησία, but also ναός or ἱερόν. The combination of “temple/church” and “place of prayer” (16:4S) as different phenomena may also be regarded not in Christian but in Jewish context, as referring to the Temple and synagogue, i.e., sacrificial service and communal prayer.⁵⁰¹ In this case, 13:4G and 15:3S would refer to attendance at the Temple, while 16:4S would refer to attendance at both the Temple and places of communal prayer. Temple sacrificial service and prayer (including prayer in the Temple) were the two main modes of worship before the Destruction, even for many diaspora Jews; thus, Philo “journeyed to the Temple of my native land to offer prayers and sacrifices” (Prov. 2.64 apud Eusebius, Pr. Ev. 8.14.386–399). On Sabbath a man shall not do any ⁵⁰⁰ Ginzberg, Legends, 2.311.

⁵⁰¹ Cf., e.g., Lam. Rab. Intr. 12: “R. Pinehas said in the name of R. Hoshaya, ‘There were four hundred and eighty synagogues in Jerusalem, apart from the Temple.’” work “except to praise the Lord in the assembly of the elders and to glorify the Mighty One in the council of the older men” (Josephus, Ant. 11.8). The call to “prostrate yourself in prayer in the holy Temple” in 15:3S can also be connected to Jewish practices. The Temple (or possibly another Jewish place of worship) is called the “House of Prostration” (Heb בֵּית הַשְׁתַּחוּת) in CD 11.23 and 4QD^f 3.1.15. Prostration was among central elements of the Temple liturgy (Sir 50:16–17; m. Tamid. 7.3; cf. Deut 26:10; 1 Chr 16:29; Ps 5:8; Isa 27:13; Jer 26:2; Ezek 26:3; John 4:19–24; etc.). The main obstacle for such an interpretation lay in the fact that according to the Prologue the Temple does not exist when Baruch receives the revelation.

It is difficult to say whether these passages, or some of them, could reflect the rudiments of the original Jewish text. Whereas 13:4G with its Christian terminology and 15:3S with its reference to the contemporary “temple” look more like Christian interpolations or reworkings, 16:4S might have referred to the past and be mentioned among the reasons for the destruction of the Temple.

11:7G. Interpreter of the revelations (ὁ τὰς ἀποκαλύψεις διερμηνεύων). The same title is applied to Gabriel in Dan 9:23 and to Ramiel in 2 Bar. 55:3.

11:8. Flat bowl / receptacle (φιάλη / чранильница). This CS form corresponds usually to Gk θήκη, φιλακή (also semantically as “preservation vessel”); ms T has коупель (Gk κολυμβήθρα). The ministering angels hold “flat bowls” (also Gk φιάλας) with prayers in Rev 5:8, while “another angel” there offers the incense from the “censer” (Gk λιβανωτός; Rev 8:3; see cited in the introductory comm. to ch. 12). The former must functionally correspond to the “baskets” of 12:1G, and the latter to the “flat bowl” here. In the angelic liturgy of Apoc. Mos. 33:4 the angels hold as θυμιατήρια so also φιάλας:

And I saw golden censers and three flat bowls, and behold all the angels with censers and frankincense came in haste to the incense offering and blew upon it, and the smoke of the incense veiled the firmament. And the angels fell down to God, crying aloud and saying, “Jael, Holy One, have pardon, for he is your image, and the work of your holy hands!” (Apoc. Mos. 33:4–5)

Whatever vessel is meant in 3 Baruch, it must have liturgic prototypes and be connected to the priestly role of Michael; cf., e.g., Gk φιάλη rendering Heb מִזְרֵק “sprinkling pan” (Exod 27:3; 38:3); see also the receptacles of the anointing oil, Gk κέρας, Heb קֶרֶן (1 Sam 16:13; 1 Kgs 1:39), Gk φακός, Heb פֶּךָ (1 Sam 10:1; 2 Kgs 9:1).

The dimensions of the bowl – its “depth was like [the distance] from heaven to earth, and its width like [the distance] from north to south,” are comparable to the dimensions of heaven as given in 2:4–5 (see comm. ibid.). The angel Sandalphon, who is bringing men’s prayers to God, is also of enormous size.⁵⁰² David Halperin notes on the bowl of 3 Baruch:

I am a little surprised that there are so many righteous people on earth that their merits would fill a container of such size, and I suspect that the underlying idea is that of a channel which conveys the merits from earth to heaven. (This would explain the Greek text of the end of 11:9, which ought to be translated: “which are escorted through it [Gk δι’ αὐτοῦ] before the heavenly God.”) III Baruch’s vessel would then originally have been a sort of inanimate Sandalphon.⁵⁰³

According to one possible interpretation the bowl may be intended for the entrance of angels themselves (see next comm.). See another gigantic visionary “bowl,” the “bowl of Hades,” where the dead are supposed to enter (Apoc. Ezra 6:26).⁵⁰⁴

11:9. This is where the virtues of the righteous ente and the good works that they do / This is where the prayers of men enter (Τοῦτο ἔστιν ἐνθα προσέρχονται αἱ ἀρεταὶ τῶν δικαίων καὶ ὅσα ἐργάζονται ἀγαθὰ / се есть и дѣже вѣх одаѣтъ молитвы чловека). It is difficult to decide which reading, “virtues” or “prayers,” is original. The same discrepancy occurs below: “prayers of men” in S corresponds to “virtues of men” (14:2) and “good deeds” (15:2) of G; for “virtues of the righteous” in 12:5 there is no equivalent in S (see comm. to 11:4 above).

In T. Abr. 4:6, Michael presents the virtues of Abraham to God: “I am unable to proclaim the notice of death to that just man. For I have not seen a man like him on the earth – merciful and hospitable, just, truthful, God-fearing, abstaining from every evil deed.”⁵⁰⁵

The convention of listing four basic virtues is found in both pagan and Jewish sources of the Hellenistic and Roman periods (the number is preserved even when the content varies). The cardinal “four virtues” of Plato ⁵⁰² “He is taller than his companions by the distance of a five-hundred-year journey. He stands behind the Chariot and weaves wreaths for his Creator” (b. Hag. 13b). These wreaths are weaved of prayers according to Midr. Konen 26 (see citation in comm. to “flowers” in 12:1).

⁵⁰³ Halperin, Faces, 134.

⁵⁰⁴ Cf. also Phoenician phialae found throughout the Mediterranean and containing sometimes the depictions of cosmos, including ouraborus, griffin, winged sun disks, chariots (Markoe, Phoenician; Marinatos, “Cosmic,” 390–94).

⁵⁰⁵ Allison, T. Abr., 140.

(Phaed. 69c; Rep. 4.428; Leg. 631c) – wisdom (Gk φρόνησις or σοφία), courage (ἀνδρεία), moderation (σωφροσύνη), and justice (δικαιοσύνη) – became a universally known element of Greek ethics (especially of Stoics), influencing Jewish thought as well. Cf. four virtues of righteousness: “moderation and prudence, justice and courage” (Wis 8:7) and almost identical lists in 2 Macc 1:18ff; 4 Macc 5:22; Philo, Leg. All. 1.19.71–72 (cf. Prob. 10; Cher. 2.12; Quaest. Gen. 1.12; et al.). There are different lists of four: prayer, fasting, charity, and righteousness (Tob 12:8–10); “Let his Presence dwell only with the strong, the rich, the wise, and the humble” (b. Ned. 38a and par.; according to m. Ab. 4.1, strength corresponds to moderation, and richness to modesty, two other virtues are wisdom and respect). There are also lists of three, but these triads tend to refer to fundamental values rather than to virtues: “[the study of] the Law, [divine] service, and good deeds” (m. Ab. 1.2); “truth, justice, and peace” (ibid. 1.18); “faith, hope, and charity” (1 Cor 13:13); “prayer, charity, and repentance” (y. Sanh. 10.2). There are also expanded lists, e.g., “chastity and purity with patience and prayer, with fasting in humility of heart” (T. Jos. 10:1–2); cf. Sir 2.1–4.10.⁵⁰⁶

Whereas types of vice are defined thrice in the text of 3 Baruch (4:17; 8:15; 13:4), the content of positive moral demands is not mentioned at all. At the same time, the very term and the symbolic representation of virtues may be more informative:

- (1) Botanic representation. It is not unique for 3 Baruch: virtues have a shape of flowers according to 12:5 (see comm. ibid.), and they are allegorized by the Trees of Paradise in Philo’s works (Plant. 8–9.32–37; Leg. All. 1.31.97; cf. Agr. 4.17; Quaest. Gen. 1.6; see comm. to 4:7S: Paradise of Virtues).
- (2) Number. At the same time, in accordance with the Hellenistic set of the cardinal virtues, the Trees of Paradise are four and are planted by four archangels (excluding Sammael and his tree) in 4:7S.

⁵⁰⁶ The Amora R. Simlai compiled lists reducing the commandments to basic virtues; he already does not mention the list of the four among other figures of his catalogue (or probably he has not found a biblical proof-text for this number): “613 commandments were given to Moses. King David came and reduced them to eleven [Ps 15]. The prophet Isaiah further reduced them to six [Isa 33]. Micah reduced them to three: ‘He has shown you, O man, what is good ... to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God’ [6:8]. Isaiah again reduced them to two [Isa 56]. The prophet Amos placed them all upon one principle: ‘Seek me and live’ [Amos 5:4]; or, as the prophet Habakkuk said, ‘The just shall live by his faith’” (b. Mak. 23b–24a).

- (3) Term. The very term “Virtues” is known to be an angelic title. Michael is one of two Virtues who help Eve in childbirth: et ecce venerunt XII angeli et duo Virtutes stantes a dextris et a sinistris Evae. Et Michahel erat stans a dextris ... – “And behold, twelve angels came and two Virtues,⁵⁰⁷ standing to the right and to the left of Eve. Michael was standing to her right ...” (Vita 21:1–2).

Lat Virtutes here were supposed to be an equivalent of “the Honoured” (“the Honored, the Holy Ones, that minister to the Most High” – מכובדים קדשים משרתי עליון; b. Ber. 60b), but more probably this usage must be connected to personified Ἀρετή of pagan Classic and Hellenistic sources⁵⁰⁸ and to Roman cult of “Virtues” (see, e.g., Cicero, Leg. 2.11.28; Pliny, Nat. Hist. 11.14).⁵⁰⁹ The same image of Virtues standing on each side of a woman in childbirth appears in Philo’s account of the chaste woman’s multiple virtues, in which “all are standing on each side of her, were her bodyguards, while she was in the middle of them” (Sac. 5.27). In another work Philo identifies Virtues as angelic beings: “the divine army is the body of virtues, the champions of the souls that love God” (Philo, Agr. 17). Virtues are mentioned among angelic classes by Irenaeus: “Angels, Archangels, Powers, Virtues” or “Principalities, Powers, Angels, Archangels, Dominations, Virtues” (Haer. 2.30); by Tertullian, discussing the views of Ophites: “These inferior Virtues and angels, therefore, had made man” (Haer. 2); by Origen: “the holy angels, and the holy Powers and the blessed Thrones, and the glorious Virtues and the magnificent Dominions” (Princ. 1.5.3). See Clement of Alexandria:

These primitive and first-created Virtues are unchangeable as to substance, and along with subordinate angels and archangels, whose names they share, effect divine operations. Thus also Moses names the Virtue of the angel Michael, by an angel near to himself and of lowest grade. The like also we find in the holy prophets; but to Moses an angel appeared near and at hand. (On 1 John 2.1 [Cassiodorus 3]).

The term is also applied to angels in some of the Acta Martyrum.⁵¹⁰

Is it possible that this word usage in 3 Baruch is a rudiment of the textual layer that refers to angels as Virtues? 3 Baruch uses the term in expressions such as “Virtues of the righteous” (11:9 and 12:5) and “Virtues of men” (14:2). In the same context of the angelic presentation of deeds of humanity in different versions of Apocalypse of Paul, angels are also called “angels of ⁵⁰⁷ Armenian and Georgian version have “Powers” instead.

⁵⁰⁸ See LSJ, 238, s.v. iv.

⁵⁰⁹ See Wissowa, “Vermehrung”; Mattingly, “Virtues.”

⁵¹⁰ See Ruinart, Acta, 510, l. 4; 540, l. 23; Mattingly, “Virtues,” 116.

men,”⁵¹¹ as well as “angels of the righteous;”⁵¹² cf., e.g., “all the angels of men and women go to meet God and present all the work which every man has done, whether good or evil” (Latin Apoc. Paul 7); “the angels of the righteous come, rejoicing and singing psalms, they meet for the worship of the Lord.” In addition, see especially two passages of Syriac Apoc. Paul which run parallel to 3 Bar. 11:9 and 12:2–5:

3 Bar. 11:9

This is where the Virtues of the righteous enter, and the good works that they do, which are brought through it before the heavenly God.”

3 Bar. 12:2–5

And I asked the angel, “Lord, who are these,

{and what are the things brought by them?” And he told me, “These are angels who are over the principalities.” And the archangel having taken the baskets put them into the flat bowl.}

And the angel told me, “These {flowers} are the Virtues of the righteous.”

Syriac Apoc. Paul

And those angels of the righteous enter, and say to him, “O Lord, we have come now from the holy men, who have come out from the world, for your holy name.”

Syriac Apoc. Paul

And I asked the angel who was with me, “Who are these, my Lord?”

And he said, “These are the angels of righteousness.”

Both 11:9 and 14:2 may fit well with an understanding of “virtues” as angels. In the former text Baruch is shown the place where angelic virtues enter a higher realm (as Michael actually does in 14:1),⁵¹³ and in 14:2 Michael presents the angelic virtues of men to God. In this case, the definition that refers to flowers in 12:5 must have initially referred to the angels (see the reconstruction above; with 12:3–4 as probably later development), or alternatively the whole verse (absent in s) belongs to a later textual layer.

⁵¹¹ Concerning guardian angels see introductory comm. to ch. 12.

⁵¹² Cf. צדיק מלאכי שלום מלוין לו (Tan. Vaishlah 8).

⁵¹³ This may also explain the extraordinary dimensions of the bowl in or through which the Virtues enter (see comm. to “flat bowl” in 11:8).

Flower Offering: Righteous (12:1–5)

GREEK

¹ And while I was talking with them, behold, angels came carrying little baskets full of flowers.

² And they gave them to Michael.

And I asked the angel, “Lord, who are these,

and what are the things brought by them?”

³ And he told me, “These are the angels [who are] over the principalities.”

⁴ And the archangel having taken the baskets cast them into the flat bowl.

⁵ And the angel told me, “These flowers are the virtues of the righteous.”

SLAVONIC

¹ And, while I was talking, and behold, angels came, carrying offerings full of flowers.

² And I said, “Lord, who are these?”

³ And he told me, “These are the angels who are in the power of men.

⁴ And Michael took the offerings from them and put them in the receptacle.

NOTES

12:1S. Thus ms T, which agrees with the word order of G. Other mss place τε “behold” (Gk ἰδοὺ) in the beginning of the verse.

12:1S Offerings full of flowers (дары пачыны цвѣтина). Literally “gifts full of flowers” (cf. дары also in 15:3S). CS дары usually reproduces Gk δῶρα, either “[sacrificial] gifts, offerings” (like Biblical Gk δῶρον rendering Heb תְּנוּנִים)⁵¹⁴ or less probably “palms.”⁵¹⁵ In the latter case the Greek Vorlage of S would have “angels carrying full palms of flowers.” Ms T has instead: “incenses (CS кадила) of the righteous, and they were full of flowers” (in 12:4 and 5 “gifts” are substituted by кадила “incenses” and also “lamps,” “candles”) most probably under the influence of Rev 5:8 identifying prayers with angelic incense offerings (cf. comm. to 11:4 and 12:1).

12:3G. The angels [who are] over the principalities (ἄγγελοι ἐπὶ τῶν ἐξουσιῶν). Ryssel suggests to emend ἐξουσιῶν to δικαίων, and thus reads: “angels [who are] over the righteous.” See comm. ad loc.

⁵¹⁴ See HR, 359; cf. LPG 395. In this meaning it is used twice in Apoc. Abr. (13:2 and 29:18).

⁵¹⁵ LSJ, 465.

COMMENTARY

Angelic Intercession

The angels were widely known as those who interceded for humans and bring their prayers to God. The very idea could be connected to the common Hebrew root for both concepts, of intercession and of prayer (פלל). The intentional word play on both meanings of the root is found in the theological statement of Eli: “If a man sins against man, then God intercedes for him [פלל], but if a man sins against God, who will pray for him [יחפלל-לו]?” (1 Sam 2:25). Eli’s rhetorical question is challenged by the idea of angelic intercession: angels are the ones who intercede for humans and convey their prayers;⁵¹⁶ they also respond to prayers or help the praying.⁵¹⁷

The function of intermediaries between God and men was known to Plato: daemons (δαίμονες) are “interpreting and transporting human things to the gods and divine things to men; entreaties and sacrifices from below, and ordinances and requitals from above” (Symp. 202e). There are “middle creatures” which are “holding the third and middle space, the source of interpretation ... They interpret all men and all things both to one another and to the most exalted gods, because the middle creatures move both to earth and to the whole heaven” (Epin. 984d–985b). Philo has merged Greek and Jewish concepts (which could have had universal mythological roots at the beginning): “Beings whom other philosophers called daemons, Moses usually called angels” (Philo, Somn. 1.22); “they both convey the biddings of the Father to his children and report the children’s need to their Father” (Abr. 23.115).

Specifically, Michael, playing the main role in the intercessory process as described in 3 Baruch, is called “intercessor” in 2 En. 33:10 and carries prayers of men in T. Abr. 9:2–3. In the Apocalypse of Paul he says: “It is I who stand in the presence of God every hour ... For one day or one night I do not cease from praying continually for the human race, and I pray for those who are still on earth” (43). He was known as an angel of prayer to ⁵¹⁶ See esp. Zech 1:12; Job 5:1; 9:33; 16:19–21; 19:25–27; 33:23; 1 En. 6–11; 15:2; 39:5; 40:6; 47:2; 68:3–4; 89:76; 90:14, 17; 99:3; 104:1; Tob 12:12, 15; 2 En. 19:5; 33:10; T. Abr. 9:2–3; T. Levi 3:5–7; 5:6; T. Dan 6:2; Apoc. Mos. 33; Philo, Somn. 1.22; Gig.; Matt 18:10 (cf. “Spirit” in analogous role in John 16; Rom 8); Apoc. Paul 43; and Exod. Rab. 21.4.

⁵¹⁷ So, e.g., Gen 21:15–19; Tob 3:16–17; 2 Bar. 63:5–11; 2 Macc 3:15–35; 10:25–30; 11:6–11; 3 Macc 6:17–23; Pr. Azar. 26, 27; Matt 26:53; Luke 1:13, 19, 20; Acts 12:1–11; Gen. Rab. 85; b. Ber. 10b; Pes. 118a; Shab. 152b; Nid. 16b; Sanh. 94a, 95b; Ar. 15a; B. Bat. 25a; Ned. 32a; Exod. Rab. 21; and Midr. Ps. 88.4.

Origen: “to Michael is assigned the duty of attending to the prayers and supplications of mortals” (Princ. 1.8.1). See Gabriel who similarly is said to pray for humanity in 1 En. 40:6, 9. In Tobit this is Raphael’s function: “I am Raphael, one of the seven holy angels, which present the prayers of the saints, and which go in and out before the Glory of God” (Tob 12:15).

In an extreme form, the role of angels as intercessors led some people to pray to angels or even to worship them. These practices were condemned by the Rabbis and by early Christian authorities. See the condemnation of angelolatry in Col 2:18;⁵¹⁸ its rejection in Rev 19:10; 22:8–10;⁵¹⁹ and note the Jewish angelolatry mentioned in Kerygma Petrou. “They [Jews] adore angels and archangels, the months and the moon” (Clement of Alexandria, Strom. 6.5.41); “they adore sky and the angels” (Origen, Cels. 1.26, 5.6), cf. also Tertullian, Praescr. Haer. 23.⁵²⁰ Pseudo-Philo condemns the sacrifice to angels (Bib. Ant. 34:2), but also mentions the “offering for your Watchers” of the New Year service in a neutral context (Bib. Ant. 13:6). Jeremiah prays to Michael in the Ethiopic 5 Bar. 9:5. The Rabbis postulated: “If one slaughters an animal in the name of the sun, moon, stars, planets, and Michael the Great commander-in-chief and the tiny worm, it is regarded like flesh sacrificed to dead” (השוחט לשום חמה לשום לבנה לשם ככבים לשם מזלות לשם) (t. Hul. 2.18; cf. b. Abod. Zar. 41b and y. Ber. 9.13a cited in introductory comm. to ch. 11 and Mek. Yitro 10). The worship to Metatron is mentioned in b. Sanh. 38b.⁵²¹

All this evidence indicates that these practices were known.⁵²² Also our Baruch calls his guiding angel “Lord” (5:1; 6:4, 9; 11:2, 3, 8; 12:2), the same title he used before that while communicating with God (T:1; 1:2); in contrast to the visionary of Asc. Isa. 8:5, he is not prevented by the angel from addressing him thus (in the Ascension of Isaiah an angel says: “I am not your Lord, but your fellow-servant”). Although such an address to angels is found in other sources, from Gen 18:3 to Apoc. Paul 11, here, in combination with other factors, it may indicate that 3 Baruch either shared some of the angelolatric beliefs or at least developed from a context in which they were relevant. This supposition is supported by the fact that our visionary is deprived of direct communication with God (cf. esp. “be silent”

⁵¹⁸ If not angelic liturgy is meant here; cf. below.

⁵¹⁹ Cf. Stuckenbruck, “Refusal,” 979–89.

⁵²⁰ Cf. Simon, “Remarques.”

⁵²¹ More evidence for early Jewish prayers to angels is assembled by Meir Bar-Ilan (“Prayers”).

⁵²² Cf. however Hurtado who argues against this suggestion (One God, 28–34).

of 1:3S), and that his heavenly experience focuses on angelic beings, especially animated anthropomorphic luminaries, and reaches its highest point in the encounter with Michael (note that the luminaries are attested as main objects of angelolatry worship; cf. comm. to ch. 6 and 11:4).

Angelic Service

In many cases, angelic intercession is institutionalized as priestly service in the heavenly Temple:

The highest, and in the truest sense the holy temple of God is, as we must believe, the whole universe, having for its sanctuary the most sacred part of all existence, even heaven, for its votive ornaments the stars, for its priests the angels who are servitors to his powers ... (Philo, Spec. Leg. 1.12.66)

The Songs of the Sabbath Sacrifice say that “the holiest of the holy ones” “have become for him priests,” “ministers of the Presence in the Sanctuary of his Glory [כבודו משרתי פנים בדביר]” (4Q400.1). Similar to priests, angels could wear linen or white clothing (e.g., T. Levi 8). Cf. also T. Levi 3:5–6; Apoc. Mos. 33:4–5 (cited above).

Also our Baruch, at the ultimate point of his ascent, observes how the communication between men and God is made possible through angelic mediation, applied to prayer and to celestial judgment and reward. The mediation is placed in a liturgical setting and presented as an angelic offering service (chs. 12–15). The service consists of the following rites:

1. Flowers Offering of men’s prayers, virtues and good deeds, divided into two ceremonies:
 - Angels transmit the offerings to Michael (chs. 12–13).
 - Michael passes the offerings to the “higher heaven” behind the closed gate. This ceremony is not visible (ch. 14).
2. Oil Reward distributed by Michael on his return (ch. 15).

Until the last point, the angels function as priests and Michael as the high priest, according to well-attested models of terrestrial liturgies. However, the celestial service, unlike most earthly services, is interactive: it involves an offering that is immediately followed by a reward. Whereas the procedure of angelic service in 3 Baruch is clearly described,⁵²³ neither the timing of the ceremony in relation to human life nor the exact content of the offering are made clear. It might refer to either prayer or judgment (especially according to G, which consistently reads “virtues” instead of “prayers”). It might be timed daily or annually; and if judgment is meant, it may be situated either in an afterlife, or in an eschatological setting. The closest parallels ascribe similar descriptions to prayer (Rev 5:8; 8:3–5; T. Adam 1:9) and to an appointed time of every day (Apoc. Paul 7; T. Adam 1:9). Cf. the Prayer Offerings as described in the Book of Revelation:

⁵²³ For its similarity to Jewish and pagan cultic practices, see comm. to 12:1G.

the four living creatures and the twenty-four elders fell down before the Lamb, each one holding flat bowls full of incense, which are the prayers of the holy ones (Rev 5:8) ... And another angel who had a golden censer came and stood at the altar. To him were given many incenses in order to offer them with the prayers of all the holy ones upon the golden altar before the Throne. And the smoke of the incense, with the prayers of the holy ones, went up before God out of the angel's hand. Then the angel took the censer and filled it with the fire of the altar, and threw it to the earth; and there followed peals of thunder and sounds and flashes of lightning and an earthquake. (Rev 8:3–5)⁵²⁴

The book of Revelation may contain the description of the Prayer Offering as part of an angelic liturgy, a procedure that belongs to the same model as in 3 Baruch. The two-staged procedure described in 3 Bar. 12–15 coherently and in detail as an offering of flowers, appears as an incense offering in Rev 5:8 and 8:3–5.⁵²⁵ Both Revelation and 3 Baruch refer first to a group of angels holding either baskets of flowers (3 Bar. 12:1) or bowls with incense (Rev 5:8), which in both texts are defined as prayers, and then either Michael (3 Bar. 14) or “another” angel (Rev 8:3) offers the gifts in his vessel (flat bowl in 3 Bar. 11:8 and censer in Rev 8:5). In 3 Bar. 15, Michael, having filled emptied baskets with celestial oil, returns them to the angels; in Revelation, “another angel” fills the emptied censor with the fire of the altar and casts it onto earth (Rev 8:5). The obvious similarity between the texts could have led to a Slavic translator or editor acquainted with the text of Revelation changing “virtues” to “prayers” in the whole account. Cf. ms T for 12:1S, which inserts “incenses” instead of “flowers,” probably under the same influence (see Notes ibid.).

The closest parallel to the angelic service described in 3 Baruch, though more detailed, is found in Apocalypse of Paul. It is not clear whether the similarity is a result of mutual dependence or a source held in common with 3 Baruch. This text attributes the ceremony to the fixed daily time:⁵²⁶

⁵²⁴ Cf. also the angelic offering of wreaths in Rev 4:10 (see comm. to “flowers” in 12:1). For prayers as offerings see comm. to 11:4.

⁵²⁵ On real liturgical practices as possible prototypes for the service of 3 Bar., see comm. to 12:1 below

⁵²⁶ Cf. Apoc. Zeph. 11, where the souls of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and other righteous beseech God on behalf of the tormented sinners once a day.

At the hour of morning, which is the twelfth hour of the night, do all the angels of men and women go to meet God and present all the work which every man hath wrought, whether good or evil. And every day and night do the angels present unto God the account of all the deeds of mankind ... At the hour appointed, therefore, all the angels, every one rejoicing, come before God together to meet him and worship him at the hour that is set. (Apoc. Paul 7)

The further account in Apoc. Paul 7–10 speaks of two groups of angels: one group, “rejoicing,” represents those “who have renounced the world for your holy name’s sake, wandering as strangers and in the caves of the rocks, and weeping every hour that they dwell on the earth and hungering and thirsting for your name; with their loins girt, holding in their hands the incense of their heart, and praying and blessing at every hour, suffering anguish and subduing themselves, weeping and lamenting more than all that dwell on the earth.” The second group of “other angels” is said to be weeping and represents those “who have been called upon your name, and the snares of the world have made them wretched, devising many excuses at all times, and not making so much as one pure prayer out of their whole heart all the time of their life.” As in 3 Bar. 13:3–5 the latter group asks in vain to release them from the sinners, and both groups receive their due rewards.

In the Testament of Adam angels bring prayers (as in Revelation) on a daily basis (as in the Apocalypse of Paul):

And at the ninth hour the angels perform their service of homage to God, and the prayer of the children of men comes into the presence of God the Most High. And at the tenth hour the gates of heaven are opened, and God hears the prayer of the children of the believers, and the petition which they ask from God is granted to them. (T. Adam 1:9)

This text also features a gate opening for prayers and further similarities with 3 Baruch (see comm. to 6:13; 11:5).⁵²⁷

Among the many other depictions of angelic intercessory service, the two-staged model of angelic representation (involving the transmission of human deeds from a group of angels to one delegate) is found also in Apoc. Zeph. 3–4 (Akhmimic fragment), although there it is not placed in a liturgical, but a juridical setting:⁵²⁸

⁵²⁷ There are also later parallels on angelic ceremonies corresponding to human prayers; see, e.g., Hekh. Rabbati 8–12.

⁵²⁸ As in, e.g., Mal 3:16; Jub. 5:13; m. Abot 2.1; 3.6; b. Rosh HaSh. 16b–17a; etc.

I said, "O angel, who are these?" He said, "These are the angels of the Lord Almighty. They write down all the good deeds of the righteous upon their scrolls as they watch at the gate of heaven." And I take them from their hands and bring them up before the Lord Almighty. He writes their name in the Book of the Living. Also the angels of the accuser who is on earth, they also write down all the sins of men upon their scrolls. They also sit at the gate of heaven. They tell the accuser and he writes them upon his scroll so that he might accuse them when they come out of the world (and go) down there."

Here the angelic service has more to do with judgment than with prayer, and it is hardly daily.

If the service in Revelation corresponds to the daily mourning incense offering in the Temple of Jerusalem (as known from Exod 30:7; Philo, Spec. Leg. 1.171, 276; m. Tam. 3.2; 4–7),⁵²⁹ the service of 3 Baruch may resemble either the first fruits offerings (see comm. to 12:1G) or the Day of Atonement service (see comm. to ch. 14), both of which were annual events. In chs. 14–15 we will examine other possible interpretations of the service which may connect it to a lifetime or eschatological judgment.

Guardian Angels and Angels of Nations

In 3 Baruch the angels are not only celestial priests and intercessors for human prayers and deeds, they are also "given" to men (13:1), have to "remain with" (or even "are attached to" – Gk προσμένειν with dat.) them (13:3), and "are not able to get away from them" without permission (13:2). Angels assigned to men (i.e., guardian angels) are well known in Jewish sources,⁵³⁰ and the idea is widespread in different cultures. For instance, analogous functions were attributed to Babylonian "personal gods" (in distinction to the celestial ones).⁵³¹ Greek δαίμων and Roman genius are likewise analogous phenomena. It is not always possible to discern between general mediatory and personal protective function of these beings (see citations from Plato and Philo above).

There are further similarities between 3 Baruch and Plato concerning retribution: daemons as mediators "show extraordinary kindness to any one of us who is good and true and hate him who is utterly evil" (Epin. 985a). Compare this with 3 Bar. 12:7; 13:1–4 and Apoc. Paul 8 which present angelic compassion or antipathy to the men they are assigned to.⁵³² In other traditions, these accompanying angels may be good or wicked, and influence human beings accordingly. “Angels of Peace” and “angels of Satan” accompany, respectively, the pious and the wicked (t. Abod. Zar. 1.17–18 in dependence on Ps 91:11: “He will appoint his angels charge over you”). See the similar views of Stoics: “evil spirits wander up and down, which the gods use as public executioners of unholy and wicked men” (Plutarch, Quest. Rom. 51; cf. Def. Or. 17). There is no such division in 3 Baruch; the different statuses or capabilities to influence are not mentioned in relation to mediatory angels, who are simply ascribed to different kinds of men and thus have different functions as messengers, not only of offering but also of reward and punishment (16:2–4). Even though they are “darkened” (13:1), it is because of grief or defilement by human sins (see comm. ibid.). This compares with the views of Philo who, despite dividing angels to beneficial and punitive, states that both kinds “have no participation in wickedness” (Conf. 35.177), being “sacred and inviolate by reason of that glorious and blameless ministry.” Cf. the Rabbinic idea that “evil inclination [יצר הרע] has no power over angels” (Gen. Rab. 48.11). Philo clearly distinguishes between these “punitive” angels, on the one hand, and “evil” ones, fallen angels, and “Satans,” on the other hand, who are “slipping into the name of angel” (Gig. 4.16–17), not unlike the way 3 Baruch distinguishes between the angels assigned to the sinners, on the one hand, and Sammael/Sataniel and probably demonic Builders of 3 Baruch, on the other.

⁵²⁹ Bauckham, Climax, 80.

⁵³⁰ E.g., Ps 34:7; 91:11; Jub. 6:5–6; 35:17; Bib. Ant. 11:12; 15:5; 59:4; T. Benj. 6:1; Vita 8:3 (7:4); Matt 18:10; Acts 12:15; Tg. Jer. Gen 33:10; t. Abod. Zar. 1.17–18; b. Ber. 60b; Hag. 16a; Sanh. 94a; and Tan. Mishpatim 19. Cf. 1 En. 100:5 where the angelic guardians of the souls are mentioned.

⁵³¹ Jastrow, Religion, 253–93, 328–406.

We do not know whether the interceding angels of 3 Baruch are understood as personal guardian angels or represent entire groups of men. In either case, we also do not know whether they represent only Israel or the whole of humanity. Their title in G, “angels over the principalities” (ἄγγελοι ἐπὶ τῶν ἐξουσιῶν), might imply that they are rulers of specific regions or nations, while their designation in S as “angels in the power of men” (АНГЕЛИ ИЖЕ ВЪ ОБЛАСТИ ЧЛОВѢЧНИИ) may have an opposite meaning (see comm. and note to 12:3). Plato also assigns to a certain class of daemons the task of being guardians of cities and districts (Leg. 4.713cff.). Angels of nations, including the angel of Israel (see comm. to 11:2: Michael), are known to many Jewish sources (see e.g. LXX Deut 32:8 (supported by 4QDeut); Jub. 15:31; Gen. Rab. 77.3; etc.). According to certain views, however, Israel had no angelic representation at all: “He appointed a Ruler [angel] for every nation, but Israel is the Lords’ own portion” (Sir 17:17);

⁵³² Wolfson, Philo, 1.369ff.

“but over Israel he made no angel or spirit rule because he alone is their ruler” (Jub. 15:32); “beloved are Israel, since Scripture does not require them to have a messenger” (חביבין ישראל שלא הצריכון הכחוב לשליח; b. Yoma 52a); cf. Pirque R. El. 24.⁵³³ In distinction to these conceptions, 3 Baruch (and parallels above) focuses on angelic mediation, and (in the case if it serves the whole mankind; cf. comm. to ch. 16) seems to make no distinction between Israel and the nations in this regard: all are equally mediated by angels. Thus Exodus Rabba: “What is the difference between us and between the idolaters? We have prophets and they have prophets; we have a guardian angel, and they have a guardian angel” (32.2–3).

* * *

12:1G. Carrying baskets (φέροντες κανίσκια). The angels function here as kanephoroi of Greek cults (κανηφόροι; Aristophanes, Lys. 646; Ach. 242; Aelius Aristides, Or. 18,2; IG II² 334; *Syll.*² 388.32, 711e, 728e). Sculptured images of girls carrying offering baskets on their heads could be seen also in Rome (Cicero, Ver. 2.4.5[4.3]; Pliny, Nat. Hist. 26.225 [36.5]). The term used in 3 Baruch for “basket,” Gk κανίσκια “little baskets of reed or cane,” diminutive of Gk κάνεον, often designates vessels used in sacred practices: sacrifices (Euripides, El. 1142; Menander, Sam. 7), votive offerings (CIG 2855.2). Like in our text, κάνεον is attested to be carried in processions (e.g., Menander, Epitr.).⁵³⁴

Below, these baskets are said to be filled with oil (15:2G). Woven baskets can hardly contain oil. Either Gk κανίσκιον or κάνεον designates another kind of vessel appropriate for oil, or more probably the “baskets” here are not wreathed but rather cultic basket-shape vessels made of metals. Such vessels are attested in both pagan (cf. epigraphic sources IG 11(2).161B34 and passim; 7.2424; CIG 2855.21)⁵³⁵ and Jewish practices (m. Bik. 3.8; see below).

The ceremony also resembles the bikkurim (first fruits) offerings in the Temple of Jerusalem as described in the Mishna (m. Bik.; cf. Exod 23:19; 34:26; Num 18:13; Neh 10:36; Deut 26:1–11; Philo, Spec. Leg. 2.29; Josephus, Ant. 4.8.22 [241]): the bikkurim were brought in baskets (Heb טַבָּא, Gk κάρταλλος, as prescribed in Deut 26:2, 4, 10) through festive processions.

⁵³³ Sending an angel, including “guardian angels,” sometimes is depicted as a punishment, a deprivation of direct involvement of God. According to War Scroll, Israel is punished by being put under the charge of a guardian angel; cf. Exod. Rab. 32.2–3.

⁵³⁴ For more examples see LSJ, 874.

⁵³⁵ LSJ, 874, s.v. κάνεον.

Sometimes these baskets were not wreathed (cf. above): “The rich brought their bikkurim in baskets of silver or gold [קלחות של כסף ושל זהב⁵³⁶]” (m. Bik. 3.8). Flowers in the baskets of angelic processions in 3 Baruch may visually resemble the bikkurim baskets, which were “decorated [with plant] other than the seven species [of fruit]”; “the decoration [עטור] of the bikkurim could also be of another kind” (m. Bik. 3.9–10). They were similarly transferred to priests: “And the priest shall take the basket from your hand, and set it down before the altar of the Lord your God” (Deut 26:4).

There was also another rite, the meal-offerings, which involved the transfer of offerings from baskets to a “ministering vessel” (as from the “baskets” to the “flat bowl” in 3 Baruch):

How is the procedure of meal-offerings? A man brings a meal-offering from his house in silver or golden baskets [קלחות של כסף ושל זהב], places it in a ministering vessel [כלי שרת], hallows it in a ministering vessel, adds to it its oil and frankincense, and carries it to a priest who carries it to the altar.” (b. Sot. 14b)⁵³⁷

Flowers. Flowers are men’s “virtues” (12:4G; 14:2G or “prayers” in the probably secondary 14:2S and passim). The connection, which can hardly be coincidental, may be traced between these Flowers-Virtues and Flowers of Paradise mentioned in 4:10 above. This connection may be corroborated by two links: (1) as the Trees of Paradise were planted by angels, so also the flowers are brought by them; (2) Trees of Paradise are also Virtues according to Philo’s concept of “Paradise of Virtues” (see comm. to 4:7S). In our case (in distinction to Philo), one of the five trees is planted by Sammael,⁵³⁸ which brings the number into correspondence with the four basic virtues of Hellenistic thought (see above).

⁵³⁶ From Gk κάλαθος.

⁵³⁷ Cf. another similar description. As angels in 3 Baruch come with their baskets to receive the oil of mercy, so Resh Lakish speaks of the earth coming to God with vessels of its own (clouds) to receive rain waters (see the beginning of the discussion cited in comm. to “rain” in 10:6–8): “In the view of R. Yohanan [believing that rain clouds come from above] it is like a man who presented his neighbor with a cask of wine together with the vessel. In the view of Resh Lakish [believing that rain clouds come from earth] it is like a man who asked his neighbor, ‘Lend me a se’ah of wheat, to which he replied, ‘Bring your basket and come and measure it out’ [הבא קופתך ובוא]. Similarly, the Holy One, blessed be he, says to the earth, ‘Bring your clouds and receive rain.’” (Gen. Rab. 13.11).

⁵³⁸ Cf. “tares” are planted by the “Enemy”/devil in the Tares Parable (Matt 13:24–43); and in both cases “the harvesters are angels” (Matt 13:37; cf. note to comm. to 4:8 above).

“Angels with flowers” appear, although in quite different context, in the Spanish rescension of 5 Ezra 1:40 among patriarchs and prophets “coming from the East:”

I [God] will lead them, together with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, Elijah and Enoch, Zachariah and Hosea, Amos, Joel, Micah, Obadiah, Zephaniah, Nahum, Jonah, Malachi [or: Mattathias], Habakkuk, and twelve angels with flowers (angelos duodecim cum floribus).⁵³⁹

The Flower Offering of 3 Baruch may be a part of the tradition which mentions angels bringing wreaths during the celestial liturgy: “the twenty-four elders will fall down before him who sits on the throne, and will worship him who lives forever and ever, and will cast their wreaths before the throne” (Rev 4:10).⁵⁴⁰ Gk στέφανος is usually translated here as “crown,” but “wreath” is an even more common meaning. Similar to 3 Baruch, the offered wreaths are identified as prayers woven and brought to God by angels in Rabbinic texts:

Each day the exalted ones [angels] wreath the blessed Holy One with three “holies,” as it says, “Holy, holy, holy.” What does the Holy One do? He places one upon his head and two upon the heads of Israel. (Lev. Rab. 24.8)

When Israel pray, you do not find them all praying at the same time, but each assembly prays separately, first one and then another. When they have all finished, the angel appointed over prayers collects all the prayers that have been offered in all the synagogues, weaves them into wreaths [עטרות] and places them upon the head of God. (Exod. Rab. 21.4)

See also Midr. Pss. 19.7; 88.2. The angel Sandalphon also “stands behind the Chariot and weaves wreaths for his Creator” in b. Hag. 13b. These wreath are prayers according to Midr. Kohen 26:

On the fifth day ... [God] created one wheel on the earth, whose head is opposite the holy Living Creatures. He is an intermediary between the Jews and their father in heaven ... His name is Sandalphon; and he weaves wreaths for the Master of Glory from “Holy [holy holy is the Lord of hosts]” and from “Blessed be he,” and from “Amen, may his great name [be blessed for ever and ever],” which Jews utter as [liturgical] responses in the synagogue. He then adjoins the wreath by the ineffable name, and it ascends by itself to the Lord’s head. (Midr. Kohen 26)

Virtues can also turn into a crown/wreath: the angel of Death says that Abraham’s “righteous deeds and your boundless hospitality and the magni-

⁵³⁹ For possible interpretations see Bergren. “List.” Cf. also the “flowers” promised to the righteous in one of the versions of Ethiopic Apoc. Pet. 14 (cited in 10:2 above).

⁵⁴⁰ The similarity between 3 Bar. and Rev 4:10 was noticed by Halperin (Faces, 134).

tude of your love for God have become a crown on my head” (T. Abr. 17:7).⁵⁴¹

The Flower Offering also bears a resemblance to the Attic “Feast of Flowers” or Anthesteria (Floralia), considered a Lesser Mystery preliminary to the Eleusinian ones. The three days rites contained activities such as wine drinking, purifying baptism, passing the gate, and invocation of the dead.⁵⁴²

12:3. Angels [who are] over the principalities / the angels who are in the power of men (ἄγγελοι ἐπὶ τῶν ἐξουσιῶν / АНГЕЛИ ИЖЕ ВЪ ОБЛАСТИ ЧЛОВѢЧНИ СЖТЪ). These angels, are distinguished from Phanuel, who is called “the angel of hosts” (Gk ὁ ἄγγελος τῶν δυνάμεων; CS АНГЕЛЪ СИЛЪ) in 1:8G; 2:1S; 2:6G; 10:1S; 11:1S and “archangel” in 10:1G (cf. comm. to 1:8G). The title for these angels may mean that they belong to a division called “principalities,” ἐξουσίαι (Col 1:5; 1 Pet 3:22; T. Levi 3:8; Asc. Isa. 2:40; cf. 1 En. 61:10 et al.). In all these sources they are named either “principalities” or “angels of principalities.” The definition identical to the one of 3 Baruch – οἱ ἐπ’ τῶν ἐξουσιῶν – is applied to human high rank officials in LXX Dan 3:3. Cf. “the sixth [angelic] order which is over principalities,” whose service is “to rule over kingdoms” (T. Adam 4:6). Thus, the title might have also implied that they are responsible for specific regions or nations (on national angels; see introductory comm. to 12).

According to S the angels are “in the power of men.” Gaylord notes: “This could be translated also by ‘in the region of men’ ... It is possible that the translator had the extant Greek before him, but did not understand it.”⁵⁴³ The Slavic translator must have understood Gk ἐπὶ with gen. as with dat. in the sense of “in the power of,” “subordinated to.”⁵⁴⁴ On the other hand, we learn that they are “given” (13:1) and “attached to” (Gk προσμένειν with dat.; 13:3) men and “are not able to get away from them” without a permission (13:2). This may conform to the belief that in some aspects men (at least righteous ones) can have a higher status than angels (Heb 1:4–13; 2:5–9; Pr. Jos.; Gen. Rab. 17.4; y. Shab. 6.9.8d; b. Sanh. 38b; Cant. Rab. 1.4).

⁵⁴¹ Cf. Green, Keter, 31–41.

⁵⁴² Richardson, “Athens’.”

⁵⁴³ Gaylord, Slavonic, 127.

⁵⁴⁴ See in late and Byzantine sources (LSJ:622; Sophocles, Glossary, 496).

Flower Offering: Unrighteous (12:6–13:5)

GREEK

⁶ And I saw other angels bearing baskets which were empty, not full.

And they came grieving, and did not dare to approach, because they had not the rewards complete.

⁷ And Michael cried out saying, “Come also, you angels, bring what you have brought.” ⁸ And Michael grieved much, as well as the angel who was with me, because they did not fill the bowl.

¹ And thus [these] other angels went weeping and bewailing and saying with fear, “Look at us Behold, how we became black, O Lord, for we were given to evil men, and we want to get away from them.”

² And Michael said, “You are not able to get away from them, in order that the Enemy may not prevail at the end; but tell me what you ask.”

³ And they said, “We pray you, Michael our commander-in-chief, remove us from them, for we cannot remain with evil and foolish men, for there is nothing good in them, but all kinds of unrighteousness and arrogance.”

⁴ For we do not see them ever entering into assembly, either into spiritual fathers or into any good thing.

But where there is murder, there also are they in the midst, and where are fornications, adulteries, thefts, slanders, perjuries, malices, drunkennesses, strifes, jealousy, murmurings, whispering, idolatry, divination, and such like,

SLAVONIC

⁶ And I saw other angels carrying offerings.

And they were slack and did not dare to draw near, because they did not have a measure.

⁷ And Michael called out, saying, “Come also you, angels, as much as you have brought, so you will receive.” ⁸ And Michael wept much [and] filled the receptacle.

¹ And I saw {others} as they go and weep, and they were trembling with fear, saying, “Woe to us, darkened ones, that we have been given to evil places and men, and we want to get away from them, if possible.”

² And Michael said, “You will not be able to get away from them, but tell me what you want.”

³ And they told him, “We pray you, Michael our chief, remove us from them, for we cannot remain with the disobedient [and] unreasonable men,

⁴ For their wives flee to the Temple, and from there they bring them out to jealousy and to fornication and to envy, then they are workers of such things and of others worse. Therefore we pray to let us leave them. and they strive to many other things, which you, O Glorious One, know.”

⁵ And Michael said to the angels, “Wait until I learn from the Lord what is to happen.”

⁵ And Michael answered and said, “Be patient until I ask God what he commands about you.”

NOTES

12:6G. Empty, not full. See comm. to 12:1.

And they came grieving (καὶ ἤρχοντο λυπούμενοι). Or “and they began to lament.”

They had not the rewards complete (οὐκ εἶχον τέλεια τὰ βραβεῖα). Gk βραβεῖον initially means “prize in game” (1 Cor 9:24; Phil 3:14), already there allegorizing the heavenly reward, a reward of virtue; cf., e.g., “the prize of patient endurance” in Clement of Rome, 1 Ep. Cor. 5.6. Plato uses an analogous term, Gk ἄθλον, for the prize of the beatific afterlife for the virtuous: “the prize is fair and the hope great” (Phaed. 114c).

12:6S. They ... measure [ПРАВИЛА]. Ms T has instead “they were impure [СКВЕРЬНА], because they had their crowns [ВѢНЦЬ].”

12:8S And Michael wept much [and] filled the receptacle (и плака ѿ михаила мѣсто и члѣкъ). The text differs from G, but is fully clear. Gaylord understands it as “And Michael cried greatly over the [un]filled receptacle,” where “the negative has dropped out of S.”⁵⁴⁵ Such interpretation must imply the assumption of the following proto-text: и плака ѿ михаила мѣсто на[дѣ] не[п]лѣн[и]и[и]и хранилищ[и]и, which seems unnecessary.

13:1. And thus {other} angels went (καὶ εἰθ’ οὕτως ἦλθον ἕτεροι ἄγγελοι). Usually translated as “And then in the same way came other angels.” See the introductory comm. below.

13:1S. Evil places and men (неприазнина мѣста и члѣкъ). Gaylord transliterates члѣкъ as чловѣкъ (nom. sg. or gen. pl.).⁵⁴⁶ According to this reading the text has to be emended and interpreted as “evil places {and} of men.” However, the final letter ѣ, recognizable in the facsimile edition, must imply the form of dat. pl.: чловѣкомъ.

13:2G. In order that the Enemy may not prevail at the end (ὕνα μὴ εἰς τέλος κυριεύσῃ ὁ Ἐχθρός). Or “... for ever.” The text is reminiscent of LXX Ps 73:10: ἕως πότε ὁ θεός ὀνειδιεῖ ὁ ἐχθρός παροξυνεῖ ὁ ὑπεναντίος τὸ ὄνομά σου εἰς τέλος – “How long O God, will the enemy reproach, provoke your name for ever.”

13:3G. Arrogance (πλεονεξία). Or less probably “greed.” Both not included in the lists of vices (4:17; 8:5; 13:4).

13:4S. Strive (τιμᾶτι ѿ). Also “hurry,” “endeavor.”

⁵⁴⁵ Gaylord, Baruch, 674.

⁵⁴⁶ Gaylord, Slavonic, 131.

COMMENTARY

Three or Two Classes of Angels?

The extant text speaks of three groups of angels representing three classes of human beings: (1) those whose baskets were “full of flowers,” (2) those with “half-empty baskets,” and (3) those who “brought nothing.” As noticed by Martha Himmelfarb, there is no indication which class is bigger, and there is no mention of the dominance of evil, in contrast to the tradition in the Similitudes.⁵⁴⁷

1 En. 22 (Ethiopic and Greek) reports three (22:9) or four (22:2) “hollow places,” where different groups of the souls of the dead are stored. The three groups are (1) the “righteous,” who have there “the bright spring of water” similarly to the soul-birds of 3 Bar. 10 (22:9); (2) complete sinners upon whom “judgment has not been executed in their lifetime. Here their spirits are set apart for this great torment, until the great day of judgment” (22:10); and (3) the average group of those who “were not righteous but sinners, who were godless, and they were companions with lawless. And their spirits will not be punished in the day of judgment nor will they be raised from there” (22:13). Some discern a fourth group of “those who make their suit, who make disclosures about their destruction, when they were slain in the days of the sinners” (22:12) and identify them as the generation of the Flood;⁵⁴⁸ see the special location for the Tower generation in 3 Bar. 2–3.

The threefold division of the human race was a popular Rabbinic model:

There are three groups, one for eternal life, one for shame and everlasting contempt (those who are completely evil); and an intermediate group go down to Gehenna and scream and come up from there and are healed. (t. Sanh. 13.3)

A baraita from b. Ber. 61b also speaks of three main categories: righteous (צדיקים), wicked (רשעים), and average (בינוניים); there is also a further division of two extreme classes into two groups each); cf. b. Rosh HaSh. 16b–17a; Shab. 33b; Yoma 75a; and Abot R. Nat. A 41. Gnostics also divided humanity to three classes, “spiritual,” “psychic,” and “material” (e.g., Irenaeus, Haer. 1.7.5; Exc. Theod. 56.2; cf. Nag Hammadi Tripartite Tractate 118.14–119.34; Teaching of Silvanus 92.16).⁵⁴⁹ This approach might have Hellenistic roots: in Virgil’s Elysium there were also three kinds ⁵⁴⁷ Himmelfarb, Ascent, 93.

⁵⁴⁸ Cf. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 303.

⁵⁴⁹ See Williams, Rethinking, 189–212.

of souls: perfect ones, those destined to purification, and those destined to reincarnation (Virgil, Aen. 6).

Three classes of men are represented by three groups of angels. The existence of three orders of angels may be implied also in 4:7S, which mentions four major angels, of whom Michael “the commander-in-chief” stands at the head of all angels (see comm. to “Michael” in 11:2), while the remaining three angels may be the heads of three angelic orders corresponding to three groups of angels and men.

However, the dichotomy of “righteous” and “sinners” is much more widely attested and may be older. The majority of texts know only the two classes. This binary opposition is treated extensively in Wis 3:1–13 (cf. Pss. Sol. 3; 13; 14; 15). The threefold division is known in Rev 3:15–16: “you are neither cold nor hot, I wish you were either one or the other ...” In Apoc. Paul 7–10 (the closest parallel to the celestial liturgy of 3 Baruch), the twofold scheme with two classes of angels representing two groups of humanity witnessed by Latin and Syriac rescensions, has probably been developed to the threefold model of the extant Greek rescension. This could be the situation with 3 Baruch, where the extant text contains the rudiments of the original twofold division:

- (1) Besides the passage under discussion, 3 Baruch reflects a clear dichotomy between “those who pass through life rightly” (τοῖς καλῶς τὸν βίον διερχομένοις) and receive the revelations, on the one hand (11:7G), and “those who pass through life wickedly” (τῶν κακῶς τὸν βίον μετερχομένων) and as a result become the nourishment of the Dragon-Hades, on the other (4:5G).
- (2) The concluding passage of 16:6–10S knows only of “the righteous” and “the impious.”
- (3) In 12:6G the second group of angels bring κανίσκια κενὰ οὐ γέμοντα – “baskets [which were] empty, not full.” Hughes, however, suggested an emendation κανίσκια [οὔτε] κενὰ οὔ[τε] γέμοντα – “baskets which were [neither] empty, nor full.” Nevertheless, the tautological formula “empty, not full” may be understood literally and could have reflected some Hebraic or colloquial construction (like רֵיק אֵין בּוֹ מַיִם – κενὸς ὕδωρ οὐκ εἶχε – “empty, without water” of Gen 37:24). This refers to the offering of the sinners; otherwise it (or its absence) is not mentioned elsewhere in the offering account of chs. 12–13. This would mean that there are only two types of offerings, full and empty, which leave no place for the mediocre (exactly as in Latin and Syriac Apoc. Paul 7–10). Thus the angels of 13:1ff would be the same angels as in 12:6ff.

This interpretation would require one minor emendation in each of the two accounts:

- Offering (chs. 12–13): the word “other” (13:1) must be either a later addition or continues to refer to the same “other angels” of 12:6ff;
- Reward (chs. 15–16): the verse in 15:3 was either added or the rather the word ἀποκένους there is to be understood as “empty.” The next verse (15:4) interprets the word to mean “half-empty” (since both meanings are possible), but the whole verse is an obvious Christian interpolation absent in S.

This was also the interpretation of the Slavonic family β which also only speaks of two groups of angels (although it is shorter than G in these chapters, e.g., the whole Oil Reward account is absent).

These minor emendations could be made in order to replace a twofold division of humankind by the threefold one, that is, the displacement of a radical moral dichotomy with a more balanced and tolerant ethical system.

* * *

13:1. Angels weeping and bewailing and saying with fear / they go and weep, and they were trembling with fear. According to some Rabbinic sources, they may have good reasons to fear, since angels are to be punished too:

The Holy One will not revenge the kingdoms in the future before he will revenge their angelic patrons [lit. “princes,” שרִים] first, as said, “And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord will punish the host of the high heaven on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth” [Isa 24:21] and “How you have fallen from heaven, O star of the morning, son of the dawn!” [Isa 14:12] and “My sword is satiated in heaven ...” [Isa 34:5]. (Mek. Beshalah, Shira 2)

Weeping angels are known from different sources. In the Hypostasis of the Archons “the authorities will relinquish their ages, and their angels will weep over their destruction, and their demons will lament their death.” Angels are “weeping over the three sons of Joatham” in a similar context (Apoc. Zeph. 3–4; cf. comm. to ch. 12); angels bewail Isaac (Gen. Rab. 56.6; Pesiq. R. 40; Pirqe R. El. 31; Midr. HaG. 1.322; etc.); God and angels bewail Moses (b. Sot. 13b–14a; Tan. B. 4.13; Tan. Vaethanan 6; Abot R. Nat. 156; etc.); angels bewail the destruction of the Temple (so, e.g., Lam. Rab. Intr.); and angels weep with Esther (cf. Tg. Esth. II 4).

Behold, how we became black / Woe to us, darkened ones (ἴδε ἡμᾶς μεμελανωμένους / לֹאֲשֵׁתֵּי הַחֹמֶיִם הַשְּׁחִימוֹת). See the faces of the sinners in Gehenna that are literally “black like the sides of a pot” (b. Rosh HaSh. 17a). Here the figurative meaning is possible; cf. Rabbinic Heb השחיר פנים

“darken face” as a metaphor for “to ashame s.-o.” (b. Shab. 152a; cf. y. Hag. 2.77d). In this case it is just an expression of distress or pain.

Otherwise, the darkness may be connected to demonic nature. “Black One” (μέλας) could function as a substitute for “Evil One” when used as a designation for Satan (Ep. Barn. 4.9; 20.1).⁵⁵⁰ However, although these angels have punitive functions (16:2–4), there is hardly a demonic feature here (see introductory comm. to ch. 12), but rather a characteristic that reflects defilement. Thus Hades is both “dark” and “impure” (ζοφώδης καὶ βέβηλος in 4:3G; cf. introductory comm. to ch. 4). Here the causal relationship is given: the angels assigned to the wicked are “darkened” since they “are given to evil men” (13:1), according to the model of the sun defiled by human sins (8:4–5). Also, in other compositions sins can darken the lower heaven (T. Levi 3:1), as well as heavenly waters (2 Bar. 58:1; 60:1).

13:4G. See comm. to 11:4.

Behind the Door (14)

GREEK

¹ And at that time

Michael left,

and the doors closed. And there was a sound

like thunder.

² And I asked the angel, “What is the sound?” And he told me, “Now Michael is bringing the virtues of men to God.”

SLAVONIC

¹ And Michael went up and the gates closed, and there was a thunder, like [bellowing] of 40 oxen.

² And I said to the angel, “What is the sound?” And he told me, “Now Michael is bringing the prayers of men.”

NOTES

14:1G. Left (ἀπῆλθεν). Or “went up” as understood by S. See comm. to 11:4.

14:1S. Like [bellowing] of 40 oxen. See note to 6:13S.

⁵⁵⁰ LPG, 540. On darkness as demonic and netherworld feature see introductory comm. to ch. 4 (Celestial Bestiary 4.2).

COMMENTARY

Annual Judgment and Implied Chronology1. Celestial Day of Atonement

Can Baruch witness to the celestial counterpart of Yom Kippur (the Day of Atonement) service? The ritual procedure, its content (celestial judgment), its special relevance after the destruction of the Temple, and, as I will try to show, even the original imagery (preserved in a modified form in later Rabbinic tradition) have much in common with the terrestrial Day of Atonement.

1.1. Procedure. The description here perfectly conforms to the performance of the high priest on the Day of Atonement.⁵⁵¹ Unseen to the audience, Michael alone enters a hidden realm behind the door in order to intercede for the supplicants before God. Other angels are left outside, just as other priests are not allowed to enter the Holy of Holies: “when he [the high priest] goes in to make atonement in the holy place, no one shall be in the Tent of meeting until he comes out” (Lev 16:17). Also in heaven “none of the angels could enter and could behold his face because of the magnificence and glory” (1 En. 14:21). Angels were prevented from entering even the earthly Holy of Holies, when the high priest is there (y. Yoma 1.5.39a; 5.2.42c; y. Suk. 4.6.54d; Pesiq. R. 47). On angels as priests and the celestial Temple and its forbidden areas, see introductory comm. to 12:1–5 and 11, respectively.

1.2. Celestial judgment. Michael’s service in 3 Baruch results in the dispensing of a reward to the righteous and in a verdict for the sinners (chs. 15–16), while in Rabbinic tradition the Day of Atonement is a day of “sealing” an annual judgment: “all are judged on New Year and the decree is sealed on the Day of Atonement” (t. Rosh HaSh. 1.13). In this case, the “Day of Judgment” of 3 Bar. 1:7 may refer to the scene described here (see comm. ibid.).

1.3. Relevance. The loss of this rite created one of the most painful liturgical gaps after the destruction of the Temple. Evidence of its continuation in heaven and the ongoing opening of the “gate of prayer” could have been very relevant, especially in light of skeptical views like the one of R. Eleazar, who believed that “from the day on which the Temple was destroyed the gates of prayer have been closed” (b. Ber. 32b). Tannaim decreed that the holiday was to be preserved in spite of the Temple’s destruction: “though no sacrifices be offered, the day in itself effects atonement” (Sifra Emor 14; cf. m. Yom. 8.8). Later aggada even says that the world cannot exist without the Day of Atonement and that the day will be observed even when all other holidays will be canceled (Pirqe R. El. 46). It is also stated that the celestial Temple has been erected in order to serve for the atonement of Israel after the destruction of the Temple (Bet HaMidr. 5.63).

⁵⁵¹ As noticed by Dean-Otting (“Baruch,” 152) and Wright (Heaven, 173).

1.4. Timing. Later mystical tradition links revelatory experience with the Day of Atonement. It also provides a rationale for the forty days fast (as in Noah’s revelation in 3 Bar. 4:14; for numerous parallels see comm. ibid.) before the revelation as a period from the first of Elul to the Day of Atonement (Hekh. Zut. 424; ms Oxford 1531).

1.5. Imagery

- Gate of Prayer. In 3 Bar. 12–13 angels bring men’s virtues or/and prayers before the gate opening for this purpose (11:5; cf. 14:1; 15:1; 17:1G), while a special “gate of prayer” opens on the Day of Atonement (y. Ber. 4.7c; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 24.2; cf. b. Yoma 87b; for more details see introductory comm. to ch. 11: Ouranology: Non-complete ascent). Note also Philo’s discussion of prayer as means of expiation on the Day of Atonement: “at this time men feast, propitiating the Father of the universe with holy prayers, by which they are accustomed to solicit pardon for their former sins” (Mos. 2.4[24]).
- Yom Kippur as the “Day of Mercy.” If we deal with the celestial Yom Kippur, how do we explain the oil imagery which is so central to the liturgical procedure described in 3 Baruch? The reward for the pious in 3 Bar. 15 is given as “oil” (according to G or “mercy” in S). The word play with homeophonic Gk ἔλεος “mercy” and ἔλαιον “oil,” as well as the term “oil of mercy,” are well attested (including 3 Baruch itself; cf. LXX Ps 52(51):10; Vita 36:2; 40:1; Apoc. Mos. 9:4; 13:1; Gos. Nicod. 19; on this in more detail, see introductory comm. to ch. 15: Oil Reward: Oil and Mercy below). The term “mercy” could be closely associated with Yom Kippur. In Bib. Ant. 13:6 the Day of Atonement is called “the Fast of Mercy” (ieiunium misericordiae). The same avails in 4Q508 (4QPrFêtes) 2.2: “the Appointed time of your Mercy” (מועד רחמים) and in b. Ber. 29a: “the Day of Mercy” (יומא דרחמי). In Jubilees the expression is also cardinal for the day of annual judgment: “he will have mercy on all who turn from all their errors once each year” (Jub. 5:18; cf; also Pesiq. Rab. Kah. 23). Less clear is the subtext of Pss. Sol. 18:6[5]: “May God cleanse Israel against the Day of Mercy and blessing, against the Day of Choice when he brings back his anointed” (καθαρίσαι ὁ θεὸς Ἰσραὴλ εἰς ἡμέραν ἐλέους ἐν εὐλογίᾳ εἰς ἡμέραν ἐκλογῆς ἐν ἀνάξει χριστοῦ αὐτοῦ). If the term “Day of Mercy” refers here to the Day of Atonement, it provides an additional connection between the celestial judgment and the idea of the choice of the righteous by anointing.⁵⁵²

- Anointing of Yom Kippur? The word play on “oil” and “mercy” is not the only reason to connect celestial oil (ἔλαιον) with the Day of Atonement – the Day of Mercy (ἡμέρα ἐλέους). Supposedly there is no connection between anointing and this day. Celestial oil of the Olive of Life planted by Michael is known to be beneficial for this life (as well as for afterlife or resurrection according to some early Jewish texts). Symbolic anointing that has such implications is also well attested among early Christian and Gnostic practices (on this see introductory comm. to ch. 15:1–2: Oil Reward), but no oil was ever associated with the Day of Atonement. Anointing, however, can “atone” in certain cases (as in Lev 14:18: “The rest of the oil in his hand the priest shall put on the head of the man being purified. Thus shall the priest make atonement for him before the Lord”), though the anointing itself was never part of the terrestrial Day of Atonement liturgy and regular anointing was even prohibited on that day (y. Yom. 8.1.76b).⁵⁵³
- Chrismatic “Seal” of Yom Kippur? Thus, the connection must be searched not in pre-Temple destruction liturgical practices of Yom Kippur, but in the imagery of its celestial counterpart, namely in the motifs of “writing” and especially “sealing” as preserved in Rabbinic tradition (with probably earlier roots; see 1 En 81:67–77; 90:20–21, where the destiny of the “sheep,” i.e., Israel, is written in the book, read to the Lord, and sealed by him). In 3 Baruch the role of the “seal” in celestial Yom Kippur is taken by the anointing. Where the righteous of 3 Baruch receive ointment, the righteous of Rabbinic sources are “written” and “sealed.” The “sealing” of the judgment is a central image in Rabbinic presentation of the Day of Atonement. It follows the “inscribing” in the heavenly books on the New Year of Tishri (t. Rosh HaSh. 1.13; b. Rosh ⁵⁵² Cf. also the note to introductory comm. to 15:1–2 on “anointed of Aaron and Israel” of the Community Rule (1QS 9.11) and parallels.

⁵⁵³ Cf. also the “Festival of Oil” (הַיְצִהָר/מוֹעֵד הַשֶּׁמֶן) taking place about a week before the New Year (22th or 20th day of the sixth month); 11QT^a Temple^a; 4Q365 23; 4Q327; cf. Jub. 32:11–13.

HaSh. 16a).⁵⁵⁴ Is there a connection between this sealing and anointing? While in Rabbinic tradition the connection is untraceable, it is very obvious for the Hellenistic context: anointing, a chrismatic mark, is referred as a “seal” in many early sources (2 Cor 1:21–22; Ap. John 31.22–25; Apost. Const. 7.22; Origen, Cels. 6.27; etc.; on this in more detail, see comm. to ch. 15 and 16:3). Moreover, also in 3 Baruch the anointing-“sealing” of the righteous comes together with the “writing” of their names, although not in the book, but on the entrance to the Kingdom of Heaven (probably in order to enable their access there; see 11:2S and comm. ibid.).

Apparently, the Jewish Hellenistic motif of chrismatic marking or “sealing” of the chosen in the celestial judgment (combined in 3 Baruch with the motif of “writing” and connected to the celestial Yom Kippur service), associated with mysterial and liturgical practices, coexisted with a tradition which used the same term which, however, was understood in relation to a juridical setting (cf. different modes of celestial service-judgement in the introductory comm. to 12:1–5). The apocalyptic image of the chrismatic “seal” of mercy given in the “Day of Mercy,” imagined as a liturgic procedure, is in Rabbinic juridical imagery presented as a “sealing” of the court’s decision. In addition to the well known and expected general tendency, here the domination of the latter understanding in later Rabbinic tradition was inevitable, since the former meaning and connotations of the terms were only transparent within the Hellenistic milieu which associated “oil” and “mercy,” on the one hand, and used the word “seal” for “anointing,” on the other.

Implied Chronology

If at the end of his tour Baruch does arrive at the celestial service of the Day of Atonement, then we can try to trace the chronology of the vision. There are two ways in which the calculation can be attempted: according to the solar-lunar and according to the solar calendars. The total number of days of Baruch’s celestial tour in the extant text is 275: so the addition of 30 (2:2), 60 (3:2), and 185 (4:2). According to Frasson’s reconstruction (see comm. to 10:1G) it may be a full solar year, 365 days: 30 (2:2); 60 (3:2); *90 (10:1); and 185 (4:2). Acquaintance with the length of the solar year could be combined with the use of a luni-solar calendar (cf. t. Nazir 1.3; Sifra Behar 4; b. Ar. 9b; Lev. Rab. 51; etc.). According to an ordinary lunar ⁵⁵⁴ Cf. subsequent “writing” and “sealing” in real juridical practices, e.g., in Jer 32:10; m. Yeb. 2.9.

year of 354 days, the journey of 365 days had to start on the eve of the New Year. According to a solar year, the vision culminating with the celestial Day of Atonement would be given on the Day of Atonement as well.⁵⁵⁵ Are there any justifications for these dates? In Jubilees, “on the first of the seventh month,” i.e., on the New Year of Tishri, Abraham both observes heaven and receives a revelation (12:16–30), while Jacob also receives his vision in Bethel (31:3). This is also the period during which “the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah” (Jer 42:7). Baruch’s visit to the destroyed Temple and the subsequent vision there could be matched in time with the New Year or the Day of Atonement. This kind of pilgrimage to the destroyed Temple “in the seventh month” is attested in Jer 41:5, when “eighty men came from Shechem, from Shiloh, and from Samaria with their beards shaved off and their clothes torn and their bodies gashed, having grain offerings and incense in their hands to bring to the house of the Lord.”⁵⁵⁶

Oil Recompense for Righteous (15:1–2)

GREEK

¹ And at that time Michael came down, and the gate opened, and he brought oil.

² And for the angels who had brought the full baskets,

he filled them with oil, saying, “Bring a hundredfold reward to our friends and those who have diligently done good deeds. For those who have sowed well, reap well.”

SLAVONIC

¹ And at that time Michael came down, and the gate opened, and he brought to the first angels

[...] full of mercy.

² And he said, “Come, angels, and receive mercies.

As you brought prayers to God, so receive. As the prayers of men and their requests ask, so are them.”

⁵⁵⁵ The journey of 275 days had to start in the middle of Shevat (on or close to the New Year of Trees). On the trees motif in 3 Baruch see comm. to 4:7S.

⁵⁵⁶ This happens approximately two months after the fall of Jerusalem which happened during “the fifth month” (between its fifth and tenth days; 2 Kgs 25:8, 9; Jer 52:12). Two months are attested as a mourning period in Judg 11:37–39. In 4 Baruch after mourning Jerusalem (4:7–11), Baruch went outside the city and “remained sitting in a tomb” for an indefinite period until “the angels came to him and explained to him all the things that the Lord would reveal to him through them” (4 Bar. 4:12).

NOTES

15:1S. And the gate opened. Only in ms T (in accordance with G).

15:1S. And he brought to the first angels [...] full of mercy [or: “full mercies”] (и принесе прѣвѣннѣхъ ангеломъ пѣнны милости). Either “mercies” are “full,” or the clause is elliptic, and what was “full of mercies” is not mentioned. Cf. comm. ad loc.

15:2G. The full baskets (τὰ κανίσκια πλήρης). Ryssel emends to πλήρη. It is also possible that πλήρης was used indeclinably.⁵⁵⁷

For those who have sowed well, reap well. Probably an allusion to Matt 19:29 and 25:24, 26 (cf. Mark 10:30; Luke 15:8; 2 Cor 9:6; although a similar expression appears also in Hagg 1:6). Cf. a paraphrase of Matt 25:21, 23 in 15:4G.

15:2S. As you brought prayers to God, so receive. As the prayers of men and their requests ask, so are them (ѡкоже принесосте мѡлѣтвы къ бѡ тако и приѡмѣ ѡкоже просѡтъ мѡлѣтвы чловѣци и прошенїя ихъ ѡко и ти). Or “as you brought prayers to God, so receive according to what the prayers of men and their requests ask, according to them.” Ms T has: “As you brought prayers to God, so receive. As someone prays, so give them.”

COMMENTARY

Oil Reward

The supposedly disconnected images of the vision of the Oil Reward may be understood only against the background of other documents, especially 2 Enoch and Life of Adam and Eve:⁵⁵⁸

1. Oil and Mercy. “Oil” of G (15:1 and 2) does not appear in S at all. It has пѣнны милости “full of mercy” or “full mercies” (15:1) and милости “mercies” (15:2) instead. The Greek Vorlage of S might have contained “full of oil” instead of “full of mercy,” if the Slavic translator confused Gk ἔλαιον and ἔλεος.⁵⁵⁹ More probably, it is an intentional word play: the same word play of homeophonic ἔλαιον and ἔλεος is explicit in ms T to 4:7S which also refers to Michael: “Michael brought the olive and planted it. That is why Michael was called merciful” (see note ad loc.). The two words “oil” and “mercy” are used together in LXX Ps 52(51):10 and in the Life of Adam and Eve (Vita 36:2; 40:1; Apoc. Mos. 9:4; 13:1). Seth looks ⁵⁵⁷ Hughes, “Baruch,” 540.

⁵⁵⁸ Cf. the analyses of Gaylord and Orlov (Gaylord, “Baruch,” 658; Orlov, Enoch-Metatron, 230–231).

⁵⁵⁹ Gaylord, Slavonic, 139.

there for “the oil of life flowing from the Tree of Mercy.” The very combination “oil of mercy” occurs in Apoc. Mos. 13:1: “And Seth went with Eve near paradise, and they wept there praying to God to send his angel and give them the oil of mercy” (τὸ ἔλαιον τοῦ ἐλέους; cf. oleum misericordiae of Vita 40:1). See also Gos. Nicod. 19: “then shall he anoint with the oil of mercy all that believe in him.”

“Full of mercy” of S is known as a Rabbinic epithet for God, Heb מְלֵא רַחֲמִים (Mek. Beshalah, Shira 4; Bahodesh, Yitro 4; b. Sanh. 39a; Tan. B. Naso 6; etc.).

2. Oil and Glory. Enoch is anointed with the “delightful oil” (2 En. 22:8) and the “oil of his [God’s] Glory” (2 En. 56:2). Gaylord supposes that the oil is a Glory promised to Baruch above (4:2S; 6:12; 7:2; 11:2) and lost by Adam (4:16G).⁵⁶⁰

3. Oil and Michael. In all three documents (Life of Adam and Eve, 2 Enoch, and 3 Baruch) Michael is in charge of the celestial oil. However, only S explains the nature of this link: Michael is the one who planted the source of this oil, the Cosmic Olive (4:7S).

4. Oil and Cosmic Olive. In 3 Baruch the two are only implicitly connected through the image of Michael planting the Olive (only in S). The olive was planted by Michael (4:7S), and the oil (apparently from the same olive) is distributed by him. The “Tree of his Mercy, from which flows the oil of life” (arborem misericordiae suae de qua currit oleum vitae; Vita 36:2; cf. Apoc. Mos. 9:4) is only explicitly identified as the Tree of Life in Apoc. Mos. 28:4: “when again the Resurrection has come to pass, I will raise you up and then there will be given to you from the Tree of Life and you will be without death forever.” The olive tree of Paradise, “an olive, flowing with oil continually,” appears in 2 En. (A) 8:5. See also Origen, Cels. 6.27 and 34; Ps.-Clementine Rec. 1.45; Acts Thom. 157; Gos. Nicod. 19 (= Descent of Christ 3); Mark 6:13; Jas 5:14. Jacob receives celestial oil to anoint the site of Luz (Gen. Rab. 69.8; Pirqe R. El. 35).⁵⁶¹

The motif of the reward of the righteous by the product of the Tree of Life may be connected inter alia to an exegesis of Prov 11:30: “The fruit of the righteous is the Tree of Life,” which may mean that in their death they “eat of the Tree of Life and live forever" (Gen 3:22).⁵⁶² See the expression "share in the Tree of Life" of Rev 22:19. Cf. Eschatological resurrection below.

⁵⁶⁰ See Gaylord, “Baruch,” 658.

⁵⁶¹ Cf. Quinn, Quest.

5. Nature of Oil Reward. Michael declares oil as a "reward to our friends and those who have diligently done good deeds" (15:2). In the Life of Adam and Eve, Michael tells Adam that "the oil of life" will be dispensed only to the "holy people" (Apoc. Mos. 13:3; cf. Vita 42:2; Gos. Nicod. 19). Whereas plagues for the wicked are listed below, the nature of the reward for the just is not given in detail. It is just "oil" in G or "mercies" in S. Many parallels below agree on the identification of the reward as "life," and that the Tree of Life must be identical to the Tree of Oil, the Cosmic Olive (later Christian sources elaborate upon the symbolism of this identification, including in it the tree of the cross). What "life" is intended and when is it given? Do guardian angels access Michael during a human being's lifetime or after his death, and, in the latter case, is there an immediate reward of afterlife or is there a postponed eschatological resurrection?⁵⁶³

5.1. Lifetime reward. In biblical language oil symbolically represents joy (Ps 45:8; Prov 27:9). The celestial oil can help even during a human lifetime. It was supposed to heal Adam when he was dying (Vita 35; Apoc. Mos. 9). Anointing by earthly oil heals in Mark 6:13 and Jas 5:15–16. This is likely a reflection of the belief in the healing powers of oil (as well as of wine): "the fruit of the olive relieves the fatigue of the body, and that of the vine, when drunk in moderation, relaxes the excessive pains of the soul" (Philo, Aet. 12.63); "as the olive causes one to forget seventy years of study, so does olive oil restore seventy years of study ... Wine and spices have made me wise" (b. Hor. 13a–b).⁵⁶⁴ Sinful generations will be deprived of wine and oil: "There will be no produce from the vine and no oil because what they do is complete disobedience" (Jub. 23:18).⁵⁶⁵ Anointing could be applied

⁵⁶² The translators of the Targum and LXX did not understand it literally, emending the first part of this passage to "like a Tree of Life," similarly to another idea: "as the days of a tree shall be the days of my people" (Isa 65:22).

⁵⁶³ The Essene avoidance of oil (known from Josephus, Bell. 2.8.3) should be also mentioned here despite its unclear character connected either to ascetic or purity concerns (see Baumgarten, "Essene").

⁵⁶⁴ Cf. "healing dew" of 2 Bar. 29:7; 73:2–3 (on oil and dew see comm. to "the dew of heaven" in 10:9).

⁵⁶⁵ Notice that the two main Trees of Paradise according to 3 Baruch are the Olive and the Vine. Cf. also the enigmatic order given to the third cavalier not to damage "oil and wine" (Rev 6:6).

not only to priests and kings, but also to the prophets (1 Kg 19:6; Isa 61:1; “his holy spirit-anointed ones and seers of truth” in CD 2.12–13; cf. 6.1 = 6Q15 3.4; 4Q267 2.6; 1QM 11.7–8; etc.), while according to 3 Bar. 11:7G, the righteous do only only receive anointing but also revelations. Ointment can protect from death. Thus in the Apocryphon of John the living Gnostic is “sealed” (i.e., anointed) “in the light of the water with five seals that death might not have power over him from now on” (Ap. John 31.22–25; on protective seals see comm. to 16:3).⁵⁶⁶ “Seals” of anointing are given to the righteous and to the chosen through baptism and other rites (e.g., Acts Thom. 26; Apost. Const. 7.22; cf. comm. to 16:3). They can symbolize God’s “ownership” (2 Cor 2:21–22; similarly to the “seals” of circumcision or baptism) and exhort demons (Mark 6:13). A chrismatic seal may have a protective function like other protective seals of Jewish tradition, in order, for example, to defend the pious from the Locusts Plague described in ch. 16 (as a “seal” on their foreheads protects the righteous from the demonic locusts in Rev 9:4 or the chosen 144,000 “servants of our God” in the day of wrath in Rev 7:2–4; on this see comm. to 16:3).⁵⁶⁷

5.2. Afterlife reward. There is wider attestation of the use of oil at the moment of transfer from this world: it transforms Enoch into an eternal angelic being (2 En. 22:9). Both Adam’s and Abraham’s bodies are anointed by angels with “sweet olive oil” (Apoc. Mos. 40:2) or “with divine ointments” (T. Abr. 20:10). Aseneth, whose “name is written in the book of life,” is promised to “eat the bread of life and drink the cup of immortality, and be anointed with the unction of incorruption” (Jos. Asen. 15:2–4; the same is applied to Joseph as “a man who worships God” in 8:5). There was also a Gnostic practice of “sealing” a dying person who declares, “I have been anointed with white ointment from the Tree of Life” (Origen, Cels.

⁵⁶⁶ The Gnostic “five seals” appear also in the Trimorphic Protennoia and Gospel of the Egyptians. For the identification of Gnostic “seal” with chrism, see Logan, “Mystery.”

⁵⁶⁷ Of special interest is the Bala’izah Gnostic fragment (see Kahle, Bala’izah, 1.437–477; Crum, “Coptic”), which connects the five seals of the Gnostic tradition and the five trees of Paradise (known also to 3 Bar. 4:7S; Philo and other Gnostic sources; see comm. to 4:7S: “... all they that (were) in the heavenly Paradise were sealed in silence. But such as shall partake thereof will become spiritual, having known all; they shall seal the five Powers in silence. Lo, I have explained to you, O John, concerning Adam and Paradise and the Five Trees, in an intelligible allegory ...” Thus the Oil Reward as a “seal” of the righteous by the product of the Tree of Life might have been just one of the five possible “seals.”

6.27), cf. “in all their writings [mention is made] of the Tree of Life, and a resurrection of the flesh by means of the “Tree” (ibid. 6.34). It is possible that a criticism of such chrismatic practices applied to the dead may be implied by Rabbis: “Good oil drops on the dead and becomes stinking ... We found that people with good oil [בעלי שמן טוב] entered the place of life and went out dead, while people with good name [בעלי שם טוב] entered the place of dead and went out alive” (Eccl. Rab. 7.1; cf. Exod. Rab. 48.1; Tan. Vaihkel 1). See also the Christian unction (εὐχέλαιον) with its multifunctional purposes (based on Mark 6:12 and Jas 5:14). Pseudo-Clementine Recognitions develop the same motif:

Him [Christ] first God anointed with oil which was taken from the wood of the Tree of Life: from that anointing therefore he is called Christ. Thence, moreover, he himself also, according to the appointment of his Father, anoints with similar oil every one of the pious when they come to his kingdom (1.45)

Cf. Gos. Nicod. 19 cited below.⁵⁶⁸

While in 3 Baruch the angels exchange flowers for ointment, in a similar account of angelic intercession in the Apocalypse of Paul “the angels of the righteous sent after the souls of the righteous” to convey them to the other world probably have both attributes: “they held in their hands the crowns [or “wreaths” – כתר; of flowers?] and the seal [anointing?] of God on them” (Syriac version of Apoc. Paul 12).

If the reward of oil is intended to signify immediate afterlife, the wicked are deprived of it (“those who brought nothing” in 3 Bar. 16). Instead they are given only the lifetime punishments (ibid.). This would conform the popular idea that “the pious will live in death and the wicked will be dead in life” (as in b. Ber. 18b):

That death is of two kinds, one that of the man in general, the other that of the soul in particular. The death of the man is the separation of the soul from the body, but the death of the soul is the decay of virtue and the bringing in of wickedness. It is for this reason that God says not only “die” but “die by the death.” (Leg. All. 1.33.105–107)

The death of worthy men is the beginning of another life. For life is twofold: one is with corruptible body; the other is without body [and] incorruptible. So that the evil man dies by death even when he breathes, before he is buried, as though he preserved for himself no spark at all of the true life, which is excellence of character. The decent and worthy man, however, does not die by death, but after living long, passes away to eternity; that is, he is borne to eternal life. (Quaest. Gen 1.16 [on Gen 2:17])

⁵⁶⁸ Cf. Lampe, Seal, 120ff.

See also Philo, Fug. 21; Jos. 43; Matt 8:22; 10:28; and 1 Tim 5:6–7. The souls of the wicked are annihilated also according to some Rabbinic sources:

Sinners of Israel and sinners of the Gentiles in body descent to Gehenna and are punished there for twelve months. After twelve months their body is consumed and their soul is burnt and the wind scatters them under the soles of the feet of the righteous. (t. Sanh. 13.4; cf. b. Rosh HaSh. 16b–17a)

“[The soul] shall utterly be cut off [הַכֶּרֶת הַכֶּרֶת]” [Numb. 15: 31] – “cut off” in this world, “utterly cut off” in the world to come. This is the view of R. Akiba. (b. Sanh. 64b)

See futher b. Ber. 18b–19b and b. Shab. 33b.

In this case, Serpent-Hades of chs. 4–5 would hardly be an abode of the wicked. It is rather their ultimate annihilator: he “eats the bodies of those who pass through life wickedly” (4:5G) in order to deprive them from bodily resurrection at the end of days.

5.3. Eschatological resurrection. Many of the anointing rites mentioned above could be directed toward eschatological resurrection rather than immediate afterlife. In Life of Adam and Eve the oil will be given only “in the end of the times, then shall all flesh be raised up” (ἐπ’ ἐσχάτων τῶν καιρῶν τότε ἀναστήσεται πᾶσα σὰρξ; Apoc. Mos. 13:2–3); “when again the Resurrection has come to pass” (ἀναστάσεως πάλιν γενομένης; Apoc. Mos. 28:4) or in the “last days” (novissimis diebus; Vita 42:1). After the bodily resurrection, Jesus will “anoint with the oil of mercy all that believe in him” giving them thus “eternal life” (Gos. Nicod. 19).⁵⁶⁹ If this is the case in 3 Baruch, the reward is postponed to the Day of Judgment (mentioned in 1:7), an idea shared by a wide range of early Jewish texts (e.g., 1 En. 22:11; Mek. Beshalah, Vaihi 4; cf. Midr. Pss. 31.3; etc.).

15:2G. Bring a hundredfold reward to our friends and those who have diligently done good deeds (ἀπενέγκατε δότε ἑκατονταπλασίονα τὸν μισθὸν τοῖς φίλοις ἡμῶν καὶ τοῖς ἐμπόνως ἐργασαμένοις τὰ καλὰ ἔργα). The verse, absent in S and possibly an allusion to New Testament tradition

⁵⁶⁹ In this context the much disputed plural “anointed of Aaron and Israel” of the Community Rule (1QS 9.11) and par. can be understood not as two Messiahs, but as righteous Jews, both priests and laymen (for the literature on the passage see Flint, VanderKam, Dead Sea, 2.366–68). Cf. also “the anointed one” of 1 En. 48:10; 52:4 called occasionally “the righteous one” (38:2; 53:6). See also on “anointed” as prophets above.

(Matt 19:29; Mark 10:30; Luke 15:8; 2 Cor 9:6), might well be one of the Christian interpolations or reworkings in 3 Baruch.

“Our friends and those who have diligently done good deeds” is the second reference to the righteous in 3 Baruch: in 10:5G we already learned that the pious souls dwell on the celestial lake continually praising God. If the Oil Reward is posthumous (see comm. above), they must be the “beloved” who await the final “hundredfold reward” of eternal life and transmission to the permanent residence, “the resting places of the righteous” (16:6S).

It is unclear whether these two designations, “our friends/beloved” and “those who have diligently done good deeds” refer to two separate groups or whether they merely indicate two characteristics of the same group. “Friends” may refer to the righteous (cf. Baruch called “beloved man” ἄνθρωπος ἐπιθυμιῶν in 1:3 above). For the righteous as God’s “friends/beloved” (אֲהָבִים) see Prov 8:17; Ps 97:10; Exod 20:6; Deut 5:10. The Mishna expands the idea:

Whoever occupies himself with Torah for its own sake, acquires by merit many things, nay more, the whole of the world is worthwhile for his sake. He is called a friend [רֵעַ], a beloved [אֲהָבָה], one that loves the All-Present, one that loves [his fellow-]creatures ... (m. Abot 6.1)

Abraham is frequently called “friend/lover/beloved [Heb אֲהָבָה; Gk φίλος] of God” (Isa 41:8, 2 Chr 20:7; LXX Isa 41:8; 51:2; Dan 3:35; Jub. 19:9; 30:20; Philo, Cher. 2; Abr. 10.19; Sobr. 56; 4 Ezra 3:14; Apoc. Abr. 10:5; CD 3.2; Jas 2:23; 1 Clem. 10:1; 17:2). Gk φίλοι “friends/beloved” was a regular way of Jesus to address his disciples (Luke 12:4; John 15:15; and passim).

The term φίλοι might have also mean compatriots, referring to Jews, as Heb רעים and אֲחִים in this sense: “You called us a beloved people” (2 Bar. 21:21); “Beloved are Israel in that they were called children of the All-Present (m. Abot 3.14); “Israel are beloved for they are called friends [חֲבִיבִים יִשְׂרָאֵל שְׁנִקְרְאוּ רעים], as said, ‘For the sake of my brothers and friends [I will ask for peace for you]’ [Ps 122:8]” (Exod. Rab. 27.9; cf. “friends” and “brothers” interchanging in the different versions of Matt 5:47); “They [Israel] are the friends of God [שֶׁהֵן רֵעֵיוֹ שֶׁל הַקֹּבֶה], as said ... [Ps 122:8] (Exod. Rab. 52.1); et al.

If this is the case, the other definition, “those who have diligently done good deeds,” may refer to virtuous heathens. This would contrast with Rabbinic sources which state that “all Israel have a portion in the world to come” (m. Sanh. 10.1; b. Sanh. 90a), on the one hand, and that Gehenna is destined only for the wicked of the heathens, on the other (b. Shab. 104a).

Compare also the Life of Adam and Eve, where “the oil of life” is dispensed exclusively to the “holy people” (Apoc. Mos. 13:3; cf. Vita 42:2; Gos. Nicod. 19).

See below, where the sinners are defined as “the sons of men” (16:1G), though the Deutoronomic paraphrases of 16:2 and 4G may be applied instead to sinful Israel.

Locusts Recompense for Unrighteous (15:3–16:10)

GREEK

³ And he said also to those who brought the empty baskets, “Come you also; take the reward due for what you brought, and deliver it to the sons of men.”

⁴ Then he said also to those who brought the full and to those [who brought] the half-empty [baskets]: “Go and bless our friends, and say to them that thus says the Lord, “You are faithful over a little, he will set you over many things; enter into the joy of our Lord.”

¹ And turning he said also to those who had brought nothing,

“Thus says the Lord, ‘Be not gloomy, and do not weep, and do not let the sons of men alone.

² But since they angered me by their deeds, go and make them envious and angry and provoke against them No-Nation, a nation void of understanding.

³ Further, besides these, send forth the caterpillar

and the [kind of] locust,

SLAVONIC

³ And Michael called out again, “Come, you angels who brought little offerings each.

As you have brought, so you will receive, as men brought you prayers.

Tell [them], ‘{And} be not idle, but prostrate yourself in prayer in the holy Temple.’”

¹ Michael again called

those angels who were weeping,

“Come also you, angels, and receive [the answers to] the requests, which the Lord said about those men, and you are not ordered to leave them.

³ But bring them diseases and wounds and rupture and caterpillars

and the rust,

and [another kind of] locust,

[and] hail with lightnings and wrath, and cut them in twain with the sword and with death,

and their children with demons.

⁴ Because they did not listen to my voice, nor observe my commandments, nor do them,

but came to be despisers of my commandments and my assemblies, and offenders of the priests who announced my words to them.

and grasshoppers

and clouds of thunders and hail, and crash their children with demons.

⁴ Because they do not fear God and they do not come to the Temple and to the place of prayers.

Bring them a curse and rejection of good and murder.”

⁵ And the angels received what was ordered to them by Michael. Trembling and rejoicing they went.

⁶ And the angel told me, “By the command of the Ruler I say to you, Baruch: Stand on the right side and see the Glory of God, and see the resting places of the righteous, glory and joy and happiness [and] glorification, and see the tortures of the impious, wailing and groaning, lament and the indefatigable worm. Their voice reaches heaven and calls, ‘Have mercy on us, O God,’”

⁷ And I Baruch told the angel, “Lord, who are these?” ⁸ And he told me, “These are the sinners, having despised the commandment of God.” ⁹ And I told the angel, “Order me, Lord, to weep on their behalf.”

¹⁰ And he told me, “Weep, Baruch, [beginning] from the first-created man, Adam.”

NOTES

15:3G. And he said also to those who brought the empty baskets (λέγει καὶ τοὺς ἀποκένους φέροντας τοὺς κανίσκους). Gk λέγω cum acc., see comm. to 10:7G.

Empty (ἀποκένους). The word may mean also “not quite full, half-empty.” Thus, there is no need to emend it to ὑποκένους as Hughes suggests (also for the next verse).⁵⁷⁰ The word can equally fit into the original account of two groups of angels and to the emended account of three (see comm. above). In the next, interpolated, verse only the second meaning would be appropriate.

15:3S. Who brought little offerings each (иже дары принесли по малу). Ms T omits по малу: “who brought offerings.” Thus, according to its reading there are only two groups of angels here, although while in G the verse refers to the second group, in ms T it refers to the first one. It also omits the words “as men brought ... Temple” (absent also in G), which can hardly refer to the first group.

Tell [them], ‘[And] be not idle ...’ (повѣдайте же и не лѣните сѧ ...). Probably from повѣдайте же и[мѧ] не лѣните сѧ ... “Tell them, ‘Be not idle ...’.”

15:4G. Over a little (ἐπὶ ὀλίγῃ), in place of ἐπὶ ὀλίγα (Matt 25:21).

He will set you over many things (ἐπὶ πολλῶν ὑμᾶς καταστήσει). Ryssel suggests to read “I will set” (καταστήσω).⁵⁷¹

16:1S. Come ... men. Family β omits (in accordance with G).

16:3S. Diseases and wounds and rupture. Ms T: “sores and wounds and anxieties.” Family β: “wounds and illnesses and sudden death.”

16:3S. Clouds of thunders. Or: “a thunder of a cloud.”

16:3S. Hail. Ms T adds: “and the destruction to their cities and demon [corrupt].” Family β mentions “destruction to their cities” after “demons.”

16:4S. Because they do not fear God and they do not come to the Temple and to the place of prayers. Bring them a curse ... (зѧне не боѧтъ сѧ бѧ и не прихѧдаѧтъ въ црѧкъвъ и на молитвъ мѣсто клѧтъѧ и мѧтъ принесѧте ...). Gaylord divides the sentences differently: “because they do not fear God and they do not come to church; and instead of prayers, bring them a curse,”⁵⁷² which seems less appropriate for the context: the sinners did not offer prayers and moreover are not supposed to receive them. An angelic prayer for them might have been meant, although this practice is not mentioned in 3 Baruch. See comm. to 13:4G.

Rejection of good (неначинание добра). CS начинание may mean ‘deed, enterprise,’ while unattested elsewhere неначинание could have meant “lack of deed.” However, it may be a corruption of CS неначаianie rendering Gk ἀπόγνωσις “despair” or “rejection.”

⁵⁷⁰ Hughes, “Baruch,” 541.

⁵⁷¹ Ryssel, “Baruch,” 456.

⁵⁷² Gaylord, Slavonic, 145.

16:5S. Trembling and rejoicing. Alludes to Ps 2:11: “Serve the Lord with fear and rejoice with trembling.” Cf. b. Ber. 30b (based on this verse): “R. Adda b. Mattena said in the name of Rab, ‘In the place where there is rejoicing there should also be trembling.’”

16:6S. Glory of God. See comm. to 4:2S.

Indefatigable worm. It normally comes in a pair with fire; cf. Isa 66:24; Apoc. Abr. 31; Mark 9:48; and 2 Clem. 7.6.⁵⁷³

16:10S. Weep ... Adam. Family β has instead: “Weep also you for them; perhaps the Lord God will listen to your voice and have mercy on them.”

16:10S Family α adds here an obvious Christian interpolation with a plea for murderers: “Weeping I said, ‘Lord God who kindled the sun with his light, have mercy upon the sinners. Lord God who has prepared torment for the men slaughterers and who give us mercy, O Christ, for our sakes, I beseech you, O the Ruler God, take from their necks the word of God and extend your love and have mercy upon the sinners, since yours is the rule and the power ...’”

COMMENTARY

The wicked receive punishments during their lifetime (as, e.g., in 1 En. 22:10; Mek. Beshalah, Vaihi 4; Midr. Pss. 31.3). The description of the retribution for the wicked, placed at the very end of the vision, may have one of the following three subtexts:

- (1) It may refer to the past, implying the punishment of Israel and the fall of Jerusalem and thus answering the introductory question of the Prologue: “Why have you set on fire your vineyard and lay it waste?” (1:2).⁵⁷⁴ Deuteronomic allusions and paraphrases of 16:2–4G, all in the original connected to the destiny of Israel, may corroborate this suggestion. The most obvious of these paraphrases (in vv. 2 and 4), however, do not occur in S, and thus probably are not original.
- (2) The account may also refer to the future eschatological woes, “signs” promising revenge for the wicked in accordance with very common motif of the genre (e.g., Dan 12; 1 En. 80:2–8; 99; Jub. 23:12 and 22; 4 Ezra 4:52–5:13; 6:13–28; 9:1–6; 13:16ff.; 2 Bar. 25–27; 48:30–38; 70; Apoc. Abr. 30; Sib. Or. 2; Mark 13; Rev 8–9 and 15–16). In this case, however, we would also expect to see a wider eschatological account, which is totally absent in this writing.

⁵⁷³ Gaylord, Slavonic, 147.

⁵⁷⁴ Thus Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 151–152; Nickelsburg, “Jewish,” 302.

- (3) The description of the reward may be part of the general depiction of the retribution mechanism without any specific references. In this case, the past or future destiny of Jerusalem, its people or its destroyers would not find any treatment at the conclusion of the vision. Instead, the vision at this point turn out to be universalistic and rather focused on personal retribution and the celestial Temple, substituting for the values of national salvation, revenge, or renewal of the earthly Temple. The problem of this interpretation is in mostly collective form of the listed plagues.

All these suggestions heavily depend on the text-critical treatment of the section, in which the discrepancies between the versions are very significant. The problem is especially striking with the “Slavonic Conclusion” in 16:5–10S. If G finishes the vision with a dry and not too encouraging enumeration of plagues, S concludes the vision with a more optimistic picture of the beatific afterlife of the righteous, the tortures of the impious, and permission for Baruch to weep on the behalf of the latter.⁵⁷⁵

Whatever is meant in the Slavonic Conclusion, whether additional visits to Paradise and Hell or a summary of previous visions,⁵⁷⁶ this section can hardly be original. The Conclusion is not integrated into the overall cosmological structure of 3 Baruch. All spatial or transitional indications which have played such an important role throughout the whole writing are completely neglected here. Moreover, it can also hardly be an abbreviation of a longer original account. Bauckham, who posits such a longer original, has suggested that the original Slavonic Conclusion could have contained an ascent to the seventh heaven which included a vision of God’s Presence (as in 2 Enoch et al.) and separate visits to Paradise and Hell (as in the Syriac Transitus Mariae or in Gedulat Moshe).⁵⁷⁷ However, this hypothesis of an abbreviation is based on an erroneous reading of the Slavonic text. To be sure, the last promise to see the Glory of God (cf. previous promises in 4:2S; 6:12; 7:2; 11:2) occurs in S at the very end of the vision (16:6S; in previous translations – 16:4S) and thus could be taken to imply a lost continuation of the narrative. Nevertheless, this argument is a result of a mistranslation of imperative forms as a future tense. The angel does not promise: “and you will see the Glory of God; and you will see the resting places of the righteous, glory and joy and happiness [and] glorification; and you will see the tortures of the impious, wailing and groaning, lamentations and the indefatigable worm,”⁵⁷⁸ but orders “And see [CS ВИЖДЬ]” all three times. Baruch’s response in the continuation also indicates that he sees or hears at least the sinners (16:7S). This vision is defined as being of the Glory of God, similar to the previous ones (see comm. to 4:2S).

⁵⁷⁵ A prayer for the dead, an important issue for early Christian thought, is attested as early as 2 Macc 12:40–46; cf. Sifre Deut. 210; b. Hor. 6a.

⁵⁷⁶ In the case, “the tortures of the impious” would refer to Hades (ch. 5) and “the resting places of the righteous” – the Lake of Birds (ch. 10), although in S both visions lack clear indications of their connection to the afterlife (see below).

⁵⁷⁷ Bauckham, “Hell,” 373–74. On the abridgment hypothesis cf. comm. to ch. 11 (Seven heavens and abridged version).

There is also a special reason why S found it so necessary to interpolate this passage. The Slavonic Conclusion is the most detailed treatment of the afterlife in 3 Baruch. In addition to the Oil Reward scene (ch. 15), which also can be interpreted as the reward of the afterlife (see comm. ibid.), post-mortem destiny is in the rest of the text of 3 Baruch only very briefly referred to in G:

- “the dragon is he who eats the bodies of those who pass through life wickedly, and he is nourished by them” (4:5G);
 - “men drinking insatiably the wine which is begotten of it, make a transgression worse than Adam, and become far from the Glory of God, and commit themselves to the eternal fire” (4:16G); and
 - “the lake and other wonders [is the place] where the souls of the righteous come, when they assemble, living together choir by choir” (10:5G).
- All these appear exclusively in G. In S Hades is mentioned once (5:3S), and it is not clear whether it is identified or compared with the Serpent. Instead, at the very end of the vision S has rather declarative and formal? reference to the afterlife which compensates for the otherwise total lack of the topic in the version.

The inclusion of paraphrases from LXX and New Testament in G (15:4G; 16:2G; 16:4G; see comm. below), which showcases the erudition of the editor, reflects a deviation from the rest of the book, in which explicit reference to the biblical text is normally avoided. Similarly, the passage that probably develops the prayer agenda of S (16:4S; see comm. to 11:4), as well as the Slavonic Conclusion (overtly intended to provide a conceptual ending), seems to be a later elaboration intended to explain and harmonize a laconic proto-text.⁵⁷⁹

⁵⁷⁸ As translated in Gaylord, “3 Baruch,” 678 (in his Slavonic the translation is improved). Bauckham, (“Hell,” 373) and Harlow (Baruch, 37) base their interpretations on this mistake.

⁵⁷⁹ Theoretically this elaborations could also substitute another ending, which contradicted the outlook of the Christian redactor. But we do not have textual evidence for this.

15:3S. See comm. to 11:4.

15:4G. The whole verse, absent in S and closely paraphrasing Matt 25:21, 23, must be a Christian interpolation:

3 Baruch

Matthew

You are faithful over a little, he will set you over many things; enter into the joy of our Lord.

You were faithful over a little, I will set you over of many things; enter into the joy of your lord ἐπὶ ὀλίγῃ ἐστὲ πιστοί, ἐπὶ πολλῶν ὑμᾶς καταστήσει· εἰσελθατε εἰς τὴν χαρὰν τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν ἐπὶ ὀλίγα ἦς πιστός, ἐπὶ πολλῶν σε καταστήσω· εἴσελθε εἰς τὴν χαρὰν τοῦ κυρίου σου

Cf. an allusion to Matt 25:24, 26 in 15:2G above.

16:2G. Absent in S, the verse is a collage from Deut 31–32. “Angered me by their deeds” is a paraphrase of LXX Deut 31:29, while the second clause is obviously dependent on Deut 32:21.⁵⁸⁰

3 Baruch

LXX Deuteronomy

But since they angered me by their deeds,

You will anger him by the deeds of your hands (31:29) go and make them envious and angry and provoke against No-Nation, a nation void of understanding

I will make them envious by No-Nation, I will anger them by a nation void of understanding (32:21)

ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ παρώργισάν με ἐν τοῖς ἔργοις αὐτῶν παροργίσει αὐτὸν ἐν τοῖς ἔργοις τῶν χειρῶν ὑμῶν (31:29) πορευθέντες παραζηλώσατε αὐτοὺς καὶ παροργίσατε καὶ παραπικράνατε ἐπ' οὐκ ἔθνη ἐπὶ ἔθνει ἄσυνέτῳ.

παραζηλώσω αὐτοὺς ἐπ' οὐκ ἔθνη ἐπ' ἔθνει ἄσυνέτῳ παροργιῶ αὐτούς (32:21)

Cf. παραζηλώσω ὑμᾶς ἐπ' οὐκ ἔθνη ῥ' ἔθνη ἄσυνέτῳ παροργιῶ ὑμᾶς (Rom 10:19)

The wording is very similar to that of LXX (and to its paraphrase in Rom 10:19), and both texts have ἄσύνετος for Heb נבל. The promises of punishment put in Deuteronomy in future are presented as fulfilled in 3 Baruch. The same is reflected in the paraphrase of Deut 28:1 in 16:4G ⁵⁸⁰ Gaylord, Slavonic, 141. Cf. also “He will arouse against them the sinful nations who will have no mercy or kindness for them” (Jub. 23:23).

(see below). These phrases were supposed to serve as an answer to Baruch's lament in 1:2: "And why, Lord, did you not requite us with another punishment, but delivered us to such nations, so that they upbraid saying, 'Where is their God?'" (which, in turn, also alludes to Deut 32:37: "Where are their gods?").⁵⁸¹ There are also more allusions in ch. 16 to LXX Deuteronomy. See the list of punishments in 16:3b and Deut 32:41, 25, 16.⁵⁸²

This would mean that the plagues are destined for Israel, although in 16:1 we find a more general definition of "sons of men." Furthermore, such an understanding will present the whole retribution mechanism of chs. 15–16, which otherwise looks rather universalistic, as an inner Jewish matter. More probable is that the verse is just another Christian interpolation, characteristic of G, with a tendency to present Jews as the second group, i.e., as sinners to be punished. That is what we find in a most similar parallel to this section, in Apoc. Paul 10, where the sinners are identified as "those which have called upon your [Gods's] name."

16:3. Cut them in twain with the sword (διχοτομήσατε αὐτοὺς ἐν μάχαιρα) may metaphorically mean "punish them severely" as in Matt 24:51. The rest of the verse alludes to LXX Deut 32:16–43, especially to 32:41 (having both ἀστραπή and μάχαιρα), 32:25 (ἐξώθεν ἀτεκνώσει αὐτοὺς μάχαιρα), and 32:16 (ἐθύσαν δαιμονίοις).⁵⁸³

Plagues

1. Number of plagues. Notably both versions, while differing in the content of plagues, still keep their number – seven, as the number of Egyptian plagues in Ps 78:44–51; 105:28–36; plagues for idolatry in Ezek 6:5–6; Amos 4:6–13; eschatological seven trumpets and seven bowls of Rev 8–9 and 15–16; seven last years each with its own woe of b. Sanh. 97a. The twelve plagues of Jub. 23:13 can also be divided to seven groups: (1) "disease and stomach pains;" (2) "snow, hail and frost;" (3) "fever, cold and numbness;" (4) "famine," (5) "death," (6) "sword," (7) "captivity." This number also conforms with the Mishna: "Seven kinds of penalties come to the world for seven transgressions" (m. Abot 5.8). In the spirit of Mek. Beshalah 6 (integrated into the Passover Haggadah), it is possible to divide the plagues of 3 Baruch in different ways, as to four so also to ten. Four: vermins, meteorlogical phenomena, death, plague of children. Ten: (1) “the caterpillar, and (2) the locust’s larva, and (3) the rust, and (4) the grasshopper, [and] (5) hail with (6) lightnings and (7) wrath, and (8) cut them in twain with the sword and (9) with death, and (10) their children with demons.” The seven plagues of Rev 15–16 probably contain a separate unit of four in accordance with four elements.⁵⁸⁴ Ten plagues are known to Apoc. Abr. 30.

⁵⁸¹ Dean-Otting, "Baruch," 151–152; Nickelsburg, Jewish, 302.

⁵⁸² Harlow, Baruch, 155.

⁵⁸³ The instrumental use of ἐν, though known in Greek, may be an indication of Semitized usage; cf. the same use in LXX Deut 31:29 paraphrased in 16:2G above and in Matt 9:34 with similar context.

2. Nature of plagues. Although presented as an element of the personal retribution mechanism, most plagues look collective (cosmic or at least national). Such would be expected in an eschatological context; see collective natural disasters striking the last generations or impious nations in 1 En. 80:2–8; Jub. 23:12 and 22; Apoc. Abr. 30; Sib. Or. 2; Rev 8–9 and 15–16; etc.

2.1. Locusts. The list of four vermins is borrowed from Joel 1:4 and 2:25 although in a changed order. In Joel all Hebrew terms refer to different kinds of locust:

Gk κάμπη “caterpillar”	Heb גִּזְמִים (also in Am 4:9);
Gk βροῦχος “locust” or “locust’s wingless larva”	Heb יֵלֶק (in Lev 11:22 it corresponds also to אֲרֵבָה);
Gk ῥρυσίβη “rust”	Heb חֲסִיל
Gk ἀκρίς “locust,” “grasshopper”	Heb אֲרֵבָה

The uniqueness in 3 Baruch lies in the locusts taking the majority of the plagues. There are several possible explanation for this:

2.1.1. Locusts as locusts. Locust plagues are among the most infamous natural disasters (Deut 28:38, 42; 1 Kgs 8:37; 2 Chr 6:28; 7:13; Pss 78:46; 105:34–35; Joel 1:4; 2:25; Amos 4:9; 7:2; Nah 3:15; Philo, Mos. 1.123; Praem. 128). They are listed among the punishments for Israel’s disobedience to God (Deut 28:34; 1 Kgs 8:37; 2 Chr 6:28) and among the eschatological plagues (Sib. Or. 5:454 and Rev 8:3–11). In an agricultural society, the locust was synonymous with death: “let him [God] remove from me this death” (Exod 10:16–17); “If one sees the locust, he says, ‘Blessed is the just Judge’” (y. Ber. 6.5c; 10.70c; the same formula was used upon being informed of a death). Public fasts are declared even if one locust has been seen in the Land of Israel (m. Taan. 3.2; b. Taan. 22a).

⁵⁸⁴ So Collins, “Numeric,” 126.

2.1.2. Locusts as invaders. In Joel 1–2 the locusts are the main precursors of the eschatological “Day of the Lord,” and also symbolize foreign invaders. This will go well with interpretation A above.

2.1.3. Locusts as demons. Being either a natural disaster or foreign invaders still does not justify why they take four of seven plagues. The list does not look balanced, unless one considers the locusts as a symbolic representation of some wider phenomenon. The rationale of the Locusts Plague of 3 Baruch can be clarified against the background of the analogous plague in the book of Revelation. This juxtaposition enables an association of the plagues of ch. 16 with the motifs of the implied demonology of 1:1 and chs. 2–3, on the one hand, and with the Oil Reward of ch. 15, on the other:

- (a) The locusts are one of the eschatological woes of Revelation (9:3–11). Their description also depends upon the locust imagery of Joel 1–2 (they are likened to horses, army, etc.). In Revelation they are described as hybrid demonic creatures identified as the army of Abaddon-Apollyon:

The appearance of the locusts was like horses prepared for battle; and on their heads appeared to be crowns like gold, and their faces were like the faces of men. They had hair like the hair of women, and their teeth were like the teeth of lions. They had breastplates like breastplates of iron; and the sound of their wings was like the sound of chariots, of many horses rushing to battle. They have tails like scorpions, and stings; and in their tails is their power to hurt men for five months. They have as king over them, the angel of the abyss; his name in Hebrew is Abaddon, and in the Greek he has the name Apollyon. (Rev 9:7–11)

The “fiery locusts” coming out of the mouth of “a mighty Beast like a whale” (Herm., Vis. 4.1.6) must be of the same demonic nature. Can this also be true for the locusts of 3 Baruch? The list of plagues is the only instance when demons are explicitly mentioned in 3 Baruch (see below), and a certain implied demonology can be reflected in the images of the celestial satyr-like Builders (chs. 2–3) and probably terrestrial demons defined as “alien spirits” (1:1).

- (b) The demonic locusts of Revelation were told to harm “only those people who did not have a seal of God on their foreheads” (Rev 9:4; cf. 7:2–4). The notion of a protective “seal” is a very developed motif in Jewish literature (Gen 4:15; Ezek 9:4–6 [cited in CD 19.12]; Pss. Sol. 15:6; 4 Ezra 6:5; 8:53; 5 Ezra 2:38, 40; Acts Andrew 27; Ap. John 31.22–25; cf. Josephus, Ant. 8.47 and Jewish Aramaic incantation bowls),⁵⁸⁵ while their nature is usually not clarified.⁵⁸⁶ However, some Gnostic and Christian sources consistently identify protective “seals” as anointing:

Give us the seal, for we have heard you saying that the God whom you preach knows his own sheep by his seal ... and he commanded them to bring oil, that they might receive the seal by the oil.” (Acts Thom. 26)

See Apoc. John 31.22–25; Apost. Const. 7.22; Origen, Cels. 6.27; etc.⁵⁸⁷ The two are probably identified by Paul: “He anointed us, set his seal of ownership on us” (2 Cor 1:21–22). As “seal” protects from demons in Rev 9:4, so anointing is used to exhort demons in Mark 6:13.

The identification of “seal” and chrism can shed light on the protective purpose of the Oil Reward in 3 Baruch. It is hardly coincidental that in 3 Baruch we find an opposition between the pious rewarded with oil, and the wicked punished with locusts, while in Revelation there is almost the identical opposition between the pious marked by a “seal” (probably a chrism), and the wicked tortured by demonic locusts. The situation is typical for the laconic symbolic language of 3 Baruch, which can be deciphered only with the help of more detailed parallels:

3 Baruch

since they angered me by their deeds ... send forth the caterpillar, and the [kind of] locust, and the rust, and [another kind of] locust (16:3)

And for the angels who had brought the full baskets, he filled them with oil, saying, “Bring a hundredfold reward to our friends and those who have diligently done good deeds (15:2)

Revelation 9:3–4

Then out of the smoke came locusts upon the earth, and power was given them, as the scorpions of the earth have power.

They were told not to hurt the grass of the earth, nor any green thing, nor any tree, but only the men who do not have the seal of God on their foreheads.

⁵⁸⁵ E.g., “... doubly-sealed with the seven seals from all evil plagues, from all bad spirits, from monsters, from liliths, and from all blast-demons and harmers” (Isbell, Incantation, 83 (#31.24), cf. 21–22, 24, 62, 116).

⁵⁸⁶ In Josephus, Ant. 8.47 it is “a ring that had under its seal a root from among those prescribed by Solomon.”

⁵⁸⁷ In other sources the term could apply also to other ritual marks of the sacral belonging, like circumcision or baptism.

2.2. Children and demons. The concluding plague will strike the children of the wicked, who will be hurt “with demons.” Children suffer for their fathers’ sins in many sources. “Who despises wisdom ... their offspring are accursed” (Wis 3:11–13; cf. Ezek 16:44; Sir 41:5; 4 Ezra 9:17). In the last days “the destitute will go forth and carry off their children, and they will abandon them, so that their children will perish through them” (1 En. 99:5). “How dreadful it will be in those days for pregnant women and nursing mothers!” (Mark 13:17). Mass massacre of children forms part of the eschatological scenario of the Apocalypse of Daniel (1:10; 2:1).

As for the demons’ role in this plague, the demonic Builders hurt a woman in childbirth in 3 Bar. 3:5. Jewish traditions on Lilith and other demons hurting newborns and women in labor go back to universal beliefs. Akkadian Lamashtu attacks mothers and newborn infants. Hellenistic demons Gello, Lamia, Mormo can cause child death (Pseudo-Herodotus, Vit. Hom. 32; Hom. Epigr. 14). The sinful generations of Israel “will sacrifice their children to demons” (Jub. 1:11). Demons struck human children also in the past:

the unclean demons began to lead astray the children of the sons of Noah, and to make to err and destroy them. And the sons of Noah came to Noah their father, and they told him concerning the demons which were leading astray and blinding and slaying his sons’ sons.” (Jub. 10:1–2).

In the Testament of Solomon demons torture boys, strangle newborn children, “blind children in women’s wombs, and twirl their ears round,” and “make them deaf and mute” (Test. Sol. 2; 13). In the time of the Antichrist “the unclean spirits and the demons will ... kill the babies of the women and they themselves will suckle from them” (Apoc. Dan. 12:1–2). See also Rev 12ff; Justin Martyr, 1 Apol. 5.2, and especially Acts Thom. 12:

the more part of children become useless oppressed of devils, some openly and some invisibly, for they become either lunatic or half withered or blind or deaf or dumb or paralytic or foolish; and if they be sound, again they will be vain, doing useless or abominable acts, for they will be caught either in adultery or murder or theft or fornication.

16:4G. This must be one more Christian interpolation with rich intertextuality. “They did not listen to my voice nor observe my commandments, nor do them” is a paraphrase of LXX Deut 28:1: “if you listen to the voice of Lord your God, observe and do all these commandments” (cf. also Exod 15:26; Deut 26:17; 28:15; etc.). The paraphrase is closer to MT and some versions of LXX which have “his commandments” instead. “Despisers” (καταφρονηταί) is a term known, e.g., from LXX Hab 1:5 (the equivalent word is absent in MT, while the whole verse is cited in Acts 13:40) and from Zeph 3:4 (Heb אֲנָשִׁי בְגִדוֹת): “her prophets are despisers, her priests profane holy things.” In verbal form it is used in a similar context in 1 Cor 11:22: “do you despise the assembly of God?”⁵⁸⁸ See also Am 2:4: “I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they have despised [מִאֲסָם] the law of the Lord, and have not observe his commandments” and 4 Ezra 1:34: “And your children shall not be fruitful; for they have despised my commandment, and done the thing that is an evil before me.” Priests in a very similar context appear also in 1 Chr 16:22: “Do not touch not my anointed [i.e., priests], and do not offend my prophets.” Hughes notes that the term ‘priest’ ἱερεὺς “does not seem to have been applied to the Christian ministry till the end of the second century.”⁵⁸⁹

⁵⁸⁸ The latter parallel is brought by Gaylord, Slavonic, 149.

⁵⁸⁹ Hughes, “Baruch,” 543.

D. Return (17)

GREEK

¹ And as he spoke, the door closed, and we withdrew.

² And the angel having taken returned me to where I was at the beginning.

³ And having come to myself, I gave glory to God, who honored me by such honor.

⁴ And you, brothers, who attained such a revelation, yourselves also glorify God, so that he also may glorify you, now and forever, and ever. Amen.

SLAVONIC

¹ And a voice from heaven came, saying,

“Bring Baruch down to the face of earth, so that he will tell the sons of men what he saw and heard, and all the mysteries you gave him.”

And to our God – let it be glory, now and forever and ever. Amen.”

COMMENTARY

As in the conclusion of the vision in the previous chapter, which is full with discrepancies and interpolations, there is great disparity between the two versions of the conclusion of the frame narrative. G and S agree only in the fact that Baruch returns to earth (but not even in the wording of this report) and share the final glorification (cf. the final blessing of the Book of Watchers; 1 En. 36:4), although the latter may be due to a medieval scribal etiquette (cf. the blessing in the Title).

17:1S. All the mysteries you gave him (и всѣхъ тайнъ прѣдастъ ѱмоу). See the wording in Pistis Sophia: “And also as it was said: ‘Righteousness [looked forth] from heaven’: righteousness is the power which looked forth from the height, which will give the mysteries of the light to the race of mankind” (1.61); “And Michael and Gabriel, who served me and brought the outpouring of light to the Chaos, will give the mysteries of the light to them” (2.64).

17:2G. Returned me to where I was at the beginning. Compare 2 Bar. 7:2 (according to the emendation of Charles):¹ “And the Spirit restored me to the place where I once stood.”

